

Reference Guide to

WORLD LITERATURE

---

THIRD EDITION

---

Volume 1
AUTHORS

EDITORS
SARAH PENDERGAST
and
TOM PENDERGAST

StJ

ST. JAMES PRESS®

THOMSON
—★—™
GALE

ST. JAMES REFERENCE GUIDES

American Literature

English Literature, 3 vols.

French Literature, 2 vols.

Holocaust Literature

Short Fiction

World Literature, 2 vols.

Reference Guide to World Literature, 3rd edition

Sara and Tom Pendergast

Project Editor

Kristin Hart

Editorial

Erin Bealmear, Joann Cerrito, Jim Craddock,
Stephen Cusack, Miranda H. Ferrara, Peter

M. Gareffa, Margaret Mazurkiewicz, Carol
A. Schwartz, Christine Tomassini, Michael
J. Tyrkus

Manufacturing

Rhonda Williams

©2003 by St. James Press. St. James Press is an imprint of The Gale Group, Inc., a division of Thomson Learning, Inc.

Gale and Design®, St. James Press®, and Thomson Learning™ are trademarks used herein under license.

For more information contact

St. James Press
27500 Drake Rd.
Farmington Hills, MI 48331-3535
Or you can visit our Internet site at <http://www.gale.com/stjames>

For permission to use material from this product, submit your request via Web at <http://www.gale-edit.com/permissions>, or you may download our Permissions Request form and submit your request by fax or mail to:

Permissions Department
The Gale Group, Inc.
27500 Drake Rd.
Farmington Hills, MI 48331-3535
Permissions Hotline:
248-699-8006 or 800-877-4253, ext. 8006
Fax: 248-699-8074 or 800-762-4058

While every effort has been made to ensure the reliability of the information presented in this publication, St. James Press does not guarantee the accuracy of the data contained herein. St. James Press accepts no payment for listing; and inclusion of any organization, agency, institution, publication, service, or individual does not imply endorsement of the editors or publisher. Errors brought to the attention of the publisher and verified to the satisfaction of the publisher will be corrected in future editions.

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

No part of this work covered by the copyright hereon may be reproduced or used in any form or by any means—graphic, electronic, or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, taping, Web distribution, or information storage retrieval systems—without the written permission of the publisher.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS CATALOG NUMBER

Reference guide to world literature / editors, Sara Pendergast, Tom Pendergast.— 3rd ed.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 1-55862-490-2 (hardcover : set) — ISBN 1-55862-491-0 (v. 1) —

ISBN 1-55862-492-9 (v. 2)

1. Literature—History and criticism. I. Pendergast, Sara. II.

Pendergast, Tom.

PN524.R44 2003

809—dc21

2002015410

ISBN: 1-55862-490-2

CONTENTS

---

EDITOR'S NOTE	vii
INTRODUCTION	ix
ADVISERS	xi
CONTRIBUTORS	xiii
ALPHABETICAL LIST OF WRITERS AND WORKS	xvii
CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF WRITERS	xxv
ALPHABETICAL LIST OF WORKS	xxxi
CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF WORKS	xxxvii
REFERENCE GUIDE TO WORLD LITERATURE AUTHORS A-Z	1
REFERENCE GUIDE TO WORLD LITERATURE WORKS A-Z	1125
NOTES ON ADVISERS AND CONTRIBUTORS	1591
LANGUAGE INDEX	1615
TITLE INDEX	1623

EDITOR'S NOTE

---

You are holding in your hands the third edition of the Reference Guide to World Literature, the second edition of which was published in 1995 and was itself an updated and expanded edition of Great Foreign Language Writers, published in 1984. Expanding on the coverage of these earlier works, the present edition contains some 1100 entries, divided nearly evenly between entries on writers and literary works. The scope of the Reference Guide spans recorded history and reaches up to the present.

The Reference Guide to World Literature contains two distinct types of entries: those covering the work of an author and those covering a literary work. Each author entry begins with a biographical summary of the subject and includes details (where known) of the author's birth, education and training, military service, family, career, awards, honors, and honorary degrees. Then follows a selected list of publications by the author, and a selected list of bibliographical and critical works about the author. Finally, each author entry contains a signed critical essay which assesses the author's work, reputation, and influence. Each entry on a literary work contains a brief header indicating the author and date of creation and a signed critical essay. In the case that the author of the literary work is unknown, an introductory section provides information about the known circumstances of the work's creation and a brief listing of critical studies about the work.

The publications section of the author entries attempts to account for all separately published books by the author, including translations into English. Broadsheets, single sermons and lectures, minor pamphlets, exhibition catalogs, etc., are omitted. Dates refer to the first publication in book form unless indicated otherwise; we have attempted to list the actual year of publication, which is sometimes different from the date given on the title page. Reprints of works including facsimile editions are generally not listed unless they involve a revision of the title. Titles are given in modern spelling and are often in "short" form. They are always in italic, except for those that are literal (i.e. non-published) translations, which appear in square brackets. The publication list may contain some or all of the following categories:

Collections: This contains a selection of "standard" editions, including the most recent collection of the complete works and of the individual genres (verse, plays, fiction, etc.). For those collections published after the author's death, only those that have some editorial authority are cited.

Fiction: Where it is not made apparent by the title, collections of short fiction are indicated by the inclusion of "stories" in parentheses after the title.

Verse: This includes collections and individual poems that were published in book form, listed chronologically by date of publication.

Plays: This includes original plays, adaptations, and other works for the stage (libretti, ballet scenarios, etc.). Dates for both publication and production are given. Titles are arranged chronologically by date of first performance or date of first publication, whichever is earliest. Published English translations are listed, but not those of individual productions.

Screenplays/Television Plays/Radio Plays: These categories include original works and adaptations for these media, listed by date of release or first broadcast.

Other: This includes publications that do not fit readily into the above categories, principally miscellanies and nonfiction writing, such as journalism, essays, theoretical works, travel writing, memoirs, letters, etc.

A separate section contains selected works about the author. This section may contain one or both of the following categories:

Bibliography: This includes published works relating to primary and secondary literature. General bibliographies of literary periods, genres, or countries, etc., are rarely listed.

Critical Studies: This includes critical works and biographies of the subject, listed in chronological order of publication. This section concentrates on book-length studies in English published after 1945, although in a few cases selected earlier material is cited. Where there is a noticeable scarcity of critical works in English, publications written in the subject's own language are included. On occasion articles, usually written in English, have also been listed.

This book concludes with a Title Index to the publications lists. This contains titles of all works listed in the fiction, verse, and plays sections of each entry including titles in the writer's original language and English translations, as well as selected important works of nonfiction.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

A reference work such as this is the product of many hands. Our thanks begin with Steven Serafin, whose guiding hand in selecting advisers and entries and whose expertise with the languages represented in this collection were indispensable. We would like to thank our advisers for their skill and expertise in selecting suitable entrants to include in this edition. Thanks also to the authors of the entries; many of these authors are the acknowledged authorities on their subject, and their expertise and acumen can be clearly seen in their thoughtful introductions to each of the subjects. We would like to thank our copyeditors, Jennifer Wallace and Michael Najjar, as well as our contacts/friends Kristin Hart and Peter Gareffa at St. James Press. Finally, we would like to thank all those at St. James Press whose names we do not know, but who help turn the electronic files that we work with into the reality that you hold today.

INTRODUCTION

---

In his letters dating from the second century AD, the Roman orator and statesman Pliny the Younger wrote of finding solace in poetry as a means to embrace the uncertainties of life and to accept, albeit reluctantly, the inevitability of death. “Literature,” he said, “is both my joy and my comfort: it can add to every happiness and there is no sorrow it cannot console.” The poet took refuge in his work and sought to communicate to others the depth of his emotion and the expanse of his intellect. It is through literature that we embrace our potential and acknowledge our limitations, and it was undoubtedly this presence of mind and spirit that forged the first attempts at literary expression and that continues in our own time to define the essence and value of artistic endeavor.

The growth and development of literature is most often viewed as a reflection of history, mapping the evolution of human culture and serving in its earliest renderings as either documentation or eulogy: to record for posterity or to sing praise and exaltation. It was a task assigned to the scribe not the artist, but in time the purpose and practice of literature would evolve in form and meaning to where the telling of the tale became as important as the tale itself. The nature of literature broadened in scope and objective to provide entertainment as well as instruction. As a result, the reader found pleasure in literature as the imagination unfolded in stories of gods and monsters, the death of kings, and the making of legend. If we believe as posited by philosopher Bernard Berenson that literature is “the autobiography of humanity,” then we come to better know ourselves by knowing those who came before us and those with whom we share our existence. In effect, literature becomes a means to examine and to understand the differences, as well as the similarities, among peoples, languages, and societies. It serves to engage our expectation, to enrich our sensibilities, and to elevate our perception of self-awareness and identity.

Designed as a complement to the St. James Reference Guides to American and British literatures, the third edition of the Reference Guide to World Literature represents a comprehensive and authoritative survey to literatures written in languages other than English from the earliest known manuscripts to the works of present-day writers of international stature. Merging East and West, the ancient with the contemporary, the Reference Guide provides a broad spectrum of world literature extending from the anonymous prose and verse of the Vedas, the sacred texts of Hinduism, originating in the third millennium BC, to the ancient Sumerian epic of Gilgamesh; from the Hebrew texts of the Old Testament to The Iliad of Homer; from the Golden Age of Greek drama to the Indian folk epic the Mahābhārata; from the Confessions of St. Augustine to the classical poetry of the Tang dynasty; from The Conference of the Birds by the Persian poet Farid al-Din Attār to The Divine Comedy by Dante Alighiera; from The Praise of Folly by Desiderius Erasmus to Don Quixote by Miguel de Cervantes; from Molière’s Don Juan to Goethe’s Faust; from realism and naturalism to the advent of modernism; from existentialism to the theater of the absurd; from postmodernism to the literature of the new millennium.

The present edition provides expanded coverage of literatures in less represented languages, the primary focus being Arabic, Chinese, and Japanese, as well as previously unrepresented languages including Albanian, Estonian, Indonesian, Kurdish, and Thai. Writers from the Arab world added to the edition include the pre-Islamic poet Imru’ al-Qays, the poetess al-Khansā’, the classical poet al-Mutanabbī, the Andalusian poet Ibn Khafājah, and the Sufi poets Ibn al-Fārid and Ibn al-‘Arabī and contemporary authors such as the Iranian novelist and short-story writer Jalal Al-e Ahmad, the Egyptian short-story writer and dramatist Yūsuf Idrīs, and the Syrian-Lebanese poet Adūnīs. Chinese authors include the Ming dynasty dramatist Tang Xianzu, the novelist Ding Ling, and dramatist, novelist, and Nobel laureate Gao Xingjian. Japanese authors include poets Miyazawa Kenji, Hagiwara Sakutarō, and Nishiwaki Junzaburo and novelists Lao She, Shimazaki Tōson, Shiga Naoya, Ibuse Masuji, and Abe Kōbo.

Authors writing in previously unrepresented languages include the Albanian novelist and poet Ismail Kadaré, the Estonian poet Jaan Kaplinski and the poet and novelist Jaan Kross, the Indonesian novelist Pramoedya Ananta Toer and the poet Chairil Anwar, the Kurdish poet Abdulla Goran, and the Thai novelist Siburapha. Authors from previously underrepresented literatures include East and Central European writers such as the dramatist Václav Havel, the novelist Ivan Klíma, and the novelist Milan Kundera, writing in Czech; the short-story writer and poet Tadeusz Borowski, and the poet and dramatist Tadeusz Różewicz, writing in Polish; francophone and lusophone writers from North, East, and West Africa including the Moroccan novelist and poet Tahar Ben Jelloun and the novelist Abdelkebir Khatibi, the Tunisian novelist Albert Memmi, and the Ivorian novelist Ahmadou Kourouma, writing in French, and Mozambican poet José Craveirinha, writing in Portuguese.

This edition is also noteworthy for its expanded coverage of contemporary women writers, including the Lebanese novelist Evelyne Accad, the Algerian novelist Assia Djebar, and the Canadian poet and novelist Nicole Brossard, writing in French; the Chilean novelist Isabel Allende, the Nicaraguan poet and novelist Gioconda Belli, and the Argentinian novelist Luisa Valenzuela, writing in Spanish; the Polish poet and Nobel laureate Wisława Szymborska; the Indian novelist Qurratulain Hyder, writing in Urdu; the Italian novelist Francesca Duranti; the Russian novelist Tatyana Tolstaya; the Japanese novelist Tsushima Yuko; and the Chinese short-story writer and novelist Li Ang. Within the context of the social and political transformation from the postwar twentieth century to the present, the increasing representation and contribution of women on an international basis has redefined the scope and dimension of world literature. Other major contemporary authors include the Martinican novelist Patrick Chamoiseau, writing in French; the Hungarian novelist and short-story writer Péter Esterházy, the Danish novelist Peter Høeg; the Chinese poet Bei Dao and the novelists Mo Yan and Su Tong; and the Japanese novelist Murakami Haruki.

Literature in the new millennium is complex as it is convoluted, informed by diverse and elements: postmodernism, multiculturalism, and global diaspora. Yet it is the voice of Pliny the Younger that resonates to remind us of the true essence of literary endeavor: to bring joy and comfort; to provide inspiration and understanding; to justify our being; and to bear witness on the times in which we live. As noted by author Salman Rushdie, “Literature is where I go to explore the highest and lowest places in human society and in the human spirit, where I hope to find not absolute truth but the truth of the tale, of the imagination and of the heart.”

—Steven R. Serafin
Hunter College of the City University of New York

ADVISERS

---

Roger Allen
University of Pennsylvania

Alison Bailey
University of London

Christopher Cairns
University College, Wales

Marvin Carlson
CUNY, New York

Ruby Cohn
University of California, Davis

Bogdan Czaykowski
University of British Columbia

James Diggle
Queen's College, Cambridge

David William Foster
Arizona State University

Michael Freeman
University of Leicester

Janet Garton
University of East Anglia, Norwich

Howard Goldblatt
University of Notre Dame

Theo Hermans
University College, London

Hosea Hirata
Tufts University

Peter Hutchinson
Trinity Hall, Cambridge

R.S. McGregor
University of Cambridge

A.B. McMillin
University of London

David O'Connell
Georgia State University

P.A. Odber de Baubeta
University of Birmingham

Jerzy Peterkiewicz
London

Christopher R. Pike
University of Keele

Girdar Rathi
New Delhi

Sven H. Rossel
University of Vienna

Steven Serafin
Hunter College, CUNY, New York

G. Singh
formerly of Queen's University, Belfast

Peter Skrine
University of Bristol

Daniel Weissbort
University of Iowa

CONTRIBUTORS

---

Donald Adamson	J.M. Buscall	Herman Ermolaev
Peter F. Ainsworth		Jo Evans
Robin Aizlewood	Alessandro Cancian
Ahmed Ali	Francisco Carenas	Michael Falchikov
Margrethe Alexandroni	Steven D. Carter	Nancy Kanach Fehsenfeld
Hans Christian Andersen	Anthony J. Cascardi	Jane Fenoulhet
J.K. Anderson	Remo Catani	Alvaro Fernández-Bravo
D.J. Andrews	Philip Cavendish	Bruno Ferraro
Alireza Anushiravani	Mary Ann Caws	John Fletcher
Brigitte Edith Zapp Archibald	Andrea C. Cervi	John L. Flood
A. James Arnold	C. Chadwick	A.P. Foulkes
William Arrowsmith	Roland A. Champagne	Wallace Fowlie
B. Ashbrook	Linda H. Chance	Frank J. Frost
Keith Aspley	Tom Cheeseman	Barbara P. Fulks
Stuart Atkins	Ying-Ying Chein	Michael A. Fuller
Howard Atkinson	Diana Chlebek
Harry Aveling	Erik C. Christensen	David Gascoyne
Peter Avery	Mirna Cicioni	John Gatt-Rutter
	John R. Clark	Tina Gianoulis
K.P. Bahadur	Stephen Clark	Margaret Gibson
Ehrhard Bahr	Shirley Clarke	Robert Gibson
D.R. Shackleton Bailey	David Coad	Mary E. Giles
David M. Bain	Michael Collie	Donald Gilman
Barry Baldwin	Desmond J. Conacher	Nahum N. Glatzer
Aida A. Bamia	David Constantine	John Gledson
Alan F. Bance	Ray Cooke	Gary Godfrey
Gabrielle Barfoot	Thomas L. Cooksey	Ingeborg M. Goesll
John Barsby	Neil Cornwell	Marketa Goetz-Stankiewicz
Peter I. Barta	C.D.N. Costa	Janet N. Gold
Susan Bassnett	Sally McMullen (Croft)	Sander M. Goldberg
Edward Batley	Carmen Cross	George Gömöri
Roderick Beaton	G.P. Cubbin	D.C.R.A. Goonetilleke
Janine Beichman	Jan Čulík	Colin Graham
David Bell	James M. Curtis	Peter J. Graves
Ian A. Bell	G.F. Cushing	Roger Green
Thomas G. Bergin	Edmund Cusick	R.P.H. Green
Alan Best	Adam Czerniawski	Claire E. Gruzelier
Binghong Lu	Lóránt Czigány	Albert E. Gurganov
Sandra Blane
Elizabeth Bobrick	James N. Davidson	Oscar A. Haac
Joan Booth	Catherine Davies	David T. Haberly
Paul W. Borgeson, Jr.	Santiago Daydi-Tolson	Brigid Haines
Patrick Brady	René de Costa	Igor Hájek
Denis Brass	Alan Deighton	David M. Halperin
Gerard J. Brault	John Dickie	P.T. Harries
S.H. Braund	Sheila J. Dickson	Nigel Harris
Peter Broome	C.E.J. Dolamore	Patricia Harry
Michael Brophy	Ken Dowden	John Hart
Catherine Savage Brosman	Sam Driver	Thomas R. Hart
Gordon Brotherston	John Dunkley	E.C. Hawkesworth
Jennifer Brown	Osman Durrani	Ronald Hayman
Penny Brown		Patrick Heenan
Dorothy Bryson	Gwynne Edwards	John Hibberd
A.W. Bulloch	Stanislaw Eile	James Higgins
Alan Bullock	Sarah Ekdawi	David Hill
B. Burns	Robert Elsie	Sabine Hillen

- Ian Hilton
 Hosea Hirata
 Keith Hitchins
 Leighton Hodson
 Th. Emil Homerin
 Edward Waters Hood
 Louise Hopkins
 Thomas K. Hubbard
 Lothar Huber
 William M. Hutchins
 Lois Boe Hyslop

 Margaret C. Ives

 David Jackson
 Tony James
 Regina Janes
 D.E. Jenkinson
 Lewis Jillings
 Jeffrey Johnson
 D. Mervyn Jones
 Roger Jones
 W. Glyn Jones

 Bożena Karwowska
 Brian Keith-Smith
 Hanaa Kilany
 Rachel Killick
 J.H. King
 Peter King
 Robert Kirsner
 W.J.S. Kirton
 Charles Klopp
 A.V. Knowles
 Wulf Koepke
 Jack Kolbert
 Kathleen L. Komar
 Linn Bratteteig Konrad
 David Konstan
 Myrto Konstantarakos
 Charles Kwong

 F.J. Lamport
 Jordan Lancaster
 Pierre J. Lapaire
 David H.J. Larmour
 Rex W. Last
 Dan Latimer
 Renate Latimer
 John Lee
 Mabel Lee
 André Lefevere
 Harry Levin
 Silvano Levy
 Virginia L. Lewis
 Dian Li
 Emanuele Licastro
 Sylvia Li-Chun Lin
 Maria Manuel Lisboa
 Heather Lloyd

 Rosemary Lloyd
 Ladislaus Löb
 Rosa Lombardi
 Jacqueline Long
 Dagmar C.G. Lorenz
 Andrea Loselle
 Gregory L. Lucente
 David S. Luft
 Torborg Lundell
 Christopher Lupke

 J.F. Marfany
 Gaetana Marrone
 Heitor Martins
 David Maskell
 Eve Mason
 Haydn Mason
 Derek Maus
 Gita May
 Jane McAdoo
 E.A. McCobb
 Patrick McCarthy
 A. McDermott
 David McDuff
 Richard J.A. McGregor
 Martin L. McLaughlin
 Alexander G. McKay
 Keith McMahan
 Arnold McMillin
 Rory McTurk
 Gordon McVay
 A.J. Meech
 Siegfried Mews
 Vasa D. Mihailovich
 Michael J. Mikós
 Gary B. Miles
 Paul Allen Miller
 Kristina Milnor
 Earl Miner
 John Douglas Minyard
 Masao Miyoshi
 Matthew Mizenko
 Edward Moran
 Nicole Mosher
 Warren Motte
 Anna Lydia Motto
 Vanna Motta
 Kenneth Muir
 Brian Murdoch
 S.M. Murk-Jansen
 Brian Murphy
 Walter Musolino

 William E. Naff
 Susan Napier
 Frank J. Nisetich
 Paul Norlen

 R.J. Oakley
 Jeanne A. Ojala

 Tom O'Neill
 Dayna Oscherwitz

 Seija Paddon
 Cecil Parrott
 Alan K.G. Paterson
 Georgina Paul
 D. Keith Peacock
 Noel A. Peacock
 Roger Pearson
 Janet Pérez
 Elli Philokyprou
 Donald Peter Alexander Pirie
 David Platton
 Gordon Pocock
 Beth Pollack
 Valentina Polukhina
 Charles A. Porter
 Oralia Preble-Niemi
 Michael P. Predmore
 Nicole Prunster
 Joseph Pucci
 Judith Purver
 Dušan Puvačić

 Olga Ragusa
 Ana M. Ranero
 Judy Rawson
 J.H. Reid
 Robert Reid
 John H. Reilly
 Barbara Reynolds
 Hugh Ridley
 Norma Rinsler
 Colin Riordan
 Michael Robinson
 Philip E.J. Robinson
 David Rock
 Eamonn Rodgers
 Margaret Rogister
 Michele Valerie Ronnick
 Hugh Rorrison
 Wendy Rosslyn
 John Rothenberg
 Andrew Rothwell
 Donald Roy
 Lisa M. Ruch
 R.B. Rutherford

 William Merritt Sale, III
 Thomas Salumets
 Jeffrey L. Sammons
 N.K. Sandars
 L. Natalie Sandomirsky
 Gerlinde Ulm Sanford
 Hélène N. Sanko
 Kumiko Sato
 Barbara Saunders
 Barry P. Scherr
 Gerd K. Schneider

- Thomas Schnellbacher
Irene Scobbie
Mary Scott
Edward Seidensticker
Dorothy S. Severin
Sabina Sharkey
Jocelyn Sharlet
Ruth Sharman
Barnett Shaw
David Shaw
Faiza W. Shereen
Emi Shimokawa
Shoichi Saeki
David Sices
Tony Simoes da Silva
John D. Simons
Colin Smethurst
Christopher Smith
Natalie Smith
Sarah Cox Smith
David Smyth
J. Kelly Sowards
Ronald Speirs
James Russell Stamm
Noel Stanley
Roy Starrs
Paul Starkey
C.C. Stathatos
Susan Isabel Stein
Carl Steiner
R.H. Stephenson
Eric Sterling
Mary E. Stewart
- Alexander Stillmark
Elisabeth C. Stopp
Ian C. Storey
Matthew Strecher
Sarah Strong
J.R. Stubbs
Arrigo V. Subiotto
Mary Sugar
Henry W. Sullivan
Helena Szépe
Elzbieta Szoka
- John E. Tailby
Myron Taylor
Anna-Marie Taylor
Philip Thody
David Thomas
Judith Thurman
Shawkat M. Toorawa
Robert M. Torrance
Tamara Trojanowska
Andrew T. Tsubaki
- Sabine Vanacker
Rolf Venner
Hugo J. Verani
Mair Verthuy
Robert Vilain
Pascale Voilley
- Frank W. Walbank
Bruce Walker
- Albert H. Wallace
George Walsh
J. Michael Walton
Edward Wasiolek
Bruce Watson
Shawncey J. Webb
David Welsh
Alfred D. White
Sally A. White-Wallis
Kenneth S. Whitton
Juliet Wigmore
Faith Wigzell
Mark Williams
Rhys Williams
Jason Wilson
Jerry Phillips Winfield
Michael Winkler
A.J. Woodman
M.J. Woods
Tim Woods
James B. Woodward
A. Colin Wright
Barbara Wright
Elizabeth Wright
- Xiaobin Yang
John D. Yohannan
Howard T. Young
Robin Young
- Magdalena J. Zaborowska
G. Zanker
Jeanne Morgan Zarucchi

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF WRITERS AND WORKS

---

- |  |  |  |
|--|--|--|
| Abe KōbōThe Woman in the Dunes Evelyne Accad Arthur AdamovProfessor Taranne Adonis AeschylusThe OresteiaThe PersiansPrometheus BoundThe Seven Against ThebesThe Suppliant Maidens S. Y. Agnon Demetrio Aguilera Malta Anna AkhmatovaPoem Without a HeroRequiem Akutagawa Ryūnosuke al-Qasim ibn ‘Ali Abu Muhammadal-Basri al-Hariri al-Khansa’ Ahmad ibn al-Husayn Abu al-Tayyibal-Ju’fi al-Kindi al-Mutanabbi Imru’ al-Qays Alain-FournierThe Wanderer Rafael Alberti Jalāl Āl-e AhmadPlagued by the West Vicente Aleixandre Vittorio AlfieriSaul Dante AlighieriThe Divine ComedyThe New Life Isabel AllendeThe House of the Spirits Jorge Amado Anacreon Hans Christian Andersen“The Emperor’s New Clothes”“The Snow Queen” Carlos Drummond de Andrade Mário de Andrade Ivo AndrićThe Bridge on the Drina Jerzy AndrzejewskiAshes and Diamonds Jean AnouilhAntigone Chairil Anwar Guillaume Apollinaire“La Chanson du mal-aimé”“Zone” Apollonius of Rhodes | Lucius ApuleiusCupid and Psyche Louis AragonLe Crève-cœurParis Peasant Reinaldo Arenas Pietro AretinoLa Cortigiana José María ArguedasDeep Rivers Manlio Argueta Ludovico AriostoOrlando Furioso AristophanesThe BirdsThe CloudsThe FrogsLysistrata Aristotle Bettina von Arnim Antonin ArtaudThe Theatre and its Double Miguel Ángel AsturiasThe President Farid al-Din Abu HamidMohammad AttārThe Conference of the Birds Aucassin and Nicolette St. AugustineThe City of GodConfessions, Book I Marcus AureliusMeditations Decimus Magnus AusoniusThe Mosella Marcel Aymé Isaak BabelRed Cavalry Ingeborg Bachmann Bai Juyi Honoré de BalzacCousin BetteEugenie GrandetLost IllusionsLe Père Goriot Henri BarbusseUnder Fire: The Story of a Squad Bashō Giorgio Bassani Charles Baudelaire“Spleen”“To The Reader”“Windows” BeaumarchaisThe Barber of Seville | Simone de BeauvoirThe MandarinsThe Second Sex Samuel BeckettEndgameMolloy, Malone Dies, The UnnamableWaiting for Godot Bei Dao Gioconda Belli Andrei BelyiPetersburg Pietro Bembo Tahar Ben Jelloun Gottfried Benn“Palau” Georges Bernanos Thomas BernhardThe Lime Works Ugo BettiBhagavadgītāThe Bible Willem Bilderdijk Bjørnstjerne BjørnsonPeasant Tales Aleksandr BlokThe Twelve Johannes Bobrowski Giovanni Boccaccio“The Ninth Tale of the Fifth Dayof The Decameron” BoethiusThe Consolation of Philosophy Nicolas BoileauThe Art Of Poetry Heinrich BöllGroup Portrait with LadyThe Lost Honor of Katharina Blum Jorge Luis Borges“Death and the Compass” Tadeusz Borowski Sebastian BrantThe Ship of Fools Robert Brasillach Bertolt BrechtBaalThe Caucasian Chalk CircleThe Good Person of SzechwanThe Life of GalileoMother Courage and her ChildrenThe Threepenny Opera Gerbrand Adriaensz Bredero |
|--|--|--|

- Clemens Brentano
The Story of Just Caspar and Fair Annie
- André Breton
“Free Union”
Mad Love
Ode to Charles Fourier
- Hermann Broch
The Death of Virgil
The Sleepwalkers
- Iosif Brodskii
A Part of Speech
- Nicole Brossard
- Giordano Bruno
- Georg Büchner
Danton’s Death
Woyzeck
- Mikhail Bulgakov
The Master and Margarita
The White Guard
- Ivan Alekseevich Bunin
The Gentleman from San Francisco
- Dino Buzzati
- Vasil Bykaw
The Ordeal
- Julius Caesar
- Pedro Calderón de la Barca
The Great Stage of the World
Life is a Dream
- Callimachus
Aetia
Hecale
- Italo Calvino
If on a Winter’s Night a Traveller
- Luís de Camões
The Lusians
- Tommaso Campanella
- Albert Camus
The Fall
The Outsider
The Plague
- Elias Canetti
Auto-da-Fé
- Karel Čapek
The Insect Play
R.U.R.
- Ernesto Cardenal
- Giosuè Carducci
- Alejo Carpentier
The Kingdom Of This World
The Lost Steps
- Carlo Cassola
- Rosario Castellanos
- Baldassarre Castiglione
- Catullus
Poem 85
Three Poems: 2, 63, and 76
- C. P. Cavafy
“Waiting for the Barbarians”
- Guido Cavalcanti
- Camilo José Cela
Pascual Duarte’s Family
- Paul Celan
“Death Fugue”
- Louis-Ferdinand Céline
Journey to the End of the Night
- Blaise Cendrars
- Luis Cernuda
- Miguel de Cervantes
Don Quixote
- Adelbert von Chamisso
Peter Schlemihl
- Patrick Chamoiseau
- René Char
- Vicomte de Chateaubriand
Memoirs
René
- Anton Chekhov
The Cherry Orchard
“The Lady with a Dog”
The Seagull
The Three Sisters
Uncle Vanya
- Chikamatsu Monzaemon
- Chrétien de Troyes
Erec and Énide
Lancelot
- Christine De Pizan (or Pisan)
The Book of The City of Ladies
- Cicero
In Defence of Marcus Caelius Rufus
On Old Age
On The Commonwealth
- Paul Claudel
The Satin Slipper
- Claudian
The Rape of Proserpine
- Hugo Claus
- Jean Cocteau
The Holy Terrors
The Infernal Machine
- Colette
Chéri
- Vittoria Colonna
- Pierre Corneille
The Cid
The Theatrical Illusion
- Julio Cortázar
- Louis Marie Anne Couperus
- José Craveirinha
- Savinien Cyrano de Bergerac
Voyages to the Moon and the Sun
- Gabriele D’Annunzio
The Flame
Francesca Da Rimini
“Rain in the Pine Forest”
- Daphnis and Chloe*
- Rubén Darío
“Mía”
- Dazai Osamu
- Eduardo De Filippo
Filumena Marturano
- Grazia Deledda
- Demosthenes
On the Crown
- René Depestre
- Denis Diderot
Jacques The Fatalist
The Test of Virtue
- Isak Dinesen
- Ding Ling
- Assia Djebar
Fantasia: An Algerian Cavalcade
- Alfred Döblin
Berlin Alexanderplatz
- Heimito von Doderer
Die Strudlhofstiege
- Fedor Dostoevskii
The Brothers Karamazov
Crime and Punishment
The Devils
The Idiot
Notes from the Underground
- Bernardo Dovizi da Bibbina
The Dream of the Red Chamber
- Annette von Droste-Hülshoff
The Jew’s Beech Tree
- Joachim Du Bellay
“Heureux Qui, Comme Ulysse, a Fait Un Beau Voyage”
- Du Fu
- Alexandre Dumas fils
Camille
- Alexandre Dumas père
The Three Musketeers
- Francesca Duranti
- Marguerite Duras
- Friedrich Dürrenmatt
The Physicists
The Visit
- José Maria de Eça de Queirós
- Umberto Eco
The Name of the Rose
- Egils Saga*
- Günter Eich
- Joseph von Eichendorff
Memoirs of a Good-for-Nothing
- Mircea Eliade
- Paul Éluard
“You the only one”
- Odysseus Elytis
- Endō Shūsaku
Silence
- Quintus Ennius
- Baron József Eötvös
The Village Notary

- Epic of Gilgamesh*
Desiderius Erasmus
    The Colloquies
    The Praise of Folly
Sergei Aleksandrovich Esenin
Péter Esterházy
Euripides
    Electra
    Hippolytus
    Ion
    Medea
    Orestes
    The Trojan Women
Evgenii Evtushenko
Abu'l Qāsim Ferdowsi
Georges Feydeau
    A Flea in her Ear
Gustave Flaubert
    Madame Bovary
    Sentimental Education
    "A Simple Heart"
Theodor Fontane
    Before the Storm
    Effi Briest
Denis Fonvizin
    The Minor
Caroline de la Motte Fouqué
Friedrich de la Motte Fouqué
Anatole France
    The Gods Are Athirst
Gilberto Freyre
Max Frisch
    Andorra
    The Fire Raisers
    I'm Not Stiller
Jean Froissart
Carlos Fuentes
Gao Xingjian
Federico García Lorca
    Blood Wedding
    The House of Bernarda Alba
    Yerma
Gabriel García Márquez
    Love in the Time of Cholera
    One Hundred Years of Solitude
Théophile Gautier
    "Art"
Jean Genet
    The Balcony
    The Maids
Guido Gezelle
Asadullāh Khān Ghālib
André Gide
    The Counterfeiters
    The Immoralist
Natalia Ginzburg
    Voices in the Evening
Jean Giono
    The Hussar On The Roof
- Jean Giraudoux
    The Madwoman of Chaillot
    Tiger At The Gates
José María Gironella
Edouard Glissant
Johann Wolfgang von Goethe
    Elective Affinities
    Faust
    Goetz of Berlichingen with the Iron Hand
    The Sufferings of Young Werther
    Torquato Tasso
    Wilhelm Meister's Apprenticeship
Nikolai Gogol'
    Dead Souls
    "Diary of a Madman"
    The Government Inspector
Golden Lotus
Carlo Goldoni
    The Comic Theatre
    The Mistress of the Inn
Ivan Goll
Witold Gombrowicz
    Ferdydurke
Ivan Goncharov
    Oblomov
Edmond and Jules de Goncourt
Luis de Góngora
Abdulla Goran
Maksim Gor'kii
    The Lower Depths
    "Twenty-Six Men and a Girl"
Gottfried von Strassburg
Jeremias Gotthelf
Christian Dietrich Grabbe
Günter Grass
    The Tin Drum
Aleksandr Griboedov
    Woes of Wit
Franz Grillparzer
    Family Strife in Hapsburg
    The Waves of Sea and Love
Jacob and Wilhelm Grimm
    "Hansel and Gretel"
Hans Jakob Christoffel von Grimmelshausen
Andreas Gryphius
Guillaume de Machaut
Jorge Guillén
Nicolás Guillén
João Guimarães Rosa
Hadewijch
Hafiz
Hagiwara Sakutarō
Knut Hamsun
    Hunger
Hartmann von Aue
Jaroslav Hašek
    The Good Soldier Švejk and His Fortunes In the World War
- Gerhart Hauptmann
    The Weavers
Václav Havel
Friedrich Hebbel
    Maria Magdalena
Heinrich Heine
    "The Homecoming"
William Heinesen
Dorothea Rosa Herliany
José Hernández
    The Gaucho Martín Fierro
Herodotus
Hesiod
Hermann Hesse
    The Glass Bead Game
    Siddhartha
    Steppenwolf
Fritz Hochwälder
Peter Høeg
E. T. A. Hoffmann
    The Devil's Elixirs
Hugo von Hofmannsthal
    Andreas
    The Difficult Man
    The Tower
Ludvig Holberg
Friedrich Hölderlin
    "Bread and Wine"
Miroslav Holub
Homer
    The Iliad
    The Odyssey
Pieter Corneliszoon Hooft
Horace
    Odes Book I, Poem 5
    Odes Book IV, Poem 7
    The Poetic Art
Ödön von Horváth
    Tales from the Vienna Woods
Huang Chunming
Victor Hugo
    The Hunchback of Notre-Dame
    Les Misérables
Constantijn Huygens
Joris-Karl Huysmans
Qurratulain Hyder
Muhyi al-Din Ibn al-Arabi
'Umar Ibn al-Fârid
Ibrahim ibn Abi al-Fath Abu Ishaq
    Ibn Khafajah
Henrik Ibsen
    Brand
    A Doll's House
    Ghosts
    Hedda Gabler
    The Master Builder
    Peer Gynt
    The Wild Duck
Ibuse Masuji
Yusuf Idris

- Ihara Saikaku
Gyula Illyés
    “A Sentence For Tyranny”
Eugène Ionesco
    The Bald Prima Donna
    Rhinoceros
Ishigaki Rin
Max Jacob
Alfred Jarry
    Ubu Rex
Johannes V. Jensen
St. Jerome
    Journey to the West
Juan Ramón Jiménez
    Platero and I
St. John of the Cross
Uwe Johnson
Sor Juana Inés de la Cruz
Ernst Jünger
Juvenal
    Satire 10
Kabīr
Ismail Kadare
Franz Kafka
    The Castle
    The Metamorphosis
    The Trial
Georg Kaiser
    The Gas Trilogy: The Coral (Die Koralle), Gas I, GasII
Kalevala
Kālidāsa
    The Cloud Messenger
    Śakuntalā
Jaan Kaplinski
Kawabata Yasunari
    Snow Country
Nikos Kazantzakis
    The Last Temptation
Gottfried Keller
Kenkō
Abdelkebir Khatibi
Velimir Khlebnikov
    “Incantation by Laughter”
Søren Kierkegaard
Danilo Kiš
Heinrich von Kleist
    The Broken Jug
    Michael Kohlhaas
    The Prince of Homburg
Ivan Klíma
Friedrich Gottlieb Klopstock
Jan Kochanowski
Ahmadou Kourouma
Zygmunt Krasiński
Miroslav Krleža
Jaan Kross
Maria Kuncewicz
Milan Kundera
- Jean de La Fontaine
    Fables
François La Rochefoucauld
    Maxims
Choderlos de Laclos
    Les Liaisons dangereuses
Madame de Lafayette
Jules Laforgue
    The Last Poems
Pär Lagerkvist
Selma Lagerlöf
    Gösta Berling’s Saga
Alphonse de Lamartine
Giuseppe Tomasi di Lampedusa
Lao She
    Rickshaw Boy
Compte de Lautréamont
Halldór Laxness
    Lazarillo de Tormes
Jakob Michael Reinhold Lenz
    The Tutor
Siegfried Lenz
    The German Lesson
Giacomo Leopardi
    “The Broom”
    “The Infinite”
    “To Himself”
Mikhail Lermontov
    A Hero Of Our Time
Alain-René Lesage
Gotthold Ephraim Lessing
    Minna Von Barnhelm
    Nathan The Wise
Carlo Levi
    Christ Stopped at Eboli
Primo Levi
    The Periodic Table
José Lezama Lima Li Ang
Li Bai
    “Hard is the Road to Shu” “Invitation to Wine”
Väinö Linna
Clarice Lispector
    The Little Clay Cart
Livy
Ivar Lo-Johansson
Lu Xun
Lucan
Lucian
Lucretius
Martin Luther “Ein Feste Burg”
    The Mabinogion
Antonio Machado
Joaquim Maria Machado de Assis
    Dom Casmurro
    The Posthumous Memoirs of Braz Cubas
- Niccolò Machiavelli
    The Mandrake
    The Prince
Maurice Maeterlinck
    The Blue Bird
    The Intruder
Mahābhārata
Naguib Mahfouz
Vladimir Maiakovskii
    About This
    The Bedbug
    Cloud in Trousers
Stéphane Mallarmé
    L’Après-midi d’un faune
    Un coup de dés jamais n’abolira le Hasard
    Hérodiade
    Ses purs ongles très haut dédiant leur onyx
André Malraux
    Man’s Fate
Osip Mandel’shtam
Heinrich Mann
    The Blue Angel
Thomas Mann
    Buddenbrooks: The Decline of a Family
    Confessions of Felix Krull, Confidence Man
    Death in Venice
    Doctor Faustus
    The Magic Mountain
Alessandro Manzoni
    The Betrothed
Leopoldo Marechal
Marguerite de Navarre
Marie de France
    Guigamor
Marivaux
    The False Confessions
    The Game of Love and Chance
    A Matter of Dispute
José Martí
Martial
    “Epigrams”
Roger Martin Du Gard
Masaoka Shiki
Guy de Maupassant
    “L’Abandonné”
    “The Necklace”
    Pierre and Jean
François Mauriac
    Thérèse
Albert Memmi
    The Pillar of Salt
Menander
    The Grouch
Prosper Mérimée
Pietro Metastasio
Conrad Ferdinand Meyer

- Henri Michaux
Adam Mickiewicz
    Pan Tadeusz
Czesław Miłosz
Mīrā Bāi
Mishima Yukio
Gabriela Mistral
Miyazawa Kenji
Mo Yan
Molière
    The Conceited Young Ladies
    Don Juan
    The Hypochondriac
    The Misanthrope
    The Miser
    Tartuffe
Ferenc Molnár
Michel de Montaigne
    “Apology for Raymond Sebond”
    “On the Power of the Imagination”
    “On Vanity”
Eugenio Montale
    Cuttlefish Bones
    “The Storm”
Elsa Morante
    House of Liars
Alberto Moravia
    The Time of Indifference
Ōgai Mori
Eduard Mörike
Multatuli
Murakami Haruki
Murasaki Shikibu
Robert Musil
    The Man Without Qualities
    Young Törless
Alfred de Musset
    Lorenzaccio
Natsume Sōseki
Pablo Neruda
    “Arte Poética”
    Tentativa del hombre infinito
Gérard de Nerval
Johann Nepomuk Nestroy
    Nibelungenlied
Friedrich Nietzsche
    The Birth of Tragedy
    Thus Spoke Zarathustra
Martinus Nijhoff
Nishiwaki Junzaburō
    Njāls Saga
Cees Nooteboom
Cyprian Kamil Norwid
Novalis
    Hymns to the Night
Ōe Kenzaburō
Yuri Olesha
    Envy
- Omar Khayyam
    The Rubaiyat
    On the Sublime
Paul van Ostaïjen
Ovid
    The Art of Love
    Loves
    Metamorphoses
Amos Oz
Marcel Pagnol
Kostas Palamas
Emilia Pardo Bazán
Blaise Pascal
Pier Paolo Pasolini
Boris Pasternak
    Doctor Zhivago
Cesare Pavese
    The Moon and the Bonfires
Milorad Pavić
Miodrag Pavlović
Octavio Paz
    Sun Stone
Georges Perec
    Life A User’s Manual
Ramón Pérez de Ayala
Benito Pérez Galdós
Charles Perrault
Persius
Fernando Pessoa
Sándor Petőfi
Petrarch
    “Sonnet 90”
Petronius
Boris Pil’niak
Pindar
    Olympian One
    Pythian Odes Four and Five
Luigi Pirandello
    Henry IV
    Six Characters in Search of an Author
Plato
    Phaedrus
    The Republic
    The Symposium
Plautus
    Amphitryon
    The Brothers Menaechmus
    The Pot of Gold
Plutarch
    Lives of Lysander and Sulla
The Poetic Edda
Polybius
Francis Ponge
    The Voice of Things
Vasko Popa
Vasco Pratolini
Jacques Prévert
Abbé Prévost
    Manon Lescaut
- Sextus Propertius
Marcel Proust
    Against Sainte-Beuve
    Remembrance of Things Past
Aurelius Clemens Prudentius
Bolesław Prus
Manuel Puig
    Kiss of the Spider Woman
Aleksandr Pushkin
    The Bronze Horseman
    Eugene Onegin
Salvatore Quasimodo
Rachel de Queiroz
Raymond Queneau
    The Blue Flowers
    Zazie
Quintilian
François Rabelais
    Gargantua and Pantagruel
Jean Racine
    Athalie
    Bajazet
    Bérénice
    Phaedra
Raymond Radiguet
    The Devil in the Flesh
Miklós Radnóti
    Rāmāyaṇa
Erich Maria Remarque
    All Quiet on the Western Front
Rendra
Rainer Maria Rilke
    Seventh Duino Elegy
    Sonnets to Orpheus
Arthur Rimbaud
    “Alchimie du verbe”
    “Le Bateau ivre”
    “Fleurs”
Yannis Ritsos
Alain Robbe-Grillet
    In the Labyrinth
    The Voyeur
Nélson Rodrigues
Fernando de Rojas
Romain Rolland
    The Romance of the Rose
Pierre de Ronsard
    “Hymn to Autumn”
    “Ode to Michel de l’Hospital” “Quand vous serez bien vieille . . .”
Edmond Rostand
    Cyrano De Bergerac
Joseph Roth
    The Radetzky March
Jean-Jacques Rousseau
    The Confessions
    Emile
    The Reveries of a Solitary
    The Social Contract

- Claude Roy
 Gabrielle Roy
 Tadeusz Różewicz
 Juan Rulfo
 Jalalu'd-Din Muhammad Rumi
 Ruzante [or Ruzante]
 Umberto Saba
 Hans Sachs
The Wandering Scholar in Paradise
 Nelly Sachs
 Marquis de Sade
Justine
 Shaikh Muslih-al-Din Sa'di
Rose Garden
 Juan José Saer
 Saigyō
 Antoine de Saint-Exupéry
Night Flight
 Saint-John Perse
Seamarks
 Sallust
 George Sand
Lélia
 Jacopo Sannazaro
 Sappho
 Fragment 1 ["Address to Aphrodite"]
 Fragment 31 ["Declaration of Love for a Young Girl"]
 Nathalie Sarraute
Tropisms
 Jean-Paul Sartre
The Age Of Reason
The Flies
Nausea
No Exit
 Paul Scarron
 Friedrich von Schiller
Don-Carlos
Mary Stuart
Ode to Joy
Wallenstein
William Tell
 August Wilhelm and Friedrich von Schlegel
 Arthur Schnitzler
Professor Bernhardt
La Ronde
 Bruno Schulz
 Leonardo Sciascia
 Eugène Scribe
 George Seferis
Mythistorima
 Ramón J. Sender
 Seneca
Oedipus
Thyestes
 Shiga Naoya
 Shimazaki Haruki
- Mikhail Sholokhov
 Siburapha
 Henryk Sienkiewicz
 Angelos Sikelianos
 "The Sacred Way"
 Ignazio Silone
Bread and Wine
Fontamara
 Georges Simenon
 Antonio Skármeta
 Juliusz Słowacki
 Edith Södergran
 Sasha Sokolov
A School for Fools
 Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn
Cancer Ward
One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich
The Song of Roland
 Sophocles
Ajax
Antigone
Electra
Oedipus at Colonus
Oedipus the King
Philoctetes
Women of Trachis
 Madame de Staël
 Gaspara Stampa
 Stendhal
The Charterhouse of Parma
Scarlet and Black
 Carl Sternheim
 Adalbert Stifter
 "Abdias"
Indian Summer
 "Rock Crystal"
 Theodor Storm
Immensee
The White Horseman
 August Strindberg
The Ghost Sonata
Miss Julie
 Snorri Sturluson
The Prose Edda
The Saga of King Ólaf the Saint
 Su Shi
 Su Tong
Rice
 Suetonius
 Sürdās
 Italo Svevo
Confessions of Zeno
 Wisława Szymborska
 Tacitus
Annals
 Rabindranath Tagore
The Tale of the Campaign Of Igor
 Tang Xianzu
The Peony Pavilion
- Tanizaki Jun'ichiro
Some Prefer Nettles
 Tao Qian
 Torquato Tasso
Aminta
Jerusalem Delivered
 Tawfiq al-Hakim
 Terence
The Brothers
The Eunuch
Phormio
 Theocritus
 "Idyll" I
 "Idyll" IV
 "Idyll" VII
 Theophrastus
Characters
The Thousand and One Nights
 Thucydides
 Albius Tibillus
 Ludwig Tieck
 Tirso de Molina
The Trickster of Seville
 Pramoedya Ananta Toer
The Fugitive
 Ernst Toller
 Tatyana Tolstaya
 Lev Tolstoi
Anna Karenina
The Death Of Ivan Ilyich
The Kreutzer Sonata
War And Peace
 Miguel Torga
 Georg Trakl
 "Grodek"
 Iurii Trifonov
 Tsushima Yuko
 Marina Tsvetaeva
 Gosvami Tulsidās
 Ivan Turgenev
Fathers and Sons
First Love
A Month in the Country
 Miguel de Unamuno
The Christ of Velazquez
Mist
 Sigrid Undset
Kristin Lavransdatter
 Giuseppe Ungaretti
 "Sirens"
Upanishads
 Honoré d'Urfé
 Luisa Valenzuela
 Paul Valéry
 "Le Cimetière marin"
 "La Jeune Parque"
 Ramón del Valle-Inclán
 César Vallejo
 "Considerando en frío"
 "The Eternal Dice"

- |  |                                       |                                 |
|--|---------------------------------------|---------------------------------|
| Mario Vargas Llosa                     | François Villon                       | Christoph Martin Wieland        |
| The Vedas                       | “Ballade des dames du                 | Elie Wiesel                     |
| Lope de Vega Carpio                    | temps jadis”                          | Stanisław Witkiewicz            |
| Fuenteovejuna                   | “Ballade des Pendus”                  | Christa Wolf                    |
| Justice without Revenge         | Dev Virahsawmy                        | Wolfram von Eschenbach          |
| Peribáñez and the               | Virgil                                | Parzival                 |
| Comendador of Ocaña             | The Aeneid                     | Titirel                  |
| Giovanni Verga                         | Georgics                       | Willehalm                |
| The House by the Medlar Tree    | Elio Vittorini                        | Stanisław Wyspiański            |
| Master Don Gesualdo             | Conversation in Sicily         | Xenophon                        |
| Paul Verlaine                          | Voltaire                              | Xiao Hong                       |
| “L’Angoisse”                           | Candide                        | A. B. Yehoshua                  |
| “Art Poétique”                         | Philosophical Dictionary       | Mr. Mani                 |
| “Il pleure dans mon coeur . . .”       | Poem on the Disaster of Lisbon | Yosano Akiko                    |
| Jules Verne                            | Zadig                          | Marguerite Yourcenar            |
| Around The World In             | Joost van den Vondel                  | Memoirs of Hadrian       |
| Eighty Days                     | Mihály Vörösmarty                     | Evgenii Zamiatin                |
| Tarjei Vesaas                          | Walther von der Vogelweide            | We                       |
| Simon Vestdijk                         | Water Margin                   | Zeami                           |
| Boris Vian                             | Frank Wedekind                        | Émile Zola                      |
| Gil Vicente                            | The Lulu Plays                 | L’Assommoir              |
| Auto da Barca do Inferno, Auto  | Spring Awakening               | The Earth                |
| da Barca do Purgatório,         | Peter Weiss                           | Germinal                 |
| Autoda Barca da Glória          | The Investigation              | Mikhail Mikhailovich Zoshchenko |
| Farsa de Inês Pereira           | Marat/Sade                     | Count Miklós Zrínyi             |
| Alfred de Vigny                        | Sándor Weöres                         | Carl Zuckmayer                  |
| Chatterton                      | Franz Werfel                          |                                 |
| Military Servitude and Grandeur |                                       |                                 |
| “Moses”                                |                                       |                                 |

CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF WRITERS

---

fl. 8th century BC(?)	Homer	c. AD 480–AD 524	Boethius
fl. c. 700 BC	Hesiod	c. 497–545	Imru Al-Qays
c. 612 BC– ?	Sappho	c. 575–646	Al-Khansa'
c. 570 BC–c. 475 BC	Anacreon	701/705–762	Li Bai
525/524 BC–456 BC	Aeschylus	712–770	Du Fu
518/522 BC–438/446 BC	Pindar	772–846	Bai Juyi
c. 496 BC–406 BC	Sophocles	c. 915–965	Al-Mutanabbi
484 BC–420 BC	Herodotus	c. 935–c. 1020	Abu'l Qāsim Ferdowsi
480/485 BC–c. 406 BC	Euripides	c. 978– ?	Murasaki Shikibu
c. 460 BC–c. 399 BC	Thucydides	1037–1101	Su Shi
c. 450 BC–c. 385 BC	Aristophanes	1048–1131	Omar Khayyam
c. 431 BC–c. 354 BC	Xenophon	1054–1122	Al-Hariri
c. 429 BC–347 BC	Plato	c. 1058–1139	Ibn Khafajah
384 BC–322 BC	Aristotle	c. 1118–1190	Saigyo
384 BC–322 BC	Demosthenes	c. 1130–1220/1231	Farid al-Din Attār
c. 370 BC–c. 287 BC	Theophrastus	1160–1210/1220	Hartmann von Aue
c. 342 BC–c. 295 BC	Menander	c. 1165–1240	Ibn Al-'Arabi
c. 300 BC– ?	Theocritus	fl. c. 1170	Chrétien de Troyes
c. 254 BC–c. 184 BC	Plautus	c. 1170–c. 1230	Walther von der Vogelweide
fl. 250 BC	Apollonius	1179–1241	Snorri Sturluson
fl. 250 BC	Callimachus	c. 1181–1235	Ibn Al-Farid
239 BC–169 BC	Ennius	fl. late 12th century	Marie de France
c. 200 BC–c. 118 BC	Polybius	fl. 1195–1220	Wolfram von Eschenbach
c. 190 BC–159 BC	Terence	fl. c. 1200	Gottfried von Strassburg
106 BC–43 BC	Cicero	1207–1273	Jalalu'd-Din Rumi
c. 100 BC–44 BC	Caesar	1209–1292	Muslih-al-Din Sa'di
c. 99 BC–c. 55 BC	Lucretius	fl. c. 1250	Hadewijch
86 BC–35 BC	Sallust	c. 1255–1300	Guido Cavalcanti
c. 84 BC–c. 54 BC	Catullus	1265–1321	Dante Alighieri
70 BC–19 BC	Virgil	c. 1283–1352	Kenko
65 BC–8 BC	Horace	c. 1300(?)–1377	Guillaume de Machaut
64/59 BC–AD 12/17	Livy	1304–1374	Petrarch
c. 57 BC–19/18 BC	Tibullus	1313–1375	Giovanni Boccaccio
57/50 BC–c. 16 BC	Propertius	1325/26–1389/90	Shams al-Din Muhammad Hafiz
43 BC–AD 17	Ovid	c. 1337– ?	Jean Froissart
c. 4 BC–AD 65	Seneca	1363–1443	Zeami
c. AD 30–c. AD 104	Martial	c. 1365–c. 1430	Christine de Pizan
AD 34–AD 62	Persius	c. 1430– ?	François Villon
c. AD 35–c. AD 100	Quintilian	1456–1530	Jacopo Sannazaro
AD 39–AD 65	Lucan	1457–1521	Sebastian Brant
c. AD 46–c. AD 120	Plutarch	c. 1465–c. 1536	Gil Vicente
AD 50–AD 130	Juvenal	1467–1536	Desiderius Erasmus
c. AD 56–c. AD 116	Tacitus	1469–1527	Niccolò Machiavelli
d. AD 66	Petronius	1470–1520	Bernardo Dovizi da Bibbiena
c. AD 69–AD 160	Suetonius	1470–1547	Pietro Bembo
c. AD 120–after AD 180	Lucian	1474–1533	Ludovico Ariosto
AD 121–AD 180	Aurelius	1478/c. 1530–1583/1610	Sürdās
c. AD 123–after 163 AD	Apuleius	1478–1529	Baldassarre Castiglione
2nd/3rd century AD	Longus	1483–1546	Martin Luther
c. AD 310–c. AD 395	Ausonius	1483(?)–1553	François Rabelais
fl. late 4th century AD	Claudian	1492–1547	Vittoria Colonna
c. AD 347–AD 420	St. Jerome	1492–1549	Marguerite de Navarre
AD 348–AD 405	Prudentius	1492–1556	Pietro Aretino
AD 354–AD 430	St. Augustine	1494–1576	Hans Sachs
AD 365–427	Tao Qian	c. 1495–1542	Ruzzante
fl. c. AD 400	Kālidāsa	1498–1546/47	Mirā Bāi

d. 1518	Kabīr	1770–1843	Friedrich Hölderlin
1522–1566	Joachim Du Bellay	1772–1801	Novalis
c. 1524–1554	Gaspara Stampa	1772–1829	Friedrich von Schlegel
1524/25–1580	Luís de Camões	1773–1853	Ludwig Tieck
1524–1585	Pierre de Ronsard	1775(?)–1831	Caroline de la Motte Fouqué
1530–1584	Jan Kochanowski	1776–1822	E.T.A. Hoffmann
1532–1623	Tulsīdās	1777–1811	Heinrich von Kleist
1533–1592	Michel de Montaigne	1777–1843	Friedrich de la Motte Fouqué
1544–1595	Torquato Tasso	1778–1842	Clemens Brentano
1548–1600	Giordano Bruno	1781–1838	Adelbert von Chamisso
1550–1616	Tang Xianzu	1783–1842	Stendhal
1567(?)–1625	Honoré d'Urfé	1785–1859	Bettina von Arnim
1568–1639	Tommaso Campanella	1785–1863	Jacob Grimm
1581–1647	Pieter Corneliszoon Hooft	1785–1873	Alessandro Manzoni
1585–1618	Gerbrandt Bredero	1786–1859	Wilhelm Grimm
1587–1679	Joost van den Vondel	1788–1857	Joseph von Eichendorff
1596–1687	Constantijn Huygens	1790–1869	Alphonse de Larmartine
1606–1684	Pierre Corneille	1791–1861	Eugène Scribe
1610–1660	Paul Scarron	1791–1872	Franz Grillparzer
1613–1680	François La Rochefoucauld	1795–1829	Aleksandr Griboedov
1616–1664	Andreas Gryphius	1797–1848	Annette von Droste-Hülshoff
1619–1655	Cyrano de Bergerac	1797–1854	Jeremias Gotthelf
1620–1664	Count Miklós Zrínyi	1797–1856	Heinrich Heine
1621–1695	Jean de La Fontaine	1797–1863	Alfred de Vigny
1622–1673	Molière	1797–1869	Asadullāh Khān Ghālib
1622–1676	Hans Jakob Christoffel von Grimmelshausen	1798–1837 1798–1855	Giacomo Leopardi Adam Mickiewicz
1623–1662	Blaise Pascal	1799–1837	Aleksandr Pushkin
1628–1703	Charles Perrault	1799–1850	Honoré de Balzac
1634–1693	Madame de Lafayette	1800–1855	Mihály Vörösmarty
1636–1711	Nicolas Boileau	1801–1836	Christian Dietrich Grabbe
1639–1699	Jean Racine	1801–1862	Johann Nepomuk Nestroy
1642–1693	Ihara Saikaku	1802–1870	Alexandre Dumas père
1644–1694	Bashō	1802–1885	Victor Hugo
1651–1695	Sor Juana Inés de la Cruz	1803–1870	Prosper Mérimée
1653–1725	Chikamatsu Monzaemon	1803–1899	Guido Gezelle
1668–1747	Alain-René Lesage	1804–1875	Eduard Mörike
1684–1754	Ludvig Holberg	1804–1876	George Sand
1688–1763	Marivaux	1805–1868	Adalbert Stifter
1694–1778	Voltaire	1805–1875	Hans Christian Andersen
1697–1763	Abbé Prévost	1808–1855	Gérard de Nerval
1698–1782	Pietro Metastasio	1809–1849	Juliusz Slowacki
1707–1793	Carlo Goldoni	1809–1852	Nikolai Gogol'
1712–1778	Jean-Jacques Rousseau	1810–1857	Alfred de Musset
1713–1784	Denis Diderot	1811–1872	Théophile Gautier
1724–1803	Friedrich Gottlieb Klopstock	1812–1859	Zygmunt Krasiński
1729–1781	Gotthold Ephraim Lessing	1812–1891	Ivan Goncharov
1732–1799	Beaumarchais	1813–1837	Georg Büchner
1733–1813	Christoph Martin Wieland	c. 1813–1855	Søren Kierkegaard
1740–1814	Marquis de Sade	1813–1863	Friedrich Hebbel
1741–1803	Choderlos de Laclos	1813–1871	Baron József Eötvös
1745–1792	Denis Fonvizin	1814–1841	Mikhail Lermontov
1749–1803	Vittorio Alfieri	1817–1888	Theodor Storm
1749–1832	Johann Wolfgang von Goethe	1818–1883	Ivan Turgenev
1751–1792	Jakob Michael Reinhold Lenz	1819–1890	Gottfried Keller
1756–1831	Willem Bilderdijk	1819–1898	Theodor Fontane
1759–1805	Friedrich von Schiller	1820–1881	Multatuli
1766–1817	Madame de Staël	1821–1867	Charles Baudelaire
1767–1845	August Wilhelm von Schlegel	1821–1880	Gustave Flaubert
1768–1848	Chateaubriand	1821–1881	Fedor Dostoevskii

c. 1821–1883	Cyprian Kamil Norwid	1872–1943	Shimazaki Toson
1822–1896	Edmond Goncourt	1873–1907	Alfred Jarry
1823–1849	Sándor Petöfi	1873–1950	Johannes V. Jensen
1824–1895	Alexandre Dumas films	1873–1935	Henri Barbusse
1825–1898	Conrad Ferdinand Meyer	1873–1954	Colette
1828–1905	Jules Verne	1874–1929	Hugo von Hofmannsthal
1828–1906	Henrik Ibsen	1875–1926	Rainer Maria Rilke
1828–1910	Lev Tolstói	1875–1955	Thomas Mann
1830–1870	Jules Goncourt	1876–1944	Max Jacob
1832–1910	Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson	1877–1962	Hermann Hesse
1834–1886	José Hernández	1878–1942	Carl Sternheim
1835–1907	Giosuè Carducci	1878–1942	Yosano Akiko
1839–1908	Joaquim Maria Machado de Assis	1878–1945	Georg Kaiser
1840–1902	Émile Zola	1878–1952	Ferenc Molnár
1840–1922	Giovanni Verga	1878–1957	Alfred Döblin
1842–1898	Stéphane Mallarmé	1880–1918	Guillaume Apollinaire
1844–1896	Paul Verlaine	1880–1921	Aleksandr Blok
1844–1900	Friedrich Nietzsche	1880–1934	Andrei Belyi
1844–1924	Anatole France	1880–1942	Robert Musil
1845–1900	José Maria de Eça de Queirós	1881–1936	Lu Xun
1846–1870	Comte de Lautréamont	1881–1958	Roger Martin du Gard
1846–1916	Henryk Sienkiewicz	1882–1949	Sigrid Undset
1847–1912	Bolesław Prus	1883–1923	Jaroslav Hašek
1848–1907	Joris-Karl Huysmans	1883–1924	Franz Kafka
1849–1912	August Strindberg	1883–1957	Nikos Kazantzakis
1850–1893	Guy de Maupassant	1883–1957	Umberto Saba
1853–1995	José Martí	1883–1971	Shiga Naoya
1854–1891	Arthur Rimbaud	1884–1937	Evgenii Zamiatin
1858–1940	Selma Lagerlöf	1884–1951	Angelo Sikelianos
1859–1943	Kostas Palamas	1885–1922	Velimir Khlebnikov
1859–1952	Knut Hamsun	1885–1939	Stanisław Witkiewicz
1860–1887	Jules Laforgue	1885–1962	Isak Dinesen
1860–1904	Anton Chekhov	1885–1970	François Mauriac
1861–1928	Italo Svevo	1886–1914	Alain-Fournier
1861–1941	Rabindranath Tagore	1886–1942	Hagiwara Sakutarō
1862–1921	Georges Feydeau	1886–1951	Hermann Broch
1862–1922	Mori Ogai	1886–1956	Gottfried Benn
1862–1931	Arthur Schnitzler	1886–1965	Tanizaki Jun'ichiro
1862–1944	Jean Giraudoux	1887–1914	Georg Trakl
1862–1946	Gerhart Hauptmann	1887–1961	Blaise Cendrars
1862–1949	Maurice Maeterlinck	1887–1975	Saint-John Perse
1863–1923	Louis Couperus	1888–1935	Fernando Pessoa
1863–1933	C. P. Cavafy	1888–1948	Georges Bernanos
1863–1938	Gabriele D'Annunzio	1888–1970	S.Y. Agnon
1864–1918	Frank Wedekind	1888–1970	Giuseppe Ungaretti
1866–1944	Romain Rolland	1889–1957	Gabriela Mistral
1867–1902	Masaoka Shiki	1889–1963	Jean Cocteau
1867–1916	Rubén Darío	1889–1966	Anna Akhmatova
1867–1916	Natsume Sōseki	1889–1984	Henri Michaux
1867–1936	Luigi Pirandello	1890–1938	Karel Čapek
1868–1918	Edmond Rostand	1890–1945	Franz Werfel
1868–1936	Maksim Gor'kii	1890–1960	Boris Pasternak
1868–1955	Paul Claudel	1891–1938	Osip Mandel'shtam
1869–1907	Stanisław Wyspiański	1891–1940	Mikhail Bulgakov
1869–1951	André Gide	1891–1950	Ivan Goll
1870–1953	Ivan Bunin	1891–1970	Nelly Sachs
1871–1922	Marcel Proust	1891–1974	Pär Lagerkvist
1871–1936	Grazia Deledda	1892–1923	Edith Södergran
1871–1945	Paul Valéry	1892–1927	Akutagawa Ryunosuke
1871–1950	Heinrich Mann	1892–1938	César Vallejo

1892–1941	Marina Tsvetaeva	1902–1998	Halldór Laxness
1892–1942	Bruno Schulz	1903–1923	Raymond Radiguet
1892–1953	Ugo Betti	1903–1976	Raymond Queneau
1892–1975	Ivo Andrić	1903–1987	Marguerite Yourcenar
1893–1930	Vladimir Maiakovskii	1903–1989	Georges Simenon
1893–1939	Ernst Toller	1904–1962	Abdulla Goran
1893–1945	Mario de Andrade	1904–1969	Witold Gombrowicz
1893–1981	Miroslav Krleža	1904–1973	Pablo Neruda
1894–1938	Boris Pil'niak	1904–1980	Alejo Carpentier
1894–1939	Joseph Roth	1905–1974	Siburapha
1894–1941(?)	Isaak Babel	1905–1980	Jean-Paul Sartre
1894–1961	Louis-Ferdinand Céline	1905–1984	Mikhail Sholokhov
1894–1982	Nishiwaki Junzaburo	1905–1994	Elias Canetti
1895–1925	Sergei Esenin	1906–1972	Dino Buzzati
1895–1952	Paul Éluard	1906–1989	Samuel Beckett
1895–1958	Mikhail Mikhailovich Zoshchenko	1907–1968	Ding Ling
1895–1960	Iurii Olesha	1907–1972	Gnter Eich
1895–1970	Jean Giono	1907–1986	Mircea Eliade
1895–1974	Marcel Pagnol	1907–1988	René Char
1895–1989	Maria Kuncewicz	1907–1990	Alberto Moravia
1895–1998	Ernst Jünger	1907–1995	Miguel Torga
1896–1928	Paul van Ostaïjen	1908–1950	Cesare Pavese
1896–1933	Miyazawa Kenji	1908–1966	Elio Vittorini
1896–1948	Antonin Artaud	1908–1967	João Guimarães Rosa
1896–1953	Martinus Nijhoff	1908–1970	Arthur Adamov
1896–1957	Giuseppe Tomasi di Lampedusa	1908–1986	Simone de Beauvoir
1896–1966	André Breton	1909–1944	Miklós Radnóti
1896–1966	Heimito von Doderer	1909–1945	Robert Brasillach
1896–1977	Carl Zuckmayer	1909–1948	Dazai Osamu
1896–1981	Eugenio Montale	1909–1981	Demetrio Aguilera Malta
1897–1970	Tarjei Vesaas	1909–1983	Jerzy Andrzejewski
1897–1982	Louis Aragon	1909–1983	Gabrielle Roy
1898–1956	Bertolt Brecht	1909–1990	Yannis Ritsos
1898–1970	Erich Maria Remarque	1909–1994	Eugène Ionesco
1898–1971	Simon Vestdijk	1910–1976	José Lezama Lima
1898–1987	Tawfiq al-Hakim	1910–1986	Jean Genet
1898–1993	Ibuse Masuji	1910–1987	Jean Anhouilh
1899–1966	Lao She	1910–	Rachel de Queiroz
1899–1972	Kawabata Yasunari	1911–1942	Xiao Hong
1899–1974	Miguel Ángel Asturias	1911–1969	José Mariá Arguedas
1899–1986	Jorge Luis Borges	1911–1986	Fritz Hochwälder
1899–1988	Francis Ponge	1911–1991	Max Frisch
1900–1944	Antoine de Saint-Exupéry	1911–1996	Odysseus Elytis
1900–1970	Leopoldo Marechal	1911–	Naguib Mahfouz
1900–1971	George Seferis	1911–	Czesław Miłosz
1900–1977	Jacques Prévert	1912–1980	Nélson Rodrigues
1900–1978	Ignazio Silone	1912–1985	Elsa Morante
1900–1984	Eduardo De Filippo	1912–2001	Jorge Amado
1900–1987	Gilberto Freyre	1913–1960	Albert Camus
1900–1991	William Heinesen	1913–1989	Sándor Weöres
1900–1999	Nathalie Sarraute	1913–1991	Vasco Pratolini
1901–1938	Ödön von Horváth	1914–1984	Julio Cortázar
1901–1968	Salvatore Quasimodo	1914–1996	Marguerite Duras
1901–1976	André Malraux	1914–1998	Octavio Paz
1901–1990	Ivar Lo-Johansson	1915–1997	Claude Roy
1902–1967	Marcel Aymé	1916–1982	Peter Weiss
1902–1975	Carlo Levi	1916–1991	Natalia Ginzburg
1902–1983	Gyula Illyés	1916–2000	Giorgio Bassani
1902–1987	Carlos Drummond de Andrade	1917–1965	Johannes Bobrowski
1902–1989	Nicolás Guillén	1917–1985	Heinrich Böll

1917–1987	Carlo Cassola	1929–	Christa Wolf
1918–1986	Juan Rulfo	1930–	Adonis
1918–	Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn	1931–1989	Thomas Bernhard
1919–1987	Primo Levi	1931–	Ivan Klíma
1920–1959	Boris Vian	1932–1990	Manuel Puig
1920–1970	Paul Celan	1932–	Umberto Eco
1920–1992	Väinö Linna	1933–	Evgenii Evtushenko
1920–	Ishigaki Rin	1933–	Cees Nooteboom
1920–	Jaan Kross	1934–1984	Uwe Johnson
1920–	Albert Memmi	1935–1989	Danilo Kiš
1921–	Tadeusz Roźewicz	1935–	Manlio Argueta
1921–1989	Leonardo Sciascia	1935–	Francesca Duranti
1921–1990	Friedrich Dürrenmatt	1935–	Öe Kenzaburō
1922–1949	Chairil Anwar	1935–	Rendra
1922–1951	Tadeusz Borowski	1936–1982	Georges Perec
1922–1975	Pier Paolo Pasolini	1936–	Assia Djebar
1922–1991	Vasko Popa	1936–	Vaclav Havel
1922–	José Craveirinha	1936–	Ismail Kadare
1922–	Alain Robbe-Grillet	1936–	Mario Vargas Llosa
1923–1969	Jalal Âl-e Ahmad	1936–	A. B. Yehoshua
1923–1985	Italo Calvino	1937–	Juan José Saer
1923–1998	Miroslav Holub	1938–	Abdelkebir Khatibi
1923–1996	Endō Shūsaku	1938–	Luisa Valenzuela
1923–	Wisława Szymborska	1939–	Huang Chunming
1924–1986	Vasil Bykaw	1939–	Amos Oz
1924–1993	Abe Kōbō	1940–1996	Iosif Brodskii
1925–1970	Mishima Yukio	1940–	Gao Xingjian
1925–1974	Rosario Castellanos	1940–	Antonio Skármeta
1925–1977	Clarice Lispector	1941–	Jaan Kaplinski
1925–1981	Iurii Trifonov	1942–	Isabel Allende
1925–	Ernesto Cardenal	1942–	Dev Virahsawmy
1925–	Pramoedya Ananta Toer	1943–1990	Reinaldo Arenas
1926–1973	Ingeborg Bachmann	1943–	Evelyne Accad
1926–	René Depestre	1943–	Nicole Brossard
1926–	Siegfried Lenz	1943–	Sasha Sokolov
1927–1991	Yusuf Idris	1944–	Tahar Ben Jelloun
1927–	Günter Grass	1947–	Tsushima Yuko
1927–	Qurratulain Hyder	1948–	Gioconda Belli
1927–	Ahmadou Kourouma	1949–	Bei Dao
1928–	Carlos Fuentes	1949–	Murakami Haruki
1928–	Gabriel García Márquez	1950–	Péter Esterházy
1928–	Edouard Glissant	1951–	Tatyana Tolstaya
1928–	Miodrag Pavlović	1952–	Li Ang
1928–	Elie Wiesel	1953–	Patrick Chamoiseau
1929–	Hugo Claus	1957–	Peter Høeg
1929–	Milan Kundera	1963–	Dorothea Rosa Herilany
1929–	Milorad Pavić	1963–	Su Tong

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF WORKS

---

- “L’Abandonné,” story by Guy de Maupassant, 1884
“Abdias,” story by Adalbert Stifter, 1843
About This, poem by Vladimir Maiakovskii, 1923
The Aeneid, poem by Virgil, 1st century BC
Aetia, poem by Callimachus, 3rd century BC
Against Sainte-Beuve, prose by Marcel Proust, 1954
The Age of Reason, novel by Jean-Paul Sartre, 1945
Ajax, play by Sophocles, before 441 BC(?)
“Alchemy of the Word,” poem by Arthur Rimbaud, 1873
All Quiet on the Western Front, novel by Erich Maria Remarque, 1929
Aminta, play by Torquato Tasso, 1573
Andreas, fiction by Hugo von Hofmannsthal, 1930 (written 1912–13)
“L’Angoisse,” poem by Paul Verlaine, 1866
Amphitryo, play by Plautus, 2nd century BC
Andorra, play by Max Frisch, 1961
Anna Karenina, novel by Lev Tolstoi, 1875–77
Annals, prose by Tacitus, early 2nd century AD
Antigone, play by Jean Anhouilh, 1944
Antigone, play by Sophocles, c. 441 BC(?)
“Apology for Raymond Sebond,” prose by Michel de Montaigne, 1570
“L’Après-midi d’un faune,” poem by Stéphane Mallarmé, 1876
Around the World in Eighty Days, novel by Jules Verne, 1873
“Art,” poem by Théophile Gautier, 1856
The Art of Love, poem by Ovid, 1st century BC/1st century AD
The Art of Poetry, poem by Nicolas Boileau, 1674
“Art poétique,” poem by Paul Verlaine, 1874
“Arte poética,” poem by Pablo Neruda, 1935
Ashes and Diamonds, novel by Jerzy Andrzejewski, 1948
L’Assommoir, novel by Émile Zola, 1877
Athalie, play by Jean Racine, 1691
Aucassin and Nicolette (Anon), romance, 13th century
Auto-da-Fé, novel by Elias Canetti, 1936
Auto da Barca do Inferno, Auto da Barca do Purgatorio, Auto da Barca da Gloria, plays by Gil Vicente, 1517, 1518, 1519
Baal, play by Bertolt Brecht, 1922
Bajazet, play by Jean Racine, 1672
The Balcony, play by Jean Genet, 1956
The Bald Prima Donna, play by Eugène Ionesco, 1950
“Ballade des dames du temps jadis,” poem by François Villon, 1489 (written c. 1460?)
“Ballade des pendus,” poem by François Villon, 1489
The Barber of Seville, play by Beaumarchais, 1775
“Le Bateau ivre,” poem by Arthur Rimbaud, 1871
The Bedbug, play by Vladimir Maiakovskii, 1929
Before the Storm, novel by Theodor Fontane, 1878
Berenice, play by Jean Racine, 1670
Berlin Alexanderplatz, novel by Alfred Döblin, 1929
The Betrothed, novel by Alessandro Manzoni, 1827
The Bible, anonymous verse and prose, c. 900 BC onwards
The Birds, play by Aristophanes, 414 BC
The Birth of Tragedy, prose by Friedrich Nietzsche, 1872
Blood Wedding, play by Federico García Lorca, 1933
The Blue Angel, novel by Heinrich Mann, 1905
The Blue Bird, play by Maurice Maeterlinck, 1909
Blue Flowers, novel by Raymond Queneau, 1965
The Book of the City of Ladies, prose by Christine de Pizan, 1405
Brand, play by Henrik Ibsen, 1865
“Bread and Wine,” poem by Friedrich Hölderlin, 1806 (written 1800–01)
Bread and Wine, novel by Ignazio Silone, 1937
The Bridge on the Drina, novel by Ivo Andrić, 1945
The Broken Jug, play by Heinrich von Kleist, 1808
The Bronze Horseman, poem by Aleksandr Pushkin, written 1833
“The Broom,” poem by Giacomo Leopardi, 1845
The Brothers, play by Terence, 160 BC
The Brothers Karamazov, novel by Fedor Dostoevskii, 1880
The Brothers Menaechmus, play by Plautus, 2nd century BC
Buddenbrooks, novel by Thomas Mann, 1900
Camille, novel by Alexandre Dumas  fils, 1848
Cancer Ward, novel by Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, 1968
Candide, novella by Voltaire, 1759
The Castle, novel by Franz Kafka, 1926 (written 1922)
The Caucasian Chalk Circle, play by Bertolt Brecht, 1948
“Le Chanson du mal-aimé,” poem by Guillaume Apollinaire, 1913
Characters, prose by Theophrastus, c. 319 BC
The Charterhouse of Parma, novel by Stendhal, 1839
Chatterton, play by Alfred de Vigny, 1835
Chéri, novel by Colette, 1920
The Cherry Orchard, play by Anton Chekhov, 1904
The Christ of Velazquez, poem by Miguel de Unamuno, 1920
Christ Stopped at Eboli, novel by Carlo Levi, 1945
The Cid, play by Pierre Corneille, 1636–37
“Le Cimetière marin,” poem by Paul Valéry, 1920
The City of God, prose by St Augustine, 5th century
Cloud in Trousers, poem by Vladimir Maiakovskii, 1915
The Cloud Messenger, poem by Kālidāsa, 5th century
The Clouds, play by Aristophanes, 423 BC
The Colloquies, prose by Desiderius Erasmus, 1518
The Comic Theatre, play by Carlo Goldoni, 1750
The Conceited Young Ladies, play by Molière, 1659
The Conference of the Birds, poem by Farid al-Din Attār, c. 1177
The Confessions, prose by Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 1781
Confessions, Book I, prose by St. Augustine, 4th century
Confessions of Felix Krull, Confidence Man, novel by Thomas Mann, 1922 (complete 1954)
Confessions of Zeno, novel by Italo Svevo, 1923
“Considerando en frio,” poem by César Vallejo, 1939
The Consolation of Philosophy, prose by Boethius, early 6th century
Conversation in Sicily, novel by Elio Vittorini, 1939
La cortigiana, play by Pietro Aretino, 1534
The Counterfeiters, novel by André Gide, 1926
“Un Coup de dés jamais n’abolira le hasard,” poem by Stéphane Mallarmé, 1914 (written 1897)
Cousin Bette, novel by Honoré de Balzac, 1847
Le Crève-cœur, poems by Louis Aragon, 1941
Crime and Punishment, novel by Fedor Dostoevskii, 1867
Cupid and Psyche, story by Apuleius, c. 180
Cuttlefish Bones, poems by Eugenio Montale, 1925
Cyrano de Bergerac, play by Edmond Rostand, 1897
Danton’s Death, play by Georg Buchner, 1835 (complete version 1850)
Daphnis and Chloe, poem by Longus, 2nd/3rd century
Dead Souls, novel by Nikolai Gogol, 1842

- “Death and the Compass,” story by Jorge Luis Borges, 1942
 “Death Fugue,” poem by Paul Celan, 1952 (written 1948)
Death in Venice, novella by Thomas Mann, 1912
The Death of Ivan Ilyich, novella by Lev Tolstoi, 1886
The Death of Virgil, novel by Hermann Broch, 1945
Deep Rivers, novel by José Mariá Arguedas, 1958
The Devil in the Flesh, novel by Raymond Radiguet, 1923
The Devils, novel by Fedor Dostoevskii, 1872
The Devil’s Elixirs, novel by E.T.A. Hoffmann, 1815–16
The Diary of a Madman, story by Nikolai Gogol’, 1835
The Difficult Man, play by Hugo von Hofmannsthal, 1921
The Divine Comedy, poem by Dante Alighieri, 1321
Doctor Faustus, novel by Thomas Mann, 1947
Doctor Zhivago, novel by Boris Pasternak, 1957
A Doll’s House, play by Henrik Ibsen, 1879
Dom Casmurro, novel by Joaquim Maria Machado de Assis, 1899
Don Carlos, play by Friedrich von Schiller, 1787
Don Juan, play by Molière, 1665
Don Quixote, novel by Miguel de Cervantes, 1615
The Dream of the Red Chamber, novel by Cao Xueqin, mid-18th century
The Earth, novel by Émile Zola, 1887
Effi Briest, novel by Theodor Fontane, 1895
Egils saga, anonymous prose, 13th century
 “Ein feste Burg,” hymn by Martin Luther, 1531 (written 1528?)
Elective Affinities, novel by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, 1809
Electra, play by Euripides, c. 422–16 BC
Electra, play by Sophocles, c. 418–10 BC(?)
Emile, fiction by Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 1762
 “The Emperor’s New Clothes,” story by Hans Christian Andersen, 1837
Endgame, play by Samuel Beckett, 1957
Envy, novel by Iurii Olesha, 1927
Epic of Gilgamesh, anonymous poem cycle, early 2nd millennium BC
Epigrams, poems by Martial, 1st century BC
Erec and Énide, poem by Chrétien de Troyes, written c. 1170
 “The Eternal Dice,” poem by César Vallejo, 1919
Eugene Onegin, poem by Aleksandr Pushkin, 1831
Eugenie Grandet, novel by Honor de Balzac, 1833
The Eunuch, play by Terence, 161 BC
Fables, stories by Jean de La Fontaine, 1688–89
The Fall, novel by Albert Camus, 1956
The False Confessions, play by Marivaux, 1737
Family Strife in Hapsburg, play by Franz Grillparzer, 1872
Fantasia: An Algerian Cavalcade, novel by Assia Djebar, 1985
Farsa de Inês Pereira, play by Gil Vicente, 1523
Fathers and Sons, novel by Ivan Turgenev, 1862
Faust, play by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe: part I, 1808; part II, 1832
Ferdynurke, novel by Witold Gombrowicz, 1937
Filumena Marturano, play by Eduardo De Filippo, 1946
The Fire Raisers, play by Max Frisch, 1948
First Love, novel by Ivan Turgenev, 1860
The Flame, novel by Gabriele D’Annunzio, 1900
A Flea in Her Ear, play by Georges Feydeau, 1907
 “Fleurs,” poem by Arthur Rimbaud, 1873
The Flies, play by Jean-Paul Sartre, 1943
Fontamara, novel by Ignazio Silone, 1930
 Fragment 1 [“Address to Aphrodite”], poem by Sappho, 7th century BC
 Fragment 31 [“Declaration of Love for a Young Girl”], poem by Sappho, 7th century BC
Francesca da Rimini, play by Gabriele D’Annunzio, 1901
Free Union, poem by André Breton, 1931
The Frogs, play by Aristophanes, 405 BC
Fuenteovejuna, play by Lope de Vega Carpio, 1619
The Fugitive, novel by Pramodya Ananta Toer, 1950
The Game of Love and Chance, play by Marivaux, 1730
Gargantua and Pantagruel, novels by François Rabelais, 1532–34(?)
The Gas Trilogy, plays by Georg Kaiser, 1917–20
The Gaucho Martín Fierro, poems by José Hernández, 1879
The Gentleman from San Francisco, novella by Ivan Bunin, 1915
Georgics, poem by Virgil, 1st century BC
The German Lesson, novel by Seigfried Lenz, 1968
Germinal, novel by Émile Zola, 1885
The Ghost Sonata, play by August Strindberg, 1907
Ghosts, play by Henrik Ibsen, 1881
The Glass Bead Game, novel by Hermann Hesse, 1943
The Gods Are Athirst, novel by Anatole France, 1912
Goetz of Berlichingen, play by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, 1773
The Good Person of Szechwan, play by Bertolt Brecht, 1943
The Good Soldier Švejk and His Fortunes in the World War, novel by Jaroslav Hašek, 1921–23
Gösta Berling’s Saga, novel by Selma Lagerlöf, 1891
The Government Inspector, play by Nikolai Gogol’, 1836
The Great Stage of the World, play by Pedro Calderón de la Barca, c. 1635
 “Grodek,” poem by Georg Trakl, 1915
The Grouch, play by Menander, 316 BC
Group Portrait with Lady, novel by Heinrich Böll, 1971
Guigamor, poem by Marie de France, late 12th century
 “Hansel and Gretel,” story by Jacob and Wilhelm Grimm, 1812
 “Hard Is the Road to Shu,” poem by Li Bai, c. 744
Hecale, poem by Callimachus, 3rd century BC
Hedda Gabler, play by Henrik Ibsen, 1890
Henry IV, play by Luigi Pirandello, 1921
A Hero of Our Times, novel by Mikhail Lermontov, 1840
 “Hérodiade,” poem by Stéphane Mallarmé, 1864–98
 “Heureux qui, comme Ulysse, a fait un beau voyage,” poem by Joachim Du Bellay, 1558
Hippolytus, play by Euripides, 428 BC
The Holy Terrors, novel by Jean Cocteau, 1929
 “Homecoming,” 20, poem by Heinrich Heine, 1824
The House by the Medlar Tree, novel by Giovanni Verga, 1881
The House of Bernarda Alba, play by Federico García Lorca, 1945
House of Liars, novel by Elsa Morante, 1948
The House of the Spirits, novel by Isabel Allende, 1982
The Hunchback of Notre-Dame, novel by Victor Hugo, 1831
Hunger, novel by Knut Hamsun, 1890
The Hussar on the Roof, novel by Jean Giono, 1951
 “Hymn to Autumn,” poem by Pierre de Ronsard, 1563
Hymns to the Night, poems by Novalis, 1800
The Hypochondriac, play by Molière, 1673
The Idiot, novel by Fedor Dostoevskii, 1869
Idyll I, poem by Theocritus, c. 270s BC
Idyll IV, poem by Theocritus, c. 270s BC
Idyll VII, poem by Theocritus, c. 270s BC
If on a Winter’s Night a Traveller, novel by Italo Calvino, 1979
The Iliad, poem by Homer, c. 750 BC
I’m Not Stiller, play by Max Frisch, 1954
Immensee, novella by Theodor Storm, 1851 (written 1849)
The Immoralist, novella by André Gide, 1902
In Defence of Marcus Caelius Rufus, prose by Cicero, 56 BC

- In the Labyrinth*, novel by Alain Robbe-Grillet, 1959
 “Incantation by Laughter,” poem by Velimir Khlebnikov, 1909
Indian Summer, novel by Adalbert Stifter, 1857
The Infernal Machine, play by Jean Cocteau, 1934
 “The Infinite,” poem by Giacomo Leopardi, 1819
The Insect Play, play by Karel Čapek, 1921
The Intruder, play by Maurice Maeterlinck, 1890
The Investigation, play by Peter Weiss, 1965
 “Invitation to Wine,” poem by Li Bai, 752
Ion, play by Euripides, c. 421–13 BC
Jacques the Fatalist, novel by Denis Diderot, 1796
Jerusalem Delivered, poem by Torquato Tasso, 1580
 “La Jeune Parque,” poem by Paul Valéry, 1917 (written 1912–17)
The Jew’s Beech Tree, novella by Annette von Droste-Hülshoff, 1851
Journey to the End of the Night, novel by Louis-Ferdinand Céline, 1932
Journey to the West, anonymous novel, 11/12th century
Justice Without Revenge, play by Lope de Vega Carpio, 1632
Justine, novel by Marquis de Sade, 1791
Kalevala, anonymous poem, origins date to early 1st century AD
The Kingdom of This World, novel by Alejo Carpentier, 1947
Kiss of the Spider Woman, novel by Manuel Puig, 1976
The Kreutzer Sonata, novella by Lev Tolstoi, 1891
Kristin Lavransdatter, novels by Sigrid Undset, 1920–22
The Lady with a Dog, story by Anton Chekhov, written 1899
Lancelot, poem by Chrétien de Troyes, written c. 1170
The Last Poems, poems by Jules Laforgue, 1890
The Last Temptation, novel by Nikos Kazantzakis, 1955
Lazarillo de Tormes, anonymous novel, 1554
Les Liaisons Dangereuses, novel by Choderlos de Laclos, 1782
Life: A User’s Manual, novel by Georges Perec, 1978
Life Is a Dream, play by Pedro Calderón de la Barca, 1623
The Life of Galileo, play by Bertolt Brecht, 1943
The Lime Works, novel by Thomas Bernhard, 1970
The Little Clay Cart, anonymous play, 1st century AD(?)
Lives of Lysander and Sulla, prose by Plutarch, 1st/2nd century AD
Lorenzaccio, play by Alfred de Musset, 1834
The Lost Honor of Katharina Blum, novel by Heinrich Böll, 1974
Lost Illusions, novel by Honoré de Balzac, 1837–43
The Lost Steps, novel by Alejo Carpentier, 1953
Love in the Time of Cholera, novel by Gabriel García Márquez, 1985
Loves, poem by Ovid, late 1st century BC
The Lower Depths, play by Maksim Gor’kii, 1902
The Lulu Plays, plays by Frank Wedekind, 1895–1904
The Lusiads, poem by Luís de Camões, 1572
Lysistrata, play by Aristophanes, 411 BC
Mad Love, prose by André Breton, 1937
Madame Bovary, novel by Gustave Flaubert, 1857
The Madwoman of Chailot, play by Jean Giraudoux, 1945
The Magic Mountain, novel by Thomas Mann, 1924
Mahābhārata, epic poem attributed to Vyāsa, 1st millennium BC/AD
The Maids, play by Jean Genet, 1947
The Man Without Qualities, novel by Robert Musil, 1930–43
The Mandarins, novel by Simone de Beauvoir, 1954
The Mandrake, play by Niccolò Machiavelli, 1524
Manon Lescaut, novel by Abbé Prévost, 1733
Man’s Fate, novel by André Malraux, 1933
Marat/Sade, play by Peter Weiss, 1964
Maria Magdalena, play by Friedrich Hebbel, 1844
Mary Stuart, play by Friedrich von Schiller, 1800
The Master and Margarita, novel by Mikhail Bulgakov, 1966
The Master Builder, play by Henrik Ibsen, 1892
Master Don Gesualdo, novel by Giovanni Verga, 1889
A Matter of Dispute, play by Marivaux, 1744
Maxims, prose by La Rochefoucauld, 1665–78
Medea, play by Euripides, 431 BC
Meditations, prose by Aurelius, c. 170
Memoirs, prose by Chateaubriand, 1849–50
Memoirs of a Good-for-Nothing, novella by Joseph von Eichendorff, 1826
Memoirs of Hadrian, novel by Marguerite Yourcenar, 1951
Metamorphoses, poem by Ovid, 1st century BC/1st century AD
The Metamorphosis, novella by Franz Kafka, 1915
 “Mía,” poem by Rubén Darío, 1896
Michael Kohlhaas, story by Heinrich von Kleist, 1810
Military Servitude and Grandeur, stories by Alfred de Vigny, 1835
Minna von Barnhelm, play by Gotthold Ephraim Lessing, 1767
The Minor, play by Denis Fonvizin, 1782
The Misanthrope, play by Molière, 1666
The Miser, play by Molière, 1668
Les Misérables, novel by Victor Hugo, 1862
Miss Julie, play by August Strindberg, 1888
Mist, novel by Miguel de Unamuno, 1914
Mr. Mani, novel by A.B. Yehoshua, 1989
The Mistress of the Inn, play by Carlo Goldoni, 1753
Molloy, Malone Dies, The Unnamable, novels by Samuel Beckett, 1951–53
A Month in the Country, play by Ivan Turgenev, 1869
The Moon and the Bonfires, novel by Cesare Pavese, 1950
The Mosella, poem by Ausonius, c. 371
 “Moses,” poem by Alfred de Vigny, 1826 (written 1822)
Mother Courage and Her Children, play by Bertolt Brecht, 1941
Mythistorima, poem by George Seferis, 1935
Name of the Rose, novel by Umberto Eco, 1980
Nathan the Wise, play by Gotthold Ephraim Lessing, 1779
Nausea, novel by Jean-Paul Sartre, 1938
 “The Necklace,” story by Guy de Maupassant, 1884
The New Life, poems by Dante Alighieri, 1295
Nibelungenlied, poem, c. 1200
Night Flight, novel by Antoine de Saint-Exupéry, 1931
 The Ninth Tale of the Fifth Day of The Decameron, story by Giovanni Boccaccio, c. 1350
Njáls saga, anonymous prose, 13th century
No Exit, play by Jean-Paul Sartre, 1944
Notes from the Underground, prose by Fedor Dostoevskii, 1864
Oblomov, novel by Ivan Goncharov, 1859
Ode to Charles Fourier, poem by André Breton, 1947
Ode to Joy, poem by Friedrich von Schiller, written 1785
 “Ode to Michel de l’Hospital,” poem by Pierre de Ronsard, 1552
Odes Book I, Poem 5, poem by Horace, 1st century BC
Odes Book IV, Poem 7, poem by Horace, 1st century BC
The Odyssey, poem by Homer, c. 720 BC
Oedipus, play by Seneca, c. 48 BC
Oedipus at Colonus, play by Sophocles, 401 BC
Oedipus the King, play by Sophocles, after 430 BC
Old Goriot, novel by Honoré de Balzac, 1835
 Olympian One, poem by Pindar, c. 476 BC(?)
On Old Age, prose by Cicero, 44 BC
On the Commonwealth, prose by Cicero, c. 51 BC
On the Crown, prose by Demosthenes, 330 BC
 “On the Power of the Imagination,” prose by Michel de Montaigne, 1588

- On the Sublime*, anonymous poem, late 1st century AD
 “On Vanity,” prose by Michel de Montaigne, 1588
One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich, novella by Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, 1962
One Hundred Years of Solitude, novel by Gabriel García Márquez, 1967
The Ordeal, novel by Vasil Bykaw, 1970
The Oresteia, play by Aeschylus, 458 BC
Orestes, play by Euripides, 408 BC
Orlando Furioso, poem by Ludovico Ariosto, 1515
The Outsider, novel by Albert Camus, 1942
 “Palau,” poem by Gottfried Benn, 1922
Paris Peasant, prose poem by Louis Aragon, 1926
A Part of Speech, poems by Iosif Brodskii, 1977
Parzival, poem by Wolfram von Eschenbach, written c. 1200–10
Pascual Duarte’s Family, novel by Camilo Jos´ Cela, 1942
Peasant Tales, stories by Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson, 1856?
Peer Gynt, play by Henrik Ibsen, 1867
The Peony Pavilion, novel by Tang Xianzu, 1598
Peribáñez and the Comendador of Ocaña, play by Lope de Vega Carpio, 1608
The Periodic Table, stories by Primo Levi, 1975
The Persians, play by Aeschylus, 472 BC
Peter Schlemihl, novella by Adelbert von Chamisso, 1814
Petersburg, novel by Andrei Belyi, 1916
Phaedra, play by Jean Racine, 1677
Phaedrus, prose by Plato, 5th/4th century BC
Philoctetes, play by Sophocles, 409 BC
The Philosophical Dictionary, prose by Voltaire, 1764
Phormio, play by Terence, 161 BC
The Physicists, play by Friedrich Dürrenmatt, 1962
Pierre and Jean, novella by Guy de Maupassant, 1888
The Pillar of Salt, novel by Albert Memmi, 1953
The Plague, novel by Albert Camus, 1947
Plagued by the West, novel by Jalal Âl-e Ahmad, 1962
Platero and I, poem by Juan Ramón Jiménez, 1914
 “Il pleure dans mon coeur . . .,” poem by Paul Verlaine, 1874
 Poem 85, poem by Catullus, 1st century BC
Poem on the Disaster of Lisbon, poem by Voltaire, 1756
Poem without a Hero, poem by Anna Akhmatova, 1963
The Poetic Art, poem by Horace, late 1st century BC
 The Poetic Edda, anonymous poems, 13th century
The Posthumous Memoirs of Braz Cubas, novel by Joaquim Maria Machado de Assis, 1880
The Pot of Gold, play by Plautus, 2nd century BC
The Praise of Folly, prose by Desiderius Erasmus, 1511
The President, novel by Miguel Ángel Asturias, 1946
The Prince, prose by Niccolò Machiavelli, 1513
The Prince of Homburg, play by Heinrich von Kleist, 1821
Professor Bernhardi, play by Arthur Schnitzler, 1912
Professeur Taranne, play by Arthur Adamov, 1953
Prometheus Bound, play by Aeschylus, c. 466–59 BC
 The Prose Edda, prose by Snorri Sturluson, 13th century
 Pythian Odes Four and Five, poems by Pindar, c. 462 BC(?)
 “Quand vous serez bien vieille . . .,” poem by Pierre de Ronsard, 1578 (written 1572)
The Radetzky March, novel by Joseph Roth, 1932
 “Rain in the Pine Forest,” poem by Gabriele D’Annunzio, 1903
Rāmāyana, poem attributed to Vālmīki, 1st/2nd century
The Rape of Proserpine, poem by Claudian, c. 400
Red Cavalry, stories by Isaak Babel, 1926
Remembrance of Things Past, novel by Marcel Proust, 1913–27
René, prose by Chateaubriand, 1802
The Republic, prose by Plato, 5th/4th century BC
Requiem, poem cycle by Anna Akhmatova, 1963
The Reveries of a Solitary, prose by Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 1782
Rhinoceros, play by Eugène Ionesco, 1959
Rice, novel by Su Tong, 1991
Rickshaw Boy, novel by Lao She, 1937
 “Rock Crystal,” story by Adalbert Stifter, 1853
The Romance of the Rose (de Lorris and Meung), poem, c. 1225–70
La Ronde, play by Arthur Schnitzler, 1900
Rose Garden, prose and verse by Sa’di, 1258
Ruba’iyat, poems by Omar Khayyam, 11/12th century
 “The Sacred Way,” poem by Angelos Sikelianos, 1935
The Saga of King Óláf the Saint, prose by Snorri Sturluson, 12th/13th century
Śakuntalā, poem by Kālidāsa, 5th century
The Satin Slipper, play by Paul Claudel, 1928–29
 Satire 10, poem by Juvenal, 1st/2nd century AD
Saul, play by Vittorio Alfieri, 1782
Scarlet and Black, novel by Stendhal, 1830
A School for Fools, novel by Sasha Sokolov, 1976
The Seagull, play by Anton Chekhov, 1896
Seamarks, poem by Saint-John Perse, 1957
The Second Sex, prose by Simone de Beauvoir, 1949
 “A Sentence for Tyranny,” poem by Gyula Illyés, 1956
Sentimental Education, novel by Gustave Flaubert, 1869
 “Ses purs ongles très haut dédiant leur onyx,” poem by Stéphane Mallarmé, 1887
The Seven Against Thebes, play by Aeschylus, 467 BC
Seventh Duino Elegy, poem by Rainer Maria Rilke, 1923
The Ship of Fools, poem by Sebastian Brant, 1494
Siddhartha, novel by Hermann Hesse, 1922
Silence, novel by Endō Shūsaku, 1966
 “A Simple Heart,” story by Gustave Flaubert, 1877
 “Sirens,” poem by Giuseppe Ungaretti, 1933
Six Characters in Search of an Author, play by Luigi Pirandello, 1921
The Sleepwalkers, novels by Hermann Broch, 1931–32
Snow Country, novel by Kawabata Yasunari, 1937
 “The Snow Queen,” story by Hans Christian Andersen, 1845
The Social Contract, prose by Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 1762
Some Prefer Nettles, novel by Tanizaki Jun’ichiro, 1928
The Song of Roland, poem, c. 1100
 “Sonnet 90,” poem by Petrarch, before 1356
Sonnets to Orpheus, poems by Rainer Maria Rilke, 1923
 “Spleen,” poems by Charles Baudelaire, 1861
Spring Awakening, play by Frank Wedekind, 1891
Steppenwolf, novel by Hermann Hesse, 1927
 “The Storm,” poem by Eugenio Montale, 1941
The Story of Just Caspar and Fair Annie, novella by Clemens Brentano, 1817
Die Strudlhofstiege, novel by Heimito von Doderer, 1951
The Sufferings of Young Werther, novel by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, 1774
Sun Stone, poem by Octavio Paz, 1957
The Suppliant Maidens, play by Aeschylus, c. 463 BC
The Symposium, prose by Plato, 4th century BC
The Tale of the Campaign of Igor, anonymous poem, c. 1185
Tales from the Vienna Woods, play by Ödön von Horváth, 1931
Tartuffe, play by Molière, 1664

- Tentativa del hombre infinito*, poem by Pablo Neruda, 1926
The Test of Virtue, play by Denis Diderot, 1757
The Theatre and Its Double, prose by Antonin Artaud, 1938
The Theatrical Illusion, play by Pierre Corneille, 1635–36
Thérèse, novel by François Mauriac, 1927
The Thousand and One Nights, anonymous stories, 9th century
The Three Musketeers, novel by Alexandre Dumas père, 1844
 Three Poems: 2, 63, and 76, poems by Catullus, 1st century BC
The Three Sisters, play by Anton Chekhov, 1901
The Threepenny Opera, play by Bertolt Brecht, 1928
Thus Spoke Zarathustra, prose by Friedrich Nietzsche, 1883–85
Thyestes, play by Seneca, c. 48 BC
Tiger at the Gates, play by Jean Giraudoux, 1935
The Time of Indifference, novel by Alberto Moravia, 1929
The Tin Drum, novel by Günter Grass, 1959
Titirel, poetic fragment by Wolfram von Eschenbach, written c. 1212–20
 “To Himself,” poem by Giacomo Leopardi, 1835
 “To the Reader,” poem by Charles Baudelaire, 1861
Torquato Tasso, play by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, 1790
The Tower, play by Hugo von Hofmannsthal, 1925
The Trial, novel by Franz Kafka, 1925 (written 1914–15)
The Trickster of Seville, play by Tirso de Molina, 1625
The Trojan Women, play by Euripides, 415 BC
Tropisms, prose by Nathalie Sarraute, 1939
The Tutor, play by Jakob Michael Reinhold Lenz, 1774
The Twelve, poem by Aleksandr Blok, 1918
Twenty-Six Men and a Girl, story by Maksim Gor’kii, 1899
Ubu Rex, play by Alfred Jarry, 1896
Uncle Vanya, play by Anton Chekhov, 1897
Under Fire, novel by Henri Barbusse, 1916
Upanishads, anonymous prose and verse, c. 800–c. 500 BC
Vedas, anonymous prose and verse, c. 3000–c. 500 BC
The Village Notary, novel by Baron József Eötvös, 1845
The Visit, play by Friedrich Dürrenmatt, 1956
The Voice of Things, poems by Francis Ponge, 1942
Voices in the Evening, novel by Natalia Ginzburg, 1961
Voyages to the Moon and the Sun, novels by Cyrano de Bergerac, 1657–62
The Voyeur, novel by Alain Robbe-Grillet, 1955
Waiting for Godot, play by Samuel Beckett, 1952
 “Waiting for the Barbarians,” poem by Constantine Petrou Cavafy, 1904
Wallenstein, plays by Friedrich von Schiller, 1798–99
The Wanderer, novel by Alain-Fournier, 1913
The Wandering Scholar in Paradise, play by Hans Sachs, written 1550
War and Peace, novel by Lev Tolstoi, 1869
Water Margin, anonymous novel, 14th century
The Waves of Sea and Love, play by Franz Grillparzer, 1831
We, novel by Evgenii Zamiatin, 1924
The Weavers, play by Gerhart Hauptmann, 1892
The White Guard, novel by Mikhail Bulgakov, 1929
The White Horseman, novella by Theodor Storm, 1888
The Wild Duck, play by Henrik Ibsen, 1884
Wilhelm Meister’s Apprenticeship, novel by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, 1795–96
Willehalm, unfinished poem by Wolfram von Eschenbach, written c. 1210–12
William Tell, play by Friedrich von Schiller, 1804
 “Windows,” poem by Charles Baudelaire, 1863
Woman in the Dunes, novel by Abe Kōbō, 1962
Women of Trachis, play by Sophocles, c. 430–20 BC
Woyzeck, play by Georg Büchner, 1879 (written 1835–37)
Yerma, play by Federico García Lorca, 1934
 “You the Only One,” poem by Paul Éluard, 1928
Young Törless, novel by Robert Musil, 1906
Zadig, novella by Voltaire, 1748
Zazie, novel by Raymond Queneau, 1959
 “Zone,” poem by Guillaume Apollinaire, 1913

CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF WORKS

---

- Vedas*, anonymous prose and verse, c. 3000–c. 500 BC
Epic of Gilgamesh, anonymous poem cycle, early 2nd millennium BC
The Bible, anonymous verse and prose, c. 900 BC onwards
Upanishads, anonymous prose and verse, c. 800–c. 500 BC
The Iliad, poem by Homer, c. 750 BC
The Odyssey, poem by Homer, c. 720 BC
Fragment 1 [“Address to Aphrodite”], poem by Sappho, 7th century BC
Fragment 31 [“Declaration of Love for a Young Girl”], poem by Sappho, 7th century BC
The City of God, prose by St Augustine, 5th century
Olympian One, poem by Pindar, c. 476 BC(?)
The Persians, play by Aeschylus, 472 BC
The Seven Against Thebes, play by Aeschylus, 467 BC
Prometheus Bound, play by Aeschylus, c. 466–59 BC
The Suppliant Maidens, play by Aeschylus, c. 463 BC
Pythian Odes Four and Five, poems by Pindar, c. 462 BC(?)
The Oresteia, play by Aeschylus, 458 BC
Ajax, play by Sophocles, before 441 BC(?)
Antigone, play by Sophocles, c. 441 BC(?)
Medea, play by Euripides, 431 BC
Women of Trachis, play by Sophocles, c. 430–20 BC
Oedipus the King, play by Sophocles, after 430 BC
Hippolytus, play by Euripides, 428 BC
The Clouds, play by Aristophanes, 423 BC
Electra, play by Euripides, c. 422–16 BC
Ion, play by Euripides, c. 421–13 BC
Electra, play by Sophocles, c. 418–10 BC(?)
The Trojan Women, play by Euripides, 415 BC
The Birds, play by Aristophanes, 414 BC
Lysistrata, play by Aristophanes, 411 BC
Philoctetes, play by Sophocles, 409 BC
Orestes, play by Euripides, 408 BC
The Frogs, play by Aristophanes, 405 BC
Oedipus at Colonus, play by Sophocles, 401 BC
Phaedrus, prose by Plato, 5th/4th century BC
The Republic, prose by Plato, 5th/4th century BC
The Symposium, prose by Plato, 4th century BC
On the Crown, prose by Demosthenes, 330 BC
Characters, prose by Theophrastus, c. 319 BC
The Grouch, play by Menander, 316 BC
Aetia, poem by Callimachus, 3rd century BC
Hecale, poem by Callimachus, 3rd century BC
Idyll I, poem by Theocritus, c. 270s BC
Idyll IV, poem by Theocritus, c. 270s BC
Idyll VII, poem by Theocritus, c. 270s BC
Amphitryo, play by Plautus, 2nd century BC
The Brothers Menaechmus, play by Plautus, 2nd century BC
The Pot of Gold, play by Plautus, 2nd century BC
The Eunuch, play by Terence, 161 BC
Phormio, play by Terence, 161 BC
The Brothers, play by Terence, 160 BC
The Aeneid, poem by Virgil, 1st century BC
Epigrams, poems by Martial, 1st century BC
Georgics, poem by Virgil, 1st century BC
Odes Book I, Poem 5, poem by Horace, 1st century BC
Odes Book IV, Poem 7, poem by Horace, 1st century BC
Poem 85, poem by Catullus, 1st century BC
Three Poems: 2, 63, and 76, poems by Catullus, 1st century BC
In Defence of Marcus Caelius Rufus, prose by Cicero, 56 BC
On the Commonwealth, prose by Cicero, c. 51 BC
Oedipus, play by Seneca, c. 48 BC
Thyestes, play by Seneca, c. 48 BC
On Old Age, prose by Cicero, 44 BC
Loves, poem by Ovid, late 1st century BC
The Poetic Art, poem by Horace, late 1st century BC
Mahābhārata, epic poem attributed to Vyāsa, 1st millennium BC/AD
The Art of Love, poem by Ovid, 1st century BC/1st century AD
Metamorphoses, poem by Ovid, 1st century BC/1st century AD
Kalevala, anonymous poem, origins date to early 1st century AD
The Little Clay Cart, anonymous play, 1st century AD(?)
On the Sublime, anonymous poem, late 1st century AD
Rāmāyana, poem attributed to Vālmīki, 1st/2nd century
Lives of Lysander and Sulla, prose by Plutarch, 1st/2nd century AD
Satire 10, poem by Juvenal, 1st/2nd century AD
Annals, prose by Tacitus, early 2nd century AD
Meditations, prose by Aurelius, c. 170
Cupid and Psyche, story by Apuleius, c. 180
Daphnis and Chloe, poem by Longus, 2nd/3rd century
Confessions, Book I, prose by St. Augustine, 4th century
The Mosella, poem by Ausonius, c. 371
The Cloud Messenger, poem by Kālidāsa, 5th century
Śakuntalā, poem by Kālidāsa, 5th century
The Rape of Proserpine, poem by Claudian, c. 400
The Consolation of Philosophy, prose by Boethius, early 6th century
“Hard Is the Road to Shu,” poem by Li Bai, c. 744
“Invitation to Wine,” poem by Li Bai, 752
The Thousand and One Nights, anonymous stories, 9th century
Journey to the West, anonymous novel, 11/12th century
Ruba‘iyat, poems by Omar Khayyam, 11/12th century
The Song of Roland, poem, c. 1100
Erec and Énide, poem by Chrétien de Troyes, written c. 1170
Lancelot, poem by Chrétien de Troyes, written c. 1170
The Conference of the Birds, poem by Farid al-Din Attār, c. 1177
The Tale of the Campaign of Igor, anonymous poem, c. 1185
Guigamor, poem by Marie de France, late 12th century
The Saga of King Óláf the Saint, prose by Snorri Sturluson, 12th/13th century
Aucassin and Nicolette (Anon), romance, 13th century
Egils saga, anonymous prose, 13th century
Njáls saga, anonymous prose, 13th century
The Poetic Edda, anonymous poems, 13th century
The Prose Edda, prose by Snorri Sturluson, 13th century
Nibelungenlied, poem, c. 1200
Parzival, poem by Wolfram von Eschenbach, written c. 1200–10
Willehalm, unfinished poem by Wolfram von Eschenbach, written c. 1210–12
Titarel, poetic fragment by Wolfram von Eschenbach, written c. 1212–20
The Romance of the Rose (de Lorris and Meung), poem, c. 1225–70
Rose Garden, prose and verse by Sa’di, 1258
The New Life, poems by Dante Alighieri, 1295
Water Margin, anonymous novel, 14th century

- The Divine Comedy*, poem by Dante Alighieri, 1321
 The Ninth Tale of the Fifth Day of The Decameron, story by Giovanni Boccaccio, c. 1350
 “Sonnet 90,” poem by Petrarch, before 1356
The Book of the City of Ladies, prose by Christine de Pizan, 1405
 “Ballade des dames du temps jadis,” poem by François Villon, 1489 (written c. 1460?)
 “Ballade des pendus,” poem by François Villon, 1489
The Ship of Fools, poem by Sebastian Brant, 1494
The Praise of Folly, prose by Desiderius Erasmus, 1511
The Prince, prose by Niccolò Machiavelli, 1513
Orlando Furioso, poem by Ludovico Ariosto, 1515
Auto da Barca do Inferno, Auto da Barca do Purgatorio, Auto da Barca da Gloria, plays by Gil Vicente, 1517, 1518, 1519
The Colloquies, prose by Desiderius Erasmus, 1518
Farsa de Inês Pereira, play by Gil Vicente, 1523
The Mandrake, play by Niccolò Machiavelli, 1524
 “Ein feste Burg,” hymn by Martin Luther, 1531 (written 1528?)
Gargantua and Pantagruel, novels by François Rabelais, 1532–34(?)
La cortigiana, play by Pietro Aretino, 1534
The Wandering Scholar in Paradise, play by Hans Sachs, written 1550
 “Ode to Michel de l’Hospital,” poem by Pierre de Ronsard, 1552
Lazarillo de Tormes, anonymous novel, 1554
 “Heureux qui, comme Ulysse, a fait un beau voyage,” poem by Joachim Du Bellay, 1558
 “Hymn to Autumn,” poem by Pierre de Ronsard, 1563
 “Apology for Raymond Sebond,” prose by Michel de Montaigne, 1570
The Lusiads, poem by Luís de Camões, 1572
Aminta, play by Torquato Tasso, 1573
 “Quand vous serez bien vieille . . .,” poem by Pierre de Ronsard, 1578 (written 1572)
Jerusalem Delivered, poem by Torquato Tasso, 1580
 “On the Power of the Imagination,” prose by Michel de Montaigne, 1588
 “On Vanity,” prose by Michel de Montaigne, 1588
The Peony Pavilion, novel by Tang Xianzu, 1598
Peribáñez and the Comendador of Ocaña, play by Lope de Vega Carpio, 1608
Don Quixote, novel by Miguel de Cervantes, 1615
Fuenteovejuna, play by Lope de Vega Carpio, 1619
Life Is a Dream, play by Pedro Calderón de la Barca, 1623
The Trickster of Seville, play by Tirso de Molina, 1625
Justice Without Revenge, play by Lope de Vega Carpio, 1632
The Great Stage of the World, play by Pedro Calderón de la Barca, c. 1635
The Theatrical Illusion, play by Pierre Corneille, 1635–36
The Cid, play by Pierre Corneille, 1636–37
Voyages to the Moon and the Sun, novels by Cyrano de Bergerac, 1657–62
The Conceited Young Ladies, play by Molière, 1659
Tartuffe, play by Molière, 1664
Don Juan, play by Molière, 1665
Maxims, prose by La Rochefoucauld, 1665–78
The Misanthrope, play by Molière, 1666
The Miser, play by Molière, 1668
Berenice, play by Jean Racine, 1670
Bajazet, play by Jean Racine, 1672
The Hypochondriac, play by Molière, 1673
The Art of Poetry, poem by Nicolas Boileau, 1674
Phaedra, play by Jean Racine, 1677
Fables, stories by Jean de La Fontaine, 1688–89
Athalie, play by Jean Racine, 1691
The Game of Love and Chance, play by Marivaux, 1730
Manon Lescaut, novel by Abbé Prévost, 1733
The False Confessions, play by Marivaux, 1737
A Matter of Dispute, play by Marivaux, 1744
Zadig, novella by Voltaire, 1748
The Dream of the Red Chamber, novel by Cao Xueqin, mid-18th century
The Comic Theatre, play by Carlo Goldoni, 1750
The Mistress of the Inn, play by Carlo Goldoni, 1753
Poem on the Disaster of Lisbon, poem by Voltaire, 1756
The Test of Virtue, play by Denis Diderot, 1757
Candide, novella by Voltaire, 1759
Emile, fiction by Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 1762
The Social Contract, prose by Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 1762
The Philosophical Dictionary, prose by Voltaire, 1764
Minna von Barnhelm, play by Gotthold Ephraim Lessing, 1767
Goetz of Berlichingen, play by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, 1773
The Sufferings of Young Werther, novel by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, 1774
The Tutor, play by Jakob Michael Reinhold Lenz, 1774
The Barber of Seville, play by Beaumarchais, 1775
Nathan the Wise, play by Gotthold Ephraim Lessing, 1779
The Confessions, prose by Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 1781
Les Liaisons Dangereuses, novel by Choderlos de Laclos, 1782
The Minor, play by Denis Fonvizin, 1782
The Reveries of a Solitary, prose by Jean-Jacques Rousseau, 1782
Saul, play by Vittorio Alfieri, 1782
Ode to Joy, poem by Friedrich von Schiller, written 1785
Don Carlos, play by Friedrich von Schiller, 1787
Torquato Tasso, play by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, 1790
Justine, novel by Marquis de Sade, 1791
Wilhelm Meister’s Apprenticeship, novel by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, 1795–96
Jacques the Fatalist, novel by Denis Diderot, 1796
Wallenstein, plays by Friedrich von Schiller, 1798–99
Hymns to the Night, poems by Novalis, 1800
Mary Stuart, play by Friedrich von Schiller, 1800
René, prose by Chateaubriand, 1802
William Tell, play by Friedrich von Schiller, 1804
 “Bread and Wine,” poem by Friedrich Hölderlin, 1806 (written 1800–01)
The Broken Jug, play by Heinrich von Kleist, 1808
Faust, play by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe: part I, 1808; part II, 1832
Elective Affinities, novel by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, 1809
Michael Kohlhaas, story by Heinrich von Kleist, 1810
 “Hansel and Gretel,” story by Jacob and Wilhelm Grimm, 1812
Peter Schlemihl, novella by Adelbert von Chamisso, 1814
The Devil’s Elixirs, novel by E.T.A. Hoffmann, 1815–16
The Story of Just Caspar and Fair Annie, novella by Clemens Brentano, 1817
 “The Infinite,” poem by Giacomo Leopardi, 1819
The Prince of Homburg, play by Heinrich von Kleist, 1821
 “Homecoming,” 20, poem by Heinrich Heine, 1824
Memoirs of a Good-for-Nothing, novella by Joseph von Eichendorff, 1826
 “Moses,” poem by Alfred de Vigny, 1826 (written 1822)
The Betrothed, novel by Alessandro Manzoni, 1827
Scarlet and Black, novel by Stendhal, 1830
Eugene Onegin, poem by Aleksandr Pushkin, 1831

- The Hunchback of Notre-Dame*, novel by Victor Hugo, 1831
The Waves of Sea and Love, play by Franz Grillparzer, 1831
The Bronze Horseman, poem by Aleksandr Pushkin, written 1833
Eugenie Grandet, novel by Honoré de Balzac, 1833
Lorenzaccio, play by Alfred de Musset, 1834
Danton's Death, play by Georg Büchner, 1835 (complete version 1850)
Chatterton, play by Alfred de Vigny, 1835
The Diary of a Madman, story by Nikolai Gogol', 1835
Military Servitude and Grandeur, stories by Alfred de Vigny, 1835
Old Goriot, novel by Honoré de Balzac, 1835
 "To Himself," poem by Giacomo Leopardi, 1835
The Government Inspector, play by Nikolai Gogol', 1836
 "The Emperor's New Clothes," story by Hans Christian Andersen, 1837
Lost Illusions, novel by Honoré de Balzac, 1837–43
The Charterhouse of Parma, novel by Stendhal, 1839
A Hero of Our Times, novel by Mikhail Lermontov, 1840
Dead Souls, novel by Nikolai Gogol', 1842
 "Abdias," story by Adalbert Stifter, 1843
Maria Magdalena, play by Friedrich Hebbel, 1844
The Three Musketeers, novel by Alexandre Dumas père, 1844
 "The Broom," poem by Giacomo Leopardi, 1845
 "The Snow Queen," story by Hans Christian Andersen, 1845
The Village Notary, novel by Baron József Eötvös, 1845
Cousin Bette, novel by Honoré de Balzac, 1847
Camille, novel by Alexandre Dumas fils, 1848
Memoirs, prose by Chateaubriand, 1849–50
Immensee, novella by Theodor Storm, 1851 (written 1849)
The Jew's Beech Tree, novella by Annette von Droste-Hülshoff, 1851
 "Rock Crystal," story by Adalbert Stifter, 1853
 "Art," poem by Théophile Gautier, 1856
Peasant Tales, stories by Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson, 1856?
Indian Summer, novel by Adalbert Stifter, 1857
Madame Bovary, novel by Gustave Flaubert, 1857
Oblomov, novel by Ivan Goncharov, 1859
First Love, novel by Ivan Turgenev, 1860
 "Spleen," poems by Charles Baudelaire, 1861
 "To the Reader," poem by Charles Baudelaire, 1861
Fathers and Sons, novel by Ivan Turgenev, 1862
Les Misérables, novel by Victor Hugo, 1862
 "Windows," poem by Charles Baudelaire, 1863
Notes from the Underground, prose by Fedor Dostoevskii, 1864
 "Hérodiade," poem by Stéphane Mallarmé, 1864–98
Brand, play by Henrik Ibsen, 1865
 "L'Angoisse," poem by Paul Verlaine, 1866
Crime and Punishment, novel by Fedor Dostoevskii, 1867
Peer Gynt, play by Henrik Ibsen, 1867
The Idiot, novel by Fedor Dostoevskii, 1869
A Month in the Country, play by Ivan Turgenev, 1869
Sentimental Education, novel by Gustave Flaubert, 1869
War and Peace, novel by Lev Tolstoi, 1869
 "Le Bateau ivre," poem by Arthur Rimbaud, 1871
The Birth of Tragedy, prose by Friedrich Nietzsche, 1872
The Devils, novel by Fedor Dostoevskii, 1872
Family Strife in Hapsburg, play by Franz Grillparzer, 1872
 "Alchemy of the Word," poem by Arthur Rimbaud, 1873
Around the World in Eighty Days, novel by Jules Verne, 1873
 "Fleurs," poem by Arthur Rimbaud, 1873
 "Art poétique," poem by Paul Verlaine, 1874
 "Il pleure dans mon coeur . . .," poem by Paul Verlaine, 1874
Anna Karenina, novel by Lev Tolstoi, 1875–77
 "L'Après-midi d'un faune," poem by Stéphane Mallarmé, 1876
L'Assommoir, novel by Émile Zola, 1877
 "A Simple Heart," story by Gustave Flaubert, 1877
Before the Storm, novel by Theodor Fontane, 1878
A Doll's House, play by Henrik Ibsen, 1879
The Gaucho Martín Fierro, poems by José Hernández, 1879
Woyzeck, play by Georg Büchner, 1879 (written 1835–37)
The Brothers Karamazov, novel by Fedor Dostoevskii, 1880
The Posthumous Memoirs of Braz Cubas, novel by Joaquim Maria Machado de Assis, 1880
Ghosts, play by Henrik Ibsen, 1881
The House by the Medlar Tree, novel by Giovanni Verga, 1881
Thus Spoke Zarathustra, prose by Friedrich Nietzsche, 1883–85
 "L'Abandonné," story by Guy de Maupassant, 1884
 "The Necklace," story by Guy de Maupassant, 1884
The Wild Duck, play by Henrik Ibsen, 1884
Germinal, novel by Émile Zola, 1885
The Death of Ivan Ilyich, novella by Lev Tolstoi, 1886
The Earth, novel by Émile Zola, 1887
 "Ses purs ongles très haut ddiant leur onyx," poem by Stéphane Mallarmé, 1887
Miss Julie, play by August Strindberg, 1888
Pierre and Jean, novella by Guy de Maupassant, 1888
The White Horseman, novella by Theodor Storm, 1888
Master Don Gesualdo, novel by Giovanni Verga, 1889
Hedda Gabler, play by Henrik Ibsen, 1890
Hunger, novel by Knut Hamsun, 1890
The Intruder, play by Maurice Maeterlinck, 1890
The Last Poems, poems by Jules Laforgue, 1890
Gösta Berling's Saga, novel by Selma Lagerlöf, 1891
The Kreutzer Sonata, novella by Lev Tolstoi, 1891
Spring Awakening, play by Frank Wedekind, 1891
The Master Builder, play by Henrik Ibsen, 1892
The Weavers, play by Gerhart Hauptmann, 1892
Effi Briest, novel by Theodor Fontane, 1895
The Lulu Plays, plays by Frank Wedekind, 1895–1904
 "Mía," poem by Rubén Darío, 1896
The Seagull, play by Anton Chekhov, 1896
Ubu Rex, play by Alfred Jarry, 1896
Cyrano de Bergerac, play by Edmond Rostand, 1897
Uncle Vanya, play by Anton Chekhov, 1897
Dom Casmurro, novel by Joaquim Maria Machado de Assis, 1899
The Lady with a Dog, story by Anton Chekhov, written 1899
Twenty-Six Men and a Girl, story by Maksim Gor'kii, 1899
Buddenbrooks, novel by Thomas Mann, 1900
The Flame, novel by Gabriele D'Annunzio, 1900
La Ronde, play by Arthur Schnitzler, 1900
Francesca da Rimini, play by Gabriele D'Annunzio, 1901
The Three Sisters, play by Anton Chekhov, 1901
The Immoralist, novella by André Gide, 1902
The Lower Depths, play by Maksim Gor'kii, 1902
 "Rain in the Pine Forest," poem by Gabriele D'Annunzio, 1903
The Cherry Orchard, play by Anton Chekhov, 1904
 "Waiting for the Barbarians," poem by Constantine Petrou Cavafy, 1904
The Blue Angel, novel by Heinrich Mann, 1905
Young Törless, novel by Robert Musil, 1906
A Flea in Her Ear, play by Georges Feydeau, 1907
The Ghost Sonata, play by August Strindberg, 1907
The Blue Bird, play by Maurice Maeterlinck, 1909
 "Incantation by Laughter," poem by Velimir Khlebnikov, 1909

- Death in Venice*, novella by Thomas Mann, 1912
The Gods Are Athirst, novel by Anatole France, 1912
Professor Bernhardi, play by Arthur Schnitzler, 1912
 “Le Chanson du mal-aimé,” poem by Guillaume Apollinaire, 1913
The Wanderer, novel by Alain-Fournier, 1913
 “Zone,” poem by Guillaume Apollinaire, 1913
Remembrance of Things Past, novel by Marcel Proust, 1913–27
 “Un Coup de dés jamais n’abolira le hasard,” poem by Stéphane Mallarmé, 1914 (written 1897)
Mist, novel by Miguel de Unamuno, 1914
Platero and I, poem by Juan Ramón Jiménez, 1914
Cloud in Trousers, poem by Vladimir Maiakovskii, 1915
The Gentleman from San Francisco, novella by Ivan Bunin, 1915
 “Grodek,” poem by Georg Trakl, 1915
The Metamorphosis, novella by Franz Kafka, 1915
Petersburg, novel by Andrei Belyi, 1916
Under Fire, novel by Henri Barbusse, 1916
 “La Jeune Parque,” poem by Paul Valéry, 1917 (written 1912–17)
The Gas Trilogy, plays by Georg Kaiser, 1917–20
The Twelve, poem by Aleksandr Blok, 1918
 “The Eternal Dice,” poem by César Vallejo, 1919
Chéri, novel by Colette, 1920
The Christ of Velazquez, poem by Miguel de Unamuno, 1920
 “Le Cimetière marin,” poem by Paul Valéry, 1920
Kristin Lavransdatter, novels by Sigrid Undset, 1920–22
Confessions of Felix Krull, Confidence Man, novel by Thomas Mann, 1922 (complete 1954)
The Difficult Man, play by Hugo von Hofmannsthal, 1921
Henry IV, play by Luigi Pirandello, 1921
The Insect Play, play by Karel Čapek, 1921
Six Characters in Search of an Author, play by Luigi Pirandello, 1921
The Good Soldier Švejk and His Fortunes in the World War, novel by Jaroslav Hašek, 1921–23
Baal, play by Bertolt Brecht, 1922
 “Palau,” poem by Gottfried Benn, 1922
Siddhartha, novel by Hermann Hesse, 1922
About This, poem by Vladimir Maiakovskii, 1923
Confessions of Zeno, novel by Italo Svevo, 1923
The Devil in the Flesh, novel by Raymond Radiguet, 1923
Seventh Duino Elegy, poem by Rainer Maria Rilke, 1923
Sonnets to Orpheus, poems by Rainer Maria Rilke, 1923
The Magic Mountain, novel by Thomas Mann, 1924
We, novel by Evgenii Zamiatin, 1924
Cuttlefish Bones, poems by Eugenio Montale, 1925
The Tower, play by Hugo von Hofmannsthal, 1925
The Trial, novel by Franz Kafka, 1925 (written 1914–15)
The Castle, novel by Franz Kafka, 1926 (written 1922)
The Counterfeiters, novel by André Gide, 1926
Paris Peasant, prose poem by Louis Aragon, 1926
Red Cavalry, stories by Isaak Babel, 1926
Tentativa del hombre infinito, poem by Pablo Neruda, 1926
Envy, novel by Iurii Olesha, 1927
Steppenwolf, novel by Hermann Hesse, 1927
Thérèse, novel by François Mauriac, 1927
Some Prefer Nettles, novel by Tanizaki Jun’ichiro, 1928
The Threepenny Opera, play by Bertolt Brecht, 1928
 “You the Only One,” poem by Paul Éluard, 1928
The Satin Slipper, play by Paul Claudel, 1928–29
All Quiet on the Western Front, novel by Erich Maria Remarque, 1929
The Bedbug, play by Vladimir Maiakovskii, 1929
Berlin Alexanderplatz, novel by Alfred Döblin, 1929
The Holy Terrors, novel by Jean Cocteau, 1929
The Time of Indifference, novel by Alberto Moravia, 1929
The White Guard, novel by Mikhail Bulgakov, 1929
Andreas, fiction by Hugo von Hofmannsthal, 1930 (written 1912–13)
Fontamara, novel by Ignazio Silone, 1930
The Man Without Qualities, novel by Robert Musil, 1930–43
Free Union, poem by André Breton, 1931
Night Flight, novel by Antoine de Saint-Exupéry, 1931
Tales from the Vienna Woods, play by Ödön von Horváth, 1931
The Sleepwalkers, novels by Hermann Broch, 1931–32
Journey to the End of the Night, novel by Louis-Ferdinand Céline, 1932
The Radetzky March, novel by Joseph Roth, 1932
Blood Wedding, play by Federico García Lorca, 1933
Man’s Fate, novel by André Malraux, 1933
 “Sirens,” poem by Giuseppe Ungaretti, 1933
The Infernal Machine, play by Jean Cocteau, 1934
Yerma, play by Federico García Lorca, 1934
 “Arte poética,” poem by Pablo Neruda, 1935
Mythistorima, poem by George Seferis, 1935
 “The Sacred Way,” poem by Angelos Sikelianos, 1935
Tiger at the Gates, play by Jean Giraudoux, 1935
Auto-da-Fé, novel by Elias Canetti, 1936
Bread and Wine, novel by Ignazio Silone, 1937
Ferdydurke, novel by Witold Gombrowicz, 1937
Mad Love, prose by André Breton, 1937
Rickshaw Boy, novel by Lao She, 1937
Snow Country, novel by Kawabata Yasunari, 1937
Nausea, novel by Jean-Paul Sartre, 1938
The Theatre and Its Double, prose by Antonin Artaud, 1938
 “Considerando en frío,” poem by César Vallejo, 1939
Conversation in Sicily, novel by Elio Vittorini, 1939
Tropisms, prose by Nathalie Sarraute, 1939
Le Crève-cœur, poems by Louis Aragon, 1941
Mother Courage and Her Children, play by Bertolt Brecht, 1941
 “The Storm,” poem by Eugenio Montale, 1941
 “Death and the Compass,” story by Jorge Luis Borges, 1942
The Outsider, novel by Albert Camus, 1942
Pascual Duarte’s Family, novel by Camilo Jos´ Cela, 1942
The Voice of Things, poems by Francis Ponge, 1942
The Flies, play by Jean-Paul Sartre, 1943
The Glass Bead Game, novel by Hermann Hesse, 1943
The Good Person of Szechwan, play by Bertolt Brecht, 1943
The Life of Galileo, play by Bertolt Brecht, 1943
Antigone, play by Jean Anouilh, 1944
No Exit, play by Jean-Paul Sartre, 1944
The Age of Reason, novel by Jean-Paul Sartre, 1945
The Bridge on the Drina, novel by Ivo Andrić, 1945
Christ Stopped at Eboli, novel by Carlo Levi, 1945
The Death of Virgil, novel by Hermann Broch, 1945
The House of Bernarda Alba, play by Federico García Lorca, 1945
The Madwoman of Chaillot, play by Jean Giraudoux, 1945
Filumena Marturano, play by Eduardo De Filippo, 1946
The President, novel by Miguel Ángel Asturias, 1946
Doctor Faustus, novel by Thomas Mann, 1947
The Kingdom of This World, novel by Alejo Carpentier, 1947
The Maids, play by Jean Genet, 1947
Ode to Charles Fourier, poem by André Breton, 1947
The Plague, novel by Albert Camus, 1947
Ashes and Diamonds, novel by Jerzy Andrzejewski, 1948

- The Caucasian Chalk Circle*, play by Bertolt Brecht, 1948
The Fire Raisers, play by Max Frisch, 1948
House of Liars, novel by Elsa Morante, 1948
The Second Sex, prose by Simone de Beauvoir, 1949
The Bald Prima Donna, play by Eugène Ionesco, 1950
The Fugitive, novel by Pramoedya Ananta Toer, 1950
The Moon and the Bonfires, novel by Cesare Pavese, 1950
Die Strudlhofstiege, novel by Heimito von Doderer, 1951
The Hussar on the Roof, novel by Jean Giono, 1951
Memoirs of Hadrian, novel by Marguerite Yourcenar, 1951
Molloy, Malone Dies, The Unnamable, novels by Samuel Beckett, 1951–53
 “Death Fugue,” poem by Paul Celan, 1952 (written 1948)
Waiting for Godot, play by Samuel Beckett, 1952
The Lost Steps, novel by Alejo Carpentier, 1953
The Pillar of Salt, novel by Albert Memmi, 1953
Professeur Taranne, play by Arthur Adamov, 1953
Against Sainte-Beuve, prose by Marcel Proust, 1954
I’m Not Stiller, play by Max Frisch, 1954
The Mandarins, novel by Simone de Beauvoir, 1954
The Last Temptation, novel by Nikos Kazantzakis, 1955
The Voyeur, novel by Alain Robbe-Grillet, 1955
The Balcony, play by Jean Genet, 1956
The Fall, novel by Albert Camus, 1956
 “A Sentence for Tyranny,” poem by Gyula Illyés, 1956
The Visit, play by Friedrich Dürrenmatt, 1956
Doctor Zhivago, novel by Boris Pasternak, 1957
Endgame, play by Samuel Beckett, 1957
Seamarks, poem by Saint-John Perse, 1957
Sun Stone, poem by Octavio Paz, 1957
Deep Rivers, novel by José Mariá Arguedas, 1958
In the Labyrinth, novel by Alain Robbe-Grillet, 1959
Rhinoceros, play by Eugène Ionesco, 1959
The Tin Drum, novel by Günter Grass, 1959
Zazie, novel by Raymond Queneau, 1959
Andorra, play by Max Frisch, 1961
Voices in the Evening, novel by Natalia Ginzburg, 1961
One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich, novella by Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, 1962
The Physicists, play by Friedrich Dürrenmatt, 1962
Plagued by the West, novel by Jalal Âl-e Ahmad, 1962
Woman in the Dunes, novel by Abe Kôbô, 1962
Poem without a Hero, poem by Anna Akhmatova, 1963
Requiem, poem cycle by Anna Akhmatova, 1963
Marat/Sade, play by Peter Weiss, 1964
Blue Flowers, novel by Raymond Queneau, 1965
The Investigation, play by Peter Weiss, 1965
The Master and Margarita, novel by Mikhail Bulgakov, 1966
Silence, novel by Endô Shūsaku, 1966
One Hundred Years of Solitude, novel by Gabriel García Márquez, 1967
Cancer Ward, novel by Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, 1968
The German Lesson, novel by Seigfried Lenz, 1968
The Lime Works, novel by Thomas Bernhard, 1970
The Ordeal, novel by Vasil Bykaw, 1970
Group Portrait with Lady, novel by Heinrich Böll, 1971
The Lost Honor of Katharina Blum, novel by Heinrich Böll, 1974
The Periodic Table, stories by Primo Levi, 1975
Kiss of the Spider Woman, novel by Manuel Puig, 1976
A School for Fools, novel by Sasha Sokolov, 1976
A Part of Speech, poems by Iosif Brodskii, 1977
Life: A User’s Manual, novel by Georges Perece, 1978
If on a Winter’s Night a Traveller, novel by Italo Calvino, 1979
Name of the Rose, novel by Umberto Eco, 1980
The House of the Spirits, novel by Isabel Allende, 1982
Fantasia: An Algerian Cavalcade, novel by Assia Djebar, 1985
Love in the Time of Cholera, novel by Gabriel García Márquez, 1985
Mr. Mani, novel by A.B. Yehoshua, 1989
Rice, novel by Su Tong, 1991

A

ABE Kōbō

---

Born: Abe Kimifusa in Tokyo, Japan, 7 March 1924. Education: Chiyoda Elementary School, Mukden, Manchuria (now Shen-yang, Liaoning Province, China), 1930–36; interrupted by a spell at a local elementary school in his father’s home town of Takasu, Hokkaido, Japan, 1931–32; Second Middle School, Mukden, 1936–40; Seijō High School, Tokyo, 1940–43; interrupted for several months at the end of 1940 when he returned to Mukden after contracting pneumonia during a school military drill; began to study medicine at Tokyo Imperial University (now Tokyo University) in 1940, interrupting his course in 1944 to join his parents in Mukden having been given time off after faking a diagnosis; graduated March 1948 after repatriation at the end of 1946 but never practiced as a doctor. Family: Married Yamada Machiko (pseudonym Abe Machi, graphic artist), 1947; one daughter. Career: Co-founder of Seiki (The Century), an interest group for authors and journalists, c. 1947; Executive Committee of the New Japan Literature Association, 1955–61?; maintained his own theater troupe, the Abe Kōbō Studio, 1973–79. Awards: Postwar Literature prize for “Akai mayu” (“The Red Cocoon”), 1951; Akutagawa prize for literature for “S. Karuma-shi no hanzai,” 1951; Kishida Drama prize for Yūrei wa koko ni iru, 1958; Yomiuri Literature prize (fiction) for Suna no onna, 1962; Tanizaki Jun’ichirō prize for literature for Tomodachi, 1967; Yomiuri Literature prize (drama) for Midori no sutokkingu, 1974; Honorary doctorate from Columbia University, New York, 1975. Member: Japan Communist Party, 1951?–1962, later expelled. Died: Tokyo, 22 January 1993, of heart failure.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Abe Kōbō gikyoku zenshū (collected plays). 1970.
Abe Kōbō zensakuhin (collected works). 15 vols., 1972–73.
Abe Kōbō zenshū (complete works). 29 vols., 1997–2000.
Three Plays by Kōbō Abe, translated by Donald Keene. 1993.

Fiction

Owarishi michi no shirube ni [To Mark the End of the Road]. 1948; revised 1967.
“Dendorokakariya.” 1949; as “Dendrocacalia,” translated by Juliet Winters Carpenter, in Beyond the Curve. 1991.
Kabe: S. Karuma-shi no hanzai [Walls: The Crime of S. Karma] (short stories). 1951; “Akai mayu,” translated as “Red Cocoon” by John Nathan, 1966; “Mahō no chōku” translated as “The Magic Chalk” by Alison Kibrick, 1982; “S. Karuma-shi no hanzai” translated as “The Crime of S. Karma” by Juliet Winters Carpenter, in Beyond the Curve, 1991; “Kōzui” translated as “The Flood” by Lane Dunlop, 1989.
“Shijin no shōgai.” 1951; as “The Life of a Poet,” translated by Juliet Winters Carpenter, in Beyond the Curve, 1991.

R 62 no hatsumei [The Invention of R 62] (short stories). 1954; “Shinda musume ga utatta” translated as “Song of a Dead Girl” by Stuart A. Harrington, 1986.
“Yume no heishi.” 1955; as “The Dream Soldier,” translated by Andrew Horvat, in Four Stories, 1973.
Daiyon kanpyōki. 1959; as Inter Ice Age 4, translated by E. Dale Saunders, 1970.
Suna no onna. 1962; as The Woman in the Dunes, translated by E. Dale Saunders, 1964.
Tanin no kao. 1964; as The Face of Another, translated by E. Dale Saunders, 1966.
Moetsukita chizu. 1967; as The Ruined Map, translated by E. Dale Saunders, 1969.
Hako otoko (with photographs by the author). 1973; as The Box Man, translated by E. Dale Saunders, 1974.
Four Stories by Abe Kobo. 1973; translated by Andrew Horvat.
Mikkai. 1977; as Secret Rendezvous, translated by Juliet Winters Carpenter, 1980.
Hakobune Sakuramaru (with photographs by the author). 1984; as The Ark Sakura, translated by Juliet Winters Carpenter, 1988.
Beyond the Curve and Other Stories, translated by Juliet Winters Carpenter. 1991.
Kangarū nōto. 1991; as Kangaroo Notebook, translated by Maryellen Toman Mori, 1996.
Tobu otoko [The Flying Man]. 1994.

Plays

Seifuku (produced 1955). 1954; as Uniform, translated by Noah S. Brannen, 1979.
Doreigari [Slave Hunt] (produced 1955). 1955.
Yūrei wa koko ni iru (produced 1958). 1958; revised 1970; directed by the author, 1975; as The Ghost is Here, translated by Donald Keene, in Three Plays, 1993.
Kawaii onna [Pretty Woman] (musical; music by Mayuzumi Toshirō; produced 1959). 1959.
Omae ni mo tsumi ga aru (produced 1965). 1965; as “You, Too, Are Guilty,” translated by Ted. T. Takaya, 1979.
Tomodachi (produced 1967). 1967; revised and produced 1974, directed by the author; as Friends, translated by Donald Keene, 1969; adapted for cinema as Friends, Japan/Sweden, 1988, directed by Kjell-Åke Andersson.
Bō ni natta otoko (produced 1969). 1969; as The Man Who Turned into a Stick, translated by Donald Keene, 1977; “Toki no gake” translated as “The Cliff of Time” by Andrew Horvat, in Four Stories, 1973; also adapted as a 16 mm film directed by the author, 1971.
Mihitsu no koi (produced 1971). 1971; as Involuntary Homicide, translated by Donald Keene, in Three Plays, 1993.
Gaido bukku [Guide Book] (produced 1971). 1971; directed by the author.
Annainin, [Guide Book II or The Tour Guide]. 1976; directed by the author.
Suichū toshi [Guide Book III or The City in the Water]. 1977; directed by the author.

S. Karuma-shi no hanzai [Guide Book IV]. 1978; directed by the author.

Ai no megane wa irogarasu [Love is like Tinted Spectacles] (produced 1973). 1973; directed by the author.

Midori-iro no sutokkingu (produced 1974). 1974; directed by the author; as Green Stockings, translated by Donald Keene, in Three Plays, 1993.

Imēji no Tenrankai [An Exhibition of Pictures] (produced 1977). 1977; directed by the author, synthesizer music composed by the author.

Hitosarai [An Exhibition of Pictures II or The Abduction] (produced 1978). 1978; directed by the author.

Kozō wa shinda [An Exhibition of Pictures III or The Baby Elephant is Dead] (produced 1979). 1979; directed by the author, synthesizer music composed by the author.

Screenplays: Kabe atsuki heya [Rooms with Thick Walls], 1954; Otoshiana [Pitfalls], 1962; Suna no onna, 1964; Tanin no kao, 1966; Moetsukita chizu, 1968.

Radio Plays: Mimi [The Ear], 1956; Kuchi [The Mouth], 1957; Kitchu kuchu ketchu (children's radio series), 1957; Champion [The Champion] (radio play/sound collage; together with the composer Takemitsu Toru). 1962.

Television Plays: Ningen sokkuri [Almost Human], 1959; Shijin no shōgai [The Life of a Poet], 1959; Mokugekisha [The Eye Witness], 1965.

Verse

Mumei shishū [Poems without Names]. 1947; published and printed by the author.

Essays

Mōjū no kokoro ni keisanki no te o [With the Heart of a Beast and a Hand like a Calculating Machine]. 1956.

Tōō o yuku [Through Eastern Europe]. 1956.

Sabaku no shisō [The Philosophy of the Desert]. 1964.

“Uchi naru henkyō.” 1971; as “The Frontier Within,” translated by Andrew Horvat, 1975.

Warau tsuki [The Laughing Moon]. 1975.

Toshi e no kairo [Closing the Circuit with the City] (essays, interviews, and photographs). 1980.

Shini-isogu kujiratachi [Whales in a Hurry to Die] (essays, interviews, and photographs). 1986.

Other

Editor, Gendai geijutsu [Contemporary Art] (magazine). 1960–1961.

*

Critical Studies: Abe Kōbō by T. Takano, 1951, revised 1979; Metaphors of Alienation: The Fiction of Abe, Beckett and Kafka (dissertation) by W. J. Currie, 1973, published 1975; “Abe Kobo and Symbols of Absurdity” by P. Williams, in Studies on Japanese Culture, Japan P.E.N. Club, edited by S. Ota and R. Fukuda, 1973; Meiro no shōsetsuron [Study of a Labyrinthine Novel] by T. Hiraoka, 1974; Hanada Kiyoteru to Abe Kōbō [Hanada Kiyoteru and Abe Kōbō] by N. Okaniwa, 1980; “Metamorphosis in Abe Kobo's Works” by F. Yamamoto, in Journal of the Association of Teachers of Japanese, vol. 15, November, 1980; “Skinless” by A. Dworkin, in Intercourse, 1987; “Abe Kōbō und der Nouveau Roman” by I. Hijiya-Kirschner, in Was heißt: Japanische Literatur verstehen?, 1990; “Self, Place and Body in ‘The Woman in the Dunes’: A Comparative Study of the Novel and the Film” by W. Dissanayake, in Literary Relations East and West: Selected Essays, edited by J. Toyama and N. Ochner, 1990; Le sanatorium des malades du temps. Temps, attente et fiction, autour de Julien Gracq, Dino Buzzati, Thomas Mann, Kōbō Abe by E. Faye, 1996; “The Woman in the Dunes” by J. Whittier Treat, in Masterworks of Asian Literature in Comparative Perspective: A Guide for Teaching, edited by B. Stoler Miller, 1994; Abe Kōbō: An Exploration of His Prose, Drama, and Theatre by T. Iles, 2000.

* * *

Abe Kōbō is a leading representative of a postwar modernism comparable to the Theater of the Absurd, the French nouveau roman, or Latin American magical realism. His work not only found an echo in the capitalist West; he was also published in socialist countries, helped by his communist background and the thaw under Khrushchev. Central to his reputation both in Japan and abroad is the novel Suna no onna (The Woman in the Dunes). The fact that this work undoubtedly marks a watershed in Abe's career, however, should not obscure how multi-faceted a writer he was.

Abe writes in analytical language fond of technical vocabulary, often conveyed by overly rational narrators whose discourse veers off at an obsessive tangent to reality. His style avowedly owes much to both Franz Kafka and Edgar Allan Poe, while the way in which he combines and modulates his images is indebted to surrealism, in which he was keenly interested from the late 1940s. At the very beginning of his career, before coming into contact with avant-garde artists in post-war Tokyo, Abe was strongly influenced by existentialist philosophy and the work of the poet Rainer Maria Rilke and in the 1950s by Marxist teachings on materialism and historical change. But as his essays reveal, his world view also drew consciously on the technical details of sciences from calculus to neurology.

In theoretical texts of the 1960s, Abe explains how he sees language as the motor of history: It has a liberating effect, but also an alienating one, since it places a screen between human perception and material things. This alienation results in the creation of ghosts as things that exist in language only, later of alchemy, and ultimately science. Only the irony of artistic fiction (“ghost stories without a belief in ghosts”) can reveal the screen of language for what it is—science cannot. All his heterogeneous influences are built into Abe's model of the world as if it were a machine that its inventor spends his life modifying.

After his contact with surrealism, Abe began using image puns to illustrate the power of language over people. A good example is “S. Karuma-shi no hanzai” (“The Crime of S. Karma”), in which the protagonist arrives at work to find his place taken by his business card. The power of language is depicted in a less allegorical mode in the play Yūrei wa koko ni iru (The Ghost Is Here), whose effective main character is a dead man existing only as a space on the stage, but around whom a lucrative industry develops.

Progressing from surrealism in the course of the 1950s, Abe became interested in science fiction for its power to speculate realistically about changes in the world (the anti-realistic collages of his earlier stories can only work allegorically). In fact, he wrote the first science fiction novel in Japanese, Daiyon kanpyōki (Inter Ice Age 4), in which a computer sets about manipulating human evolution. Although Inter Ice Age 4 has aged better than most of the genre science fiction of its day, it, like Abe's earlier allegorical stories, failed to appeal to a wide audience. The first of his novels to do this is The Woman in the Dunes, which pictures a society that can be seen as existing alongside the everyday familiar to the readers, but which still conveys a science fiction-like "sense of wonder."

It should not be forgotten, however, that Abe's most formative artistic years in the 1950s were also his most politically radical. Among the reasons for this radicalization, which was not Abe's alone, were the soon disappointed high hopes for social change and equality after the end of World War II. Moreover, most older writers and critics, including those on the left, favored realistic documentary literature. Abe was among the radical artists who responded by finding a sense of purpose in political radicalism. But when the factions of the dominant New Japan Literature Association were reconciled in 1955, Abe was voted into the Executive Committee and proved a diplomatic mediator between the 'realist' and the 'formalist' factions. Marxist theory and leftwing organizations formed his social and historical consciousness in the 1950s by giving it a practical and theoretical frame. The result was a sharpened sense of historical perspective and a feel for the cultural differences between the classes.

After his expulsion from the Communist Party in 1962 following a communist writers' initiative protesting against undemocratic practices by the party leaders, Abe also withdrew from active participation in mass organizations. He now preferred to rely on the wider though more anonymous spread of literature through the growing mass media culture. This perceived retreat from class solidarity was taken amiss by some of his former companions.

Abe was, however, an avowed believer in community. The theater gave him a respite from the isolation of writing, and he maintained his contacts with the workers' theater after 1962. What characterized his work in both areas was an insistence, running counter to the mainstream of serious literature, that the person appearing in the work of art (the character, or the narrative voice) must be distinguished from the person of the author. The novel Tanin no kao (The Face of Another) describes what can result when one tries to force the two together. In this piece, the first person narrator makes a new face for himself after the original is disfigured, only to become trapped in the superimposed personality of the mask. He ends as an outsider full of hatred for society.

Though Abe left it to his protagonists to cultivate such hatred, he himself became increasingly withdrawn and pessimistic, especially after his theater group broke up in 1979. While the theater was at the center of his work in the 1970s, he produced two more remarkable novels with striking spatial relationships in Hako otoko (The Box Man) and Mikkai (Secret Rendezvous). His one novel of the 1980s, Hakobune Sakuramaru (The Ark Sakura), is full of original ideas, but lacks the same poignancy.

More successful was his last novel, Kangarū nōto (Kangaroo Notebook), in which the narrator travels on a hospital bed down a sewer to "Hell Valley Hot Spring," passing through a succession of dreams within dreams. It ends with a newspaper clipping about the discovery of an unidentified corpse in a disused railway station. The book was called autobiographical in the publisher's blurb, but it is more properly seen as an illustration of authorship, or even of the human condition in general, showing it to be as melancholy as it is humorous. The human subject is driven from each existence to the next deeper level, his alienation and isolation increasing each time, and dies before arrival.

—Thomas Schnellbacher

See the essay on The Woman in the Dunes.

ACCAD, Evelyne

Born: Beirut, Lebanon, 10 October 1943; daughter of a Lebanese father and Swiss mother; naturalized U.S. citizen, 1972. Education: Primary and secondary education in Beirut, Beirut College for Women (then Beirut University College, now Lebanese American University), A.A., 1965; Anderson College, Anderson, Indiana, B.A. in English Literature, 1967; Ball State University, Muncie, Indiana, M.A. in French, 1968; Indiana University, Bloomington, Ph.D. in Comparative Literature, 1973. Family: Divorced from husband; living with her long-term companion. Career: Taught French at Anderson College, Anderson, Indiana, 1967–68, and both English and French at International College, Beirut, Lebanon, 1968–70. Worked at University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign as assistant professor, 1974–79, and associate professor from 1979–88. Taught at Beirut University College, 1984, and visiting professor at Northwestern University, 1991. She continues her work at the University of Illinois at the African Center, Women's Studies Center, French Department, Comparative Literature Department, the Honors Program and Center for Middle East Studies. Taught in Beirut, Lebanon on a Fulbright Scholarship, 2002. Lives in the United States. Awards: Florence Howard award, Women's Caucus for the Modern Languages Association, 1975; Special Recognition award, Illinois Arts Council, 1979; International Educator's award, Delta Kappa Gamma, 1979; Fulbright award, Tunisia, 1983–85; Social Science Research Council grant, 1987–88; Prix France-Liban, Association des Écrivains de Langue Française, 1993; American Institute for Maghrebi Studies grant, 1995; Prix Phénix de littérature, 2001; Fulbright award, Lebanon, 2002. Member: Coordination Internationale des Chercheurs sur les Littératures Maghrebines, Conseil International d'Études Francophones, Expert Witness International, Modern Language Association of America, National Women's Studies Association, Middle East Studies Association, African Literature Association, American Association of Teachers of French, African Studies Association, American Institute for Maghribi Studies, Arab American University Graduates, Arab Women Solidarity Association, Radius of Arab-American Writers, Association des Écrivains de Langue Française, Société des Auteurs, Compositeurs, et Éditeurs de Musique, Women's Caucus for the Modern Language Association, North Eastern Modern Language Association, Foundation Nouredine Aba, Coalition against Trafficking in Women, Delta Kappa Gamma.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction and Critical Studies

Veil of Shame: The Role of Women in the Modern Fiction of North Africa and the Arab World. 1978.

L'Excisee. 1982 and 1992; as The Excised, translated by David K. Bruner, 1989 and 1994.

Contemporary Arab Women Writers and Poets, with Rose Ghurayyeb. 1986.

Coquelicot du massacre (with a cassette of songs). 1988.

Sexuality and War: Literary Masks of the Middle East. 1990; as Des femmes, des homes et la guerre: Fiction et réalité au Proche-Orient, 1993.

Blessures des mots: journal de Tunisie. 1993; as Wounding Words: A Woman's Journal in Tunisia, translated by Cynthia T. Hahn, 1996.

Voyages en Cancer. 2000; as The Wounded Breast: Intimate Journeys Through Cancer, 2001.

Other

Les filles de Tahar Haddad (play). Adaptation of Blessures des mots, in conjunction with women of the feminist movement Accad met in Tunisia while on a Fulbright scholarship, 1995.

Translator, Montjoie Palestine!; or, Last Year in Jerusalem, dramatic poem by Nouredine Aba. 1980.

*

Critical Studies: "Sexuality and War: Literary Masks of the Middle East" by Mona Fayad, in College Literature, vol. 19, no. 3, 1992; "Wounding Words" by Saadi A. Simawe, in Arab Studies Quarterly, vol. 21, issue 4; "A Poetics of Pain: Evelyne Accad's Critical and Fictional World" by Ruth A. Hottell, in World Literature Today, vol. 71 no. 3; Postcolonial Representation: Women, Literature, Identity by Francoise Lionnet, 1995.

* * *

Evelyne Accad was first published during the 1970s, when the sexual revolution was in full swing, giving American women unprecedented rights in relation to their bodies, careers, and social roles. In contrast, the status of women in most Arab and North African countries during the 1970s did not change, and grew worse in some cases, as authoritarian dictators took over post-colonial governments. Accad's youth in Beirut, Lebanon was restricted by the patriarchal social ties of Arab society; bonds that she broke by moving to the United States in 1965 and becoming a naturalized citizen. Her literature gives all Arab women a voice, and a greater chance to live free from male oppression. The issue of women's rights in the Arab world gained national prominence after the 11 September 2001 terrorist attacks perpetrated by Islamic extremists in the United States, and the subsequent attacks on the Taliban in Afghanistan. The position of women in Islamic societies was well advertised by American propagandists who sought to spur the United States into military action. If Accad's novels gain popularity from American attempts to understand Islamic culture, so much the better. Accad gives a unique first-hand account of the sexual politics found in Arab and North African countries.

Accad's novels turn personal experiences into engaging social treatises, shedding light on complex political and social issues. Themes that surface in her works include the relationship between men and women, the social effects of war, the tolerance (or intolerance) of difference, and responsibility for the environment. Arab and North African women are shown as the victims of societies that attempt to hide, shame, and destroy all that is feminine. War in Lebanon and other countries is seen as an activity propagated by men, to the detriment of women, as reflected in Accad's images of raped cities violently bombed and conquered. The female body is also the scene of man's war with nature, to tame and dominate; but Accad reminds us that it is also man's duty to tend to the environment and the female body. Accad renders the conflicts between men and women, cultures, and ideologies into poignant accounts of personal suffering and triumph.

In Veil of Shame Accad revisits the female oppression that she endured during her upbringing in Lebanon, by evaluating the role of women in North African and Arab culture and literature. This novel of literary criticism reflects Accad's scholarly background, while emphasizing the utility of unconventional literary genres such as poetry and the personal memoir. The practice of female circumcision in Arab society is examined in L'Excisee (The Excised), with the story of one woman's physical and psychological domination by men. Although the main character is unable to speak out against her aggressors, she escapes and is exiled, or "excised" from her own country. Civil war in Beirut, Lebanon (1975–90), and the ways in which the victims of this war deal with pain, are described in Coquelicot du massacre. The female protagonist, Nour, is overwhelmed by the suffering city of Beirut, but she is able to overcome her pain with hope. Sexuality and War is a political treatise on the use of nationalism and war to oppress women in Lebanon and other countries. Accad's theory that men's violence (and thus war) stems from the fear and loathing of women is supported by the criticism and interpretation of several Arab authors. Female authors Hanan al-Shaykh, Etel Adnan, and Andree Chedid are compared to male writers Tawfiq Yusuf Awwad, Halim Barakat, and Elias Khoury. All authors, regardless of sex, admit that war is damaging to society as a whole, but does much greater ill to women than to men. After Sexuality and War Accad wrote a more personal account of sexual politics, Blessures des mots (Wounding Words), a story loosely based on Accad's stay as a Fulbright scholar in Tunisia. The protagonist travels to Tunisia in order to study and advocate feminism, but is dismayed to find a society mired in patriarchal Islamic tradition.

The main character, Hayate, attempts to understand the gap that has formed between men and women in Tunisian society. Her story is told in a way that highlights communication differences between genders. The novel is interspersed with emotional poems and scholarly observations; feminine and masculine literary genres that are balanced with the medium that is prose. Wounding Words was also turned into a play by women of the Tunisian feminist movement in 1995, called Les filles de Tahar Haddad, performed in Tunisia and accompanied by Accad's own songs. Poems, songs, and speeches often supplement Accad's writings. This multidisciplinary approach is likewise enhanced by her mastery of several languages: French, English, and Arabic. Accad's multicultural background allows her to explain Arab and North African cultures to Western minds, while it has also given her the ability to transcend her cultural and gender-based biases to entertain a worldview.

In 1994 Accad started chemotherapy to treat breast cancer. Her struggles with this disease are chronicled in Voyages en Cancer (The Wounded Breast); on the cover is a picture of the defiant author with bald head and naked chest. Her hair has fallen out due to the chemotherapy, and she is missing one breast due to a mastectomy. The novel contains the poems and personal investigations of cancer that she undertook while she was sick, and recovering from therapy. Accad draws a strong link between man's abuse of nature, and the abuse of the female body with environmental chemicals and prescribed drugs, which she blames for causing her illness. Her mastectomy is reminiscent of the fabled Amazons, who cut off their breasts in order to become more effective in battle. However, it is not a war that Accad proposes, rather a reevaluation of the social and cultural attitudes that bring about violence, particularly against women. Male dominance has not only crippled women in patriarchic Arab societies; it has also tipped the balance of power in the whole of these societies, making war and intolerance commonplace. Accad suggests through her many novels, poems, songs, and critical works that oppressed women should leave their abusers, and return with reinforcements to help those who are still in need.

—Mary Sugar

ADAMOV, Arthur

Born: Baku, Azerbaijan, 23 August 1908; lived abroad after 1912. Education: Educated at Rosset School, Geneva; lycée, Mainz, Germany, 1922–24; Lycée Lakanal, Paris, 1924–27. Family: Married Jacqueline Trehet in 1961. Career: Translator and writer in Paris; editor of the review, Discontinuité in late 1920s and L'Heure Nouvelle, 1945–47; increasingly involved in left-wing politics during the 1950s; visiting lecturer, Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, 1964. co-signatory of the “Manifeste des 121” opposing the war in Algeria, 1960; visiting lecturer, Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, 1964. Died: Suicide, 15 March 1970.

PUBLICATIONS

Plays

L'Arbitre aux mains vides (produced 1928).
Mains blanches (produced 1928).
La Mort de Danton, from the play by Georg Büchner (produced 1948). 1953.
L'Invasion (produced 1950). With La Parodie, 1950; as The Invasion, translated by Peter Doan, 1968.
La Parodie (produced 1952). With L'Invasion, 1950.
La grande et la petite manoeuvre (produced 1950). 1951.
Tous contre tous (produced 1953). In Théâtre 1, 1953.
Le Professeur Taranne (produced 1953). 1953; as Professor Taranne, translated by Albert Bermel, in Four Modern Comedies, 1960, and by Peter Meyer, in Two Plays, 1962.
Le Sens de la marche (produced 1953). In Théâtre 2, 1955.
Comme nous avons été (produced 1954). In La Nouvelle Revue Française, 1, 1953; as As We Were, in Evergreen Review, 1(4), 1957.
Théâtre 1–4. 1953–68.
La Cruche cassée, from the play by Heinrich von Kleist (produced 1954). In Théâtre populaire, 1954.
Edward II, from the play by Christopher Marlowe (produced 1954).
Le Ping-Pong (produced 1955). In Théâtre 2, 1955; as Ping Pong, translated by Richard Howard, 1959; also translated by Derek Prouse, in Two Plays, 1962.
Les Retrouvailles. In Théâtre 2, 1955.

Le Pélican, from the play by August Strindberg (produced 1956). In Théâtre populaire, 17, 1956.
Les Ennemis, from the play by Maksim Gor'kii (produced 1965). In Théâtre populaire, 27, 1957.
Paolo Paoli (produced 1957). 1957; as Paolo Paoli, translated by Geoffrey Brereton, 1959.
Le Revizor, from the play by Nikolai Gogol' (produced 1967). 1958.
Vassa Geleznova, from the play by Maksim Gor'kii (produced 1959). 1958.
Le Père, from the play by August Strindberg. 1958.
Les Petits Bourgeois, from the play by Maksim Gor'kii (produced 1959). 1958.
Les Âmes mortes, from the novel by Nikolai Gogol' (produced 1960). 1960.
Le Printemps 71 (produced 1962). 1961.
La Sonate des spectres, with C.G. Björström, from the play by August Strindberg (produced 1962).
La Politique des restes (produced 1963). In Théâtre 3, 1966.
Sainte Europe. In Théâtre 3. 1966.
M. Le Modéré (produced 1968). In Théâtre 4, 1968.
Off Limits (produced 1969). 1969.
La Grande Muraille, from the play by Max Frisch (produced 1969). 1969.
Si l'été revenait (produced 1972). 1970.

Radio Plays: La Logeuse, 1950; Polly, 1951; L'Éternel Mari, 1952; Le Potier politicien, 1952; L'Agence universelle, 1953; Lady Macbeth au village, 1953; Parallèlement, 1954; Les Âmes mortes, 1955; Raillerie, satire, ironie et signification plus profonde, 1957; L'Autre Rive, 1959; Le Temps vivant, 1963; En fiacre, 1963; Finita la commedia, 1964; Du matin à minuit, 1966; Theatre radiophonique, 5 CDs, 1997.

Television Plays: La Parole est au prophète, with Bernard Hecht, 1952; Tous contre tous, 1956; Les Trois Soeurs, 1958; Le Manteau, 1966; Une femme douce, 1970; La Mort de Danton, 1970; La Cigale, 1970; Vassa Geleznova, 1971.

Other

L'Aveu (autobiography). 1946; enlarged edition as Je . . . ils . . ., 1969; translated in part as Endless Humiliations, in Evergreen Review, 2(8), 1959.
Auguste Strindberg, dramaturge, with Maurice Gravier. 1955.
Théâtre de société. 1958.
Ici et maintenant (essays). 1964.
L'Homme et l'enfant (autobiography). 1968; as Man and Child, translated by Jo Levy. 1992.
Editor, Le Commune de Paris. 1959.
Translator, Le Moi et l'inconscient, by C.G. Jung. 1938.
Translator, with Marie Geringer, Le Livre de la pauvreté et de la mort, by Rainer Maria Rilke. 1941.
Translator, Crime et châtement, by Fedor Dostoevskii. 1956.
Translator, Les Âmes mortes, by Nikolai Gogol'. 1956, first part; both parts, 1964.
Translator, La Mère, by Maksim Gor'kii. 1958.
Translator, Théâtre, by Anton Chekhov. 1958.
Translator, Oblomov, by Ivan Goncharov. 1959.
Translator, Cinq récits, by Nikolai Gogol'. 1961.
Translator, with Claude Sebisch, Le Théâtre politique, by Erwin Piscator. 1962.

Translator, Ivanov; La mouette, by Anton Chekhov, revised and edited by Michel Cadot, 1996.

*

Bibliography: Adamov by David Bradby, 1975.

Critical Studies: Regards sur le théâtre de Adamov by Samia Assad Chahine, 1961; Arthur Adamov by John H. Reilly, 1974; The Theatre of Arthur Adamov by John J. McCann, 1975; Lectures d'Adamov: Actes du colloque international, Würzburg, 1981, 1983; Lecture d'Adamov by Elizabeth Hervic, 1984; Langage et corps, fantasme dans le théâtre des années cinquante: Ionesco, Beckett, Adamov by Marie-Claude Hubert, 1987; Le théâtre de dérision: Beckett, Ionesco, Adamov by Emmanuel C. Jacquart, 1998; Typologie des Zweiakters: Mit Einer Untersuchung der Funktion zweiaktiger Strukturen im Theater Arthur Adamovs by Susanne Hartwig, 2000.

* * *

When Arthur Adamov first began writing for the French stage in the late 1940s and early 1950s, he was considered, along with Samuel Beckett and Eugène Ionesco, one of the most promising dramatists of the burgeoning movement of the theatre of the absurd. Similar to these two playwrights, Adamov wanted to free himself from the normal constraints of dramatic construction, eliminating the traditional concepts of characterization, action, and even time and place, if need be.

He differed from Beckett and Ionesco, however, to the extent that he used the stage as a means of expressing the enormous fears and obsessions that plagued him. For Adamov, the theatre became a personal cry of anguish, a form of catharsis, a way of attempting to liberate himself from his private demons. Essentially, the Russian-born playwright revealed his feelings of injustice and his sense of persecution and victimization in his works. In his early play, La Parodie [The Parody], the dramatist communicated the solitude and futility of living. The two central characters are the victims of life's horrors: the one, identified only by the initial "N," is crushed by a car, his body swept away by the sanitation department; the other, The Employee, ends up in prison, blind, both events spelling out the absurd uselessness of life, which was a reflection of Adamov's state of mind at the time of writing. In one of his most successful works, Le Professeur Taranne (Professor Taranne), based on a dream Adamov had, Professor Taranne finds himself in a nightmarish situation in which he has been accused by some children of indecent exposure on a beach. By the end of the play, unable to convince anyone of his innocence, he slowly begins to undress, thereby performing the very act with which he had been charged. Professor Taranne is a fairly direct translation of the author's most personal fears, dictated by the subconscious. To that extent, it is an honest expression of a soul in torment. This work is probably Adamov's most powerful play, making a highly trenchant statement about humankind at the mercy of fate and expressing more than any other of his dramas the playwright's deep sense of sadness.

At this stage in his writing, Adamov's expression of his personal visions of terror had much in common with the Surrealist movement as well as with the theories of the theatre of cruelty espoused by Antonin Artaud. During the 1950s, however, Adamov took an unusual step—he rejected all of his previous theatre: "I already saw in the 'avant-garde' an easy escape, a diversion from the real problems, the words 'absurd theatre' already irritated me. Life was not absurd—only difficult, very difficult." Having achieved some limited control of his personal obsessions, he was now able to develop his political and social concerns. Much of his drama of that period, like Paolo Paoli and Le Printemps 71 [Spring 71], has strongly Marxist overtones and reflected the alienation effect experienced in the works of Brecht. Another important play of this genre, (and considered by some to be his most successful work) is Le Ping-Pong (Ping Pong). This is a delicately balanced presentation of the futility of all human action contrasted with the effects on the individual of the capitalist system. Adamov examines two men's obsession with a simple pinball machine and the disastrous results when they are swept up into the capitalist world of big business. On the one hand, the result is a visual representation of the tragedy of life's wastefulness. Yet the play is also a study of the workings of society, a recognition of its defects, and an exploration of ways of improvement. This new thrust of Adamov's writing stressed that the direction of a person's life was more often dictated by the economic forces surrounding him/her than by the strength of the will.

Yet, finally, while Adamov may have planned to write politically committed theatre, he was basically still dealing with the sense of victimization and injustice that had always pursued him. Probably because of this, his theatre, while often highly acclaimed, never went on to achieve the popularity with the public of the works of Beckett or Ionesco—it was too private, too personal to attain universal appeal. Interestingly enough, Adamov's most successful writing may have been one of his earliest works, L'Aveu (Endless Humiliations). Written between 1938 and 1943, it is a series of ruthlessly honest journals in which the writer recounted directly the difficulties of existence. In the journals, the most personal form of expression, Adamov may have found his best means of communication.

—John H. Reilly

See the essay on Professor Taranne.

ADONIS

Also known as Adunis; Ali Ahmad Esber; Ali Ahmad Sa'id. Born: Ali Ahmad Esber in Qassabin, Syria, in 1930. Education: Attended school in Qassabin (in Arabic), and Tarsus, 1943–47 (where he learned French); Lycée in Latakia, 1947–49; studied philosophy at Damascus University, 1950–54; in Paris on French government scholarship, 1960–61; St. Joseph University, Beirut, Ph.D., 1973. Military Service: 1954–55, including 6 months in prison for political activities in the Syrian National Socialist Party. Family: Married Khalida Sa'id, née Saleh in 1956; two daughters. Career: In Beirut: freelance journalist, 1954–; ran journal Shi'r, which he founded with Yusuf al-Khal, 1957–68; worked for journal Lisan al-Hal, 1965–67; revived short-lived journal Afaq, 1968; founded and ran journal Mawaqif, 1968–94; professor at Lebanese University, 1971–85; thesis supervisor, St. Joseph University, 1971–85. Visiting professor, Damascus University, 1976; associate professor, Sorbonne Nouvelle (Censier-Paris III), France, 1980–81; visiting professor, Georgetown University, 1985; permanent Arab League delegate to UNESCO, Paris, 1986–89; associate professor, University of Geneva, 1989–95; Senior Fellow, Princeton University, New Jersey, 1996–97; Fellow, Wissenschaftskolleg, Berlin, 1998–99. Lives in Courbevoie, France. Awards: Prix des Amis du Livre, Beirut, 1968; Syria-Lebanon award of the International Poetry Forum, Pittsburgh, 1971; National Poetry prize, Lebanon, 1974; Officier des Arts et des Lettres, France, 1984; Grand Prix des Biennales Internationales de la Poésie, Liège, Belgium, 1986; Prix Jean Malrieu 'Etranger,' Marseille, 1991; Feronia-Cita di Fiamo prize, Rome, 1993; Nazim Hikmet prize, Istanbul, 1994; Prix Méditerranée-Etranger, Paris, 1995; Prix du Forum culturel libanais, Paris, 1995; Nonino International prize for literature, Udine, Italy, 1997; Commandeur de l'Ordre des Arts et des Lettres, France, 1997; Struga International Poetry Festival Golden Crown, Macedonia, 1998; Lerici-Pea prize, Italy, 2000.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Diwan Adunis. 2 vols., 1971; reissued as al-A'mal al-shi'riyya al-kamila (also al-Athar al-kamila: shi'r), 1985; revised, enlarged, definitive edition, as al-A'mal al-shi'riyya al-kamila. 3 vols., 1996.

Poetry

Qalat al-ard. 1952; revised, 1954.

Qasa'id ula. 1957; revised, as Qasa'id ula, 1929–1955: siyagha niha'iyya. 1988.

Awraq fi al-rih. 1958; as Awraq fi mahabb al-rih, 1971; revised, as Awraq fi al-rih (1955–1960): siyagha niha'iyya, 1988; selection in An Anthology of Modern Arabic Poetry, translated by Mounah A. Khouri and Hamid Algar, 1974.

Aghani Mihyar al-Dimashqi. 1961, revised, 1988; selection in Modern Poetry of the Arab World, translated by Abdullah al-Udhari, 1986; selection in Modern Arabic Poetry, edited by Salma Khadra Jayyusi, 1987.

Kitab al-Tahawwulat wa al-hijra fi aqalim al-nahar wa al-layl. 1965; revised as Kitab al-Tahawwulat wa al-hijra fi aqalim al-nahar wa al-layl: siyagha niha'iyya, 1988; selection in The Blood of Adonis, transpositions of selected poems of Adonis (Ali Ahmed Said), 1971; enlarged and expanded as Transformations of the Lover, 1983; revised as The Pages of Day and Night, 1994, all translated by Samuel Hazo, Mirène Ghossein and Kamal Boullata.

Al-Masrah wa al-maraya. 1968; revised as Al-Masrah wa al-maraya (1965–1967): siyagha niha'iyya, 1988; as Mirrors, translated by Abdullah al-Udhari, 1976; selection in When the Words Burn, translated by John M. Asfour, 1992.

Waqat bayna al-ramad wa al-ward. 1970; enlarged, 1972; reissued as Hadha huwa ismi, 1980; revised as Hadha huwa ismi: siyagha niha'iyya, 1988; as A Time between Ashes and Roses, translated by Shawkat M. Toorawa, 2003.

Mufrad bi-sighat al-jam'. 1975; revised as Mufrad bi-sighat al-jam': siyagha niha'iyya, 1988; selection in Modern Arab Poets, translated by Issa J. Boullata, 1978.

Kitab al-qasa'id al-khams taliha al-Mutabaqat wa al-awa'il. 1979; revised as al-Mutabaqat wa al-awa'il: siyagha niha'iyya, 1988; selections as Beginnings, translated by Kamal Boullata and Mirène Ghossein, 1992; selection in Victims of a Map: Mahmud Darwish, Samih al-Qasim, Adonis, translated by Abdullah al-Udhari, 1994.

Kitab al-hisar. 1985; selections in If Only the Sea Could Sleep: Love Poems, translated by Kamal Abu Deeb, 1988.

Shahwa tataqaddam fi khara'it al-madda. 1987.

Ihtifa'an bi al-ashya' al-wadiha al-ghamida. 1988.

Abjadiyya thaniyya. 1994.

Fihris li-a'mal al-rih. 1998.

Al-Mahd: li fi turab al-Yaman 'irqun ma. 2001.

Al-Kitab: ams al-makan al-an. Makhtutah tunsabu ila al-Mutanabbi. 2 vols., 1995, 1998.

Other

Muqaddima li al-shi'r al-'arabi. 1971.

Zaman al-shi'r. 1972; selections as La prière et l'épée: essais sur la culture arabe, translated by Leila Khatib and Anne Wade Minkowski, 1993.

Al-Thabit wa al-mutahawwil: bahth fi al-ibda' wa al-ittiba' 'inda al-'arab. 3 vols., 1974, 1977, 1978; revised and enlarged in 4 vols., 1994.

Fatiha li-nihayat al-qarn: bayanat min ajl thaqafa 'arabiyya jadida. 1980; revised and enlarged, 1998.

Al-shi'riyya al-'arabiyya. 1985; as An Introduction to Arab Poetics, translated by Catherine Cobham, 1990.

Siyasat al-shi'r: dirasah fi al-shi'riyya al-'arabiyya al-mu'asira. 1985.

Kalam al-bidayat. 1989.

Al-Sufiyya wa al-suriyaliyya. 1992.

Al-Nass al-qur'ani wa afaq al-kitaba. 1993.

Ha-anta, ayyuha al-waqat: sira shi'riyya thaqaftiyya. 1993.

Al-Nizam wa-al-kalam. 1993.

Hiwar ma'a Adunis: al-tufula, al-shi'r, al-manfa. 2000.

Editor, Mukhtarat min shi'r Yusuf al-Khal. 1962; as Qasa'id mukhtara, 1964.

Editor, Diwan al-shi'r al-'arabi. 3 vols., 1964–68.

Editor, Mukhtarat min shi'r al-Sayyab. 1967; as Badr Shakir al-Sayyab: qasa'id, 1978.

Editor with Khalida Sa'id, Mukhtarat min al-Kawakibi. 1982.

Editor with Khalida Sa'id, Mukhtarat min shi'r Ahmad Shawqi. 1982.

Editor with Khalida Sa'id, Mukhtarat min al-Imam Muhammad 'Abduh. 1983.

Editor with Khalida Sa'id, Mukhtarat min Muhammad Rashid Rida. 1983.

Editor with Khalida Sa'id, Mukhtarat min Jamil Sidqi al-Zahawi. 1983.

Editor with Khalida Sa'id, Mukhtarat min al-Shaykh al-Imam Muhammad ibn 'Abd al-Wahhab. 1983.

Translator, Théâtre complet, 6 vols., by Georges Schéhadé. 1972–75; vol. 1 revised, 2000.

Translator, Eloges, La Gloire des rois, Anabase, Exil, Pluies, Poèmes à l'étrangère, Amers, by Saint-John Perse, 2 vols. 1976, 1977.

Translator, La Thébaïde ou les Frères ennemis, Phèdre, by Jean Racine. 1972, 1975; revised 1979.

Translator, L'Oeuvre complète, by Yves Bonnefoy. 1986.

Translator with Anne Wade Minkowski, selections from al-Luzumiyyat, by al-Ma'arri, as Rets d'éternité. 1988.

Translator with Anne Wade Minkowski, selections from al-Mawakib, by Kahlil Gibran, as Le livre des processions. 1998.

With others, al-Islam wa al-hadathah. 1990.

With others, al-Bayanat. 1995.

*

Bibliography: In Chronique des branches, translated by Anne Wade Minkowski, 1991; in Adonis. Un poète dans le monde d'aujourd'hui, 1950–2000, 2000.

Critical Studies: A Critical Introduction to Modern Arabic Poetry by M.M. Badawi, 1975; “The perplexity of the all-knowing: A study of Adonis” by Kamal Abu Deeb, in Mundius Artium, vol.10, 1977; “Adonis: Revolt in Modern Arabic Poetics” by Issa J. Boullata, in Edebiyat, vol. 2, 1977; Trends and Movements in Modern Arabic Poetry, by Salma K. Jayyusi, 1977; “Myth and Symbol in the Poetry of Adonis and Yusuf al-Khal” by Joseph Zeidan, in Journal of Arabic Literature, vol. 10, 1979; “An Analytical Study of the Adonisian Poem” (unpublished thesis) by Ali Ahmad al-Shar‘, 1982; “Modernity: a Study of Adonis’ theory and poetry” (unpublished thesis) by Mohammad Mohmoud Khazali, 1983; “The Complex Poem in New Arabic Poetry 1950–1985” (unpublished thesis) by Nayef Khaled El-Hasan, 1985; “The Metamorphic Vision: The Poetics of Time and History in the Works of Adonis (‘Ali Ahmad Sa‘id)” (unpublished thesis) by Teirab Ash Shareef, 1986; “The Poetic Theories of the Leading Poet-Critics of Arabic New Poetry” (unpublished thesis) by Ahmed Salih al-Tami, 1987; Reading Adonis by Dennis Lee, 1987; “A Critique of Adonis’s Perspectives on Arabic Literature and Culture” in Studies in Contemporary Arabic Poetry and Criticism by Mounah A. Khouri, 1987; “Making Mihyar: The Familiarization of Adonis’s Knight of Strange Works” by Adnan Haydar, in Literature East & West, vol. 4, 1988; “Criticism and the Heritage: Adonis as Advocate of a New Arab Culture” by Mounah Khouri, in Arab Civilization: Challenges and Responses, edited by George N. Atiyeh and Ibrahim M. Oweiss, 1988; “A critical translation of Waqf bayna al-ramad wa al-ward” (unpublished thesis) by Shawkat M. Toorawa, 1989; special issue of Détours d’écriture edited by Noël Blandin, 1991; “Introduction” to When the Words Burn. An Anthology of Modern Arabic Poetry: 1945–1987 by John M. Asfour, 1992; “La symbolique du bien et du mal dans la poésie d’Adonis” by Krystyna Skarzynska-Bochenska, in Rocznik Orientalistyczny, vol. 48, 1992; The Poetics of T. S. Eliot and Adonis by Atef Faddul, 1993; “Upon One Double String: The Metaphysical Element in Adonis’ Poetry” by Terri deYoung, in al-Arabiyya, vol. 27, 1994; “A Study of Elegy for al-Hallaj by Adonis” by Reuven Snir, in Journal of Arabic Literature, vol. 25, 1994; “Walt Whitman in Adonis’ Manhattan: Some Thoughts on A Grave for New York” by Shawkat M. Toorawa, in Periodica Islamica, vol. 6, 1996; “Adonis” by Stefan Weidner, in Kritisches Lexicon zur fremdsprachigen Gegenwartsliteratur, vol. 41, 1996; “Adonis” in Encyclopedia of Arabic Literature, edited by Julie Meisami and Paul Starkey, by Kamal Abu Deeb, 1998; “Whitman and Lebanon’s Adonis” by Roger Asselineau and Ed Folsom, in Walt Whitman Quarterly Review, vol. 15, 1998; “Ishmael Must Be Sacrificed: Adonis and the Quest for a New God” by As‘ad Khairallah, in Myths, Historical Archetypes and Symbolic Figures in Arabic Literature: Towards a New Hermeneutic Approach, edited by Angelika Neuwirth, 1999; “A Guardian of Change? The Poetry of Adonis between Hermeticism and Commitment” by Stefan Weidner, in Conscious Voices. Concepts of Writing in the Middle East, edited by Stephan Guth et al., 1999; Adonis le visionnaire: essai et anthologie by Michel Camus, 2000; Adonis. Un poète dans le monde d'aujourd'hui, 1950–2000, edited by Institut du monde arabe, 2000; “Adonis et la poésie arabe moderne” by Muhammad Jamal Barout, in Adonis: Un poète dans le monde d'aujourd'hui, 1950–2000, edited by Institut du monde arabe, 2000; “Adunis” by Paul Starkey, in Encyclopedia of Literary Translation into English, edited by Olive Classe, 2000.

* * *

Adonis is the most significant Arab poet of the 20th century. His enormously influential modernist poetic output is rivaled by the quality and impact of his cultural criticism, of his translations from French into Arabic and vice versa, of his critical editions of other poets’ works, and of half a century of grappling with and contributing to the Arabic literary tradition. Adonis has twice been a Nobel prize finalist, and is still, in his seventies, a prolific and major presence on the Arabic and international literary scenes.

Ali Ahmad Esber was born in an ‘Alawite family in Qassabin, a remote mountain village of Syria. His father, a farmer and prayer leader, instructed his son in theology and in classical poetry which the boy memorized effortlessly. At the age of 13, Ali was rewarded by the new Syrian president with a scholarship for a poem he declaimed to him. Thus began Adonis’ instruction in French, though he continued to write in Arabic. His first poem to appear in print (1947) was under the nom de plume, Adonis, that of the Near Eastern divinity of fertility, harvest and renewal—this is the name he has used since. The death and rebirth represented by the god Adonis would become, and remain, central to Adonis’ poetic vision of transformation and renewal (tajdid), advocated and actualized in free verse, and in “new poetry” (al-shi‘r al-jadid). The closing sentiment of his 1998 revision of a 1980 collection of essays, Fatiha li-nihayat al-qarn [Introduction to the Century’s Endings], reads: “Let this book’s new edition, then, be a hand extended toward the many other hands which are igniting the flames of transformation.”

Adonis’ first publication, Qalat al-ard [The Earth Said], appeared in his final undergraduate year at the University of Damascus, where he studied philosophy and where he developed an enthusiasm for French authors, directly and also through his reading of Arabic poets such as Ilyas Abu Shabaka, who greatly appreciated Baudelaire, and Sa‘id ‘Aql, who admired Mallarmé. Adonis’ conscription in the Syrian army and the several months he spent in jail for political activities, in particular for support of the Ba‘athist party of Antun Sa‘ada, would impel him to leave for Beirut in 1956 with his future wife, literary critic Khalida Saleh. Adonis would not return to Syria, but the influence of Sa‘ada would remain. Not only did Adonis develop political and social beliefs in the company of Sa‘ada but it was Sa‘ada who made Adonis acutely aware of the importance of myth and history to literature, something he would discover in Eliot too. In 1957, Adonis published Qasa‘id ula [First Poems] and that same year founded, with the Lebanese poet, critic and translator Yusuf al-Khal, the poetry journal Shi‘r [Poetry], which for two decades would be the leading avant-garde forum for Arabic letters. Adonis kept company with, and published, countless poets, including Badr Shakir al-Sayyab, Fadwa Tuqan, Nazik al-Mala‘ika, Michel Trad, and of course al-Khal; Adonis later edited selections of the poetry of al-Sayyab and al-Khal.

In spite of the quality and volume of the journal Shi‘r’s output, and the publication of Awraq fi al-rih [Leaves in the Wind], which reveals the poet’s early attempts to fuse the Arabic and French literary traditions, it was the year 1961 that would propel Adonis’s career. He spent 1960–61 in Paris where he met Aragon, Prévert, Michaux and others, and would begin there the collection many critics (including Adonis himself) consider one of his finest and most important, Aghani Mihyar al-Dimashqi [The Songs of Mihyar of Damascus]. In Aghani, Adonis sought new flames from old fires, sought to rekindle language from the stuff of the Arabic and Islamic heritage. In 1961 Adonis also delivered a paper at a conference in Rome in which he indicted the past, and famously asserted that “it is an essential task of poetry to be prophecy and vision, to break through closed horizons in order to emerge onto a wider world,” and in which he downplayed the Nahda, the 19th century Arab renaissance, calling it “nothing but new ornamentation in old colors, a continuation of a traditional cycle in which no breach was effected, no window opened,” but exempting the Mahjar writers who emigrated to the Americas, such as Amin Rihani, and Kahlil Gibran, whom he admired. Not content merely to observe this as a critic, Adonis spent the sixties revisiting the canon in his three-volume Diwan al-shi'r al-'arabi [Anthology of Arabic Poetry]. In the early eighties, with his wife's collaboration, Adonis edited six volumes of poetry and prose by Nahda writers.

In the 1970s Adonis published prolifically. The introspective triad of poems in Waqf bayna al-ramad wa al-ward (A Time between Ashes and Roses) addressed the issues of Arab defeat and defeatism, occasioned by the losses of 1967 Arab-Israeli War; called into question the opposition East/West by appropriating Whitman and the American modernist tradition; and by attempting to fashion a new poetic language. The often inscrutable ideas and poetry of Mufrad bi-sighat al-jam' [Singular in the Form of Plural], which would find echoes later in Abjadiyya thaniya [A Second Alphabet], earned Adonis the reputation for abstruseness and opacity. But he did not only write poetry: his doctoral thesis, al-Thabit wa al-mutahawwil [The Fixed and the Moving], written at St. Joseph University in Beirut where he taught for 15 years, and translations of important Francophone writers also appeared. In the former Adonis engaged in a controversial and wide-ranging analysis of what he deemed the stifling effect of Islam's theologies of political and artistic control. This is not to say that Adonis' writing is not informed by a profound knowledge of Islam; indeed, he has a special affection for its esoteric and mystical dimensions. It comes as no surprise, therefore, to find 'Ali, the first Shi'ite Imam, a recurring persona in Adonis' poetry. Present also is the 10th century author and mystic al-Niffari, the title of whose Kitab al-Mawaqif wa al-mukhatabat [The Book of Spiritual Stations and Addresses] was the inspiration for Mawaqif, the influential cultural and literary journal founded by Adonis in 1968.

In the 1980s and 1990s, Adonis continued to publish poetry, criticism, editions, and translations. He left war-torn Beirut for Paris, serving at UNESCO and teaching in France and Switzerland. The poems of Shahwa tataqaddam fi khara'it al-madda [A Desire Advancing in the Maps of Matter] and other collections take up many of the early questions, questions that Adonis tackled also in such essays as al-Shi'riyya al-'arabiyya (An Introduction to Arab Poetics), the first prose volume by Adonis to be translated into English. In 1988, Adonis edited and reissued definitive editions of his early collections, and followed these with al-Sufiyya wa al-suriyaliyya [Sufism and Surrealism], in which he attempted to show that Islamic mysticism and European surrealism share similar sources. His study al-Nass al-qur'ani wa afaq al-kitaba [The Quranic Text and the Horizons of Writing] set the stage for a poetic enterprise of considerable daring, al-Kitab [The Book], which, as its subtitle shows, he ‘attributes’ to the formidable 10th century poet al-Mutanabbi (Ams al-makan al-an. Makhtutah tunsabu ila al-Mutanabbi). In 1993 Adonis produced his first autobiographical work. In 2000 the Institut du monde arabe in Paris, long a friend of Adonis' poetry and art, organized a retrospective exhibition of his work. In the intervening years Adonis received distinguished poetry prizes and fellowships all over the world. Adonis has not put down the pen and is not likely to: a new poetry collection appeared in 2001.

—Shawkat M. Toorawa

AESCHYLUS

Born: Eleusis, Greece, 525 or 524 BC. Military Service: Fought in the Battle of Marathon, 490 BC, and probably at Artemisium and Salamis, 480 BC. Career: Wrote possibly over 90 plays; also acted in his plays; visited Sicily to produce plays for Hieron I of Syracuse, soon after the foundation of the city of Aetna, 476 BC, and again in 456 BC. Awards: Won his first playwriting prize in 484 BC, 12 subsequent prizes, some posthumously. Died: 456 BC.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

[Works], edited by Martin West. 1990; also edited by Ulrich von Wilamowitz-Moellendorff, 1914, Gilbert Murray, 1937, and Denys L. Page, 1972; translated by H.W. Smyth [Loeb Edition; bilingual], 2 vols., 1922–26; also translated by Richmond Lattimore, David Grene, and S.G. Benardete, in Complete Greek Tragedies series, edited by Lattimore, 2 vols., 1953–56; Frederic Raphael and Kenneth McLeish, in Plays 1–2, 2 vols., 1991; translated by David R. Slavitt, and edited by Slavitt and Palmer Bovie, 2 vols., 1998–99.

Fragments, edited by S. Radt. 1985.

Plays

Persae (produced 472 BC). Edited by H.D. Broadhead, 1960; as The Persians, translated by S.G. Benardete, in Complete Greek Tragedies, 1956; also translated by Anthony J. Podlecki, 1970; Janet Lembke and C.J. Herington, 1981; as The Persians, adapted by Roberta Auletta, 1993.

Septem contra Thebas (produced 467 BC). Edited by G.O. Hutchinson, 1985; as The Seven Against Thebes, translated by David Grene, in Complete Greek Tragedies, 1956; also translated by Peter Arnott, 1968; Christopher M. Dawson, 1970; Anthony Hecht and Helen H. Bacon, 1974.

Prometheus Vincetus (attributed) (produced c. 466–59 BC). Edited by Mark Griffith, 1983; as Prometheus Bound, translated by Rex Warner, 1947; also translated by David Grene, in Complete Greek Tragedies, 1956; Warren B. Anderson, 1963; Paul Roche, 1964; Michael Townsend, 1966; Peter Arnott, 1968; James Scully and C.J. Herington, 1975.

Supplices (produced c. 463 BC). Edited by H. Johansen and E.W. Whittle, 1980; as The Suppliant Maidens, translated by S.G. Benardete, in Complete Greek Tragedies, 1956; as The Suppliants, translated by Philip Vellacott, 1961; also translated by Janet Lembke, 1975; Peter Burian, 1991.

Oresteia (trilogy; produced 458 BC). Edited by George Thomson, 1966; as The Oresteia, translated by Richmond Lattimore, in Complete Greek Tragedies, 1953; also translated by Philip Vellacott, 1956; Michael Townsend, 1966; Hugh Lloyd-Jones, 1970; Douglas Young, 1974; Robert Fagles, 1976; Robert Lowell, 1978; Tony Harrison, 1981; David Grene and Wendy Doniger O'Flaherty, 1989; Peter Meineck, 1998; as The Orestes Plays, translated by Paul Roche, 1962; as The House of Atreus, translated by John Lewin, 1966; as The Oresteia of Aeschylus, translated by Edward Wright Haile, 1994; adapted by Ted Hughes, 1999.

Agamemnon, edited by Eduard Fraenkel (includes prose translation). 1950; also edited by John Dewar Denniston and Denys L. Page, 1957, and Raymond Postgate, 1969; numerous translations, including by Louis MacNeice, 1936; Anthony Holden, 1969; Hugh Lloyd-Jones, 1970; D.W. Myatt, 1993.

Choephoroi, edited by A.F. Garvie. 1986; also edited by A. Bowen, 1986; as The Libation Bearers, translated by Hugh Lloyd-Jones, 1970.

Eumenides, edited by Alan H. Sommerstein. 1989; edited and translated by Anthony J. Podlecki, 1989; as The Eumenides (The Furies), translated by Gilbert Murray, 1925; as The Eumenides, translated by Hugh Lloyd-Jones, 1970.

*

Critical Studies: Aeschylus, The Creator of Tragedy by Gilbert Murray, 1940; Aeschylus and Athens: Study in the Social Origins of Drama by George Thomson, 1941; Aeschylus in His Style: Study in the Social Origins of Drama by W.B. Stanford, 1942; Aeschylus: New Texts and Old Problems by E. Fraenkel, 1943; The Style of Aeschylus by F.R. Earp, 1948; The Harmony of Aeschylus by E.T. Owen, 1952; Pindar and Aeschylus by J.H. Finley, 1955; A Commentary on the Surviving Plays of Aeschylus by H.J. Rose, 2 vols., 1957–58; Collation and Investigation of the Manuscripts of Aeschylus by R.D. Dawe, 1964; Image and Idea of the Agamemnon of Aeschylus, 1964, and The Oresteia: A Study in Language and Structure, 1971, both by Anne Lebeck; The Political Background of Aeschylean Tragedy by A.J. Podlecki, 1966; *Aeschylus Supplices: Play and Trilog*y by A.F. Garvie, 1969; The Author of Prometheus Bound, 1970, and Aeschylus, 1986, both by C.J. Herington; Studies on the Seven Against Thebes of Aeschylus by H.D. Cameron, 1971; Aeschylus: A Collection of Critical Essays edited by Marsh H. McCall, Jr, 1972; Aeschylus: Playwright Educator by R.H. Beck, 1975; Aeschylean Metaphors for Intellectual Activity by D. Sansome, 1975; Aeschylean Drama by Michael Gagarin, 1976; The Authenticity of Prometheus Bound by Mark Griffith, 1977; The Stagecraft of Aeschylus by Oliver Taplin, 1977; Dramatic Art in Aeschylus' Seven Against Thebes by William G. Thalmann, 1978; Aeschylus: Prometheus Bound: A Literary Commentary, 1980, and Aeschylus: Oresteia: A Literary Commentary, 1987, both by Desmond J. Conacher; The Phoenician Presence in The Seven Against Thebes by Roland F. Perkins, 1980; Problem and Spectacle: Studies in the Oresteia by William Whallon, 1980; The Early Printed Editions (1518–1664) of Aeschylus: A Chapter in the History of Classical Scholarship by J.A. Gruys, 1981; Tradition and Dramatic Form in the Persians of Aeschylus by Ann N. Michelini, 1982; The Art of Aeschylus by Thomas G. Rosenmeyer, 1982; Under the Sign of the Shield: Semiotics and Aeschylus' Seven Against Thebes by Froma I. Zeillin, 1982; Studies in Aeschylus by R.P. Winnington-Ingram, 1983; Language, Sexuality and Narrative: The Oresteia, 1984, and Aeschylus, The Oresteia, 1992, both by Simon Goldhill; Apollo and His Oracle in the Oresteia by Deborah H. Roberts, 1984; Musical Design in Aeschylean Theater by William C. Scott, 1984; The Logic of Tragedy: Moral and Integrity in Aeschylus' Oresteia, 1984, and An English Reader's Guide to Aeschylus' Oresteia, 1991, both by Philip Vellacott; The Oresteia: Iconographic and Narrative Tradition by A.J.N.W. Prag, 1985; Studies in Aeschylus by Martin West, 1991; Aeschylus: The Earlier Plays and Related Studies by D.J. Conacher, 1996; Aeschylean Tragedy by Alan H. Sommerstein, 1996; The Political Background of Aeschylean Tragedy by Anthony J. Podlecki, 1999; The Emptiness of Asia: Aeschylus' "Persians" and the History of the Fifth Century by Thomas Harrison, 2000.

* * *

Aeschylus was the first of the three famous poets (Sophocles and Euripides are the other two) who, from antiquity onwards, have been celebrated as the great tragic dramatists of ancient Greece. In accordance with the conventions of the tragic festivals at Athens, Aeschylus based most of his plays on ancient myths, dating back to the Mycenaean Age at the dawn of Greek civilization; however, like the other Greek tragic poets, he invested this legendary (and, occasionally, historical) material with new, often contemporary, meanings of his own. Whether from choice or because of a convention of early Greek tragedy, Aeschylus composed most of his tragedies in the form of connected trilogies. (Three tragedies, not necessarily related in subject matter, followed by a semi-comic satyr-play, remained the normal requirement for those competing in the tragic festivals throughout the classical period.) A brief survey of his extant plays will illustrate the wide-ranging material of his themes (theological, ethical, and, in the loftiest sense of the term, political), most of which are well suited, by the grandeur of their dramatic conceptions, to the trilogical form of composition.

Persae (The Persians), Aeschylus' earliest extant tragedy (and the earliest Greek tragedy which we possess), is exceptional in that it is not part of a connected trilogy. It is of particular interest also because it is the only extant Greek tragedy based on historical, not mythological, material. The Persians is, however, by no means merely "dramatized history." Rather, in his treatment of the recent defeat of the Persian despot Xerxes and his Persian fleet by the Athenians at Salamis, Aeschylus "mythologizes" history to present a striking illustration of the tragic theme of koros, hubris, atê: excessive confidence in wealth and power, leading to an act of outrage (in this case, that of Xerxes overstepping the divinely ordained limits of his rule), which brings down the swift retribution of the gods. To present his material in tragic rather than in "historical" terms, the poet takes certain bold liberties with the factual material and employs typically Aeschylean touches of symbolism (such as the striking image of "the yoke of the sea," constraining the great sea-god Poseidon, for Xerxes' bridge of boats across "the sacred Hellespont") to stress the overreaching ambition of the Persian King.

In Septem contra Thebas (The Seven Against Thebes) Aeschylus brings to a tragic conclusion (the lost plays Laius and Oedipus were the preceding plays of this trilogy) the treatment of another of his favourite themes: the working out of a family curse, inevitably fulfilled by the gods through the "free" decisions of one of its doomed heroic victims.

In the Oresteia (The Oresteia), Aeschylus' only extant trilogy, the poet combines, in magnificent fashion, both of the above two themes, that of a family curse and that of divine vengeance for a deed of hubristic outrage. In the first play, Agamemnon, Agamemnon suffers (by the murderous hand of his queen, Clytemnestra) both for the outrageous deed of his father, Atreus, against the children of his brother Thyestes, and for his own sacrifice ("impious, unholy and polluting," however "necessitous") of his daughter, Iphigenia, in order to obtain favourable winds for his great assault on Troy. In the trilogy sequel, Choephoroi (The Libation Bearers), Orestes and Electra, loyal children of King Agamemnon, continue the sequence of “blood for blood” by murdering, at the god Apollo’s command, the usurpers, Clytemnestra (their mother) and her paramour, Aegisthus. Only in the third play, the Eumenides (The Furies), is the curse on the family, and the attendant blood feud, resolved. In this play, Orestes takes refuge from Clytemnestra’s avenging Furies (the chorus in the play), first at Apollo’s Oracle at Delphi and then at Athens. Here the goddess Athena institutes a human court of justice (the Areopagus, which was a celebrated Athenian institution of some political importance in Aeschylus’ time), in which Orestes (and all homicides thereafter) will be tried. Orestes is acquitted by Athena’s casting vote and the Chorus of Furies, exactors of the old “blood-for-blood justice,” are persuaded by Athena, daughter of Olympian Zeus, to become beneficent, though still awe-inspiring, guardians, supporting the new order of justice which Athena has instituted.

This brief review of The Oresteia highlights another feature of Aeschylean thought and dramatic structure which some scholars (most notably C.J. Herington in “The Last Phase,” Arion 4, 1965) believe was typical of the trilogies (the Danaid and the Prometheus trilogies as well as the Oresteia) composed in the final period of the poet’s career. Thus, in the Danaid trilogy (only the first play of which, Supplices [The Suppliant Maidens], survives) a violent sequence of forced marriage and murderous requital appears to have been “resolved” by the decision of one bride (out of the 50 sworn to slay their violent suitors) who chooses love instead of further bloodshed. As in The Furies, a goddess (in this case Aphrodite, as a fragment of the final play reveals) appears as a champion of this fruitful resolution.

Finally, the Prometheus trilogy seems to have presented a comparable sequence of tragic action leading to a positive finale. Prometheus Vincitus (Prometheus Bound) was probably the first play in the trilogy; we have only fragmentary knowledge of Prometheus Unbound and Pyrphoros (Prometheus the Firebearer), and the Aeschylean authorship of even the extant Prometheus Bound has been doubted by some scholars (see especially Mark Griffith, The Authenticity of Prometheus Bound and Martin West, Studies in Aeschylus). This time the struggle is between Prometheus, divine champion of men, bestower of fire and all the human arts, and Zeus, man’s would-be destroyer, here presented as a harsh and tyrannical new god, only recently established as lord of the Universe. That Zeus, the god of power and order, needs Promethean intelligence and foresight is established on the literal level by the fact that only Prometheus has the secret knowledge which can prevent Zeus falling from power. That intelligence and foresight are unavailing when suppressed by power, as demonstrated by the noble martyrdom of the enchained Prometheus, whose heroic defiance ends (in the finale of Prometheus Bound) in his further punishment in the lowest depths of Tartaros. Again the fragments of the trilogy (and other external evidence) suffice to indicate its probable denouement. Prometheus and Zeus are ultimately reconciled by their mutual needs. Zeus, saved by Prometheus’ foreknowledge, continues to reign supreme over a less troubled universe, and Prometheus, his “cause” now vindicated, is re-established, under Zeus, as the bestower of the civilizing gift of fire (hence the third title, Prometheus the Firebearer) to men. Once again, if this symbolic interpretation of the evidence be sound, we find that the sequence of suffering presented in the trilogy ends in a triumphant resolution.

In this brief survey of the extant themes of Aeschylean tragedy, it has not been possible to do justice to the impressive dramatic structure of his plays and to the grandeur of his choral odes which, particularly in The Oresteia, are an integral part of that structure. While it is true, as Aristotle believed, that the plot is the soul of tragedy, in Aeschylus’ plays the plots are simple, both “action” and “characterization” being kept to the minimum necessary to expound, in compelling dramatic form, the recurrent and meaningful patterns of tragic experience.

—Desmond J. Conacher

See the essays on The Oresteia, The Persians, Prometheus Bound, The Seven Against Thebes, and The Suppliant Maidens.

AGNON, S. Y.

Born: Shmuel Yosef Halesi Czaczkes in Buczacz, Galicia, Austro-Hungarian Empire (now in Poland), 17 July 1888. Education: Educated at private schools; Baron Hirsch School. Family: Married Esther Marx in 1919; one daughter and one son. Career: Lived in Palestine, 1907–13: first secretary of Jewish Court in Jaffa, and secretary of the National Jewish Council; lecturer and tutor in Germany, 1913–24; in Palestine again from 1924. Fellow, Bar Ilan University. Awards: Bialik prize, 1934, 1954; Hakhnasat Kala, 1937; Ussishkin prize, 1950; Israel prize, 1954, 1958; Nobel prize for literature, 1966. D.H.L.: Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 1936; Ph.D.: Hebrew University, Jerusalem, 1959. President, Mekitzei Nirdamim, 1950. Member: Hebrew Language Academy. Died: 17 February 1970.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

- VeHayah he’Akov leMishor*. 1919.
Giv’at haChol [The Hill of Sand]. 1920.
Besod Yesharim [Among the Pious]. 1921.
MeChamat haMetsik [From the Wrath of the Oppressor]. 1921.
Al Kapot haMan’ul [Upon the Handles of the Lock]. 1922.
Polin [Poland]. 1925.
Ma’aseh rabi Gadi’el haTinok [The Tale of Little Reb Gadiel]. 1925.
Sipur haShanin haTovot. 1927.
Agadat haSofer [The Tale of the Scribe]. 1929.
Kol Sipurav [Collected Fiction]. 11 vols., 1931–52; revised edition (includes additional volume Al Kapot HaMan’ul), 8 vols., 1952–62.
Hakhnasath Kallah. 2 vols., 1931; as The Bridal Canopy, translated by I.M. Lask, 1937.
Me’Az ume’Atah [From Then and from Now]. 1931.
Sipurey Ahavim [Love Stories]. 1931.
Sipur Pashut. 1935; as A Simple Story, translated by Hillel Halkin, 1985.
BeShuva uveNachat [In Peace and Tranquillity]. 1935.
Kovets sipurim. 1937.
Ore’ah Nata Lalun. 1939; as A Guest for the Night, translated by Misha Louvish, 1968.
Elu va’Elu [These and Those]. 1941.
Temol Shilshom [The Day Before Yesterday]. 1945; in part as Kelev Chutsot, 1950.
Samuch veNireh [Never and Apparent]. 1950.
Ad Heinah [Until Now]. 1952.

Bilvav Yamim. 1935; as In the Heart of the Seas, translated by I.M. Lask, 1948.
Sefer, Sofer veSipur [Book, Scribe, Tale]. 1938.
Shevu'at Emunim. 1943; as The Betrothed, translated by Walter Lever, in Two Tales, 1966.
Sipurim veAgadot. 1944.
Tehilla (in English). 1956.
Two Tales: The Betrothed, Edo and Enam, translated by Walter Lever. 1966.
Selected Stories (in Hebrew), edited by Samuel Leiter. 1970.
Twenty-One Stories, edited by Nahum N. Glatzer, various translators. 1970; as Selection, 1977.
Shirah [Song]. 1971; as Shira, translated by Zeva Shapiro, 1989.
Pitchey Dvarim [Opening Remarks]. 1977.
A Dwelling Place of My People: Sixteen Stories of the Chassidim, translated by J. Weinberg and H. Russell. 1983.
Takhrikh shel sipurim (stories), edited by Emunah Yaron. 1984.
A Book That Was Lost and Other Stories, edited with introductions by Alan Mintz and Anne Golomb Hoffman, 1995

Other

Me'Atsmi el Atsmi [From Me to Me]. 1976.
Esterlain yekirati: mikhatavim 684–691 (1924–1931) (letters). 1983.
Kurzweil, Agnon, Greenberg (letters), edited by L. Dabby-Goury. 1987.
Sipure haBest. 1987.
Agnon's Alef bet: Poems, translated by Robert Friend, 1998.
 Editor, with Ahron Eliasberg, Das Buch von den polnischen Juden. 1916.
 Editor, Yamim Nora'im. 1937; as Days of Awe, Being a Treasury of Traditions, Legends, and Learned Commentaries . . ., translated by I.M. Lask, 1948.
 Editor, Atem re'item. 1959; as Present at Sinai: The Giving of the Law, translated by Michael Swirsky, 1994.
 Editor, Sifrehem shel Tsadikim. 1961.

*

Bibliography: S.Y. Agnon: Eine Bibliographische seiner Werke by Werner Martin, 1980.

Critical Studies: Nostalgia and Nightmare: A Study in the Fiction of S.Y. Agnon (includes bibliography) by Arnold J. Band, 1968; The Fiction of S.Y. Agnon by Baruch Hochman, 1970; A Study of the Evolution of S.Y. Agnon's Style by Joseph Kaspi, 1972; Agnon by Harold Fisch, 1975; Shay Agnon's World of Mystery and Allegory by Israel Rosenberg, 1978; At the Handles of the Lock: Themes in the Fiction of S.Y. Agnon by David Aberbach, 1984; Character and Context: Studies in the Fiction of Abramovilsh, Brenner and Agnon by Jeffrey Fleck, 1984; The Triple Cord: Agnon, Hamsun, Strindberg: Where Scandinavian and Hebrew Literature Meet by Yain Mazor, 1987; S.Y. Agnon: Texts and Contexts in English Translation edited by Leon I. Yudkin, 1988; S.Y. Agnon: A Revolutionary Traditionalist by Gershon Shaked, translated by Jeffrey M. Green, 1989; Between Exile and Return: S.Y. Agnon and the Drama of Writing by Anne G. Hoffman, 1991; Agnon's Art of Indirection: Uncovering Latent Content in the Fiction of S.Y. Agnon by N. Ben-Dov, 1993; Tradition and Trauma: Studies in the Fiction of S.Y. Agnon edited by David Patterson and Glenda Abrahamson, 1994; Ghetto, Shtetl, or Polis?: The Jewish Community in the Writings of Karl Emil Franzos, Sholom Aleichem, and Shemuel Yosef Agnon by Miriam Roshwald, 1997; The Centrifugal Novel: S.Y. Agnon's Poetics of Composition by Stephen Katz, 1999. Translating Israel: Contemporary Hebrew Literature and its Reception in America by Alan L. Mintz, 2001.

* * *

S.Y. Agnon was a man of two worlds: the world of his ancestors' Judaic tradition and the realm of modernity. Some literary critics attempt to point to a harmony of the two, while others insist on the radical difference and inconsistency between them.

The province of tradition comprised the daily prayers and the celebration of the Sabbath, the lighting of the candles by the mother with its songs, hymns, special food, and parental blessings; the feasts such as the Passover, celebrating the Exodus from Egypt; Yom Kippur, the most holy Day of Atonement, a fast day and a season of forgiveness; the rabbi's home, the synagogue, and the House of Study; the spirit of neighbourliness and mutual help; the occasions of birth, circumcision, marriage, and death. The learned men were honoured and the youth encouraged to emulate them. The language of everyday was Yiddish, a mixture of Hebrew, German, and Polish (or Russian), while Hebrew was reserved for prayer and the sacred texts; God was exalted for his majesty and goodness and the Messiah expected to redeem Israel and the world.

Agnon grew up in this world. Though the 19-year-old left his native Buczacz, Galicia, in 1907, the memories of the "old home" were strong and vivid enough to sustain his creative imagination for years to come. He portrays this culture in the novel Hakhnasath Kallah (The Bridal Canopy) and the short story "Agadat ha-Sofer" [The Tale of the Scribe]. Agnon was aware of the breakdown of this culture; thus a tragic element enters both the novels and the short stories: in "The Tale of the Scribe" both the humble and saintly scribe and his pious, chaste wife, as well as the sacred scroll, perish in a conflagration.

Answering some critics' contention that Agnon adheres to a style patterned after the Jewish folk-tale and the homiletic mode of the ancient Midrash, he wrote a series of pieces in a strictly modern, expressionistic form. Here the laws of cause and effect do not apply; for example, the narrator in one story attends a memorial service for an important person, and returning home he finds that person waiting for him. Agnon made it clear that he was not confined to any one style; moreover, he chose his particular mode because he believed it to be most readily and universally understood by the Hebrew reader. The stories are evidence that the writer was indeed a man of the Western world and that the problems of the Jewish people and those of the world at large meet and cross.

—Nahum N. Glatzer

AGUILERA MALTA, Demetrio

Born: Guayaquil, Ecuador, 24 May, 1909. Education: Elementary studies in the Colegio de San José and the Escuela Municipal Nelson Mateus; high school in the Colegio Vicente Rocafuerte; studied law for two years at the University of Guayas, in Guayaquil at the same time attending art classes at the School of Fine Arts. Family: Married 1) a Panamanian in 1932 (divorced), two daughters; 2) Mexican writer and diplomat Velia Márquez Inclán in 1957, three children. Career: Writer, playwright, journalist, director of the Museo Nacional and Assistant Secretary of Education; professor of literature at the Rocafuerte Institute; printer; manufacturer of candy; worked at the Pan American Union in Washington, D.C., 1946–48; secretary to the Ambassador of Ecuador in Chile, 1948; writer in Residence or Visiting Professor at several U.S. universities and at universities in Guatemala, México and Brazil; Cultural attaché in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, México and Uruguay; Minister of Culture, appointed Ambassador to México in 1980; Aguilera Malta contributed about two thousand articles and stories to newspapers and magazines; he also wrote and produced three films. Awards: Gold medal at the Reunion of Latin American Writers in Guayaquil, 1971; Eugenio Espejo prize, most distinguished literary prize given in Ecuador, 1981. Member: Latin American Community of Writers, Pan American Union. Died: Mexico City, 29 December, 1981; suffered from diabetes and blindness, fell in his home sustaining a head injury and did not recover consciousness.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Teatro completo, 1970.

Plays

España leal: Tragedia en un prologo y tres actos, el último dividido en tres cuadros. 1938.

Campeonatomania. 1939.

Carbón. 1939.

El sátiro encadenado. 1939.

Lázaro. 1941.

Sangre azul (three-act). With Willis Knapp Jones, 1946; as Blue Blood, translated by the authors, 1948.

Dos comedias fáciles. 1950, includes Sangre azul and El pirata fantasma.

No bastan los átomos. 1955.

Dientes blancos. 1955 and 1956; as White Teeth: A Play in One Act, translated by Robert Losada, Jr., 1956.

El tigre: Pieza en un acto dividido en tres cuadros. 1955/1956.

Honorarios. 1957.

Trilogía ecuatoriana: Teatro breve (contains Dientes blancos, Honorarios, and El tigre). 1959.

Infierno negro: Pieza en dos actos. 1967; as Black Hell, translated by Elizabeth Lowe, 1977.

Fantoche. 1970.

Muerte, S.A.—La muerte es un gran negocio. 1970.

Una mujer para cada acto. 1970.

Fiction

Los que se van (short story), with Enrique Gil Gilbert and Joaquín Gallegos Lara. 1930.

Don Goyo. 1933; as Don Goyo, translated by John Brushwood and Carolyn Brushwood, 1980.

Canal Zone: Los yanquis en Panama. 1935.

¡Madrid!: Reportaje novelado de una retaguardia heroica. 1936/1937.

La isla virgen. 1942.

Una cruz en la Sierra Maestra. 1960.

La caballeresa del sol: El gran amor de Bolívar. 1964; as Manuela, la caballeresa del sol, translated by Willis Knapp Jones, foreword by J. Cary Davis, 1967.

El Quijote de El Dorado: Orellana y el Río de las Amazonas. 1964.

Un nuevo mar para el rey: Balboa, Anayansi, y el Océano Pacífico. 1965.

Hechos y leyendas de nuestra América: Relatos hispanoamericanos (short story). 1975.

Siete lunas y siete serpientes. 1970; as Seven Moons and Seven Serpents, translated by Gregory Rabassa, 1979.

El secuestro del general. 1973; as Babelandia, translated by Peter G. Earle, illustrated by George Bartko, 1985.

Jaguar. 1977.

Réquiem para el diablo. 1978.

Una pelota, un sueño y diez centavos. 1988, published posthumously.

*

Bibliography: De Andrea, Pedro Frank. “Demetrio Aguilera Malta: bibliografía.” Boletín de la Comunidad Latinoamericana de Escritores 5, September 1969.

Critical Studies: “The ‘Episodios Americanos’ of Aguilera Malta” by J. Davis, in Foreign Language Quarterly, 9, 1970; La narrativa de Aguilera Malta by María E. Valverde, 1979; “The Apocalyptic Tropics of Aguilera Malta” by Luis A. Díez, in Latin American Theatre Review, 10, Spring-Summer 1982; “Demetrio Aguilera Malta” in Spanish American Authors of the Twentieth Century, edited by Angle Flores, 1992; “Demetrio Aguilera Malta” by Robert Scott in, Encyclopedia of World Literature, 2nd Edition, 1999; Demetrio Aguilera Malta and Social Justice: The Tertiary Phase of Epic Tradition in Latin American Literature by Clemintine Christos Rabassa, 1980; “The Antichrist-Figure in Three Latin American Novels” by William L. Siemens, in The Power of Myth in Literature and Film, 1980; “Absurdity, Hyperbole and the Grotesque in Demetrio Aguilera’s Last Novel, Requiem para el diablo” by Michael C. Waag, in SECOLAS Annals 20, March 1989.

* * *

Demetrio Aguilera Malta championed the Ecuadorian working poor, illustrating the injustices they endured in his social realist novels with his passionate writing. One of the earliest writers to use elements of magic realism, he intersected quotidian activities with supernatural elements. Aguilera Malta was an adventurer and lived a nomadic existence, which is reflected directly in his short stories, novels, and plays. Much of his writing is culturally specific to Ecuador and to the region of Guayaquil. Yet, he is able to transcend national boundaries and utilize his literary works to exemplify social injustice.

His first work published in conjunction with two other young Ecuadorian coastal writers, Enrique Gil Gilbert and Joaquín Gallegos Lara is a collection of twenty-four short stories entitled Los que se van [Those Who Got Away]. This work initiated a new trend and era in Ecuadorian and Spanish American literature, combining social realism with psychoanalysis. The language is crude and violent, and makes use of local slang, portraying the hardships and physical violence the cholos (mixed blooded or mestizos) endured. Literary critics found the book shocking, but the reading public enthusiastically reveled in the story's lack of traditionalism and its break with 19th-century pretensions. Aguilera Malta together with his two collaborators from Los que se van and with José de la Cuadra and Alfredo Pareja Diezcanseco came to be known as the "Grupo de Guayaquil."

Don Goyo and La isla virgen [The Virgin Island] are two early works dealing with life of the coastal Ecuadorian cholos, living at the mouth of the Guayas River, the area where the author grew up and which heavily influenced his formation and writing. Don Goyo depicts the cholo in his native or natural environment but at the same time imbues it with magical qualities. He included such techniques as talking trees and axes that think, listen and converse as examples of his early usage as an initiator of magic realism. The central character is the centenarian Don Goyo; he is attuned to the surrounding natural environment, and his disappearance leads to his people's enslavement by the white men. In La isla virgen, Don Nestor is juxtaposed with Don Goyo from the preceding novel, by the fact that he exploits nature.

In response to the occupation of the Canal Zone by the U.S. military and the Civil War in Spain, he produced the historical biographical novels Canal Zone and ¡Madrid!: Reportaje novelado de una retaguardia heroica [Madrid: A Fictional Account of a Heroic Rearguard], published in Barcelona in 1936. Canal Zone tackles the topic of racial discrimination by the United States against the black workers building the canal. After publication of this work, Aguilera Malta was unable to enter the United States for several years. ¡Madrid! echoes his loyalist affiliation as he also wrote propaganda for the Republican government.

One of his best known novels, La isla virgen, dramatized the life of the cholos, highlighting their customs, folklore, and the influence nature had on their culture through the use of techniques gleaned from his work in theatre and movies. After moving to Mexico in 1955, he returned to the novel and began a series of historical biographical novels under the rubric of Historias americanas. The series included La caballeresca del sol, a treatment of Simón Bolívar's lover; El Quijote de El Dorado dealing with the Amazon region and Orellano; and Un nuevo mar para el rey [A New Sea for the King], a treatment of the discovery of the Pacific Ocean by Balboa. These works present no new narrative techniques and treat the topics in a traditional manner.

In the 1970s and 1980s, Aguilera Malta's works were deeply influenced by the Latin American New Novel: Siete lunas y siete serpientes (Seven Moons and Seven Serpents); El secuestro del general [The Kidnapping of the General]; Jaguar; Réquiem para el diablo; and Una pelota, un sueño y diez centavos [A Ball, a Dream, and Ten Cents]. Siete lunas y siete serpientes marks a return to the region of the Guayas River; with its cholos and island milieu, he included elements of magic realism. Regionalism becomes allegory here in the form of good versus evil. The depiction of evil is seen in the characters represented by traditional Latin American figures of power such as the military, politicians, the oligarchy, the institution of the church. According to Robert Scott, they face the forces of good represented by true "Christianity, scientific enlightenment, and nostalgia for a lost paradise. . ."

While known more as a novelist outside his country, Aguilera Malta is possibly Ecuador's best known playwright and his theatrical works represent many of the same themes as his novels. The first play staged by Aguilera Malta was a propaganda piece titled España leal, produced shortly after his return from the Spanish Civil War. Lázaro is a tragedy about a schoolteacher who was forced to abandon the classroom because of lack of funding and how he wastes his time trying to survive economically. Dientes blancos (White Teeth) denounces the racial discrimination he witnessed as a reporter in Panama and the Canal Zone. The same theme appears in Infierno Negro [Black Hell]. Perhaps his best-known play, as it is his most anthologized, is El tigre. The play is based on an incident in his novel La isla virgen. It fuses an explicit use of symbols while at the same time rejecting any attempt to reconstruct external reality. It deals with the primitive life of a group of cane cutters on the Guayas River, particularly one unfortunate worker, Aguayo, fixated on being eaten by a jaguar. The supervisor dismisses Aguayo's fears as irrational but the other two workers vacillate between the practical and the mythical interpretation for their colleague's fear.

The significance of Aguilera Malta's contributions may lie in his earlier works. However, one of his later novels, Siete lunas y siete serpientes, is particularly important as it recuperates his earlier techniques and completes the circle returning to his own literary roots. Aguilera Malta's social and political message is not only important for Ecuador but for Latin America in general.

—Beth Pollack

AKHMATOVA, Anna

Born: Anna Andreievna Gorenko in Bolshoi Fontan, near Odessa, Ukraine, 23 June 1889. Education: Educated at girls' gymnasium, Tsarskoe Selo; Smolnyi Institute, St. Petersburg; Funduklevskaia gymnasium, 1906, and law school, 1907, both Kiev. Family: Married 1) Nikolai S. Gumilev in 1910 (divorced 1918), one son, the writer Lev Gumilev; 2) Vladimir Shileiko in 1918 (separated 1920, divorced 1928); 3) Nikolai N. Punin (died 1953). Career: Associated with the Acmeist movement whose members included Gumilev, Mandel'shtam, q.v., Gorodetskii, Narbut, and Zenkevich; worked as a librarian, Institute of Agronomy, Petrograd, 1920; banned from publishing her poetry, 1925–40; lived in Leningrad, evacuated to Moscow, 1941, then to Tashkent; returned to Leningrad, 1945; expelled from Union of Soviet Writers, 1946. Awards: Taormina prize, 1964. D.Litt.: Oxford University, 1965. Died: 5 March 1966.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Sochineniia [Works], edited by Gleb Struve and Boris Filippov. 2 vols., 1965–68.

Selected Poems, edited by Walter Arndt, translated by Robin Kemball and Carl R. Proffer. 1976.

Stikhi i proza [Poems and Prose] (selections), edited by B.G. Druian. 1977.

Stikhi, perepiska, vospominaniia, ikonografiia [Poems, Correspondence, Reminiscences, Iconography], edited by Ellendea Proffer. 1977.

Sochineniia [Works], edited by V.A. Chernykh. 2 vols., 1986.

The Complete Poems, edited by Roberta Reeder, translated by Judith Hemschemeyer. 2 vols., 1990; revised edition, 1 vol., 1992.
Selected Poems of Anna Akhmatova, translated by Judith Hemschemeyer, 2000.

Verse

Večer [Evening]. 1912.
Chetki [The Rosary]. 1914.
Belaia staja [The White Flock]. 1917.
Skrizhal sbornik [Ecstasy Collection]. 1921.
Podorozhnik [Plantain]. 1921.
Anno Domini MCMXXI. 1922; enlarged edition, 1923.
Forty-Seven Love Poems, translated by Natalie Duddington. 1927.
Stikhi [Poems]. 1940.
Iz shesti knig [From Six Books]. 1940.
Izbrannoe [Selection]. 1943.
Izbrannye stikhi [Selected Poems]. 1946.
Stikhotvoreniiia 1909–1945 [Poetry]. 1946.
Stikhotvoreniiia 1909–1957 [Poetry], edited by A.A. Surkov. 1958; revised edition, 1965.
Stikhotvoreniiia 1909–1960 [Poetry]. 1961.
50 Stikhotvorenii [50 Poems]. 1963.
Rekviem: Tsikl stikhotvorenii. 1963; as Requiem, with Poem Without a Hero, translated by D.M. Thomas, 1976.
Beg vremeni [The Flight of Time]. 1965.
Selected Poems, translated by Richard McKane. 1969; revised edition 1989.
Poems (bilingual edition), edited and translated by Stanley Kunitz and Max Hayward. 1973.
Tale Without a Hero and Twenty-Two Poems, edited and translated by Jeanne van der Eng-Liedmeier and Kees Verheul. 1973.
Way of All the Earth, translated by D.M. Thomas. 1979.
Poems (selection), translated by Lyn Coffin. 1983.
Three Russian Women Poets (with Bella Akhmadulina and Marina Tsvetaeva), edited and translated by Mary Maddock. 1983.
Twenty Poems, translated by Jane Kenyon and Vera Sandomirsky Dunham. 1985.
You Will Hear Thunder, translated by D.M. Thomas, 1985.
Selected Early Love Lyrics (bilingual edition), translated by Jessie Davies. 1988.
Poem Without a Hero and Selected Poems, translated by Lenore Mayhew and William McNaughton. 1989.
Evening: Poems 1912 (bilingual edition), translated by Jessie Davies. 1990.
A Stranger to Heaven and Earth: Poems, edited and translated by Judith Hemschemeyer. 1993.

Other

Conversations with Akhmatova 1:1938–1941, edited by Lydia Chukovskaya. 1989.
Anna Akhmatova: My Half Century: Selected Prose, translated by Ronald Meyer. 1992.
The Akhmatova Journals, 1938–1941, by Lydia Chukovskaya, translated by Milena Michalski and Sylva Rubashova. 1993.
Anna Akhmatova and Her Circle, compilation and notes by Konstantin Polivanov, translated by Patricia Beriozkina, 1994.
 Translator, Koreiskaya klassicheskaya poeziya [Korean Classical Poetry], edited by A.A. Kholodovich. 1956.

Translator, with Vera Potapova, Lirika drevnego Egipta [Ancient Egyptian Lyrics]. 1965.
 Translator, Golosa poetov [Voices of the Poets]. 1965.
 Translator, Klassicheskaiia poeziia vostoka [Classical Poetry of the East]. 1969.

*

Bibliography: Anna Akhmatova in English: A Bibliography 1889–1986–1989 by Garth M. Terry, 1989.

Critical Studies: The Theme of Time in the Poetry of Anna Akhmatova by Kees Verheul, 1971; Anna Akhmatova by Sam Driver, 1972; Anna Akhmatova: A Poetic Pilgrimage by Amanda Haight, 1976; Akhmatova's Petersburg by Sharon Leiter, 1983; The Prince, the Fool and the Nunnery: The Religious Theme in the Early Poetry of Anna Akhmatova by Wendy Rosslyn, 1984, The Speech of Unknown Eyes: Akhmatova's Readers on Her Poetry edited by Rosslyn, 2 vols., 1990, and Remembering Anna Akhmatova by Anatoli Naiman, translated by Rosslyn, 1991; The Poetry of Anna Akhmatova: A Conquest of Time and Space by Sonia Ketchian, 1986; Anna of All the Russias: The Life of Anna Akhmatova by Jessie Davies, 1988, and Memoirs of Anna Akhmatova's Years, 1944–1950 by Sophie Kazimirovna Ostrovskaya, translated by Davies, 1988; Anna Akhmatova and Russian Culture of the Beginning of the Twentieth Century: Papers of the Moscow Conference 1989 by V.N. Toporov, 1989; Anna Akhmatova issue of Soviet Literature, 6, 1989; In a Shattered Mirror: The Later Poetry of Anna Akhmatova by Susan Amert, 1992; Anna Akhmatova: Poet and Prophet by Roberta Reeder, 1994; A Concordance to the Poetry of Anna Akhmatova, edited and compiled by Tatiana Patera, 1995; Anna Akhmatova: Her Poetry by David N. Wells, 1996; The Guest from the Future: Anna Akhmatova and Isaiah Berlin, by György Dalos, translated by Antony Wood, 1998.

* * *

Anna Akhmatova occupies a position unique in the history of modern Russian poetry. An established poet before the revolution, she continued her active creative life well into the mid-1960s, and after the death of Pasternak, Akhmatova was the last remaining major link with what had been one of the great ages of Russian poetry.

Her early career was closely associated with Acmeism, a poetic movement which defined itself in opposition to Russian symbolism, stressing craftsmanship in poetry and affirming the significance of this phenomenal world in contradistinction to the abstract "Other World" of the Symbolists. Akhmatova's early work was perceived as exemplary for the new movement, and achieved a remarkable popular and critical success. The reading public welcomed the clarity, accessibility, and almost conversational style of her brief, fragile love lyrics, especially after the mystifications and abstractions of the Symbolists. The critics recognized and appreciated Akhmatova's innovations, her technical accomplishment, and the extraordinary compactness of her verse. By the publication of her fifth book in 1922, an "Akhmatova style" in Russian poetry was widely recognized.

As a matter of conscious artistic choice, Akhmatova limited her early themes in large part to love, to poetry, and to her homeland. Settings for the predominant love theme are typically drawn from what has traditionally been thought of as the woman's world: home, interiors, garden, details of decor, and dress. Simple enough in themselves, the images evolve in sum into a complex symbolic system. The otherwise spare and laconic poems are enriched, moreover, by a matrix of images drawn from Russia's cultural history: folk motifs, the old patriarchal life, Orthodoxy, the great cities of Russia. Related to this matrix, and just below the surface of the worldly love lyrics, are the old Orthodox themes of conscience and remorse, sin and retribution, repentance and self-abnegation. It is such themes that developed in the later major works to an extraordinary power and dignity.

Although Akhmatova maintained a remarkable stylistic consistency throughout her career, it was as early as 1924 that her beloved friend and fellow-poet Mandel'shtam noted a "sharp break" in Akhmatova's work: "The voice of self-abnegation grows stronger in Akhmatova's poetry, and at present her poetry approaches becoming one of the symbols of the greatness of Russia." Mandel'shtam's words were prophetic for Akhmatova's longer works like Requiem (Requiem), Poema bez geroia (Poem Without a Hero), and the "Northern Elegies."

In the dark years of official disfavour and persecution that followed her former husband's execution, Akhmatova continued to write, but except for a brief respite during World War II she was not permitted to publish any original poetry. Many of her poems were lost in those tragic years; during the worst of them, many were burned by the poet herself. For a long time, Akhmatova did not dare even to set new poems to paper: the more important ones were committed to memory by her friends and thus preserved.

As works from this period began to appear in the 1950s, it was clear that Akhmatova had undergone an amazing growth and development. The poet emerges as a preserver and continuator of a poetic culture older and broader than the one of her current reality. In the longer works, the poet stands also as conscience and judge for a society suffering under the cataclysms of wars and revolution. Requiem is an epic lament for a Russia in the grip of the Stalinist Terror. Poem Without a Hero is a retrospective of Akhmatova's own world from Petersburg in 1913 to the nightmare of World War II and beyond. It is her judgement on an age and also her retribution for her own suffering. By the time she added the last touches to the poem in 1962, Akhmatova had become for Russian poetry the very symbol of moral rectitude and artistic integrity in the face of intolerable personal hardship and official persecution. Along with some of the shorter poems, these masterworks stand as tribute to one of the great Russian poets of the 20th century.

—Sam Driver

See the essays on Poem Without a Hero and Requiem.

AKUTAGAWA Ryūnosuke

Born: Niihara Ryūnosuke in Tokyo, Japan, 1 March 1892; adopted by uncle and given the family name Akutagawa. Education: Educated at Tokyo Imperial University, 1913–16, degree in English. Family: Married Tsukamoto Fumi in 1918; three sons. Career: Member of literary staff, Shinshichō [New Thought Tides], university magazine, 1914, 1916–17; English teacher, Naval Engineering College, Yokosuka, 1916–19; literary staff member, Osaka Mainichi

Shimbu newspaper, 1919; travelled through China and Korea for Osaka Mainichi, March–July 1921. Addicted to opium by 1926. Died: (suicide) 24 July 1927.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

- Shū* [Selected Works], edited by Nakamura Shin'ichirō. 1928; 2 vols., 1953.
- Zenshū* [Collected Works]. 10 vols., 1934–35; 20 vols., 1954–57; 8 vols., 1964–65; 11 vols., 1967–69; 9 vols., 1971.
- Sakuhin shū* [Collection of Pieces], edited by Hori Tatsuo, Kuzumaki Yoshitoshi, and Akutagawa Hiroshi. 1949.
- Bungaku tokuhon* [Literary Reader], edited by Yoshida Seiichi. 1955.
- Ōchōmono zenshū*. 2 vols., 1960.
- Miteikō shū* [Unfinished Works], edited by Kuzumaki Yoshitoshi. 1968.
- Jihitsu miteikō zuho* [Projects for Unfinished Works in His Own Hand], edited by Tsunoda Chūzō. 1971.
- The Essential Akutagawa: Rashomon, Hell Screen, Cogwheels, A Fool's Life and Other Short Fiction*, edited by Seiji M. Lippit, 1999.

Fiction

- "Rōnen" [Old Age]. 1914.
- "Rashōmon." 1915; as "Rashomon," translated by Takashi Kojima, in Rashomon and Other Stories, 1952; also translated by Glenn W. Shaw, 1964.
- "Hana." 1916; as "The Nose," translated by Glenn W. Shaw, 1930; also translated by Dorothy Britton, 1987.
- "Imogayu." 1916; as "Yam Gruel," translated by Takashi Kojima, 1952.
- "Hankechi." 1916; as "Handkerchief," translated by Glenn W. Shaw, 1930.
- "Gesaku zammai" [A Life of Frivolous Writing]. 1917.
- "Tabako to akuma" [Tobacco and the Devil]. 1917.
- "Jigokuhen." 1918; as "Hell Screen," translated by W.H.H. Norman, in Hell Screen ("Jigokuhen") and Other Stories, 1948; translated as Hell Screen, 1987.
- "Hōkyōjin no shi." 1918; as "The Martyr," translated by Takashi Kojima, 1952.
- "Kumo no ito." 1918; as "The Spider's Thread," translated by Glenn W. Shaw, 1930; also translated by Dorothy Britton, 1987.
- "Kesa to Moritō." 1918; as "Kesa and Morito," translated by Takashi Kojima, 1952.
- "Kare no shō" [Withered Fields]. 1918.
- "Kairaiishi" [The Puppeteer]. 1919.
- "Mikan" [Tangerines]. 1919.
- "Kage dōro" [Street of Shadows]. 1920.
- "Yabu no naka." 1921; as "In a Grove," translated by Takashi Kojima, 1952.
- "Yarai no hana" [Flowers from the Night Before]. 1921.
- "Torokko." 1922; as "Flatcar," translated by Richard N. McKinnon, in The Heart Is Alone, 1957.
- "Ikkai no tsuchi." 1924; as "A Clod of Earth," translated by Richard N. McKinnon, in The Heart Is Alone, 1957.

“Daidōji shinsuke no Hansei” [The Early Life of Daidōji Shinsuke]. 1924.
 “Genkaku sanbō” [Genkaku’s Villa]. 1927.
Kappa. 1927; as Kappa, translated by Seuchi Shiojiri, 1947; also translated by Geoffrey Bownas, 1970.
Tales Grotesque and Curious, translated by Glenn W. Shaw. 1930.
Hell Screen (“Jigokuhen”) and Other Stories, translated by W.H.H. Norman. 1948.
Rashomon and Other Stories, translated by Takashi Kojima. 1952.
Japanese Short Stories, translated by Takashi Kojima. 1961; revised edition, 1962.
Exotic Japanese Stories, translated by Takashi Kojima and John McVittie. 1964.
The Spider’s Thread and Other Stories, translated by Dorothy Britton. 1987.

Verse

Kushū [Poems]. 1976.

Other

Toshishun. 1920; as Tu Tzu-chün, translated by Sasaki Takamasa, 1944; revised edition, 1951; as Tu Tze-chun, translated by Dorothy Britton, 1965.
Shina-yuki [Notes on a Chinese Journey]. 1925.
Ume, uma, uguisu [Plum, Horse, Nightingale]. 1926.
Tenkibo [Death Register]. 1926.
Bungeiteki na, amari ni bungeiteki na [Literary, All Too Literary]. 1927.
Yūwaku [Temptation] and Asakusa Kōen [Asakusa Park] (unproduced film scripts). 1927.
Shinkirō [Mirage]. 1927.
Aru ahō no isshō. 1927; as A Fool’s Life, translated by Will Petersen, 1970.
Haguruma. 1930; as Cogwheels, translated by Cid Corman, 1987.
The Three Treasures (stories for children), translated by Sasaki Takamasa. 1944; revised edition, 1951.
Shuju no kotoba (essays). 1968.
Hell Screen, Cogwheels, and A Fool’s Life, translated by Takashi Kojima, Cid Corman, Susumu Kamaike, and Will Petersen. 1987.

*

Bibliography: in Akutagawa: An Introduction by Beongcheon Yu, 1972; in The Search for Authenticity in Modern Japanese Literature by Hisaaki Yamaouchi, 1978.

Critical Studies: Akutagawa, edited and translated by Akio Inoue, 1961; “Akutagawa: The Literature of Defeatism” by T. Arima, in The Failure of Freedom, 1969; “Akutagawa and the Negative Ideal” by Howard Hibbert, in Personality in Japanese History, edited by Albert Craig and Donald Shively, 1970; Akutagawa: An Introduction by Beongcheon Yu, 1972; in Modern Japanese Writers by Makoto Ueda, 1976; “From Tale to Short Story: Akutagawa’s Toshishun and Its Chinese Origins” and “The Plot Controversy between Tanizaki and Akutagawa,” in Reality and Fiction in Modern Japanese Literature by Noriko Mizuta Lippit, 1980; “Akutagawa Ryunosuke” by Donald Keene, in Dawn to the West: Japanese Literature of the Modern Era: Fiction, 1984.

* * *

Akutagawa Ryūnosuke’s reputation as a purveyor of grotesque and exotic narratives, suggested by the titles of two collections of his stories in English, has been reinforced, not only by the film Rashōmon, which Kurosawa Akira based on two of Akutagawa’s stories—“Rashōmon” and “Yabu no naka” (“In a Grove”)—but also by reference to the facts of his often unhappy life, ending in a suicide which, committed at the early age of 35 and leaving three small boys in his wife’s care, was shocking even in a country where suicide is traditionally regarded with less dismay than in most other cultures.

However, there is more to Akutagawa’s work than the morbidity that all this may suggest. The range of his interests and of the genres he wrote in was unusually broad. His thoughtful essays on the literature of East and West from which he drew general inspiration and specific ideas and images; his stories for children; his reflections on his journey through China and Korea in 1921—none of these deserves to be overshadowed, as they often have been, either by the more popular stories or by “Haguruma” (“Cogwheels”), “Aru ahō no isshō” (“A Fool’s Life”), and the other harrowing autobiographical texts of his final months. Nor are the stories as simple as the conventional labels would indicate. The “grotesque” stories are vivid explorations of extreme situations and their psychological effects, rather than merely exercises in making the reader shudder. Yoshihide in “Jigokuhen” (“Hell Screen”), continuing painting the fires of Hell even as his daughter burns, is more than just another image of the obsessive artist, though he is that too. He is also a father maddened by grief, whose predicament is so convincingly evoked that the horror of the situation comes to seem understandable. Rashōmon stands out among all the many Japanese fictions about Kyoto as a depiction of the ancient capital at its lowest ebb, desolated by war and deserted by most of its population, with a resonance which the course of Japan’s history since Akutagawa’s death has accidentally enhanced. As for his “exotic” stories, such as “Kumo no ito” (“The Spider’s Thread”), based on Buddhist eschatology, or “Kare no shō” [Withered Fields], depicting the disciples of the 17th-century poet Bashō, these reflect the depth of his knowledge of history and of religion, though it should be stressed that he was neither didactic nor romantic about either of these interests. The best of the many stories which fit neither of these all-too-convenient labels is perhaps “Mikan” [Tangerines], a deft exercise in social observation and psychological insight, in which one simple action transforms the narrator’s view of the apparently stupid girl sharing his train compartment.

But the masterpiece among Akutagawa’s fictions is the novella Kappa, which transcends all labels. There are obvious comparisons to be made between its hero’s journey to the land of the kappa, the legendary sprites or gnomes that live in Japanese rivers, and the travels of Jonathan Swift’s character Lemuel Gulliver. Both are presented in first-person narratives which use imaginary countries to imply critical observations of the authors’ own societies; both travelers eventually overcome their initial confusion and mystification about the strange creatures they observe to conclude that human beings are in many ways even stranger. Yet the differences are also telling. Gulliver visits several different societies, takes part in their activities as far as he can, and returns home at last wiser, perhaps more cynical. Akutagawa’s hero, a patient in a mental hospital rather than a prosperous sea-captain, is a passive observer of only one society, which turns out to be all too much like his own, and what he learns from the final poem of his dead kappa friend Tok supplies a kind of wisdom he would rather not have had. It is as though the misanthropy which marks Gulliver's visit to the land of the Houyhnhnms, the wise and virtuous talking horses, had been extended to a general revulsion from human and non-human creatures alike, since all alike lack wisdom and virtue. For Gulliver, if not perhaps for himself, Swift the Christian was able to find solace and a kind of resolution; Akutagawa, who killed himself some months after finishing Kappa, was at the end of his tether. Thus the difficulties that Kappa presents, for both Japanese and non-Japanese readers, are not so much stylistic or intellectual—it is a deceptively simple tale, simply told—as emotional. Without any overt use of horrific imagery its cumulative effect is nonetheless not for the squeamish.

In the end, then, Akutagawa's enduring position as one of the most popular and influential of modern Japanese writers rests on the sheer variety of his subject matter, handled in a lucid and elegant prose style, particularly on his use of Chinese and Japanese themes familiar to generations of his compatriots. But the significance of his work also lies in his efforts to assimilate the impact of Western technology, values, and, not least, literary forms. Before him Natsume Sōseki, of whom Akutagawa considered himself a disciple, had made his own peace between his heritage as a scholar of Chinese traditions and his career as an English teacher and newspaper contributor (jobs which did not exist for earlier Japanese writers, and which Akutagawa also took). In later years Tanizaki Junichirō, with whom he debated literary principles in Bungeiteki na, amari ni bungeiteki na [Literary, All Too Literary], would embrace in turn extreme "Westernization" and the revival of native tradition, finding means of self-expression within both, at least partly by inheriting and extending Akutagawa's tendencies toward grotesquerie. It is a matter for great regret that Akutagawa's frequently expressed self-disgust should have overwhelmed the intelligence and passion that are the mark of almost all his writings.

—Patrick Heenan

ALAIN-FOURNIER

Born: Henri Alban Fournier in La Chapelle d'Angillon, France, 3 October 1886. Education: Educated at the Lycée Voltaire, Paris, 1898–1901, lycée in Brest 1901–03; lycée in Bourges, 1902–03, baccalauréat, 1903; Lycée Lakanal, Paris. Military Service: Served in the French cavalry and infantry 1907–09, 1911, 1913–14; second lieutenant. Career: Secretary and translator for wallpaper factory, London, 1905; journalist, Paris Journal, 1910–12, L'Intransigeant, Paris, 1912–14. Tutor of French to T.S. Eliot; secretary to Claude Casimir Périer, 1912. Died: (killed in action) 22 September 1914.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

Le Grand Meaulnes. 1913; as The Wanderer, translated by Françoise Delisle, 1928; as The Lost Domain, translated by Frank Davison, 1959; also translated by Sandra Morris, 1966; as The Wanderer; or, the End of Youth, translated by Lowell Bair, 1971; as Le Grand

Meaulnes: The Land of the Lost Content, translated by Katherine Vivian, 1979.

Miracles (stories). 1924.

Colombe Blanchet (unfinished), edited by Gabriella Manca. 1990.

Other

Jacques Rivière et Alain-Fournier: Correspondance 1905–1914. 4 vols., 1926–28; revised edition, edited by Isabelle Rivière, 2 vols., 1948; also edited by Alain Rivière and P. de Gaulmun, 1991.

Lettres au Petit B. . . 1930; revised and enlarged edition, 1986.

Lettres d'Alain-Fournier à sa famille 1905–1914. 1930; enlarged editions 1940, 1949, 1986.

Alain-Fournier–Madame Simone, Correspondance 1912–1914, edited by Claude Sicard, 1992.

Charles Péguy et Alain-Fournier: Correspondance 1910–1914, edited by Yves Rey-Herme. 1973; revised edition, 1990.

Miracles: Poèmes et proses. 1986.

La Peinture, le coeur et l'esprit: Correspondance inédite (1907–1924), with André Lhote and Jacques Rivière, edited by Alain Rivière, Jean-Georges Morgenthaler, and Françoise Garcia. 1986.

Towards the Lost Domain: Letters from London 1905, edited and translated by W.J. Strachan. 1986.

Chroniques et critiques, edited by André Guyon. 1991.

"Le Corps de la Femme" et Quelques Lettres d'Alain-Fournier et Jacques Rivière by Pascale McGarry, 1998.

*

Critical Studies: Images d'Alain-Fournier, 1938, and Vie et passion d'Alain-Fournier, 1963, both by Isabelle Rivière; The Quest of Alain-Fournier, 1953, revised edition as The Land Without a Name: Alain-Fournier and His World, 1975, and Le Grand Meaulnes, 1986, both by Robert Gibson; Portrait of a Symbolist Hero: An Existential Study Based on the Work of Alain-Fournier by Robert Champigny, 1954; Alain-Fournier et le Grand Meaulnes by Jean-Marie Deletré, 1954; A Critical Commentary on Alain-Fournier's "Le Grand Meaulnes" by Marian G. Jones, 1968; Alain-Fournier: Sa vie et "Le Grand Meaulnes" by Jean Loize, 1968; Alain-Fournier: A Brief Life 1886–1914 by David Arkell, 1986; Le Grand Meaulnes: Images et documents edited by Daniel Leuwers, 1986; Alain-Fournier by Stephen Gurney, 1987; Alain-Fournier: Les Chemins d'Une Vie: Guide Biographique Illustré by Alain Rivière, 1994; L'énigme Alain-Fournier 1914–1991 by Alain Denizot and Jean Louis, 2000.

* * *

Although Alain-Fournier's fame seems likely to rest on Le Grand Meaulnes (The Wanderer), his only completed novel, he does not deserve to be seen simply as a one-book author. In his tragically foreshortened life, he produced a number of poems and short stories as well as an impressive array of letters and newspaper articles. All this material has now been published and occupies several hundred closely printed pages.

None of the 12 poems he completed was published in his lifetime. The first was written in August 1904 and the last in August 1906. They are nearly all in free verse form and bear the clear imprint of the great enthusiasms of his later teens: Francis Jammes, Jules Laforgue and Pelléas et Mélisande. Their principal interest is that they already include some of the dominant motifs of his later writing; a pair of sweethearts in a peaceful country setting, the cooing of doves, the notes of a distant piano, an elusive girl who is loved in vain. The most accomplished of these poems, “A travers les étés. . .,” written in August 1905, was the first attempt to transpose into polished form his impressions of the brief encounter two months previously with Yvonne de Quivrecourt; it was eventually to become the centrepiece of the fancy dress party at the lost domain in The Wanderer.

The first of his writings ever to appear in print was “Le Corps de la Femme,” completed in September 1907, just before the author began his two years of compulsory Army service, and published in La Grande Revue two months later. It is a series of vignettes expressing his youthful ideal of womanhood, composed as a deliberate counter to Pierre Lous, who sang the praises of the female nude and wrote captions for pornographic “art-studies.” Alain-Fournier argued that French women would remain loyal to their gender and to the traditions of their country only if they kept clothed and remained remote. His next contribution to this subject, “La Femme empoisonnée,” completed 18 months later, reveals the effect of army service on his youthful ideals: the woman of the title, once the pure girl who sets schoolboy hearts a-flutter, is now the garrison whore riddled with the pox.

From 1909 onwards, the consequences of lost innocence became Alain-Fournier’s abiding concern. While he continued to yearn for the inaccessible aristocratic Yvonne, he embarked on a series of short-lived love-affairs with lower-class women, the legacy of which was invariably self-disgust. Loss of purity, he came to believe, squandered his hopes of happiness and directly threatened the child-like sense of wonderment that he felt was crucial to his art. Variations on this theme are to be found in the short stories in Miracles and in the earliest attempts he made to write a novel where his version of the Land of Lost Contentment is simply called le pays sans nom (the land without a name): in The Wanderer, finally completed in 1913 after all manner of false starts, this becomes the “Lost Domain” which Meaulnes is convinced he has no right to re-enter because he is no longer innocent. The theme was also to have been of central importance to Alain-Fournier’s second novel, Colombe Blanchet, only a few fragments of which were ever written. Set like all his fiction against a rural background, its characters were to have been young schoolteachers rather than schoolboys in their teens. The projected epigraph was a quotation from the Imitation of Christ: “I seek a pure heart and there I will take my rest.”

While Alain-Fournier’s poetry and fiction remain deeply rooted in his rural past, his prolific correspondence and numerous newspaper articles have a spectacularly wider range. The first of his published letters, written to his parents in 1898, lists his examination successes at the end of his first term at his Paris lycée; the last, sent to his beloved sister in September 1914, is from the battlefield of the Marne. Between these two dates, he wrote scores of letters, many positively voluminous, to his closest relatives, to school-friends, and eventually, as he began to make his way in the literary world, to such fellow-writers as Gide, Jacques Copeau, Jammes, and T.S. Eliot, who was, for a brief while in 1910–11, his private pupil. By some way the most important correspondence is that with Jacques Rivière, his closest friend and eventually his brother-in-law. Circumstances separated them for four years and they exchanged long letters in which they described and analyzed for each other their evolving thoughts and feelings and their impressions of the world around them. Alain-Fournier builds up a detailed picture of the London scene in 1905 and records vivid impressions of his army service which played so significant a part in both his sentimental education and his literary apprenticeship. Especially revealing is the record of their latest discoveries in the worlds of literature, music, and painting, where they respond with infectious enthusiasm yet analyze and evaluate with admirable perceptiveness.

Their appetite remained insatiable to the end. While Rivière went on to become secretary then editor-in-chief of La Nouvelle Revue Française, Alain-Fournier became a literary critic and gossip-columnist for a variety of newspapers and journals. By its very nature, much of this work was ephemeral, but it remains impressive for its wealth of judicious comment and the sheer breadth of its range. Taken together with his many letters, it constitutes an invaluable chronicle of that inordinately rich decade in the cultural life of Paris which preceded World War I.

—Robert Gibson

See the essay on The Wanderer.

ALBERTI, Rafael (Merello)

Born: Puerto de Santa María, near Cádiz, Spain, 16 December 1902. Education: Educated at the Jesuit Colegio de San Luis Gonzaga, Puerto de Santa María, 1912–17; studied painting in Madrid, 1917, and lived at the Residencia de Estudiantes. Family: Married María Teresa León c. 1930; one daughter. Career: Worked as an impressionist and cubist painter until 1923; suffered from tuberculosis, 1923–24; co-founder, with his wife, Octubre magazine, 1934; director, Museo Romántico, Madrid, from 1936; co-founder and co-director, El Mono Azul, 1936–38; supported Republican government during Spanish Civil War (1936–39); co-founder, 1936, then secretary, Alliance of Anti-Fascist Intellectuals; subsequently joined the Communist Party; after the War, went into self-imposed exile: in Paris, 1939–40, Buenos Aires, 1940–63, and Rome, 1963–77; returned to Spain, 1977; elected deputy for the province of Cádiz, 1977. Lives in Barcelona. Awards: National literature prize, 1925; Lenin prize, 1965; Etna-Taormina prize, 1975; Strega prize, 1976; Kristo Botev de Bulgaria prize, 1980; National Theatre prize, 1981; Pedro Salinas prize, 1981; Cervantes prize, 1983. Honorary doctorates: University of Toulouse, 1982; University of Cádiz, 1985. Commandeur de l’Ordre des Arts et des Lettres (France), 1982. Died: 28 October 1999, Puerto de Santa María, Spain.

PUBLICATIONS

Verse

Marinero en tierra. 1925; edited by José Luis Tejada, 1987.

La amante: Canciones. 1926.

El alba del alhelí. 1927.

Sobre los ángeles. 1929; as Concerning the Angels, translated by Geoffrey Connell, 1967.

Cal y canto. 1929.

Consignas. 1933.

- Un fantasma recorre Europa*. 1933; as A Spectre Is Haunting Europe: Poems of Revolutionary Spain, translated by Ira Jan Wallach and Angel Flores, 1936.
- Poesía 1924–1930*. 1934.
- Verte y no verte*. 1934.
- 13 bandas y 48 estrellas*. 1936.
- Poesía 1924–1937*. 1938.
- Poesía 1924–1938*. 1940.
- Entre el clavel y la espada 1939–1940*. 1941.
- Vida bilingüe de un refugiado español en Francia*. 1942.
- Antología poética 1924–1940*. 1942.
- Pleamar 1942–1944*. 1944.
- Selected Poems*, translated by Lloyd Mallan. 1944.
- A la pintura: Cantata de la línea y del color*. 1945; revised editions, 1948 and 1953; as A la pintura, translated by Ben Belitt, 1972.
- Antología poética 1924–1944*. 1945; revised edition, 1959.
- Poesía 1924–1944*. 1946.
- El ceñidor de Venus desceñido*. 1947.
- Coplas de Juan Panadero (Libro I)*. 1949.
- Buenos Aires en tinta china*, edited by Attilio Rossi. 1951.
- Retornos de lo vivo lejano 1948–1952*. 1952; revised edition, 1972.
- Ora marítima*. 1953.
- Baladas y canciones del Paraná*. 1954.
- Diez liricografías*. 1954.
- María Carmen Portela*. 1956.
- Sonríe China*, with María Teresa León, illustrated by Alberti. 1958.
- Cal y canto; Sobre los ángeles; Sermones y moradas*. 1959.
- El otoño otra vez*. 1960.
- Los viejos olivos*. 1960.
- Poesías completas*. 1961.
- Diez sonetos romanos*. 1964.
- Abierto a todas horas 1960–1963*. 1964.
- El poeta en la calle: Poesía civil 1931–1965*. 1966.
- Selected Poems*, edited and translated by Ben Belitt. 1966.
- Poemas de amor*. 1967.
- Balada de la bicicleta con alas*. 1967.
- Roma, peligro para caminantes 1964–1967*. 1968.
- Libro del mar*, edited by Aitana Alberti. 1968.
- Poesía anteriores a Marinero en tierra 1920–1923*. 1969.
- Los ocho nombres de Picasso, y No digo más que lo que no digo 1966–1970*. 1970; Los ochos nombres de Picasso as The Eight Names of Picasso, translated by Gabriel Berns and David Shapiro, 1992.
- Canciones del alto valle del Aniene, y otros versos y prosas 1967–1972*. 1972.
- Poesía 1924–1967*, edited by Aitana Alberti. 1972.
- The Owl's Insomnia: Poems* (selection), edited and translated by Mark Strand. 1973.
- Poemas del destierro y de la espera*, edited by J. Corredor-Matheos. 1976.
- Poesía*. 1976.
- Coplas de Juan Panadero 1949–1977; Vida bilingüe de un refugiado español en Francia 1939–1940*. 1977; Coplas de Juan Panadero as Poética de Juan Panadero, 1987.
- Poesía 1924–1977*. 1977.
- Sobre los ángeles; Sermones y morales; Yo era tonto y lo que he visto ha hecho dos tontos*. 1977.
- Poemas anteriores a Marinero en tierra; Marinero en tierra; La amante; Dos estampidas reales; El alba del ahelí*. 1978.
- Los cinco destacagados*. 1978.
- Signos del día; La primavera de los muebles*. 1978.
- El matador: Poemas escénicos 1961–1965*. 1979.
- Fustigada luz (1972–1978)*. 1980.
- Canto de siempre*. 1980.
- 101 sonetos (1924–1975)*. 1980.
- Antología*, edited by Jerónimo Pablo González Martín. 1980.
- The Other Shore: 100 Poems*, edited by Kosrof Chantikian, translated by José A. Elgorriaga and Paul Martin. 1981.
- Versos sueltos de cada día: Primer y segundo cuadernos chinos (1979–1982)*. 1982.
- X a X: Una correspondencia en verso (inedita) Roma—Madrid*, with José Bergamín. 1982.
- Robert Motherwell, el Negro*, illustrated by Robert Motherwell. 1983.
- Antología poética*, edited by Natalia Calamañ. 1983.
- Todo el mar*. 1986.
- Los hijos del drago, y otros poemas*. 1986.
- Golfo de sombras*. 1986.
- Retornos de un isla dichosa, y otros poemas*. 1987.
- Cuatro canciones*. 1987.
- Accidente: Poemas del hospital*. 1987.
- Canciones para Altair*. 1989.
- Antología comentada*, edited by María Asunción Mateo. 2 vols., 1990.
- Noventa poemas*. 1992.

Plays

- El hombre deshabitado* (produced 1931). 1930; edited by Gregorio Torres Nebrera, with Noche de guerra en el Museo del Prado, 1991.
- Santa Casilda* (produced 1931).
- Fermín Galán* (produced 1931). 1931.
- La pájara pinta* (produced 1931?). 1964; in Lope de Vega y la poesía contemporánea, 1964.
- Bazar de la providencia* (produced 1934). In Dos farsas revolucionarios, 1934.
- Dos farsas revolucionarios: Bazar de la providencia (negocio); Farsa de los Reyes Magos*. 1934.
- El enamorado y la muerte* (produced 1936). In Revista de Occidente, 128, 1973.
- Los salvadores de España* (produced 1936). In Cuadernos Hispanoamericanos, 485–486, 1990.
- De un momento a otro* (produced 1938). 1937; edited by Gregorio Torres Nebrera, with El adefesio, 1992.
- Radio Sevilla* (produced 1937). In Teatro de urgencia, 1938.
- Numancia*, from the play by Cervantes (produced 1937; revised version produced 1943). 1937; as La destrucción de Numancia, 1975.
- Cantata de los héroes y la fraternidad de los pueblos* (produced 1938). 1938.
- El ladrón de niños*, from a play by Jules Supervielle (produced 1943).
- El adefesio* (produced 1944). 1944; edited by Gregorio Torres Nebrera, with De un momento a otro, 1992.
- Farsa del licenciado Pathelin*, from an anonymous French play (produced 1944). 1970.
- El trébol florido* (produced 1966). In Teatro, 1950.

Teatro (includes El hombre deshabitado; El trébol florido; La gallarda). 1950; enlarged edition (includes El adefesio), 1959.
Noche de guerra en el Museo del Prado (produced 1975). 1956; edited by Gregorio Torres Nebrera, with El hombre deshabitado, 1991; as Night and War in the Prado Museum, translated by Lemuel Johnson, in Modern Spanish Theatre, edited by Michael Benedikt and George E. Wellwarth, 1968.
Las picardías de Scapin, from a play by Molière (produced 1958).
El testamento de la rosa (produced 1962). In Poemas escénicos, 1962.
Poemas escénicos (dramatic poems). 1962.
La Lozana andaluza, from a work by Francisco Delicado (produced 1980). In Teatro 2, 1964.
Teatro 2 (includes La Lozana andaluza; De un momento a otro; Noche de guerra en el Museo del Prado). 1964.
El despertar a quien duerme, from a play by Lope de Vega (produced 1978). In Primer Acto, 178, 1975.

Screenplay: La dama duende, with María Teresa León, 1944.

Fiction

Selecciones: Relatos y prosa. 1980.
Prosas. 1980.
Prosas Encontradas, compilation and prologue by Robert Marrast, 2000.

Other

La poesía popular en la lírica española contemporánea. 1933.
Nuestra diaria palabra. 1936.
Defensa de Catalunya. 1937.
El poeta en la España de 1931. 1942.
La arboleda perdida, y otras prosas. 1942; revised edition, 1959; as The Lost Grove: Autobiography of a Spanish Poet in Exile, edited and translated by Gabriel Berns, 1976.
Eh, los toros!, illustrated by Luis Seoane. 1942.
Imagen primera de Rafael Alberti (1940–1944). 1945.
Suma taurina: Verso, prosa, teatro, illustrated by Alberti, edited by Rafael Montesinos. 1963.
Lope de Vega y la poesía contemporánea (includes the play La pájara pinta). 1964.
Prosas encontradas 1924–1942, edited by Robert Marrast. 1970.
A Year of Picasso's Paintings. 1971.
Obras completas. 7 vols., 1972–88.
Picasso, el rayo que no cesa. 1975.
Maravillas con variaciones acrósticas en el jardín de Miró. 1975.
Teatro de agitación política, with others. 1976.
Cuaderno de Rute (1925): Un libro inédito. 1977.
Conversaciones con Rafael Alberti, with José Miguel Velloso. 1977.
Picasso (catalogue), with others. 1977.
El poeta en la calle; De un momento a otro; Vida bilingüe de un refugiado español en Francia (poetry and plays). 1978.
Lo que conté y dije de Picasso. 1981.
Aire, que me lleva el aire (for children). 1981.
Federico García Lorca, poeta y amigo. 1984.
Otra Andalucía, with Julio Anguita. 1986.
A una verdad: Luis Cernuda, with others. 1988.
Obra completa, edited by Luis García Montero. 7 vols., 1988–.
La palabra y el signo. 1989.

The Bullfighter Sánchez Mejías as Elegized by Lorca, Alberti, and Diego, with verse translations and afterword by Carl W. Cobb, 1993.
 Editor, Églogas y fábulas castellanas. 2 vols., 1944.
 Editor, Romancero general de la guerra española. 1944.
 Editor, with Guillermo de Torre, Antología poética 1918–1936, by Federico García Lorca. 1957.
 Editor, Poesías, by Lope de Vega. 1965.
 Editor, Antología poética: Antonio Machado, Juan Ramón Jiménez, Federico García Lorca. 1970.
 Editor, Antología poética, by Pablo Neruda. 1982.
 Editor and Translator, Doinas y baladas populares rumanas. 1964.
 Translator, Visages, by Gloria Alcorta. 1951.
 Translator, Homenaje a la pintura, by Robert Motherwell. 1991.

*

Critical Studies: Rafael Alberti's Sobre los ángeles: Four Major Themes by Cyril Brian Morris, 1966; El mundo poético de Rafael Alberti by Solita Salinas de Marichal, 1968; Rafael Alberti by Ignacio Delogue, 1972; Rafael Alberti: Prosas encontradas 1924–1942 by Robert Marrast, 1973 (second edition); Sobre Alberti by Manuel Bayo, 1975; Rafael Alberti edited by Manuel Durán Gili, 1975; The Theatre of Rafael Alberti by Louise B. Popkin, 1975; La poesía de Rafael Alberti by Ricardo Senabre, 1977; Rafael Alberti by Jerónimo Pablo González Martín, 1978; The Poetry of Rafael Alberti: A Visual Approach by Robert C. Manteiga, 1978; El dilema de la nostalgia en la poesía de Rafael Alberti by Barbara Dale May, 1978; Alberti issue of Malahat Review, July 1978; Revolution and Tradition: The Poetry of Rafael Alberti by Pieter Wesseling, 1981; El teatro de Rafael Alberti by Giorgio Torres Nebrera, 1982; Rafael Alberti: El escritor y la crítica by Manuel Durán, 1984; La poesía de Rafael Alberti by Antonio Jimenez Millan, 1984; Dramatists in Perspective: Spanish Theatre in the Twentieth Century by Gwynne Edwards, 1985; Multiple Spaces: The Poetry of Rafael Alberti by Salvador Jiménez Fajardo, 1985; Rafael Alberti: Poesía del destierro by Concha Argente del Castillo, 1986; Rafael Alberti's Poetry of the Thirties: The Poet's Public Voice by Judith Nantell, 1986; Antología comentada de Rafael Alberti edited by María Asunción Mateo, 2 vols., 1990; Inquietud y nostalgia: La poesía de Rafael Alberti by Kurt Spang, 1990; Rafael Alberti: Arte y poesía de vanguardia by Pedro Guerrero Ruiz, 1991; Lorca, Alberti, and the Theater of Popular Poetry by Sandra Robertson, 1992; The Crucified Mind: Rafael Alberti and the Surrealist Ethos in Spain by Robert Harvard, 2001.

* * *

Rafael Alberti's theatre and poetry can be separated only with difficulty, for numerous areas of thematic and stylistic similarity exist. Not only does his first attempt at theatre, La pájara pinta [The Painted Bird], written in the guiñolesque (puppet) tradition, parallel early poetic works, but the surrealism of his poetry collection Sobre los ángeles (Concerning the Angels), echoes in the imagery of his play of the same period, El hombre deshabitado [The Uninhabited Man]. Several of his Civil War plays repeat the titles and themes of poetry collections produced during the conflict (1936–39), while the later play Noche de guerra en el Museo del Prado (Night and War in the Prado Museum) connects directly to A la pintura [To Painting], poetry written in exile and devoted to his cherished avocation.

Alberti is considered primarily a poet, and his fame rests on his lyrics; yet his plays have been performed by numerous troupes since Franco's death: he is not an insignificant dramatist. His plays are largely historical, and their political—even propagandist—intent dominates his “urgent theatre” (including Bazar de la providencia [Bazaar of Providence], Farsa de los Reyes Magos [Farce of the Three Kings], Los salvadores de España [Saviours of Spain], Radio Sevilla [Radio Seville], and Cantata de los héroes y de la fraternidad de los pueblos [Song of Heroes and Fraternity Among Peoples]). Because the propagandist content, resulting from war-time urgency, is less overt in Night and War in the Prado Museum, this play (influenced by Bertolt Brecht both in its staging conventions—it has a play within the play—and its intent) exemplifies his best political theatre. Recalling the Nationalist bombardment of Madrid, the play depicts efforts of Republican militia and partisans to save national treasures. Characters from Goya's paintings are brought to life to join contemporary patriots in their struggle. Political ideology is essentially absent in earlier plays such as Fermín Galán, and is not the major thrust of the plays De un momento a otro [From One Moment to the Next], El trébol florido [The Flowering Clover], La gallarda [The Graceful Woman], or El adefesio [The Ridiculous Gentleman]. La Lozana andaluza [The Attractive Andalusian Woman] is based on the 1528 picaresque novel by Francisco Delicado.

As one of the more versatile and prolific poets of the Generation of 1927 (which included equally famous contemporaries such as Federico García Lorca, Vicente Aleixandre, and Luis Cernuda), Alberti evolves similarly to those colleagues who survived the Civil War, from early post-romanticism through the baroque, neo-Gongorine mode for which the generation first became known, through subsequent vanguardist experimentation, and then to war-influenced political commitment and engagement. Despite relatively facile initial success with his first three collections, Marinero en tierra [Landlocked Sailor], La amante [The Lover], and El alba del alhelí [Dawn of the Gillyflower], rooted in Spain's popular oral balladry tradition, Alberti consciously incorporated generational innovations in his own verse. Thus a more stylized, baroque poetry appears in Cal y canto [White-wash and Song], whose later poems reflect influences of the Ultraist movement. Concerning the Angels (written during a personal crisis) is Alberti's most surrealist work.

The engagé ideological nature of his 1930s poetry intensifies from the transitional civil elegy, “Con los zapatos puestos tengo que morir” [I Must Die with My Shoes On] through Consignas [Watchword], Un fantasma recorre Europa (A Spectre Is Haunting Europe), and 13 bandas y 48 estrellas [13 Bars and 48 Stripes], culminating in El poeta en la calle [The Poet in the Street], “omances de la guerra de España” [Spanish War Ballads], and De un momento a otro [From One Moment to the Next]. Reflections of exile appear in Vida bilingüe de un refugiado español en Francia [The Bilingual Life of a Spanish Refugee in France] and collections written in Argentina: Entre el clavel y la espada [Between the Carnation and the Sword]; Pleamar [High Tide]; Retornos de lo vivo lejano [Songs of a Vivid Past], re-creating some especially significant moments in the poet's life; Buenos Aires en tinta china [Buenos Aires in Indian Ink]; and “Poemas de Punta del Este” [Poems from Punta del Este]. Alberti's leftist political connections motivate a continuing vein of Marxist ideology in much of his exile poetry, notably in Coplas de Juan Panadero [Ditties of Juan the Baker] and “La primavera de los pueblos” [Springtime of the Peoples]. Sonríe China [China Smiles], done in collaboration with his wife, María Teresa León, followed a visit to China.

Alberti's best poetry from Argentina celebrates his paternity and love for his daughter, born in exile, in Pleamar, and Baladas y canciones del Paraná [Songs and Ballads of the Paraná River]. In Italy, Alberti's political fervour slowly waned, and other emphases appear in Poemas de amor [Love Poems], Roma, peligro para caminantes [Rome, Danger for Pedestrians], Los ocho nombres de Picasso (The Eight Names of Picasso), and Canciones del alto valle del Aniene [Songs of the Upper Aniene Valley]. El matador: Poemas escénicos [The Matador: Scenic Poems] reveals that the bullfight continues to fascinate Alberti just as when he wrote his early elegy on the death of Ignacio Sánchez Mejías, “Verte y no verte” [To See You and Not See You].

The partisan nature of Alberti's political poetry makes it difficult to read or judge impartially, and certain critics have dismissed it as tendentious and overly propagandist. Some of his verse is excessively allegorical, yet it contains unique rhetorical and metrical innovations and many expressive images, particularly in Entre el clavel y la espada, his most creative political expression. The best-known, most frequently studied and anthologized of Alberti's poems are in his first four collections. The childlike perspective and notes of fantasy with which the poet re-creates his native fishing village in Marinero en tierra make it a mythical paradise, and here, as in La amante, the poet's great love for the sea imbues his lines with lyric passion.

Nevertheless, the darkly serious, subjective poems of Concerning the Angels are considered by many his greatest achievement. Through contrasts (of good and evil, light and dark) and antithetical images, Alberti portrays his emotional crisis in an oneiric landscape of air and fire. Another critical favourite, El alba del alhelí, recreates popular customs, myths, and beliefs of Andalusia, expressing rural traditions, joys, and sufferings through popular metric forms drawn from oral culture. The unpretentious early works have proven to be the most widely known and enduring aspects of Alberti's work.

—Janet Pérez

ÂL-E AHMAD, Jalâl

Born: Tehran, February 1923. Education: Finished his preliminary and high education in Tehran (Dâr al-Fonûn); Faculty of Letters, Theran Teachers' College, 1943–1946. Family: Married the writer Sîmîn Dâneshtar in 1950. Career: Studied English and French on his own and used his competence in translating major western works into Persian and carrying out research in sociology, anthropology and dialectology of some remote areas of Iran, 1956–1960. Worked as a teacher throughout his life; was actively involved in the Tûdeh (“People”), the local communist party, and was editor of its publications, Mardom and Rahbar, 1944–1947; Joined in the founding of the Hezb-e zahmatkeshân (“Toilers' Party”), 1950; supported the nationalist government of Muhammad Mosaddeq, 1951–1953; served as unofficial spokesman for the 1950s and 1960s dissident intelligentsia, and edited its two publications, Nîrû-ye sevvom (“Third force”) and Elm o zendegî (“Science and life”); composed many travel journals and village studies; his Chahâr Ka'be (“Four Ka'bas”), including accounts of his journeys to the U.S.S.R., United States.,

Europe, and Israel, remains unpublished; in the last part of life, he tried to restore a nationalist government that would return Iran to independence. Died: In a village in Gilan region, 9 September 1969; according to his wife, poisoned by Shah's agents. He was buried near the Fîrûzâbâdî mosque at Shahr-e Rey, Tehran.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections of Short Stories

Dîd o bâzdîd. 1945.
Az ranj ke mîbarîm. 1947.
Se-târ. 1948; translated in Iranian Society: An Anthology of Writings by Jalal Al-e Ahmad, edited by Michael C. Hillman, 1982.
Zan-e ziyâdî. 1952.
Panj dastân. 1974.

Novels and Novelettes

Sargozâsht-e kandûhâ. 1956.
Modîr-e madrase. 1958; as The School Principal, translated by John Newton, 1974.
Nûn wa'l-qalam. 1961; as By the Pen, translated by M. R. Ghanooparvar, 1988.
Sang-î bar gûr-î. 1964; as A Gravestone, 1991.
Nefrîn-e zamîn. 1967.

Essays

Haft maqâle. 1955.
Se maqâle-ye dîgar. 1960.
Gharbzadegî. 1960; as Plagued by the West, translated by Paul Sprachman, 1982; as Weststruckness, translated by John Green and Ahmad Alizadeh, 1982 (2nd ed. 1997); as Occidentosis: A Plague from the West, translated by R. Campbell, 1984.
Arziyâbî-e shetâbzâde. 1964.
Yek châh va do châle va masalan sarh-e ahwâlât. 1969.
Dar khedmat va khiyânât-e roushanfekrân. 1964–68.
Kârnâme-ye se sâle. 1968.
Esrâ'îl 'âmel-e emperyâlîsm. 1978.

Other

Khas-î dar mîqât. 1966.
Ourazân. 1956.
Tât-neshînhâ-ye bolûk-e Zahrâ. 1958.
Dorr-e ya'îm-e Khalîj: Jazîre-ye Khârg. 1960.
 Translator, Qomârbâz (Igrok), by Fëdor Dostoevskij, from French.
 Translator, Bigâne (L'Étranger), by Albert Camus; with A. Khebrâzâde.
 Translator, Sû'e tafâhom (Le Malentendu), by Albert Camus.
 Translator, Bâzgasht az Shouravî (Retour d'U.R.S.S.), by A. Gide.
 Translator, Mâ'edahâ-ye zamînû (Les nourritures terrestres), by A. Gide, with P. Dâryûsh.
 Translator, Dasthâ-ye âlûde (Les mains sales), by J. P. Sartre.
 Translator, 'Obûr az khatt (Über die Linie), by Ernst Jünger, with M. Hûman. 1966.
 Translator, Kargadan (Le rhinoceros), by E. Ionesco.

Translator, Teshnegî o gorosnegî (La soif et la faim), by E. Ionesco; completed by M. Hezârkhânî. 1976.

*

Critical Studies: Human Values in the Works of Two Persian Writers, in Correspondence d'Orient, by G. R. Sabri-Tabrizi, 1970; The Modern Literary Idiom, in Iran Faces the Seventies, by E. Yarshater, 1971; Âl-e Ahmad Fictional Legacy, in Iranian Studies, 9/4, by M. Hillman, 1976; Âl-e Ahmad, Jalâl, in Encyclopædia Iranica, by J. W. Clinton, 1985. Gecshichte und Entwicklung der modern persischen Literatur, 1964; Jalâl Âl-e Ahmad, écrivain iranien d'aujourd'hui, in Mélanges de l'Institut dominicain d'U Caire, by G. Jourdain Monnot, 1967. Qesse-nevîsî, by R. Barâhenî, 1969.

* * *

Jalâl Âl-e Ahmad is one of the most eminent figures of contemporary Persian literature, basically a fiction writer, but nevertheless an equally important ideologue of modern Iran. Being very talented, energetic, and passionately interested in the fate of his nation's culture and political future, he played a decisive role in shaping the mind and actions of an entire generation of young intellectuals. In many respects he is a literary precursor of Dr. 'Alî Sharî'atî who couldn't surpass Âl-e Ahmad in literary excellence.

Jalâl Âl-e Ahmad's typical telegraphic prose, revealing both arrogance and impatience even in syntax and rhythm, became a pattern for many Iranian young aspiring writers. He impressed the audience as one who knew the troubles and had the remedy for the problems of his country; critics termed him the "wide-awake conscience" of Iran.

Âl-e Ahmad published writings fill more than twenty volumes and include, not to mention the works of fiction for which he is most admired, travel journals, translations, village studies, essays, and reviews. His first published story, Ziyârat [The Pilgrimage], appeared in the March 21st (nourûz, the Iranian New Year's Day) issue of Sokhan in 1945. An immediate critical success, it was republished at the end of the same year in his first published collection of stories, Dîd o bâzdîd [The Exchange of Visits]. His anti-religious stance in those stories marked his complete break with Islam and his family background (he belonged to a family of strong religious traditions). Three more collections of stories followed in the next seven years: Az ranj ke mîbarîm [From Our Suffering], Se-târ [The Sitar] and Zan-e ziyâdî [The Superfluous Woman], respectively in 1947, 1948, and 1952. His stories are detailed sketches from the ordinary events of daily life; one of his critics likens him to a photographer who can convey the whole complex emotional universe of ordinary people by the careful arrangement of ordinary snapshots (B. Alavi, Gecshichte, pp.221–23). Âl-e Ahmad turned to the composition of longer works in 1954, and in 1958 published his most celebrated novel, Modîr-e madrase [The School Principal]; these novelettes have more extended plots than the earlier short stories, but share with them a taste for incident, an emphasis on colloquial and idiomatic language, and an understated style of characterisation of the psychological and emotional depths of the individuals portrayed. The themes of Âl-e Ahmad fiction are diverse; prominent among them, however, are the superstitious beliefs of the common people, recorded in people's own language; excess of the clergy in their exploitation of the visible advantages of religion; and intrusion of western ideas into Iranian traditional ideology.

But the fame of Al-e Ahmad increased considerably with his most widely known work of non-fiction, Gharbzadegi (a Persian compound word whose meaning is approximately “weststruckness” or “occidentosis”). This work has more the quality of polemic than of reasoned historical argument, and gives voice to the widespread belief that Iranian culture is endangered by the forces for change now at work within it. The importance of Āl-e Ahmad’s work was rediscovered by the Islamic intelligentsia during the 1979 Revolution when his anthropological research in remote areas of rural Iran helped to bolster his re-evaluation of Islam.

The two elements of Jalāl Āl-e Ahmad’s work that appear to have made the greatest impression on his younger contemporaries are his deep sense of social commitment and his prose style. He was well read in such modern French writers as Camus, Sartre and Céline, but was also a careful student of Persian literature, both classical and modern. From this various sources he elaborated a powerful and idiomatic style, that is a vivid representation of colloquial speech and yet as richly suggestive as classical prose.

See the essay on Plagued by the West.

ALEIXANDRE (MERLO), Vicente

Born: Seville, Spain, 26 April 1898. Family moved to Malaga, 1900, and to Madrid, 1909. Education: Educated at the Colegio Teresiano, Madrid, 1909–13; entered Central School of Commerce and the University of Madrid (Faculty of Law), 1914, licence in law and diploma in business administration, both 1919. Career: Lecturer in mercantile law, Central School of Commerce, Madrid, 1919–22; worked for Andalusian Railroads, 1921–25; had to retire on grounds of ill health, 1925; staff member, La Semana Financiera magazine; full-time writer from 1925; suffered serious illness, 1936–39. Awards: National literature prize, 1933; Spanish Academy prize, 1934; Critics prize, 1963, 1969, 1975; Nobel prize for literature, 1977. Honorary fellow, Professors of Spanish Association (USA). Grand Cross of Order of Carlos III, 1977. Member: Royal Spanish Academy, 1949, Hispanic Society of America, and Monde Latin Academy, Paris. Corresponding member, Arts Academy, Malaga, and Sciences and Arts Academy, Puerto Rico. Died: 13 December 1984.

PUBLICATIONS

Verse

Ámbito. 1928.
Espadas como labios. 1932; edited by José Luis Cano, with La destrucción o el amor, 1972.
Pasión de la tierra. 1935; revised edition, 1946; edited by Luis Antonio de Villena, 1976, and by Gabriele Morelli, 1987.
La destrucción o el amor. 1935; edited by Jose Luis Cano, with Espadas como labios, 1972; as Destruction of Love, in Destruction of Love and Other Poems, translated by S. Kessler, 1977.
Sombra del paraíso. 1944; edited by Leopoldo de Luis, 1976; selection as Poemas paradisiacos, 1952, edited by Jose Luis Cano, 1977; as Shadow of Paradise, translated by Hugh A. Harter (bilingual edition), 1987.

Mundo a solas 1934–1936. 1950.
Nacimiento último. 1953.
Historia del corazón. 1954.
Mis poemas mejores. 1956; revised editions, 1966, 1968, 1976.
Poesías completas. 1960.
Poemas amorosos. 1960; revised edition, 1970.
Antigua casa madrileña. 1961.
Picasso, edited by A. Caffarena Such. 1961.
En un vasto dominio. 1962.
Presencias. 1965.
Retratos con nombre. 1965.
Dos vidas. 1967.
Poemas de la consumación. 1968.
Poemas varios. 1968.
Poesía surrealista. 1971.
Antología del mar y la noche, edited by J. Lostale. 1971.
Sonido de la guerra. 1972.
Arguijo: Obra poética. 1972.
Diálogos del conocimiento. 1974.
Antología total, edited by Pere Gimferrer. 1975.
Antología poética, edited by Leopoldo de Luis. 1977.
Twenty Poems (bilingual edition), translated by Robert Bly and Lewis Hyde. 1977.
A Longing for the Light: Selected Poems, edited and translated by Lewis Hyde. 1979.
The Crackling Sun: Selected Poems, translated by Louis M. Bourne. 1981.
A Bird of Paper, translated by Willis Barnstone and David Garrison. 1982.
Primeros poemas. 1985.
Nuevos poemas varios, edited by Irma Emiliozzi and Alejandro Duque Amuseo. 1987.
Vicente Aleixandre para niños, edited by Leopoldo de Luis. 1988.
En gran noche: Últimos poemas, edited by Carlos Bousoño and Alejandro Duque Amusco. 1991.

Other

En la vida del poeta: El amor y la poesía. 1950.
El niño ciego de Vázquez Díaz. 1954.
Algunos caracteres de la nueva poesía española. 1955.
Los encuentros. 1958; enlarged edition, edited by José Luis Cano, 1985.
Obras completas. 1968; revised edition, 2 vols., 1977–78.
Epistolario, edited by José Luis Cano, 1986.
Prosas recobradas, edited by Alejandro Duque Amusco. 1987.
Miré los muros: Textos inéditos y olvidados. 1991.
Antología esencial. 1993.
Album: Versos de Juventud: Vicente Aleixandre, Dámaso Alonso y Otros, edition, prologue and notes by Alenjandro Duque Amusco y María-Jesús Velo García, 1993.

*

Critical Studies: La poesía de Vicente Aleixandre by Carlos Bousoño, 1950, revised editions, 1968, 1977; Vicente Aleixandre by Leopoldo de Luis, 1970, revised edition as Vida y obra de Vicente Aleixandre, 1978; Vicente Aleixandre (in English) by Kessel Schwartz, 1970; La poesía superrealista de Vicente Aleixandre by Hernán Galilea, 1971; “The Spiritualization of Matter in the Poetry of Vicente Aleixandre” by Louis M. Bourne, in Revista de Letras, 22, 1974; Tres poetas a la luz de la metáfora: Salinas, Aleixandre y Guillén by Vicente Cabrera, 1975, and Critical Views on Vicente Aleixandre’s Poetry (includes translations) edited by Cabrera and Harriet Boyar, 1979; Vicente Aleixandre edited by José Luis Cano, 1977; Conocer: Vicente Aleixandre y su obra by Antonio Colinas, 1977; La poesía de Vicente Aleixandre (formación y evolución) by Vicente Granados, 1977; La palabra poética de Vicente Aleixandre by D. Puccini, 1979; Vicente Aleixandre: A Critical Appraisal edited by Santiago Daydí-Tolson, 1981; Vicente Aleixandre by J.O. Jiménez, 1981; Vicente Aleixandre’s Stream of Lyric Consciousness by Daniel Murphy, 2001.

* * *

Educated in strict religious private schools, Vicente Aleixandre had no contact with poetry until a chance acquaintance with the future poetry critic Dámaso Alonso, in the summer of 1917, initiated him into it, via the latter’s enthusiasm for Rubén Darío. Aleixandre read Antonio Machado and Juan Ramón Jiménez, under whose influence he wrote his first lyrics (never published). The modernist sensibility was foreign to him, but Gustavo Adolfo Bécquer and the Romantics were to be lasting influences, as were the mystic poets, especially St. John of the Cross.

Fearing an adverse reception, he kept his poetic activity secret until some poems composed in isolated convalescence in the Guadarrama Mountains were read by friends, who published them in Ortega y Gasset’s prestigious Revista de Occidente under the title “Número” [Number], reflecting the “dehumanized” vogue of poetry of the day. Aleixandre’s association with other poets of the Generation of 1927 dates from this time: friendships were initiated with Gerardo Diego, Jorge Guillén, Luis Cernuda, Federico García Lorca, and Miguel Hernández (and he had met Rafael Alberti at an art exhibition in 1922). Aleixandre participated in the group’s homage to the baroque poet Góngora in 1927, and with these colleagues he subsequently moved toward vanguardism.

His first collection, Ámbito [Ambit], like “pure poetry” of that time, sought the geometric ideal of its practitioners whose poems were conceived as polyhedrons. None the less, Ámbito was typical of Aleixandre, in its symbols of sea and night (which recur throughout his work) and in its irrational, elusive imagery. Insistent chiaroscuro and visions of cosmic love convey the poet’s attempts to fuse with the universe. The surrealist prose poems of Pasión de la tierra [Passion of the Earth] reflect Aleixandre’s discovery of Freud (he read the Spanish translation of The Interpretation of Dreams in 1928). Pasión de la tierra has been considered one of the key works of Spanish surrealism, despite the author’s denials of such descriptions. In 1971, Aleixandre published an anthology entitled Poesía superrealista, seemingly accepting the label at last. Spanish surrealism is an unorthodox variant, also called “super-realism,” “hyper-realism,” and even “neo-Romanticism.” While some critics consider it an offshoot of French surrealism, others find its origins in the painters Goya and Solana, and the “grotesque” plays (esperpentos) of Valle-Inclán. Vanguardism in Spain in the late 1920s was not exclusively surrealist, nor were there collective surrealist manifestos, although Aleixandre is reputed to have planned one together with Luis Cernuda and Emilio Prados. Irrationalism and a search for new techniques stand in lieu of common norms, formulated doctrines, and the desire to scandalize.

Like most other Spanish writers classed as surrealist (Lorca, Cernuda, Alberti), Aleixandre is unorthodox, rejecting “automatic writing,” but suppressing logical control via elimination of nexus. He employs normal punctuation in Pasión de la tierra, but not in Espadas como labios [Swords like Lips] which juxtaposes love and death, offering glimpses of an irrational, erotic pantheism in which Thanatos and Eros are interchangeable.

La destrucción o el amor (Destruction of Love), won the National literature prize in 1933, and for many represents the zenith of Aleixandre’s surrealism. Its exuberant vitalism, directly linked to his illness and successful fight for life, depicts unleashed cosmic forces in a mysterious universe, where nature is simultaneously destroyed and created, and where the inanimate triumphs over the living. Filled with images of light and darkness, the volume has an internal logic resulting from its amorous unity showing love as an all-consuming force.

The pessimistic Mundo a solas [World Alone], written shortly after the death of his mother, abounds in telluric beings and powers, expressing a passionate striving towards love, but not exempt from cruelty and morbidity. Sombra del paraíso (Shadow of Paradise), a book of light and clarity, masterful chiaroscuro, and experimental metaphors, depicts a purified pre-human world of beauty and innocence. The atmosphere is Mediterranean, pantheistic, mythic, with the major theme being the poet’s lost paradise of infancy and childhood in Mélega.

Aleixandre describes his works as being illuminated by varicoloured lights—black in Pasión, red in Destruction of Love, brighter colours in Mundo a solas, and, in Shadow of Paradise, the white glare of midday. In Nacimiento último [Final Birth], a transitional work closing his cosmic cycle, light becomes diaphanous, transparent. Aleixandre’s development from the surrealist prose poems of Pasión de la tierra to the stark vision of death in Nacimiento último becomes, metaphorically, a drama of progressive enlightenment or illumination. The final stage of this progression is Historia del corazón [History of the Heart], with its gamut of light and shade, a turning point emphasizing historical existence, human joys, and sorrows, in a temporal rather than cosmic universe. Considered Aleixandre’s masterpiece by most critics, Historia del corazón marks man’s emergence from the background of the poetry to assume the role of protagonist in the poet’s post-war historical and social preoccupations.

En un vasto dominio [In a Vast Domain] unites the human and the cosmic elements through love, its title reflecting the presence of the collectivity. Poemas de la consumación [Poems of Consummation] explores the epistemological preoccupations of the ageing poet, who meditates on knowledge, doubt, hope, youth, and old age, as he approaches death. Diálogos del conocimiento [Dialogues of Knowledge], Aleixandre’s final collection, published when the poet was 76, introduces several speakers whose monologues contrast sensuality and meditation and juxtapose intuitive, existential, idealistic, cynical, and transcendental views.

Social poetry in Spain during the 1950s and 1960s was essentially political, an implied indictment of the ideology perpetuating social injustice—poetry of protest. Aleixandre’s treatment of existential material is far removed from sociopolitical criticism and the manner of a sociological casebook to which much poetry of these years descended. His final poetry is less exuberant in its imagery, more restrained and reflective, without being totally purged of surrealist elements. His last works do not merely repeat the forms of earlier ones, but evolve toward greater sobriety and thoughtfulness—poetry of the intellect and intuition, poetry as epistemology, meditations upon the metaphysical, rendered in a manner somewhere between that of the philosopher and the mystic.

—Janet Pérez

ALFIERI, Vittorio

Born: Asti, Italy, 16 January 1749. Education: Educated at Royal Academy, Turin, 1759–66. Military Service: Served as an ensign, 1766 (resigned commission, 1774). Career: Travelled extensively in Europe, 1767–72; began lifelong relationship with Luisa Stolberg, Countess of Albany, 1777; fled from revolutionary Paris with the Countess, 1792, settled in Florence; left Florence during the French occupation. Died: 8 October 1803.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Opere postume. 13 vols., 1804.
Opere, edited by Francesco Maggini. 1926–33.
Opere, edited by Luigi Fassò and others. 35 vols., 1951–.
Opere I, edited by Mario Fabini and Arnaldo DiBenedetto. 1977.
Antologia Poetica, 1993.

Plays

Tragedie. 3 vols., 1783–85, enlarged edition, 1789.
Tragedie. 6 vols., 1787–89; edited by U. Brilli, 1961.
The Tragedies, translated by Charles Lloyd. 4 vols., 1815; revised edition, edited by E.A. Bowring. 2 vols., 1876; with introduction by Sergio Romagnoli, 1993.
Commedie, edited by Simona Costa. 1990.

Verse

L'America libera: Odi. 1784; as Ode to America's Independence, translated by Adolph Caso (bilingual edition), 1976.
Parigi sbastigliata. 1789.
Rime. 1789.
L'Etruria vendicata. 1800.

Other

La virtù sconosciuta: Dialogo. 1786.
Della tirannide. 1789; as Of Tyranny, translated by Julius A. Molinaro and Beatrice Corrigan, 1960.
Del principe e delle lettere. 1795; edited by Luigi Rosso, 1943; as The Prince and Letters, translated by Julius A. Molinaro and Beatrice Corrigan, 1972.
Il misogallo: prose e rime. 1799.
Vita. 1806; as Memoirs, translated anonymously, 1810, revised edition, by E.R. Vincent, 1961; as The Autobiography of Vittorio Alfieri, translated by C. Edwards Lester, 1845, and by Henry McAnally, 1949; as Life of Vittorio Alfieri, 1877.
Mirandomi in Appannato Specchio, 1994.
 Translator, Panegirico a Trajano, by Pliny. 1787.
 Translator, [Works], by Sallust. 1826.

*

Bibliography: Bibliografia di Vittorio Alfieri by G. Bustico, 3rd edition, 1927; La critica alfieriana by W. Binni, 1951.

Critical Studies: Vittorio Alfieri: Forerunner of Italian Nationalism by Gaudens Megaro, 1930; Alfieri: A Biography by Charles R.D. Miller, 1936; Ritratto dell'Alfieri by Mario Fubini, 1967; Saggi alfieriani by Walter Binni, 1969; Studi e ricerche sulla genesi e le fonti delle commedie alfieriane by Giuseppe Santarelli, 1971; Alfieri comico by V. Placella, 1973; Studi alfieriani vecchi e nuovi by Carmine Mensi, 1974; Gli affetti nella tragedia di Vittorio Alfieri by Pino Mensi, 1974; Vittorio Alfieri by Guido Nicastro, 1974; Di Vittorio Alfieri e della tragedia by F. Portinari, 1976; Il messaggio poetico dell'Alfieri: La natura del limite tragico by Mario Travato, 1978; Vittorio Alfieri (in English) by Franco Betti, 1984; Vittorio Alfieri e la cultura piemontese fra illuminismo e rivoluzione edited by Giovanna Ioli, 1985; Lo Stile e l'Idea: Elaborazione dei Trattati Alfieriani by Guido Santato, 1994; Studi Alfieriani by Walter Binni, 1995; L'altro Alfieri: Politica e Letteratura Nelle Satire by Giulio Carnazzi, 1996; Il Nano e il Gigante e Altri Studi Alfieriani by Massimo Manghi, 1998; Tra Mito e Palinodia: Itinerari Alfieriani by Guido Santato, 1999; Vittorio Alfieri e le Sue Tragedie by Pietro Seddio, 1999.

* * *

“A truly remarkable individual,” Vittorio Alfieri was called by his contemporary Alessandro Verri, a judgement anyone will concur in who reads the Vita (Memoirs) without being waylaid, as earlier critics were, by doubts as to their reliability. From 1775, after having spent six restless years in intellectually stimulating European travels and three years in frivolous aristocratic pursuits in Turin, Alfieri turned to literature, and henceforth his life was intensely and singlemindedly devoted to his studies and his writing. His major public objective was to give Italy tragedy, the genre it lacked almost completely and which had recently been brought to new splendour in France. To achieve this he had to master a language which, as a French-speaker since birth, was virtually foreign to him. The project came to fruition in 19 tragedies (23, if the first one, rejected by him, and the so-called posthumous ones are added), their range, according to George Steiner, “an index to the romantic imagination.” The style he forged for himself was unique, a radical departure from the melodious, often sing-song verses for which Italian lyric poetry, thanks to the Arcadia and Metastasio, was famous. “Mi trovan duro? . . . Taccia ho d’oscuro?” (“They find me difficult/harsh? . . . I have the reputation of being obscure?”), he asked in an epigram dated 30 July 1783, harbinger of his repeated efforts at self-clarification.

Alfieri’s tragedies have been classified variously: chronologically by periods, treated as Greek, Roman, and modern; by themes, as tragedies of love, freedom, royal ambition, familial affections, and inner struggle; or again, as those in which fate predominates, those built on the contrast between liberty and servitude, and those in which the tyrant triumphs over his victims. But no doubt the best comprehensive commentary on his work—which he approaches both diachronically and synchronically—is his own self-exegesis: in his answer written to the critic Calsabigi in 1783, in his “Parere dell’autore su le presenti tragedie” [The Author’s Opinions on the Present Tragedies] prepared for the 1789 Paris edition, repeatedly in the Memoirs, and indirectly but forcefully in Del principe e delle lettere (The Prince and Letters). What distinguishes Alfieri’s perception of his originality is his self-knowledge: his grounding of the impulse that led him to tragedy in his passionate reaction to great deeds (such as those recorded in Plutarch's Lives) and his desire to emulate them in the only arena—art—in which he felt his times gave him freedom to act; and secondly, his intimate understanding of the stubborn determination needed to vanquish the difficulties of a genre which he conceived of as exceptionally concentrated and concise, making no allowances for even such normal procedures in drama as the use of secondary characters and episodic actions. Basing himself on the distinctions of classical theories of rhetoric between inventio, dispositio, and elocutio (the selection of a subject, its distribution into its component parts or acts and scenes, its expression, which in his case meant turning it into verses), he detailed the various stages through which each of his tragedies passed, incidentally leaving an analysis of composition, a blueprint for the construction of a text, which continues to be valid even today. The unity he achieves is not given; it is arrived at. But in a circular movement that goes back to the moment of “inspiration”—the impulso naturale, the bollore di cuore e di mente (the natural impulse, the excitement of heart and mind), so eloquently described in The Prince and Letters—he ends up by giving its due to the inescapable coherence of content and form in great art.

From the point of view of inventio (or originality), Alfieri thought of his tragedies as falling into two groups: the few “new” ones (on subjects never before treated in tragic form) and the majority, in which he strove to “make something new out of something old.” Among the first group are two of his recognized masterpieces, Saul and Mirra, both of which depart from the model most frequently associated with Alfieri, the unmasker of arbitrary power and its trappings as analysed in the treatise Della tirannide (Of Tyranny). In the dramatization of the struggle between the aged Biblical king and the young David, in which the accent falls on the human rather than regal destiny of the “tyrant” condemned to fearful solitude, even the usual norms of neo-classical tragedy are broken by the insertion into the text of David's songs (passages that remind us that Alfieri was also a great lyric poet, in the tradition of Petrarch). In his retelling on stage of Ovid's story of the incestuous love of Mirra for her father, Alfieri defies the rules of bienséance and creates a work of the utmost dramatic tension as the hapless protagonist—no more than a young girl—is again and again on the verge of revealing a secret (to which the spectator who knows his classics is privy), whose ultimate telling spells self-imposed death.

—Olga Ragusa

See the essay on Saul.

AL-HARIRI, al-Qasim ibn ‘Ali Abu Muhammad al-Basri

Born: Mashan, near Basra, Iraq, in 446 AH/1054 CE. Family: One known son, ‘Abd Allah. Career: Oversaw the date palm plantation that he inherited in Mashan; held a position in the intelligence branch of the central government of the Caliphate in Basra; and studied, taught, and wrote literary and grammatical works in Basra and Baghdad; his most famous work, al-Maqamat, was allegedly composed for Anushirwan ibn Khalid, minister to the Caliph al-Mustarshid. Died: 516 AH/1122 CE in Basra, Iraq.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

Al-Maqamat (a linked series of stories in rhymed prose). c. 504 AH/1110 CE; as The Assemblies of al-Hariri, translated by Amina Shah, 1980.

Verse

Diwan al-Hariri (collection of poetry), not extant. c. 516 AH/1122 CE
Mulhat al-I‘rab (a grammatical treatise in verse). c. 516 AH/1122 CE

Other

Rasa‘il (letters), not extant. c. 516 AH/1122 CE
Durrat al-Ghawwas fi aw‘ham al-khawass (a grammatical treatise in prose). c. 516 AH/1122 CE

*

Critical Studies: Al-Maqamah by Shawqi Dayf, 1954; Les Seances: Recits et codes culturels chez Hamadhani et Hariri by Abdelfattah Kilito, 1983; Ra‘y fi al-maqamat by Abd al-Rahman Yaghi, 1985; al-Ghaib: Dirasah fi maqamah lil-Hariri by Abdelfattah Kilito, 1987; Fann al-maqamah bayna al-Badi‘ wa-al-Hariri wa-al-Suyuti by Ahmad Amin Mustafa, 1991.

* * *

Al-Hariri is without a doubt best known for al-Maqamat (The Assemblies of al-Hariri), a linked series of comic stories written in rhymed prose. Al-Maqamat is the name of a literary genre that is first attributed to al-Hariri's predecessor, al-Hamadhani, who also wrote in Arabic (d. 398 AH/1008 CE). Although al-Hariri pays homage to al-Hamadhani in his introduction to The Assemblies of al-Hariri, it was al-Hariri's contribution to the genre that became the model for its further development over the centuries.

While the narrative structure of the maqamah genre varies from author to author, in al-Hariri's case, each of the fifty stories is related by a narrator named al-Harith ibn Hammam and portrays the mischievous adventures of a lowly but eloquent character named Abu Zayd al-Saruji. Each story takes place in, and is named for, a different city of the Islamic world. The series of stories is further linked by the parallel between the first and last stories. In the first story, al-Harith witnesses Abu Zayd pretend to be an itinerant preacher in order to collect money and follows him home, only to find that he is served a lavish meal accompanied by wine, although Islamic law prohibits the drinking of alcohol. In the final story, al-Harith witnesses Abu Zayd pretend to be an itinerant preacher once again, but this time Abu Zayd repents for his mischievous ways before a large crowd in a mosque.

Al-Hariri's fame is due not only to his skillful presentation of the maqamah genre, but also to the newness of this genre and its importance in the development of the Arabic literary tradition. Other examples of written narrative fiction, such as animal fables and transmitted stories, were in circulation at the time. However, the maqamah as conceived first by al-Hamadhani and then by al-Hariri was perhaps the first example of written narrative that was openly presented as fiction rather than factual transmission. The newness of this idea of fiction is evident from biographies of al-Hariri that attempt to explain who Abu Zayd really was, although al-Hariri himself explains that he is a fictional character.

Perhaps in order to protect himself and his work in this anti-fiction literary environment, al-Hariri also suggests in his introduction that these stories, though fictional, are didactic, and thus morally acceptable and relevant to real life. The final story, in which the phony preacher repents, perhaps bears out this assertion of didactic significance. It is as if al-Hariri implies that eloquence, however refined and persuasive, is worthless without the good intention of honesty.

Although al-Hariri's role in the development of classical Arabic fiction is important to the history of Arabic literature, al-Hariri's contemporaries were much more interested in his carefully crafted style. Credit is given to his predecessor al-Hamadhani for inventing the genre of linked stories in rhymed prose, but al-Hariri is generally considered to be the superior master of style. Combining narrative fiction with verse, sermons, letters, grammatical points, and riddles in a smoothly flowing rhymed prose, al-Hariri's series of stories were considered a masterpiece of style and refined entertainment. This emphasis on style displays the relationship between al-Hariri's series of linked stories and his two grammatical works, one in prose about common mistakes (Durrat al-Ghawwas) and another in verse designed to introduce students to grammatical concepts (Mulhat al-'rab).

The genre of linked narratives in rhymed prose, and the example of al-Hariri in particular, was widely imitated throughout the Arabic-speaking world for centuries, down to the beginning of the twentieth century and the emergence of modern forms of prose. His ornate style is still appreciated as a masterpiece of classical literature, but is no longer imitated by modern prose writers. However, the question of fiction associated with the genre of linked stories, and al-Hariri and al-Hamadhani in particular, has taken on a new significance in modern Arabic literature. Many critics reject the idea that narrative fiction in Arabic is exclusively imported from the West. They assert that classical forms of fiction, especially the orally transmitted Thousand and One Nights and the written genre of linked stories in rhymed prose known as the maqamah, constitute an Arabic fiction tradition that is independent of Western influence. Thus while al-Hariri had to defend his series of stories from accusations that they were unacceptable because of their fictional status, that same fictional status has become a source of pride for modern Arab critics.

—Jocelyn Sharlet

AL-KHANSA'

Name means "snub-nosed" or "the gazelle." Born: Tamadiri bint Amr bin al-Harith b. al-Sharid b. Mudar, c. 575 AD, from the tribe Sulaym and the clan al-Sharid. Family: Married 1) her cousin Rawaha b. Abd al-'Aziyy al-Salmi; 2) Murdas Bin Abi 'Amer; four children. Career: Mukhadrama poetess who lived prior to and after the revelation of Islam; converted to Islam, 629 AD. Died: 646 AD.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Diwan al Khansa, translated from the text of Karim Bustani by Arthur Wormhoudt, 1973; as Selections from the Diwan of al Khansa, translated and commented on by Arthur Wormhoudt, 1973.

*

Critical Studies: Commentaires sur le Diwan d'al-Khansâ, 1896, as Moi, poète et femme d'Arabie, translated into French by Anissa Boumediène, 1987. The Mute Immortals Speak: Pre-Islamic Poetry and the Poetics of Ritual by Suzanne Pinckney Stetkevych, 1993.

* * *

Al-Khansa' is the most celebrated poetess of eulogy (marthiyya) in Arabic literature. Nineteenth-century Arab critics assigned al-Khansa' to secondary status in the hierarchy of Arab poets, yet she perfected the inherited forms and themes of traditional elegies by adding new expressions, emotions, and imagery. Her elegies about her brothers and children demonstrate a marked shift in emotions and imageries from previous elegies. Her eulogy for her two brothers—a blood brother Mu'awiya and a half-brother Sakhr, both killed in skirmishes with rival neighboring tribes—are characterized by their pagan metaphors and brought her much fame. After Mu'awiya's death in a raid, al-Khansa' beseeched Sakhr to take vengeance on the offending tribe. Sakhr successfully defeated the tribe and killed his brother's murderers, but he was fatally wounded in the battle. Al-Khansa's focus on Sakhr in her elegies could be attributed to his generosity, for he shared his wealth with his sister on multiple occasions when her husband had squandered his money on gambling. Sakhr had suffered for a year before he died. The poems al-Khansa' wrote during that year and the elegies she wrote after his death are some of the finest elegies in Arabic literature.

Similar to her predecessor poets, al-Khansa' created an anecdotal narratives about Sakhr in which she lamented the deceased's integrity, gallantry, munificence, and justice. But to temper her strong and tender expression of perpetual grief, a grief evinced by a constant stream of tears which badly affected her eyes, she introduced new universal themes such as patience, mishaps that befall man, man's struggle with his fate, and, his ultimate surrender to God's will. Prophet Muhammad commended her themes on death and accepting God's will. Al-Khansa's poetry is characterized by the splendor of her language, genuine compassion for her brothers, beautiful sensory and pagan metaphors and similes, an economy of words, and musical rhymes, as this extract from one of her elegies for Sakhr demonstrates:

Verily, Sakhr if you have made my eyes shed tears
 You long brought me mirth
 I had tears for you among wailing women
 I had the most reason to be the one wailing
 I incited you on the battle
 When you were alive
 But who can avert the invincible death
 Though (they say) weeping over the killed is improper
 I think crying for you is the best of the pleasant deeds.

Al-Khansa' demonstrated the excellence of her poetry and word choice in poetic competitions at the 'Ukaz market, a bazaar in the city of Mecca where, in addition to trading, Arab poets held poetry contests prior to the revelation of Islam in Mecca in 610 AD. She outwitted the prominent poet of her time, Hassan bin Thabit, in her depiction of Arab self-esteem. Well-esteemed poets such as the pre-Islamic poet al-Nabigh al-Dhubyani asserted that no poet could match al-Khansa', and the Umayyad poet Bashshar b. Burd reported that she was better than the best poets. Arab critics considered her poetry to be paramount to the mu'allaqat, the fine poems that were posted on the Ka'ba, the holy place in Mecca.

Al-Khansa's life was a chain of wounds that never healed, for she lost not only her brothers, but also her four sons years later in the Qadisiyya battle in 635 AD. Though al-Khansa' exhorted her brother and children to fight for different objectives, her verses now lacked pagan imageries, less shedding of tears, and she stopped lamenting the blind twist of fate. Her suffering from the loss of her sons was more serene and congruent with the Islam that she embraced in 629. Upon hearing of their death, she reported, "Who dies, if Islam lives?" When the second caliph 'Umar b. al-Khattab went to offer his condolences for the deaths of her sons, al-Khansa' replied, "Congratulate me commander of the faithful, for I'm the mother of the martyrs." In one of her later poems she writes:

My sons I carried you with pain and raised you with care
You have fallen today for the cause of Islam
Who says you are dead
You are very much alive
And alive with honor
I feel proud to be the mother of martyrs

Al-Khansa's poetry is compiled in Tabaqat al-Shu'ara' by Ibn Sallam, al-Aghani by al-Asfahani, and al-'Ijaz wa al-'Ijaz by al-Tha'alibi among many anthologies of Arabic literature. Al-Khansa's profound anguish for her brothers enriched the elegies with expansive imagery and strong emotions, and her poetry was an exquisite model for poets to come.

—Hanaa Kilany

AL-MUTANABBI, Ahmad ibn al-Husayn Abu al-Tayyib al-Ju'fi al-Kindi

Born: Kufa, Iraq, in 303 AH/915 CE. Education: Educated in Kufa, Iraq, and Syria. Family: One known son, Muhassad. Career: Worked as a minor panegyrist in Baghdad; led a political and religious Bedouin revolt in Syria and was imprisoned in 322 AH/933 CE; worked as a panegyrist for the Hamdanid ruler Sayf al-Dawlah in Aleppo, Syria, beginning 337 AH/948 CE; fled the Hamdanid court and worked as a panegyrist for the Ikshidid ruler Kafur in Fustat, Egypt, then fled the Ikshidid court and worked as a panegyrist for the Buwayhid ruler Adud al-Dawlah in Shiraz, Iran, beginning 354 AH/965 CE. Died: Killed when his party was attacked as he returned from Iran to Iraq in 354 AH/965 CE

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Diwan al-Mutanabbi (poems), c. 354 AH/965 CE; Poems of al-Mutanabbi, translated by A. J. Arberry, 1967.

*

Critical Studies: Un poete arabe du IVe siecle de l'Hegire (Xe siecle de J.-C.): Abou t-Tayyib al-Motanabbi by Regis Blachere, 1935; Dhikra Abi al-Tayyib ba'd al-f' am by 'Abd al-Wahhab 'Azzam, 1936; Ma'a al-Mutanabbi by Taha Husayn, 1936; al-Mutanabbi by Mahmud Muhammad Shakir, 1977; al-Harb wa-al-furusiyyah fi shi'r Abi al-Tayyib al-Mutanabbi by Husni Khidr Said; Mimiyat al-Mutanabbi: majallat al-ibda' wa-tabi'at al-mu'alajah by Mayy Yusuf Khulayyif; The Composition of Mutanabbi's Panegyrics to Sayf al-Dawla by Andras Hamori, 1992; al-Badi' fi shi'r al-Mutanabbi by Munir Sultan, 1993.

* * *

Al-Mutanabbi is the last of the four great panegyric poets in classical Arabic literature of the Islamic period. Because lyric genres, and panegyric poetry in particular, were among the most important literary forms of this period, al-Mutanabbi is considered to be a major figure in the classical Arabic heritage. His place in the tradition is the result of his innovative yet carefully crafted poetic language and his vivid portrayal of members of the elite and major events. The lyric genre used by al-Mutanabbi is known as the qasidah, a metered, monorhyme poem of about 20–100 bipartite verses.

Like many renowned Arab poets of this period, al-Mutanabbi is said to have gained his command of poetic language from time spent in the desert with pastoral Arab tribes. Whether or not this is literally true, it is certain that this theme in biographies of al-Mutanabbi emphasizes his position in a tradition that traces its roots back to the Arab tribes of pre-Islamic Arabia. Another reflection of al-Mutanabbi's position in the Arab poetic tradition is the range of commentaries on his poetry in general and on the difficult passages in particular, ranging from the eleventh century commentator al-Wahidi to the twentieth century commentator al-Barquqi. Finally, the large number of classical polemical works that praise, blame, and analyze al-Mutanabbi's poetry, such as the works of Ibn Waki' and al-Sahib ibn 'Abbad, display his importance in debates about the roles of mannerism, intertextuality, and innovation in the poetic tradition. Al-Mutanabbi's role in these debates echoes that of his predecessor Abu Tammam (d. 231 AH/850 CE), whose mannerist style appears to have influenced al-Mutanabbi's own approach to convention and innovation.

Although al-Mutanabbi praised a number of patrons over the course of his career, he is best known for his bold and heroic portrayals of the Hamdanid ruler Sayf al-Dawlah of Aleppo, Syria. Sayf al-Dawlah's numerous military campaigns on the nearby border with Byzantium provided ample material for panegyric. Perhaps the most famous of his panegyrics to Sayf al-Dawlah is his poem composed on the occasion of the siege of al-Hadath. His vivid use of figurative language and rhetorical devices contributes to the coherence of the poem and dramatizes the event that it depicts. Al-Mutanabbi's panegyrics are noteworthy for their frequent departure from the convention of beginning with a description of a love affair, instead beginning with gnomic statements and moving quickly to the serious events of the poem. Some biographers have linked his penchant for gnomic statements to his early exposure to and participation in Isma'ili movements, which is said to be the source of his nickname al-Mutanabbi, "the one who claims to be a prophet."

Like most panegyric poets of this period, al-Mutanabbi included invective and elegy in his repertoire, usually as a component of patronage relationships. His invectives against Kafur, the Ikshidid ruler of Fustat, Egypt (near Cairo), which he composed as their patronage relationship deteriorated, are particularly well known. While problematic patronage relationships were not uncommon in this period, al-Mutanabbi's break with Sayf al-Dawlah and his subsequent break with Kafur indicate his power in court life and the tensions that it brought to his relationships. As for elegy, al-Mutanabbi's graceful poems in honor of Sayf al-Dawlah's mother, as well as a poem for his own grandmother, show that his abilities were not limited to the heroic mode of battle and court life.

Al-Mutanabbi's position as one of the four great panegyrists of the Islamic period has remained relatively stable throughout the intervening centuries and down to the present day. His place in school and university study of Arabic literature, as well as the constant stream of books and articles about him in Arabic and other languages, is testimony to his lasting impact on the Arabic literary tradition.

—Jocelyn Sharlet

AL-QAYS, Imru'

Also known as Imru' al-Qais, Imr al-Qays, Imru' al-Qays. Born: Probably in Yemen, c. AD 497. Education: Introduced to poetry by his uncle al-Muhalhil, his mother's younger brother; also self-taught. Family: Married a woman named Jundhub while in exile; one known daughter although it is unclear whether Jundhub is her mother. Career: Exiled twice by his father for his love of poetry; wandered the deserts of the Arabian Peninsula with companions singing, drinking, and reciting poetry; later returned to avenge his father's death. Died: c. AD 542, under mysterious circumstances but most likely from the bubonic plague.

PUBLICATIONS

Verse

The Diwan of Imr al Qais ibn Hujr ibn Kinda ibn Qahtan (contains commentary and Arabic texts). 1974; translated by Arthur Wormhoudt.

"The Wandering King" in The Seven Odes: The First Chapter in Arabic Literature by A.J. Arberry. 1957.

*

Critical Studies: Imrulkais of Kinda, Poet Circa A.D. 500–535: The Poems, The Life, The Background by Charles Greville Tuetey, 1977; "The Last Days of Imru' Al-Qays: Anatolia" by Irfan Shahid and "Imru' Al-Qays Praises the Prophet" by Julie Scott Meisami in Tradition and Modernity in Arabic Literature, edited by Issa J. Boullata and Terri DeYoung, 1997; "Regicide and Retribution: The Mu'allaqah of Imru' al-Qays" in The Mute Immortals Speak: Pre-Islamic Poetry and the Poetics of Ritual by Suzanne Pinckney Stetkevych, 1993; "Imru' al-Qays b. Hudjr" in Encyclopaedia of Islam, 1999.

* * *

Imru' al-Qays is considered by many Arabic literary scholars to be poet par excellence of the pre-Islamic period. The testimony to this epithet is his famous mu'allaqa, or "Suspended Ode," which was written in qasida form and composed during the sixth century AD. This literary masterpiece, only one of seven of his works to have survived, is without a doubt the most influential poem in Arabic literature not only for its premature fascinations but also for its aesthetic qualities and innovative imagery, which has served as a model for later generations of Arab poets, especially those who lived during the 'Abbāsid period (c. 750–1258 AD). Although poetry was the genre of choice for the pre-Islamic poets, only vestiges remain due to the fact that the means of transmission was strictly oral; it was not until the end of the eighth century AD that great pains were taken to collect, record, and edit this massive body of work.

Imru' al-Qays, also known as "al-Malik al-Dillīl," which can be translated as either the "Vagabond King" or the "Errant King," is believed to have been the youngest son of Hujr, reportedly the last king of Kindah, an influential South Arabian tribe who achieved prominence in the Arabian Peninsula in the fifth and sixth centuries AD. Sources mention that he was banished because he had been enamored of his cousin Fatima and had supposedly composed erotic poetry about her. Thus began perhaps the most famous chapter in Arabic literature and certainly in pre-Islamic poetry: the wayward, and oftentimes scandalous, adventures of Imru' al-Qays. After his banishment from his father's kingdom, he spent his days roaming the length and breadth of the Arabian Peninsula with a band of companions, drinking, reciting poetry, and enjoying the company of women. It was during this time, it is said, that he had learned of his father's murder while he was playing backgammon with a companion. At first, he paid no attention to the messenger, and, according to A. J. Arberry, it was only after he inquired further about his father's murder that he is said to have exclaimed, "He left me to rot when I was a boy, and now that I am a man he has loaded me with his blood." It was then that he vowed to avenge his father's death. These circumstances in Imru' al-Qays's early life provide the context for his famous mu'allaqa.

Imru' al-Qays's mu'allaqa is based on the qasida, usually translated into English as "ode." This complex literary form possesses a rigid structure, and al-Qays's masterpiece consists of at least 60 couplets. Also, the poet must strictly adhere to a chosen meter, as well as follow an identical rhyme. In addition, the qasida is composed of a tripartite structure: a beginning, middle, and an end. Due to this compact organization, the qasida utilizes metaphor to a large extent rather than mere description in order to convey meaning.

The events in Imru' al-Qays's mu'allaqa revolve around two main themes: premature sexuality and the vowing of vengeance for his murdered father. In the opening section, known as the nasīb, we see the poet stopping at a deserted desert encampment remembering his youthful, and often scandalous, encounters with various women of his tribe. Several scholars, among them Suzanne Pinckney Stetkevych, believe that these events of this extended nasīb, which is longer than the traditional nasīb, are illustrative of the poet's "arrested development" into manhood. As Stetkevych observes, "whereas mature men are consoled or diverted from the foolish infatuations of their youth, [Imru' al-Qays's] heart remains bound to puerile passion." There are numerous other indications of Imru' al-Qays's arrested development both in his real life and in his mu'allaqa, which in the latter takes a metaphoric form. Two examples from his poetry that demonstrate a lack of maturity are his cavalier reaction to his father's murder and the slaughtering of his camel for maidens who, instead of cooking the raw meat and consuming it, prefer simply to play with it.

The famous storm scene, reproduced in part below from quatrains 71–72, The Mute Immortals Speak, introduces the second major event of Imru' al-Qays's mu'allaqa. Since it occurs in the text where there is traditionally a battle fought and also is a fairly common metaphor in pre-Islamic poetry, it is very probable that the storm is symbolic of an engagement to have been fought in revenge for his father's murder:

O friend, do you see the lightning?
There is its flash—
Like two hands shining in a high-crowned cumulus!
Its flashing illumining the sky, or like the sudden flare of a monk's lamp
When, tilting it, he soaks with oil the tightly twisted wick.

By including the storm scene, Imru' al-Qays, in effect, elevates his qasida from the earthly level to that of the cosmic. Or in Stetkevych's words, "a military triumph has given way to a poetic one."

Imru' al-Qays is thought to have died in 542 AD, just a quarter of a century before the advent of Islam in the Arabian Peninsula. However, the cause of his death remains a mystery. Legend has it that he met his untimely end by wearing a poisoned robe given to him by the Emperor Justinian after having apparently seduced his daughter. However, Arabic literary scholars dismiss this account as fictitious, as history reports that Justinian was childless. It is more likely that he died of the bubonic plague, which is known to have occurred during the reign of Justinian in Ancyra (modern Ankara, the capital of Turkey) and was buried there.

—Carmen Cross

ALIGHIERI, Dante

Born: Florence, in 1265, probably late May. Education: Details of his education are conjectural, but he was raised as a gentleman and was an avid student of philosophy and poetry. Military Service: Served in the Florentine army cavalry in campaign against Arezzo, 1289; fought in battle of Campaldino. Family: Married Gemma di Maretto Donati in 1294 (affianced 1283), three sons and one daughter. Career: Met Beatrice Portinari, 1274 (died 1290); friend of Guido Cavalcanti, q.v., from 1283, and associated with group of dolce stil nuovo poets around him; involved in Florentine civic affairs: served on people's council, 1295–96, and other councils, 1296 and 1297, and diplomatic missions to San Gimignano, 1300; one of the six priors governing Florence, 1300; in charge of road works in Florence (probably in preparation for a siege), 1301; while on a mission to Pope Boniface VIII in Rome in 1301 his party (the Whites) was defeated in Florence and he was exiled: sought refuge at courts of various Ghibelline lords in northern Italy: in San Godenzo in 1302, Forlì, 1303, and Verona, 1303; broke with other White exiles, 1304, and probably went to the university town of Bologna; agent in court of Franceschino Malaspina in the Lunigiana, 1306; in Lucca, c. 1306–08; strong supporter of the Holy Roman Empire, Henry VII of Luxembourg, 1309–13 (probably wrote De monarchia at this time); in Lucca, c. 1314–16; refused conditional amnesty from Florence, 1316; at court of Can Grande della Scala in Verona, 1317, and court of Guido Novello da Polento in Ravenna, c. 1317–21; sent by Guido on diplomatic mission to Venice, 1321. Died: 14 September 1321.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

- The Latin Works*, translated by A.G. Ferrers Howell and P.H. Wicksteed. 1904.
Opere, edited by Michele Barbi and others. 2 vols., 1921–22; 2nd edition, 1960.
The Portable Dante, edited by Paolo Milano. 1947; revised edition, 1978.
Selected Works. 1972.
Opere, edited by Fredi Chiapelli. 6th edition, 1974.
Opere minore, edited by Domenico de Robertis and Gianfranco Contini. 1979–84.
Tutti le Opere. 1981.

Verse

- Commedia*, edited by Natalino Sapegno. 1957, also edited by Giorgio Petrocchi, 4 vols., 1966–67, and by Umberto Bosco and Giovanni Reggio, 1979; edited (with translation) by Charles S. Singleton, 6 vols., 1970–75; translated by Henry Boyd, 3 vols., 1802; numerous subsequent translations as The Divine Comedy, including by H.W. Longfellow, 3 vols., 1867; Laurence Binyon, 1933–46; L.G. White, 1948; Dorothy L. Savers and Barbara Reynolds, 3 vols., 1949–62; John Ciardi, 1954–70; G.L. Bickersteth, 1955; John D. Sinclair, 3 vols., 1961; Kenneth Mackenzie, 1979; C.H. Sisson, 1980; Allen Mandelbaum, 3 vols., 1980–84; Robert Pinsky, 1994; Mark Musa, 1995; Peter Dale, 1996; Elio Zappulla, 1998; as Dante's Inferno: Translations by Twenty Contemporary Poets, edited by Daniel Halpern, 1993; translated into prose by Charles Eliot Norton, 3 vols., 1891–92; also by J. Carlyle, T. Okey, and P.H. Wicksteed, 3 vols., 1899–1901; as The Vision, translated by Henry, Francis Cary, 3 vols., 1814; as Presenting Paradise: Dante's Paradiso: Translation and Commentary by James Torrens, 1993; as Inferno III, translated by Patrick Creagh and Robert Hollander, 1993; as Hell, translated by Steve Ellis, 1994; as Cantos from Dante's Inferno, translated by Armand Schwerner, 2000; as Purgatorio, translated by W.S. Merwin, 2000.
La vita nuova, edited by Michele Barbi. 1932, also in Opere, 1960, also edited by Domenico De Robertis, 1980; translated by Dante Gabriel Rossetti, in The Early Italian Poets, 1861; also translated by Mark Musa, 1957, revised edition, 1973; Barbara Reynolds, 1969; as The New Life, translated by William S. Anderson, 1964.
Eclogae latinae, edited by E. Pistelli, in Opere. 1960; translated by P.H. Wicksteed, 1902; also translated by W. Brewer, 1927.
Rime, edited by D. Mattalia. 1943, also edited by Gianfranco Contini, 2nd edition, 1946, and by Michele Barbi and F. Maggini, 1956; as Il Canzoniere, edited by G. Zonta, 1921; translated by Patrick S. Diehl, 1979.
Lyric Poetry, edited by Kenelm Foster and Patrick Boyde. 2 vols., 1967.
Eighteen Poems, translated by Anthony Conran. 1975.
- Other
- De vulgari eloquentia*, edited by A. Marigo, revised edition, edited by P.G. Ricci. 1957, and by Pier Vincenzo Mengaldo, 1968; translated by A.G. Ferrers Howell, 1890; also translated by P.H. Wicksteed, in Latin Works, 1904; as Literature in the Vernacular, translated by Sally Purcell, 1981; translated by Steven Botterill, 1996.

De monarchia, edited by E. Rostagno, in Opere. 1960, also edited by P.G. Ricci, 1965, and by Bruno Nardi, in Opere Minori, 1979; translated by A.G. Ferrers Howell, 1890; as Monarchy, and Three Political Letters, translated by Donald Nicholl and Colin Hardie, 1954; as On World-Government, edited and translated by H.W. Schneider, 1957; as Monarchy, translated by Prue Shaw, 1996; as Dante's Monarchia, translated with commentary by Richard Kay, 1998.

Epistolae: The Letters, translated by P.H. Wicksteed. 1902; edited and translated by Paget Toynbee, 1920; revised edition, edited by Colin Hardie, 1966.

Questio de aqua et de terra, edited by E. Pistelli, in Opere. 1960; translated by P.H. Wicksteed, 1902, and in Latin Works, 1904.

Il convivio, edited by G. Busnelli and G. Vandelli. 1964, and by M. Simonelli, 1966; as The Banquet, translated by P.H. Wicksteed, 1903; also translated by William W. Jackson, 1909; Christopher Ryan, 1989; Richard H. Lansing, 1990.

De situ, edited by V. Biagi. 1907, and by G. Padoan, 1968.

Literary Criticism, edited by Robert S. Haller. 1973.

The Stone Beloved (selections). 1986.

The Fiore and the Detto d'amore: A Late 13th-century Italian Translation of the Roman de la Rose, Attributable to Dante, translated by Santa Casciani and Christopher Kleinhenz. 2000.

*

Critical Studies: Studies in Dante edited by Edward Moore, 4 vols., 1896–1917, reprinted 1968; Dante's Ten Heavens: A Study of the Paradiso by Edmund Garratt Gardner, 1904; In Patriam: An Exposition of Dante's Paradiso by John S. Carroll, 1911; Dante and Aquinas by P.H. Wicksteed, 1913; Dante: Essays in Commemoration, 1321–1921, 1921; Symbolism in Medieval Thought and Its Consumption in the Divine Comedy by H.F. Dunbar, 1929; Essays on the Vita Nuova, 1929, and The Lady Philosophy in the Convivio, 1938, both by James E. Shaw; Medieval Culture: An Introduction to Dante and His Times by Karl Vossler, translated by William Cranston Lawton, 2 vols., 1929; Dante the Philosopher by Étienne Gilson, translated by David Moore, 1948; An Essay on the Vita Nuova, 1949, in Dante Studies, 1–2, 1954–58, Journey to Beatrice, 1958, and Dante's Commedia: Elements of Structure, 1977, all by Charles S. Singleton; A Handbook to Dante Studies by Umberto Cosmo, translated by David Moore, 1950; Dante as a Political Thinker by A. Passerin d'Entrèves, 1952; Dante's Drama of the Mind: A Modern Reading of the Purgatorio, 1953, Dante, 1966, and Trope and Allegory: Themes Common to Dante and Shakespeare, 1977, all by Francis Fergusson; Life of Dante by Michele Barbi, translated by P. Ruggiers, 1954; Introductory Papers on Dante, 1954, and Further Papers on Dante, 1957, both by Dorothy L. Sayers; Dante and the Idea of Rome, 1957, and Dante's Italy and Other Essays, 1984, both by Charles T. Davis; Dante and the Early Astronomers by Mary A. Orr (2nd edition) 1957; Structure and Thought in the Paradiso, 1958, and Medieval Cultural Tradition in Dante's Comedy, 1960, both by Joseph Mazzeo; The Ladder of Vision: A Study of Dante's Comedy by Irma Brandeis, 1960, and Discussions of the Divine Comedy edited by Brandeis, 1961; Dante, Poet of the Secular World by Erich Auerbach, translated by Ralph Manheim, 1961; Essays on Dante, 1964, and Dante's Vita Nuova, 1973, both by Mark Musa; Dante by Thomas G. Bergin, 1965, as An Approach to Dante, 1965, and From Time to

Eternity: Essays on Dante's Divine Comedy edited by Bergin, 1967; Dante: A Collection of Critical Essays edited by John Freccero, 1965, and Dante: The Poetics of Conversion by Freccero, 1986; The Mind of Dante edited by U. Limentani, 1965; Dante Alighieri: His Life and Works, 1965, and A Dictionary of Proper Names and Notable Matters in the Works of Dante, 1968, both by Paget Toynbee; Events and Their Afterlife: The Dialectics of Christian Typology in the Bible and Dante by A.C. Charity, 1966; Dante and His World by T.C. Chubb, 1966; Enciclopedia dantesca, 5 vols., 1970–75; Dante's Style in His Lyric Poetry, 1971, Dante Philomythes and Philosopher: Man in the Cosmos, 1981, and Perception and Passion in Dante's Comedy, 1993, all by Patrick Boyde; The Greatness of Dante Alighieri by Herbert William Smith, 1974; Dante's Epic Journeys by David Thompson, 1974; Companion to the Divine Comedy: Commentary by C.H. Grandgent, 1975; Dark Wood to White Rose by Helen M. Luke, 1975; Woman, Earthly and Divine, in the Comedy of Dante by Marianne Shapiro, 1975; The Two Dantes, and Other Studies by Kenelm Foster, 1977, and Cambridge Readings in Dante's Comedy edited by Foster and Patrick Boyde, 1981; Dante Commentaries, 1977, and Dante Soundings: Eight Literary and Historical Essays, 1981, both edited by David Nolan; Dante's Paradiso and the Limitations of Modern Criticism: A Study of Style and Poetic Theory, 1978, Dante: The Divine Comedy, 1987, and Dante's Inferno, Difficulty and Dead Poetry, 1987, all by Robin Kirkpatrick; The Discipline of the Mountain: Dante's Purgatorio in a Nuclear World by Daniel Berrigan, 1979; Essays on Dante's Philosophy of History, 1979, and Dante's Journey of Sanctification, 1990, both by Antonio C. Mastrobuono; Dante, Poet of the Desert: History and Allegory in the Divine Comedy by Giuseppe Mazzotta, 1979, and Critical Essays on Dante edited by Mazzotta, 1991; Dante Alighieri by Ricardo J. Quinones, 1979; Dante the Maker by William Anderson, 1980; The World of Dante: Essays on Dante and His Times edited by Cecil Grayson, 1980; Studies in Dante by Robert Hollander, 1980; Dante by George Holmes, 1980; Shadowy Prefaces: Conversion and Writing in the Divine Comedy by James Thomas Chiampì, 1981; Irenic Apocalypse: Some Uses of Apocalyptic in Dante, Petrarch and Rabelais by Dennis Costa, 1981; A Reading of Dante's Inferno by Wallace Fowlie, 1981; The Figure of Dante: An Essay on the Vita Nuova by Jerome Nazzaro, 1981; Dante and the Roman de la Rose: An Investigation into the Vernacular Narrative Context of the Commedia by Earl Jeffrey Richards, 1981; Dante in the Twentieth Century edited by Adolph Caso, 1982; Confessions of Sin and Love in the Middle Ages: Dante's Commedia and St. Augustine's Confessions by Shirley J. Paolini, 1982; Dante's Incarnation of the Trinity by Paul Priest, 1982; Essays on Dante by Karl Witte, 1982; The Door of Purgatory: A Study of Multiple Symbolism in Dante's Purgatorio, 1983, and Dante's Griffin and the History of the World: A Study of the Earthly Paradise, 1989, both by Peter Armour; Dante's Angelic Intelligences: Their Importance in the Cosmos and in Pre-Christian Religion by Stephen Bemrose, 1983; Dante, Petrarch, Boccaccio: Studies in the Italian Trecento in Honor of Charles S. Singleton edited by Aldo S. Bernardo and Anthony L. Pelligrini, 1983; Dante in America: The First Two Centuries edited by A. Bartlett Giamatti, 1983; Dante, Chaucer and the Currency of the Word: Money, Images and Reference in Late Medieval Poetry by Richard A. Shoaf, 1983; Dante's Poets: Textuality and Truth in the Comedy, 1984, and The Undivine Comedy: Detheologizing Dante, 1992, both by Teodolinda Barolini; Dante's Fearful Art of Justice by Anthony K. Cassell, 1984; Pilgrim in Love: An Introduction to Dante and His Spirituality, 1984, and Dante: Layman, Prophet, Mystic, 1989, both by James J. Collins; The Political Vision of the Divine Comedy, 1984, and Dante's Beatrice: Priest of an Androgynous God, 1992, both by Joan M. Ferrante; Chaucer and Dante: A Reevaluation by Howard H. Schess, 1984; The Symbolic Rose in Dante's Paradiso by Giuseppe C. Di Scipio, 1984; Aesthetic Ideas in Dante: "Eterno Piacer," 1984, and Dante: Lyric Poet and Philosopher: An Introduction to the Minor Works, 1990, both by J.F. Took; The Political Ideas in the Divine Comedy by Stewart Farnell, 1985; Dante Comparisons edited by Eric Haywood and Barry Jones, 1985, and Dante Readings edited by Haywood, 1986; Dante's Poetry of Dreams by Dino S. Cervigni, 1986; Dante and Medieval Latin Traditions by Peter Dronke, 1986; The Reader's Companion to Dante's Divine Comedy by Angelo A. De Gennaro, 1986; The Transfiguration of History at the Center of Dante's Paradise by Jeffrey T. Schnapp, 1986; Dante: Numerological Studies by John J. Guzzardo, 1987; Dante's Poems: An Essay on History and Origins by J.M.W. Hill, 1987; The Pilgrim and the Book: A Study of Dante, Langland and Chaucer by Julia Bolton Holloway, 1987; Dante and the Empire by Donna M. Mancusi-Ungaro, 1987; Mary in the Writings of Dante by Max Saint, 1987; Dante: The Critical Heritage 1314(?)–1870 edited by Michael Caesar, 1988; The Body of Beatrice by Robert Pogue Harrison, 1988; Dante and Difference: Writing in the Commedia by Jeremy Tambling, 1988; The Divine Comedy: Tracing God's Art by Marguerite Mills Chiarenza, 1989; A Study of the Theology and the Imagery of Dante's Divina Commedia: Sensory Perception, Reason and Free Will by Sharon Harwood-Gordon, 1989; On the Defence of the Comedy of Dante by Giacomo Mazzoni, translated by R.L. Montgomery, 1989; The Influence of Dante on Medieval Dream Visions by Roberta L. Payne, 1989; Dante Studies in the Age of Vico by Domenico Pietropaolo, 1989; Time and the Crystal: Studies in Dante's Rime Petrose by Robert M. Durling and Ronald L. Martinez, 1990; Dante and the Medieval Other World by Alison Morgan, 1990; Eternal Feminines: Three Theological Allegories in Dante's Paradiso by Jaroslav Pelikan, 1990; Dante, edited by Harold Bloom, 1991; Dante's Burning Sands: Some New Perspectives by Francesca Guerra D'Antoni, 1991; Dante as Dramatist: Myth of the Early, Paradise and Tragic Vision in the Divine Comedy by Franco Masciandaro, 1991; Word and Drama in Dante: Essays on the Divina Commedia by John C. Barnes and Jennifer Petrie, 1992; Dante and the Bible: An Introduction by Daniel H. Higgins, 1992; Cambridge Companion to Dante edited by Rachel Jacoff, 1993; Commentary and Ideology: Dante in the Renaissance by Deborah Parker, 1993; Dante and the Mystical Tradition: Bernard of Clairvaux in the Commedia by Steven Botterill, 1994; Dante's Christian Astrology by Richard Kay, 1994; The Circle of Our Vision: Dante's Presence in English Romantic Poetry by Ralph Pite, 1994; Mismapping the Underworld: Daring and Error in Dante's Comedy by John Kleiner, 1994; Dante and the Middle Ages: Literary and Historical Essays, edited by John C. Barnes and Cormac Ó Cuilleain, 1995; Dante Now: Current Trends in Dante Studies, edited by Theodore J. Cachey, Jr., 1995; Sense Perception in Dante's Commedia by Edward G. Miller, 1996; Dante's Political Purgatory by John A. Scott, 1996; Dante's Interpretive Journey by William Franke, 1996; Images of the Journey in Dante's Divine Comedy by Charles H. Taylor and Patricia Finley, 1997; Dante and Governance, edited by John Woodhouse, 1997; Dante: Contemporary Perspectives, edited by Amilcare A. Iannucci, 1997; The Metaphysics of Reading Underlying Dante's Commedia: The Ingegno by Paul Arvisu, 1998; Dante and the Victorians by Alison Milbank, 1998; Lectura Dantis: Inferno, edited by Allen Mandelbaum, Anthony Oldcorn, and Charles Ross, 1998; Dante and the Knot of Body and Soul by Marianne Shapiro, 1998; Dante Alighieri: Divine Comedy, Divine Spirituality by Robert Royal, 1999; The Design in the Wax: The Structure of the Divine Comedy and Its Meaning by Marc Cogan, 1999; Dante's Testaments: Essays in Scriptural Imagination by Peter S. Hawkins, 1999; Dante, edited and introduced by Jeremy Tambling, 1999; Dante's Aesthetics of Being by Warren Ginsberg, 1999; Human Vices and Human Worth in Dante's Comedy by Patrick Boyde, 2000; Sound and Structure in the Divine Comedy by David Robey, 2000; Divine Dialectic: Dante's Incarnational Poetry by Guy P. Raffa, 2000; The Dante Encyclopedia, edited by Richard Lansing, 2000; A New Life of Dante by Stephen Bemrose, 2000; Reading Dante's Stars by Alison Cornish, 2000; Formulas of Repetition in Dante's Commedia: Signposted Journeys Across Textual Space by Lloyd Howard, 2001; Dante by R.W.B. Lewis, 2001; Dante: A Life in Works by Robert Hollander, 2001.

* * *

The city in which Dante Alighieri was born and where he spent the first 38 years of his life was in his time already an important cultural centre as well as the focus of conflicting political forces having cast off its feudal allegiance it was a self-governing community, administered by its own citizens under the direction of a prosperous bourgeoisie. Although Dante's father was not a prominent figure in the life of the city (he was perhaps a money lender) the poet claimed to be descended from the aristocracy and he was in his youth sufficiently well off to enable him to study painting, music, and letters (according to Boccaccio) and, it seems likely, to spend a year at the University of Bologna. Florence already possessed a literary tradition; Dante readily acknowledged his indebtedness to Brunetto Latini, author of the allegorizing Tesoretto, and to the poet Guido Cavalcanti (slightly older than Dante) who had brought a speculative element into the love lyric of the Provençal tradition. Dante's literary production in fact begins with lyrics in the Cavalcanti style. Dante's first notable work, however, was La vita nuova (The New Life), an account of his idealistic love for Beatrice Portinari, composed after her death. It is a carefully constructed composition of unique and original character: prose is interspersed with verse, serving to provide a narrative line between the lyrics and also to illuminate their meaning by exegesis of a scholastic tone. The combination of realism and suggestion of hidden meanings as well as the calculated design of the little book give the reader a foretaste of the Commedia (The Divine Comedy).

The poet's immersion in politics following the death of Beatrice and his subsequent banishment and disillusionment altered the course of both his reading and his writing: he turned from the quasi-mystic devotion to Beatrice (and Revelation) to the study of philosophy. This shift is documented in Il Convivio (The Banquet), a long, digressive work, dealing with philosophical, ethical, and even political matters, revealing a new area of study: Aristotle, Boethius, and Virgil are authorities of recurrent reference. As in The New Life, prose is used to explicate poems but in The Banquet the prose element is far greater. Another area of his studies after his exile is disclosed by De vulgari eloquentia (Literature in the Vernacular), written in Latin, a pioneering exercise in linguistic studies in which the author attempts to define the characteristics of true Italian speech. The all but obsessive interest in political matters, a natural concomitant of his exile, is the motivation for his De monarchia (Monarchy) and his impassioned Epistolae (The Letters). These Latin items of his canon were composed in all likelihood in the years of Henry VII's effort to reassert Imperial supremacy in Italy and probably when the writing of The Divine Comedy was already in progress.

For his “minor works” alone—all original and significant—Dante would be accounted a major figure in Italian—and even European—literary history, but it is The Divine Comedy which has given him a unique and enduring pre-eminence. In the context of the times it is surprising that a work of such epic dimensions should not have been written in Latin—and, according to Boccaccio, Dante at first thought of using that tongue. The choice of the vernacular for his masterpiece was of crucial importance in the development of Italian literature, but the greatness of the work makes even such a determinant role merely incidental.

The prestige of the poem has long endured. Through the centuries immediately following its composition it maintained its eminence and survived through the less appreciative climate of the 17th and 18th centuries, gathering new vitality in the 19th and growing in popularity and esteem over the past 200 years. The scope of its attraction has been uniquely vast, rivalling that of the Homeric poems; through the years it has consistently won wide readership and critical attention in all nations of the old world and the new. It has charmed the “man in the street” and fascinated intellectuals. For the English-speaking world, one eloquent statistic may be cited: there have been no fewer than 47 translations of the poem into English (not counting partial versions) and more are in the course of preparation.

There are many reasons for such persistent vitality just as there are many facets and levels of meaning in the work itself. For Dante, according to his letter to Can Grande, the literal substance of the poem is simply an account of the state of souls after death, with allegorical implications below the surface. But the mode of depiction is not simply expository; it is cast in narrative form. And it is a story compellingly told, in which the protagonist, the author himself, describes his pilgrimage through the Christian realms of the after-life, Hell, Purgatory, and Heaven. These are kingdoms of fancy, to be sure, in which the author is free to invent backgrounds, scenes, and events. But these kingdoms are populated by characters drawn not from inventive fancy but from the narrator’s own acquaintance, whether in experience or in his readings, and they are set forth with convincing realism. The essential ingredients for assuring the reader’s interest—movement, suspense, recognition—are present from beginning to end as the pilgrim-narrator moves from one circle of Hell, one terrace of Purgatory, or one circling Heaven to another with surprises for himself and his reader at every passage. In all of these realms the wayfarer has a companion and guide (Virgil or Beatrice) to instruct and advise him but with the tactical function also of giving life to the narrative through dialogue, more effective than simple narrational exposition in providing dramatic movement. No writer of fiction has planned his art with greater care or shrewdness. But The Divine Comedy is more than fiction. The characters, including the narrator, have suggestive symbolic dimensions, allusive and often challengingly ambiguous. As the story unrolls the reader becomes aware that the realms of fancy or theological postulate are also provinces of the world we live in, depicted with a perception fortified by learning and a commitment born of faith and hope. It is our world that we recognize behind the veil, with all its faltering waywardness, penitential meditation, and yearning for salvation and exaltation. The wayfarer too is not simply a 14th-century Florentine exile; he is Everyman, and he speaks for all of us. We are his fellow pilgrims sub specie aeternitatis.

The substance of the poem is given strength and beauty by rare technical artistry. The Divine Comedy is a masterful design, with carefully planned and harmonious proportions: all of the cantiche are of approximately the same length, and the dimensions of each canto also bear witness to the “fren dell’arte.” Terza rima itself, with its syllogistic construction and its subliminal trinitarian implications, has also the practical uses of linkage and invitation to memorization. The poet makes skilful use, too, of such devices as alliteration, assonance, and even deft repetition. His imagery is remarkable for its variety—animals, plants, trees, and flowers mingle with historical allusions and numerological and mathematical figures in the embroidery of the poem. Some of these are lost in translation but a good translation—and there have been many such—can convey much of this accidental charm into another tongue.

So many, rich, and varied are the threads of which the cloth of The Divine Comedy is woven that the nature of the work defies simple definition. It has been called “a personal epic”: it is assuredly a confessional autobiography. It is likewise a patient and lucid exposition of orthodox dogma and an encyclopedia as well. At the same time it may be seen as a great love poem, for Beatrice is the motivation and the goal of the pilgrimage; furthermore each great division ends with the same word, suggesting a vast “canzone” of three great stanzas. Or we may see the Comedy as a “synthesis of medieval learning,” which, at least incidentally, it is. But it is also a synthesis of the aspirations, sensibilities, and ultimate destiny of mankind. It is, most deeply, a statement of affirmation, set forth in terms of a certain time and place and contingent circumstance but valid for all times. Matter, manner, and message are blended not only with exceptional craftsmanship but with commitment and conviction. Aesthetically irresistible, the story of the extra-terrestrial pilgrimage is also on a deeper level reassuring and inspirational.

—Thomas G. Bergin

See the essays on The Divine Comedy and The New Life.

ALLENDE, Isabel

Born: Lima, Perú, 2 August 1942. Niece and goddaughter of former Chilean President Salvador Allende who died in the military takeover in 1973. Education: Graduated from a private high school in Santiago, Chile, 1959. Family: Married 1) Miguel Frías, 1962 (divorced, 1987), one daughter (deceased) and one son; 2) William Gordon, 1988; one stepson. Career: Secretary, United Nations Food and Agricultural Organization, Santiago, Chile, 1959–65; worked as a journalist, editor and advice columnist for the magazine Paula from 1967–74; interviewer for Channel 13/Channel 7 television station 1970–75; worked on movie newsreels, 1973–75; administrator, Colegio Marroco, Caracas, Venezuela, 1979–82; guest teacher, Montclair State College, New Jersey, 1985, and University of Virginia, 1988; Gildersleeve Lecturer, Barnard College, New York, 1988; taught creative writing at the University of California, Berkeley, 1989. Lives in San Rafael, California. Awards: Best Novel of the Year, Chile, 1983; “Panorama Literario,” Chile, 1983; Author of the Year, Germany, 1984; Book of the Year, Germany, 1984; “Grand Prix d’Evasion,” France, 1984; “Radio Televisión Belga: Point de Mire,” Belgium, 1985; Colima Literary prize, México, 1986; “XV Premio Internazionale I Migliori Dell’Anno,” Italy, 1987; Book of the Year, Switzerland, 1987; Library Journal’s Best Book, United States, 1988; Before Columbus Foundation award, United States, 1988; Best Novel, México, 1985; Author of the Year, Germany, 1986; Freedom to Write Pen Club, United States, 1991; “XLI Bancarella,” Italy, 1993; Independent Foreign Fiction, England, 1993; Brandeis University Major Book Collection, USA 1993; "Feminist of the Year award," The Feminist Majority Foundation, United States, 1994; "Condecoración Gabriela Mistral," Chile, 1994; "Critics Choice," United States, 1996; "Books to Remember," American Library Association, United States, 1996; "Books to Remember," The New York Public Library; "Malaparte" Amici di Capri, Italy, 1998; "Donna Citta Di Roma," Italy, 1998; "Dorothy and Lilian Gish prize for Excellence in the Arts," United States, 1998; "Sara Lee Foundation," United States, 1998. Professor of Literature Honoris Causae, University of Chile, 1991; Doctor of Letters at SUNY, United States, 1991; Doctor of Humane Letters at Florida Atlantic University, United States, 1996. Member: Academy of Arts and Sciences, Puerto Rico, 1995; "Academia de la Lengua," Chile, 1989.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

Civilice a su troglodita: Los impertinentes de Isabel Allende (humor). 1974.

La casa de los espíritus (novel). 1982; as The House of the Spirits by Magda Bogin, 1985.

La gorda de porcelana (juvenile literature). 1983.

De amor y de sombra (novel). 1984; as Of Love and Shadows by Margaret Sayers Peden, 1987.

Eva Luna (novel). 1987; as Eva Luna by Margaret Sayers Peden, 1988.

Cuentos de Eva Luna (short stories). 1989; as The Stories of Eva Luna by Margaret Sayers Peden, 1991.

El plan infinito (novel). 1991; as The Infinite Plan by Margaret Sayers Peden, 1993.

Afrodita: Recetas, cuentos y otros afrodisiacos. 1997; as Aphrodite: A Memoir of the Senses by Margaret Sayers Peden, 1998.

Hija de la fortuna (novel). 1999.

Retrato en sepia (novel). 2001.

Other

Paula (memoirs/ autobiography). 1994; translated by Margaret Sayers Peden, 1995

*

Critical Studies: "Entrevista a Isabel Allende/Interview with Isabel Allende" by Marjorie Agosín, translated by Cola Franzen in, Imagine vol. 1, no. 2, Winter, 1984; Narrative Magic in the Fiction of Isabel Allende by Patricia Hart, 1989; "A Passage to Andorgyny: Isabel Allende's La casa de los espíritus" by Linda Gould Levine, in In the Feminine Mode: Essays on Hispanic Women Writers, edited by Noel Valis and Carol Maier, 1990; Isabel Allende, in Spanish American Women Writers: A Bio-bibliographical Source Book by Linda Gould Levine, edited by Diane Marting, 1990; Critical Approaches to Isabel Allende's Novels, edited by Sonia Riquelme Rojas and Edna Aguirre Rehbein, 1991.

* * *

Isabel Allende is one of the most widely read Latin American women authors, her work having been translated into some thirty languages. A great deal of Isabel Allende's appeal to international readers is the images she presents of Chile and Latin America. She portrays it as a dichotomy and a world of radical differences with rich and poor, military coups, revolutionary governments, passionate women and men, women with magical powers and men who can be monsters, where there exists poets alongside of torturers and there exist enthralling storytellers. After the military coup of 1973, Allende and her family moved to Venezuela. While in Venezuela, she wrote her first novel La casa de los espíritus (The House of the Spirits). The theme of exile is present in Eva Luna, De amor y de sombra (Of Love and Shadows), Daughter of Fortune, and the autobiographical Paula besides The House of the Spirits.

Her second novel, Of Love and Shadows also takes place in an unnamed Latin American country, which is of course Chile under the military dictatorship of General Pinochet. It details the coming of age of a young upper class journalist who develops a political consciousness, as she realizes things are not what they seem on the surface. She and her photographer lover investigate a boarded up mine discovering "disappeared" buried there. Afterwards, they are forced to flee the country. The novel is suspenseful as the personal dramas reveal themselves and take shape. She skillfully maintains the tension and terror inherent in life under a military dictatorship while at the same time developing the love story between the journalist and her photographer. The novel is based, in part, on events that took place at Lonquén mine. Here as she does in The House of the Spirits, Allende constructs fiction on the base of historical reality, which is the story of Latin American politics and its effects on the lives of her people.

Her next works are Eva Luna and Cuentos de Eva Luna (The Stories of Eva Luna) where the theme of dictatorship is not directly visible although, they are imbued with revolutionary politics. Eva Luna is set in Venezuela and like her previous novels recounts the life of the protagonist. It is a coming of age novel, with a picaresque element as Eva encounters and becomes friends with a variety of people: Huberto Naranjo, a future guerrilla fighter; Halabí, a Turkish merchant; Mimí the transsexual; and Elvira, who is a surrogate grandmother. Each contributes to Eva's development as a storyteller. Allende weaves together the personal story of the illegitimate orphan, Eva Luna, who becomes a scriptwriter and storyteller with that of Rolf Carlé, a filmmaker and Austrian immigrant, who carries the burden of his father having been a Nazi, both of whom come of age in this novel. The Stories of Eva Luna are twenty-three short stories whose theme centers around love, supposedly written by Eva Luna during the previous novel.

Again taking a page from her life, El plan infinito (The Infinite Plan) is based on the life of William Gordon (who is today her husband) and is set in the western United States and explores the drug culture, Viet Nam and the trauma of war. Paula is more autobiographical than other works as she narrates her daughter's death. Like The House of the Spirits, it too began as a letter to her daughter. This work rises above the sentimentality of a memoir. After the death of Paula, Allende was unable to write until she thought of the delights of food and came up with Afrodita: Recetas, cuentos y otros afrodisiacos (Aphrodite: A Memoir of the Senses), which is both a cookbook and a playful memoir.

The story of Eliza Sommers is told in Daughter of Fortune when a young Chilean woman travels to California during the Gold Rush in search of love. Here again we see the theme of exile. Eliza is left on the doorstep of Jeremy Sommers at birth. His sister Rose and brother John convince him to keep the child who grows up between two worlds—Rose's liberal lifestyle and the housekeeper Mamá Fresia who teaches her about herbs and cooking. Joaquín Andieta awakens Eliza's adolescent passions; he leaves for San Francisco and with the help of Mamá Fresia, Eliza sets sail for California too. Once in California, the novel recounts Eliza's adventures. Daughter of Fortune reiterates many of the characteristics of Allende's previous novels, beginning with the strong female characters. Both Rose and Eliza break and trespass on traditional roles and own their own destinies. Also evident is the use of national myths but not through a military coup—rather by way of the role Chileans played in the Gold Rush, thereby they are exiled from their homeland and are marginalized. Allende admitted that this book is pure fiction and is the one that least deals with her.

Considered in part a magic realist, Allende is also part of the Latin American feminist awakening, working with the themes of feminism, politics, and writing as an art. Allende is not passive but passionate about politics, history, and her society. The majority of her protagonists are marginalized and/or exiled from their home country. She continues to prove her capacity and capability as an engaging writer who weaves intriguing stories of high intensity in a concise and straightforward way. Isabel Allende's novels depict strong female characters that possess paranormal characteristics à la magical realism. Her female protagonists are able to function successfully in reality when dictated by events such as social injustice. Her male characters are sensitive revolutionaries engaged in political intrigue and social issues. Critics have pointed out and noted as a distraction that an overriding theme is the search for the one perfect male partner to complete, as many of her novels can be viewed as sentimental love stories. Nevertheless, there is intrinsic entertainment in a good love story, particularly when it is combined with well-formed prose intertwined and permeated with history, politics, and a dash of the unknown. As many readers are unfamiliar with Latin America, this is a way to make the message more palatable. Isabel Allende may be one of a handful of Latin American women who have garnered recognition outside the academic community and become well known to the general reading public.

—Beth Pollack

See the essay on The House of the Spirits.

AMADO (DE FARIA), Jorge (Leal)

Born: Ferradas, Itabuna, Bahia, Brazil, 10 August 1912. Education: Educated at the Jesuit Colégio Antônio Vieira, Salvador, 1923–26; entered the Ginásio Ipiranga, Salvador, 1926; Faculty of Law, Federal University, Rio de Janeiro, 1931–35, diploma in law 1935. Family: Married 1) Matilde Garcia Roas in 1933 (separated 1944), one daughter; 2) Zélia Gattai in 1945, one son and one daughter. Career: Reporter, Diário da Bahia, 1927, and contributor, A Luva, Samba, Meridiano, A Semana, O Momento, O Jornal, Diário de Notícias, A Gazeta de Notícias, and O Correio do Povo, 1927–30; moved to Rio de Janeiro, 1930; editor, Revista Rio Magazine, 1933; worked for José Olímpio, publishers, from 1934; editor, A Manhã the publication of the opposition Aliança Nacional Libertadora [National Freedom Alliance]; co-editor, Centro de Cultura Moderna's Movimento, 1934–35; imprisoned for suspected involvement in coup attempt, 1935, and his books banned, 1938–43; travelled to Mexico and the USA, 1937; editor, Dom Casmurro, 1938–39, and contributor, Diretrizes, 1939; lived mainly in Argentina, 1941–42; returned to Brazil, 1942, and was re-arrested and confined to the Bahia region; contributor, “Diário da Guerra” column for O Imparcial, from 1943; editor, Hoje, São Paulo, 1945; after the fall of Getúlio Vargas's regime (1930–45), elected Communist deputy for the São Paulo region, 1945, until the Party again declared illegal in 1947; went into exile: in Paris, 1947–49, Scandinavia and Eastern Europe, 1949–50, and Prague, 1950–51; travelled to China and Mongolia, 1952; returned to Brazil, 1952; founder, Para Todos, Rio de Janeiro, and its editor, 1956–58; travelled to Cuba and Mexico, 1962; settled in Salvador, 1963; visited Canada and USA 1971: writer in residence, Pennsylvania State University; lived in London, 1976. Delegate, first Brazilian Writers Congress, 1945; vice-president, Brazilian Union, 1954; co-organizer, first Festival of Brazilian Writing, 1960. Awards: Graça Aranha Foundation prize; Stalin peace prize, 1951; National literary prize, 1958; Gulbenkian prize (Portugal), 1971; Italian Latin-American Institute prize, 1976; Nonnino literary prize (Italy), 1983; Neruda prize, 1989; Volterra prize (Italy), 1989; Sino del Duca prize (Paris), 1990; Mediterranean prize, 1990. Member: Brazilian Academy, since 1961; corresponding member, East German Academy of Science and Letters. Commander, Légion d'honneur, 1984. Died: 6 August 2001, in Salvador, Brazil.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

- Lenita*, with Dias da Costa and Edison Carneiro. 1930.
O país do carnaval. 1932.
Cacau. 1933.
Suor. 1934; translated as Sweat, 1937.
Jubiabá. 1935; as Jubiabá, translated by Margaret A. Neves, 1984.
Mar morto. 1936; as Sea of Death, translated by Gregory Rabassa, 1984.
Capitães de areia. 1937; as Captains of the Sands, translated by Gregory Rabassa, 1988.
Terras do sem fim. 1942; as The Violent Land, translated by Samuel Putnam, 1945; revised editions, 1965 and 1989.
São Jorge dos Ilhéus. 1944.
Seara vermelha. 1946.
Os subterrâneos da liberdade: Os asperos tempos, Agonia da noite, A luz no túnel. 3 vols., 1954.
Gabriela, cravo e canela. 1958; as Gabriela, Clove and Cinnamon, translated by William L. Grossman and James L. Taylor, 1962.
Os velhos marinheiros: Duas hisódrias de cais de Bahia (includes A morte e a morte de Quincas Berro d'Água). 1961; A morte e a morte de Quincas Berro d'Água published separately, 1978; as Home Is the Sailor, translated by Harriet de Onís, 1964; as The Two Deaths of Quincas Wateryell, translated by Barbara Shelby, 1965.
Os pastores da noite. 1964; as Shepherds of the Night, translated by Harriet de Onís, 1966.
Dona Flor e seus dois maridos. 1966; as Dona Flor and Her Two Husbands, translated by Harriet de Onís, 1969.
Tenda dos milagres. 1969; as Tent of Miracles, translated by Barbara Shelby, 1971.
Tereza Batista, cansada de guerra. 1972; as Tereza Batista, Home from the Wars, translated by Barbara Shelby, 1975.

O gato malhado e a andorinha sinhá (for children). 1976; as The Swallow and the Tomcat: A Love Story, translated by Barbara Shelby Merello, 1982.

Tieta do Agreste, pastora de cabras. 1977; as Tieta the Goat Girl, translated by Barbara Shelby Merello, 1979.

Farda, fardão, camisola de dormir: Fábula para acender uma esperança. 1979; as Pen, Sword, Camisole: A Fable to Kindle a Hope, translated by Helen R. Lane, 1985.

Tocaia grande: a face obscura. 1984; as Showdown, translated by Gregory Rabassa, 1988.

O sumiço da santa: Uma história de feitiçaria: Romance baiano. 1988; as The Golden Harvest, translated by Clifford E. Landers, 1992.

A descoberta da América pelos turcos ou como o árabe Jamil Bichara, desbravador de florestas, de visita à cidade de Itabuna para dar abasto ao corpo, ali lhe ofereceram fartura e casamento ou ainda os esponsais de Adma. 1992.

The War of the Saints, translated by Gregory Rabassa, 1993.

Suor: Romance, 1998.

Verse

A estrada do mar. 1938.

Plays

O amor de Castro Alves. 1947; as O amor do soldado, 1958.

Other

ABC de Castro Alves (biography). 1941.

Vida de Luis Carlos Prestes, o cavaleiro da esperança (biography). 1942; as O Cavaleiro da Esperança, 1945.

Obras. 17 vols., 1944–67.

Bahia de todos os santos: Guia das ruas e dos mistérios da cidade do Salvador (travel writing). 1945.

Homens e coisas do partido comunista (political writings). 1946.

O mundo da paz (travel writing). 1951.

Obras ilustradas. 19 vols., 1961–72.

O mistério dos MMM, with others. 1962.

Bahia boa terra Bahia, with Carybé and Flávia Damm. 1967.

Iconografia dos deuses africanos no Candomblé da Bahia, with Pierre Verger and Waldeloir Rego. 1980.

O menino Grapiúna (memoirs). 1982.

A cidade de Bahia, with Carybé, photographs by Mario Cravo Neto. 1984.

Terra mágica da Bahia, with Alain Draeger. 1984.

A bola e o goleiro (for children). 1984.

Navegação de cabotagem. 1992.

*

Bibliography: Brazilian Literature: A Research Guide by David William Foster and Walter Rela, 1990.

Critical Studies: Brazil's New Novel: Four Northeastern Masters by Fred P. Ellison, 1954; Escritores Brasileiros Contemporâneos by Renard Perez, 1960; Jorge Amado: Vida e obra (includes bibliography) by Miécio Táti, 1961; "Poetry and Progress in Jorge Amado's Gabriela, cravo e canela" by Richard A. Mazzara, in Hispania, 46, 1963; "The Five Faces of Love in Jorge Amado's Bahian Novels" by Gregory Rabassa, in Revista de Letras, 1963; Gabriela: seu cravo e sua canela, 1964, Os mistérios de vida e os mistérios de Dona Flor, 1972, O barroco e o maravilhoso no romance de Jorge Amado, 1973, and A contraprova de Tereza, Favo-de-Mel, 1973, all by Juarez da Gama Batista; "Narrative Focus in Jorge Amado's Story of Vasco Moscoso Aragão" by Judith Bernard, in Romance Notes, 8, 1966; "Afro-Brazilian Cults in the Novels of Jorge Amado" by Russell G. Hamilton, in Hispania, 50(2), 1967; "The 'New' Jorge Amado" by Elizabeth Schломann Lowe, in Luso-Brazilian Review, 6, 1969; Criaturas de Jorge Amado by Paulo Tavares, 1969; "Allegory in Two Works of Jorge Amado" and "Moral Dilemma in Jorge Amado's Dona Flor e seus dois maridos" both in Romance Notes, 13, 1971, and "Duality in Jorge Amado's The Two Deaths of Quincas Wateryell" in Studies in Short Fiction, 15, 1978, all by Malcolm Noel Silverman; "The Preservation of African Culture in Brazilian Literature: The Novels of Jorge Amado" by Maria Luísa Nunes, in Luso-Brazilian Review, 10, 1973; "Popular Poetry in the Novels of Jorge Amado" by Nancy T. Baden, in Journal of Latin American Lore, 2(1), 1976; "The Malandro, or Rogue Figure, in the Fiction of Jorge Amado" in Mester, 6, 1976, and "Double Perspective in Two Works of Jorge Amado" in Estudios Iberoamericanos, 4, 1978, both by Bobby J. Chamberlain; "Jorge Amado, Jorge Desprezado" by Jon S. Vincent, in Luso-Brazilian Review, 15 (supplement), 1978; Jorge Amado: Política e literatura by Alfredo Wagner Berno de Almeida, 1979; "The Problem of the Unreliable Narrator in Jorge Amado's Tenda dos milagres" in Romance Quarterly, 30, 1983, and "Structural Ambiguity in Jorge Amado's A morte e a morte de Quincas Berro d'Água" in Hispania, 67, 1984, both by Earl E. Fitz; "The Guys and Dolls of Jorge Amado" by L. Clark Keating, in Hispania, 66, 1983; "Jorge Amado: Morals and Marvels" by Daphne Patai, in her Myth and Ideology in Contemporary Brazilian Fiction, 1983; "Jorge Amado: Populism and Prejudice" by David Brookshaw, in Race and Color in Brazilian Literature, 1986; Jorge Amado: Retrato Incompleto, 1993; Jorge Amado: Ricette Narrative, 1994; Blackness: Culture, Ideology and Discourse: A Comparative Study by Femi Abodunrin, 1996; Jorge Amado: New Critical Essays, edited by Keith H. Brower, Earl E. Fitz, and Enrique Martinez-Vidal, 2001.

* * *

Jorge Amado is described rightly as Brazil's best-known novelist. An exceedingly prolific writer whose work spanned seven decades, Amado began writing in 1930 and published his first novel, O país do carnaval [Carnival Country] in 1932; in 1992, the year of his 80th birthday, he published a volume of memoirs, Navegação de cabotagem [Coastwise Shipping], and a novella, A descoberta da América pelos turcos ou de como o árabe Jamil Bichara, desbravador de florestas, de visita à cidade de Itabuna para dar abasto ao corpo, ali lhe ofereceram fartura e casamento ou ainda os esponsais de Adma [America's Discovery by the Turks, or How the Arab Jamil Bichara, Clearer of Forests, on a Visit to the City of Itabuna to Fortify His Body, Was Offered Abundance and Marriage, or Even the Marriage Vows of Adma], destined to mark the quincentenary of Christopher Columbus's discovery of America. His works have been translated into some 40 languages, adapted for film, and serialized for television. There is some disagreement among critics about the "literariness" of his work, but this has affected neither his popularity nor, indeed, his immense readability. Several controversies surround his literary output, and critical opinion is divided as to whether or not his early novels are little more than crude exposés of sociopolitical conditions driven by left-wing ideology, whether he is sexist in his attitude to women, and whether his works, regardless of how well-intentioned, enshrine and perpetrate racist attitudes.

Amado made his literary debut as an exponent of the Northeastern novel, and the greater part of his work has retained this regional bias. Few of his novels do not have as their geographical setting Salvador, capital of Bahia, or the cacao-producing region of Northeastern Brazil.

It is usual to separate Amado's work into two main phases. The first, stemming, from a strong ideological commitment to depict the Northeastern reality as faithfully as possible, begins with O país do carnaval and ends with Capitães da areia (Captains of the Sands). In these novels he chooses as his subject-matter some of the typical motifs of the Northeast: the drought and its effects on the inhabitants of the region; the plight of the hired plantation workers, and the urban poor; the situation of the black man in Brazil. His later works, from Terras do sem fim (The Violent Land) onwards, are characterized by a greater preoccupation with style and technique, incorporating elements of lyricism, humour, irony, and what some critics have tagged "magical socialism."

Any attempt to evaluate Amado's writing must inevitably lead to the conclusion that his major achievement is the group of novels that constitute his "cacao cycle." In Cacau, the situation in the Northeast is interpreted very much in terms of the class struggle. Although this work is not an aesthetic success, it introduces the themes that find a fuller, more artistic expression years later in The Violent Land, a "tropical western" considered by many to be Amado's best work. It deals with the conquest of the land, when ruthless men cleared the jungle to plant cacao, then fought for political control over their empires. The Violent Land focuses on the bloodthirsty struggle between two such planters, Colonel Horácio Silveira and Juca Badaró. The emphasis is on epic deeds rather than denunciation of social evils, and the main protagonist of the novel is the land itself.

São Jorge dos Ilhéus [St. George of the Islanders] continues the story told in The Violent Land, with more political content than its predecessor. It chronicles the transition from the pioneering days to the emergence of a new ruling class, the exporters, who employ different means to conquer the land. Whereas Amado views the pioneers with mingled affection and respect, it is clear that he feels a profound antipathy for the new order.

Gabriela, cravo e canela (Gabriela, Clove and Cinnamon) takes as its subject the city of Ilhéus during the period 1925 to 1926. This is very much a work of Amado's maturity, and romanticism and humour take precedence over social and political comment. The background of the novel is one of social change, with an ongoing conflict between defenders of the status quo and those who desire progress. Against the backdrop is narrated the love story of Nacib, the son of immigrants, and Gabriela, the picaresque mulata who comes out of the backlands to fuel male fantasies.

In 1984 Amado returned to the early days of the cacao region in Tocaia grande: a face obscura (Showdown), whose tone is predominantly nostalgic.

In his later works, Amado becomes increasingly interested in the art of story-telling, introducing elements of fantasy and popular culture into his novels. He is particularly interested in presenting strong female protagonists who symbolize for him the struggle against exploitation—the most notable being Tereza Batista in Tereza Batista, cansada de guerra (Tereza Batista, Home from the Wars) and Tieta in Tieta do Agreste (Tieta the Goat Girl)—and showing how they overcome adversity by using their sexuality as a weapon. However, as feminist critics have pointed out, the author is not advocating a radical change in the situation of women; rather he tends to emphasize the traditional stereotype of women as dependent on men for emotional and financial security.

The importance of Afro-Brazilian elements in Amado's work should not be overlooked—for instance, in Jubiabá, Gabriela, Clove and Cinnamon, and Tenda dos milagres (Tent of Miracles). In the numerous interviews he has given over the years, Amado has always insisted that Brazilian society, just as Brazilian Portuguese, must be understood as the product of the intermingling of various cultures, religions, and traditions. Thus he makes much of the religious syncretism to be found in the Northeast. It has, however, been suggested that his novels also reinforce white myths about the Afro-Brazilian containing what might be perceived as elements of prejudice.

Amado selects very specific aspects of the Brazilian social reality, focusing on the poor and disadvantaged, on blacks and women, as well as the rich and powerful. He might almost be described as the Master of the Brazilian picaresque, concentrating on the marginal elements of society and recounting their adventures with evident gusto, for instance, the escapades of Vadinho in Dona Flor e seus dois maridos (Dona Flor and Her Two Husbands), or the eponymous Quincas Berro d'Água (The Two Deaths of Quincas Wateryell).

Amado's writing derives much of its vigour from oral narrative tradition and his subject matter is unashamedly popular and picturesque. His overall achievement has been to write with exuberance and affection about the region and society he knows best. He will be remembered above all for his rich and creative use of the Brazilian idiom and for the essentially Brazilian characters he has created.

—P.A. Odber de Baubeta

ANACREON

Born: Teos, Ionia, Asia Minor, c. 570 BC. Career: When the Persians invaded in about 540 BC, left for Thrace, where he helped compatriots found the Greek colony of Abdera; tutor to the son of the tyrant Polycrates at Samos; after Polycrates' fall, invited to Athens by Hipparchus, son of the tyrant Pisistratus; may have gone to Thessaly after the assassination of Hipparchus in 514 BC. Honoured by statue on Acropolis. Died: c. 475 BC.

PUBLICATIONS

Verse

[Works], edited by T. Bergk, in Poetae lyrici Graeci, vol. 3, 1843, and in Anthologia lyrica, 1854; also edited by Valentino Rose, 1868,

B. Gentile, 1948, and M.L. West, 1984; selections in Poetae Melici Graeci (with commentary), edited by Denys Page, 1962, Supplementum Lyricis Graecis, 1974, and in Greek Lyric Poetry (with commentary), edited by David A. Campbell, 1982.

Anacreon Done into English, translated by Francis Willis, Thomas Wood, Abraham Cowley, and John Oldham. 1683, reprinted 1923.

The Odes, translated by Thomas Moore. 1800; also translated by Erastus Richardson, 1928.

The Anacreonta, translated by P.M. Pope. 1955.

*

Critical Studies: Anacréon et les poèmes anacréontiques, edited by A. Delbaille, 1891, reprinted 1970; Sappho und Simonides by U. von Wilamowitz-Moellendorff, 1913; Anacreon (in Italian) by B. Gentili, 1958; Greek Lyric Poetry by C.M. Bowra, 1961; The Poetics of Imitation: Anacreon and the Anacreontic Tradition (with Greek and Latin texts) by Patricia A. Rosenmeyer, 1992; Anacreon Redivivus: A Study of Anacreontic Translation in Mid-sixteenth-century France by John O'Brien, 1995; Greek Lyric Poetry: A Commentary on Selected Larger Pieces: Alcman, Stesichorus, Sappho, Alcaeus, Ibycus, Anacreon, Simonides, Bacchylides, Pindar, Sophocles, Euripides by G.O. Hutchinson, 2001.

* * *

Anacreon composed various kinds of poetry, including iambics, elegies, epigrams, and choral maiden-songs, but he is most celebrated for his short lyric pieces. The setting for many poems is the aristocratic symposium, where wine and witty conversation flowed freely. Anacreon wrote mainly in the metre known as the "anacreontic" (anacletic ionic dimeter) or in a mixture of glyconic and pherecratean rhythms; his poetry represents the peak of technical skill in the Greek monodic tradition. The careful choice and deft positioning of words create a concise and symmetrical perfection of expression, as exemplified by poem 395:

My temples are already grey and my head white;
Graceful youth is no longer with me, my teeth are old,
And of sweet life no long time is now left:
So often I weep, terrified of Tartarus,
For the chasm of Hades is dreadful, and the road down is Painful; and, for certain, he who goes down does not return.

Epithets and colours are judiciously chosen: the spear is "tearful" and Eros is "melting," while nymphs are "blue eyed," Eros is "golden-haired" throwing a "purple" ball, and Persuasion shines "silver." Effective metaphors are found, such as the "crown" of the city, referring to its walls, and also images, such as the leap from the Leucadian rock, "into the grey wave, drunk with love."

The subject matter of Anacreon's lyrics is typical of the genre: love, wine, the onset of old age, and death. He generally eschews certain other topics, such as politics and warfare, which were so popular with poets like Alcaeus. In eleg. fragment 1, he makes clear his preference:

I do not like the man who, while drinking wine near a full mixing-bowl,
Speaks of strife and tearful war,
But whoever, by combining the shining gifts of the Muses and Aphrodite,
Recalls the lovely good cheer.

Personal invective in the tradition of Archilochus is represented by poem 388, which ridicules a certain Artemon, who used to go about in filthy clothes and hang around with whores: now he travels in a lady's carriage, holding an ivory parasol. This piece indicates that Anacreon was well able to compose in the barbed style.

In the poems and fragments which survive, the poet is particularly concerned with the bittersweet experience of love with both boys and girls, as in poem 360:

O boy with the girlish look,
I am after you, but you do not notice,
Unaware that you hold
The reins of my soul.

Several poems are addressed to Eros, the god of love, who is variously depicted as a boxer, a smith, and a dice-player (with dice called Madness and Confusion). In Anacreon's verses, Eros is often a violent and disruptive force, envisaged as a personal opponent, who toys with and abuses his victims. Yet at the same time there is a general lightness of tone in the description of these little love affairs, befitting their sophisticated symposiastic context. Thus, even though the poet often names the objects of his passion, such as Cleoboulus, there is a sense that the romance is inevitably fleeting, and all part of the delightful intoxication induced by the "honey-sweet wine." After Eros, the deity most frequently mentioned is, appropriately enough, Dionysus.

Fragment 347 comes from a poem which appears to have been a not entirely serious lament for the lost locks of Smerdis, who has come back from the barber looking less beautiful than before:

Now you are bald and your hair,
Having fallen into rough hands,
Has flown down all at once
Into the black dust,

Having miserably fallen upon the cut of the iron;
and I am worn away with anguish. . . .

Anacreon's verses, then, are not simply frivolous, but lack the personal intensity of, say, Sappho. Their tone is usually ironic, which creates a distancing effect. Here, the cutting of a youth's hair provokes an exaggerated and amusing reaction in his lover. The almost tragic tone of the lament sits incongruously with such a trivial event. Yet the falling of the severed hair into the black dust is symbolic of death, and the "iron" suggests not only the barber's blade, but also the sword of war. The cutting of the young man's hair represents a rite of passage, and momentarily takes us away from the carefree atmosphere of the banquet to the harsh world of daily life and its conflicts. For the young Greek male, warfare was almost as inevitable as death itself. It is this co-existence of the light and the dark, of the comic and the serious, which gives Anacreon's poetry its peculiar charm and which led to numerous imitations. Sixty of these are collected in a 10th-century manuscript of the Palatine Anthology and are known as the Anacreonta. None of the imitations is likely to be earlier than the Hellenistic period; while falling short of the original in linguistic virtuosity and versification, they are not without charm, and testify to the distinctive contribution of Anacreon to the Greek poetic tradition.

—David H. J. Larmour

ANDERSEN, Hans Christian

Born: Odense, Denmark, 2 April 1805. Education: Educated at schools in Odense to age 14; alone in Copenhagen, 1819–22, and patronized by various benefactors: loosely associated with the singing and dancing schools at Royal Theatre, 1819–22; attended Slagelse Latin school, 1822–26, and Elsinore grammar school, 1826–27; tutored in Copenhagen by L.C. Müller, 1827–28; completed examen artium, 1828. Career: Freelance writer from 1828: royal grant for travel, 1833, 1834, and pension from Frederik VI, 1838; granted title of professor, 1851; privy councillor, 1874. Member: Knight of Red Eagle (Prussia), 1845; Order of the Dannebrog, 1846; Knight of the Northern Star (Sweden), 1848; Order of the White Falcon (Weimar), 1848. Died: 4 August 1875.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Samlede skrifter [Collected Writings]. 33 vols., 1853–79; 2nd edition, 15 vols., 1876–80.
Romaner og rejseskildringer [Novels and Travel Notes], edited by H. Topsøe-Jensen. 7 vols., 1941–44.
Fairy Tales, edited by Svend Larsen, translated by R.P. Keigwin. 4 vols., 1951–40.
Complete Fairy Tales and Stories, translated by Erik Haugaard. 1974.
Samlede eventyr og historier [Collected Tales and Stories], edited by Erik Dal. 5 vols., 1975.

Fiction

Improvisatoren. 1835; as The Improvisatore; or, Life in Italy, translated by Mary Howitt, 1845.
Eventyr: Fortalt for børn [Fairy Tales for Children]. 6 vols., 1835–42; Nye Eventyr [New Fairy Tales], 4 vols., 1843–47; edited by Erik Dal and Erling Nielsen, 1963—; numerous subsequent translations.
O.T. 1836; as O.T.; or, Life in Denmark, translated by Mary Howitt, with Only a Fiddler, 1845.
Kun en Spillemand. 1837; as Only a Fiddler, translated by Mary Howitt, with O. T., 1845.
Billedbog uden billeder. 2 vols., 1838–40; as Picture Book Without Pictures, translated by Hanby Crump, 1856; as Tales the Moon Can Tell, translated by R.P. Keigwin, 1955.

Eventyr og historier [Tales and Stories]. 1839; Nye Eventyr og Historier, 6 vols., 1858–67; edited by Hans Brix and Anker Jensen, 5 vols., 1918–20.
De to baronesser. 1848; as The Two Baronesses, translated by Charles Beckwith Lohmeyer, 1848.
A Poet's Day Dreams (selected tales). 1853.
At være eller ikke være. 1857; as To Be, or Not to Be? translated by Mrs. Bushby, 1857.
Later Tales, translated by Caroline Peachey. 1869.
Lykke-Peer. 1870; as Lucky Peer, translated by Horace E. Scudder, 1871.

Verse

Digte [Poems]. 1830.
Samlede digte [Collected Poems]. 1833.
Seven Poems, translated by R.P. Keigwin. 1955.
Udvalgte digte [Selected Poems]. 1975.
Brothers, Very Far Away: and Other Poems, translated by Paula Hostrup-Jessen, 1991.

Plays

Kjærlighed paa Nicolai Taarn [Love on St. Nicholas Tower] (produced 1829). 1829.
Skibet, from a play by Scribe. 1831.
Bruden fra Lammemoor, music by Ivar Bredal, from the novel The Bride of Lammemoor by Scott (produced 1832). 1832.
Ravnen [The Raven], music by J.P.E. Hartmann, from a play by Gozzi (produced 1832). 1832.
Agnete og Havmanden [Agnete and the Merman], music by Nils V. Gade, from Andersen's poem (produced 1833). 1834.
Festen paa Kenilworth [The Festival at Kenilworth], music by C.E.F. Weyse, from the novel Kenilworth by Scott (produced 1836).
Skilles og mødes [Parting and Meeting] (produced 1836). In Det Kongelige Theaters Repertoire, n.d.
Den Usynlige paa Sprogø [The Invisible Man on Sprogø] (produced 1839).
Mulatten [The Mulatto], from a story by Fanny Reybaud (produced 1840). 1840.
Mikkels Kjærligheds historier i Paris [Mikkel's Parisian Love Stories] (produced 1840).
Maurerpigen [The Moorish Girl] (produced 1840), 1840.
En comedie i det grønne [Country Comedy], from a play by Dorvigny (produced 1840).
Fuglen i pæretæet [The Bird in the Pear Tree] (produced 1842).
Kongen drømmer [Dreams of the King] (produced 1844), 1844.
Dronningen paa 16 aar [The 16-Year-Old Queen], from a play by Bayard. 1844.
Lykkens blomst [The Blossom of Happiness] (produced 1845). 1847.
Den nye barselstue [The New Maternity Ward] (produced 1845). 1850.
Herr Rasmussen (produced 1846). Edited by E. Agerholm, 1913.
Liden Kirsten [Little Kirsten], music by J.P.E. Hartmann, from the story by Andersen (produced 1846). 1847.
Kunstens dannevirke [The Bulwark of Art] (produced 1848). 1848.
En nat i Roskilde [A Night in Roskilde], from a play by C. Warin and C.E. Lefevre (produced 1848). 1850.
Brylluppet ved Como-Søen [The Wedding at Lake Como], music by Franz Gläser, from a novel by Manzoni (produced 1849). 1849.

Meer end perler og guld [More Than Pearls and Gold], from a play by Ferdinand Raimund (produced 1849). 1849.
Ole Lukøie [Old Shuteye] (produced 1850). 1850.
Hyldeemoer [Mother Elder] (produced 1851). 1851.
Nøkken [The Nix], music by Franz Gläser (produced 1853). 1853.
Paa Langebro [On the Bridge] (produced 1864).
Han er ikke født [He Is Not Well-Born] (produced 1864). 1864.
Da Spanierne var her [When the Spaniards Were Here] (produced 1865). 1865.

Other

Ungdoms-forsøg [Youthful Attempts]. 1822.
Fodreise fra Holmens Canal til Østpynten af Amager i 1828 og 1829 [A Walking Trip from Holmen's Canal to Amager]. 1829.
Skyggebilleder af en Reise til Harzen. 1831; as Rambles in the Romantic Regions of the Harz Mountains, translated by Charles Beckwith Lohmeyer, 1848.
En digters bazar. 1842; as A Poet's Bazaar, translated by Charles Beckwith Lohmeyer, 1846; as A Visit to Germany, Italy and Malta, translated by Grace Thornton, 1987.
Das Märchen meines Lebens ohne Dichtung (in collected German edition). 1847; as The True Story of My Life, translated by Mary Howitt, 1847; as Mit eget eventyr uden digtning, edited by H. Topsøe-Jensen, 1942.
I Sverrig. 1851; as Pictures of Sweden, translated by Charles Beckwith Lohmeyer, 1851; as In Sweden, translated by K.R.K. MacKenzie, 1852.
Mit livs eventyr. 1855; revised editions, 1859, 1877; edited by H. Topsøe-Jensen, 1951; as The Story of My Life, translated by D. Spillan, 1871; as The Fairy Tale of My Life, translated by W. Glyn Jones, 1954; in part as The Mermaid Man, translated by Maurice Michael, 1955.
I Spanien. 1863; as In Spain, and A Visit to Portugal, translated by Mrs. Bushby, 1864; as A Visit to Spain, edited and translated by Grace Thornton. 1975.
Collected Writings. 10 vols., 1870–71.
Breve, edited by C.S.A. Bille and N. Bøgh. 2 vols., 1878.
Briefwechsel mit dem Grossherzog Carl Alexander von Sachsen-Weimar-Eisenach, edited by Emil Jonas. 1887.
Correspondence with the Late Grand-Duke of Saxe-Weimar, Charles Dickens, etc., edited by Frederick Crawford. 1891.
Optegnelsesbog, edited by Julius Clausen. 1926.
Breve til Therese og Martin R. Henriques 1860–75 (correspondence), edited by H. Topsøe-Jensen. 1932.
Brevveksling med Edvard og Henriette Collin (correspondence), edited by H. Topsøe-Jensen. 6 vols., 1933–37.
Brevveksling med Jonas Collin den Ældre og andre Medlemmer af det Collinske Hus (correspondence), edited by H. Topsøe-Jensen. 3 vols., 1945–48.
Romerske Dagbøger [Roman Diaries], edited by Paul V. Rubow and H. Topsøe-Jensen. 1947.
Brevveksling (correspondence), with Horace E. Scudder, edited by Jean Hersholt. 1948; as The Andersen-Scudder Letters, translated by Waldemar Westergaard, 1949.
Reise fra Kjøbenhavn til Rhinen [Travels from Copenhagen to the Rhine], edited by H. Topsøe-Jensen. 1955.
Brevveksling (correspondence), with Henriette Wulff, edited by H. Topsøe-Jensen. 3 vols., 1959–60.

Breve til Mathias Weber (correspondence), edited by Arne Portman. 1961.
Levnedsbog 1805–1831 [The Book of Life], edited by H. Topsøe-Jensen. 1962.
Et besøg i Portugal 1866, edited by Pout Høybye. 1968; as A Visit to Portugal 1866, translated by Grace Thornton, 1972.
Skuggebilleder, edited by H. Topsøe-Jensen. 1968.
Breve til Carl B. Lorck (correspondence), edited by H. Tøpsoe-Jensen. 1969.
Dagbøger 1825–75, edited by Kåre Olsen and H. Tøpsoe-Jensen. 12 vols., 1971–76; as Diaries, edited and translated by Patricia Conroy and Sven H. Rossel, 1989.
Tegninger til Otto Zinck [Drawings for Otto Zinck], edited by Kjeld Heltoft. 2 vols., 1972.
Rom dagbogsnotater og tegninger [Diary and Drawings from Rome], edited by H. Topsøe-Jensen. 1980.
Album, edited by Kåre Olsen and others. 3 vols., 1980.
Hans Christian Andersen on Copenhagen, edited by Johan de Mylius, 1997.
The Red Shoes, retold and illustrated by Barbara Bazilian, 1997.
The Ugly Duckling, adapted and illustrated by Jerry Pinkney, 1999.
The Little Match Girl, adapted and illustrated by Jerry Pinkney, 1999.
The Dinosaur's New Clothes: A Retelling of the Hans Christian Andersen Tale by Diane Goode, 1999.

*

Bibliography: Andersen bibliografi 1822–1875 by B.F. Nielsen, 1942; Andersen litteraturen 1875–1968 by Aage Jørgensen, 1970, supplement, 1973; H.C. Andersen-litteraturen 1969–1994: en bibliografi by Aage Jørgensen, 1995.

Critical Studies: Hans Christian Andersen: His Life and Work edited by Svend Dahl and H. Topsøe-Jensen, 1955; Hans Christian Andersen: A Biography by Fredrick Böök, 1962; Hans Christian Andersen and the Romantic Theatre by Frederick J. Marker, 1971; Hans Christian Andersen and His World by Reginald Spink, 1972; Hans Christian Andersen: The Story of His Life and Work, 1805–75 by Elias Bredsdorff, 1975; Hans Christian Andersen by Bo Grønbech, 1980; “Andersen's Love” by Peter Brask and Turid Sverre, in The Nordic Mind: Current Trends in Scandinavian Literary Criticism edited by Frank E. Andersen and John Weinstock, 1986; H.C. Andersen og Thalia by Hans Christian Andersen, 1992; Hans Christian Andersen: Danish Writer and Citizen of the World edited by Sven Hakon Rossel, 1996; Hans Christian Andersen: The Fan Dancer by Alison Prince, 1998; Hans Christian Andersen: The Life of a Story-teller by Jackie Wullschlager, 2000.

* * *

The fame of Hans Christian Andersen—H.C. Andersen to his fellow countrymen and Hans Andersen to countless readers outside Denmark—is founded on paradox. Although he was—and is—a very distinctly Danish author, he was anything but parochial. Well-read, well-informed about the cultural and scientific developments of his time, and well-travelled—some of Andersen's travel-books still deserve attention, e.g., En digters bazar (A Poet's Bazaar)—he made a name for himself both in his own country and internationally as a novelist during his own lifetime. And yet, as the physicist H.C. Ørsted told a sceptical Andersen, if his novels made him famous, his fairy-tales would make him immortal.

Andersen's first love was the theatre, but in spite of his many works for the stage—of which Mulatten [The Mulatto] was the most significant—he was more at home in the free form of the novel than in the conventionally more disciplined forms of lyric and drama. His first novel, Improvisatoren (The Improvisatore), soon became popular abroad because of its perceptive descriptions of the colourful Italian life and landscapes. Like much of Andersen's work, including the fairy-tales, it had its roots in his own experience, and aspects of his own childhood among the lower classes formed part of the next two novels, O.T. and Kun en Spillemand (Only a Fiddler). He described his life directly in his autobiography, Mit livs eventyr (The Fairy Tale of My Life).

If the novel had given him greater freedom, it was only in the shorter form of the fairy-tale, which did not demand control of long plots or complex characterization, that he found his true medium. Andersen's first tales were published in 1835. That they gave him a reputation as a children's writer is no coincidence: the earliest among his 156 tales were written for children, and until 1843 his published collections carried the subtitle "Told for Children." As he gained confidence and increasingly wrote original stories—in fact only a minority, e.g., "Fyrtøjet" ("The Tinder Box"), 1835, derive from traditional folk-tales—he abandoned that subtitle and increasingly addressed himself to a grown-up audience. Stories like "Historien om en Moder" ("Story of a Mother," 1848) can be understood but not fully appreciated by children. Andersen's great achievement was to develop the form of the folk-tale into original, mature art in a way which has not been surpassed, and he did so partly by creating a new literary language which was essentially that of spoken narration, free of abstractions, concrete and deceptively simple. His best tales reveal his keen sense of observation of human behaviour and his deep understanding of the major issues of human existence, told with humour and sympathy.

—Hans Christian Andersen

See the essays on "The Emperor's New Clothes" and "The Snow Queen."

ANDRADE, Carlos Drummond de

Born: Itabira do Mato Dentro, Minas Gerais, Brazil, 31 October 1902. Education: Educated at Arnaldo College, Belo Horizonte, 1910–13; forced to return home because of poor health, where he was educated privately; Jesuit Anchieta College, Novo Friburgo, 1916–18 (expelled); studied pharmacy 1923–24, qualified 1925, but never practised. Family: Married Dolores Dutra de Moraes in 1925; one daughter. Career: Journalist, Belo Horizonte and Rio de Janeiro, 1920–22; co-founding editor of the magazine, A Revista, 1925; closed after three issues; teacher of geography and Portuguese, Itabira, 1926; worked on newspapers Diário de Minas, 1926–29, and Minas Gerais, 1929, both Belo Horizonte; civil servant from 1928: chief secretary to minister of education, Rio de Janeiro, 1934–45 (resigned); briefly co-editor, Tribuna Popular, 1945; worked for Office of the National Historical and Artistic Heritage, 1945–62. Visited Buenos Aires, 1950 and 1953. Contributor to several newspapers and journals, including Correio de Manhã and Jornal de Brasil, 1963–84. Awards: Brasília prize for literature (refused), 1975; National Walmap prize for literature, 1975. Died: 17 August 1987.

PUBLICATIONS

Collection

Obra poética. 8 vols., 1989.

Verse

Alguma poesia. 1930.

Brejo das almas. 1934.

Sentimento do mundo. 1940.

José. 1942.

Poesias. 1942.

A rosa do povo. 1945.

Novos poemas. 1948.

Poesia até agora (includes Novos poemas). 1948.

Claro enigma. 1951.

Viola de bolso. 1952.

Fazendeiro do ar e Poesia até agora. 1954.

A vida passada a limpo. 1959.

Antologia poetica. 1962.

Lição de coisas. 1962.

In the Middle of the Road (selected poems), translated by John Nist. 1965.

José e outros. 1967.

Boitempo; A falta que ama. 1968.

Reunião (includes all collections published 1930–62, except Viola de Bolso). 1969.

As impurezas do branco. 1973.

Menino antigo—Boitempo II. 1973.

Poesia completa e prosa. 1973.

Souvenir of the Ancient World, translated by Mark Strand. 1976.

Discurso de primavera. 1977; enlarged edition, 1978.

O marginal Clorindo gato e a visita. 1978.

Esquecer para lembrar—Boitempo III. 1979.

A paixão medida. 1980.

The Minus Sign: A Selection from the Poetic Anthology, translated by Virginia de Araújo. 1981.

Nova reunião. 2 vols., 1983.

Corpo. 1984.

Amar ds aprende amando. 1985.

Travelling in the Family, edited by Thomas Colchie and Mark Strand, translated by Colchie, Strand, Elizabeth Bishop, and Gregory Rabassa, 1987.

Poesia errante, derrames líricos. 1988.

Farewell. 1996.

Fiction

O gerente (stories). 1945.

Contos de aprendiz (stories). 1951.

Other

* * *

- Confissões de Minas*. 1944.
Passeios na Ilha (articles and essays). 1952.
Fala, Amendoeira. 1957.
A bolsa e a vida (includes verse). 1962.
Rio de Janeiro em prosa e verso, with Manuel Bandeira. 1965.
Cadeiro de balanço (articles). 1966.
Obra completa. 1967.
Caminhos de João Brandão (includes verse). 1970.
O poder ultrajovem (includes verse). 1972.
De notícias o não notícias farz-se a crônica, histórias, diálogos, dirigações. 1974.
Os dias lindos: crônicas. 1977.
Contos plausíveis. 1981.
Boca de Luar. 1984.
História de dois amores (for children). 1985.
O observador no escritório (diary). 1985.
Moça deitada na grama (chronicles). 1987.
Auto-retrato e outras crônicas (articles), edited by Fernando Py. 1989.
O avesso das coisas: aforismos. 1989.
 Translator, Uma gota de veneno, by François Mauriac. 1943.
 Translator, As relações perigosas, by Choderlos de Laclos. 1947.
 Translator, A fugitiva, by Proust. 1956.
 Translator, Artimanhas de Scapino by Molière. 1962.

*

Bibliography: Bibliografia comentada de Carlos Drummond de Andrade (1918–1930) by Fernando Py, 1980.

Critical Studies: “Conscience of Brazil: Carlos Drummond de Andrade,” in Américas, 15(1), 1963, and The Modernist Movement in Brazil, 1967, both by John Nist; Lira e antilira: Mário, Drummond, Cabral by Luiz Costa Lima, 1968; A rima na poesia de Carlos Drummond de Andrade by Hélcio Martins, 1968; “Inquietudes na Poesia de Drummond” by Antônio Cândido, in his Vários Escritos, 1970; Drummond: A Estilística da Repetição by Gilberto Mendonça Teles, 1970; Carlos Drummond de Andrade (biography) by Assis Brasil, 1971; A Astúcia da Mímese: Ensaio sobre lírica, 1975, and Verso universo em Drummond, 1975, both by José Guilherme Merquior; Terra e família na poesia de Carlos Drummond de Andrade by Joaquim Francisco Coelho, 1973; Poetas modernos de Brasil, 4. Carlos Drummond de Andrade by Silviano Santiago, 1976; Coleção fortuna crítica, 1. Carlos Drummond de Andrade edited by Sônia Brayner, 1977; Drummond: Uma poética do risco by Iumna Maria Simon, 1978; A dramaticidade na poesia de Drummond by Donald Schuler, 1979; Drummond o “Gauche” no tempo, 1972, and Carlos Drummond de Andrade: análise da obra, 1980, both by Affonso Romano de Sant’Anna; Poesia e poética de Carlos Drummond de Andrade by John Gledson, 1981; “The Precarious Self: Carlos Drummond de Andrade’s Brejo das Almas,” in Hispania, 65, 1, 1982, and The Unquiet Self: Self and Society in the Poetry of Carlos Drummond de Andrade, 1984, both by Ricardo da Silveira Lobo Sternberg; Os Sapatos de Orfeu: Biografia de Carlos Drummond de Andrade by José Maria Cançado, 1993; Confidência Mineira: O Amor na Poesia de Carlos Drummond de Andrade by Mirella Vieira Lima, 1995; Carlos Drummond de Andrade by Francisco Achcar, 2000.

In the middle of the road there was a stone
 there was a stone in the middle of the road
 there was a stone
 in the middle of the road there was a stone.
 I shall never forget this event
 in the life of my tired eyes.
 I shall never forget that in the middle of the road
 there was a stone
 there was a stone in the middle of the road
 in the middle of the road there was a stone

(translated by John Nist)

If Carlos Drummond de Andrade were still alive he might well feel irritated at being reminded that the above poem, “No meio do caminho” (“In the Middle of the Road”), remains his best known, and in a sense, most celebrated, poem. It was certainly, along with “Ode ao burguês” [Ode to the Bourgeois] by Mário de Andrade, the greatest succès de scandale created by the Brazilian Modernist Movement in the 1920s. It is but one of the 56 poems that comprise Drummond’s (he liked to be known by his mother’s family name) first collection that he did not publish until the age of 28. At first sight it looks like yet another of those poemas-piadas (joke-poems) with which the cheerfully irreverent Modernists either delighted or scandalized their public. Less charitably, one critic described this poem as the work of a man who had turned into a parrot.

The poem, like many more in Alguma poesia and the collections that followed it, Brejo das almas [Marsh of the Souls], Sentimento do mundo [Sentiment of the World], José, and A rosa do povo [The People’s Rose], is the reductio ad absurdum of the peculiarly drummondian poetic process whereby poetry is distilled from the banal. Contemplation of the stone is a metaphor for life that is senselessly circular, returning one ceaselessly to the blank contingency of matter. Repetition, in the poem, as in life, reigns supreme. In another early poem Drummond writes: “Planet, planet, vast planet/if I had been christened Janet/it’d be a rhyme, much less a start./ Planet, planet, vast planet/But so much vaster is my heart.” In the same poem, Drummond creates the concept of the gauche: “Go, Carlos! Be gauche in life”. The poet’s fallible subjectivity will always torment him. He, the subject, confronts the ineffability of the object. His mission is to achieve an equilibrium between these two. The timid poet from the exterior of Minas Gerais would confront and interpret existence. Poetry is provoked out of a desperate search for this equilibrium over some 60 years of poetic creation.

The poetic stance of the gauche, the awkward, left-handed, marginalized outsider avant la lettre, was Drummond’s response to the riddle of existence. In one of his rare prose poems, entitled “O enigma,” composed some 20 years later, he confronts again the image of an irreducible and incomprehensible object in the road, but it is not a stone; it is an “enigma,” an “enormous thing.” There are stones, but these are, presumably, human beings on the road of life. The mysterious form stands in their path; it paralyzes them forever. Of course, as the poet observes, if the enigma could be interpreted it would no longer be an enigma. It is a projection of man’s own imagination and his contradictions. The stones bewail their lot:

Oh! what good is intelligence . . . We were intelligent, and yet, to ponder on the threat is not to remove it; that only creates it. Oh! what good is sensitivity—sob the stones. We were sensitive, and the gift of compassion rebounds upon us, when we thought to show it to less favoured species.

“O enigma” is the final poem in Novos poemas [New Poems], and like his most celebrated volume, A rosa do povo [The People’s Rose], was a product of the 1940s in which Drummond did attain some kind of equilibrium between the utterly unreliable self, or subject, and the equally unknowable world of things. In “A flor e a náusea” he portrays himself as defeated prisoner of society and oppressed by tedium; and yet in the “river of steel” that is the busy street, a flower is born: “It is ugly. But it is a flower. It has made its way through the asphalt, the tedium, the loathing and the hate.” The flower, traditional symbol of life and hope, joins with the very visual image of the gauche in the figure of Charlie Chaplin, another obscure marginal—but with the power, as Drummond portrays him in the final poem of A rosa do povo, entitled “Canto ao homem ao povo Charlie Chaplin” [Song of the Man of the People Charlie Chaplin], to bring a form of redemption to the oppressed: “and they speak as well, the flowers that you love so dearly when they are trodden underfoot.”

This is a humane poetry of love; but despite the strong vein of eroticism in the early volumes—Drummond’s very last collection was an entire set of erotic poems—and the strong theme of human solidarity that informs the poetry of the 1940s, love is seen, in the present tense, as a sad game, and in retrospect, as an aching nostalgia for the passing of all that, with hindsight, one might still hold dear. Like the Modernist Movement which in his youth inspired him, Drummond seeks to forge an identity for Brazil, but in doing so creates a tragic vision of his destiny in the historical continuum that is Brazil. If the modernistas reached out into the four corners of their vast country to seize, spatially, the totality of their nation, Drummond’s mission turned out to be more temporal. He chose to plunge into the past, the past he knew, that of rural Minas Gerais, in order to articulate his own destiny as well as that of Brazil. In the process, he universalized his poetic drama: by evoking the past, he hoped to explain the present. It is a painful process that may be doomed to failure. His supreme myth plucked out of past time is his birthplace, Itabira: “Itabira is just a photograph on the wall./But how it makes me suffer!” It is above all the poet’s lucidity, honesty, and struggle for truth that makes him suffer in the course of his odyssey through the past and present of Minas Gerais. The great church clock in the poem “O relógio” [The Clock] in the collection Boitempo [Ox-time] symbolizes Drummond’s fate as the poet from Minas whose function is to bear witness, record and interpret Brazil, past, present, and future. But the poet in his old age has travelled far not only in terms of longevity but also in terms of ontological and poetic investigation. The poetry, of Boitempo and beyond seeks profound acceptance and disengagement, yet always within the unspoken pact forged with the phenomenological and spiritual world in his most overtly philosophical collection, Claro enigma [Clear Enigma]. Minas Gerais means “General Mines,” seen as a landscape of untold mineral wealth since the discovery in the 18th century of silver, gold, diamonds, and later, iron ore in vast quantities. This wealth built the now decaying baroque cities of Minas. Drummond meditates in “Os bens e o sangue” [The Gods and the Blood] on the wealth of which he has been disinherited and the blood he has inherited.

As he contemplates the family archive, his ancestors seem to address him across the decades and acknowledge his role in the continuum: “You are our natural seed and we fructify. you,/we are your explanation, your simplest virtue. . . /For it was only right that one of us should deny us the better to serve us.” Thus does Drummond fulfil a destiny, tragic in its resignation. In another poem from Claro enigma, “Morte das casas de Ouro Preto” [Death of the Houses of Ouro Preto], the rain falls endlessly on the decaying mansions of the once fabulous city. Water in Drummond is flux, passing time, destruction, and eternity. Now it is no longer a matter of change but of the absorption of man-made structures into the timeless pathos of Minas, back into the soil of Minas in order to complete the cycle: “May the beams of today body forth into trees!/May the dust on them be again the dust of the highways!”

For all his intermittent engagement with the theme of love, with the problems of urban society and with politics, Drummond is, ultimately, a great existential poet; perhaps the greatest that America has produced.

—R.J. Oakley

ANDRADE, Mário (Raul) de

Born: São Paulo, Brazil, 9 October 1893. Education: Educated at Escola de Nossa Senhora do Carmo, São Paulo, 1905–09; Álvares Penteado Commercial School, São Paulo, 1910; studied piano at the Musical and Dramatic Conservatory, São Paulo, 1911, degree 1917. Career: Involved in avant-garde artistic circles in the 1920s: co-organizer, the Modern Art Week at the Teatro Municipal, São Paulo, 1922; professor of the history of music and aesthetics, São Paulo Conservatory, 1925; contributor, “Taxi” column for Diário Nacional, from 1928; worked for the Ministry of Education’s schools’ music reform programme, 1930; co-founder, with Paulo Duarte, and director, Municipal Department of Culture, São Paulo, 1934–37; founded the Municipal Library, the Department of National Heritage, the journal Revista do Arquivo Municipal de São Paulo, and São Paulo’s Ethnography and Folklore Society (and its first president); moved to Rio de Janeiro, 1937; director, Federal University Institute of Arts, Rio de Janeiro, 1938–40, and held the chair of philosophy and history of art; headed the Enciclopédia Brasileira project for the National Book Institute, 1939; made anthropological research trips to northern Brazil, under commission from the Department of National Heritage, 1941. Organizer, first National Language Congress, 1937; co-founder, Brazilian Society of Writers, 1942. Member: São Paulo Academy of Letters. Died: 25 February 1945.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Obras completas. 24 vols., 1960–91.

1. Obra imatura.
2. Poesias completas.
3. Amar, verbo intransitivo.
4. Macunaíma.
5. Os contos de Belazarte.
6. Ensaio sobre a musica brasileira.
7. Música doce música.
8. Pequena história da música.
9. Namoros com a medicina.
10. Aspectos da literatura brasileira.

11. Aspectos da música brasileira.
  12. Aspectos das artes plásticas no Brasil.
  13. Música de feitiçaria no Brasil.
  14. O baile das quatro artes.
  15. Os filhos da Candinha.
  16. O padre Jesuíno de Monte Carmelo
  17. Contos novos.
  18. Danças dramáticas do Brasil.
  19. Modinhas imperiais.
  20. O empalhador de Passarinho.
  21. Quatro Pessoas.
  22. Dicionário musical brasileiro.
  23. Vida de cantor.
  24. Cartas de Mário de Andrade a Luís da Câmara Cascudo.
- Obras* [50th Anniversary of Modern Art Week Edition]. 15 vols., 1972.
- Poesias completas*, edited by Diléa Zanotto Manfio. 1987.

Verse

- Há uma gota de sangue em cada poema* (as Mário Sobral). 1917.
- Paulicéia desvairada*. 1926; as Hallucinated City (bilingual edition), edited and translated by Jack E. Tomlins, 1968.
- Clã do Jabuti*. 1927.
- Remate de Males*. 1930.
- Lira paulistana*. 1946.

Fiction

- Primeiro andar* (stories). 1926.
- Amar, verbo intransitivo*. 1927; edited by Telê Porto Ancona Lopez, 1982; as Fräulein, translated by Margaret Richardson Hollingsworth, 1933.
- Macunaíma*. 1928; edited by Telê Porto Ancona Lopez, 1978; as Macunaíma, translated by Edward Arthur Goodland, 1984.
- Belazarte*. 1934.
- Contos novos*. 1947.

Other

- A escrava que não é isaura*. 1925.
- Compêndio de história da música*. 1929; revised edition, as Pequena história da música, 1942.
- Modinhas imperiais*. 1930.
- Música, doce música*. 1933.
- O Aleijadinho e Álvares de Azevedo*. 1935.
- A música e a canção populares no Brasil*. 1936.
- Namoros com a medicina*. 1939.
- A expressão musical dos Estados Unidos*. 1940.
- Música do Brasil*. 1941.
- O movimento modernista*. 1942.
- Aspectos de literatura brasileira*. 1943.
- O baile das quatro artes*. 1943.
- Os filhos da Candinha*. 1943.
- O Empalhador de Passarinho*. 1944(?).
- Cartas de Mário de Andrade a Manuel Bandeira*. 1958.
- Danças dramáticas do Brasil*. 3 vols., 1959.
- Música de feitiçaria do Brasil*. 1963.
- Setenta e uma cartas de Mário de Andrade*. 1963.
- Aspectos das artes plásticas no Brasil*. 1965.

- Mário de Andrade escreve a Alceu, Meyer e outros*, edited by Lygia Fernandes. 1968.
- Itinerário: cartas a Alphonsus de Guimaraens filho*. 1974.
- Táxi e crônicas no Diário Nacional*. 1976.
- O turista aprendiz* (diaries), edited by Telê Porto Ancona Lopez. 1976.
- O banquete*. 1977.
- A lição do Amigo: cartas de Mário de Andrade a Carlos Drummond de Andrade*. 1982.
- Correspondente contumaz 1925–1944* (letters to Pedro Naval), edited by Fernando da Rocha Peres. 1982.
- Cartas: Mário de Andrade, Oneyda Alvarenga*. 1983.
- Entrevistas e depoimentos*, edited by Telê Porto Ancona Lopez, 1983.
- Cartas de Mário de Andrade a Álvaro Lins*. 1983.
- Os cocos*, edited by Oneyda Alvarenga. 1984.
- Cartas de Mário de Andrade a Prudente de Moraes*, edited by Georgina Koifman. 1985.
- Miguel de Andrade por el mismo*, edited by Paulo Duarte. 1985.
- Dicionário musical brasileiro*, edited by Oneyda Alvarenga and Flávia Camargo Toni. 1989.
- Cartas de Trabalho: Correspondência com Rodrigo Mello Franco de Andrade (1936–1945)*. 1989.
- A lição do guru: cartas a Guilherme Figueiredo, 1937–1945*. 1989.
- Querida Henriqueta: cartas de Mário de Andrade a Henriqueta Lisboa*, edited by Lauro Palú. 1991.
- Será o benedito! Artigos publicados no suplemento em rotogravura de O Estado de S. Paulo*, edited by Telê Porto Ancona Lopez. 1992.

*

Bibliography: Mário de Andrade: Bibliografia sobre a sua obra (Revista do Livro supplement) by Antônio Simões dos Reis, 1960; Brazilian Literature: A Research Guide by David William Foster and Walter Rela, 1990.

Critical Studies: Lição de Mário de Andrade by Lêdo Ivo, 1952; Mário de Andrade by Fernando Mendes de Almeida, 1962; “Some Formal Types in the Poetry of Mário de Andrade” by David William Foster, in Luso-Brazilian Review, December 1965; The Modernist Movement in Brazil: A Literary Study by John Nist, 1967; “The Literary Criticism of Mário de Andrade” by Thomas R. Hart, in Disciplines of Criticism: Essays in Literary Theory, Interpretation, and History edited by Peter Demetz and others, 1968; Roteiro de Macunaíma by M. Cavalcanti Proença, 1969; Poesia e prosa de Mário de Andrade by João Pacheco, 1970; Morfologia de Macunaíma by Haroldo de Campos, 1973; Roteiro de Macunaíma by M. Cavalcanti Proença, 1977; Política e poesia em Mário de Andrade by Joan Dassin, 1978; “Macunaíma as Brazilian Hero”, in Latin American Literary Review, 1978, and Literatura e Cinema: Macunaíma: do modernismo na literatura ao cinema novo, 1982, both by Randal Johnson; Mário de Andrade e a revolução da linguagem by José Maria Barbosa Gomes, 1979; “Preguiça and Power: Mário de Andrade’s Macunaíma” by Renata R. Mautner, in Luso-Brazilian Review, Summer 1984; Mário de Andrade: Hoje edited by Carlos E.O. Berriel, 1990; A presença do povo na cultura brasileira: ensaio sobre o pensamento de Mário de Andrade e Paulo Friere by Vivian Schelling, 1991; Modernisme brésilien et négritude antillaise: Mario de Andrade et Aimé Césaire by Maria de Lourdes Teodoro, 1999; Mário de Andrade: the Creative Works by José I. Suárez and Jack E. Tomlins, 2000; Correspondência Mario de Andrade and Manuel Bandeira, with introduction by Marcos Antonio de Moraes, 2000.

* * *

To call Mário de Andrade the creator of Brazilian modernism is an oversimplification, but if Oswald de Andrade, fellow poet and novelist, was its catalyst and presiding genius, Mário was surely the doyen, supreme symbol, and principal ideologue of that iconoclastic and brilliant artistic movement that burst upon the Brazilian cultural scene in 1922, changing forever the aesthetic landscape of Brazil. Andrade also distinguished himself in more, and disparate, fields than any other single individual among the talented generation of writers and artists that included the sculptor Brecheret, the composer Villa Lobos and the important poets Oswald de Andrade, Manuel Bandeira, and Carlos Drummond de Andrade.

Born in São Paulo in 1893, Andrade first studied sciences, but entered the São Paulo Conservatory of Musical and Dramatic Art in 1911, graduating in 1917 with the piano as his special subject. His musical background and a lifelong passion for folklore and the plastic arts caused him to make a mark early in his writing career as journalist, critic, and essayist. His writings on music, painting and folklore, especially that of his native Brazil, run to many volumes; but he was to make his mark most spectacularly as writer of lyric poetry and prose fiction. At the time of World War I, the predominant fashion in Brazilian poetry was that of a polite symbolism and Parnassianism. Andrade's first volume, Há uma gota de sangue em cada poema [There Is a Drop of Blood in Every Poem] betrays the Parnassian influence but it contains, too, the unmistakable rebelliousness and innovatory drive of all his imaginative oeuvre. He was destined to spearhead the artistic revolution of modernismo that was inspired by the Symbolist and Expressionist currents abroad in Europe in the last decades of the 19th century and the first two decades of the 20th. In formal terms, this meant experimentation with free verse, a broadening of terms of reference with regard to the possible thematics of poetry, and an impulse to embrace, artistically, the whole of lived experience—all the phenomena of early 20th-century life; hence the inordinate impact on Andrade and his artistic comrades-in-arms of Marinetti's Futurist Manifesto published in Paris in 1909. The age of speed and of the machine would fuel the imagination of the Brazilian Modernist movement in its heroic phase. Indeed, Andrade and his friends were called "futurists" in the months leading up to the São Paulo Modern Art Week they organized in February 1922. Andrade had written most of his second and most famous book of poetry, Paulicéia desvairada (Hallucinated City)—referring to São Paulo—in 1920, but it had been quoted extensively in the press and widely disseminated by members of the group, so that the poetry of the man whom Oswald de Andrade had hailed in a famous article as "my Futurist poet" was predictably greeted with boos and catcalls of the massed opponents of modernismo who crowded the hall in February of that year to hear it recited. The impact of this aggressive, anti-bourgeois poetry has a very rough English parallel in the reception accorded to the poetry of T.S. Eliot up to and including The Waste Land, although Hallucinated City and the febrile urban poetry that was to follow it was far more uneven in quality; but just as Eliot found himself the poet of London, so Andrade became in the 1920s the quintessential urban poet of São Paulo.

The collections of poetry that Andrade published later in the 1920s and in the 1930s add to the iconoclasm, the humour and the irreverence a wealth of allusion to Brazilian myth and folklore. At its worst, this poetry is undisciplined and structured in a wayward fashion. This ill-discipline is redeemed by the humour, the by now typically Modernist incorporation into lyric poetry of the rhythms and lexis of colloquial speech—the language of the street—and by the pervasive, gentle lyricism. In "Momento" (1937) he writes:

The wind cuts people in two
 Only a desire for clarity buoys up the world. . .
 The sun shines. The rain rains. And the gale
 Scatters in the blue the trombones of the clouds.
 Nobody gets to be one in this city.
 The doves cling to the skyscrapers, comes the rain.
 Comes the cold. And comes the anguish . . . It is this violent wind
 That bursts out of the gorges of the human soil
 Demanding sky, peace and a little spring.

Andrade was to earn considerable critical acclaim within Brazil for his prose fiction. Few Brazilians have written better short stories, but it is his novel, Macunaíma, that has brought him most enduring, and international, celebrity as a storyteller. Macunaíma ("The Hero Without Character" is a translation of its subtitle) is a surrealist fantasy in which Andrade draws on his compendious folkloric research in order to weave a coherent fiction that is, at the same time, also a compendium of Brazil itself. Here, he demonstrates his lifelong contention that popular forms of expression are legitimate material for the elaboration of high art—a cornerstone of Brazilian Modernist ideology. Thus are Brazil and its culture rescued from its European and colonialist past. Yet, the protagonist has no character because of his colonial status. The 20-year-old, magical Amazonian chief whose hilarious passage along with his brothers Jiguê and Maanape through the society and the streets of São Paulo is wide-eyed and innocent. Macunaíma, the hero, exhibits all of the vices and virtues Andrade saw in his countryman together with an unformed character: only when Brazil comes of age, Andrade declared, will she emancipate herself from Europe and acquire a character. The setting of the opening chapters is Amazonian, but the novel is by no means regionalist. Macunaíma's magical journeys quarter the length and breadth of Brazil from the island of Marajó in the mouth of the Amazon to Rio Grande in the far south. In the course of these peregrinations Macunaíma experiences extreme suffering and extreme joy. At the close of his journeying he is in a state of profound disenchantment. The Brazilian gods take pity and transform him into a new constellation of stars—the Great Bear, in the midst of which "he broods alone in the vast expanse of heaven."

Andrade succeeded, as perhaps only Lima Barreto among Brazilian writers before his time did, in viewing Brazil and its people through entirely Brazilian eyes. This capacity, he felt, was the true legacy of Brazilian modernism. Barreto had opined that in Brazil "the desert encircles the city." Andrade, urban poet, expressed eloquently his awareness of the difficulty of this pan-Brazilian enterprise, the dilemma of the mutually alienated Brazils, in his “Dois poemas Acreanos” [Two Poems Concerning Acre]:

Brazilian rubber-tapper,
In the gloom of the forest
Rubber-tapper, sleep.
Striking the chord of love I sleep.
How incredibly hard this is!
I want to sing but cannot,
I want to feel and I don't feel
The Brazilian word
That will make you sleep. . .
Rubber-tapper, sleep. . .

—R.J. Oakley

ANDRIĆ, Ivo

Born: Trávník, Bosnia (then in the Austro-Hungarian Empire), 9 October 1892. Education: Educated at schools in Višegrad and Sarajevo, 1898–1912; University of Zagreb, 1912; Vienna University, 1913; Jagiellonian University, Cracow, 1914; Graz University, Ph.D. 1923. Military Service: Served in the army, 1917. Family: Married Milica Babić in 1959 (died 1968). Career: Served in the Yugoslav diplomatic service, 1920–41, in the Vatican (Rome), Geneva, Madrid, Bucharest, Trieste, Graz, Belgrade, Marseilles, Paris, Brussels, and as Ambassador to Germany, Berlin; full-time writer, 1941–49; representative of Bosnia, Yugoslav parliament, 1949–55. Co-founder and member of the editorial board, Književni jug [The Literary South], 1918–19. President, Federation of Writers of Yugoslavia, 1946–51. Awards: Yugoslav Government prize, 1956; Nobel prize for literature, 1961; Vuk prize (Serbia), 1972. Red Cross medal, 1936; Légion d'honneur (France), 1937; Order of the Supreme Commander of Resurgent Poland, 1937; Order of St. Sava, first class (Yugoslavia), 1938. Honorary doctorate: University of Cracow, 1964. Member: of Mlada Bosna [Young Bosnia] and interned for three years during World War I; Member, Serbian Academy; honorary member, Bosnian Academy, 1970. Died: 13 March 1975.

PUBLICATIONS

Collection

Sabrana djela [Collected Works], edited by Risto Trifković and others. 17 vols., 1984.

Fiction

Pripovetke [Stories]. 3 vols., 1924–36.

Gospodjica. 1945; as The Woman from Sarajevo, translated by Joseph Hitrec, 1965.

Travnička hronika. 1945; as Bosnian Story, translated by Kenneth Johnstone, 1958; as Bosnian Chronicle, translated by Joseph Hitrec, 1963; as The Days of the Consuls, translated by Celia Hawkesworth and Bogdan Rakić, 1992.

Na Drini ćuprija. 1945; as The Bridge on the Drina, translated by Lovett Edwards, 1959.

Priča o vezirovom slonu. 1948; as The Vizier's Elephant: Three Novellas, translated by Drenka Willen, 1962.

Nove pripovetke [New Stories]. 1949.

Priča o kmetu Simanu [The Tale of the Peasant Simon]. 1950.

Novele [Short Stories]. 1951.

Pod Grabićem: Pripovetke o životu bosanskog sela [Under the Elm: Stories of Life in a Bosnian Village]. 1952.

Prokleta avlija. 1954; as Devil's Yard, translated by Kenneth Johnstone, 1962; as The Damned Yard, translated by Celia Hawkesworth, in The Damned Yard and Other Stories, 1992.

Panorama: Pripovetke [Panorama: Stories] (for children). 1958.

Izbor [Selection]. 1961.

Ljubav u kasabi [Love in a Market Town]. 1963.

Anikina vremena [Anika's Times] (stories). 1967.

The Pasha's Concubine and Other Tales, translated by Joseph Hitrec. 1968.

Kula i druge pripovetke (for children). 1970.

The Damned Yard and Other Stories, translated by Celia Hawkesworth. 1992.

Verse

Ex ponto. 1918.

Nemiri [Anxieties]. 1919.

Other

Lica [Faces]. 1960.

Goya. 1972.

Letters, edited and translated by Želimir Juričić. 1984.

The Development of Spiritual Life under the Turks, edited by Želimir B. Juričić and J.F. Loud. 1990.

Conversation with Goya, Signs, Bridges, translated by Celia Hawkesworth and Andrew Harvey. 1992.

Diplomatski spisi [Diplomatic Papers]. 1992.

Three Stories About Bosnia: 1908, 1946, 1992/Leo Tolstoy, Ivo Andrić, Rajko Dolecek, translated by Margot and Bosko Milosavljevic, 1995.

Literature, History, and Postcolonial Cultural Identity in Africa and the Balkans: the Search for a Usable Past in Farah, Ngugi, Krleža, and Andrić by Dubravka Juraga, 1996.

*

Bibliography: Andrić: Bibliografija dela, prevoda, i literature 1911–1970, 1974; in A Comprehensive Bibliography of Yugoslav Literature in English, 1953–1980 by Vasa D. Mihailovich and Mateja Matejić, 1984, supplements, 1988, 1992.

Critical Studies: “The French in The Chronicle of Travnik” by Ante Kadić, in California Slavic Studies, 1, 1960; “The Work of Ivo Andrić” by E.D. Goy, in Slavonic and East European Review, 41, 1963; “The Later Stories of Ivo Andrić” by Thomas Eekman, in Slavonic and East European Review, 48, 1970; “Ivo Andrić and the Quintessence of Time” by Nicholas Moracevich, in Slavic and East European Journal, 16(3), 1972; Ivo Andrić: Bridge Between East and West by Celia Hawkesworth, 1984; Ivo Andrić: Proceedings of a Symposium Held at the School of Slavonic and East European Studies 10–12 July 1984, 1985; “Ivo Andrić and World Literature” by Milan V. Dimić, in Canadian Slavonic Papers, 27(3), 1985; The Man and the Artist: Essays on Ivo Andrić, 1986, and “Andrić’s Berlin Writings: Between the Two Sirens,” in Russian, Croatian and Serbian, Czech and Slovak, Polish Literature, 30(1), 1991, both by Želimir B. Juričić “Ivo Andrić and the Swing to Infinity,” in Scottish Slavonic Review, 6, 1986, and “The Short Stories of Ivo Andrić: Autobiography and the Chain of Proof”, in Slavonic and East European Review, 67(1), 1989, both by Felicity Rosslyn; “Narrator and Narrative in Andrić’s Prokleta avlija” by Anita Lekić-Trbojević, in Serbian Studies, 4(3), 1987; “Some Rhetorical Aspects of the Novel The Bridge on the Drina” by Vladimir Miličić, in Serbian Studies 4(3), 1987; “Ivo Andrić’s Historical Thought” by Predrag Palavestra, in Reflète d’histoire européenne dans l’oeuvre d’Ivo Andrić edited by Dragan Nedeljković, 1987; Ivo Andrić: A Writer’s Life by Radovan Popović, 1988; “The Echoes of the Second World War” by Dušan Puvačić, in Serbian Studies, 4(4), 1988; Ivo Andrić: A Critical Biography by Vanita Singh Mukerji, 1991; “Ivo Andrić: A Yugoslav Career” by Hans-Peter Stoffel, in New Zealand Slavonic Journal, 1992; Ivo Andrić Revisited: the Bridge Still Stands, edited by Wayne S. Vucinich, 1995.

* * *

The work for which Ivo Andrić is probably best known outside Bosnia is Na Drini ćuprija (The Bridge on the Drina), a chronicle of the life of the small Bosnian town of Višegrad over several centuries. This rich fusion of legend and history is given shape by the central symbol of the bridge, linking East and West, past and future, and instilling in the townspeople a sense of harmony and the endurance of life despite individual transience.

The major part of Andrić’s fiction—five novels and six volumes of short stories—is set in his native Bosnia and informed by a detailed knowledge of this region of the Balkans under Ottoman and, later, Habsburg rule. This precise setting in time and space is an essential feature of Andrić’s work, but it has proved an obstacle to his reception in some countries, despite the fact that he has been extensively translated. There has been a tendency not to look beyond the “exotic” setting in this “remote” corner of Europe. Andrić focuses his attention on Bosnia because it represents a particularly varied concentration of cultures: an indigenous population of both Catholic and Orthodox Christians, a large Muslim community, Jews, and gypsies. Bosnia also represents a crossroads between East and West, visited by Ottoman dignitaries and European merchants, diplomats, and administrators. It serves consequently as a microcosm of both the variety of human life and the arbitrary divisions and antagonisms between men.

A detailed exploration of this clash of cultures is offered by Travnička hronika (Bosnian Story or The Days of the Consuls) in which the French and Austrian consuls and the Turkish vizier confront and, when international politics permit, console each other in this harsh and hostile land. Andrić exploits this setting to reveal universal patterns of behaviour and experience, drawing on legend, myth, archetype, and symbol. The complement of the symbol of the bridge in Andrić’s work is that of its opposite, the prison, suggesting all the constraints which compel an individual to seek some way out of the fundamental laws of human existence. The image is most fully developed in the short novel, or novella, Prokleta avlija (Devil’s Yard or The Damned Yard), in which the prison inmates “escape” by telling stories. It is perhaps in the shorter prose forms that Andrić excels and the best of his stories offer a vivid, intensely suggestive and often disturbing image or anecdote, rich in meanings and associations.

Andrić also wrote verse intermittently throughout his life. More characteristic, however, are his prose reflections, jottings prompted by experiences of all kinds. Selections of these were published posthumously in his collected works as Znakovi pored puta [Signs by the Roadside] and Sveske [Notebooks], providing insight into the fine and subtle mind of this otherwise very private man. Parallels may be drawn between Andrić’s work and that of Thomas Mann, Joseph Conrad, and Henry James. He was an avid reader and himself spoke of a sense of affinity with a wide variety of writers from Camus and Goethe to Marcus Aurelius.

—E.C. Hawkesworth

See the essay on The Bridge on the Drina.

ANDRZEJEWSKI, Jerzy

Born: Warsaw, Poland, 19 August 1909. Education: Educated at a gymnasium in Warsaw 1919–27; University in Warsaw, 1927–31. Family: Married Maria Abgarowicz. Career: Took part in underground cultural work in Warsaw during World War II. Writer from 1932; editor of literature section of weekly Prosto z mostu, 1935–37; after the war moved to Cracow: chair of the Cracow Division of Polish Writers Union, 1946–47; involved in social work in Szczecin, 1948–52; joined Polish Communist Party, 1949; editor-in-chief of weekly Przegląd kulturalny [Cultural Review], 1952–54; His book Apelacja (The Appeal) was banned in Poland, 1968. Awards: Polish Academy of Literature Young Writers prize, 1939; Cracow prize, 1946; Odrodzenie award, 1948; Order of the Banner of Labour (1st Class), 1949; Polish Readers prize, 1959, 1964, and 1965; Złoty Kłosa award, 1965. Member: Polish parliament, 1952–56: resigned his Party membership in protest when the government banned a new literary magazine, 1957. Died: 19 April 1983.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

- Drogi nieuniknione* [Inescapable Ways] (stories). 1936.
Ład Serca [Peace of Mind]. 1938.
Wielki tydzień [Holy Week] (novella). 1943.
Noc [Night] (stories). 1945.
Popiół i diament. 1948; as Ashes and Diamonds, translated by D.F. Welsh, 1962.
Wojna skuteczna [An Effective War]. 1953.
Złoty lis [The Golden Fox] (story). 1955.
Ciemności kryją ziemię [Darkness Covers the Earth]. 1957; as The Inquisitors, also translated by Konrad Syrop, 1960.
Bramy Raju. 1958; as The Gates of Paradise, translated by James Kirkup, 1962.
Niby gaj: Opowiadania 1939–58 [As if the Grove] (stories). 1959.
Idzie skaczc po górach. 1963; as A Sitter for a Satyr, translated by Celina Wieniewska, 1964; as He Cometh Leaping upon the Mountains, translated by Wieniewska, 1965.
Apelacja. 1968; as The Appeal, translated by Celina Wieniewska, 1971.

Teraz na ciebie zagłada [Now Annihilation Is Coming upon You]. 1976.

Już prawie nic [Already Next to Nothing]. 1979.

Miazga [Pulp]. 1979.

Nowe opowiadania [New Tales]. 1980.

Nikt [Nobody] (novella). 1983.

Intermezzo, i inne opowiadania. 1986.

Plays

Święto Winkelrida [Winkelreid's Day], with J. Zagorski. 1957.

Prometheus. 1972.

Screenplays: Popiół i diament, with Andrzej Wajda, 1958; Niewinni Czarodzieje (collaborator), 1959.

Other

Aby pokój zwyciężył [May Peace Win]. 1950.

Wyznania i rozmyślenia pisarza [Confessions and Thoughts of a Writer]. 1950.

O człowieku radzieckim [About the Russian Man]. 1951.

Ludzie i zdarzenia [People and Events]. 1952.

Partia i twórczość pisarza [The Party and Writer's Works]. 1952.

Książka dla Marcina [The Book for Martin: Reminiscences]. 1954.

Gra z cieniem (diary). 1987.

Z dnia na dzień: Dziennik literacki 1972–1979 (newspaper articles). 2 vols., 1988.

Listy [Letters], with Andrzej Fiett. 1991.

*

Critical Studies: Andrzejewski by Waclaw Sadkowski, translated by Krystyna Cękańska, 1975; Jerzy Andrzejewski's Roman "Ciemności kryją ziemię" und die Darstellung der Spanischen Inquisition in Werken der fiktionalen Literatur by Jürgen Schreiber, 1981; Andrzejewski by Anna Synoradzka, 1997.

* * *

Jerzy Andrzejewski is one of the best Polish novelists of the 20th century. It would be difficult, however, to pin down his literary masterwork. He has left a number of novels and short stories of challenging content and skilful narration. Following various narrative styles of modern times that reflect the meanders of his intellectual search and formal experiments, and being, in turn, a Catholic, a Communist, and an outspoken dissident, Andrzejewski defies easy classifications. It appears, however, that the impact of Conradian solipsism, apart from his Marxist phase, influenced him until the last days.

Joseph Conrad's principle that there is no escape from the prison of the self and that, consequently, one is unable to communicate with others, thus living in solitude and despondency, forms the basis for Andrzejewski's first collection of short stories Drogi nieuniknione [Inescapable Ways]. The best account of anxieties caused by such a situation was the novel Ład Serca [Peace of Mind], in the mould of Georges Bernanos's Catholic fiction. Its extraordinary setting in a secluded Belarussian village, surrounded by forests, exudes the atmosphere of symbolic darkness and unavoidable fate. The story of a parish priest, tormented by a guilty conscience, and the misfortunes of his forlorn flock, represents a world of feeble mortals, where God seems far away. His grace scarce, while evil is on the rampage. Christian ideas of love and repentance are eventually engulfed by despair over the absence of justice and moral order. This kind of pessimism dominates the war fiction, the short stories published in Andrzejewski's first post-war volume Noc [Night], and in later collections. The symbolic "night" reveals a similar distress, magnified only by a much more ruthless background, where fighting intensifies inborn human wickedness and increases hatred and isolation. The portrayed events polarize between unrestricted killing and preposterous patriotic gestures of sham conspirators.

At the end of World War II Conradian solitude was suspended in favour of a growing belief in the power of collective efforts. In the final, reworked version of the novella Wielki tydzień [Holy Week], one of the underground soldiers advocates a united front of all freedom fighters. According to the writer's own confession, he was looking for a "magic circle of a well-ordered world" and eventually found it in Marxism. As a result, he published his controversial novel about the first days of the Polish People's Republic, Popiół i diament (Ashes and Diamonds), subsequently filmed by Andrzej Wajda. The biased picture of the non-Communist Home Army and staunch support for the party line secured official recognition, and over 25 editions were printed. Nevertheless Andrzejewski's traditional categories of human loneliness in the world of conflict between good and evil have simply been adjusted to new, Marxist-inspired views on history and progress. The unequivocal condemnation of the recent past and those hostile to communism resulted from that approach.

Andrzejewski's fairly brief links with communism were reflected in political articles and in the unsuccessful satirical novel Wojna skuteczna [An Effective War]. The publication of Ciemności kryją ziemię (The Inquisitors) marked a fundamental rejection of any political system that upholds the supremacy of ideology over personal freedom. Accordingly, the portrayal of the Inquisition in medieval Spain can be understood as an allegory, referring above all to Stalinism. In this account, absolute power destroys individual conscience and human loyalty, transforming even committed idealists into the blind instruments of terror. Similar scepticism about the human values of any dogma guided Andrzejewski's experimental short narrative, Bramy Raju (The Gates of Paradise), where several confessions follow each other without any full stops. In this story the authentic pilgrimage to Jerusalem by French youngsters is described as a mundane affair, whose participants are motivated not by divine love but by adolescent sensuality and carnal desires. The worst, however, is their leader, an idealist, whose erroneous belief in Jerusalem's golden gates to paradise makes him unwittingly a false prophet, deluding others.

Idzie skaczc po górach (He Cometh Leaping upon the Mountains), set in contemporary France, can be regarded as a pastiche of various narrative styles, including the stream of consciousness, still fashionable at that time. Its portrayal of French writers and artists contains satirical undertones, condemning what amounts to the commercially oriented and relatively decadent western civilization. The author's irony embraces his own narrative commentaries, where various intellectual trends such as psychoanalysis and anthropology are taunted.

Apelacja (The Appeal), published in the West and subsequently banned in Poland, aims at the simplicity of confession, articulated by a "little man" whose obvious mediocrity accounts for the impression of documentary truth. A former officer of the "people's militia" and a party apparatchik, he eventually finds himself in a mental hospital, persecuted by the Kafkaesque nightmare of being constantly spied upon by secret agents. Once an autocratic and suspicious administrator himself, he can be regarded as a victim of his own standards, but his naive faith in the party, which has survived all ups and downs, shifts responsibility mostly upon the system and its destructive potential.

Andrzejewski's last novel, Miazga [Pulp], planned first as a portrayal of the Polish cultural and political élite, eventually turned into an experimental attempt to lay open the author's growing doubts about storytelling and moral commitment. Its crumbled form questions the reliability of fiction by giving two parallel accounts of the same event; blends invented stories with documents (the author's diary) and quasi-documents (the "biographies" of Poles); and includes short stories written by the main character, which were published a year later under Andrzejewski's own name, in Nowe opowiadania [New Tales]. The Conradian prison of the self eventually inhibits all attempts to say anything more than personal truth: "the writer narrates and asks questions. Nothing more."

The novella Nikt [Nobody] is Andrzejewski's final expression of disillusionment and bitterness. This openly personal retelling of the story of ageing Odysseus contains nothing but scepticism about the power of love and the human search for truth. The fear of death, distressing the Homeric hero, is superseded only by his own legend, that is, by his fictitious alter ego.

—Stanislaw Eile

See the essay on Ashes and Diamonds.

ANNUNZIO, Gabriele d'

See D'ANNUNZIO, Gabriele

ANOUILH, Jean (Marie Lucien Pierre)

Born: Cérise, Bordeaux, France, 23 June 1910. Education: Educated at École Colbert, Bordeaux; Collège Chaptal; studied law at the Sorbonne, Paris, 1928–29. Military Service: Served during the 1930s. Family: Married 1) the actress Monelle Valentin in 1931 (divorced 1953), one daughter; 2) Nicole Lançon in 1953, two daughters and one son. Career: Publicity and gag writer for films, and advertising copywriter for Publicité Damour, Paris, 2 years; secretary, Louis Jouvet's Comédie des Champs-Élysées, Paris, 1931–32; assistant to the director Georges Pitoëff; full-time writer; also a film director. Awards: Grand prize of the French Cinema, 1949; Tony award (United States), 1955; New York Drama Critics Circle award, 1957; Cino del Duca prize, 1970; French Drama Critics award, 1970; Paris Critics prize, 1971. Died: 3 October 1987.

PUBLICATIONS

Plays

L'Hermine (produced 1932). 1934; as The Ermine, translated by Miriam John, in Plays of the Year, 13, 1956; also translated by John, in Five Plays (I), 1958.
La Mandarine (produced 1933).

Y'avait un prisonnier (produced 1935). In La Petite Illustration, 1935.
Le Voyageur sans bagage (produced 1937). In Pièces noires, 1942; edited by Diane W. Birckbichler, 1973; as Traveller Without Luggage, translated by John Whiting, 1959; also translated by Whiting, in Seven Plays, 1967; Lucienne Hill, 1959.
La Sauvage (produced 1938). 1938; as The Restless Heart, translated by Lucienne Hill, 1957; also translated by Hill, in Five Plays (II), 1959.
Le Bal des voleurs (produced 1938). 1938; as Thieves' Carnival, translated by Lucienne Hill, 1952; also translated by Hill, in Seven Plays, 1967.
Léocadia (produced 1940). In Pièces roses, 1942; edited by Bettina L. Knapp and Alba Della Fazia, 1965; as Time Remembered, translated by Patricia Moyes, 1955; also in Five Plays (II), 1959; as Léocadia, translated by Timberlake Wertenbaker, in Five Plays, 1987.
Marie-Jeanne; ou, La Fille du peuple, from a play by Dennery and Mallain (produced 1940).
Le Rendez-vous de Senlis (produced 1941). In Pièces roses, 1942; as Dinner with the Family, translated by Edward O. Marsh, 1958.
Eurydice (produced 1942). In Pièces noires, 1942; edited by E. Freeman, with Médée, 1984; as Point of Departure, translated by Kitty Black, 1951; as Legend of Lovers, translated by Black, 1952; as Eurydice, translated by Black, in Five Plays (I), 1958.
Pièces roses (includes Le Bal des voleurs; Le Rendez-vous de Senlis; Léocadia). 1942; enlarged edition (includes Humulus le muet), 1958.
Pièces noires (includes L'Hermine; La Sauvage; Le Voyageur sans bagage; Eurydice). 1942.
Antigone, from the play by Sophocles (produced 1944). 1946; edited by W.M. Landers, 1954; also edited by R. Laubreaux, 1965, and J. Monférier, 1968; as Antigone, translated and adapted by Lewis Galantière, 1946; also translated by Lothian Small, with Eurydice, 1951; in Five Plays (I), 1958; Barbara Bray, in Five Plays, 1987.
Roméo et Jeannette (produced 1946). In Nouvelles pièces noires, 1946; as Romeo and Jeannette, translated by Miriam John, in Five Plays (I), 1958.
Nouvelles pièces noires (includes Jézabel; Antigone; Roméo et Jeannette; Médée). 1946.
Médée (produced 1953). In Nouvelles pièces noires, 1946; as Medea, translated by Lothian Small, in Plays of the Year, 15, 1956; as Medea: A "Black" Play, translated by Luce and Arthur Klein, 1957; also translated by Klein and Klein, in Seven Plays, 1967.
L'Invitation au château (produced 1947). 1948; as Ring Round the Moon, translated by Christopher Fry, 1950.
Ardèle; ou, La Marguerite (produced 1948). 1949; as Ardele, translated by Lucienne Hill, 1951; also translated by Hill, in Five Plays (II), 1959.
Les Demoiselles de la nuit (ballet scenario; produced 1948).
Épisode de la vie d'un auteur (produced 1948). With La Belle Vie, 1980; as Episode in the Life of an Author, translated by Miriam John, in Seven Plays, 1967.
Humulus le muet, with Jean Aurenche (produced 1948). N.d.; as Humulus the Mute, translated by Michael Benedikt, in Modern French Theatre, 1964.
La Répétition; ou, L'Amour puni (produced 1950). 1950; as The Rehearsal, translated by Pamela Hansford Johnson and Kitty Black, in Five Plays (I), 1958; also translated by Jeremy Sams, 1991.

- Colombe* (produced 1951). In Pièces brillantes, 1951; as Colombe, translated by Denis Cannan, 1952; as Mademoiselle Colombe, in Five Plays (II), 1959.
- Monsieur Vincent* (screenplay), with Jean Bernard Luc. 1951.
- Pièces brillantes* (includes L'Invitation au château; Colombe; La Répétition; Cécile). 1951.
- Cécile*; ou, L'École des pères (produced 1954). In Pièces brillantes, 1951; as Cécile; or, The School for Fathers, translated by Luce and Arthur Klein, in From the Modern Repertoire, 3, edited by Eric Bentley, 1956; also translated by Klein and Klein, in Seven Plays, 1967.
- La Valse des toréadors* (produced 1952) 1952; as Waltz of the Toreadors, translated by Lucienne Hill in Plays of the Year, 8, 1953; revised translation by Hill, in Five Plays, 1987.
- La Nuit des rois*, from the play by Shakespeare (produced 1961). In Trois comédies, 1952.
- Le Loup* (ballet scenario), with Georges Neveux. 1953.
- L'Alouette* (produced 1953). 1953; edited by Merlin Thomas and Simon Lee, 1956; as The Lark, translated by Christopher Fry, 1955; in Five Plays (II), 1959; translated by Fry, in Five Plays, 1987.
- Ornifle*; ou, Le Courant d'air (produced 1955). 1956; as Ornifle, translated by Lucienne Hill, 1970; as It's Later Than You Think, translated by Hill, 1970.
- Il est important d'être aimé*, with Claude Vincent, from the play by Oscar Wilde (produced 1964). In L'Avant-scène, 101, 1955.
- Pauvre Bitos*; ou, Le Dîner de têtes (produced 1956). In Pièces grinçantes, 1956; as Poor Bitos, translated by Lucienne Hill, 1964; revised translation by Hill, in Five Plays, 1987.
- Pièces grinçantes* (includes Ardèle; La Valse des toréadors; Ornifle; Pauvre Bitos). 1956.
- Five Plays* (I) (includes Antigone; Eurydice; The Ermine; The Rehearsal; Romeo and Jeannette), translated by Miriam John, Lucienne Hill, Lewis Galantière, and Kitty Black. 1958.
- Five Plays* (II) (includes The Restless Heart; Time Remembered; Ardele; Mademoiselle Colombe; The Lark), translated by Lucienne Hill, Patricia Moyes, Louis Kronenberger, and Lilian Hellman. 1959.
- L'Hurluberlu*; ou, Le Réactionnaire amoureux (produced 1959). 1959; as The Fighting Cock, translated and adapted by Lucienne Hill, 1960.
- Becket*; ou, L'Honneur de Dieu (produced 1959). 1959; as Becket; or, The Honor of God, translated by Lucienne Hill, 1961.
- Madame de. . .* (in English, produced 1959). 1959.
- La Petite Molière*, with Roland Laudenback (produced 1959). In L'Avant-scène, 1959.
- Le Songe du critique* (produced 1960). In L'Avant-scène, 143, 1959.
- Pièces costumées* (includes L'Alouette; Becket; La Foire d'empoigne). 1960.
- La Foire d'empoigne* (produced 1962). In Pièces costumées, 1960; as Catch as Catch Can, translated by Lucienne Hill, in Seven Plays, 1967.
- Tartuffe*, from the play by Molière (produced 1960). In L'Avant-scène, 1961.
- La Grotte* (produced 1961). 1961; as The Cavern, translated by Lucienne Hill, 1966.
- Victor*; ou, Les Enfants au pouvoir, from the play by Roger Vitrac (produced 1962). In L'Avant-scène, 1962.
- L'Amant complaisant*, with Nicole Anouilh, from the play by Graham Greene (produced 1962). 1962.
- L'Orchestre* (produced 1962). 1970; as The Orchestra, translated by Miriam John, in Seven Plays, 1967; published separately, 1975.
- Richard III*, from the play by Shakespeare (produced 1964). N.d.
- L'Ordalie*; ou, La Petite Catherine de Heilbronn, from a story by Heinrich von Kleist (produced 1966). In L'Avant-scène, 1967.
- Collected Plays*. 2 vols., 1966–67.
- Seven Plays* (includes Thieves' Carnival; Medea; Cécile; or, The School for Fathers; Traveller Without Luggage; The Orchestra; Episode in the Life of an Author; Catch as Catch Can), translated by John Whiting, Luce and Arthur Klein, Miriam John, and Lucienne Hill. 1967.
- Le Boulanger, la boulangère, et le petit mitron* (produced 1968), 1969.
- Théâtre complet*. 9 vols., 1968.
- Cher Antoine*; ou, L'Amour raté (produced 1969). 1969; as Dear Antoine; or, The Love That Failed, translated by Lucienne Hill, 1971.
- Le Théâtre*; ou, La Vie comme elle est (produced 1970).
- Ne Réveillez pas Madame* (produced 1970). 1970.
- Les Poissons rouges*; ou, Mon père, ce héros (produced 1970). 1970.
- Nouvelles pièces grinçantes* (includes L'Hurluberlu; La Grotte; L'Orchestre; Le Boulanger, la boulangère, et le petit mitron; Les Poissons rouges). 1970.
- Tu étais si gentil quand tu étais petit* (produced 1971). 1972.
- Le Directeur de l'Opéra* (produced 1973). 1972; as The Director of the Opera, translated by Lucienne Hill, 1973.
- Pièces baroques* (includes Chef Antoine; Ne Réveillez pas Madame; Le Directeur de l'Opéra). 1974.
- Monsieur Barnett* (produced 1974). In L'Avant-scène, 559, 1975.
- L'Arrestation* (produced 1975). 1975; as The Arrest, translated by Lucienne Hill, 1978.
- Le Scénario* (produced 1976). 1976.
- Chers Zoizeaux* (produced 1976). 1977.
- Pièces secrètes* (includes Tu étais si gentil quand tu étais petit; L'Arrestation; Le Scénario). 1977.
- Vive Henri IV*. 1977.
- La Culotte* (produced 1978). 1978.
- La Belle Vie* (television play), with Épisode de la vie d'un auteur. 1980.
- Le Nombriil* (produced 1981). 1981; as Number One, translated by Michael Frayn, 1984.
- Pièces farceuses* (includes Chers Zoizeaux; La Culotte; Épisode de la vie d'un auteur; Le Nombriil). 1984.
- Oedipe*; ou, Le Roi boiteux, from the play by Sophocles. 1986.
- Thomas More*; ou, L'Homme libre (screenplay). 1987.
- Five Plays* (includes Antigone; Léocadia; The Lark; Poor Bitos; The Waltz of the Toreadors), translated by Barbara Bray, Timberlake Wertenbaker, Christopher Fry, and Lucienne Hill. 1987.
- Plays 2* (includes The Rehearsal; Becket; Eurydice; The Orchestra). 1992.
- Vive Henri IV!*, ou, La Galigai, 2000.
- Screenplays: Les Déyouirdis de la onzième, with Jean Aurenche, 1936; Vous n'avez rien à déclarer, with Jean Aurenche, 1937; Les Otages, with Jean Aurenche, 1939; Cavalcade d'amour, 1939; Le Voyageur sans bagage (Identity Unknown), with Jean Aurenche, 1944; Monsieur Vincent, with Jean Bernard Luc, 1947; Anna Karenina, with Julien Duvivier and Guy Morgan, 1948; Pattes blanches, with Jean Bernard Luc, 1949; Caroline chérie, 1951; Deux sous de violettes, with Monelle Valentin, 1951; Le Rideau rouge, 1952; Le

Chevalier de la nuit, 1953; La Mort de belle (The Passion of Slow Fire), 1961; La Ronde, 1964; A Time for Loving, 1972.

Television Plays: Le Jeune Homme et le lion, 1976; La Belle Vie, 1979.

Other

Michel-Marie Poulain, with Pierre Imbourg and André Warnod. 1953.

Fables. 1962.

Robert Brasillach et la génération perdue, with others. 1987.

La Vicomtesse d'Erystal n'a pas reçu son balai mécanique: souvenirs d'un jeune homme (autobiography). 1987.

*

Bibliography: Jean Anouilh: An Annotated Bibliography by Kathleen White Kelley, 1973.

Critical Studies: Anouilh by Marguerite Archer, 1951; Jean Anouilh: Poet of Pierrot and Pantaloon by Edward O. Marsh, 1953; The World of Jean Anouilh by Leonard C. Pronko, 1961; Anouilh: A Study of Theatrics by John Harvey, 1964; Anouilh: La Peine de vivre by Clément Borgal, 1966; Jean Anouilh by Philip Thody, 1968; Anouilh by Alba della Fazia Amoia, 1969; Jean Anouilh: Textes d'Anouilh, points de vue critiques, témoignages, chronologie, bibliographie, illustrations by Paul Ginestier, 1969; "Antigone": Analyse critique by Etienne Frois, 1972; Théâtre d'Anouilh by Bernard Beugnot, 1973; Jean Anouilh: Stages in Rebellion by Branko Lenski, 1975; La Pureté dans le théâtre de Jean Anouilh by André F. Rombout, 1975; Le Théâtre de Jean Anouilh by Jacques Vier, 1976; Anouilh, littérature et politique by Élie de Comminges, 1977; Jean Anouilh by Lewis W. Falb, 1977; Lecture d'Anouilh: Textes et réflexions critiques by Benito d'Ajetti, 1978; Jean Anouilh: Les Problèmes de l'existence dans un théâtre de marionettes by Thérèse Malachy, 1978; The Theatre of Jean Anouilh by H.G. McIntyre, 1981; Anouilh: Antigone by W.D. Howarth, 1983; Jean Anouilh: Life, Work, and Criticism by Christopher Smith, 1985; Pour Saluer Jean Anouilh by Christophe Mercier, 1995.

* * *

After two early plays, L'Hermine (The Ermine) and Y'avait un prisonnier, considered promising but not extremely successful, Jean Anouilh achieved his real breakthrough, artistically and financially, with Le Voyageur sans bagage (Traveller Without Luggage), and later seasons in Paris almost always included a new Anouilh work, many subsequently revived in England and America. These three works, along with the contemporary Jézabel, and La Sauvage (The Restless Heart), were characterized by their author as pièces noires ("black plays"), in contrast to three other works of the same period, Le Bal des voleurs (Thieves' Carnival), Le Rendez-vous de Senlis (Dinner with the Family) and Léocadia (Time Remembered), which he designated pièces roses ("rose plays"). A common theme of these plays is shared by Anouilh with the pioneers of modern realistic drama, especially Ibsen—the burden of the environment and especially of the past on a protagonist seeking a happier, freer existence. Although neither type of play takes an ultimately optimistic position, the "black plays" generally demonstrate the hopelessness of this dream, while the "rose plays" allow their protagonists at least a temporary happiness, often through an escape into a world of make-believe.

During the 1940s Anouilh, while maintaining his complex tonality and deft dramatic technique, turned from contemporary to mythical, classic, and historic subjects and to themes more closely related to the concerns of such writers as Sartre and Camus. Now the past was regarded as only part of the contingent circumstances of existence against which the independent spirit of the protagonist must define itself. The best-known play of this group is Antigone, which established Anouilh as a leading dramatist, not only because of the power with which he drew the classic confrontation between the uncompromising Antigone and the politically expedient Creon, but because French theatre-goers under the occupation read the play as a contemporary political parable. The immediate post-war plays Roméo et Jeannette (Romeo and Jeannette) and Médée (Medea) similarly focused upon protagonists who refused to strike a bargain with the world of compromise. Much the same spirit infuses Anouilh's Joan of Arc story L'Alouette (The Lark), the success of which rivalled that of Antigone.

With the exception of The Lark, Anouilh's plays of the late 1940s and the 1950s depict a darker and crueller universe, where his heroic protagonists give way to more common souls who have in one way or another accepted life as it is—simply and unquestioningly, as victims, or calculatedly and manipulatively. Anouilh divided his plays of this period into pièces brillantes ("brilliant plays") and pièces grinçantes ("grating plays"). The "brilliance" of the first group, L'Invitation au château (Ring Round the Moon), Cécile, La Répétition; ou, L'Amour puni (The Rehearsal), and Colombe, comes from their elegant, aristocratic settings and from their polished, witty language, often reminiscent of the sparkle of Marivaux (indeed it is a Marivaux play that is being rehearsed in The Rehearsal). The pain and cruelty of life and the inevitability of death are still present, but these can be put aside at least temporarily by the pleasures of living for the moment, often developed in specifically theatrical metaphors. A darker tone and a more bitter humour mark the "grating plays," Ardèle, La Valse des toréadors (Waltz of the Toreadors), Ornifle, Pauvre Bitos; ou, Le Dîner de têtes (Poor Bitos), and L'Hurluberlu; ou, Le Réactionnaire amoureux (The Fighting Cock). Here, as in the "brilliant plays," the idealistic young lovers of Anouilh's early works have been replaced by middle-aged characters, all too aware of the disillusion of passing time.

Becket, a major international success, depicts another historical martyr, Thomas à Becket, and La Foire d'empoigne (Catch as Catch Can) pits a cynical and gross Napoleon against a noble but ineffective Louis XVIII. These, along with The Lark, were characterized by Anouilh as his pièces costumées ("costume plays"), although they share not only historical "costumed" settings, but also an idealistic protagonist seeking a moral path in a world of corruption and manipulation. In each case the quest ends in death and apparent defeat, but the hero leaves the history of his struggle as an example and inspiration for others, and so the forces of nobility achieve at least a qualified affirmation.

Anouilh's final period begins with La Grotte (The Cavern). It is a Pirandellian work, whose central character is a frustrated author and whose action concerns the tensions of a play he has been unable to write. Anouilh felt his subsequent plays took a new direction, but this is more a matter of emphasis than of actual new concerns. The interrelationship of theatre and life is a theme recurrent throughout his oeuvre, but it takes on a special prominence in these late works, whose central figures are most often dramatists or theatre directors. Family relationships and the tensions of private life, another long-time concern, are also central in the late plays. In a number of them a special relationship exists between theatre and family, suggesting, as Maeterlinck argued in "The Tragedy in Everyday Life," that the inner drama of everyday interpersonal relationships is more profound and more important than the traditional heightened action of "theatre." Antoine, the playwright-protagonist of Cher Antoine; ou, L'Amour raté (Dear Antoine; or, The Love That Failed), advocates an attention to such pièces secrètes ("secret dramas")—the title of an Anouilh collection.

In the last plays, concluding with Le Nombriil (Number One), the author, however successful and honoured, becomes ever more isolated from friends and family, who simultaneously blame him for all their misfortunes and feed upon his success. Anouilh's dark view of the human condition here reaches its final expression. His young heroes are constrained by the past and by social circumstances; the more mature protagonists of the "grating plays" suffered more personal unhappiness from their own ageing and in their human relationships. The artists of the final plays, with death close upon them, find that even the closest relationships are tainted by selfishness and greed, and offer as consolation only whatever appreciation artist and audience may derive from a sensitive awareness of life's "secret drama."

—Marvin Carlson

See the essay on Antigone.

ANWAR, Chairil

Born: Medan, North Sumatra, 26 July 1922. Education: Dutch schools for indigenous Indonesians in Medan, HIS (primary) and MULO (junior high school). Family: Married to Hapsah, 1946 (divorced late 1948); one daughter. Career: Abandoned secondary education after moving to Jakarta with his mother in 1940; followed a bohemian lifestyle, reading widely, and mixing with many strata of society; worked fitfully as the literary editor of "Gelanggang" (the literary supplement for the magazine Siasat), 1948–49, and Gema Suasana, 1949. Died: 28 April 1949, in Jakarta, from a combination of diseases (typhoid, syphilis, pneumonia, and tuberculosis).

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Aku ini Bintang Jalang. 1986.

Derai-derai Cemara. 1999.

The Complete Poetry and Prose of Chairil Anwar by Burton Raffel. 1970; republished as The Voice of the Night. 1993.

Verse

Kerikil Tajam, dan Yang Terampas dan yang Putus. 1949.

Deru Campur Debu. 1949.

Tiga Menguak Takdir, with Asrul Sani and Rivai Apin. 1950.

*

Critical Studies: Chairil Anwar, Pelopor Angkatan 45 by H.B. Jassin, 1956; Chairil Anwar: The Poet and His Language by Boen Sri Oemarjati, 1972; The Development of Modern Indonesian Poetry by Burton Raffel, 1967.

* * *

For many Indonesians, Chairil Anwar has come to be seen as the truly representative artistic figure. Dead at the age of 26 from a truly appalling combination of diseases, he stands out as someone who was completely dedicated to the creative life and to whom no one and nothing else mattered. Although he wrote only about 70 poems, it is agreed that this small number of works utterly transformed the nature of poetry in the Indonesian language.

Prior to World War II, Indonesian poetry used the quatrain form which had been dominant in traditional writing for some four centuries. As "modern writers," prewar Indonesian poets were heavily influenced by the themes of late European romanticism: the idea of art as the outcome of sudden inspiration, nature as a realm of intense beauty, and melancholy as the appropriate attitude for one who long suffered the loss of happiness.

Chairil Anwar introduced the use of a free verse form, in which every word carried maximum impact. His stanzas could range from one line to as many as 30. He wrote honestly about his own experiences and fought vigorously to be free from the traditional conventions of the genre.

Perhaps his best known poem is "Aku," which uses the first person pronoun of power, the "I" which speaks down to others. The poem begins with the recognition: "When my time comes / I know no one will mourn for me / Not even you." (Some texts insist: "I want no one to mourn for me.") Quickly he admits to being "a wild beast / cast out from its herd." Although he admits to feeling intense pain, he insists that he will "endure in a rage," fighting and kicking, until all sense of suffering has gone. The poem concludes with the heavily rhythmical line: "Aku mau hidup seribu taun lagi!" or "I want to live for a thousand years!"

In some poems, Anwar treats others with this same arrogance. In "Penerimaan" ("Acceptance"), he begins with an apparent show of generosity: "If you want, I'll take you back again / With all my heart." The return of his lover, however, actually means little to the narrator: "I will still be alone." He can condemn her for her unfaithfulness, "I know you are not what you were before," but still insist that she meet his gaze. After repeating the opening lines, the poem concludes in utter selfishness: "I won't even share my mirror with you."

At other times, it becomes clear that this apparent disdain was a mask for a fear of personal intimacy. "Sia-Sia" ("Futile"), describes a day spent with a woman who has come to give herself to him when neither was able to approach the other. "Damn you, my heart!" it ends in rage. "You would not let yourself love! / May you be shredded by the silence."

This contradictory violence and fear even extends to Anwar's depiction of God. God comes to Anwar in the poem "Di Mesjid," ("In the Mosque") after Anwar has shouted at Him to show Himself. Although God burns in his heart, Anwar struggles to extinguish Him, "Kneeling, sweating, like a horse which will not be ridden." The empty space of the mosque and Anwar's own heart are like "an arena,” in which they fight. Neither wins. Instead, they destroy each other: “One abusing, the other mad.” Who is which, the poem does not say.

As the Japanese occupation of Indonesia (1942–45) turned into the War of Independence (1945–49), Anwar occasionally wrote patriotic poems. “Come, Sukarno, my friend, give me your hand,” he cried out in “Peretujuan dengan Bung Karno” (“An Agreement with Bung Karno,” 1948). He also sometimes plagiarized poems, including Archibald MacLeish’s “The Young Dead Soldiers” and Willem Elschott’s “Tot den Arme,” simply so that he could buy medicine.

But the approach of death made itself heard above the confusion of love, the emptiness of night, and the refusal of divine comfort. In what was one of his very last poems, “Derai-derai Cemara” (“The Whispering Pines”), Anwar concluded:

Life is only the postponement of death,
As we grow further isolated from our high school loves,
And we learn that there is nothing more to be said,
Before we finally surrender ourselves to the dark.

Anwar’s own life is often evaluated in the words of one of his earliest poems: “Once to have meaning / And after that, to die.” Anwar’s poetry, in its honesty, its depth of self-exploration, and its directness of expression, continues to be extremely meaningful for all Indonesians who know and value their own literature.

—Harry Aveling

APOLLINAIRE, Guillaume

Born: Guillaume Apollinaris de Kostrowitzky in Rome, Italy, 26 August 1880. Education: Educated in Monte Carlo, Cannes, and Nice, until 1897. Military Service: Served in World War I, 1914–16: invalidated out. Family: Married Jacqueline Kolb in 1918. Career: Moved to the Ardennes, 1899; began using name Apollinaire, 1901; tutor in Germany, 1901–02; freelance writer and critic in Paris; editor, Le Festin d’Ésope, 1903, and La Revue Immoraliste; helped organize cubist room at Salon des Indépendants, 1911, and wrote manifesto on Futurism; imprisoned briefly on suspicion of art theft, 1911; art critic, Le Petit Bleu, 1912; editor, Les Soirées de Paris, 1912–14. Died: 9 November 1918.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Selected Writings, edited and translated by Roger Shattuck. 1950.
Oeuvres poétiques, edited by Michel Décaudin and Marcel Adéma. 1956.
Oeuvres complètes, edited by Michel Décaudin. 4 vols., 1965–66.
Oeuvres en prose, edited by Michel Décaudin. 1977.
Oeuvres. 5 vols., 1983–84.
Oeuvres en prose complètes, edited by Pierre Caizergues and Michel Décaudin. 1993.

Verse

Le Bestiaire; ou, Cortège d’Orphée. 1911; translated as Le Bestiaire, 1977; as Bestiary; or, the Parade of Orpheus, translated by Pepe Karmel and Lauren Shakley, 1980.
Alcools: Poèmes 1898–1913. 1913; edited by Tristan Tzara, 1953, and Garnet Rees, 1975; as Alcools, translated by William Meredith, 1964, also translated by Anne Hyde Greet, 1965.
Case d’armons. 1915.
Vitam impendere amori. 1917.
Calligrammes: Poèmes de la paix et de la guerre 1913–1916. 1918; as Calligrammes: Poems of Peace and War (1913–1916), translated by Anne Hyde Greet (bilingual edition), 1980.
Le Cortège priapique. 1925.
Julie; ou, La Rose. 1927.
Le Condor et le morpion. 1931.
Ombre de mon amour. 1947; revised edition, as Poèmes à Lou, 1955.
Le Guetteur mélancolique. 1952.
Tendre comme le souvenir. 1952.
Selected Poems (bilingual edition), edited and translated by Oliver Bernard. 1965, enlarged edition, 1986.
Alcools: Poems, translated by Donald Revell, 1995.

Plays

Les Mamelles de Tirésias (produced 1917). 1918.
Couleur du temps (produced 1918). 1949.
Casanova. 1952.
La Température, with André Salmon (produced 1975). In Oeuvres en prose, 1977.
A Quelle Heure un train partira-t-il pour Paris?. 1982.

Fiction

Les Exploits d’un jeune Don Juan. 1907; as The Exploits of a Young Don Juan, translated by Alex Lykiard, 1986.
Les Onze Mille Verges. 1907; as The Debauched Hospodar, translated by Arcan Mole, 1953; as Les Onze Mille Verges; or, the Amorous Adventures of Prince Mony Vibescu, translated by Nina Rootes, 1976.
L’Enchanteur pourrissant. 1909.
L’Hérésiarque et cie. 1910; selection, as Contes choisis, 1922; as The Heresiarch and Company, translated by Rémy Inglis Hall, 1965; as The Wandering Jew and Other Stories, 1965.
La Fin de Babylone. 1914.
Les Trois Don Juan. 1915.
Le Poète assassiné. 1916; edited by Michel Décaudin, 1959; as The Poet Assassinated, translated by Matthew Josephson, 1923; also translated by Ron Padgett, 1968.
La Femme assise: Chronique de France et d’Amérique. 1920.
Les Épingles: Contes. 1928.
Que faire?. 1950.
Three Pre-surrealist Plays, translated with an introduction and notes by Maya Slater, 1997.
Lettres à Guillaume Apollinaire, 1904–1918 by Ricciotto Canudo, 1999.

Other

Méditations esthétiques: Les Peintres cubistes. 1913; edited by Leroy C. Breunig and J.-Cl. Chevalier, 1965; as The Cubist Painters:

- Aesthetic Meditations 1913*, translated by Lionel Abel, 1944; revised editions, 1949, 1962.
- Le Flâneur des deux rives*. 1918.
- Il y a*. 1925.
- Anecdotes*. 1926.
- Contemporains pittoresques*. 1929.
- Oeuvres érotiques complètes* (verse and prose). 3 vols., 1934.
- L'Esprit nouveau et les poètes*. 1946.
- Lettres à sa marraine*. 1948.
- Chroniques d'art, 1902–1918*, edited by Leroy C. Breunig. 1961; as Apollinaire On Art: Essays and Reviews, translated by Susan Suliman. 1972.
- Correspondance*, with André Level, edited by Brigitte Level. 1976.
- Petites flâneries d'art*, edited by Pierre Caizergues. 1980.
- Correspondance avec son frère et sa mère*, edited by Gilbert Boudar and Michel Décaudin. 1987.
- Correspondance*, with Jean Cocteau, edited by Pierre Caizergues and Michel Décaudin. 1991.
- Journal intime: 1898–1918*, edited by Michel Décaudin. 1991.
- Editor, Chronique des grands siècles de la France. 1912.

*

Critical Studies: Apollinaire by Marcel Adéma, 1954; The Evolution of Apollinaire's Poetics, 1901–1914 by Francis J. Carmody, 1963; Apollinaire, Poet among Painters by Francis Steegmuller, 1963, reprinted 1985; Apollinaire by Margaret Davies, 1964; Apollinaire by Scott Bates, 1967, revised edition, 1989; Apollinaire by Leroy C. Breunig, 1969; The Drama of Self in Apollinaire's Alcools by Richard Howard Stamelman, 1975; Guillaume Apollinaire by Roger Little, 1976; Guillaume Apollinaire as an Art Critic by Harry E. Buckley, 1981; The Creative Vision of Apollinaire: A Study of Imagination by David Berry, 1982; Apollinaire: Catalyst for Primitivism, Picabia and Duchamps by Katia Samaltanos, 1984; Alfred Jarry and Guillaume Apollinaire by Claude Schumacher, 1984; Reading Apollinaire: Theories of Poetic Language by Timothy Mathews, 1987; Apollinaire, Visual Poetry, and Art Criticism by William Bohn, 1993; Poetry and Painting: Baudelaire, Mallarmé, Apollinaire, and their Painter Friends by Alan Bowness, 1994; Apollinaire and the International Avant-garde by William Bohn, 1997.

* * *

Guillaume Apollinaire's culture was eclectic. He preferred the Latin of the mystics to that of Virgil, heretical theologians to St. Thomas, Italian storytellers of the Renaissance to Dante, The Kabbala to the Bible. In contrast to his learning, his heart was simple and limpid. At the publication of Alcools in 1913, Georges Duhamel called Apollinaire a pedlar with the mingled characteristics of a Levantine Jew, a South American, a Polish gentleman, and an Italian porter. To these roles might be added that of the innocent hero, part braggart, part simpleton, who discovered in war the brotherhood of man, and revealed to his many friends one of the truly noble, truly good souls of his age.

His poetry is composed of influences, readings, memories, echoes of many poets, from Villon to Verlaine and Jarry. But his voice is also bare and personal. The story of his life was the effort he made to guard secrets and mysteries, and to create for his friends and his public a character whom they would love and yet not know too intimately. The buffoonery of his character, his endless anecdotes and pranks, permitted him to conceal or disguise the nostalgia and sadness and even perhaps the tragedy of his life. But the poetry of Apollinaire is not mask and deceit. It is fantasy in the deepest sense of the word. It is lawful fantasy: its images rightfully conceal and communicate at the same time the emotions he had experienced.

His poetic fantasy was, first, that of revolt, by which he always remained precious and close to the Surrealists. He broke with the familiar patterns of thought, with the poetic clichés and literariness of the Parnassians and Symbolists, and with the familiar units and rules of syntax. His poetry comes together in a great freedom of composition, as if he allowed the images and emotions to compose themselves. In his poetry, phantoms, wanderers, mythic characters bearing sonorous names, appear and disappear as do the laws of syntax and prosody.

It was appropriate that Apollinaire, coming after the highly self-conscious and studied literary school of Symbolism, would, in rebellion against such artifice, seek to return to the most primitive sources of lyricism. His adventure, if we were to extract such a subject from his work, would closely resemble Gide's adventure: the lessons on freedom and gratuitousness and individual morality, which were being formulated at the same time. Apollinaire thus prolongs the lesson of Rimbaud and Mallarmé, in considering poetic activity as a secret means of knowledge, self-knowledge and world-knowledge.

All the opposites are joined and harmonized in his poetry: fire and water, day and night, the bookish and the popular, the libertine and the sorrowing lover. All the myths are in his verses, in close company with pure inventions. He called upon his immediate knowledge of cities and ports, of unscrupulous voyous and popular songs, in order to speak in his tone of prophet and discoverer. His universe is one of chance and naïvety, of a certain childlike candour which the Surrealists would later try to reconstruct. He was the first to use a facile exoticism and eroticism which today is found in American films and jazz music. But in his most facile songs, as in "Le Musicien de Saint-Merry," he is able to generate a delicate irony from the shifts in tone.

There is a record of Apollinaire's voice reciting "Le Pont Mirabeau," which contains his most persistent theme—the passing and change of sentiments, and the poet's own stability:

Vienne la nuit sonne l'heure
Les jours s'en vont je demeure

The chance meetings in the world and their dissolutions bear relationship with the chance meetings of words in a poem. Apollinaire is first a poet of regret, of delicate nostalgia, and then, in a very mysterious way, he is the poet of resurrection and exaltation. His memory of the dead makes them into constant presences. "Vendémiaire," the long poem that ends Alcools, is a striking evocation of Paris and of all the myths of poetic preservation, of Orpheus and of Icarus who tried to possess the world. The wine of the universe brought contentment to "oceans animals plants cities destinies and singing stars." The poem also contains accents of sorrow and Apollinaire's familiar reference to the sadness of children with their salt tears that taste of the ocean. But it is at the same time a poem on hope and one of the most stirring of the century.

The contrast between Apollinaire's erudition, nourished on pornography, magic, popular literature, encyclopedias, and his total simplicity as a song writer, explains to some degree the profound irony pervading all of his poetry. His appearance, at the beginning of the 20th century, coincided with many new aesthetic preoccupations to which he brought his own inventiveness and speculative inquiry. His work joined with that of Max Jacob, Picasso, Braque, Derain, and Matisse in a series of fantasies and works of art that have gone far in shaping modern sensitivity. A farcical festive air presided over many of the modes of art that were given the names of cubism, fauvism, Negro art, cosmopolitanism, erotology. Apollinaire himself was responsible for the term “surrealism.” He literally became a prophet in his support of aesthetic innovations that were to become the accepted forms of the future. His articles on painting place him second to Baudelaire among the aestheticians of modern France.

The lesson Apollinaire teaches about poetry is the most important in France since Rimbaud’s. (“La Chanson du mal-aimé” has become for our age what “Le Lac” and “Tristesse d’Olympio” were for the 19th century.) His poetry does not try to fathom the supernatural, but simply to state the incomprehensibility of the ordinary and the commonplace. Every human expression he saw became sphinx-like for him, and every word he overheard resembled a sibyl’s utterance. Nascent language it would seem to be, as the poet, performing his earliest role of demiurge, calls the world to be born again by naming it.

—Wallace Fowlie

See the essays on “La Chanson du mal-aimé” and “Zone.”

APOLLONIUS OF RHODES

Born: Apollonius Rhodius in Alexandria, Egypt, possibly c. 295 BC. Active during first half of 3rd century BC, and possibly later. Education: Studied under Callimachus, q.v.: said to have quarrelled with Callimachus and retired to Rhodes, but evidence for this is unreliable. Career: Held post of director (prostates) of the Museum Library at Alexandria, possibly c. 260–247 BC; tutor to Ptolemy III Euergetes. In addition to various poems, of which only the Argonautica survives, wrote scholarly works on Homer, Hesiod, and Archilochus, now lost. Died: c. 215 BC.

PUBLICATIONS

Verse

Argonautica, edited by H. Fränkel. 1961; also edited by F. Vian (includes French translation), 3 vols., 1974–81; Book III edited by R.L. Hunter, 1989; as The Tale of the Argonauts, translated by A.S. Way, 1901; as Argonautica, translated by R.C. Seaton (prose), 1912; also translated by Charles E. MacBean, 1976; as The Voyage of the Argo, translated by E.V. Rieu (prose), 1959; as Jason and the Golden Fleece (The Argonautica), translated by Richard Hunter, 1993; as The Argonautika, translated by Peter Green, 1997.

*

Critical Studies: Hellenistic Poetry by A. Körte, 1929; Echoes and Imitations of Early Epic in Apollonius Rhodius, 1981, Index verborum in Apollonius Rhodius, 1983, and Studies in the Third Book of Apollonius Rhodius’ Argonautica, 1983, all by Malcolm Campbell; Epic and Romance in the Argonautica of Apollonius by C.R. Beyé, 1982;

Landscape in the Argonautica of Apollonius Rhodius by Mary Frances Williams, 1991; The Best of the Argonauts: The Redefinition of the Epic Hero in Book I of Apollonius’s Argonautica by James J. Clauss, 1993; The Argonautica of Apollonius by Richard Hunter, 1993.

* * *

The only work of Apollonius which survives is the epic Argonautica, written in hexameters, the traditional epic metre, with the high archaic language and style of the Homeric poems. After the Iliad and Odyssey the Argonautica is the most important epic from the ancient Greek world, and it was soon recognized as such; Virgil’s Aeneid was profoundly influenced by it (behind Virgil’s Dido, for instance, stand Apollonius’ Hypsipyle and Medea). Early history of the work is uncertain. The Greek biographical tradition (which usually contains much palpably fictitious material) reports that the Argonautica was at first badly received in Alexandria and suggests that Apollonius was at odds with his “teacher” Callimachus, the most important scholar and poet of the Hellenistic period, who radically changed the course of Greek poetry, but only amid great controversy; to what extent the Argonautica was considered by Apollonius’ contemporaries more traditional than avant-garde is no longer known, but there are many cross-references between the poems of Callimachus and the Argonautica, and Apollonius’ poem is thoroughly modernistic in tone and style.

Superficially the Argonautica would seem to be an orthodox work aiming for a place in the mainstream tradition of heroic epic (though of literate, not oral, composition), and it has often been so regarded; modern critics who view it in this way generally contrast the Argonautica with what they see as the straightforward heroic world of the Homeric poems and conclude that Apollonius’ work is an interesting failure. However, the Iliad and Odyssey are far from simplistic in outlook, and recent scholarship on Hellenistic poetry suggests that the Argonautica is a complex and original poem which successfully reworked the old epic form and reflects the troubled and introspective mentality of 3rd-century BC Alexandria.

The Argonautica can appear to be an episodic, disjointed work with many characteristically Hellenistic “travelogue” features (it touches often on matters of ethnography, geography, anthropology, etc.); but in fact the poem is remarkably whole. The work’s perspective is established not through narrative directness, or through imagery or symbolism, but by a process of reversal often thought of as “irony” in the 20th century: the familiar is taken for granted and suppressed in favour of the less familiar, and what is important is most often expressed indirectly and at a secondary level. The result can be enigmatic but genuinely disturbing, and an effective way of conveying a pessimistic vision of a fragile and fragmented world. First, the story of the voyage of Jason and the Argonauts to Colchis in the distant parts of the Black Sea to capture the Golden Fleece, and of the difficult but crucial passion of the local princess Medea for Jason, was an ancient one, and Apollonius assumes that his audience does not need to have it retold in all its details; Jason’s subsequent abandonment of Medea, for example, is nowhere recounted openly (the poem even ends just before the Argonauts reach home), but the whole poem broods on the issues of commitment, trust, and deception. Secondly, Apollonius takes for granted a familiarity with the two monumental epics preceding his own, and, by using the Iliad and Odyssey as “archetypal” reference points against which the Argonauts and their various encounters are juxtaposed and interpreted, he creates a multiplicity of dimensions and a kind of commentary to his Argonautica; thus Medea does not appear until Book III (the poem consists of four long “books”), but the most substantial episode of Book I, the Argonauts’ visit to the strange island of Lemnos with its all-female population, turns out to be diagnostic for Colchis. Although Jason’s affair with the Lemnian queen Hypsipyle seems idle and inconsequential on the surface of the narrative, once Apollonius’ references to Homer are recognized and Hypsipyle is considered as a figure reminiscent of Nausicaa and Circe, and Jason as an Odysseus or even Agamemnon, the real issues of ambivalence, pressure of circumstance, and expedient compromise begin to emerge. These are the issues underlying the whole poem, whether in the exotic account of the outward journey of Books I and II, the pathology of Medea’s awful passion and conflict in Book III, or the alienated return home through the strange, semimythical half-real world of the Adriatic and north Africa in Book IV.

—A.W. Bulloch

APULEIUS, Lucius

Born: Madaura, province of Africa (now M’Daourouch, Algeria), c. AD 123–25. Education: Educated in Carthage, Athens, and Rome. Family: Married Aemilia Pudentilla; possibly had a son called Faustinus. Career: Lived in Oea (now Tripoli) where he married; acquitted of a charge of magic at nearby Sabratha; later lived in Carthage, where his success in public speaking led to various honours, including a statue and the important priesthood of Asclepius. Died: later than AD 163 (probably much later).

PUBLICATIONS

Collection

[Works], edited by Rudolph Helm and P. Thomas. 3 vols., 1907–31.

Fiction

Metamorphoses, edited by D.S. Robertson. 3 vols., 1940–45; also edited by Rudolph Helm, 1955, and C. Giarratano, revised by P. Frassinetti, 1960; edited and translated by J. Arthur Hanson [Loeb Edition], 2 vols., 1989; as The Golden Ass, translated by William Adlington, 1566, reprinted 1967, revised by Stephen Gaselee [Loeb Edition], 1915, also revised by Harry C. Schnur, 1962; also translated by Thomas Taylor, 1822; H.E. Butler, 2 vols., 1910; Jack Lindsay, 1932; Robert Graves, 1950; P.G. Walsh, 1994; as The Isis-Book, translated by J. Gwyn Griffiths, 1975; in part as Cupid and Psyche, edited and translated by E.J. Kenny, 1990; commentaries by A. Scobie (Book I), 1975, R.T. van der Paardt (Book III), 1971, B.L. Hijmans, Jr and others (Book IV), 1977, (Book VI and VII), 1981, (Book VIII), 1985, and J.G. Griffiths (Book XI), 1975; translated with introduction and explanatory notes by P.G. Walsh, 1994.

Other

Apologia, Florida, edited (with French translation) by P. Vallette. 2nd edition, 1960; as The Apologia and Florida, translated by H.E. Butler, 1909.

Philosophica (includes De deo Socratis; De dogmate Platonis; De Mundo), edited (with French translation) by J. Beaujeu. 1973.

*

Bibliography: Ad Apulei Madaurensis Metamorphoseon librum primum commentarius Exegeticus by Margaretha Molt (dissertation, Groningen), 1938; “The Scholarship on Apuleius since 1938” by Carl C. Schlam, in Classical World, 64, 1971.

Critical Studies: Apuleius and His Influence by E.H. Haight, 1927; The Ancient Romances by B.E. Perry, 1967; Aspects of the Ancient Romance and Its Heritage: Essays on Apuleius, Petronius, and the Greek Romances by Alexander Scobie, 1969; The Roman Novel: The “Satyricon” of Petronius and the “Metamorphoses” of Apuleius by P.G. Walsh, 1970; Cupid and Psyche: Apuleius and the Monuments, 1972, and The Metamorphoses of Apuleius: On Making an Ass of Oneself, 1992, both by Carl C. Schlam; Amor and Psyche: The Psychic Development of the Feminine: A Commentary on the Tale by Apuleius by Erich Neuman, 1973; Aspects of the Golden Ass edited by B.L. Hijmans, Jr. and R. Th. van der Paardt, 1978; Apuleius and the Golden Ass by James Tatum, 1979; Shakespeare’s Favourite Novel: A Study of the Golden Ass as a Prime Source by J.J.M. Tobin, 1984; Auctor and Actor: A Narratological Reading of Apuleius’ Golden Ass by John J. Winkler, 1985; Unity in Diversity: A Study of Apuleius’ Metamorphoses by Paula James, 1987; The Metamorphoses of Apuleius by Judith K. Krabbe, 1989; The Golden Ass of Apuleius: The Liberation of the Feminine in Man by Marie-Louise von Franz, revised edition, 1992; Metamorphosis of Language in Apuleius: A Study of Allusion in the Novel by Ellen D. Finkelppearl, 1998; The Religious Dreamworld of Apuleius’ Metamorphoses: Recovering a Forgotten Hermeneutic by James Gollnick, 1999; Apuleius: A Latin Sophist by S.J. Harrison, 2000; Tales Within Tales: Apuleius Through Time, edited by Constance S. Wright and Julia Bolton Holloway, 2000.

* * *

Apuleius is best understood as a performer. He regularly gave public speeches before the large crowds they attracted in his age, and his written work too reflects a concern to use style and knowledge to capture and maintain an audience’s attention.

The Florida, a collection of the most “florid” parts of his public speeches, displays a man supremely confident before his admiring audience. He speaks with authority on a multitude of subjects, from Alexander the Great to parrots, though usually in a philosophical or cultural key. His style is as luxuriant as his subjects: in defiance of the careful, if at times precious, styles of the Golden and Silver Ages of Latin literature before him, his own style overflows with archaism, colloquialism, neologism, particularly if it will add to the rhythm, balance, music, or patterning. His style not only exemplifies the new tendencies of the age, but pushes them to an extreme.

Public speakers such as Apuleius considered they had a duty to educate, and some fulfilled this duty through a sort of popularizing philosophy. Apuleius had pretensions to being a Platonist philosopher, and there survive works ascribed to him which expound the philosophy of Plato as understood in his time. Most Apuleian is the energetic showpiece De deo Socratis [On the God of Socrates], which analyses the way in which an intermediary spirit connects us with God and which, for instance, memorably depicts the human condition in 19 successive epithets. Otherwise, these philosophical works are more disappointing and sometimes simply translate minor Greek works, although the translations seem to have proved useful to Greekless readers, if one may judge by the example of St Augustine.

Once, Apuleius needed to deliver a speech, to defend himself against the charge of winning the rich widow Pudentilla's affections by magic. The Apologia (or On Magic) is the only surviving classical Latin law-court speech not by Cicero, and, at least in its published form, displays the style of the Florida and a wicked sense of humour that we meet again in his novel.

The Metamorphoses, or The Golden Ass as it is generally known, is Apuleius' sole surviving novel (novels were in any case rare, late, and unprestigious in Greek and Roman literature), and is what Apuleius is best known for today. He takes a Greek short story and lengthens it to five times its original size by inserting stories (unlikely to be his own invention), thus making a Latin novel of some 250 modern pages. The Greek tale told how Lucius, dabbling in magic, was accidentally turned into an ass and underwent various adventures before being restored. Apuleius enriches the simple style of the original, producing something not easily translated into modern English. The inserted stories—of magic, brigands, and adultery—are related with verve and humour. Apuleius is interested too in psychological portrayal, though not in psychological development current in the modern novel; rather, the mind is as promising a subject for a description as is a brigands' camp or a god's garden.

The longest inserted tale, the celebrated story of Cupid and Psyche, is different. Its magical tone stands in stark contrast to the rumbustiousness of most of the novel. It adds, too, problems of interpretation: it is like a folk-tale, and thought by many to be a folk-tale; but it is difficult to deny some connection with the Platonic doctrine that Soul (Psyche) reaches its divine target through an intermediary spirit, Love (Cupid). The ending of the novel too, where Apuleius' hero is saved by initiation in the rites of the Egyptian goddess Isis, is thought by some to be a mere show of seriousness to finish, but by others to be the climax of a novel all along about the dangers of worldly vices.

We know nothing of the initial reception of the novel; and something of our assessment must depend on the precise interpretation adopted. But the extraordinary energy of the work is undeniable, as is the success of the frame-and-insertion structure in maintaining an unflagging interest. It displays many contrasts, from the flippant to the gruesome, from realism to make-believe, from bawdiness to extravagant piety. In character development it has the limitations of all ancient novels and most ancient thought. Its style has offended purists, but may be more validly criticized for unrelievedly trying too hard. Apuleius seems self-indulgent, but, more accurately, is preoccupied with dazzling his audience, an aim in which, as a professional, he generally succeeds.

—Ken Dowden

See the essay on Cupid and Psyche.

ARAGON, Louis

Born: Paris, France, 3 October 1897. Education: Educated at the Lycée Saint-Pierre, Neuilly, 1908–14; studied medicine, University of Paris, 1916–17. Military Service: Served in the French army, medical auxiliary, 1918; medical corps, 1939–40, captured by the Nazis, escaped; active with the French Resistance, 1940–45: Croix de Guerre, 1918. Family: Married the writer Elsa Kagan Triolet in 1939 (died 1970). Career: Co-founding editor, with André Breton and Philippe Soupault, Littérature, 1919–24; active advocate of Dada, 1921–24, moved towards Surrealism from late 1920s; joined the Communist Party, 1927; attempted suicide, 1928; travelled to the Soviet Union, with his wife, November 1930; attended Revolutionary Writers Congress, Kharkov, publicly rejected Surrealism, 1931; lived in the Soviet Union, 1932–33; reporter and columnist, L'Humanité, 1933–34, member of the editorial board, Commune, 1933–36, both Paris; representative, 1st Congress of Soviet Writers, Moscow, 1934; organizer, 1st Congress of Writers in Defense of Culture, Paris, 1935; returned to the Soviet Union, June–December 1936; founding editor, Ce Soir, Paris, 1937–39 (publication banned 1939) and 1944–46; editor, Les Lettres françaises, 1953–72. Awards: Renaudot prize, 1936; Lenin Peace prize, USSR, 1957. Order of October Revolution, USSR, 1972; Order of People's Friendship, USSR, 1977; Chevalier, Légion d'honneur, 1981. Died: 24 December 1982.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Oeuvres romanesques croisées d'Elsa Triolet et Aragon, edited by Robert Laffont. 42 vols., 1964–74.

Oeuvre poétique. 15 vols., 1974–81.

Poésie. 1980.

Fiction

Anicet; ou, Le Panorama. 1921.

Les Aventures de Télémaque. 1922; as The Adventures of Telemachus, translated and with an introduction by Renee Riese Hubert and Judd D. Hubert, 1997.

Le Con d'Irène (as Albert de Routisie). 1928; as Irène, 1968; as Irene, translated by Lowell Bair, 1970; as Irene's Cunt, translated by Alexis Lykiard, 1996.

Les Plaisirs de la capitale. 1923.

Le Monde réel:

Les Cloches de Bâle. 1934; as The Bells of Basel, translated by Haakon M. Chevalier, 1936.

Les Beaux Quartiers. 1936; as Residential Quarter, translated by Haakon M. Chevalier, 1936.

Les Voyageurs de l'impériale. 1942; as The Century Was Young, translated by Hannah Josephson, 1941; as Passengers of Destiny, translated by Josephson, 1947.

Aurélien. 1944; as Aurélien, translated by Eithne Wilkins, 1946.

Servitude et grandeur des Français: Scènes des années terribles (stories). 1945.

Trois contes (stories). 1945.

Les Communistes. 1949–51; revised edition, 4 vols., 1966.

La Semaine sainte. 1958; as Holy Week, translated by Haakon M. Chevalier, 1961.

La Mise à mort. 1965.

Shakespeare (stories), illustrated by Picasso. 1965; as Shakespeare, translated by Bernard Frechtman, 1965.

Blanche ou l'oubli. 1967.

Henri Matisse. 2 vols., 1971; as Henri Matisse, translated by Jean Stewart, 1972.
Théâtre/Roman. 1974.
Le Mentir vrai (stories). 1980.
La Défense de l'infini (includes Les Aventures de Jean-Foutre La Bite). 1986.

Verse

Feu de joie. 1920.
Le Mouvement perpétuel. 1926.
La Grande gaîté. 1929.
Persécuté persécuteur. 1931.
Front Rouge. 1931; as The Red Front, translated by E.E. Cummings, 1933.
Hourra l'Oural. 1934.
Le Crève-coeur. 1941; part translated in Aragon: Poet of the French Resistance, edited by Malcolm Cowley and Hannah Josephson, 1945.
Cantique à Elsa. 1941.
Brocéliande. 1942.
Les Yeux d'Elsa. 1942.
En français dans le texte. 1943.
Le Musée Grévin (as François La Colère). 1943.
Poèmes français. 1943.
France, écoute. 1944.
Le Crève-coeur et Les Yeux d'Elsa. 1944.
Neuf chansons interdites, 1942–1944. 1945.
En étrange pays dans mon pays lui-même (includes En français dans le texte; Brocéliande; De l'exactitude historique en poésie). 1945.
La Diane française. 1945.
Le Nouveau Crève-coeur. 1948.
Les Yeux et la mémoire. 1954.
Mes caravanes et autres poèmes. 1954.
Le Roman inachevé. 1956; as The Unfinished Romance, 1956.
Elsa. 1959.
Choix de poèmes. 1959.
Poésies: Anthologie, 1917–1960. 1960.
Les Poètes. 1960; revised edition, 1968 and 1976.
Le Fou d'Elsa. 1963.
Il ne m'est Paris que d'Elsa (anthology). 1964; revised edition, 1975.
Le Voyage de Hollande. 1964.
Élégie à Pablo Neruda. 1966.
Les Chambres. 1969.
Élégie à Romano, with Hamid Foulâdvind. 1980.
Les Adieux: poèmes. 1981.
Les Adieux et autres poèmes. 1982.

Plays

L'Armoire à glace un beau soir. 1924; as The Mirror-Wardrobe One Fine Evening, translated by Michael Benedikt, in Modern French Theater, edited by Benedikt and George E. Wellwarth, 1964.
Au pied du mur. 1924.
Le trésor des Jésuites. 1929.

Other

Le Libertinage (essays; includes play). 1924. as The Libertine, translated by Jo Levy, 1987.

Le Paysan de Paris (essays). 1926; as Nightwalker, translated by Frederick Brown, 1970; as Paris Peasant, translated by Simon Taylor Watson, 1971.
Traité du style. 1928.
La Peinture au défi. 1930.
Pour un réalisme socialiste. 1935.
Le Crime contre l'esprit, par le témoin des martyrs. 1942.
Les Bons Voisins (as Arnaud de saint Roman). 1943.
En français dans le texte. 1943.
 "Matisse-en-France". 1943.
Je vous salue ma France. 1944.
Saint-Pol-Roux, ou l'espoir. 1945.
Servitude et grandeur des Français. 1945
L'Homme communiste. 2 vols., 1946–53.
Apologie du luxe. 1946.
Chroniques du bel canto. 1947.
La Culture et les hommes. 1947.
La Lumière et la Paix. 1950.
Hugo, poète réaliste. 1952.
L'Exemple de Courbet. 1952.
La Vrai Liberté de la culture, réduire notre train de mort pour accroître notre train de vie. 1952.
Les Egmont d'aujourd'hui s'appellent André Stil. 1952.
Le Neveu de Monsieur Duval. 1953.
Journal d'une poésie nationale. 1954.
La Lumière de Stendhal. 1954.
Les Yeux et la mémoire. 1954.
Littératures soviétiques. 1955.
Entretiens sur le Musée de Dresde, with Jean Cocteau. 1957; as Conversations on the Dresden Gallery, 1982.
J'abats mon jeu (essays). 1959.
Histoire parallèle des États-Unis et de l'URSS, with André Maurois. 4 vols., 1962; revised edition as Les Deux Géants: Histoire des États-Unis et de l'URSS de 1917 à nos jours, 5 vols., 1962–64; translated in part as A History of the USSR: From Lenin to Krushchev, by Patrick O'Brian, 1964.
Entretiens avec Francis Crémieux. 1964.
Les Collages. 1965.
Aragon parle avec Dominique Arban. 1968.
Fernand Séguin rencontre Louis Aragon. 1969.
Je n'ai jamais appris à écrire; ou, Les Incipits. 1969.
Comme je vous en donne l'exemple. 1974.
Vie de Charlot: Charles Spencer Chaplin, ses films et son temps, with Georges Sadoul. 1978.
Écrits sur l'art moderne (essays), edited by Jean Ristat. 1981.
Réflexions sur Rimbaud. 1983.
Pour expliquer ce que j'étais (journal). 1989.
Une vague de rêves. 1990.
 Editor, Avez-vous lu Victor Hugo?. 1952.
 Editor, Introduction aux littératures soviétiques: Contes et nouvelles. 1956.
 Editor, Elsa Triolet choisie par Aragon. 1960.
 Translator, La Chasse au snark, by Lewis Carroll. 1928.
 Translator, Fraternity, by Stephen Spender. 1939.
 Translator, Cinq Sonnets de Pêtrarque. 1947.
 Translator, with A. Dimitriev, Djamilia, by Tchinghiz Aitmatov. 1959.

*

Bibliography: Louis Aragon: Essai de bibliographie by Crispin Geoghegan, 1979–80; Louis Aragon: Bibliographie analytique by Marie Lemaître, 1983.

Critical Studies: Aragon: Poet of the French Resistance (includes translations from Le Crève-cœur) edited by Malcolm Cowley and Hannah Josephson, 1945, as Aragon: Poet of the Resurgent France, 1946; Aragon by Hubert Juin, 1960; Aragon: Romancier by Pierre Lescure, 1960; L'Itinéraire d'Aragon by Roger Garaudy, 1961; Aragon by Georges Raillard, 1964; Malraux, Sartre and Aragon as Political Novelists by Catherine H. Savage, 1964; Aragon, prosateur surréaliste by Yvette Gendine, 1966; Aragon: Le Réalisme de l'amour, 1966; The Poetry of Dada and Surrealism: Aragon, Breton, Tzara, Éluard and Desnos by Mary Ann Caws, 1970; Louis Aragon by Lucille F. Becker, 1971; Aragon by Bernard Lecherbonnier, 1971; La Résistance et ses poètes by Pierre Seghers, 1974; Aragon: Une vie à changer by Pierre Daix, 1975; Un nouveau cadavre: Aragon by Paul Morelle, 1984; Aragon: The Resistance Poems by M. Adereth, 1985; Aragon romancier: d'Anicet à Aurélien by Jacqueline Lévi-Valensi, 1989; Socialist Realism in Louis Aragon's Le monde réel by Angela Kimyongür, 1995.

* * *

One of the most considerable French writers of the mid-20th century, Louis Aragon produced a large and varied body of work that is representative of the political aspirations and artistic orientations of the intellectuals of his age. From an early age he was a committed Marxist, although he did not always toe the Moscow line, and, like Jean-Paul Sartre, to quote another very notable instance, he was always ready to turn to journalism as well as to literature in order to express and communicate his ideas.

On return from service in the army medical corps during World War I, Aragon joined with André Breton and Philippe Soupault to found the magazine Littérature for avant-garde poetry. Its original tendency was Dadaist, in accord with the negative spirit born of the despair of the war years and disgust with bourgeois aesthetic values. Before long, however, Aragon and Breton, who had both studied medicine and had an interest in psychiatry, abandoned Dadaism in favour of surrealism, which combined an abiding concern with the operation of the unconscious with marked left-wing political concerns.

In 1921, a year after publishing Feu de joie [Bonfire], his first collection of verse, Aragon brought out the first of his major prose works, Anicet; ou, Le Panorama [Anicet; or, The Panorama Novel]. Though the very title challenges the surrealist tenet that the traditional novel was a spent force, Aragon uses his narrative very freely, borrowing some distancing techniques developed in the 18th century by Voltaire and Diderot to depict a poet, the eponymous Anicet. Anicet's education has left him emotionally parched, and the novel is essentially an account of his discovery of the significance of love that culminates in admission to a clandestine cult devoted to a female symbol of modern beauty. This was followed by Les Aventures de Télémaque (The Adventures of Telemachus). The title is taken from the classic 17th-century educational novel by Fénelon, Archbishop of Cambrai, and in a radical re-interpretation of the original, Aragon explores the theme of personal freedom. Published in 1926, Le Paysan de Paris (Paris Peasant), with a striking oxymoronic title that points to a relationship with the artificially constructed environment as close and intimate as the one that peasants are traditionally supposed to have with the soil they till, is generally regarded as Aragon's most important single contribution to surrealism because of the way in which it displays how the quotidian can be transformed magically by the free imagination of the passer-by. The most famous section is the presentation of the arcade called "The Passage de l'Opéra." Though Aragon attacked established classics and orthodox contemporary writers such as Mauriac and Gide in his Traité du style [Treatise on Style], he also revealed that he was beginning to lose sympathy with surrealism in what was for him a time of personal crisis that he resolved partially by taking up a firmer political stance, especially after a visit to Russia.

As well as becoming a journalist, working for the French Communist newspaper L'Humanité, founding Ce Soir, and visiting Spain in 1937 to support Spanish intellectuals, Aragon wrote Les Cloches de Bâle (The Bells of Basel), which was followed by Les Beaux Quartiers (Residential Quarter), Les Voyageurs de l'impériale (The Century Was Young) and Aurélien. They form a series of novels under the global title of Le Monde réel [The Real World] that present, from a Marxist perspective, a historically-based and at times autobiographical picture of the struggles of the French bourgeoisie to maintain its position in the face of working-class challenges. In the course of World War II, during which he was associated with the Resistance, and in the turbulent post-war period, Aragon turned increasingly towards journalism and political writing. Les Communistes is devoted primarily to extolling the role played by women in the evolution of communism in France. The style owes a great deal to documentary techniques, and the characterization is shallow, being determined largely by class and circumstance.

If Les Communistes appeared to support the view that the novel was not a form that really appealed to Aragon, La Semaine sainte (Holy Week) seemed to rebut it. Set against a familiar background of stirring historical events as Napoleon returns from exile in Elba to eject the restored monarchy of Louis XVIII, and reclaim the imperial crown, the novel centres on the painter Théodore Géricault and what might be called his political education as he witnesses people's responses to the crisis.

In addition to his prose, Aragon wrote a great deal of verse, and the poetry he wrote in later life is particularly admired. The poetry inspired by his love for his companion, Elsa Triolet, a Russian-born novelist and journalist whom he had first met in 1928, struck a particular responsive chord. As well as choosing themes with a wide appeal, Aragon was able to mix tradition forms and innovative techniques in his versification that found a receptive audience.

—Christopher Smith

See the essays on Le Crève-cœur and Paris Peasant.

ARENAS, Reinaldo

Born: Oriente Province, Cuba, 16 July 1943. Education: Studied agricultural accountancy at a vocational secondary school and the University of Havana, 1959–1962; also studied philosophy and literature without completing his degree. Military Service: Spent 1958 in the ranks of Fidel Castro's revolutionary movement. Career: Briefly worked in agricultural accounting at a farm in rural Oriente Province before beginning higher studies in Havana; began writing in the early 1960s and started working at the National Library in Havana in 1963; later became an editor for the Cuban Book Institute and a contributor to literary magazines such as Unión and La Gaceta de Cuba. Persecuted for his homosexuality and for publishing abroad without official permission, he was in and out of prison and forced work camps from the early to mid-1970s. After leaving Cuba in 1980, he settled in New York where he wrote and published prodigiously for the next decade. Awards: Honorable mention, Concurso Nacional de Novela (Cuba) for Celestino antes del alba, 1965; Prix Medici Etranger (France) for the best novel by a foreign author for Celestino antes del alba, 1969. Died: Terminally ill with AIDS, he took his life on 7 December 1990.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Mona and Other Tales. 2001; selected and translated by Dolores M. Koch.

Fiction

- Celestino antes del alba*. 1967; as Singing from the Well, translated by Andrew Hurley, 1987.
- El mundo alucinante*. 1969; as Hallucinations, translated by Gordon Brotherson, 1971.
- La Vieja Rosa*. 1980; as Old Rosa, translated by Ann Tashi Slater and Andrew Hurley, 1989.
- Otra vez el mar*. 1982; as Farewell to the Sea, translated by Andrew Hurley, 1986.
- Cantando en el pozo*. 1982; as Singing from the Well, translated by Andrew Hurley, 1987.
- El Palacio de las Blanquísimas Mofetas*. 1983; as The Palace of the White Skunks, translated by Andrew Hurley, 1990.
- Arturo, la estrella más brillante*. 1984; as The Brightest Star, translated by Andrew Hurley, 1989.
- La loma del ángel*. 1987; as Graveyard of Angels, translated by Alfred MacAdam, 1987.
- El portero*. 1988; as The Doorman, translated by Dolores Koch, 1991.
- Viaje a La Habana* [Journey to Havana]. 1990.
- El color del verano*. 1991; as Color of Summer, or, the New Garden of Earthly Delights, translated by Andrew Hurley, 2000.
- El asalto*. 1991; as The Assault, translated by Andrew Hurley, 1994.

Verse

- El central*. 1981; as El Central: A Cuban Sugar Mill, translated by Anthony Kerrigan, 1984.
- Voluntad de vivir manifestándose*. 1989.
- Leprosorio* [Leprosarium]. 1990.

Plays

Persecución: cinco piezas de teatro experimental. 1996.

Other

- Necesidad de libertad*. 1986.
- Un plebiscito a Fidel Castro*. 1990.
- Final de un cuento*. 1991.
- Antes que anochezca* (autobiography). 1992; as Before Night Falls, translated by Dolores Koch, 1993.

*

Bibliography: “Critical Monographs, Dissertations, and Critical Essays about Reinaldo Arenas” by David William Foster, in Cuban Literature: A Research Guide by David William Foster, 1985.

Critical Studies: La textualidad de Reinaldo Arenas by Eduardo Béjar, 1987; Conversación con Reinaldo Arenas by Francisco Soto, 1990; El desamparado humor de Reinaldo Arenas by Roberto Valero, 1991; Reinaldo Arenas: The Pentagonia by Francisco Soto, 1994; Reinaldo Arenas: recuerdo y presencia edited by Reinaldo Sánchez, 1994; Reinaldo Arenas by Francisco Soto, 1998; Reinaldo Arenas: una apreciación política by Adolfo Cacheiro, 2000.

* * *

Reinaldo Arenas is the most widely read and highly acclaimed writer to emerge from post-revolutionary Cuba and is viewed as one of the most original and controversial voices in twentieth century Latin American literature. Although mainly known as a novelist, Arenas also produced a considerable amount of poetry, drama, short fiction, essays, and, of course, his celebrated autobiography Antes que anochezca (Before Night Falls), which was made into a major motion picture in 2000.

In addition to the fame brought by his writing, Arenas’s quasi-mythical status in twentieth century Latin American literature is due to his remarkable life story and his status as a symbol of the Cuban revolution’s repression of dissident voices. Born in the remote Cuban countryside and raised in dire poverty among illiterate campesinos, Arenas joined Fidel Castro’s revolutionary movement and was awarded for his service with scholarships. As a free-thinking homosexual writer, however, Arenas soon fell into disfavor with the regime and became a “non-person” in Cuba even while enjoying great literary success abroad. In the early to mid-1970s, he was imprisoned and sent to forced labor camps on several occasions. By virtue of a bureaucratic oversight, Arenas managed to escape from Cuba with the 1980 Mariel boatlift and spent the remaining ten years of his life in exile.

Arenas’s first and only novel to be published in Cuba, Celestino antes del alba (Singing from the Well), is the first in a series of five books that the author called his pentagonía. These highly poetic novels can be understood as a sort of homosexual bildungsroman, or story of personal development, contained within a metaphor of twentieth century Cuban history. These texts are highly autobiographical and are meant to challenge the rigid norms of social realism that dominated the country’s literary production as the revolution became more dogmatic. Singing from the Well is the story of a child who uses his imagination to overcome the poverty and oppression of his childhood. Although this novel does not explicitly deal with homosexuality, its themes of creative rebelliousness and denunciation of intolerance are emblematic of Arenas’s entire oeuvre. With its lack of a traditional plot, its non-linear timeline, and its nameless narrator-protagonist, the novel typifies Arenas’s rejection of literary conventions. The distinctions between narrator, writer, and character are blurred in this text, a tendency that continues to manifest itself in Arenas’s later work. As the Cuban government became more repressive in the late 1960s, this novel came to be viewed as subversive and Arenas was forbidden to publish in Cuba.

In the second novel of the series, El Palacio de las Blanquísimas Mofetas (The Palace of the White Skunks), the protagonist of Singing from the Well is reincarnated as Fortunato, a rebellious adolescent with homosexual tendencies living in the chaotic pre-Revolutionary period. This novel showcases Arenas's nonconformity in its use of multiple narrative voices and its rejection of the predominant tendency among Cuban novelists of the era to portray the revolution as an unquestionably positive event that changed Cuba for the better. The third installment, Otra vez al mar (Farewell to the Sea) continues the story of Fortunato as the adult Héctor, a homosexual who lives on the margins of revolutionary Cuban society as a tortured dissident. El color del verano (Color of Summer) is the fourth novel in the series and takes place in Cuba in the summer of 1999, during the 50th year of the dictator Fífo's repressive regime. The first person narrative voice in this text is split among Gabriel, Reinaldo, and the Gloomy Skunk, a parody of the Catholic Holy Trinity. The text revolves around the exploits of a myriad of characters that engage in subversive adventures in preparation for celebrating the dictator's anniversary. El asalto (The Assault) is the final installment in the pentagonía. In a vein reminiscent of George Orwell's 1984, this book presents a futuristic version of Cuban society in which totalitarianism has been allowed to foster unchallenged. Despite the many clear references to Cuban society in these books, they can also be read on a more universal level as parables on the effects of intolerance and the importance of free self-expression.

Arenas's writing became more explicitly autobiographical with the posthumous publication of his autobiography Before Night Falls. Arenas dictated his life story, which he had begun to write many years earlier in the treetops of Havana's Lenin Park as a fugitive from the Cuban police, into a tape recorder while suffering from the advanced stages of AIDS. This text has been hailed as a landmark in Latin American literature because of its open and frank treatment of the life story and erotic adventures of a homosexual writer. This book, like the novels of the pentagonía, is clearly critical of the Cuban regime and cries out for the need to respect individual freedoms.

Most prominent among Arenas's short fiction is Viaje a La Habana [Journey to Havana], a collection of three novellas that are unified thematically around the idea of the homosexual's search for liberation from society's oppression.

Although much of Arenas's prose writing is characterized by its highly lyrical style, he also wrote more traditional verse such as the extensive poem El central (El Central: A Cuban Sugar Mill), which later came to form part of a poetic trilogy titled Leprosorio [Leprosarium]. This series of poems, which represent Cuban history from the Spanish conquest to the present, is Arenas's most blatantly politicized text. These are compositions full of rage directed at the atrocities committed against marginalized subjects—from African slaves to homosexual dissidents—throughout 500 years of Cuban history.

Since his death in 1990, Arenas's body of work has become increasingly popular and there is now general agreement among critics regarding his status as one of the most daring, creative, and rebellious writers in the history of Latin American letters.

—Stephen J. Clark

ARETINO, Pietro

Born: Arezzo, Florentine Republic (now in Italy), 20 April 1492. Education: Studied poetry and painting in Perugia. Family: Had two daughters, the first by Caterina Sandella. Career: Moved to Perugia, 1508; First poetry published, 1512; moved to Rome, 1517, under protection of Agostino Chigi, and entered political and artistic circles; under protection of Pope Leo X and the Medici, wrote lampoons and "pasquinades" against influential and powerful contemporaries, often gaining their enmity; fled Rome on the election of Pope Adrian VI, 1522, whom he had satirized; returned to Rome on election of Giulio de' Medici as Pope Clement VII, 1523; following assault by servants of a Curia official, left Rome again, and finally settled in Venice, 1527. Died: 21 October 1556.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Teatro, edited by Nunzio Macarrone. 2 vols., 1914.
Works, translated by Samuel Putnam. 2 vols., 1926.
Poesie, edited by Gaetano Sorselli. 2 vols., 1930–34.
Tutte le comedie, edited by G.B. Sanctis. 1968.
Teatro, edited by Giorgio Petrocchi. 1971.

Fiction

Ragionamenti, edited by Dario Carraroli. 2 vols., 1914; edited by Giovanni Aquilecchia, 1980; as The Ragionamenti: The Lives of Nuns; The Lives of Married Women; The Lives of Courtesans, edited and translated by Peter Stafford, 1971.
Ragionamento della Nanna e della Antonia. 1534; as The Lives of Nuns, in Works, 1926; also translated in The Ragionamenti, 1971.
Dialogo nel quale la Nanna insegna a la Pippa. 1536; as The Lives of Married Women, in Works, 1926; also translated in The Ragionamenti, 1971.
Ragionamento de le corti. 1538; edited by Guido Batteli, 1914; as The Lives of Courtesans, in Works, 1926; also translated in The Ragionamenti, 1971.
Le carte parlanti. 1543; edited by F. Campi, 1926.
A Dialogue of Dying Well, translated by Richard Verstagen. 1603.
Sei giornate: Ragionamento della Nanna e della Antonia; Dialogo nel quale la Nanna insegna a la Pippa, edited by Giovanni Aquilecchia. 1969.
Aretino's Dialogues, translated by Raymond Rosenthal. 1972.
Sei giornate, edited by Guide Davico Bonino. 1975.
Il romanzo della ruffiana, edited by G.B. De Sanctis. 1977.

Verse

Opera nova del fecundissimo Giovane Pietro Pictore Aretino zoe strambotti sonetti capitoli epistole barzellette ed una desperata. 1512.
Marfisa. 1532.
Stanze in lode di Madonna Angela Sirena. 1537.
Sonetti lussuriosi e pasquinate (selection), edited by M.B. Sirolese. 1980.
Sonnets, translated by Oscar Wilde. N.d.

Plays

Il marescalco (produced 1526/27). 1533; as The Stablemaster, translated by George Bull, in Five Italian Renaissance Comedies, edited by Bruce Penman, 1978; as The Marescalco, translated by Leonard G. Sbrocchi and J. Douglas Campbell, 1986.

La cortigiana (produced 1537). 1534 (edited version); in full, edited by Giuliano Innamorati, 1970.

La Talanta (produced 1542). 1542; as Talanta, translated by Christopher Cairns, in Three Renaissance Comedies, edited by Cairns, 1991.

Lo ipocrito (produced 1545). 1542.

L'Orazia. 1546.

Il filosofo. 1546.

Other

La Passione di Giesu. 1534.

I Sette Salmi della penitenza di David. 1535; as A Paraphrase upon the Seven Penitential Psalms, translated by Robert Persons, 1635.

Tre libri de la Humanità di Cristo. 1535.

Lettere. 6 vols., 1537–57; edited by Fausto Nicolini, 2 vols., 1913–16, and by Francesco Flora and A. Del Vito, 1960; selections as Lettere scelte, edited by Guido Battelli, 1913, and as Lettere sull'arte, edited by E. Camesasca, 3 vols., 1957–60; selections translated by Thomas Caldecot Chubb, as The Letters, 1967, and by George Bull, as Selected Letters, 1976.

Il Genesi. 3 vols., 1538.

Vita di Maria Vergine. 1539.

Vita di Caterina vergine e martire. 1540; edited by Flavia Santin, 1978.

Orlandino. 1540.

Vita di san Tommaso signor D'Aquino. 1543; edited by Flavia Santin, 1978.

Prose sacre, edited by Ettore Allodoli. 1926.

*

Critical Studies: Pietro Aretino e le sue opere by C. Bertani, 1901; Le commedie di Pietro Aretino by U. Fresco, 1901; Pietro Aretino: The Scourge of Princes by Edward Hutton, 1922; L'Aretino: Le cause della sua potenza e della sua fortuna by A. Del Vito, 1939; Pietro Aretino by Giorgio Petrocchi, 1948; Pietro Aretino: Studio e note critiche by Giuliano Innamorati, 1957; Progetto corporativo e autonomia dell'arte in Pietro Aretino by Giovanni Falaschi, 1977; Le voci dell'istrione: Pietro Aretino e la dissoluzione del teatro by Giulio Ferroni, 1977; L'Aretino by Cesare Marchi, 1980; Pietro Aretino and the Republic of Venice: Researches on Aretino and His Circle in Venice, 1527–1556, 1985, "Aretino's Comedies and the Italian 'Erasmian' Connection in Shakespeare and Jonson," in Theatre of the English and Italian Renaissance edited by J.R. Mulryne and M. Shrewsbury, 1991, and "Aretino's Talanta (1542) and the Influence of Vasari," in Italian Renaissance Festivals and Their European Influence edited by Mulryne and Shrewsbury, 1992, all by Christopher Cairns; "Rhetoric and Drama: Monologues and Set Speeches in Aretino's Comedies" by Richard Adams, in The Languages of Literature in Renaissance Italy edited by Peter Hainsworth and others, 1988; Periegesi aretiniane, testi, schede e note biografiche intorno a Pietro Aretino (includes texts) by Angelo Romano, 1991; Aretino Dead or Alive: A 500th Birthday Tribute by W.A. Caswell, 1992; The Sixteen Pleasures by Robert Hellenga, 1994; Titian's Portraits Through Aretino's Lens by Luba Freedman, 1995.

* * *

Pietro Aretino is known chiefly for his plays (five comedies, one tragedy), dialogues, including the Dialogues on Courts and Cards, and the publication of his letters to the rich and famous. From 1538 he was the first to publish his own letters in the vulgar tongue (i.e. not in Latin). Six letter books were to follow until 1557 (one posthumously) constituting a rich vein of information on the customs of the times, as well as a valuable register of the current movements of artists and the creation of artworks. Aretino was on friendly terms with many of the greatest artists working in Venice, including Titian and Tintoretto. Representing the glitter and the license of the Renaissance, he also experienced the Catholic Reformation, and its censure of his sonnets written to accompany the Sedici modi (a book of sexual postures) by Marcantonio Raimondi, after designs by Giulio Romano, and his Ragionamenti or Sei giornate [Dialogues Between Whores]. For these activities, Aretino was classified by figures of the English Renaissance, such as Thomas Nashe and Ben Jonson, as the representative of Italian private or domestic vice, to parallel Machiavelli as the representative of Italian public vice (in politics).

Aretino was born in Arezzo in 1492 and of humble stock. He seems to have had early experience as a painter: he was described as Pietro picture Aretino in his first anthology of youthful poems, the Opera nova. An aspiring courtier at the papal court of Pope Leo X and in the household of Agostino Chigi, the papal banker who was also the patron of Raphael, Aretino's first comedy, written in 1525, was La cortigiana [The Courtesan], a satirical exposé of conditions for the courtier in Rome (it was later revised for publication in Venice to include references to his new Venetian patrons). Aretino was also notorious for the pasquinade (libellous satirical poems lampooning both prominent members of the papal court and candidates for the papal conclave), which were traditionally affixed to the statue of Pasquino in Rome.

When the election of Pope Adrian VI and the repercussions from the Sedici modi made Rome too dangerous for him, Aretino moved to the camp of the condottiere Captain Giovanni dalle Bande Nere, and thence to the Gonzaga Court of Mantua, where the second comedy, Il marescalco (The Stablemaster) was composed. This satirized (while implicitly accepting) the subservient status of a courtier obliged to marry at his master's bidding in spite of his clearly homosexual proclivities. In Venice, in 1527, Aretino had at last found a permanently safe haven. Protected by the Doge Andrea Gritti, and fêted by artists and writers alike, he began a life of writing and self-publicity, using the nascent Venetian printing press. A wide variety of works flowed from his pen in the following years, including revised versions of the first two comedies in 1533–34; works of religious orientation in deference to the growing influence of Catholic reformist currents; and the above-mentioned Sei giornate in 1534–36. With the arrival of Nicolò Franco—colleague, later enemy, and sometime secretary—in Venice and with Venetian bookshops full of the fashion for Erasmus's Latin letters, the idea was born to publish his own letters in Italian. Part literature, part journalism, the first collection of these saw the light of day in 1537, going through some ten editions within the year. Quite apart from any literary merit, this success was due partly to the novelty of the enterprise. Profits for the author consisted of both rewards from the published letters' recipients (both fictional and actual) and payments for his silence. Further religious works followed, with the lives of three saints in 1540, encouraging the author's hopes for possible church preferment, and two more comedies, Lo ipocrito [The Hypocrite] and La Talanta (Talanta) in 1542. The latter was produced in Venice that year in a celebrated performance against a perspective set of Roman monuments by Giorgio Vasari, author of the Lives of the Artists. Talanta marked a return to the traditional unities for Aretino's comedy and contained what can be interpreted as early examples of commedia dell'arte stereotypes. Aretino himself complained in a letter that his actors had exceeded their brief in using plebeian accents. This play highlighted the Venice-versus-Rome polemic, as well as featuring a tour of the set in the script. Lo ipocrito was written in the same year, and launched a literary character, the religious pedant, possibly derived from Aretino's own society, but which has had a long history culminating in Molière's Tartuffe.

The last comedy, Il filosofo [The Philosopher], satirizing the pretensions to authority of philosophers, was published in 1546. Aretino's only tragedy, L'Orazia, of the same year, is now highly regarded as a distinguished example of this 16th-century genre. By 1545, his prestige and notoriety was such that he enjoyed the friendship, or respect, of most of the crowned heads of Europe, and made a celebrated ride to Peschiera in the company of the Emperor Charles V. Predictably within a year of his death, in 1556, the whole of Aretino's literary production was on the Catholic Index, although the publication of his comedies and dialogues in London in the 1580s, in Italian, must doubtless have done as much to propagate his reputation in Europe as the earlier succès de scandale of the Sei giornate and the Sedici modi. The subject of vituperation and prejudice on moral and religious grounds for centuries, Aretino's works are only now being treated as subjects for serious literary study.

—Christopher Cairns

See the essay on La cortigiana.

ARGUEDAS, José María (Altamirano)

Born: Andahuaylas, Apurímac region, Peru, 18 January 1911. Education: Educated at Colegio Miguel Grau de los Padres Mercedarios, Abancay, 1924–25; Colegio San Luis Gonzaga, Ica, 1926–27; Colegio Santa Isabel, Huancayo, 1928–30; Colegio de Mercedarios, Lima, 1929–30; studied literature and anthropology at San Marcos University, Lima, 1931–32 (university closed by authorities, 1932), 1935–37, 1947–50, degree 1957, doctorate 1963. Family: Married 1) Celia Bustamante in 1939 (divorced 1966); 2) Sybila Arredondo in 1967. Career: Lived in San Juan de Lucanas, 1917–24. Worked for the Peruvian postal service, Lima, 1932–37; co-founder and co-editor, Palabra, 1936; imprisoned for involvement in demonstrations against the insurrection in Spain, 1937–38; teacher of Spanish and geography, Colegio Nacional Mateo Pumacahua, Sicuani, 1939, and continued as secondary school teacher until 1946; lived in Mexico, 1940–42; returned to Lima, 1942, and worked with government commission for education reforms; teacher, 1942–47, Colegio Alfonso Ugarte and Colegio Guadalupe, both Lima, and the Instituto Pedagógico, Varones, 1950–53; suffered nervous breakdown, 1943; curator-general, 1947–50, then director, 1950–53, Ministry of Education Department of Folklore and Fine Art, Lima; travelled to Chile, 1951; director, Museum of Peruvian Culture Institute of Ethnological Studies, 1953; travelled to Spain, 1957–58; professor of Quechua and ethnic studies, San Marcos University, 1958–63, and later lectured at the Agrarian University, 1962–66; director, Institute of Contemporary Arts, Lima, 1961; director, Casa de la Cultura, 1963–64; director, Museum of the Republic (Museum of National History), Lima, 1964–66; founder, Cultura y Pueblo, 1964; visited the United States, 1965; attempted suicide by overdose of barbiturates, 1966; visited Cuba, 1968. Awards: Javier Prado prize, 1958; Ricardo Palma prize, 1959, 1962; William Faulkner Foundation certificate of merit, 1963; Inca Garcilaso de la Vega prize, 1968. Died: (suicide) 2 December 1969.

PUBLICATIONS

Collection

Obras completas. 5 vols., 1983.

Fiction

Agua (stories). 1935.

Runa yu pay. 1939.

Yawar fiesta. 1941; revised and corrected edition, 1958; as Yawar Fiesta, translated by Frances Horning Barraclough, 1985.

Diamantes y pedernales (includes “Diamantes y pedernales,” “Orovilca,” and the stories of Agua). 1954.

Todas las sangres. 1954.

Los ríos profundos. 1958; edited by William Rowe, 1973; as Deep Rivers, translated by Frances Horning Barraclough, 1978.

El sexto. 1961.

La agonía de Rasu-Ñiti. 1962.

Amor mundo y otros cuentos (includes “La agonía de Rasu-Ñiti” and the stories of Agua). 1967; enlarged edition, 1972.

Amor mundo y todos los cuentos. 1967.

El zorro de arriba y el zorro de abajo (unfinished), edited by Eve Marie Fell. 1971; enlarged edition, 1990.

El forastero y otros cuentos (includes “El barranco,” “Orovilca,” “Hijo solo”). 1972.

Cuentos olvidados, edited by José Luis Rouillon. 1973.

Relatos completos, edited by Jorge Lafforgue. 1975; revised edition, 1977.

Breve antología didáctica (stories). 1986.

Diamantes y pedernales; La agonía de Rasu-Ñiti; El sueño del pongo; Cuentos olvidados; Taller. 1986.

Relatos completos. 1987.

Other (including Quechua works)

Canto Kechwa (songs in Spanish and Quechua). 1938; translated in The Singing Mountaineers, 1957.

Cuzco. 1947.

Canciones y cuentos del pueblo quechua, with Jorge A. Lira. 1949; translated in The Singing Mountaineers, 1957.

Cuentos mágico-realistas y canciones de fiestas tradicionales en el valle del Mantaro. 1953.

Apu Inca Atawallpaman: Elegía quechua anónima (Spanish and Quechua), edited by José M.B. Farfán. 1955.

The Singing Mountaineers: Songs and Tales of the Quechua People, edited and translated by Ruth Stephen. 1957.

Estudio etnográfico de la Feria de Huancayo. 1957.

Ollantay: Cantos y narraciones quechuas, with César Miró and Salazar Bondy. 1957.

El arte popular religioso y la cultura mestiza. 1958.

Kunturpa munaskkan sipasanta/De la amante del Cóndor (Quechua and Spanish), with Jorge A. Lira. 1961.

Tupac Amaru Kamaq taytanchisman: Haylli-taki/A nuestro padre creador Tupac Amaru: Himno-canción (Quechua and Spanish). 1962.

El sueño del pongo: Cuento quechua; Pongo mosqoynin: Qatqa runapa willaskusqan (Spanish and Quechua). 1965.

Dioses y hombres de Huarochirí (Spanish and Quechua). 1966.

Notas sobre la cultura latinoamericana y su destino, with Francisco Miró Quesada and Fernando de Szyszlo. 1966.

Las comunidades de España y del Perú. 1968.

El sueño del pongo; Canciones quechuas tradicionales, with recording. 1969.

Temblar/Katatay (Spanish and Quechua). 1972; edited by Sybila de Arguedas, 1984.

Páginas escogidas, edited by E.A. Westphalen. 1972.

Formación de una cultura nacional indoamericana. 1975; edited by Ángel Rama, 1981.

Señores e indios: Acerca de la cultura quechua (journalism), edited by Ángel Rama. 1976.

Temblar; El sueño del pongo; Katatay; Pongo mosqoynin (Spanish and Quechua). 1976.

Evolución de las comunidades indígenas: Dos estudios sobre Huancayo. 1977.

Nosotros los maestros (selection), edited by Wilfredo Kapsoli. 1986.

Indios, mestizos y señores (journalism), edited by Sybila de Arguedas. 1989.

Editor, with Francisco Izquierdo Ríos, Mitos, leyendas y cuentos peruanos (Quechua miscellany). 1947.

Editor, Poesía quechua. 1966.

*

Bibliography: “Bibliografía de José María Arguedas” by William Rowe, in Revista Peruana de Cultura, 13–14, 1970; “José María Arguedas” in Peruvian Literature: A Bibliography of Secondary Sources by David William Foster, 1981.

Critical Studies: La multitud y el paisaje peruanos en los relatos de José María Arguedas, 1939, and José María Arguedas: Etapas de su vida, 1972, both by Moises Arroyo Posadas; “The Quechua World of José María Arguedas,” in Hispania, 45, 1962, and The Modern Short Story in Peru, 1966, both by Earl M. Aldrich; Arguedas: Un sentimiento trágico de la vida by César Levano, 1969; El tema de la violencia en Yawar fiesta by François Borricaud, 1970; José María Arguedas y la nueva novela indígena del Perú edited by Julio V. Flores, 1970; “The Literary Progression of José María Arguedas” by Phyllis Rodríguez-Peralta, in Hispania, 55(2), 1972; Los universos narrativos de José María Arguedas by Antonio Cornejo Polar, 1973; La experiencia americana de José María Arguedas by Gladys C. Marín, 1973; José María Arguedas: El nuevo rostro del indio, una estructura mítico-poética by Antonio Urello, 1974; Recopilación de textos sobre José María Arguedas, 1976; “The Foxes in José María Arguedas’s Last Novel” by F. Mitchell, Jr, in Hispania, 61, 1978; José María Arguedas: Entre sapos y halcones by Mario Vargas Llosa, 1978; Mito e ideología en la obra de José María Arguedas by William Rowe, 1979; Cultura popular andina y forma novelesca: Zorros y danzantes en la última novela de Arguedas by Martin Lienhard, 1982, enlarged edition, 1990; Arguedas: Mito, historia y religión; Entre las calandrias by Pedro Trigo and Gustavo Gutierrez, 1982; Arguedas; o, La utopía de la lengua by Alberto Escobar, 1984; “Arguedas the Innovator: Yawar fiesta and Tupac Amaru” by T.K. Lewis, in Discurso Literario, 3(1), 1985; Mythological Consciousness and the Future: José María Arguedas by Claudette Kemper Columbus, 1986; El modo épico en José María Arguedas by Vincent Spina, 1986; José María Arguedas y el mito de la salvación por la cultura by Silverio Muñoz, 1987; Estudios sobre José María Arguedas y Vargas Llosa by F.J. Carranza Romero, 1989; De Yawar fiesta a El zorro de arriba y el zorro de abajo by C. Vildoso Chirinos, 1989; José María Arguedas, del pensamiento dialéctico al pensamiento trágico, Historia de una utopía by Roland Forgues, 1989; La utopía arcaica: José María Arguedas y las ficciones del indigenismo by Mario Vargas Llosa, 1996; José María Arguedas: Reconsiderations for Latin American Cultural Studies, edited by Ciro A. Sandoval and Sandra M. Boschetto-Sandoval, 1998.

* * *

José María Arguedas ranks as one of Peru’s two leading novelists, the other being Mario Vargas Llosa. However, while Vargas Llosa belongs to the Western mainstream, Arguedas wrote as a spokesman of the indigenous Quechua-speaking Andean world, setting out to correct the distorted, stereotyped image of the native presented by earlier fiction. While his own portrayal of the native is still the view of an outsider, being the work of a non-native writing for a non-native public, it offers a deeper insight into the native people’s mentality than anything published hitherto. The basis of the native people’s culture, we are shown, is a magical-religious view of the world that regards the earth not merely as something to be conquered and exploited, but as a single cosmic order animated by supernatural forces and linked in a universal harmony.

In his early fiction Arguedas’s success in communicating that world view was restricted by his continuing reliance on a conventional realist manner, but from Los ríos profundos (Deep Rivers) onwards he evolved a more effective lyrical style akin to that of the Mexican, Juan Rulfo. Artistically, too, he was faced with the problem of translating into the alien medium of Spanish the sensibility of a people who express themselves in Quechua. His initial solution was to modify Spanish in such a way as to incorporate the basic features of Quechua syntax and thus reproduce something of the special character of native speech; but these experiments were only partially successful and subsequently he opted for a correct Spanish skilfully manipulated to convey Andean thought-patterns.

The context of Arguedas’s fiction is the semi-feudal socio-economic order that prevailed in the Andean highlands from the Spanish Conquest until recent times. However, while earlier writers had simplistically depicted a black-and-white confrontation between oppressive white landowners and a downtrodden native peasantry, Arguedas presents a much more complex picture of Andean society. Yawar fiesta highlights the social tensions within the various racial groups. It also challenges the conventional image of abject, defeated natives by emphasizing the resilience that has enabled the native peoples to survive centuries of oppression. Indeed, oppression is seen to have actually strengthened their culture, for it is by clinging to their traditional ways and refusing to be absorbed into the Western order that they have retained their pride and sense of identity. Furthermore, Arguedas demonstrates that centuries of co-existence have brought about a process of transculturation and that, if the whites dominate socially and economically, it is the native influence that predominates culturally, pervading the outlook of the whites despite their assumptions of cultural superiority. This paradoxical situation is encapsulated in the festival around which the novel revolves, a bullfight which simultaneously re-enacts racial hostilities and binds the whole community together in a common enthusiasm.

Most of Arguedas's novels are very much social in character in that they attempt to convey an overview of Andean society. However, another important strand in his work draws on his personal experience to depict the clash of Peru's two main cultures at an individual level, by focusing on the predicament of a young boy torn between the two. Thus, the child protagonist of the stories of Agua [Water] rejects the cruelty and injustice of the white landowning society into which he was born, and identifies emotionally with the native people among whom he was brought up and whose culture affords him the comfort denied him by his own kind, but he can never escape the fact that he is different. Likewise, the protagonist of Deep Rivers is cut off from the beloved native world of his childhood when he is sent to a Church-run school to receive the education that will equip him to take his place in white society. In the oppressive atmosphere of the school he finds himself completely alienated, and his faith in native culture is undermined by its seeming ineffectiveness in the world of the whites; but, in a triumphal climax, that faith is restored as the downtrodden native peoples assert the validity of their culture by challenging the dominant social order and forcing it to accede to their demands. This autobiographical element was to resurface more directly in Arguedas's last, uncompleted novel El zorro de arriba y el zorro de abajo [The Fox of Above and the Fox of Below], where the narrative is interspersed with sections of diary recording the crisis that led him to commit suicide.

Arguedas's work also explores the impact of change on traditional Andean society. In Yawar fiesta we see the region emerge from its centuries-old isolation, progress being symbolized by a government decree banning non-professional bullfights; but the novel highlights the paradox that the very modernity that promises to liberate the native peoples also threatens to destroy their culture and thereby their existence as a separate group. Todas las sangres [All Bloods] reflects the political and economic changes that had been taking place in Peru since the mid-1950s. The most optimistic of Arguedas's novels, it portrays the break-up of the traditional semi-feudal order and the emergence of the newly mobilized native peasantry as a political force, and expresses confidence in the ability of Quechua culture to adapt to a modern industrial society without losing its distinctive identity. Subsequently, Arguedas was to become disillusioned as the country embarked on an uncontrolled process of capitalist development that brought with it a depopulation of the countryside and the erosion of traditional ways of life. El zorro de arriba y el zorro de abajo paints a horrific picture of this new reality, epitomized by the coastal boom-town of Chimbote. Nonetheless, a positive note is maintained by the pervasive presence of the Quechua culture of the Andean migrants, and it is implied that out of the melting-pot that is present-day coastal Peru there will emerge a new national culture for the native peoples.

—James Higgins

See the essay on Deep Rivers.

ARGUETA, Manlio

Born: San Miguel, El Salvador, 24 November 1935. Education: Doctorate in Law and Social Sciences at the University of El Salvador. Career: Lived in exile in Costa Rica, where he taught at the Universidad de Costa Rica and directed Editorial Universitaria Centroamericana, an important Central American publishing house, 1972–1993; since returning to El Salvador in 1993, he has held several posts at the University of El Salvador, including, director of the Office of National and International Relations (1996–2000) and director of the National Library of El Salvador (from 2000). Awards: “Rubén Darío” poetry prize, 1967; Unico Consejo Superior Universitario Centroamericano prize, 1969; Casa de las Américas novel prize, 1978.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

El valle de las hamacas. 1969.

Caperucita en la zona roja. 1978; as Little Red Riding Hood in the Red Light District, translated by Edward Waters Hood, 1998.

Un día en la vida. 1980; as One Day of Life, translated by Bill Brow, 1984.

Cuzcatlán donde bate la Mar del Sur. 1986; as Cuzcatlán: Where the Southern Sea Beats, translated by Clark Hansen, 1987.

Milagro de la Paz. 1994; as A Place Called Milagro de la Paz, translated by Michael B. Miller, 2000.

Siglo de O(g)ro. 2000.

Verse

Poemas. 1967.

De aquí en adelante. 1967.

En el costado de la luz. 1968.

Las bellas armas reales. 1979.

Other

El Salvador. 1990.

*

Critical Studies: “Manlio Argueta” by Ineke Phaf, in Modern Latin American Authors, vol. 145 of The Dictionary of Literary Biography; “Las novelas de Manlio Argueta: La historia, cultura e identidad salvadoreñas,” dissertation by Anna Lee Utech, 1993; “Argueta, Dalton y la crítica de la historia” by Silvia L. López, in Cambios estéticos y nuevos proyectos culturales en Centroamérica, edited by Amelia Mondragón, 1994; “Novela y testimonio en la obra narrativa de Manlio Argueta: el contrato autorial” by Nicasio Urbina, in Cambios estéticos y nuevos proyectos culturales en Centroamérica, edited by Amelia Mondragón, 1994; “Tragedia de la paz, Milagro de la Paz: la evolución literaria de Manlio Argueta,” by Edward Waters Hood, in Antípodas, vol. 10, 1998.

* * *

Called the “Poet” by his friends, Manlio Argueta is best known for his testimonial-style novels that chronicle the violent recent history of El Salvador. His works denounce, in a very personal way, the social and political injustices and inequalities that have provoked and continue to cause civil strife and suffering in his homeland.

Argueta's first novels, El valle de las hamacas and Caperucita en la zona roja (Little Red Riding Hood in the Red Light District), present the social instability and political repression that reigned in El Salvador during the 1960s and 1970s. Stylistically, these are fragmented novels, with interior monologues and shifts in time and place. Their plots revolve around the problems faced by two couples: Rosaura and Raúl in El valle de las hamacas, and Alfonso and Hormiga (Ant) in Little Red Riding Hood in the Red Light District. Argueta's third and fourth novels, Un día en la vida (One Day of Life) and Cuzcatlán donde bate la mar del sur (Cuzcatlán: Where the Southern Sea Beats), reflect the increasing levels of political repression and social rebellion in El Salvador during the late 1970s and early 1980s. Here, Argueta explores the possibilities of the testimonial novel for giving voice to his peasant protagonists who are victims of right-wing repression. He has sought to document violence and civil rights abuses in his country so that they will not be forgotten or repeated. As a group, these novels can be characterized as an oral, popular history of modern El Salvador. According to critic Ineke Phaf, Argueta has succeeded in giving a historical dimension to El Salvador's civil strife within the context of the recent conflicts in Central America.

Argueta's more recent work has taken an autobiographical turn. Milagro de la Paz (A Place Called Milagro de la Paz), perhaps his best novel, presents the lives of three generations of women living under the same roof in Milagro de la Paz (Miracle of Peace), the popular San Miguel neighborhood where Manlio Argueta was born. Through the experiences of the members of one family, this novel presents what life has been like for many people in his country, who have sought to live normal lives in the midst of extreme political violence. The principal characters are Latina, her daughters, Magdalena and Crista, her grandson Juan Bautista, and Lluvia, an orphaned girl who arrives one day at her doorstep. The women, who earn their living by making clothing at home, rarely leave their house for fear of the "unknown ones" that are murdering people in their neighborhood. Besides Juan Bautista, whose presence in the novel is limited, there are two other marginal male characters: Chele Pintura, who helps the women maintain their house in exchange for meals; and Nicolás Moreira, a young neighbor. Magdalena, Latina's oldest daughter, falls in love with Nicolás and becomes pregnant. A short time later, Magdalena is murdered by the "unknown ones." His dreams shattered, Nicolás hangs himself in desperation. These tragic deaths create a tremendous vacuum in the lives of Latina and Crista. In an attempt to recover her loss, Crista seduces Chele Pintura with the hope of bringing a new life to the house. The birth of Juan Bautista does not alleviate the suffering and emptiness created by Magdalena's absence. One day Lluvia, a little girl who has lost her parents in the violence, arrives at their doorstep unannounced. Latina, Crista, and Juan Bautista accept her into their home and lives. This child, who Latina views as a reincarnation of her murdered daughter, provides the women with the love and hope they need to continue living in spite of the violence that surrounds them. Latina's grandson, Juan Bautista, who is too young to understand the events taking place around him, is based on the author's own experiences growing up in San Miguel surrounded by women.

With his most recent novel, Siglo de O(g)ro [Golden (ogre) Age], Argueta moves further towards autobiography. In fact, this text, described by the author as a "bio-no-vela circular" (Circular Bio Novel), can be considered the first book of Argueta's memoirs. Stylistically, the author weaves a multiplicity of diverse texts to form a unified whole. In all, the book consists of 111 fragments, including poetry, theatre, narrative, testimony, essay, and folk tales.

Argueta has produced an impressive and important body of work and continues to be a vigorous writer. His novels have been translated into English and several other languages, and he receives many invitations to speak at universities and literary gatherings around the world. Although his works narrate events in El Salvador, a small nation in Central America, they have universal appeal and have earned him a deserved international reputation as a major Central American voice.

—Edward Waters Hood

ARIOSTO, Ludovico

Born: Reggio Emilia, Ferrara territory (now in Italy), 8 September 1474. Education: Studied in the law faculty, University of Ferrara, 1489–94. Family: Married Alessandra Benucci Strozzi in late 1520s; two earlier illegitimate children, whom he recognized. Career: Took a court post during the political unrest of the 1490s; captain of the garrison, Canossa, 1502–03; courtier, diplomat, and writer in service of Cardinal Ippolito d'Este until 1517; in service of Alfonso d'Este, Duke of Ferrara, 1518–33; commissario of the Garfagnana, 1522–25. Died: 6 July 1533.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Le commedie, edited by Michele Catalano. 2 vols., 1933.

Opere minori, edited by Cesare Segre. 1954.

Commedie, edited by Cesare Segre. 1974.

The Comedies (includes The Coffer [prose and verse versions]; The Pretenders; The Necromancer; Lena; The Students), edited and translated by Edmond M. Beame and Leonard G. Sbrocchi. 1975.

Satire e lettere, edited by Cesare Segre. 1976.

Opere, edited by Adriano Seroni. 1981.

Verse

Orlando furioso. 1515 (40 cantos); revised version, 1521; 3rd edition, 1532 (46 cantos); additional Cinque Canti published in 1545 edition; edited by S. De Benedetti and Cesare Segre, 1960, edited by Segre, 1976, and by Emilio Bigi, 1982; as Orlando Furioso, translated by John Harington, 1591, and by William Stewart Rose, 2 vols., 1823–31; as The Frenzy of Orlando, translated by Barbara Reynolds, 2 vols., 1975–77; several prose translations including by A. Gilbert, 1954, and by Guido Waldman, 1974; as Five Cantos, translated by Alexander Sheers and David Quint, 1996.

Satire. 1534; edited by Cesare Segre, 1976; as Seven Planets Governing Italy, 1611; as The Satires, translated by Peter DeSa Wiggins, 1976.

The Satires, edited by R.B. Gottfried. 1977.

Plays

La cassaria (produced 1508). 1509; revised version, in verse (produced 1531), 1546; as The Coffer, in The Comedies, 1975.

I suppositi (produced 1509). 1509 or 1510; revised version, in verse, 1525; as Supposers, translated by George Gascoigne, 1566; as The Pretenders, in The Comedies, 1975.

La Lena (produced 1528). 1533 or 1536; edited by Guido Davico Bonino, 1976; as Lena, in The Comedies, 1975; as La Lena, in Five Italian Renaissance Comedies, edited by Bruce Penman, 1978.

Il negromante (produced 1529). 1535; as The Necromancer, in The Comedies, 1975.

La scolastica, completed by Gabriele Ariosto. 1547; as The Students, in The Comedies, 1975.

Other

Lettere, edited by A. Stella. 1965.

Lettera della Garfagnana, edited by Gianna Scalia. 1977.

*

Bibliography: Ludovico Ariosto: An Annotated Bibliography of Criticism 1956–1980 by Robert J. Rodini and Salvatore Di Maria, 1984; “Selected Bibliography of Ariosto Criticism 1980–87,” by Robert J. Rodini, in Modern Language Notes, 1988.

Critical Studies: The King of the Court Poets: A Study of the Work, Life, and Times of Ludovico Ariosto by Edmund G. Gardner, 1906, reprinted 1969; The Figure of the Poet in the Renaissance Epic by R.M. Durling, 1965; Ariosto: A Preface to the Orlando Furioso by C.P. Brand, 1974; Ludovico Ariosto by Robert Griffin, 1974; Names on the Trees: Ariosto into Art by Rennselaer W. Lee, 1977; Ariosto and the Classical Simile by Kristen Olson Murtaugh, 1980; Figures in Ariosto's Tapestry: Character and Design in the Orlando Furioso by Peter DeSa Wiggins, 1986; Ariosto's Bitter Harmony: Crisis and Evasion in the Italian Renaissance by Albert Russell Ascoli, 1987; The Poetics of Ariosto by Marianne Shapiro, 1988; Cervantes and Ariosto by Thomas R. Hart, 1989; Proclaiming a Classic: The Canonization of Orlando Furioso by Daniel Javitch, 1991; Rinaldo: Character and Intertext in Ariosto and Tasso by Michael Sherberg, 1993; Humility's Deceit: Calvino Reading Ariosto Reading Calvino by Wiley Feinstein, 1995; The Orlando Furioso: A Stoic Comedy by Clare Carroll, 1997; Renaissance Transactions: Ariosto and Tasso, edited by Valeria Finucci, 1999.

* * *

Ludovico Ariosto's masterpiece, Orlando furioso, is the culmination of a long tradition. Beginning in the 11th century with the Old French epic, La Chanson de Roland (The Song of Roland), it continued in Italy (as elsewhere) in a series of extravagant romances, both oral and written. The legends, relating to Charlemagne and his paladins in their defence of Christendom against the Muslims, became part of folklore, as may be seen in Sicily where puppet masters in Palermo still perform the stories and where the sides of donkey carts are painted with colourful scenes of the combats.

In the 15th century Luigi Pulci of Florence wrote an elaborate version of Roland's (Orlando's) adventures. This was I Morgante, a poem in rhymed octaves, much admired by Byron, who translated the first canto. Pulci was followed by Matteo Boiardo of Ferrara, who complicated the story still further with oriental elements and combined it with episodes and characters drawn from the Arthurian cycle.

Boiardo's poem, also in rhymed octaves, was entitled Orlando innamorato [Roland in Love]. In 1494, when the French invaded Italy, he felt unable to continue and laid down his pen. Violent events had irrupted into his world of fantasy and destroyed it.

A generation later Ariosto undertook to complete Boiardo's poem. The result was his Orlando Furioso [Roland Driven Mad by Love]. In Ariosto's hands chivalrous romance becomes romantic epic. To the themes of war, chivalry, and love, already in Boiardo, Ariosto added history, from mythological antiquity down to contemporary times, from the Fall of Troy to the Sack of Rome. The factual is rendered poetic; the poetic acquires the solemnity of historical fact. It is this which converts romance into epic. Epic also is the intensity with which Ariosto visualizes and communicates his world. His descriptions of beauty, chivalry, noble achievement, violence, and evil are on a scale that exceeds life. Yet the work is far from solemn throughout. The legacy of exuberant exaggeration, rollicking humour, suspense and wilful complexity, inherited from the conventions of the cantastorie (narrators who recited the tales in public), as well as from Pulci and Boiardo, enriches and varies the 46 cantos. Ariosto's octaves justly deserve the epithet of “golden.”

To 16th-century critics Orlando Furioso appeared to lack unity, and the stories it contained were dismissed as unworthy of the attention of serious-minded men of letters. Ariosto has also been condemned for his adulation of the House of Este, the rulers of Ferrara and his patrons. Such criticisms, still voiced in modern times, can be answered. On the charge of adulation it can be said that Ariosto's praise of Ferrara and of the Estense dynasty was in the tradition of works of praise (encomia), which had the warrant of Aristotle and also of Erasmus, who held that the most efficacious way of correcting a prince was to present him, in the guise of flattery, with an ideal picture of himself. This may have been Ariosto's intention in those octaves in praise of Duke Alfonso and his brother, Cardinal Ippolito, to whom he dedicated the poem. But the praise was not all flattery. There was much to admire in the achievements of the Dukes of Ferrara and in the world of beauty they created. Furthermore, what Ariosto thought worthy of condemnation he condemned: the use of gunfire in battle, for instance (in which Duke Alfonso was a pioneer), and the neglect of poets by their patrons.

The charge of disunity in the Orlando Furioso is based on assumptions which are not relevant to the nature of Ariosto's art. The poem is composed not of homogeneous elements arranged with predictable symmetry, but of vastly disparate material, controlled and balanced with apparent nonchalance but, in reality, with subtle skill. Thematic unity resides in the concept of Europe as the civilizing force both of antiquity and of the newly extended Christian world. The contemporary danger of Turkish power is imaged in the menace of the Muslims in the time of Charlemagne; and Charles V, on his election as Emperor, may have been seen by Ariosto, as his poem progressed, to be a natural symbol of that other Charles, the 8th-century head of Christendom.

Ariosto takes up the story at the point where Agramante, king of the Moors, and Marsilio, the Saracen King of Spain, have invaded France. Orlando has escorted the Princess Angelica from the Far East to the Pyrenees and is at once caught up in the war. Angelica was introduced into the story by Boiardo to serve, with her dazzling beauty, as a distraction to Christian and Muslim knights alike. Orlando and his cousin, Rinaldo, both love her and their rivalry is a danger to the Christian side. Angelica, unmoved by the adoration she inspires, eventually falls in love with a wounded Moorish soldier, whom she nurses back to health and marries. The discovery of this causes Orlando to lose his wits and supernatural aid is required before he can be brought back to sanity.

In constructing this sequel to Boiardo's poem Ariosto had three main tasks: to bring the war to a close, to disentangle both Orlando and Rinaldo from their infatuation for Angelica, and to enable Rinaldo's sister, Bradamante, to marry a noble warrior, Ruggiero, who, though fighting for the Infidel, is, as he discovers, of Christian origin. From their union is destined to descend the illustrious line of the House of Este. All three tasks are accomplished and all the minor stories left unfinished by Boiardo are likewise brought to a conclusion. The Orlando Furioso is, however, far more than an appendix to the Innamorato. It is an original work in its own right, dazzling in the bravura of its execution.

Ariosto's other works include capitoli (burlesques), satires, and five comedies on the models of Plautus and Terence, whose plays were then fashionable in Ferrara. Ariosto had acted in the court theatre in his youth and during his last years he was director of theatrical entertainments. His Orlando Furioso is itself rather like a huge theatrical production, of which the author is also the stage-manager and propertyman.

—Barbara Reynolds

See the essay on Orlando Furioso.

ARISTOPHANES

Born: Athens, possibly c. 450 BC, possibly as late as 444 BC. Career: May have lived or owned property on Aigina. His first plays directed by others; Hippeis (The Knights, 424 BC) was his first production in his own name. Besides the 11 surviving comedies, 32 other titles are known (some possibly alternative titles; four probably spurious), and nearly 1,000 fragments survive. His son, Araros, produced his last two plays; all three of his sons are known to have written plays of their own. Served on the boule (the Athenian Senate) in the early 4th century BC. Awards: Won at least four prizes at the City Dionysia and Lenaia festivals. Died: c. 385 BC.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

[Comedies], edited by F.W. Hall and W.M. Geldart. 2 vols., 1901–02; also edited by Johannes van Leeuwen, 11 vols., 1893–1906, and Victor Coulon (includes French translations), 5 vols., 1923–30; edited and translated by B.B. Rogers, 11 vols., 1902–15, and Alan H. Sommerstein (bilingual editions; with commentary), 8 vols., 1980–94; as The Complete Plays, edited by Moses Hadas, translated by Hadas, B.B. Rogers, R.H. Webb, and Jack Lindsay, 1962; also translated by David Barrett and Alan H. Sommerstein, 3 vols., 1964–77; Patric Dickinson, 2 vols., 1970; Kenneth McLeish, 3 vols., 1993–94.

Poetae comici graeci (includes the fragments of lost comedies), edited by R. Kassel and Colin Austin. 1983.

Aristophanes I: Clouds, Wasps, Birds, translated with notes by Peter Meineck, 1998.

Plays

Acharnes (produced 425 BC). Edited by William W. Merry, 1880; also edited by W. Rennie, 1909; edited and translated by W.J.M. Starkie, 1909; as The Acharnians, translated by Douglass Parker, 1961; also translated by B.B. Rogers, in The Complete Plays, 1962; Jeffrey Henderson, 1991.

Hippeis (produced 424 BC). Edited by William W. Merry, 1887; as The Knights, edited by Robert A. Nell, 1901; translated by R.H. Webb, in The Complete Plays, 1962; also translated by David Barrett and Alan H. Sommerstein, 1978; Kenneth McLeish, 1979.

Nephelai (produced 423 BC, partially revised 419–17 BC; only the revision has survived). Edited by William W. Merry, 1879; also edited by K.J. Dover, 1968; as The Clouds, edited and translated by W.J.M. Starkie, 1911; translated by Patric Dickinson, 1957; also translated by William Arrowsmith, 1962; Moses Hadas, in The Complete Plays, 1962; Alan H. Sommerstein, 1973; Kenneth McLeish, 1979; James H. Mantinband, in Four Plays, 1983; commentary by Raymond K. Fisher, 1984; translated by Marie C. Marianetti, 1997; Thomas G. West and Grace Starry West, in Four Texts on Socrates: Plato's Euthyphro, Apology and Crito and Aristophanes' Clouds, 1998.

Sphekes (produced 422 BC). Edited by William W. Merry, 1893; also edited by Douglas M. MacDowell, 1970; as The Wasps, edited and translated by W.J.M. Starkie, 1897; translated by Douglass Parker, 1962; also translated by Moses Hadas, in The Complete Plays, 1962.

Eirene (produced 421 BC). Edited by William W. Merry, 1900; also edited by H. Sharpley, 1905, and Maurice Platnauer, 1964; as The Peace, translated by Doros Alastos, 1953; also translated by B.B. Rogers, in The Complete Plays, 1962; edited with introduction and commentary by S. Douglas Olson, 1998.

Ornithes (produced 414 BC). Edited by William W. Merry, 1889; also edited by T. Kock, revised by O. Schröder, 1927, and N.V. Dunbar, 1994; as The Birds, translated by William Arrowsmith, 1961; also translated by Dudley Fitts, in Four Comedies, 1962; R.H. Webb, in The Complete Plays, 1962; Patric Dickinson, 1970; Kenneth McLeish, 1970; Alan H. Sommerstein, 1977; James H. Mantinband, in Four Plays, 1983; translated by Paul Muldoon with Richard Martin, 1999.

Lysistrata (produced 411 BC). Edited by U. von Wilamowitz-Möllendorff, 1927; also edited by Jeffrey Henderson, 1987; as Lysistrata, translated by Jack Lindsay, 1925, and in The Complete Plays, 1962; also translated by Charles T. Murphy, 1944; Donald Sutherland, 1961; Dudley Fitts, in Four Comedies, 1962; Douglass Parker, 1964; James H. Mantinband, in Four Plays, 1983; Jeffrey Henderson, 1988.

Thesmophoriazousai (produced 411 BC). As Ladies' Day, translated by Dudley Fitts, in Four Comedies, 1962; also translated by B.B. Rogers, in The Complete Plays, 1962; as The Poet and the Women, translated by David Barrett, 1964.

Batrachoi (produced 405 BC). Edited by William W. Merry, 1884; also edited by T.G. Tucker, 1906, L. Radermacher, 1954, W.B. Stanford, 1963, and Kenneth Dover, 1993; as The Frogs, translated by Gilbert Murray, 1908; also translated by Dudley Fitts, in Four Comedies, 1962; Richmond Lattimore, 1962; R.H. Webb, in

The Complete Plays, 1962; Patric Dickinson, 1970; Kenneth McLeish, 1970; James H. Mantinband, in Four Plays, 1983. Ekklesiazousai (produced c. 392 BC). Edited by R.G. Ussher, 1973; as Women in Parliament, translated by Jack Lindsay, 1929, and in The Complete Plays, 1962; as The Congresswomen, translated by Douglass Parker, 1967; as Women in Power, translated by Kenneth McLeish, 1979. Ploutos (produced 388 BC). As Plutus, translated by William Rann Kennedy, 1912; also translated by B.B. Rogers, in The Complete Plays, 1962; as Wealth, translated by Alan H. Sommerstein, 1978. Four Comedies (includes Lysistrata; The Frogs; The Birds; Ladies' Day), translated by Dudley Fitts, 1962. Four Plays (includes The Birds; The Clouds; The Frogs; Lysistrata), translated by James H. Mantinband, 1983. Plays One, translated with introduction by Kenneth McLeish, 1993. Plays Two, translated with introduction by Kenneth McLeish, 1993. Three Plays by Aristophanes: Staging Women, translated and edited by Jeffrey Henderson, 1996. Birds, Lysistrata, Assembly-women, Wealth: A New Verse Translation with Introduction and Notes by Stephen Halliwell, 1997.

*

Critical Studies: Aristophanes: A Study by Gilbert Murray, 1933; "Aristophanes and Politics" by A.W. Gomme, in Classical Review, 1938; Incongruity in Aristophanes by C.C. Jernigan, 1939; The Art of Greek Comedy by K. Lever, 1956; The People of Aristophanes: A Sociology of Old Attic Comedy by Victor Ehrenberg, 1962, revised edition, 1974; Aristophanes: His Plays and His Influence by L.E. Lord, 1963; Aristophanes and the Comic Hero by C.H. Whitman, 1964; The Origin of Old Attic Comedy by F.M. Cornford, 1968; Twentieth Century Interpretations of the Frogs edited by D.J. Littlefield, 1968; Aristophanic Comedy by K.J. Dover, 1972; "The Political Opinions of Aristophanes," Appendix XXIX of The Origins of the Peloponnesian War by G.E.M. de Ste. Croix, 1972; The Living Aristophanes by A. Solomos, 1974; The Stage of Aristophanes by C.W. Dearden, 1976; Aristophanes by R.G. Ussher, 1979; Studies in the Manuscript Tradition of the Ranae of Aristophanes by Charles N. Eberline, 1980; The Theatre of Aristophanes by Kenneth McLeish, 1980; Aristophanes: Essays in Interpretation edited by Jeffrey Henderson, 1981; Aristophanic Poetry by Carroll Moulton, 1981; Aristophanes and Athenian Society of the Early Fourth Century BC by E. David, 1984; "Comedy" by E. Handley, in Cambridge History of Classical Literature, vol. 1 edited by P. Easterling and B.M.W. Knox, 1985; Aristophanes: Poet and Dramatist by Rosemary M. Harriott, 1986; Political Comedy in Aristophanes by Malcolm Heath, 1987; Aristophanes' Old-and-New Comedy by Kenneth J. Reckford, 1987; Cleon, Knights and Aristophanes' Politics by Lowell Edmunds, 1988; Aristophanes and His Theatre of the Absurd by Paul Cartledge, 1990; Politics and Persuasion in Aristophanes' Ecclesiazusae by Kenneth S. Rothwell, 1990; The Mask of Comedy: Aristophanes and the Intertextual Parabasis by T.K. Hubbard, 1991; Ancient Comedy: The War of the Generations by D.F. Sutton, 1993; Aristophanes and Women by Laura K. Taaffe, 1993; Comic Angels by O. Taplin, 1993; Aristophanes: Myth, Ritual and Comedy by A.M. Bowie, 1994; Aristophanes: An Author for the Stage by C.F. Russo, 1994; Beyond Aristophanes: Transition and Diversity in Greek Comedy, edited by Gregory W. Dobrov, 1995; Aristophanes and Athens: An Introduction to the Plays by Douglas M. MacDowell, 1995; Oxford Readings in Aristophanes, edited by Erich Segal, 1996; Pericles On Stage:

Political Comedy in Aristophanes' Early Plays by Michael Vickers, 1997; Dialect in Aristophanes: and the Politics of Language in Ancient Greek Literature by Stephen Colvin, 1999; The Rivals of Aristophanes: Studies in Athenian Old Comedy, edited by David Harvey and John Wilkins, 2000; Aristophanes and the Definition of Comedy by M.S. Silk, 2000; Venom in Verse: Aristophanes in Modern Greece by Gonda A.H. Van Steen, 2000.

* * *

Aristophanes is the best-known (and only surviving) exponent of Old Comedy, an art form which, like its older sister Tragedy, was performed as part of the artistic competitions at the civic festivals at Athens in honour of Dionysus, god of drama. Old Comedy reached its highest point during the last third of the 5th century BC, the years of the age of Pericles and of the vigorous Athenian democracy. Old Comedy was very much a child of that democracy. In the very best sense of the word, Aristophanes' comedy was "political" (polis = city-state), as his plays are concerned essentially with the Athens of his day, supplying him with his inspiration, his themes and issues, his jokes, characters, and personalities. Firmly anchored in the social milieu of 5th-century Athens, his work exhibits a unique mixture of humours, ranging from political satire to obscenity and toilet humour, from sophisticated parody to slapstick, from utopian fantasy to personal abuse. His comedy is without parallel or successors in Western literature.

Aristophanes is neither a master of comic plot (the "comedy of errors" on which so much Western comedy depends) nor a creator of subtle interaction between characters. Rather the kernel of his comedy is the establishment of a fantastic idea, a grand scheme, the more outrageous the better, whose implementation and consequences form the action; "plot" is not a term useful in Aristophanic criticism. Examples include Acharnes (The Acharnians) where the hero (whose name means "Just City") makes his own personal peace treaty with the Spartan enemy, or Lysistrata (Lysistrata) in which the wives of Greece occupy the Athenian acropolis and embark on a "sex-strike" to force the men (successfully) to end the war. The grande idée is developed in a series of more or less formal structural features, e.g. parodos, the visually splendid entry of the chorus who provided either an on-stage audience or the opposition; agon, a formally constructed debate in which the great idea was contested or explained; parabasis, in which the chorus spoke directly to the audience, often for the comedian himself; and the episodes, a series of loosely connected scenes in which the consequences of the great idea are worked out. In his later plays Aristophanes begins to employ a freer use of the traditional forms; Thesmophoriazousai (The Poet and the Women), in particular, most resembles a later Western comedy.

Space does not allow for individual discussion of the comedies. In the 11 extant comedies we can see that all aspects of Athenian life were fair game for the comic poet. There are the so-called "peace plays," The Acharnians, Eirene (The Peace), and Lysistrata, from which it is clear that Aristophanes was not himself a pacifist, but an ardent opponent of the Peloponnesian War (431–04 BC). The Acharnians, with its unparalleled identification of the protagonist with the comic poet and its open hostility to Athens' war policy and its proponents, is worthy of special attention. Hippeis (The Knights) and Sphekes (The Wasps) are both largely concerned with politics and the demagogues, especially Kleon whose distinctive political style is subjected to a sweeping and at times coarse caricature in The Knights. The Wasps, a humorous satire on the jury system and Kleon's manipulation of it, features Philokleon, perhaps the most appealing rogue in ancient literature. Philosophy and drama form the themes of Nephelai (The Clouds) and The Poet and the Women, the former containing the infamous depiction of Socrates as a sophistic charlatan, which Plato tells us contributed to his condemnation in 399 BC. Lysistrata, The Poet and the Women, and Ekklesiazousai (Women in Power) make up the ‘women’s plays’; the last portrays the seizure by women of the government at Athens and the institution of a communistic regime very much like Plato’s ideal Republic. Lysistrata, with its themes of ‘Women’s Liberation’ and ‘Make love, not war!’, has become the favourite of modern audiences.

Two plays, Ornithes (The Birds) and Batrachoi (The Frogs), stand out as Aristophanes’ masterpieces. The Birds features two Athenians who flee the problems of life in Athens to take refuge among the birds. They join with them in founding the now famous city, Cloudcuckooland, and in the end displace the Olympian gods as the rulers of the universe. The Frogs shows Dionysus, god of drama, descending to the underworld to bring back Euripides, the recently deceased and controversial tragic poet. After some amusing adventures, Dionysus ends up judging a witty contest between Euripides and Aeschylus, the old master, in which Dionysus eventually judges Aeschylus the victor and brings him back to Athens ‘to save the city.’ Produced in the months preceding Athens’ defeat, this comedy with its mingling of political, literary, and religious themes provides an elegant farewell to Athens’ greatness.

Critical discussion has focused on the motives of the comedian. In a landmark article A.W. Gomme argued that no serious political or satirical purpose was to be found in Aristophanes; his forté was a brilliant, revolutionary comedy. De Ste. Croix argued in return that although creation of comedy was his first concern, a consistent and intentional political stance may be ascertained, that of a ‘conservative,’ but neither oligarchic nor radical democrat. His opposition to Kleon and the demagogues is clear, as is his hostility to the war with Sparta. Aristophanes is essentially a regressive; the final scenes of The Knights and Lysistrata make clear his affection for the glorious days of Athens of previous generations, the triumphs of the Persian Wars. Similarly, despite his obvious fondness for the modern and avant-garde Euripides, he chooses Aeschylus in the end. Technical ability yields to the moral purpose of art. Yet Aristophanes is no anti-intellectual; his caricature of Socrates is more humorous than satirical, and his appreciation of and affinity with Euripides are evident. He, like Socrates and Euripides, was sophos (smart) and dexios (clever). Likewise in the treatment of the real people made fun of in his plays (to onomasti komodein—to make fun of by name), commentators have been quick to detect a moral purpose behind the jokes, but here too comedy should take precedence over satire. Only with Kleon and the demagogues can we detect any real malice. For the most part we should regard Aristophanes as what he himself claimed to be, a superb creator of imaginative and fantastic comedy.

—Ian C. Storey

See the essays on The Birds, The Clouds, The Frogs, and Lysistrata.

ARISTOTLE

Born: Stagira, Macedonia, 384 BC. Family: Married Pythias, niece of the tyrant Hermeias; after Pythias’ death, had a son by Herpyllis.

Career: Pupil, then teacher, in Plato’s (q.v.) Academy, Athens, 367–47 BC; on Plato’s death he left the city to live with other philosophers from the Academy, at Assos, in the Troad. After the murder of Hermeias he went to live and teach at Mytilene on Lesbos; tutor to the son of Philip II of Macedon, the future Alexander the Great, from c. 342 BC; returned to Athens in 335 BC and founded his own school of literature, science, and philosophy, the Lyceum, whose students were known as ‘peripatetics’; after death of Alexander the Great in 323 BC Aristotle was accused of impiety and retreated, leaving his school to Theophrastus, q.v., in Chalcis, Euboea. Died: 322 BC.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

[Works], edited by J.A. Smith and W.D. Ross. 12 vols., 1908–52; also edited by John L. Ackrill, 1962—, revised edition edited by Jonathan Barnes, 2 vols., 1984; translated by Thomas Taylor, 1812.

Aristotle, edited and translated by Harold P. Cooke. 23 vols., 1926–1997.

Works

De anima [On the Soul], edited by W.D. Ross. 1956; translated by Kenelm Foster and Silvester Humphries, 1951; Books II and III translated by D.W. Hamlyn, revised edition, 1993; as Aristotle’s De anima in Focus, edited by Michael Durrant, 1993.

De arte poetica, edited by R. Kassel. 1965; as Aristotle on the Art of Poetry, translated by Ingram Bywater, 1920; as Poetics, translated by John Warrington, with On Style and On the Sublime by Demetrius, 1963; also translated by D.W. Lucas (with commentary), 1968; M.E. Hubbard, in Ancient Literary Criticism, 1972; L. Golden and O.B. Hardison, 2nd edition, 1981; James Hutton, 1982; Stephen Halliwell (with commentary), 1987; as Aristotle on the Art of Fiction, translated by L.J. Potts, 1968; as Poetics, translated with an introduction and notes by Malcolm Heath, 1996; as Aristotle’s Poetics, translated and with a commentary by George Whalley, 1997; as Poetics, translated and introduced by Kenneth McLeish, 1999.

De coelo, as On the Heavens (bilingual edition), translated by W.K.C. Guthrie. 1939; as Aristotle On the Heavens, edited and translated by Stuart Leggat, 1995.

De generatione et corruptione, translated by C.J.F. Williams. 1982.

De generatione animalium, selections as Generation of Animals, translated by D.M. Balme, 1972, revised edition, 1992.

De incessu animalium, with De motu animalium, as On the Movement and Progression of Animals, translated by Anthony Preus. 1981.

De motu animalium, edited and translated by Martha C. Nussbaum. 1978; with De incessu animalium, as On the Movement and Progression of Animals, translated by Anthony Preus, 1981.

De partibus animalium, as On the Parts of Animals, translated by W. Ogle. 1882, reprinted 1987; as Parts of Animals, translated by D.M. Balme, 1972, revised edition, 1992.

De republica Atheniensium, as The Constitution of Athens, in Aristotle and Xenophon on Democracy and Oligarchy, edited and translated by John M. Moore. 1975; as The Athenian Constitution, translated by H. Rackham, 1935; also translated by P.J. Rhodes, 1984.

Ethica, as Ethics, translated by David Ross, 1925, revised by John L. Ackrill and J.O. Urmson, 1980; also translated by Hippocrates G. Apostle, 1975.

Nicomachean Ethics, edited by G. Ramsauer (with commentary). 1878, reprinted 1987; translated by J.A.K. Thomson, 1953, revised edition, 1976; as Nicomachean Ethics: Books VIII and IX, translated with a commentary by Michael Pakaluk, 1998; as Nicomachean Ethics: Books VIII and IX, translated with a commentary by Michael Pakaluk, 1998.

Ethica Eudemia, edited by R.R. Walzer and J.M. Mingay. 1991; as Eudemean Ethics, edited and translated by M. Woods (with commentary), 1982; translated by H. Rackham, 1935.

Historia animalium, edited and translated by D.M. Balme. 1991; translated by A.L. Peck, 1965.

Metaphysica, edited by W.D. Ross (with commentary). 2 vols., 1928; also edited by Werner Jaeger, 1957; as Metaphysics, translated by Hippocrates G. Apostle (with commentary), 1966; part as Oeconomica and Magna moralia, translated by G.C. Armstrong, 1935; part as Metaphysics, Books Gamma, Delta and Epsilon, translated by Christopher Kirwan, 1971; Books VII and VIII translated by David Bostock, 1994; as Metaphysics: Book B and Book K 1–2, translated with a commentary by Arthur Madigan, 1999.

On Fallacies, translated by Edward Poste. 1866, reprinted 1987.

Organon, edited by W.D. Ross. 1958; part as Analytica priora et posteriora, edited by W.D. Ross, 1964; part as The Categories and On Interpretation, translated by H.P. Cooke, 1938; part as Prior Analytics, translated by Hugh Tredennick, 1938; part as Prior and Posterior Analytics, translated by John Warrington, 1964; part as Posterior Analytics, translated by J. Barnes, revised edition, 1993.

Parva naturalia, as Aristotle on Memory, edited and translated by Richard Sorabji. 1972.

Physica, as Physics, translated by P. Wicksteed and F. M. Cornford. 2 vols., 1929–34; Books I and II translated by William Charlton, 1970; as Physics, translated by Robin Waterfield, 1996; as Aristotle: Physics Book VIII, translated with a commentary by Daniel W. Graham, 1999.

Politica, edited by Johann Gottlob Schneider. 2 vols., 1809; also edited and translated by Stephen Everson, 1988; as The Politics of Aristotle, translated by Benjamin Jowett, 1895; as The Politics, translated by T.A. Sinclair, 1962, revised by Trevor J. Saunders, 1981; also translated by Carnes Lord, 1984; as Politics: Books III and IV, translated with introduction and comments by Richard Robinson, 1995; as Politics: Books I and II, translated with a commentary by Trevor J. Saunders, 1995; as The Politics of Aristotle, translated with introduction, analysis, and notes by Peter L. Phillips Simpson, 1997; as Politics: Books VII and VIII, translated with a commentary by Richard Kraut, 1997; as Politics, translated with introduction and notes by C.D.C. Reeve, 1998; as Politics: Books V and VI, translated with a commentary by David Keyt, 1999.

Rhetorica, as The Rhetoric of Aristotle, translated by Lane Cooper. 1932; as On Rhetoric, translated by George A. Kelly, 1991; as The Art of Rhetoric, translated by H.C. Lawson-Tancred, 1991.

Aristotle: Selections, translated with introduction, notes and glossary by Terence Irwin and Gail Fine. 1995.

De somno, as Aristotle on Sleep and Dreams: A Text and Translation with Introduction, Notes and Glossary, edited by David Gallop. 1996.

Topics: Books I and VIII, translated with a commentary by Robin Smith. 1996.

*

Bibliography: Aristotle: A Select Bibliography, by Jonathan Barnes, Malcolm Schofield, and Richard Sorabji, 1977.

Critical Studies: The Poetics of Aristotle by Lane Cooper, 1924; The Psychology of Aristotle by Clarence Shute, 1941; Aristotle's Theory of Poetry and Fine Art by S.H. Butcher, 1951; The Philosophy of Aristotle by D.J. Allan, 1952; Aristotle by A.E. Taylor, 1955; Aristotle's Poetics by A. House, 1956; Tragedy: Serious Drama in Relation to Aristotle's Poetics by F.L. Lucas, 1957; The Development of Aristotle's Thought by W.D. Ross, 1957; Aristotle's Theory of Poetry and Drama, with Chapters on Plato and Longinus by P.S. Shastri, 1963; New Essays on Plato and Aristotle by Renford Bambrough, 1965; Aristotle's Ethical Theory by William F. Hardie, 1968; Prelude to Aesthetics by E. Schaper, 1968; On Aristotle and Greek Tragedy by J. Jones, 1971; The Eudemean and Nichomachean Ethics: A Study in the Development of Aristotle's Thought by C.J. Rowe, 1971; Towards Greek Tragedy by B. Vickers, 1973; Aristotle on Emotion by Will Fortenbaugh, 1975; Aristotle by John B. Morrall, 1977; Word and Action by B. Knox, 1979; Essays on Aristotle's Ethics edited by Amélie Oksenberg Rorty, 1980; Aristotle the Philosopher by John L. Ackrill, 1981; Poetic and Legal Fiction in the Aristotelian Tradition by Kathy Eden, 1986; Plato and Aristotle on Poetry by Gerald F. Else, 1986; Aristotle's Poetics by Stephen Halliwell, 1986; The Fragility of Goodness by Martha C. Nussbaum, 1986; Aristotle's Two Systems by Daniel W. Graham, 1987; Substance, Form and Psyche: An Aristotelian Metaphysics by Montgomery Furth, 1988; Aristotle's First Principles by Terence Irwin, 1988; Ethics with Aristotle by Sarah Broadie, 1991; Aristotle and the Later Tradition edited by Henry Blumenthal and Howard Robinson, 1991; Aristotle on the Perfect Life by Anthony Kenny, 1992; Aristotle on Moral Responsibility: Character and Cause by Susan Sauvé Meyer, 1993; The Problems of a Political Animal: Community, Justice, and Conflict in Aristotelian Political Thought by Bernard Yack, 1993; On Ideas: Aristotle's Criticism of Plato's Theory of Forms by Gail Fine, 1993; Engendering Origins: Critical Feminist Readings in Plato and Aristotle, edited by Bat-Ami Bar On, 1994; Aristotle's Rhetoric: An Art of Character by Eugene Garver, 1994; Aristotle on the Goals and Exactness of Ethics by Georgios Anagnostopoulos, 1994; Substance and Separation in Aristotle by Lynne Spellman, 1995; Aristotle's Economic Thought by Scott Meikle, 1995; Nature, Justice, and Rights in Aristotle's Politics by Fred D. Miller, Jr., 1995; Aristotelian Explorations by G.E.R. Lloyd, 1996; Aristotle on Nature and Incomplete Substance by Sheldon M. Cohen, 1996; The Politics of Philosophy: A Commentary on Aristotle's Politics by Michael Davis, 1996; Aristotle's Philosophical Development: Problems and Prospects, edited by William Wians, 1996; Aristotle and After, edited by Richard Sorabji, 1997; Analysis and Science in Aristotle by Patrick H. Byrne, 1997; Aristotle on Perception by Stephen Everson, 1997; An Approach to Aristotle's Physics: With Particular Attention to the Role of His Manner of Writing by David Bolotin, 1998; The Order of Nature in Aristotle's Physics: Place and the Elements by Helen S. Lang, 1998; Feminist Interpretations of Aristotle, edited by Cynthia A. Freeland, 1998; Aristotle's Ethics: Critical Essays, edited by Nancy Sherman, 1999; Aristotle: Critical Assessments, edited by Lloyd P. Gerson, 1999; Action and Contemplation: Studies in the Moral and Political Thought of Aristotle, edited by Robert C. Bartlett and Susan D. Collins, 1999; Order in Multiplicity: Homonymy in the Philosophy of Aristotle by Christopher Shields, 1999; Aristotle and Contemporary Science, edited by Demetra Sfendoni-Mentzou, 2000; Life's Form: Late Aristotelian Conception of the Soul by Dennis Des Chene, 2000; The Myth of Aristotle's Development and the Betrayal of Metaphysics by Walter E. Wehrle, 2000; Aristotle on Meaning and Essence by David Charles, 2000; Aristotle's Theory of the Unity of Science by Malcolm Wilson, 2000; Aristotle and Aristotelianism in Medieval Muslim, Jewish, and Christian Philosophy by Husain Kassim, 2000; Substantial Knowledge: Aristotle's Metaphysics by C.D.C. Reeve, 2000; Revaluing Ethics: Aristotle's Dialectical Pedagogy by Thomas W. Smith, 2001; Hypothetical Syllogistic and Stoic Logic by Anthony Speca, 2001; Essays on the Aristotelian Tradition by Anthony Kenny, 2001; Ontology and the Art of Tragedy: An Approach to Aristotle's Poetics by Martha Husain, 2002.

* * *

Written by a philosopher and scientist who was not born until 20 years after the death of Sophocles and Euripides, De arte poetica (Poetics) is an unlikely candidate the founding document of European dramatic theory. In fact it has no rival, offering the earliest view of the origins and form of Greek tragedy as well as a theoretical and structural base for all subsequent serious drama.

This is unlikely to be what Aristotle had in mind when he first committed his comparison of epic and dramatic poetry to paper. The Poetics appears to be unfinished or, at least, unrevised, and is widely believed to be no more than lecture notes. A companion volume on comedy has failed to survive. In early life Aristotle had studied under Plato who, in the Republic and elsewhere, had rejected the claims of drama and theatre to a place in his ideal state. This world, according to Plato, is no more than a pale reflection of reality, which is itself a reflection of the pure Idea. Drama, by being an imitation of an imitation, is doubly suspect. The capacity of actors to transform themselves is equally dangerous, as is the tendency of an audience to become engaged by fiction or 'lies.'

Aristotle sets out in the Poetics to compare the forms of epic and dramatic poetry and justify both. The information he provides, intriguing as it is, about the history of the theatre in Athens, is incidental to the main argument. In the light of subsequent scholarship, theatrical, historical, and anthropological, there is no reason to accept all of Aristotle's beliefs as necessarily historically accurate. When he talks of tragedy and comedy as "at first improvised" (or "in an experimental stage"), or of tragedy "moving from trivial plots and comic diction, exchanging satiric method for solemnity only late," he offers little more than hearsay evidence of the first form of "tragedy" in Athens. On the other hand, his assertion that Aeschylus introduced a second actor and relegated the chorus in favour of dialogue appears to be borne out by the surviving plays of Aeschylus. Sophocles, according to Aristotle, "increased the number of actors to three and introduced skēnographia" (scenic decoration). Tantalizingly, Aristotle offers no further indication of the physical conditions in the Athenian theatre.

Though his remarks on the early form of theatre in Athens are incomplete, it is as a theorist on tragic structure that Aristotle was most influential, and most misinterpreted. The three unities, of time, place, and action, were treated as rules for the proper writing of tragedy as late as the 19th century in France. Extant Greek tragedies by Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides pay no more than incidental attention to the notion that a play should take place within a single day and in a fixed location. Whatever later critics chose to believe,

Aristotle himself treats such things as no more than passing recommendations. The unity of action has more substance but seems to be a by-product of a dramatic form whose rhythm derives from a chorus which dances and sings an interlude between the dramatic scenes.

The most stimulating and widely known section of the Poetics includes the famous definition of tragedy which is at the heart of Aristotle's argument in favour of a therapeutic purpose to dramatic performance:

Tragedy is the representation (mimesis) of an action which is worthy of concern (spoudaios), complete in itself and of some substance. Heightened in language, different aspects of which are in the various parts, it takes the form of action (praxis), not narrative, by creating pity and fear causing the purgation (katharsis) of such emotions.

The precise meaning has been argued over for centuries, but a further reference to the cathartic effect of music in his Politica (Politics) implies that Aristotle considers emotions, of which "pity" and "fear" are examples rather than the gamut, to be unhealthy if denied an outlet. Music and theatre allow for a katharsis, a purgation or exorcizing of these emotions, and thereby help to create emotional balance. That the main function of tragedy was to induce emotional response was to remain virtually unchallenged as a principle until Brecht in the 20th century asserted the need for a detachment of response on the part of the spectator if theatre was to show how the world could be changed.

Much of the rest of the Poetics is taken up with the comparison between epic and dramatic poetry. Aristotle divides tragedy into six elements, "plot, character, speech, thought, the visual and song," these in order of importance, and uses examples from a number of plays to identify the better and less satisfactory elements of plays with which he is familiar. In this he shows himself to be more familiar with Sophocles and Euripides than with Aeschylus, whose plays were less often revived in the 4th century BC. Sophocles' Oedipus Tyrannus proves to be his example of all that is best in drama.

For all the fascinating insights that the Poetics supplies, it serves better as a discussion document than as a playwriting manual it was never intended to be. Aristotle does not write as a theatre goer but as a theorist. His final conclusion that dramatic poetry is more satisfactory than epic may appear to allow for a performance dimension. His corresponding belief that tragedy may well be better enjoyed on the page than on the stage is a comment both on Aristotle and on the theatre of his period.

—J. Michael Walton

ARNIM, Bettina von

Born: Catharina Elisabetha Ludovica Magdalena Brentano in Frankfurt, Germany, 4 April 1785. Granddaughter of the writer Sophie von La Roche, sister of the writer Clemens Brentano, q.v. Education: Educated at a convent in Fritzlar, 1794–97, then in Offenbach, Frankfurt, and Marburg. Family: Married Ludwig Achim von Arnim in 1811 (died 1831); seven children. Career: Became a friend of Goethe, whom she met in 1807; lived in Berlin from 1817; associated with Ludwig Tieck, the Grimm brothers, the Humboldt brothers, F.H. Jacobi, and F. Schleiermacher; acquainted also with Beethoven, Franz Liszt, and Hans Christian Andersen; began her literary career in the 1830s, after her husband's death. Died: 20 January 1859.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

- Geschichten der Bettina von Arnim* (selection), edited by Karl Hans Strobl and Karl Wilhelm Fritsch. 1908.
- Sämtliche Werke*, edited by Waldemar Oehlke. 7 vols., 1920–22.
- Werke und Briefe*, edited by Gustav Konrad and Joachim Müller. 5 vols., 1959–63.
- “Die Sehnsucht hat allemal Recht”: Gedichte, Prosa, Briefe, edited by Gerhard Wolf. 1984.
- Werke*, edited by Heinz Härtl. 1986–.
- Werke und Briefe*, edited by Walter Schmitz and Sibylle von Steinsdorff. 1986–.
- Bettina von Arnim: Ein Lesebuch*, edited by Christa Bürger and Birgitt Diefenbach. 1987.

Fiction

- Goethes Briefwechsel mit einem Kinde. Seinem Denkmal*. 1835; as Goethe's Correspondence with a Child: For His Monument, translated in part by the author, 1837, Book 3 translated as The Diary of a Child, 1838; translated by Wallace Smith Murray, in German Classics of the Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries, vol. 7, 1913.
- Die Günderode*. 1840; as Miss Günderode, translated (incomplete) by Margaret Fuller, 1842; as Correspondence of Fräulein Günderode and Bettine von Arnim, complete translation by Minna Wesselhöft and Margaret Fuller, 1861.
- Clemens Brentanos Frühlingskranz aus Jugendbriefen ihm geflochten, wie er selbst schriftlich verlangte*. 1844.
- Ilius Pamphilus und die Ambrosia*. 1847–48.
- Drei Märchen*. 1853.
- Das Leben der Hochgräfin Gritta von Rattenzuhausebeius*, with Gisela von Arnim, edited by Otto Mallon. 1926; as The Life of High Countess Gritta von Ratsinourhouse, translated with introduction by Lisa Ohm, 1999.

Other

- Dédié à Spontini*. 1843.
- Dies Buch gehört dem König*. 2 vols., 1843.
- An die aufgelöste Preussische National-Versammlung. Stimmen aus Paris* (political pamphlet). 1848; as Polenbroschüre, edited by Ursula Püschel, 1954.
- Gespräche mit Dämonen. Des Königsbuches zweiter Band*. 1852.
- Sämtliche Schriften*. 11 vols., 1853.
- Bettine von Arnim und Friedrich Wilhelm IV* (correspondence), edited by Ludwig Geiger. 1902.
- Achim von Arnim und Bettina Brentano* (correspondence), edited by Reinhold Steig. 1913.
- Goethes Mutter in ihren Briefen und in den Erzählungen der Bettina Brentano*, edited by Kate Tischendorf. 1914.

- Bettinas Briefwechsel mit Goethe: auf Grund ihres handschriftlichen Nachlasses nebst zeitgenössischen Dokumenten über ihr persönliches Verhältnis zu Goethe*, edited by Reinhold Steig, 1922; revised edition edited by Fritz Bergemann. 1927.
- Bettina in ihren Briefen*, edited by Hartmann Goertz. 1935.
- Bettina von Arnim und Rudolf Baier* (correspondence), edited by Kurt Gassen. 1937.
- Die Andacht zum Menschenbild. Unbekannte Briefe von Bettine Brentano*, (correspondence with Carl von Savigny), edited by Wilhelm Schellberg and Friedrich Fuchs. 1942.
- Clemens und Bettina: Geschwisterbriefe*, edited by Ina Seidel. 1948.
- Du wunderliches Kind . . . Bettine und Goethe. Aus dem Briefwechsel zwischen Goethe und Bettine von Arnim*, edited by Alfred Kantorowicz. 1950.
- Goethes Briefwechsel mit einem Kinde: aus dem Briefwechsel zwischen Goethe und Bettine von Arnim*, edited by Gustav Konrad. 1960.
- Achim und Bettina in ihren Briefen: Briefwechsel Achim von Arnim und Bettina Brentano*, edited by Werner Vordtriede. 2 vols., 1961.
- Das Armenbuch*, edited by Werner Vordtriede. 1969.
- Der Briefwechsel zwischen Bettine Brentano und Max Prokop von Freyberg*, edited by Sybille von Steinsdorff. 1972.
- Der Briefwechsel Bettine von Arnims mit dem Brüdern Grimm 1838–1841*, edited by Hartwig Schultz. 1985.
- Bettine und Arnim, Briefe der Freundschaft und der Liebe*, edited by Otto Betz and Veronika Straub. 2 vols., 1986–87.
- “. . . und mehr als einmal nachts im Thiergarten.” Bettina von Arnim und Heinrich Bernhard Oppenheim. Briefe 1841–1849, edited by Ursula Püschel. 1990.
- Editor, with Wilhelm Grimm and Karl August Varnhagen von Ense, Sämtliche Werke, by Ludwig Achim von Arnim. 2 vols., 1853–56; revised edition, 21 vols., 1857; reprinted 1982.

*

Critical Studies: Bettina: A Portrait by Arthur Helps and Elizabeth Jane Howard, 1957; “The Reception in England and America of Bettina von Arnim’s Goethe’s Correspondence with a Child” by Hildegard Platzer Collins and Philip Allison Shelley, in Anglo-German and American-German Crosscurrents, (2), 1962; Bettina von Arnim by Hans von Arnim, 1963; Bettina von Arnim. Romantik-Revolution-Utopie by Ingeborg Drewitz, 1969; Bettina von Arnim: Eine weibliche Sozialbibliographie aus dem 19. Jahrhundert by Gisela Dischner, 1977; An der Grenze einer neuen Welt: Bettina von Arnims Botschaft vom freien Geist by Frieda Margarete Reuschle, 1977; Steuerromantik: Rund um Bettina von Arnims Hundesteuerprozess by Alfons Pausch, 1978; Bettina von Arnim by Gertrud Mander, 1982; Bettina von Arnim: Eine Chronik: Daten und Zitate zu Leben und Werk, edited by Heinz Härtl, 1984; Bettina von Arnim: Ein Leben zwischen Tag und Traum by Fritz Böttger, 1986; Bettine von Arnim: Romantik und Sozialismus (1831–1859) by Hartwig Schultz, Heinz Härtl, and Marie-Claire Hooock-Demarle, 1987; Bettina von Arnim und Goethe: Topographie einer Beziehung als Beispiel weiblicher Emanzipation zu Beginn des 19. Jahrhunderts by Birgit Weissenborn, 1987; Bettine von Arnim and the Politics of Romantic Conversation by Edith Waldstein, 1988; Ordnung im Chaos: Studien zur Poetik der Bettine Brentano-von Arnim by Ursula Liebertz-Grün, 1989; Bettina Brentano-von Arnim: Gender and Politics, edited by Elke P. Frederiksen and Katherine R. Goodman, 1995; Bettine’s Song: The Musical Voice of Bettine von Arnim, née Brentano, 1785–1859 by Ann Willison Lemke, 1998; Women of Letters: A Study of Self and Genre in the Personal Writing of Caroline Schlegel-Schelling, Rahel Levin Varnhagen, and Bettina von Arnim by Margaretmary Daley, 1998.

* * *

One of the most remarkable and controversial figures of her generation, distinguished both by her striking personality and her multiple artistic gifts, Bettina von Arnim played a unique role in the political and intellectual life of her age. No German woman of letters has had a more profound effect on other artists: Beethoven esteemed her; Schumann and Brahms dedicated compositions to her; authors as diverse as Balzac, Immermann, and Rilke commemorated her in their novels; she gathered material for Goethe's autobiography and for the important collection of poetry by her husband and brother, Des Knaben Wunderhorn (The Boy's Magic Horn); she influenced Turgenev; and in recent times she has held a particular fascination for German women writers such as Sarah Kirsch, Ingeborg Drewitz, and Christa Wolf. While she is still most widely known for her cult of Goethe and her part in the reception of his work, her practical political concerns and her advocacy of disadvantaged social groups—Jews, the poor, victims of political persecution—are equally noteworthy.

Goethes Briefwechsel mit einem Kinde (Goethe's Correspondence with a Child), her first publication apart from minor items of verse and song settings, catapulted her on to the literary scene and became her most famous work both in Germany and abroad. Like three of her subsequent books—Die Günderröde (Miss Günderröde), Clemens Brentanos Frühlingskranz [Clemens Brentano's Spring Garland], and Ilius Pamphilius und die Ambrosia—it is an epistolary novel based on actual but heavily edited, altered, and supplemented letters, and hence occupies an ambivalent position between fact and fiction. Conceived as a literary monument to Goethe, it celebrates him as the quasi-divine incarnation of the spirit of poetry. The rapturous tone, cult of genius, and secularized religious vocabulary which characterize the novel were inspired in part by her reading of Goethe's works, notably The Sufferings of Young Werther, which reflects his attraction to her mother, Maximiliane, and letters that he had written to her grandmother, Sophie von La Roche, in the early 1770s. To these influences from Goethe's Sturm und Drang period must be added Arnim's personal acquaintance with his mother, whose reminiscences she had noted down and made available to Goethe as well as using them herself; the androgynous child-woman, Mignon, from his novel, Wilhelm Meister's Apprenticeship (1795–96), with whom Arnim identified; and the decisive significance for her of Romantic thought, in which the child embodies the original, innocent, paradisaic relationship of humanity with the divine before the Fall. By casting herself in the role of the childmuse, Arnim evokes these associations and symbolizes her own spiritual rebirth through contact with the creative genius of Goethe.

On its appearance the Correspondence provoked a heated public debate, which had as much to do with the polarized political, religious, and cultural climate of contemporary Germany as with the merits of the book itself. Reactions ranged from moral outrage on the part of both Catholics and Protestants to the unqualified praise of Jacob Grimm, who declared that the book had no equal in the power of either its language or its thought, and the enthusiasm of the young German writers, who saw it as an emancipatory tract and elevated Arnim to mythical status as an embodiment of the progressive Zeitgeist. By combining Romantic qualities with the apotheosis of Goethe—regarded in Germany as the embodiment of classicism—and patriotism with liberal attitudes, Arnim challenged the antithetical view of late 18th and early 19th-century German culture which was current in the mid-1830s and still colours perceptions of the period today. Although her translation of the Correspondence into English, which was intended to finance the Goethe memorial that she designed, proved a financial disaster, the book was well received in intellectual and artistic circles abroad, particularly in Russia, in France, and among the Transcendentalists in the USA. A partial Russian translation by Mikhail Bakunin appeared in 1838, an American edition in 1841, and a complete French translation in 1843.

Arnim's other major epistolary works, Miss Günderröde and Clemens Brentanos Frühlingskranz, commemorate, respectively, her friend Karoline von Günderröde, a writer who had taken her own life in 1806 at the age of 26, and her favourite brother, who died in 1842. Both the dedication of Miss Günderröde to "the students" and the title of the "Spring Garland" have political connotations, reflecting Arnim's concern with the younger generation and with the projection of a forward-looking image of Romanticism in contrast to contemporary criticism of the movement as reactionary and narrowly denominational. Thus in the Frühlingskranz she stresses her brother's unorthodox youth rather than the conservative Catholicism of his later years, while in Miss Günderröde, drawing upon the traditions of the Enlightenment, Goethe, and early Romanticism, in particular the thought of Schleiermacher, she undertakes a radical critique of orthodox Christianity and proposes a new religion based on the Romantic conception of divine love as the principle of creation.

Like the Correspondence, Dies Buch gehört dem König [This Book Belongs to the King] caused a sensation. A fictitious dialogue dedicated to King Frederick William IV of Prussia, it advocates, through the figure of Goethe's mother, a constitutional monarchy, social reforms, a free press, and extensive civil liberties. Crime is attributed to social deprivation; consequently, Arnim opposes the death penalty and pleads for prison reform and education for offenders. An appendix documents conditions in a Berlin slum. In 1844, Arnim planned a comprehensive documentary study of poverty, Das Armenbuch [Book of the Poor]. She collected "pauper lists" from all over Germany, especially Silesia, but was dissuaded from publication by the uprising of the Silesian weavers in June of that year (the extant documents were first published by Werner Vortriede in 1962). The appearance of her correspondence with her young friend Philipp Nathusius (Ilius Pamphilius), and the sequel to the "King's Book," Gespräche mit Dämonen [Conversations with Spirits], met with little response, though the latter provoked accusations of communism. She spent her final years editing and publishing her husband's collected works.

—Judith Purver

ARTAUD, Antonin (Marie Joseph)

Born: Marseilles, France, 4 September 1896. Military Service: Served in the French military: medical discharge, 1916. Career:

Suffered from meningitis, hospitalized frequently, 1915–20; moved to Paris, 1920; co-editor, Demain, 1920–21, and Le Bilboquet, 1923; actor and designer for Lugné-Poe, Charles Dullin, and Georges Pitoëff theatre companies, Paris, 1921–24; actor in films by Abel Gance, Carl Dreyer, and others, 1924–35; director, Bureau of Surrealist Research, 1925, and editor of 3rd issue of La Révolution Surréaliste, 1925; founder, with Roger Vitrac and Robert Aron, Théâtre Alfred Jarry, Paris, 1926, and Théâtre de la Cruauté 1933; lecturer on theatre, the Sorbonne, Paris, 1928, 1931, 1933; confined in various asylums, primarily in Rodez, 1937–46, Drawings exhibited: Loeb Gallery, 1947. Awards: Sainte-Beuve prize, 1948. Died: 4 March 1948.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Oeuvres complètes. 24 vols., 1956–81; revised edition, 1970–. Artaud Anthology, edited by Jack Hirschman. 1965. Collected Works, translated by Victor Corti. 4 vols., 1968–5. Selected Writings, edited by Susan Sontag, translated by Helen Weaver. 1976. Watchfiends & Rack Screams: Works from the Final Period, edited and translated by Clayton Eshleman with Bernard Bador, 1995.

Plays

Les Cenci (produced 1935). In Oeuvres complètes, 4, 1967; as The Cenci, translated by Simon Watson Taylor, 1969. Pour en finir avec le jugement de Dieu. 1948; as To Have Done with the Judgment of God, translated by Helen Weaver, in Selected Writings, 1976.

Verse

Tric-trac du ciel 1923. Artaud le môme. 1947; as Artaud the Momo, translated by Clayton Eshleman and Norman Glass, 1976. Ci-gît, précédé de la culture indienne. 1947.

Other

Le Pèse-nerfs. 1925; with Fragments d'un journal d'enfer, 1927. L'Ombilic des limbes. 1927. Correspondance, with Jacques Rivière. 1927. L'Art et la mort. 1929. Le Théâtre Alfred Jarry et l'hostilité public, with Roger Vitrac. 1930. Le Théâtre de ta cruauté. 1933. Héliogabale; ou, L'Anarehiste couronné. 1934. Le Théâtre de Séraphin. 1936. Les Nouvelles Révélations de l'être. 1937. Le Théâtre et son double. 1938; also translated by Brian Singleton, 1998; as The Theatre and Its Double, translated by Mary Caroline Richards, 1958; also translated by Victor Corti, 1981. D'un voyage au pays de Tarahumaras (essays and letters). 1945. Lettres de Rodez, 1946. Van Gogh, Le Suicidé de la société. 1947. Supplément aux Lettres de Rodez suivi de Coleridge le traître. 1949. Lettres contre la Cabbale. 1949. Lettres à Jean-Louis Barrault. 1952.

La Vie et mort de Satan le feu. 1953; as The Death of Satan and Other Mystical Writings, translated by Alastair Hamilton and Victor Corti, 1974. Les Tarahumaras (letters and essays). 1955; as The Peyote Dance, translated by Helen Weaver, 1976. Galapagos, Les Îles du bout du monde (travel). 1955. Autre chose que l'enfant beau. 1957. Voici un endroit. 1958. Mexico. 1962. Lettres à Anaïs Nin. 1965. Poète noir et autres textes/Black Poet and Other Texts, edited by Paul Zweig. 1966. Lettres à Génica Athanasiou. 1969. Nouveaux écrits de Rodez. 1977. Lettres à Anie Besnard. 1977. Artaud on Theatre, edited by Claude Schumacher. 1989. Antonin Artaud's Alternate Genealogies: Self-portraits and Family Romances by John C. Stout, 1996. Translator, Le Moine, by Matthew Gregory Lewis. 1931. Translator, with Bernard Steele, Crime passionnel, by Ludwig Lewisohn. 1932. Antonin Artaud: Works on Paper, edited by Margit Rowell, 1996.

*

Bibliography: in Artaud et le théâtre by Alan Virmaux, 1970.

Critical Studies: The Dramatic Concept of Artaud by Eric Sellin, 1968; Antonin Artaud: Man of Vision by Bettina L. Knapp, 1969; Antonin Artaud: Poet Without Words by Naomi Greene, 1970; Antonin Artaud by Jean-Louis Brau, 1971; Antonin Artaud by Martin Esslin, 1976; Artaud's Theatre of Cruelty by Alfred Bermel, 1977; Artaud and After by Ronald Hayman, 1977; Antonin Artaud by Julia F. Costich, 1978; Antonin Artaud: Blows and Bombs by Stephen Barber, 1993; Artaud, Genet, Shange: The Absence of the Theatre of Cruelty by Sean Carney, 1994; Antonin Artaud and the Modern Theatre, edited by Gene A. Plunka, 1994; Artaud and the Gnostic Drama by Jane Goodall, 1994; Issues of Otherness and Identity in the Works of Izquierdo, Kahlo, Artaud, and Breton by Gina McDaniel Tarver, 1996; Artaud: The Screaming Body by Stephen Barber, 1999.

* * *

Paradox envelops Antonin Artaud. The man who wished to de-emphasize words in theatre—"No more masterpieces!"—has written 24 volumes of words. A theatre prophet who valued performance far above theory, Artaud's productions were limited to a few sporadic efforts of his Alfred Jarry Theatre and 17 performances of Les Cenci [The Cenci] as an example of theatre of cruelty; in contrast, Gallimard publishers printed 100,000 copies of Le Théâtre et son double [The Theatre and Its Double], his 1938 collection of manifestos and letters which has had wide influence. A strikingly handsome film actor, Artaud drew self-portraits when he was ill and haggard. Plagued with illness all his life, Artaud undertook to cure what he saw as a sick civilization. After nine years of neglect in asylums, he became a cult figure in post-World War II Paris, during the last two years of his life. After his death, Artaud inspired two divergent movements: 1) the experimental theatre groups of the 1960s, particularly in the USA; 2) the “human science” intellectuals of that same decade, particularly in France.

Artaud’s writing takes many forms—fiction, drama, essays, diatribes, production plans, poems, and letters that sometimes read like soliloquies to be declaimed. All his writing is seared by his flaming self-consciousness; he flaunted his suffering with inimitable intensity. Up until the time of his incarceration in 1937, Artaud espoused theatre as an instrument of civilizational catharsis, and he equates theatre with plague, alchemy, metaphysics, and cruelty—doubles all. At Rodez Asylum and later, however, his long poems and essays lacerate in order to scourge. With sound play, obscenity, neologisms, occult and fantastic reference, Artaud inveighs against Western materialism; as poète maudit he curses the familiar scenes of modern life. His passion—utterance and suffering—has inspired theatre practitioners like Jean-Louis Barrault, Roger Blin, Peter Brook; and thinkers like Gilles Deleuze, Jacques Derrida, and Susan Sontag. Less read than read about, Artaud is only recently being studied as a writer rather than as a martyr.

—Ruby Cohn

See the essay on The Theatre and Its Double.

ASSIS, Joaquim Maria Machado de

See MACHADO DE ASSIS, Joaquim Maria

ASTURIAS, Miguel Ángel

Born: Guatemala City, Guatemala, 19 October 1899. Family moved to Salamá fearing government persecution, 1903; returned to the capital, 1908. Education: Educated at schools in Guatemala City; abandoned studies in medicine, 1917; studied law at San Carlos University, Guatemala City, 1917–23, degree 1923; also helped found the People’s University [Universidad Popular] of Guatemala, 1922, and the Association of University Students; studied anthropology under Georges Raymond, the Sorbonne, Paris, 1923–28. Family: Married 1) Clemencia Amado (separated 1946–47), two sons; 2) Blanca de Mora y Araujo in 1950, two sons. Career: Founder, Tiempos Nuevos, 1923; travelled to England, 1923; based in Paris, 1923–32, mixing study and journalism; travelled through Europe and the Middle East in the 1920s; returned to Guatemala, 1933, and worked as radio broadcaster (co-creator, “Diario del aire” series, 1937) and journalist, 1933–42; a deputy, Guatemalan National Congress, 1942; undertook diplomatic posts, 1945–54: cultural attaché, Mexico City, 1945–47, and Buenos Aires, 1947–53, minister-counsellor, Buenos Aires, 1951–52, Guatemalan ambassador, Paris, 1952–53, and San Salvador (El Salvador), 1953–54; exiled for his support of the left-wing leader Jacobo Árbenz Guzmán, 1954, and moved to Argentina; journalist, El Nacional (Venezuela), 1954–62; cultural exchange programme member, Columanus, Italy, 1962;

Guatemalan ambassador, Paris, 1966–70; spent last years in Madrid. Awards: Sylla Monseguir prize for translation, 1932; William Faulkner Foundation Latin American award, 1962; International Lenin Peace prize, 1966; Nobel prize for literature, 1967. Died: 9 June 1974.

PUBLICATIONS

Collection

Edición crítica de las obras completas, various editors. 24 vols., 1977–.

Fiction

El Señor Presidente. 1946; edited by Ricardo Navas Ruiz and Jean-Marie Saint-Lu, 1978; as The President, translated by Frances Partridge, 1963; as El Señor Presidente, translated by Partridge, 1964.

Hombres de maíz. 1949; edited by Gerald Martín, 1981 and 1992; as Men of Maize, translated by Martín, 1974; translated by Gerald Martin, 1993.

Viento fuerte. 1949; as The Cyclone, translated by Darwin Flakoll and Claribel Alegría, 1967; as Strong Wind, translated by Gregory Rabassa, 1968.

El Papa verde. 1954; as The Green Pope, translated by Gregory Rabassa, 1971.

Week-end en Guatemala (stories). 1956.

Los ojos de los enterrados. 1960; as The Eyes of the Interred, translated by Gregory Rabassa, 1973.

El alhajadito (novella). 1961; as The Bejeweled Boy, translated by Martin Shuttleworth, 1971.

Mulata de tal. 1963; as Mulatta, translated by Gregory Rabassa, 1967; as The Mulatta and Mr. Fly, translated by Rabassa, 1967.

El espejo de Lida Sal (stories). 1967; as The Mirror of Lida Sal: Tales Based on Mayan Myths and Guatemalan Legends, translated by Gilbert Alter-Gilbert, 1997.

Maladrón: Epopeya de los Andes verdes. 1969.

Novelas y cuentos de juventud, edited by Claude Couffon. 1971.

Viernes de Dolores. 1972; edited by Marcel Brion and others, 1978.

Tres obras (includes Leyendas de Guatemala; El Alhajadito; El Señor Presidente), edited by Giuseppe Bellini, 1977.

Verse

Émulo Lipolidón. 1935.

Sonetos. 1937.

Anoche, 10 de marzo de 1543. 1943.

Poesía: Sien de alondra. 1949; complete edition, 1954.

Ejercicios poéticos en forma de soneto sobre temas de Horacio. 1951.

Alto es el sur. 1952.

Bolívar. 1955.

Obras escogidas. 3 vols., 1955.

Nombre custodio, e Imagen pasajera. 1959.

Clarivigilia primavera. 1965.

Sonetos de Italia. 1965.

Sonetos venecianos. 1973.

Tres de cuatro soles (prose poem), edited by Dorita Nouhaud. 1977.

Plays

- Rayito de estrella* (in verse). 1925.
Alclasán: famtomina (in verse). 1939.
Soluna: Comedia prodigiosa en dos jornadas y un final. 1955.
La audiencia de los confines: Crónica en tres andanzas. 1957.
Teatro: Chantaje; Dique seco; Soluna; La audiencia de los confines. 1964.
Juárez. 1972.

Other

- Sociología guatemalteca: El problema social del indio*. 1923; as Guatemalan Sociology: The Social Problem of the Indian, translated by Maureen Ahern, 1977.
La arquitectura de la vida nueva (essays and lectures). 1928.
Carta aérea a mis amigos de América. 1952.
Rumania, su nueva imagen. 1964.
Juan Girador. 1964.
Obras escogidas. 2 vols., 1964.
Torotumbo; La audiencia de los confines; Mensajes indios (selection). 1967.
Coloquio con Asturias, with Hugo Cerezo Dardón and others. 1968.
Latinoamérica y otros ensayos (essays). 1968.
Antología, edited by Pablo Palomina. 1968.
Asturias: Semblanza para el estudio de su vida y obra, con una selección de poemas y prosas. 1968.
Obras completas, introduced by José María Souviron. 3 vols., 1968.
Comiendo en Hungría (verse and illustrations), with Pablo Neruda. 1969; as Sentimental Journey around the Hungarian Cuisine, translated by Barna Balogh, 1969.
The Talking Machine (for children), translated by Beverly Koch. 1971.
El problema social del indio y otros textos, edited by Claude Couffon, 1971.
El novelista en la universidad. 1971.
América, fábula de fábulas y otros ensayos (essays). 1972.
Novela y novelista. reunión de Málaga, with others. 1972.
Mi mejor obra, 1973; as Lo mejor de mi obra, 1974.
Conversaciones con Asturias, with Luis López Álvarez. 1974.
Sinceridades (essays), edited by Epaminondas Quintana. 1980.
Actos de fe en Guatemala, photographs by Sara Facio and María Cristina Orive. 1980.
El hombre que lo tenía todo, todo, todo, illustrated by Jacqueline Duheme. 1981.
Viajes, ensayos y fantasías. 1981.
París 1922–1923: Periodismo y creación literaria (articles), edited by Amos Segala. 1988.
Cartas de amor, with Blanca de Moray Araujo, edited by Felipe Mellizo. 1989.
Editor, Leyendas de Guatemala (stories). 1930; enlarged edition, 1948; as Leyendas, 1960.
Editor, Poesía precolombiana. 1960.
Editor, Páginas de Rubén Darío, 1963.
Translator, with J. Manuel González de Mendoza, Los dioses, los héroes y los hombres de Guatemala antigua; o, El libro del consejo, Popol vuh de los indios quichés. 1927; revised edition as Popol vuh, o, el libro del consejo de los indios quichés, 1969.
Translator, with J. Manuel González de Mendoza, Anales de los xahil de los indios cakchiqueles by Georges Raynaud. 1928.
Translator, Antología de la prosa rumana. 1967.

*

Bibliography: Miguel Ángel Asturias: Anticipo bibliográfico by Pedro F. de Andrea, 1969; Asturias: A Checklist of Works and Criticism by R.E. Moore, 1979.

Critical Studies: Miguel Ángel Asturias by Atilio Jorge Castelpoggi, 1961; Asturias by Earl and Beverly Jones, 1967; Miguel Ángel Asturias by G.W. Lorenz, 1968; Miguel Ángel Asturias; Semblanza para el estudio de su vida y obra by Marta Pilón, 1968; El carácter de la literatura y la novelística de Miguel Ángel Asturias by Iber Verdugo, 1968; La narrativa de Miguel Ángel Asturias, 1969, Il laberinto magico, 1973, Il mondo allucinante: Da Asturias a García Márquez, 1976, and De tiranos, héroes y brujos: Estudios sobre la obra de Miguel Ángel Asturias, 1982, all by Giuseppe Bellini; Artists and Writers in the Evolution of Latin America edited by Edward D. Terry, 1969; Asturias by Richard Callan, 1970; Homenaje a Miguel Ángel Asturias edited by Helmy F. Giacomani, 1971; Miguel Ángel Asturias: La función de lo ancestral en la obra literaria by Eladia L. Hill, 1972; Miguel Ángel Asturias by J. Sáenz, 1973; El Miguel Ángel Asturias que yo conocí by J. Olivero, 1980; Asturias y Neruda by G. Tavani, 1985; “Tall Tales Made to Order: The Making of Myth in Men of Maize by Miguel Ángel Asturias,” in Modern Language Notes, 101, 1986, “The Unifying Principle of Men of Maize,” in Modern Language Studies, 16(2), 1986, and “The New American Idiom of Miguel Ángel Asturias,” in Hispanic Review, 56(2), 1988, all by R. Prieto; La problemática de la identidad en El Señor Presidente de Miguel Ángel Asturias by T. Rodríguez, 1989; Miguel Ángel Asturias’s Archeology of Return by R. Prieto, 1993; Assuming the Light: The Parisian Literary Apprenticeship of Miguel Ángel Asturias by Stephen Henighan, 1999; The Sexual Woman in Latin American Literature: Dangerous Desires by Diane E. Marting, 2001.

* * *

The poetry, drama, essays, and articles for which Miguel Ángel Asturias received the 1967 Nobel prize for literature demonstrate his preoccupation with social and political conditions in Latin America (especially Guatemala) and with the region’s mythic past. Critical attention has generally focused on his fiction (novels and “legends”), unfortunately eclipsing his achievements in other genres. In an essay about his aesthetic principles, Asturias characterized his fiction as “realismo mágico” (magic realism), a term he coined to define writing which, while closely related to surrealism, depicts a uniquely Latin American, fictional ambience that bridges two realities—one being the everyday lives of characters who speak the language of the Guatemalan people and are involved with their social and political concerns, the other an imaginary realm immersed in dreams and hallucinations. The oneiric quality of his fictional worlds is achieved by juxtaposing Guatemalan folk traditions and myths from the Mayan sacred book (the Popol vuh) with everyday reality.

Asturias came to the attention of international literary circles with the publication of Leyendas de Guatemala [Legends of Guatemala], a collection of short fictional pieces described in Paul Valéry’s preface as “poems-dreams-fantasies.” He continued writing “legends” in this “magical” vein throughout his career, and they appear in two later collections, Week-end en Guatemala [Weekend in Guatemala] and El espejo de Lida Sal (The Mirror Of Lida Sal).

From his first novel, El Señor Presidente (The President), to his last, Viernes de Dolores [Good Friday], Asturias’s novels are social and political, reflecting the reality of Guatemala's people, on the one hand, and oneiric, magical, and mythical on the other. The President combines these two qualities very effectively. The most immediate quality of this novel is its unvarnished realism in which torture, graft, and injustice are seen as part of everyday life in a military dictatorship and are depicted in ghastly detail. A surreal atmosphere is discernible from the novel's opening passage, a diabolical, jabberwockylike incantation: "Boom, bloom, alum-bright, Lucifer of alunite!" The "magical" ambience is achieved by the use of mythical motifs and poetic or incantational language. These provide a mesmerizing experience for the reader. Asturias's last novel is based on the student strike that occasioned his first exile. Its narrative is tinged with the humour and idealism of the young Asturias and the irony and disillusion of the man close to the end of his life.

Other novels with significant socio-political content include Viento fuerte (Strong Wind), El Papa verde (The Green Pope), and Los ojos de los enterrados (The Eyes of the Interred), a trio often referred to as the "Banana Trilogy." They enunciate a protest against the exploitation of Guatemala's agricultural resources by foreign interests. Asturias resists a temptation to tar all his fictional United States citizens with the same brush. In Strong Wind, for example, the American Lester Mead makes common cause with the plantation labourers against Tropical Banana Inc., a fictionalized United Fruit Company.

Other Asturias novels are less political and more mythical. His characters move in a magic-realist world, with one foot in the prosaic reality of Guatemala, the other in the magic of the Popol vuh and traditional folk beliefs. This group includes Hombres de maíz (Men of Maize), Mulata de tal (The Mulatta and Mr. Fly), El alhajadito (The Bejeweled Boy), and Maladrón [Evil Thief]. The duality of Asturias's novelistic reality may be identified most readily in Men of Maize, where he depicts the cultivation of corn for profit as a practice that leads to abuse of the land and disrespect for nature. Simultaneously, he creates a "magical" context that alludes to ancient myths, for his characters descend from the first Mayans whose flesh was created from corn by the gods of the Popol vuh. Guatemalan folk tradition is present in the form of his characters' nahuales (animal counterparts believed to protect individuals, and whose form may be assumed by their protégées in times of need).

Asturias's poetry, most of which is gathered in Poesía: Sien de alondra [The Lark's Brow], has received undeserved short shrift from critics. The early poems are completely traditional—with the sonnet his favourite form—and are subjective and personal in content; but, by the mid-1940s, his poetic themes are universal, and, to re-create Guatemala's ancient Mayan atmosphere and re-mythologize its reality, he uses the parallel constructions, repetitions, and onomatopoeia characteristic of pre-Columbian Indian poetry. This trend culminates in Clarivigilia primaveral [Springtime Bright-Vigil], a book-length poem in which Asturias creates a new "myth" about Latin American artist gods. In this poem as elsewhere, while not actually alluding to characters from ancient Mayan myth, he creates characters and events with a mythic quality of relevance to modern Guatemala.

Asturias's theatrical works explore the essence of Guatemalan reality in the same way that his works of fiction and poetry do. La audiencia de los confines [The Royal Tribunal of the Frontier] is a historical play dealing with the duplicity of Church and State at the time of Fray Bartolomé de las Casas's defence of the Indians. Chantaje [Blackmail] and Dique seco [Dry Dock] are plays of social criticism with touches of the absurd. Soluna [Sun-Moon], perhaps the best known of his plays, uses the magic-realism characteristic of his fiction. In it, a myth (when the sun and moon merge during an eclipse, time accelerates, compressing years into moments) provides the solution to the protagonist's dilemma. Asturias's language in his plays is, as it is in other genres, essentially poetic. In fact, he inserts poetic passages in several of his plays. His three "fantomimas" (fantasy-mimes), however, are dramas entirely in verse. He returns to the poetic theatre tradition of the Spanish Golden Age, using traditional Spanish versification. Ironically, these characteristics accentuate a very 20th-century quality of his theatre: the aesthetic distance created by the use of neologisms, repetitions, onomatopoeia, and jabberwocky-like passages.

Asturias's writings in every genre captivate his readers, pulling them into the ancient, mythical ambience of Guatemala, thereby forcing them to reconsider everyday reality.

—Oralia Preble-Niemi

See the essay on The President.

ATTĀR, Farid al-Din Abu Hamid Mohammad

Born: Nishāpūr, Persia (now Iran), c. 1116–41. Education: Trained and practised as a pharmacist (attār) and as a physician; reputedly, travelled throughout the Muslim Middle East, India, and Turkestan; after retirement became a member of the Sufi sect, writing numerous poems and compiling biographies of Sufi saints (Tazkerāt al-'Awliā). Around 20 of the works attributed to him in the past are now thought to be spurious. According to tradition, killed during the Mongol invasion of Persia. Died: c. 1220–31.

PUBLICATIONS

Verse

Ilaāhi-nāma, edited by H. Ritter. 1940; as Book of God, translated by John Andrew Boyle, 1976.

Manteq al-Tayr, edited by S. Gowharin. 1964, as The Conference of the Birds, translated by C.S. Nott (from French), 1954; also translated by Afkam Darbandi and Dick Davis, 1984; abridged version, as The Bird Parliament, translated by Edward Fitzgerald, 1899; as Persian Mysticism, translated by R.P. Masani, 1981.

Other

Tazkerāt al-'Awliā [The Memoirs of the Saints] (biographies), edited by R.A. Nicholson. 2 vols., 1905–07; part as Muslim Saints and Mystics, translated by A.R. Arberry, 1965.

The Persian Mystics: Attār by Margaret Smith, 1995.

*

Bibliography: in Persian Literature by C.A. Storey, 1953.

Critical Studies: The Persian Mystics: Attar (includes translations) by Margaret Smith, 1932; Attar: Concordance and Lexical Repertoires of 1000 Lines by Daniela Meneghini Correale, 1993.

* * *

Farid al-Din Abu Hamid Mohammad Attār of Nishāpūr, known as Farid al-Din Attār, was an eminent Islamic mystic (Sufi) and Persian poet who was born during the 12th century in Nishāpūr, in what is now northeast Iran. The word attār in Persian is derived from the word atr which literally means perfume; an attār is a perfume seller, and the word also refers to a pharmacist. Attār says that he composed some of his works in dāru khāneh, which in modern Persian means a pharmacy, and he was also familiar with the practice of medicine. There are references in his early works to the many patients he received every day in his pharmacy. Later in his life he gave up his job, became a Sufi, and lived in seclusion. It is during this later period that he produced his most significant works.

Attār travelled extensively and visited Egypt, Damascus, Turkistan, Mecca, and India in pursuit of knowledge. During these travels he met great Sufis of his time, and learned the stories he used in his later works. He was a prolific poet and writer who composed, according to his biographers, as many as 114 works. Although this figure seems exaggerated, Attār's contribution to Islamic mysticism is undeniable. To appreciate his works one has to be familiar with the basic doctrines of Islamic mysticism (Sufism), including the Unity of Being (wahdat al-wujūd) which, briefly, means that the created universe is a manifestation of the Divine Reality. This must not be confused with pantheism, because the Oneness of God is at the heart of this doctrine. The created, which is an image of the Creator, will not rest until it achieves the esoteric knowledge (ma'rifat) necessary for experiencing mystical union with the Divine. The unique relationship between the spiritual master (morād or shaikh) and the disciple (morid or sālek) is another cornerstone of Sufism. During the spiritual journey, the disciple constantly seeks his master's clarification on the subtleties of the path and depends on him to resolve his problems.

Attār delineated the doctrines of Sufism delicately and in a simple language in books that are among his best works of poetry and prose. In Asrār-nāma [The Book of Secrets] the narrator admonished the reader to leave his worldly desires behind and start looking for the Divine Reality. It is similar to another of his books, Manteq al-Tayr (The Conference of the Birds) in urging man to embark upon the spiritual journey. However, unlike his other major poetical works which have one general frame story with several embedded stories, this poem has no frame. Ilāhi-nāma (Book of God) is a poetical dialogue between a king and his six sons who are in pursuit of worldly happiness. The king tries to prove to them the absurdity and vanity of their pursuit through anecdotes and examples.

The Conference of the Birds, completed in 1177, is considered Attār's greatest poetical work. This poem is an allegorical account of Islamic mysticism. The story is about the birds of the world who are looking for a king. The hoopoe, Solomon's special messenger to Belqays, the Queen of Sheba, assumes the role of the spiritual master and leads them to the royal court of the Simurgh, the king of the birds. Once the birds are confronted with the insurmountable difficulties of the journey, they come up with various excuses as to why it is impossible for them to undertake the journey. Their excuses express typical weaknesses of human beings on the path of spirituality but in bondage to material things. Through a series of questions and answers, the hoopoe finally succeeds in encouraging them to embark on the trip, narrating admonishing stories and thus expounding the doctrines of Sufism. The hoopoe explains the seven valleys that lead to the Simurgh's court: quest (talab), love (ishq), esoteric knowledge (ma'rifat), independence (isteghnā), unity (towhid), bewilderment (hayrat), poverty (faqr), and annihilation (fanā). These are the seven stages on the path of the seeker's spiritual journey which have to be completed before reaching the royal court. The path of spirituality is dangerous and difficult and not everyone can make it to the end. Only 30 birds reach the court of His Majesty. Finally, when they are admitted to His Presence, they see themselves in His Majesty's mirror. The 30 birds are the Simurgh (si: 30, murgh: bird), and their journey is a conceptualization of man's spiritual journey to the Divine Reality.

Tazkerāt al-'Awliā [The Memoirs of the Saints], Attār's most important prose work, is the hagiography of 96 Islamic saints and mystics. In this book Attār shows his high opinion of the Islamic saints and mystics whose sayings he considers next to the Qur'ān and hadith (the sayings of the Prophet) in their authoritative voice. Two mystics in whom Attār shows a great deal of interest are Mansur Hallāj (d. 922) and Bāyazīd Bastāmi (d. 874), both of whom were executed for their heretical views by the orthodox theologians. In compiling this book, Attār used several sources on the life of Sufis available to him. His achievement is, however, in using these stories for expounding Sufi principles.

Attār chooses his characters from common people and animals. In his works we see people from all layers of society including derisives, beggars, craftsmen, and merchants. He has no interest in the aristocratic class, and whenever he mentions the word "king," he refers to the Divine Being. As a mystic, Attār was never concerned with material gain and never sold his poetic genius to earthly rulers to make a living. As a true Sufi he believed only in the Celestial King whose love was the only moving force in the poet's life. Attār has a talent for putting the most complicated ideas into simple language, masterfully using allegories to express the inexpressible experience and to describe the indescribable.

—Alireza Anushiravani

See the essay on The Conference of the Birds.

AUGUSTINE, St.

Born: Aurelius Augustinus in Tagaste (now Souk Ahras, Algeria), 13 November AD 354. Education: Reared as a Christian; educated in Tagaste and Carthage. Family: Had a son by his concubine. Career: Taught rhetoric in Tagaste, one year, Carthage, eight years, in Rome, 383–84, and Milan, 384–86, where he met the bishop Ambrose; after a period of Manichaeism, turned to Neoplatonism; converted to Christianity, 386; baptized by Ambrose, 387; returned to Tagaste, 388; ordained as a priest in Hippo Regius (now Annada, Algeria), 391, and became its bishop, 396–430, where contended with Donatist schism, Pelagian heresy, and Vandal invasions. Died: 28 August AD 430.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

[Works], in Patrologia Latina, edited by Jacques Paul Migne, vols. 32–47. 1844–64; translations in A Library of Fathers of the Holy

Catholic Church, edited by E.B. Pusey, 12 vols., 1840–57; Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, edited by Marcus Dods, 15 vols., 1871–76, revised edition, as A Select Library of the Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, edited by Philip Schaff, vols. 1–8, 1886–88; Ancient Christian Writers, edited by Johannes Quasten and Joseph C. Plumpe, 9 vols., 1946–61; The Fathers of the Church, edited by Ludwig Schopp, R.J. Defervari, and others, 10 vols., 1947–63; Library of Christian Classics, edited by John Baillie, John T. McNeill, and Henry P. Van Dusen, vols. 6–8, 1953–55; and The Works of St. Augustine, edited by John E. Rotelle, 7 vols., to 1994.

Basic Writings, edited by Whitney J. Oates. 2 vols., 1948.

Selected Sermons, edited and translated by Quincy Howe. 1966.

An Augustine Reader, edited by John J. O'Meara. 1973.

Selected Writings, translated by Mary T. Clark. 1984.

Sermons, translated by Edmund Hill. 2 vols., 1990.

Augustine: Major Writings by Benedict J. Groeschel, 1995.

Political Writings, translated by Michael W. Tkacz and Douglas Kries, 1994.

The Political Writings of St. Augustine, edited with an introduction by Henry Paolucci, 1996.

Works

De civitate Dei, edited by B. Dombart. 1853, revised by A. Kalb, 1928–29; also edited by J.E.C. Welldon, 1924; edited and translated by George E. McCracken and William C. Greene [Loeb Edition], 7 vols., 1957–72; as The City of God, translated by John Healey, 1610, revised by R.V.G. Trasker, 2 vols., 1945; also translated by Marcus Dods and George Wilson, in Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, 1872, reprinted 1950; translated in The Fathers of the Church, vols. 6–8, 1950–54; as The City of God Against the Pagans, edited and translated by R.W. Dyson, 1998.

Contra litteras Petilianas, as Answers to Letters of Petilian, translated by J.R. King, in A Select Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers of the Christian Church, vol. 4. 1887.

De baptismo, contra Donatistas, as On Baptism, Against the Donatists, translated by J.R. King, in A Select Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers of the Christian Church, vol. 4. 1887.

De natura et gratia, as On Nature and Grace, translated by Peter Holmes, in A Selected Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers of the Christian Church, vol. 5. 1888.

De gratia Christi et de peccato originali, as On the Grace of Christ and on Original Sin, translated by Peter Holmes, in A Select Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers of the Christian Church, vol. 5. 1888.

Tractatus in Joannis Evangelium, as Homilies on the Gospel of John, translated by H. Browne, in A Select Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers of the Christian Church, vol. 7. 1888; as Tractates on the Gospel of John, translated by John W. Retting, 1995.

Confessiones, edited by P. Knöll. 1909; also edited by M. Skutella, revised by H. Juergens and W. Schaub, 1969, also revised by James J. O'Donnell, 1992; as The Confessions, translated by Sir Tobie Matthew, 1624; also translated by William Watts, 1631; E.B. Pusey, 2 vols., 1838; Charles Bigg, 1898; F.J. Sheed, 1943; J.M. Lelen, 1952; R.S. Pine-Coffin, 1961; Rex Warner, 1963; E.M. Blaiklock, 1983; Henry Chadwick, 1991; James J. O'Donnell, 1992; J.G. Pilkington, 1993; as Confessions: Books I–IV, edited by Gillian Clark, 1995.

Soliloquia, as The Soliloquies, translated by Rose E. Cleveland. 1910; also translated by Thomas F. Gilligan, in The Fathers of the Church, vol. 5, 1948.

De doctrina Christiana, edited by H.J. Vogels. 1930; as On Christian Doctrine, translated by F.J. Shaw, in A Select Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers of the Christian Church, vol. 2, 1886; as Augustine De doctrina Christiana, edited and translated by R.P.H. Green, 1995.

De beata vita, edited by Michael Schmaus. 1931; as The Happy Life, edited and translated by Ludwig Schopp, 1939.

De libero arbitrio, as On Free Will, edited and translated by Francis E. Tourscher. 1937; also translated by Carroll Mason Sparrow, 1947; Anna S. Benjamin and L.H. Hackstaff, 1964; as The Problem of Free Choice, translated by Mark Pontifex, in Ancient Christian Writers, 1955; as On Free Choice of the Will, translated by Thomas Williams, 1993.

Regula, translated as The Rule of St. Augustine. 1942; also translated by Raymond Canning, 1984.

De Genesi ad litteram [Literal Commentary on Genesis], edited and translated by John Hammond Taylor. 1948.

De sermone Domini in monte, as Commentary on the Lord's Sermon on the Mount, translated by Denis J. Kavanagh, in The Fathers of the Church, vol. 5. 1948.

De spiritu et littera, as On Spirit and the Letter, translated by Peter Holmes, in Basic Writings. 1948.

De vera religione, as Of True Religion, translated by J.H.S. Burleigh. 1953.

Tractatus in Epistolam Joannis ad Parthos, translated as Ten Homilies on St. John's Epistle, in Library of Christian Classics, vol. 8. 1955.

Enarrationes in Psalmos, translated as On the Psalms, in Ancient Christian Writers. 1960.

De trinitate, edited by M.F. Sciacca. 1973; as On the Trinity, translated by Arthur W. Haddan, in A Select Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers of the Christian Church, vol. 3, 1887; also translated by Stephen McKenna, in The Fathers of the Church, vol. 45, 1963.

Epistolae, edited by L. Carrozzini. 1974; translated as Letters, in The Fathers of the Church, 1947–63; as Select Letters [Loeb Edition], 1930.

De dialectica, edited by Jan Pinborg, translated by B. Darrell Jackson. 1975.

Contra academicos, as Against the Academicians; The Teacher, translated with introduction and notes by Peter King. 1995.

*

Bibliography: Revue des études augustiniennes, 1956–; Répertoire bibliographique de saint Augustin 1950–1960 by T.J. van Bavel, 1963; Fichier augustinien, 4 vols., 1972; Bibliographia Augustiniana by Carl Andresen, 1973; Augustinian Bibliography 1970–1980 by Terry L. Miethe, 1982.

Critical Studies: St. Augustine's Philosophy of Beauty by Emmanuel Chapman, 1939; The City of God by J.H.S. Burleigh, 1949; A Companion to the Study of St. Augustine edited by R.W. Battenhouse, 1955; St. Augustine and His Influence Through the Ages by H.I. Marrou, 1957; The Christian Philosophy of St. Augustine by Etienne Gilson, 1960; St. Augustine the Bishop by F. van der Meer, 1961; St. Augustine of Hippo: Life and Controversies, 1963, and God's Decree and Man's Destiny: Studies on the Thought of Augustine of Hippo, 1987, both by Gerald Bonner; Augustine of Hippo, 1967, and Religion and Society in the Age of St. Augustine, 1972, both by P.R.L. Brown; St. Augustine's Confessions: The Odyssey of a Soul, 1969, Art and the Christian Intelligence in St. Augustine, 1978, and Imagination and Metaphysics in St. Augustine, 1986, all by R.J. O'Connell; Augustine: A Collection of Critical Essays edited by R.A. Markus, 1972; Augustine's De moribus ecclesiae catholicae: A Study of the Work, Its Composition and Its Sources by John Kevin Coyle, 1978; Augustine: A Wayward Genius by David Bentley-Taylor, 1980; The Problem of Self-Love in St. Augustine by Oliver O'Donovan, 1980; The Young Augustine: An Introduction to the "Confessions" of St. Augustine by John J. O'Meara, 1980; Augustine: His Life and Thought by Warren Thomas Smith, 1980; Political Theory as Public Confession: The Social and Political Thought of Augustine of Hippo by Peter Dennis Bathory, 1981; St. Augustine of Hippo by Gabriel McDonagh, 1982; Augustine by Henry Chadwick, 1986; The Reality of the Mind: Augustine's Philosophical Arguments for the Human Soul as a Spiritual Substance by Ludger Höscher, 1986; Augustine of Hippo and His Monastic Rule by George Lawless, 1987; Augustine's Philosophy of Mind by Gerald J.P. O'Daly, 1987; Original Sin in Augustine's Confessions by Paul Rigby, 1987; Christian Love and Just War: Moral Paradox and Political Life in St. Augustine and His Modern Interpreters by William R. Stevenson, 1987; Augustine by Christopher Kirwan, 1989; Augustine's Prayerful Ascent: An Essay on the Literary Form of the Confessions by Robert McMahan, 1989; Jerusalem and Babylon: A Study into Augustine's City of God and the Sources of His Doctrine of the Two Cities by Johannes van Oort, 1991; Augustine: Ancient Thought Baptized by John M. Rist, 1994; Saint Augustine the Bishop: A Book of Essays, edited by Fannie LeMoine and Christopher Kleinhenz, 1994; Sacred and Secular: Studies on Augustine and Latin Christianity by R.A. Markus, 1994; Augustine by Mary T. Clark, 1994; Augustine and the Arians: The Bishop of Hippo's Encounters with Ulfian Arianism by William A. Sumruld, 1994; Augustine: His Thought in Context by T. Kermit Scott, 1995; Augustine's World: An Introduction to His Speculative Philosophy by Donald X. Burt, 1996; Love and Saint Augustine by Hannah Arendt, 1996; Church and Faith in the Patristic Tradition: Augustine, Pelagianism, and Early Christian Northumbria by Gerald Bonner, 1996; St. Augustine on Marriage and Sexuality, edited by Elizabeth A. Clark, 1996; The Shadows of Poetry: Vergil in the Mind of Augustine by Sabine MacCormack, 1998; Friendship and Society: An Introduction to Augustine's Practical Philosophy by Donald X. Burt, 1999; Saint Augustine by Garry Wills, 1999; Augustine in Iconography: History and Legend, edited by Joseph C. Schnaubelt and Frederick Van Fleteren, 1999; Augustine: The Scattered and Gathered Self by Sandra Lee Dixon, 1999; The Augustinian Tradition, edited by Gareth B. Matthews, 1999; Augustine of Hippo: A Biography by Peter Brown, 2000; Augustine: Christian Truth and Fractured Humanity by Carol Harrison, 2000; Augustine and Russian Orthodoxy: Russian Orthodox Theologians and Augustine of Hippo: A Twentieth Century Dialogue by Myroslaw I. Tataryn, 2000; The Cambridge Companion to Augustine, edited by Eleonore Stump and Norman Kretzmann, 2001.

* * *

St. Augustine's works are characterized by their number and their variety. When he came to edit them at the end of his life he had 93 on his library shelves, not including vast numbers of letters and sermons as well as the numerous abandoned projects that littered his life. His writings chart the stages of his personal development, from ambitious young career-maker to international religious thinker and controversialist: he described himself as one who writes because he has made progress and who makes progress—by writing.

Augustine received the traditional late classical education in rhetoric, the influence of which is apparent in his love of sophisticated wordplay, paradox and contrast, vivid similes and verbal fireworks. His works show a precision in choice of words, a phenomenal memory for, and telling use of, both classical and scriptural quotations, and a mastery of dry irony and sarcasm. The abstract quality of his mind prevented him from dwelling on landscape or nature, but he was attracted by light, faces, music, and above all by the rhythms of speech. Augustine addressed in different capacities a diverse range of audiences and varied his style accordingly. Thus he composed the monumental and learned De civitate Dei (The City of God), with its expansive, orderly argumentation and sweeping periodic style; powerful, demagogic sermons with lapses into common parlance, the better to communicate with his congregation; letters to personal friends, officials of church and state, and a correspondence with St. Jerome notable for its tone of courteously veiled rancour; and outright ecclesiastical propaganda such as De agone Christiano (On the Christian's Conflict), written in deliberately simple Latin, and the literature attacking the Donatists, full of colloquialisms and popular jingles. Augustine was the only major Latin philosopher who never properly learned Greek, but he turned this seeming deficiency to advantage and ended by replacing the largely Greek culture of the contemporary church with his own works of scholarship, such as De trinitate (On the Trinity) and his commentary De Genesi ad litteram [On Genesis]. Much of his philosophy was merely garnered from Cicero and translations of the Neo-Platonists, but with it Augustine transformed the shape of Latin Christianity.

Augustine's talents lie chiefly in self-justification and dialectic, and this is nowhere clearer than in Confessiones (The Confessions). This work, and the Soliloquia (The Soliloquies) preceding it, were startling innovations with their welding of classical and religious language and ideas and their ferocious self-analysis. The Confessions is not autobiography in the usual sense—Augustine wholly ignores such details as the number of his family, the name of the friend whose death caused him to flee to Carthage or of his faithful concubine who bore his son—rather it is an account of the emotional evolution of a relentless seeker after Truth and Perfection, an anatomy of the most well-documented conversion of antiquity. It is also the therapeutic self-reassessment of a man entering middle age and seeking to interpret his past from the viewpoint of a bishop of a provincial town on the frontiers of a collapsing empire. The public aspect of these preoccupations emerges in his polemical works against ecclesiastical opponents—Donatists, Pelagius, and Bishop Julian.

The climax of Augustine's career was the move outwards from himself and his community to address no less a task than the transformation of the secular pagan state. In De doctrina Christiana (On Christian Doctrine) he sought to strip the pagan gods and the empire itself of centuries of mystique. Finally, in The City of God, an outline for a theology of history depicting two cities—earthly and divine, of unbelief and of faith—Augustine exploited the resources given him by his education in the old tradition to transform it into a vehicle for the new.

—Claire E. Gruzelier

See the essays on The City of God and Confessions, Book I.

AURELIUS (ANTONINUS), Marcus

Born: Marcus Annius Verus in Rome, 26 April AD 121. Family: Married Annia Galeria Faustina in 145 (died 176); one daughter and one son. Career: Gained favour of Emperor Hadrian, who made him a Salian priest at age of 8, supervised his education, and arranged his marriage; adopted (as Marcus Aelius Aurelius Verus Caesar) by emperor designate Antoninus Pius in 138: quaestor in 139, consul with Antoninus Pius in 140, and also in 145 and 161; tribunicia potestas and proconsular imperium, the main formal powers of emperors, conferred on him in 147; abandoned study of rhetoric about this time, and began study of philosophy; succeeded Antoninus Pius as emperor in 161, and elevated his fellow-consul for that year, Lucius Verus, to joint authority with himself (Verus died in 169); negotiated with German tribes in Aquileia, 168; fought the Marcomanni and Quadi, two Danube tribes, 170–74; visited Syria and Egypt to settle revolts, 175–76; raised his son Commodus to rank of Augustus, 177; fought the Marcomanni, 177–78. Died: 17 March AD 180.

PUBLICATIONS

Works

Meditations, edited by A.S.L. Farquharson. 2 vols., 1944 (includes translation); numerous subsequent translations including by C.R. Haines [Loeb Edition], 1930, G.M.A. Grube and Maxwell Staniforth, 1964, Roy Alan Lawes, 1984, Michael Chase, 1998.

Letters, edited by L. Pepe. 1957.

The Meditations and a Selection from the Letters of Marcus and Fronto, translated by A.S.L. Farquharson and R.B. Rutherford. 1989.

*

Critical Studies: Marcus Aurelius: His Life and His World by A.S.L. Farquharson, edited by D.A. Rees, 1951; Marcus Aurelius: A Biography by Anthony Birley, 1966, revised edition, 1987; The Meditations of Marcus Aurelius: A Study by R.B. Rutherford, 1989; Logic and the Imperial Stoa by Jonathan Barnes, 1997.

* * *

Marcus Aurelius' writings are unusual in the extant literature of the ancient world in being almost wholly personal documents, not intended for publication. He was a prolific letter writer, sometimes dispatching three notes to a friend in a single day, and there are about 200 letters still surviving. Many of these are preserved in the correspondence of Fronto, his tutor, for whom he shows great affection and concern. They date from between 139 and 166, when Fronto died, and shed passing illumination upon Marcus Aurelius' youthful enthusiasms, family concerns, and personal habits.

But his major work is that "breviary for contemplatives" which we call the Meditations, but should more correctly be translated (from the Greek) as To Himself. It consists of 12 books of unsystematic private reflections, addressed to himself in the second person like a dialogue, which lends itself to being sipped from time to time rather than drunk off in a draught. Historians concerned with facts are disappointed in their perusal of the Meditations since Marcus Aurelius makes little reference, except incidentally, to external events, and the books are consequently hard to date, beyond saying that they were largely written on campaign in the last ten years of his life. The present arrangement of the books is possibly not his own and certainly not chronological, since the first book, a summing up of all he owes to his family, friends, and associates, appears to have been written last. The manner of transmission is also uncertain—whether his notebooks were entrusted to his secretary's care or found among his papers after his death is not known—but there is little trace of organized editing since the work often progresses in a disconnected fashion from one topic to another and is full of repetitions and loose ends.

It is written in Greek, the language of upper-class, educated men. However, Marcus Aurelius abandoned rhetoric early in life, and his style, while being slightly old-fashioned and awkward, is plain and unadorned—an index of its private nature, but also of the character of the writer. He has a talent for epigrammatic brevity, and often resorts to quick enumeration of points as they occur to him, or even preserves straight lists of quotations from his reading of philosophers and poets. He has a quick eye for natural detail, such as the cracks in a loaf of baked bread or the way a sunbeam streams into a dark room, and his writing is full of brief, vivid similes showing an acute observation of the everyday scene like army surgeons' instruments, a fire burning a pile of rubbish, lotions and poultices for the sick, scuffling puppies, or fights in the arena. His comparisons are all drawn from war, dancing, wrestling, eating—the common occupations of life within his personal experience—and he employs certain predictable, recurring images: life as a road, time as a river, reason as a helmsman, the sphere as perfection.

Marcus Aurelius is not notable as an original thinker; he modestly considered scholarship and philosophy far above him. His attitude is mainly Stoic: a belief in calm acceptance of one's lot, a view of the world as a unified organism constantly changing and of the life spirit returning after death to the universal fire. But he read widely among different schools of philosophy and made his own choice influenced by his personal experience, transmuting pure Stoicism into an individual code for living, a code that in many ways prefigures Christianity.

The Meditations is a kind of spiritual last will and testament—the thoughts of an ill and ageing man aware of the increasing nearness of death and taking stock of what life has taught him: to accept himself, making a conscious effort to improve his failings, striving to assimilate the bad things that happen to good people as part of a universal plan of nature; to bear pain gracefully in the belief that there is a reason for suffering; to face the world with fortitude and his fellow man with understanding; to see man in his correct perspective in relation to the great universe as a transient piece of nothingness, so as to be able to accept approaching death as a small change and another of the processes of nature which is the universal lot of mankind.

Marcus Aurelius has often been accused of being a moral prig and a humbug, but it is obvious from his writings that he was a genuinely good man of sincere and sensitive character, conscious of his duties as emperor and military leader, who endured many personal griefs and public misfortunes and ended with a realistic, if melancholy, view of life—that one may not be rewarded for service or affection to others, but one does not cease to act according to personal canons of rightness because of this.

—Claire E. Gruzelier

See the essay on Meditations.

AUSONIUS, Decimus Magnus

Born: Burdigala (now Bordeaux, France) c. AD 310. Education: Educated in Burdigala and Tolosa (now Toulouse). Family: Married Lucana Sabina (died in childbirth); three children. Career: Taught grammar and rhetoric in Burdigala for 30 years; appointed tutor to Gratian, son of the Roman emperor Valentinian I: fought with both against the Alamanni, AD 368–69; on Gratian's accession, made prefect of Gaul and other provinces; consul by 379; retired to his Bordeaux estates after the murder of Gratian in 383. Died: c. AD 395.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

[Works], edited by K. Schenkl. 2 vols., 1883, reprinted 1961; also edited by Rudolph S. Peiper, 1886, reprinted 1976, A. Pastorino, 1971, Sesto Prete, 1978, and R.P.H. Green, 1991; translated by Hugh G. Evelyn White [Loeb Edition], 2 vols., 1919–21.

Verse

Mosella, as Die Mosella, edited by Carl Hosius. 1894, 3rd edition, 1926; as The Mosella, translated by F.S. Flint, 1915; also translated by E.H. Blakeney, 1933.

*

Critical Studies: Ausonius by Evelyn Gurney, 1989; Ausonius of Bordeaux: Genesis of a Gallic Aristocracy by Hagith Sivan, 1993.

* * *

Ausonius of Bordeaux, a teacher of the Greek and Latin classics for some 40 years and after Gratian (his most famous pupil) became emperor, a powerful courtier for a further ten, is one of the most versatile and prolific writers of the 4th century AD. In his meticulous knowledge of the Latin classics, or the measured rhetoric of the speech that is his only surviving work in prose, the evidence of the schoolroom is seldom far away. However, his multifarious writings contain much that is refreshingly new. The range is very wide and is informed by a conviction that a wide variety of subjects were worthy of expression in verse. Most striking and appealing is his variety of intimately personal poetry: the poem on the birth of his new child, the epicedion (obituary) of his father, the poem of encouragement (protrepticum) to his grandson, and the poem about his inherited villa. Ausonius is not a profound thinker, nor does he probe deeply into his own feelings and experiences, least of all his experiences in political life. His 30 or so letters, for example, reveal little of substance. Where we see him faced with a real problem, such as the withdrawal of his favourite pupil Paulinus into monastic life, he adopts a distant style and takes refuge in the opacity of rhetoric, although it is clear that he saw no need to conceal his Christian beliefs. He wrote both Christian and pagan prayers, and, unusual for a man of this period, seems to have felt no tension between the old and the new.

His superficial experiences, whether as teacher, traveller, or family man, form the core of his poetry. He loves to record, to describe, and to enumerate. There is a poem on the leading cities of the Roman Empire, past and present—“Ordo Urbium Nobilium”; one on the emperors—“Caesares”—perhaps designed to extend into his own times; and there are fragments of one on the Roman consuls—“Fasti.” A painting of Cupid in hell, which he saw in someone's dining room in Trier, was elaborated into the short poem “Cupido Cruciatu”; his masterpiece on the Moselle was also inspired by a prolonged stay in the area. His Parentalia is a series of recollections of departed relatives while his Professores commemorates deceased teachers and colleagues from the schools of Bordeaux and nearby towns. He appended to them a series of epitaphs of heroes and heroines from the Trojan War. Some of his more humble topics seem to derive if not from schoolroom diversions then from a schoolmaster's idea of fun. In the Technopaegnion all the lines end with a different monosyllable; the Ludus Septem Sapientium is a playlet in Plauto-Terentian form about the sayings of the Seven Sages; and the Nuptial Cento describes a wedding and the wedding-night by means of assorted lines and half-lines filched from Virgil. Ausonius is one of few poets to put mathematics into verse, and his miscellany of Eclogues is based to a large extent on pseudo-scientific material.

A lifelong student of the classics, Ausonius is adept at imitating and representing their forms and styles, and does so with taste and discrimination. After his Epigrams, perhaps his earliest work, and based on Greek models more than Roman ones, he tends to go his own way, weaving into his various poems passages in the style of epic, lyric, didactic, or satirical poetry, but seldom descending to pastiche. Particularly distinctive are his versified letters; part of a real correspondence, or two sequences in polymetric format, the Daily Round, an account of a typical day in his life, and Bissula, on a captive German girl who enthralled him. Both of these, though sadly curtailed in transmission, offer a succession of lively tableaux in changing metres. Even without them he would be one of ancient Rome's most metrically creative craftsmen.

Ausonius was a small-scale poet, with an outlook of limited depth, but one whose novelty of theme and originality of treatment combine to create a collection of surprises. His favoured register, certainly a constantly recurrent one, is a humilitas of style and tone which he sometimes exploits as a foil to his actual achievement but which is no doubt the way in which, for all his eminence, he wanted to be remembered. Nowhere is this clearer than in his preface to the general reader, a typical mix of modesty and pride. Just as the image of devoted family man and teacher, content with what he portrays as an average portion of worldly goods, makes a striking contrast with the external grandeur of his public career, so the unassuming tenor of much of Ausonius' verse is in marked antithesis to the love of the formal and spectacular which dominated the taste of his age.

—R.P.H. Green

See the essay on The Mosella.

AYALA, Ramón Pérez de

See PÉREZ DE AYALA, Ramón

AYMÉ, Marcel

Born: Joigny, France, 29 March 1902. Education: Educated at school in Dôle, 1910–19; Lycée Besançon, baccalauréat, 1919. Military Service: Served in the French army, 1922–23. Family: Married Marie-Antoinette Arnaud in 1927. Career: Lived in Germany, 1921–22; worked at a variety of jobs including reporter, clerk, translator, and film extra in Paris; wrote for various pro-German reviews during the Occupation, including La Nouvelle Revue française; visited the United States; contributed to Collier's magazine, New York, 1950. Awards: Prix de la Société des Gens de Lettres, 1926; Théophraste Renaudot prize, 1933. Died: 14 October 1967.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Oeuvres romanesques. 6 vols., 1977.
Oeuvres romanesques complètes, edited by Yves-Alain Favre. 1989. [Novels and Stories]. 1991–.

Fiction

Brûdebois. 1926.
Aller retour. 1927.
Les Jumeaux du diable. 1928.
La Table-aux-crevés. 1929; as The Hollow Field, translated by Helen Waddell, 1933.
La Rue sans nom. 1930.
Le Vaurien. 1931.
Le Puits aux images (stories). 1932.
La Jument verte. 1933; as The Green Mare, translated by Norman Denny, 1955.
Les Contes du chat perché (stories; for children). 1934; as The Wonderful Farm, translated by Norman Denny, 1951.
Le Nain (stories). 1934.
Maison basse. 1935; as The House of Men, translated by Norman Denny, 1952.
Le Moulin de la Sourdine. 1936; as The Secret Stream, translated by Norman Denny, 1953.
Gustatin. 1937.
Derrière chez Martin (stories). 1938.
Le Boeuf clandestin. 1939.
La Belle Image. 1941; as The Second Face, translated by Norman Denny, 1951; as The Grand Seduction, translated by Denny, 1958.
Travellingue. 1941; as The Miraculous Barber, translated by Eric Sutton, 1950.
La Vouivre. 1943; as The Fable and the Flesh, translated by Eric Sutton, 1949.
Le Passe-muraille (stories). 1943; as Across Paris and Other Stories, translated by Norman Denny, 1950; as The Walker-Through-Walls and Other Stories, translated by Denny, 1950.
Traversée de Paris (stories). 1945.
Le Chemin des écoliers. 1946; as The Transient Hour, translated by Eric Sutton, 1948.
Le Vin de Paris (stories). 1947.
Uranus. 1948; as The Barkeep of Blémont, translated by Norman Denny, 1950; as Fanfare in Blémont, translated by Denny, 1950.
En arrière (stories). 1950.

Autres contes du chat perché (stories). 1950; as Return to the Wonderful Farm, translated by Norman Denny, 1954; as The Magic Pictures: More About the Wonderful Farm, translated by Denny, 1954.

Derniers contes du chat perché (stories). 1958.

Sorties de la ville et des champs. 1958.

Les Tiroirs de l'inconnu. 1960; as The Conscience of Love, translated by Norman Denny, 1962.

The Proverb and Other Stories, translated by Norman Denny. 1961.
Enjambées (stories). 1967.

L'Étrange, le merveilleux et le fantastique. 2 vols., 1983–84.

La Fille du shérif (stories), edited by Michel Lecureur. 1987.

Plays

Les Grandes Étapes, L'Image (produced 1933).

Vogue la galère (produced 1948). 1944.

Lucienne et le boucher. 1947.

Clérambard (produced 1950). 1950; as Clérambard, translated by Norman Denny, 1952.

La Tête des autres (produced 1952). 1952.

Les Quatre Vérités (produced 1954). 1954.

Les Sorcières de Salem, from a play by Arthur Miller. 1955.

Les Oiseaux de lune (produced 1955). 1956; as Moonbirds, translated by John Pauker, 1959.

La Mouche bleue (produced 1957). 1957.

Vu du pont, from a play by Arthur Miller. 1958.

Louisiane (produced 1961). 1961.

La Nuit de l'iguane, from a play by Tennessee Williams. 1962.

Les Maxibules (produced 1961). 1962.

Le Minotaure (produced 1966). With Consommation and La Convention Belzébir, 1967.

La Convention Belzébir (produced 1966). With Le Minotaure and Consommation, 1967.

Screenplays: Le Club des soupirants, 1936; Madame et le mort (adaptation by Aymé), 1942; Désert vivant, with others, 1954; Papa, maman, la bonne et moi, with others, 1954; Papa, maman, ma femme et moi, with others, 1955.

Other

Silhouette du scandale (essay). 1938.

Le Trou de la serrure (essays). 1946.

Le Confort intellectuel (essays). 1949.

Attente, Almanach du théâtre et du cinéma (autobiography). 1949.

Paris que j'aime, with Antoine Blondin, and Jean-Paul Clébert. 1956; as The Paris I Love, translated by Jean-Paul Clébert, 1963.

Images de l'amour. 1957.

L'Épuration et le délit d'opinion. 1968.

Marcel Aymé journaliste (articles), edited by M. Lecureur and Y.-A. Favre. 1988.

Du côté de chez Marianne: Chroniques 1933–1937, edited by Michel Lecureur. 1989.

*

Critical Studies: Marcel Aymé ou, Le Paysan de Paris by Jean Cathelin, 1958; Marcel Aymé insolite by Georges Robert and André Lioret, 1958; Introduction à Aymé by Pol Vandromme, 1960; The Comic World of Marcel Aymé by Dorothy Brodin, 1964; Marcel

Aymé et le merveilleux by Jean-Louis Dumont, 1970; The Short Stories of Marcel Aymé, 1980, and Marcel Aymé, 1987, both by Graham Lord; Écriture et dérision: Le Comique dans l'oeuvre littéraire de Marcel Aymé by Claude Dufresnoy, 1982; L'Oeuvre de Marcel Aymé, de la quête du père au triomphe de l'écrivain by Jean-Claude Veniel, 1990.

* * *

Marcel Aymé was born in 1902, in Joigny in the remote Jura region of France, the youngest of six children. Aymé's mother died when he was only two years old. His father placed the oldest children in boarding school and sent Marcel and his sister Suzanne to live with their maternal grandparents in the village of Villers-Robert near Dôle. He stayed there for six years and was then taken in by an aunt in Dôle. In later years he was always reluctant to talk much about his youth and childhood, but his philosophical attitudes in life (mainly characterized by sympathy for the underdog and a thirst for the truth underlying outward appearances) were shaped and formed during these early years. This experience of living in small towns and remote villages in close proximity to craftsmen and peasants would later have a strong influence on his work. What the sociologists call today "la France profonde" (the daily routine and belief system of provincial France which changes little over the decades as opposed to the instability and glitter of the Parisian spectacle), would become the stuff of much of his best work.

His first novel, Brûlebois, was followed by La Table-auxcrevés (The Hollow Field) and La Jument verte (The Green Mare). The action of each of these novels, set in his native Franche-Comté, portrays simple peasants and townspeople, republicans and clerics, humans and animals to convey his bittersweet view of life. These books use local linguistic terms and exploit regional folklore, including the marvellous and fantastic, to put across Aymé's essentially moderate conservative, commonsense view of life. La Vouivre (The Fable and the Flesh) is perhaps his best novel in this mode.

Aymé excelled in a number of different genres. Between 1926 and 1967, he wrote numerous novels and plays, three polemical essays and 83 short stories. He was also very active as a journalist throughout his career. Until 1944, the novel and short story were his preferred means of expression. But with the play Vogue la galère, written in the mid-1930s and published in 1944, his theatre career began. Astonishingly, Aymé never repeated himself. All of his works, especially the novels and plays, are quite different from each other.

In his novels, which dealt at first with rural people and then later with urban proletarians and sensitive political questions involving the politically potent Parisian bourgeoisie, Aymé sought to unmask hypocrisy, scandal, and the suppression of the truth. But when his novels showed how the Left could be as hypocritical as the Right, he began to find himself in trouble. His three novels of the 1930s and 1940s are unique in French literature and offer a revealing glimpse of what France was really like at this time. Travelingue (The Miraculous Barber), dealing with the era of the Popular Front, Le Chemin des écoliers (The Transient Hour), chronicling the early years of the Occupation, and Uranus (The Barkeep of Blémont), covering the end of the Occupation and Liberation, offer a view of these periods that is rich in complexity. Aymé's vision is a far cry from the simple-minded version presented in the press or, for that matter, by many academics. In the first of the three works Aymé sympathizes with the Left, but since he also applies the same moral yardstick in The Barkeep of Blémont, where he shows how the Communists and their Resistance friends simply replaced the Gestapo and the Wehrmacht after they came to power in 1944, he incurred the wrath of the politically powerful (The Barkeep of Blémont later became an internationally acclaimed film directed by Claude Béri in 1991). His essay Silhouette du scandale, published just before the war and generally overlooked at the time, can be read as an introduction to these novels. It lays bare the hypocrisy of successive governments of both Left and Right for the first 40 years of the century and is a masterpiece of understatement.

Since Aymé wrote and published in collaborationist newspapers during the war, the Comité National des Écrivains, largely dominated by Communists, resolved to settle accounts with him. Although he was not imprisoned, he was blacklisted. His fidelity to friends and personal courage were remarkable. He stood up for his friend Louis-Ferdinand Céline, as well as for the collaborationist writer Robert Brasillach, who was executed in February 1945 for having had incorrect political opinions during the war. Two years later, when Brasillach's brother-in-law, Maurice Bardèche, was censured for questioning the legality and fairness of the Nuremberg trials (Nuremberg; ou, La Terre promise, 1947), Aymé continued to support the principle that no writer should be punished for merely expressing an opinion. His voice was a lonely and courageous one at the time and, with the passage of time, we must admit largely a correct one. Aymé's courage in speaking out about the hypocrisy of the Left branded him as a voice of the Right. The tag has stuck with him ever since.

Aymé was unusually productive and successful as a short story writer. His 83 stories were published in seven main collections between 1932 and 1958, and he is widely recognized as one of the most important and versatile French short story writers of the 20th century. Like the novels, the stories treat rural and urban characters as well as the hypocrisy of the ruling classes. The style and tone of these pieces also vary widely, and include the use of dialectic terms and slang. Most successful of all are his children's stories built around the interaction of two little girls, Delphine and Marinette, with various representatives of the animal world.

After the war, a trip to the United States sponsored by Collier's magazine resulted in several stories that have never been studied seriously, but which reflect his reactions to American life and what Aymé took to be its materialism and hypocrisy ("Le Mendiant," "Louisiane," "La Mouche bleue").

The first volume of the critical edition of Aymé's novels and stories appeared in the prestigious Éditions de la Pléiade in 1991. Inclusion in the Pléiade series is the highest practical form of recognition that a writer can receive in France. Serious research on his work will be possible in the years ahead. Certain stories, like "Le Nouveau Passe-Muraille" and the war-time trilogy, are truly masterpieces. He is one of the outstanding French fiction writers of the 20th century.

—David O'Connell

B

BABEL, Isaak (Emmanuilovich)

---

Born: Odessa, Ukraine, 13 July 1894. Education: Educated in Nikolaev; Nicholas I Commercial School, Odessa, 1905–11; Institute of Financial and Business Studies, Kiev, later in Saratov, 1911–15, graduated 1915. Military Service: Served in the army, 1917–18. Family: Married Evgeniia Gronfein in 1919, one daughter; also one daughter by Antonina Pirozhkova. Career: In St. Petersburg from 1918: worked on Gor'kii's, q.v., magazine Novaya Zhizn' [New Life], 1918; editor, Ukrainian State Publishing House, 1919–20; news service correspondent with First Cavalry on the Polish campaign, 1920, and correspondent for Tiflis newspaper in Caucasus; in Moscow from 1923; secretary of the village soviet at Molodenovo, 1930; out of favour in the 1930s, and arrested, 1939; manuscripts confiscated, 1939. His exact fate remains unknown; probably shot soon after arrest. Posthumously cleared of charges against him, 1956. Died: (allegedly) 17 March 1941.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Collected Stories, edited and translated by Walter Morison. 1955. Izbrannoe [Selected Works]. 1957; another edition, 1966. Detstvo i drugie rasskazy [Childhood and Other Stories], edited by Efraim Sicher. 1979. Izbrannye proizvedeniia [Selected Works]. 2 vols., 1988. Sochineniia [Works], edited by A.N. Pirozhkova. 2 vols., 1990. Collected Stories, translated by David McDuff. 1994. The Complete Works of Isaac Babel, edited by Nathalie Babel, translated with notes by Peter Constantine. 2002.

Fiction

Rasskazy [Stories]. 1925. Konarmiiia (stories). 1926; revised edition, 1931; edited by C.D. Luck, 1994; as Red Cavalry, translated by N. Helstein, 1929; also translated by John Harland, 1929. Bluzhdaiushchie zvezdy: Rasskaz dlia kino [Wandering Stars: A Cine-Story]. 1926. Istoriia moei golubiatni [The Story of My Dovecote]. 1926. Benia Krik: Kinopovest. 1926; as Benia Krik: A Film-Novel, translated by Ivor Montague and S.S. Nolbandov, 1935. Korol' [The King]. 1926. Odesskie rasskazy [Odessa Stories]. 1931. Benya Krik, The Gangster, and Other Stories, edited by Avrahm Yarmolinsky. 1948. Lyubka the Cossack and Other Stories, edited and translated by Andrew R. MacAndrew. 1963. The Lonely Years 1925–29: Unpublished Stories and Private Correspondence, edited by Nathalie Babel, translated by Max Hayward and Andrew R. MacAndrew. 1964. You Must Know Everything: Stories 1915–1937, edited by Nathalie Babel, translated by Max Hayward. 1969.

The Forgotten Prose, edited and translated by Nicholas Stroud. 1978; as Zabytyi Babel, 1979.

Plays

Zakat (produced 1927). 1928; as Sunset, translated by Raymond Rosenthal and Mirra Oinsburg, in Noonday 3, 1960. Mariia (produced 1964). 1935; as Marya, translated by Michael Glenny and Harold Shukman, in Three Soviet Plays, edited by Glenny, 1966.

Other

1920 Diary, edited and with introduction and notes by Carol J. Avins, translated by H.T. Willetts. 1995. At His Side: The Last Years of Isaac Babel by A.N. Pirozhkova, translated by Anne Frydman and Robert L. Busch. 1996.

*

Critical Studies: The Art of Isaac Babel by Patricia Carden, 1972; Isaak Babel by Richard W. Hallett, 1972; Isaac Babel, Russian Master of the Short Story by James E. Falen, 1974; An Investigation of Composition and Theme in Babel's Literary Cycle "Konarmija" by Ragna Grøngaard, 1979; Isaac Babel's Red Cavalry by Carol Luplow, 1982; Metaphor in Babel's Short Stories by Danuta Mendelsohn, 1982; "Art as Metaphor, Epiphany, and Aesthetic Statement: The Short Stories of Babel," in Modern Language Review, 1982, "The Road to a Red Cavalry: Myth and Mythology in the Works of Babel," in Slavonic and East European Review, 1982, and Style and Structure in the Prose of Isaak Babel, 1986, all by Efraim Sicher; The Place of Space in Narration: A Semiotic Approach to the Problem of Literary Space, with an Analysis of the Role of Space in Isaak Babel's Konarmija by J.J. von Baak, 1983; Isaac Babel by Milton Ehre, 1986; Isaac Babel edited by Harold Bloom, 1987; The Field of Honour by C.D. Luck, 1987; Procedures of Montage in Isaak Babel's Red Cavalry by Marc Schreurs, 1989; Isaak Babel and His Film Work by Jerry Heil, 1990; "A Poetic Inversion: The Non-Dialogic Aspect in Isaac Babel's Red Cavalry" by David K. Danow, in Modern Language Review, 86(4), 1991; The Dionysian Art of Isaac Babel by Robert Mann, 1994; Red Cavalry: A Critical Companion, edited by Charles Rougle, 1996.

* * *

Isaak Babel is, along with Zamiatin and Olesha, an outstanding exponent of short prose of the decade or so in which, following 1917, modernist experimentation flourished in Soviet Russian fiction.

Babel's work is notable for its treatment of Jewish and revolutionary themes and for its cultivation of the "cycle" form: an open-ended series of short stories, linked by theme, character, setting, and imagery, with additions being made at will—e.g., that of "Argamak" (1931) to Konarmiiia (Red Cavalry), 1926, with "The Kiss" (1937) and further (unwritten) stories possibly being intended for the same sequence.

Red Cavalry, Babel's best known work, deals by unusual techniques of snapshot and montage (Babel enjoyed close associations with the film industry) with the fortunes of Budenny's First Cavalry in the Polish campaign of 1920. A series of 35 "miniatures" examines the nature and ethics of personal and revolutionary violence, portraying a Jewish intellectual's quest for true fraternity amid Cossack fellow soldiers and assorted Jews, Poles, and peasants. Violence, sex, art, and nature are treated in rhythmic prose and striking images. Ambiguity, paradox and polarity, and the use of subsidiary narrators are key devices. Actions and perceptions are presented subjectively in an interplay of varied points of view underlined by use of metaphor; interpretations and judgements are left to the reader.

Other, less complete, main cycles ("definitively" ordered by Sicher in his 1979 edition) are set in the Jewish "Moldavanka" of Odessa. Odesskie rasskazy [Odessa Stories] features the exploits of Benia Krik (modelled on the real Mishka-Iaponchik), while the "early childhood" series, collected under the title Istoriia moei golubiatni [The Story of My Dovecote], concentrate on Jewish upbringing amid the pogroms of 1905.

The degree of overall unity varies, as much for biographical as for artistic reasons. Red Cavalry, with its clear time span and largely sequential plot development, can be viewed as an episodic modernist novel (Mendelson, 1982) or as "a 20th-century version of a Renaissance novella cycle" (Lowe, 1982). Important "independent" stories are "Line and Colour" (1923) and "Guy de Maupassant" (1932). However, the all-pervading presence of a purportedly autobiographical or obviously Babelian narrator suggests the possibility of considering Babel's short fictional oeuvre as a unit—a single collective "super-cycle."

Compression, to achieve a close organic unity of form and content, is the essence of Babel's compositional method. Plays and film scenarios apart, few of Babel's stories exceed ten pages. "A truly cautious master" (Mendelson), Babel re-worked his stories tirelessly, pruning every spare word, tightening paragraphing and punctuation. The resulting language is frequently called "a collision of styles"; words and their associations are foregrounded rather than the ideas behind them, while Babel's constant switches in modes of narrative discourse create a calculated role for the reader.

Babel was again neglected in the Soviet Union during the Brezhnev period, no edition of his works appearing after 1966. However, recent western studies (notably by Mendelson and Sicher) have advanced Babel criticism onto promising new ground, while the Gorbachev era supplied a two-volume "Selected Works" in 1988.

—Neil Cornwell

See the essay on Red Cavalry.

BACHMANN, Ingeborg

Born: Klagenfurt, Austria, 25 June 1926. Spent her childhood in Carinthia. Education: Educated at co-educational high school until 1938, girls' school, 1938–44; studied philosophy at Graz, Innsbruck, and Vienna universities, Ph.D. in philosophy 1950. Family: Lived with the composer, Hans Werner Henze, 1953–56; the writer, Max Frisch, q.v., 1958–62. Career: Script writer and editor, Rot-Weiss-Rot radio station, Vienna, 1951–53; freelance writer in Ischia, Naples, Rome, and Munich, 1953–57, visited the United States in 1955; lived in Rome and Zurich, 1958–62, West Berlin, 1963–65, Rome, from 1965; visiting lecturer on poetics, Frankfurt University, 1959–60. Awards: Gruppe 47 prize, 1953; Culture Circle of German Industry literature award, 1955; Bremen prize, 1957; Association of German Critics literary award, 1961; Büchner prize, 1964; Great Austrian State prize, 1968; Wildgans prize, 1971. Died: 17 October 1973.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Werke, edited by Christine Koschel, Inge von Weidenbaum, and Clemens Münster. 4 vols., 1978.

Sämtliche Erzählungen. 1980.

Sämtliche Gedichte. 1983.

In the Storm of Roses: Selected Poems, edited and translated by Mark Anderson. 1986.

Selected Prose and Drama by Ingeborg Bachmann and Christa Wolf, edited by Patricia A. Herminhouse. 1998.

Verse

Die gestundete Zeit. 1953.

Anrufung des grossen Bären. 1956.

Gedichte: Eine Auswahl. 1966.

Die Gedichte. 1980.

Fiction

Das dreissigste Jahr (stories). 1961; revised edition 1966; as The Thirtieth Year, translated by Michael Bullock, 1964.

Malina. 1971; as Malina, translated by Philip Boehm, 1989.

Simultan (stories). 1972; as Three Paths to the Lake, translated by Mary Fran Gilbert, 1972.

Undine geht: Erzählungen. 1973; as "Undine Departs," translated by Cedric Hentschel, in German Short Stories, 1975.

Meisterzählungen. 1974.

Der Tag des Friedens. 1976.

Der Fall Franza. Requiem für Fanny Goldmann. 1979; as The Book of Franza and Requiem for Fanny Goldmann, translated with introduction by Peter Filkins, 1999.

Die Fähre. 1982.

Plays

Der Idiot, music by Hans Werner Henze (produced 1952). 1955.

Der gute Gott von Manhattan. 1958.

Der Prinz von Homburg (opera libretto), music by Hans Werner Henze, from the play by Heinrich von Kleist (produced 1960). 1960.

Der junge Lord (opera libretto), music by Hans Werner Henze (produced 1965). 1965; as The Young Milord, translated by Eugene Walter, 1967.

Die Hörspiele (radio plays; includes Ein Geschäft mit Träumen; Die Zikaden; Der gute Gott von Manhattan). 1976.

Radio Plays: Ein Geschäft mit Träumen, 1952; Das Herrschaftshaus, 1952; Herrenhaus, 1954; Die Zikaden, 1955; Der gute Gott von Manhattan, 1958.

Other

Jugend in einer österreichischen Stadt (memoir). 1961.

Gedichte, Erzählungen, Hörspiele, Essays. 1964.

Ein Ort für Zufälle. 1965.

Frankfurter Vorlesungen: Probleme zeitgenössischer Dichtung. 1980.

Die Wahrheit ist dem Menschen zumutbar: Essays, Reden, kleinere Schriften. 1981.

Das Honditschkreuz. 1983.

Wir müssen wahre Sätze finden: Gespräche und Interviews, edited by Christine Koschel and Inge von Weidenbaum. 1983.

Liebe: Dunkler Erdteil. Gedichte aus den Jahren 1942–1967. 1984.

Anrufung der grossen Dichterin (essays). 1984.

Translator, Gedichte: italienisch und deutsch, by Giuseppe Ungaretti. 1961.

Translator, with others, Italienische Lyrik des 20. Jahrhunderts, edited by Christine Wolter. 1971.

Translator, with others, Freude der Schiffbrüche, edited by Christine Wolter. 1977.

*

Bibliography: Ingeborg Bachmann: Eine Bibliographie by Otto Bareiss and Frauke Ohloff, 1978.

Critical Studies: Ingeborg Bachmann: Die Auflösung der Figur in ihrem Roman Malina by Ellen Summerfield, 1976; Malina. Versuch einer Interpretation des Romans von Ingeborg Bachmann by Robert Steiger, 1978; Women Writers—The Divided Self: Analysis of Novels by Christa Wolf, Ingeborg Bachmann, Doris Lessing and Others by Inta Ezergailis, 1982; Der dunkle Schatten, dem ich schon seit Anfang folge. Ingeborg Bachmann. Vorschläge zu einer neuen Lektüre des Werks edited by Hans Höller, 1982; Ingeborg Bachmann by Kurt Bartsch, 1988; Ingeborg Bachmann by Peter Beicken, 1988; The Voice of History: An Exegesis of Selected Short Stories from Ingeborg Bachmann's Das dreissigste Jahr and Simultan from the Perspective of Austrian History by Lisa de Serbine Bahrway, 1989; Understanding Ingeborg Bachmann by Karen R. Achberger, 1995; Waking the Dead: Correspondences Between Walter Benjamin's Concept of Remembrance and Ingeborg Bachmann's Ways of Dying by Karen Remmler, 1996; Thunder Rumbling at My Heels: Tracing Ingeborg Bachmann, edited and with introduction by Gudrun Brokoph-Mauch, 1998; The Split Scene of Reading: Nietzsche/Derrida/Kafka/Bachmann by Sabine I. Golz, 1998.

* * *

Ingeborg Bachmann first made her name as a poet with the collections Die gestundete Zeit [The Respite] and Anrufung des grossen Bären [Invocation of the Great Bear]. Her poems reveal discontent with present time and a utopian vision of a different world, often conveyed through metaphor or paradox; an awareness of the limitations imposed by language; and a sense of the precariousness of human existence, reflecting the influence of existentialism on her writing in the 1950s, as in the poem “The Respite”:

Do not look round
Tie your shoelace
Drive back the dogs.
Throw the fishes into the sea.
Put out the lupins!
A harder time is coming.

(translated by Michael Hamburger)

In later years, Bachmann expounded her ideas mainly in prose fiction. Important themes are individual identity, possibilities for change, and the role of language. In the title story of the collection Das dreissigste Jahr (The Thirtieth Year), a man, in the year preceding his 30th birthday, decides it is time for a new departure. He relinquishes his home and his job and sets out to see the world and to find himself, realizing that this may be his last chance to make substantial changes to the pattern of his life. Eventually he returns, having realized, in Bachmann's famous formulation, that there can be “no new world without a new language.” The insight that substantive change is not possible, together with a near escape from death, results in increased awareness of his own existence and in acceptance of life as it is. Reluctance to admit human imperfection, and the final acknowledgement of it, is also a theme of the story “Everything.” A father attempts to prevent his son from acquiring a corrupt colloquial language, on the assumption that if the child developed his own language instead he would retain his original purity, innocence, and natural creativity. However, far from being innocent, his son contains the seeds of moral rotteness, as is conveyed metaphorically by his death caused by a brain tumour.

In most of these early stories the narrative centres on a male character, but there are two significant exceptions which address themselves specifically to women's predicament. “Undine geht” (“Undine Departs”) reworks the myth of the water spirit Undine, who was permitted to join her male lover on land only if she accepted great physical suffering. Bachmann treats Undine's torment as a metaphor for women's suffering at the hands of men. In “A Step Towards Gomorrah,” the problem of women's relations with men is made more explicit, when Charlotte, an artist, is presented with the possibility of experiencing new and different types of relationships. When a younger woman, Mara, attempts to lure her into a sexual relationship, Charlotte momentarily glimpses an alternative to her present problems and constraints. However, this possibility remains merely theoretical and the story ends, like other stories in the collection, in resignation.

In the novel Malina, the question of the identity of a woman artist becomes central and is presented in a narrative of great structural complexity. From a first-person perspective, the novel depicts a woman writer's struggle with various dimensions of patriarchal society. Her emotional life is elucidated through her relationship with her elusive lover, Ivan; her intellectual struggle is represented by the mysterious figure of Malina, her alter ego, with whom she shares her flat. The conflicting aspects represented by these two men are necessary to her survival as an artist. In the central section of the novel, entitled “The Third Man,” another dimension is invoked, as the narrator experiences nightmares about her father—he appears in the guise of a Nazi doctor and mistreats her as one of his victims. The problem of the woman artist is thereby associated with the idea of oppression in a historical and social context. Finally, in a metaphorically suggestive ending, the narrator, abandoned by Ivan and maltreated by Malina and her “father,” disappears “into the wall,” as if transcending natural boundaries, but with little suggestion that this process leads in a more positive direction.

The later collection of stories Simultan (Three Paths to the Lake) depicts female figures from different facets of Viennese society. In the title story, Bachmann again takes up the problem of language and identity, now placed in a professional context. The central figure, Nadja, an interpreter, is estranged from her Viennese roots and her native language by her profession, which involves her constantly using other people’s words and foreign languages, but rarely her own. This predicament acts as a metaphor for her crisis about her own identity, something which she partially succeeds in resolving when she takes a holiday with a fellow Viennese and is enabled to confront emotional issues in her own language. Her new insight is however achieved at considerable cost, as she is compelled to accept her professional and personal limitations. The wider perspective given by this analysis of professional life is also apparent in “The Barking,” in which a psychiatrist, Leo Jordan, appears to use professional authority and jargon as a means of refusing to face his own complicity regarding the Nazi past. This attitude towards society at large is reflected in Jordan’s lack of responsibility towards his own family. Bachmann’s critique emerges through the relationship which develops between his mother and his wife, who, though victims of his behaviour, also connive with it.

Apart from these major works, Bachmann left an unfinished novel, Der Fall Franza [Franza’s Case], in which she attempts to relate the oppression of women by men to the processes underlying imperialism and fascism. The wide range of her writing also includes some successful radio plays broadcast in the 1950s. In partnership with the composer Hans Werner Henze, she wrote opera libretti, including Der Prinz von Homburg, from the play by Heinrich von Kleist. Her essays on literary and philosophical topics, collected after her death under the title Die Wahrheit ist dem Menschen zumutbar [Truth Can Be Expected], both shed light on her own writing and have been influential to other writers, notably the East German Christa Wolf.

—Juliet Wigmore

BAI JUYI

Also known as Po Chü-i. Pseudonym: Xiangshan. Born: Xinzheng, Henan province, China, in 772. Education: Passed provincial examinations in 799 and imperial examinations in 800; also received instruction at a Buddhist monastery. Family: Married. Career: Began career as an imperial official in Chang’an (the capital city), 801; moved to a minor county post, 806; passed State exams, and returned to Chang’an as official censor, 808; resided at Xiagui, in mourning for his mother, 811–14; exiled from Chang’an, after his criticism of official corruption, 815, but soon rehabilitated; recalled to Chang’an, 820, and was then appointed to various official portfolios: Supervisor of Royal Documents, 820, Prefect of Hanzhou, 822, Prefect of Suzhou, 825, Chief Magistrate, Henan province, 831, and Minister of Justice, 842; retired from official posts, 842. Member: Hanlin Literary Academy, 807. Died: 846.

PUBLICATIONS

Verse

Baishi Changqing ji [Collected Works]. Edited by Wang Liming (includes 2,900 poems), 1702; modern edition, 4 vols., 1979; as Translations from Po Chü-i’s Collected Works, translated by Howard S. Levy, 4 vols., 1971–75; selections in: 170 Chinese Poems, 1918, and More Translations from the Chinese, 1919, both translated by Arthur Waley (reissued together as Chinese Poems, 1946); In the Jade Mountain, translated by W. Bynner and Kiang Kang-hu, 1929; The Everlasting Woe, translated by Tai Jen, 1939; The White Pony, translated by R. Payne, 1949; Gems of Chinese Literature, translated by A. Giles, 1965; The Selected Poems of Po Chü-i, translated by David Hinton, 1999; Po Chü-i: Selected Poems, translated by Burton Watson, 2000.

Other

Po Chü-i as a Censor: His Memorials Presented to Emperor Hsien-tsung During the Years 808–810, translated by Eugene Feifel, 1961.

*

Critical Study: The Life and Times of Po Chü-i by Arthur Waley, 1949.

* * *

Poetry flourished during the Chinese Tang dynasty, and among 2,000 or so Tang poets, Bai Juyi enjoys world renown and ranks next to Du Fu and Li Bai.

Bai Juyi was born into a minor official’s family and was a precocious boy. As he explained in a letter to his friend Yuan Zhen, he understood some written characters at the age of six or seven months and had mastered Chinese phonology when he was only nine years old. As a teenager he took to writing, and his poem “The Grass on Ancient Plain,” written around the age of 15, won him considerable fame. In his early days he moved from place to place with his father, who was transferred at the order of the Emperor. Bai Juyi’s life spanned the reign of six emperors, and from childhood he witnessed the political upheaval and decline of the once strong and unified Tang Empire. At 12 he had to leave Central China for South China to seek refuge from the war. Here he tried unsuccessfully to win an official post through the civil examination but instead won fourth place in the highest imperial court examination at the age of 29 and was given a minor post in a county in 806. Disappointed as he was, it gave him opportunity to see the corruption of the Tang bureaucrats and the sufferings of the common people. During that short period he wrote well-known poems such as Chang hen ge (The Everlasting Woe) and “Watching the Wheat-Reapers.” He was summoned to Chang’an, the capital, in 807 and appointed, after further examinations, to various posts in the court. This gave him access to the Emperor and enabled him to experience at close quarters the political schemes and extravagant life at the palace. His duty was to give advice and present memorials to the Emperor, and he wrote into his poems what the memorials could not express in explicit terms. Most of these poems are included in what he called “satires”: his satirical poems are exposés of the corruption and decadence of government officials. In his letter to Yuan Zhen he claimed, “When the influential nobles and Emperor’s favourites at court heard my Songs of Qin, they changed their countenance, looking at one another; when the persons holding office heard my poem ‘Delightful Garden,’ they sighed; when the chiefs of the army heard my poem ‘Lodged in Purple Tower Mountain Village,’ they gnashed their teeth in hatred.” His suggestion for redressing malpractice and corruption offended court officials and even the Emperor; consequently he lost favour and was banished from the capital on charges made up by his opponents. This was the turning point in his life and he asked to leave to avoid the conflicts among the bureaucrats, and he took up the governorship first in Hangzhou, and later in Suzhou. In later years he pursued a reclusive lifestyle until his death.

Bai Juyi was a prolific poet. His extant poems, about 3,000, outnumber the works of any other Tang poet. He classified his works as poems of satire, leisure, sentiment, and miscellaneous lüshi (“standard” poems with eight lines, each having five or seven characters, and with a strict tonal and rhyme pattern). However, this classification was not strictly observed. He attached great importance to content in poetry. His “New Yuefu Ballads” and “Songs of Qin” are representative of satirical poems which, as he put it, “aim at remedying social faults and prevailing wrongs.” “The Charcoal-seller” describes the bitter life of a charcoal burner and exposes with fury the extortion of court officials: “A whole wagon of charcoal,/ more than a thousand catties! If the officials choose to take it away,/the woodman may not complain” (translated by Arthur Waley). “The Old Man with the Broken Arm” condemns the war imposed by Prime Minister Yang through the heartbreaking narrative of an old man who, at the age of 24, broke his arm with a huge stone in order to escape being conscripted. Among his poems of sentiment, “Chang hen ge” and “Piba xing” [Lute Song], the best-known of all his works, are facile in style and appealing in narrative. His leisure poems are lyric poetry written in his own style and tinged, sometimes, with Buddhism and Daoism. His miscellaneous lüshi account for about two-thirds of his poems, “The Grass on Ancient Plain” mentioned above being one of the representative works of this kind.

Bai was a poet of genius who inherited the legacy of classical Chinese literature and also learned from folk literature. On the other hand, he was creative and formed a distinctive style of his own. His language was plain, which helps to contribute much to his popularity. As he said in the aforementioned letter to Yuan Zhen, his poems were “inscribed on the walls of country schools, temples, inns, and travelling ships.” And Yuan Zhen confirmed in the “Preface to Bai Juyi’s Works” that Bai’s poems were widely read and frequently on the lips of kings, princes, concubines, ladies, and grooms. His poems were circulated in Japan and Korea during his lifetime and are said to have been copied and read by the then Japanese king. Indeed, he has enjoyed high national as well as international renown to this day.

—Binghong Lu

BALZAC, Honoré de

Born: Tours, France, 20 May 1799. Education: Educated at pension Le Guay-Pinel, Tours, 1804–07; Collège de Vendôme, 1807–13;

L’Institution Lepître, Paris, 1815; L’Institution Ganzer et Beuzelin, Paris, 1815–16; attended law lectures, the Sorbonne, Paris, baccalauréat of law 1819. Family: Married Mme. Hanska (Eve Rzewuska) in 1850. Career: Clerk for M. Guillonnet de Merville, 1816–18, and M. Passez, 1818–19; then writer, editor, magazine writer: obtained printer’s license, 1826–28; owner, La Chronique de Paris, 1835–36; editor, La Revue Parisienne, 1840. President, Société des Gens de Lettres, 1839. Awards: Chevalier, Légion d’honneur, 1845. Died: 18 August 1850.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Oeuvres complètes, edited by Marcel Bouteron and Henri Longnon. 40 vols., 1912–40.

La Comédie humaine, edited by Marcel Bouteron. 11 vols., 1951–58; revised edition, edited by Pierre-George Castex and Pierre Citron, 1976–.

The Human Comedy, edited by George Saintsbury. 40 vols., 1895–98. Works. 1901.

Fiction

L’Héritage de Birague, with Le Poitevin de Saint-Alme and Etienne Arago. 1822.

Jean-Louis; ou, La Fille trouvée, with Le Poitevin de Saint-Alme. 1822.

Clotilde de Lusignan; ou, Le beau juif. 1822.

Le Centenaire; ou, Les Deux Beringheld. 1822; as Le Sorcier, in Oeuvres complètes de Horace de Saint-Aubin, 1837.

Le Vicaire des Ardennes. 1822.

La Dernière Fée; ou, La Nouvelle Lampe merveilleuse. 1823.

Annette et le criminel. 1824.

Wann-Chlore. 1825; as Jane la pâle, in Oeuvres complètes, 1836.

Le Dernier Chouan; ou, Le Bretagne au 1800. 1829; revised edition, as Les Chouans; ou, Le Bretagne en 1799, 1834; as Le Chouan, 1838; as The Chouans, translated by George Saintsbury, 1890.

Mémoires pour servir à l’histoire de la révolution française, with Lheritier de l’Ain. 1829.

La Physiologie du mariage; ou, Méditations de philosophie éclectique. 1829; as The Physiology of Marriage, 1904; with introduction by Sharon Marcus, 1997.

Scènes de la vie privée. 1830; enlarged edition, 1832.

Le Peau de chagrin. 1831; edited by S. de Sasy, 1974; as The Magic Skin, 1888; as The Wild Ass’s Skin, translated by Ellen Marriage, in The Human Comedy, 1895–98; as The Heartless Woman, translated by Owen Snell, 1945; as The Fatal Skin, translated by Cedar Paul, 1946.

Romans et contes philosophiques. 1831.

Contes bruns, with Philarète Chasles and Charles Rabou. 1832.

Les Salmigondis: Contes de toutes les couleurs. 1832; as La Comtesse à deux maris, in Scènes de la vie privée, 1835; as Le Colonel Chabert, in Comédie humaine, 1844; as Colonel Chabert, translated by Carol Cosman, 1997.

Les Cent Contes drôlatiques. 3 (of an intended 10) vols., 1832–37; Quatrième dixain (fragments), 1925; as Contes drôlatiques, translated by George R. Sims, 1874; as Droll Stories, translated anonymously, 1948; Alec Brown, 1958.

Nouveaux contes philosophiques. 1832.

- Le Médecin de campagne*. 1833; excerpt, as Histoire de Napoléon, 1833; edited by Patrick Barthier, 1974.
- Études de mœurs au XIXe siècle*. 12 vols., 1833–37; includes reprints and the following new works:
- La Fleur des pois*. 1834.
- La Recherche de l'absolu*. 1834; as Balthazar; or, Science and Love, translated by William Robson, 1859; as The Alchemist, 1861; as The Quest of the Absolute, translated by Ellen Marriage, in The Human Comedy, 1895–98; as The Tragedy of a Genius, translated by Henry Blanchamp, 1912.
- Eugénie Grandet*. 1833; as Eugenie Grandet, translated anonymously, 1859; several subsequent translations including by E.K. Brown, with Père Goriot, 1950; Marion Ayton Crawford, 1955; Henry Reed, 1964; as Eugénie Grandet, translated by Sylvia Raphael, 1990.
- La Femme abandonnée*. 1833.
- La Grenadière*. 1833.
- L'Illustré Gaudissart*. 1833.
- Les Marana*. 1834.
- Histoire des treize*. 1834–35; as History of the Thirteen, translated by Herbert J. Hunt, 1974; translated in part by Lady Knutsford, as The Mystery of the Rue Soly, 1894; The Girl with the Golden Eyes, translated by Ernest Dowson, 1896; The Duchess of Langeais, translated by D. Mitford, 1946.
- La Vieille Fille*. 1837.
- Illusions perdues* (part I: Les Deux Poètes). 1837.
- Le Père Goriot*. 1835; as Daddy Goriot, translated anonymously, 1860; as Père Goriot, translated 1886, and by E.K. Brown, with Eugenie Grandet, 1950; as Old Goriot, translated by Ellen Marriage, in The Human Comedy, 1895–98, and by Marion Ayton Crawford, 1951; as Old Man Goriot, translated by Joan Charles, 1949, and by Minot Sedgwick, 1950; as Le Père Goriot, translated by A.J. Kraillsheimer, 1991; translated by Burton Raffel, 1994.
- Le Livre mystique* (includes Louis Lambert and Séraphita). 1835; translated as Louis Lambert and Seraphita, 2 vols., 1889.
- Études philosophiques*. 20 vols., 1835–40; includes reprints and the following new works:
- Un drame au bord de la mer*. 1835.
- Melmoth réconcilié*. 1836.
- L'Interdiction*. 1836.
- La Messe de l'Athée*. 1837.
- Facino cane*. 1837.
- Les Martyrs ignorés*. 1837.
- Le Secret des Ruggieri*. 1837.
- L'Enfant maudit*. 1837.
- Une passion dans le désert*. 1837.
- Le Lys dans la vallée*. 1836; as The Lily of the Valley, translated by Lucienne Hill, 1891.
- L'Excommuniée*, with Auguste de Belloy, in Oeuvres complètes de Horace de Saint-Aubin. 1837.
- La Femme supérieure*. 1837; as Les Employés, 1865; as Bureaucracy, 1889; as The Bureaucrats, translated by Charles Foulkes, 1993.
- Histoire de César Birotteau*. 1838; as History of the Grandeur and Downfall of Cesar Birotteau, 1860; as The Bankrupt, translated by Frances Frenaye, 1959; as Cesar Birotteau, translated by Robin Buss, 1993; also translated by Graham Robb, 1994.
- La Femme supérieure, La Maison Nucingen, La Torpille*. 1838.
- Les Rivalités en province*. 1838; as Le Cabinet des antiques (includes Gamara), 1839; as The Jealousies of a Country Town, in The Human Comedy, 1895–98.
- Gambara; Adieu*. 1839; translated as Gambara, in The Human Comedy, 1895–98.
- Une fille d'Eve* (includes Massimilla Doni). 1839; as A Daughter of Eve and Massimilla Doni, in The Human Comedy, 1895–98.
- Un grand homme de province à Paris (Illusions perdues II)*. 1839; as A Great Man of the Provinces in Paris, 1893.
- Béatrix; ou, Les Amours forcées*. 1839; edited by Madeleine Fergeaud, 1979; as Beatrix, translated by Rosamund and Simon Harcourt-Smith, 1895.
- Pierrette*. 1840; translated as Pierrette, 1892.
- Physiologie de l'employé*. 1841.
- Physiologie du rentier de Paris et de province*, with Arnould Frémy. 1841.
- Le Curé de village*. 1841; as The Country Parson, translated anonymously, in The Human Comedy, 1895–98.
- Oeuvres complètes: La Comédie humaine*, 20 vols., 1842–53; includes reprints and the following new works:
- Albert Savarus*. 1842; as Albert Savarus, translated by Ellen Marriage, 1892, and by Kathleen Raine, 1951.
- Autre étude de femme*. 1842.
- Illusions perdues* (part III). 1843; parts I and III translated as Lost Illusions, 1893.
- Esquisse d'homme d'affaires; Gaudissart II; Les Comédiens sans le savoir*. 1846.
- Un épisode sous la terre; L'Envers de l'histoire contemporain; Z; Marcas*. 1846; L'Envers . . . translated as Love, 1893.
- Ursule Mirouët*. 1842; as Ursula, translated by Clara Bell, 1891; also translated by Donald Adamson, 1976.
- Scènes de la vie privée et publique des animaux*. 1842.
- Mémoires de deux jeunes mariées*. 1842; as Memoirs of Two Young Married Women, 1894; as Two Young Birds, translated anonymously, 1902.
- Une ténébreuse affaire*. 1842; edited by René Guise, 1973; as The Gondreville Mystery, 1898, also translated by Gerard Hopkins, 1958; as A Murky Business, translated by Herbert J. Hunt, 1972.
- Les Deux Frères*. 1842; as Un ménage de garçon en province, in Comédie humaine, 1843; as La Rabouilleuse, in Oeuvres complètes, 1912; edited by René Guise, 1972; as The Two Brothers, 1887; as A Bachelor's Establishment, in The Human Comedy, 1895–98; as The Bachelor's House, translated by Francis Frenaye, 1956; as The Black Sheep, translated by Donald Adamson, 1970.
- Un début dans la vie* (includes La Fausse Maîtresse). 1844.
- Catherine de Médicis expliquée; Le Martyr calviniste*. 1845; translated as Catherine de' Medici, 1894.
- Honorine* (includes Un prince de la Bohême). 1845.
- Splendeurs et misères des courtisanes: Esther*. 1845; as A Harlot's Progress, in The Human Comedy, 1895–98; as A Harlot High and Low, translated by Rayner Heppenstall, 1970.
- La Lune de miel*. 1845.
- Petites misères de la vie conjugale*. 1845–46; as The Petty Annoyances of Married Life, 1861.
- Un drame dans les prisons*. 1847.
- Le Provincial à Paris* (includes Gillette, Le Rentier, El Verdugo). 1847.
- Les Parents pauvres* (includes La Cousine Bette and Le Cousin Pons). 1847–48; as Poor Relations, translated by Philip Kent, 1880; as Les Parents pauvres, translated by James Waring, 1991; as Cousin Pons, 1886; as Cousin Betty, 1888; as Cousin Bette, translated by Kathleen Raine, 1948, and by Marion Ayton Crawford, 1965.
- La Dernière Incarnation de Vautrin*. 1848.

Le Député d'Arcis, completed by Charles Rabou. 1854; as The Deputy of Arcis, 1896.
Les Paysans, completed by Mme. Balzac. 1855; as Sons of the Soil, 1890; as The Peasantry, in The Human Comedy, 1895–98.
Les Petits Bourgeois, completed by Charles Rabou. 1856; as The Lesser Bourgeoisie, 1896; as The Middle Classes, 1898.
Sténie; ou, Les Erreurs philosophiques, edited by A. Prioult. 1936.
La Femme auteur et autres fragments inédits, edited by le Vicomte de Lovenjoul. 1950.
Mademoiselle du Vissard, edited by Pierre-George Castex. 1950.
Selected Short Stories. 1977.
Gillette; or, the Unknown Masterpiece, translated by Anthony Rudolf. 1988; as The Unknown Masterpiece, translated by Charles Hobson, 1993.

Plays

Vautrin (produced 1840). 1840; translated as Vautrin, in Works, 1901.
Les Ressources de Quinola (produced 1842). 1842; as The Resources of Quinola, in Works, 1901.
Paméla Giraud (produced 1843). 1843; translated as Pamela Giraud, in Works, 1901.
La Marâtre (produced 1848). 1848; as The Stepmother, in Works, 1901, also translated by Edith Saunders, 1951.
Le Faiseur (produced 1849). 1851; translated as Mercadet, in Works, 1901.
L'École des ménages, edited by le Vicomte de Lovenjoul (produced 1910). 1907.

Other

Du droit d'aïnesse. 1824.
Histoire impartiale des Jésuites. 1824.
Code des gens honnêtes; ou, L'Art de ne pas être dupe des fripons. 1825.
Mémoires de Mme. la Duchesse d'Abrantes, with the duchess. vol. 1 only, 1831.
Maximes et pensées de Napoléon. 1838.
Traité de la vie élégante. 1853.
Lettres à l'étrangère (to Mme. Hanska). 4 vols., 1899–1950.
Cahiers balzacien, edited by Marcel Bouteron. 8 vols., 1927–28.
Le Catéchisme social, edited by Bernard Guyon. 1933.
Traité de la prière, edited by Philippe Bertault. 1942.
Journaux à la mer, edited by Louis Jaffard. 1949.
Correspondance, edited by Roger Pierrot. 5 vols., 1960–68.
 Editor, Oeuvres complètes, by La Fontaine. 1826.
 Editor, Oeuvres complètes, by Molière. 1826.

*

Bibliography: A Balzac Bibliography and Index by W. Hobart Royce, 1929–30; Bibliography of Balzac Criticism by Mark W. Waggoner, 1990.

Critical Studies: Balzac and the Novel by Samuel G.A. Rogers, 1953; Balzac: A Biography, 1957, and Balzac's Comédie Humaine, 1959, both by Herbert J. Hunt; Balzac the European by Edward J. Oliver, 1959; Balzac and the Human Comedy by Philippe Bertault, translated by Richard Monges, 1963; Prometheus: The Life of Balzac by André Maurois, 1965; Balzac: An Interpretation of the Comédie Humaine by F.W.J. Hemmings, 1967; The Hero as Failure: Balzac and the Rubempré Cycle by Bernard N. Schilling, 1968; Balzac by V.S. Pritchett, 1973; Balzac's Comedy of Words by Martin Kanes, 1975; Balzac's Recurring Characters by Anthony Pugh, 1975; Balzac Criticism in France (1850–1900): The Making of a Reputation, 1976, Balzac: La Cousine Bette, 1980, and Balzac: Old Goriot, 1987, all by David Bellos; Balzac: Fiction and Melodrama, 1978, and Order of Mimesis: Balzac, Hugo, Baudelaire, Flaubert, 1988, both by Christopher Prendergast; Honoré de Balzac by Diana Festa-McCormack, 1979; Unwrapping Balzac: A Reading of "La Peau de chagrin" by Samuel Weber, 1979; Balzac: Illusions Perdues by Donald Adamson, 1981; Balzac and His Reader by Mary Susan McCarthy, 1982; Balzac and the French Revolution by Ronnie Butler, 1983; Balzac, James and Realist Novel by William W. Stone, 1983; Balzac and the Drama of Perspective: The Narrator in Selected Works of La Comédie humaine by Joan Dargan, 1985; Family Plots: Balzac's Narrative Generations by Janet L. Beizer, 1986; Honoré de Balzac: Eugénie Grandet by Arnold Saxton, 1987; Realism and the Drama of Reference: Strategies of Representation in Balzac, Flaubert and James by H. Meili Steele, 1988; The Golden Scapegoat: Portrait of the Jews in the Novels of Balzac by Frances Grodzinsky, 1989; Evolution, Sacrifice and Narrative: Balzac, Zola and Faulkner by Carol Colatrella, 1990; Balzacian Montage: Configuring La Comédie humaine by Allan H. Pasco, 1991; Paratextuality in Balzac's La Peau de chagrin/The Wild Ass's Skin by Jeri DeBois King, 1992; Dissolute Characters: Irish Literary History through Balzac, Sheridan, Le Fanu, Yeats, and Bowen by W.J. McCormack, 1993; Honoré de Balzac (in French) by Roger Pierrot, 1994; Balzac by Graham Robb, 1994; Balzac, edited and introduced by Michael Tilby, 1995; The Poetics of Death: The Short Prose of Kleist and Balzac by Beatrice Martina Guenther, 1996; Pen vs. Paintbrush: Girodet, Balzac and the Myth of Pygmalion in Postrevolutionary France by Alexandra K. Wettlaufer, 2001.

* * *

Honoré de Balzac's first sustained piece of writing was Cromwell, a stillborn historical tragedy in verse. Towards the end of his career he turned to drama once again, and it was probably not solely the need to raise some cash in a hurry that impelled him to do so. La Marâtre (The Stepmother), for instance, was well received by the critics in 1848, and after initial difficulties when first produced, the five-act melodrama Vautrin was a popular success at the Théâtre Porte-Saint-Martin. Yet though Balzac remained fascinated throughout his life by the drama of his age whose emphatic acting styles and tempestuous emotionality left their distinctive stamp on his style and imagination, it was not in the theatre that he was destined to make his mark. Instead we must look to his three sets of quasi-Rabelaisian Contes drôlatiques (Droll Stories), published between 1832 and 1837, and to his towering achievement, the teeming fictional world of La Comédie humaine (The Human Comedy), the creation of a lifetime devoted to writing, a work which though never carried through to completion encompasses upwards of 80 novels and tales.

The sheer scope of the enterprise is deeply impressive, even within the context of the enormous output of vast novels in the 19th century, and the audacity of transmuting the title of Dante's epic has been allowed to pass unchallenged, even though there are few obvious connections. A reliable census of Balzac's fictional world has established that it is peopled by over two thousand named characters. Nearly all are sharply individualized, by sex and, equally strongly, by social class, by temperament, appearance, mannerism, and speech habits. Many appear only fleetingly, but others are developed very fully, dominating the scene on occasion or else present as more or less shadowy background figures to events in which they do not play the primary role. A number of these characters, like some in Dickens and Dostoevskii, have made such an impact on the general consciousness that they have come to be regarded as having a status similar to that of historical personages, possessing individuality that seemingly transcends fiction. For a setting Balzac usually, though not exclusively, chose the period in French history just before the time at which he was writing. His characters stand before the backdrop of the French Revolution and the Empire, of the Restoration and the July Monarchy, an era of political turmoil and social upheaval that placed ordinary people under exceptional pressure and allowed unusual opportunities for outstanding individuals to develop their personalities to the full.

Balzac had a considerable number of major novels to his name before the grand concept of The Human Comedy dawned on him. Les Chouans (The Chouans) of 1829 reflected the current fashion for historical romance. That same year La Physiologie du mariage (The Physiology of Marriage) though not important in itself, marked the crucial decision to use the novel for the study of social conditions in relation to the individual. Eugénie Grandet and Le Père Goriot, two of Balzac's most popular novels, are evidence that he had indeed struck a rich vein, with observation and imagination combined in good proportion. But in the early 1830s he also began to perceive the possibility, indeed the necessity, of thinking not in terms of single novels but of sets of what he liked to think of as fictionalized studies of 19th-century French society. Slowly the idea crystallized, and in 1842 Balzac was ready to present his views, in somewhat oracular tones, in his famous Preface to The Human Comedy. In it he acknowledged his debt to Walter Scott who had raised the status of the novel by using it for the serious investigation of society in former times. The influences bearing on Balzac are not, however, just literary. He invokes the name of famous naturalists such as G.-L. Leclerc de Buffon and Geoffroy de Saint-Hilaire, and of mystical thinkers like Charles Bonnet, Emanuel Swedenborg, and L.-C. de Saint-Martin. What Balzac sought and found in their writings was some sort of corroboration of his intuitions of the unity of observed creation. In the rich variety of human life as he witnessed it there could, he believed, be perceived the working out of a single vital principle. His object became to present individual human beings as the products of the social forces bearing in on them just as biology was attempting to relate specialization and variation to environmental factors.

The pretension to using fiction as a tool for scientific analysis or even just demonstration is, of course, inadmissible, and despite Balzac's efforts to make his examination of society as comprehensive as possible and his mapping out The Human Comedy as "studies" of various aspects, the procedure inevitably lacks compelling experimental rigour. Though Balzac felt obliged to return to some of his earlier novels and make some changes, critics have, however, been ready to accept that the unifying vision emerged from the fiction, as a scientific observation might, and was not something deliberately imposed after the event. As early as 1834 Balzac had begun to employ the device of making the same character reappear in different novels, and the tendency to bring out patterns of continuity becomes more and more marked from then on. The Human Comedy is not a serial novel nor the chronicle of a family, but something more complex; it is a fictional world in which individual destinies may be best appreciated in wider perspectives. In his descriptions Balzac revealed himself as an observer of exceptional acumen. Yet to hail him primarily as a recorder of the life of his times is to diminish his achievement.

Though The Human Comedy represented a major step in the direction of Realism, Balzac is too much of a visionary to be thought of as a Realist. His prose style sometimes lacks elegance, and credibility is occasionally taxed by emotionality and improbability. These excesses are, it seems, inseparable from the vigour and vitality of his vision of human nature and the inescapable conflicts between the demonic forces that spur on mankind and the constraints of religion and the monarchy that alone may hold them in check.

Balzac's rank as a novelist was in question throughout his life. Only towards the end of the 19th century was it generally recognized that his importance, both as an observer and as an imaginative visionary, decisively outweighed a degree of clumsiness in execution and of coarseness in sensibility.

—Christopher Smith

See the essays on Cousin Bette, Eugenie Grandet, Lost Illusions, and Le Père Goriot.

BARBUSSE, Henri

Born: Asnières, France, 17 May 1873. Education: Educated at Collège Rollin, Paris; graduated 1895. Military Service: 1893–94; served in the French army infantry during World War I, invalided out, 1917: Croix de Guerre, 1915. Career: Worked in the civil service, Paris; contributor, Petit Parisien and Echo de Paris; founding editor, Clarté, 1917, and Monde, 1928; journalist and reviewer, L'Humanité, 1920s. Awards: Goncourt prize, 1917. Member: Involved in pacifist groups, Revue de la Paix and Paix par le Droit, 1903; founder member, Republican Association of War Veterans, 1917, and Clarté, 1919; member, Communist Party, 1923; president, Comité Mondial contre la Guerre et le Fascisme, 1933. Died: 30 August 1935.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

Les Suppliants. 1903.

L'Enfer. 1908; as The Inferno, translated by Edward O'Brien, 1913; as Inferno, translated by John Rodker, 1932; as Hell, translated by Robert Baldick, 1966.

Meissonier. 1911; as Meissonier, translated by Frederic Taber Cooper, 1912.

Nous autres. 1914; as We Others: Stories of Fate, Love and Pity, translated by Fitzwater Wray, 1918.

Le Feu: Journal d'une escouade. 1916; edited by Pierre Paraf, 1965; as Under Fire: The Story of a Squad, translated by Fitzwater Wray, 1917.

Clarté. 1919; as Light, translated by Fitzwater Wray, 1919.

L'Illusion. 1919.

Les Enchaînements. 2 vols., 1925; as Chains, translated by Stephen Haden Guest, 2 vols., 1925.

Verse

Pleureuses. 1895.

Other

- La Lueur dans l'abîme*. 1920.
Paroles d'un combattant: articles et discours. 1920.
Le Couteau entre les dents. 1921.
Quelques coins du coeur, illustrated by Frans Masereel. 1921.
Lettre aux intellectuels. 1921.
L'Étrangère. 1922.
Trois films: Force; L'Au-delà; Le Crieur. 1926.
Les Bourreaux. 1926.
Jésus. 1927; as Jesus, edited by Malcolm Cowley, translated by Solon Librescot, 1927.
Les Judas de Jésus. 1927.
Manifeste aux intellectuels. 1927.
Faits divers. 1928; as And I Saw It Myself, translated by Brian Rhys, 1928; as Thus and Thus, translated by Rhys, 1929.
Voici ce qu'on fait de la Géorgie. 1929.
Ce qui fut sera. 1930.
Élévation. 1930.
Russie. 1930; as One Looks at Russia, translated by Warre B. Wells, 1931.
J'accuse. 1932.
Zola. 1932; as Zola, translated by Mary Balairdie Green and Frederick C. Green, 1932.
Staline: Un monde nouveau vu à travers un homme. 1935; as Stalin: A New World as Seen Through One Man, translated by Vyvyan Holland, 1935.
Lettres de Henri Barbusse à sa femme 1914–1917. 1937.

*

Critical Studies: Henri Barbusse, soldat de la paix by A. Vidal, 1953; Henri Barbusse: Sa marche vers la Clarté, son mouvement Clarté by Vladimir Brett, 1963; Communism and the French Intellectuals 1914–1960 by David Caute, 1964; Three French Writers and the Great War: Studies in the Rise of Communism and Fascism by Frank Field, 1975; Les grands romans de la Guerre de 14–18, with preface by François Rivière, 1994; Henri Barbusse: écrivain combattant by Jean Relinger, 1994; Barbusse by Philippe Baudorre, 1995.

* * *

Henri Barbusse was a writer and political activist at the centre of the preoccupation with Russian communism which characterized so many French intellectuals and artists in the early part of the 20th century. He began his career as a poet in the symbolist vein, wrote a naturalist novel L'Enfer (The Inferno), and then came the key novel Le Feu: Journal d'une escouade (Under Fire: The Story of a Squad), which won him the prestigious Goncourt prize. A further novel Clarté (Light), also the name of a political organization he co-founded, marked a movement on his part towards a strong political commitment to Marxism which culminated in the adulatory biography of Stalin.

When he first made the change from poetry to the novel in The Inferno, the move was fuelled by his sense of the helpless suffering of human beings in the face of the passions and ambitions that dominate them. In the novel, a man comes to Paris in order to work in a bank. Through a hole in the wall, he witnesses the actions of his neighbours and recognizes that there is no possibility that they can escape the futile suffering of existence. This bleak pessimism is both underpinned and, to some extent, transcended by his experiences of the war and the writing of Under Fire. As in Remarque's All Quiet on the Western Front, it is in the comradeship of the front line soldier that Barbusse sees some sense of meaning holding existence together, despite all the terrors of war.

The path which took him towards socialism, atheism, and humanism was greatly influenced by his experience of the horrors of World War I. Although he had symbolist beginnings, it was clear that, unlike the majority of those in that movement, he was not able to detach himself from awareness of and fellow feeling for the pain of others. Under Fire conveys not just a direct and uncompromising picture of the sufferings of the common soldiers in World War I, but also their political aspirations towards a world of equality and international brotherhood. As in much of his writing, political conviction rubbed shoulders uncomfortably with emotional commitment and narrative power. Under Fire in particular expresses this duality between creative writing and propaganda.

Barbusse was a genuine patriot, who saw in World War I a horror so great that it would purge humanity for ever of the lust for battle. He began to turn his attention more towards political activism in the movement Clarté, founded in 1919 and conceived as an international intellectual organization dedicated to peace. The committee that was to run Clarté contained a prestigious roll-call of names, among them Thomas Hardy, Georges Duhamel, Upton Sinclair, H.G. Wells, and Stefan Zweig. This left-wing movement had strong links with the French Communist Party (PCF), and it is typical of the contemporary relationships between the left wing in France and intellectuals that so many writers and thinkers joined its ranks. Despite his political views, though, Barbusse held off from joining the PCF until 1923, at the time when France occupied the Ruhr, an act opposed by the PCF. He then resolved to become an activist on behalf of socialism and internationalism. The concept of the nation state should be overcome by the brotherhood of man, by joining hands across political frontiers. He became convinced that Lenin was right in stating that imperialism and capitalism were responsible for military aggression. To overcome these twin evils, even the use of force was (ironically) justified.

In 1929, the worldwide financial collapse coupled with the rise of fascism underpinned even further Barbusse's communist convictions. He became increasingly pro-Soviet, and for a man who was not an unquestioning supporter of the party line, it was somewhat paradoxical to see in his biography of Stalin writing in unquestioningly glowing tones about the Soviet leader. His defence of Soviet communism was not so much an act of simple faith as a recognition on his part that it alone could act as a defence against fascism and the threat of yet another European war. In sum, Barbusse was a man of great conviction so convinced of the evils of capitalist society and the horrors of world war that it had spawned that he failed to see the even greater dangers of world communism.

—Rex Last

See the essay on Under Fire: The Story of a Squad.BARCA, Pedro Calderón de la

See CALDERÓN DE LA BARCA, Pedro

BASHŌ

Born: Matsuo Munefusa at Ueno, near Kyoto, Japan, in 1644. Career: In service to a local lord of samurai status, and studied poetry with him until the lord's death in 1666; then led an unsettled life: in Edo (now Tokyo) after 1672; lived in a recluse's hut near Edo from 1680, and took his name from banana (bashō) tree growing there, which he admired for its lack of practical utility: in Japan it produces no fruit and its leaves give no shade; his travels were described in verse and prose in journals and diaries; collections of his works appeared from 1684. Died: early Autumn 1694.

PUBLICATIONS

Collection

Zenshū [Complete Works], general editor Komiya Toyotaka. 10 vols., 1959–69.

Works

Oku no hosomichi. 1702; as The Narrow Road to the Deep North, translated by Nobuyuki Yuasa, in The Narrow Road to the Deep North and Other Travel Sketches, 1966; also translated by Earl Miner, in Japanese Poetic Diaries, 1969; as The Narrow Road to the Deep North, translated by Dorothy Britton, 1974; as Narrow Road to the Interior, translated by Sam Hamill, 1991; selections translated by Donald Keene, in Anthology of Japanese Literature, 1955; selections as Back Roads to Far Towns, translated by Cid Corman and Kamaike Susumu, 1968; as Narrow Road to Oku, translated by Donald Keene, 1996; as Bashō's Narrow Road: Spring and Autumn Passages: Two Works, translated by Hiroaki Sato.

Haiku (includes about 250 verses by Bashō), translated by R.H. Blyth. 4 vols., 1949–52.

"Bashō's Journey to Sarashina," translated by Donald Keene, in Transactions of the Asiatic Society of Japan. December 1957.

"Bashō's Journey of 1684," translated by Donald Keene, in Asia Major. December 1959.

A Darkening Sea: Poems of Bashō, translated by David Aylward. 1975.

The Monkey's Straw Raincoat and Other Poetry of the Bashō School, translated by Earl Miner and Hiroko Odagiri. 1981.

One Hundred Frogs, edited by Hiroaki Sato, various translators. 1983.

Traveler My Name, translated by Lucien Stryk. 1984.

On Love and Barley: Haiku of Bashō, translated by Lucien Stryk. 1985.

OTHER

The Essential Haiku: Versions of Bashō, Buson, and Issa, edited with introduction by Robert Haas, 1994.

*

Critical Studies: An Introduction to Haiku, by H.G. Henderson, 1958; Zeami, Bashō, Yeats, Pound: A Study in Japanese and English

Poetics, 1965, Bashō, 1970, and Bashō and His Interpreters: Selected Hokku with Commentary, 1992, all by Makoto Ueda; "Bashō" by Earl Miner, in Textual Analysis: Some Readers Reading edited by Mary Ann Caws, 1986; "The Meaning of Bashō's shigure" by Ock Hee You, in Transactions of the International Conference of Orientalists in Japan, 33, 1988; Traces of Dreams: Landscape, Cultural Memory, and the Poetry of Bashō by Haruo Shirane, 1998; Rediscovering Bashō: A 300th Anniversary Celebration, edited by Stephen Henry Gill and C. Andrew Gerstle, 1999.

* * *

Bashō is recognized as one of Japan's greatest literary figures. He transformed haiku from a somewhat frivolous pastime into a serious art form and he remains to this day its greatest exponent. He was in addition a seminal critic and teacher. Though he himself produced only a few works of criticism, many of his critical opinions and comments are preserved in the voluminous notes and accounts of his pupils, particularly Mukai Kyorai and Hattori Doho. Such is the importance of his critical precepts and the example of his poetry that no writer of haiku from his time to the present has been able to escape his influence.

In Bashō's own day the haiku was regarded not as a form in itself but as the first stanza (the hokku) of a longer poem consisting of up to a hundred linked stanzas written by two or more poets taking turns. Much of Bashō's effort was given to this type of composition, known as renku or haikai no renga, and it was in this field that he showed his greatest superiority, for he was an unrivalled master at the subtleties of linking stanzas and controlling the changes of pace, mood, and theme, which are the essence of this extremely demanding form.

Bashō was also a skilled prose writer. He was as meticulous in his prose as in his verse and virtually forged a new style, in which he integrated prose and poetry to an extent never before achieved. In addition to his few critical commentaries, he produced haibun, which are short occasional essays written in the haiku spirit, and travel journals. His Genjuan no ki [Essay on the Unreal Dwelling] is a moving apologia for his life and is generally considered the finest haibun ever written. His travel journal Oku no hosomichi (The Narrow Road to the Deep North) is his most famous work and one of the masterpieces of Japanese literature, in which he displays his mastery of prose style together with a sure command of form and the highest skill at reshaping events into art.

Bashō's greatness lies not only in his technique but in the depth of his probing of life. To him art was a way of life, a search for religious truth, which was to be found in nature: and this search led to continuous development, giving his work a variety that can appeal to all types of reader. Following his move to Edo, his style changed from refined and often artificial wit to genuine humour in more mundane subjects; and on settling at his Bashō hermitage he continued this trend towards greater simplicity, objectivity, and description, creating a style of his own. The years of his wanderings saw his creative peak in the style of sabi ("loneliness"), in which nature, usually in its most insignificant forms, is shown quietly fulfilling its often bleak destiny. In his final years he turned to karumi ("lightness"), an obscure term that seems to imply a more contented attitude of acceptance and less tension within a poem. To some, this step was retrograde, but however it is judged, it shows Bashō developing and striving to the end to perfect his art in the light of his philosophy of life.

—P.T. Harries

BASSANI, Giorgio

Pseudonym: Used Giacomo Marchi for several years to avoid Nazi and Fascist persecution. Born: Bologna, Italy, 4 April 1916. Education: Educated at Liceo Ludovico Ariosto, Bologna; University of Bologna, from 1934, degree in literature. Family: Married Valeria Sinigaglia in 1943, one son and one daughter. Career: Began anti-fascist activity in 1942: imprisoned briefly, 1943, and after release took part in the Resistance; lived in Ferrara until 1943, then in Rome; after World War II worked as scriptwriter and film dubbing editor; editor, Botteghe Oscure, Rome, 1948–60; co-editor, Paragone, Milan, 1953–55; editor, Feltrinelli, publishers, Milan, 1958–64; instructor in history of the theatre, Academy of Dramatic Art, Rome, 1957–68; vice-president, Radio Televisione Italiana, Rome, 1964–65. President, from 1966, and honorary president, Italia Nostra. Awards: Veillon prize, 1955; Strega prize, 1956; Viareggio prize, 1962; Campiello prize, 1969; Nelly Sachs prize, 1969; Bagutta prize, 1983. Died: 13 April 2000.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

- Una città di pianura* (as Giacomo Marchi). 1940.
La passeggiata prima di cena. 1953.
Gli ultimi anni di Clelia Trotti. 1955.
Il romanzo di Ferrara. 1974; revised edition, 1980.
Cinque storie ferraresi. 1956; revised edition, as Dentro le mura, 1974; as A Prospect of Ferrara, translated by Isabel Quigly, 1962; as Five Stories of Ferrara, translated by William Weaver, 1971.
Gli occhiali d'oro. 1958; with variants, 1970; as The Gold-Rimmed Spectacles, translated by Isabel Quigly, 1960; as The Gold-Rimmed Eyeglasses, translated by William Weaver, in The Smell of Hay, 1975.
Il giardino dei Finzi-Contini. 1962; as The Garden of the Finzi-Contini, translated by Isabel Quigly, 1965; also translated by William Weaver, 1977.
Dietro la porta. 1964; as Behind the Door, translated by William Weaver, 1973.
L'airone. 1968; as The Heron, translated by William Weaver, 1970.
L'odore del fieno (stories). 1972; as The Smell of Hay (includes The Gold-Rimmed Eyeglasses), translated by William Weaver, 1975.
Una notte del '43. 1960.
Le storie ferraresi (includes the five stories of Cinque storie ferraresi, Gli occhiali d'oro, and the stories "Il muro di cinta" and "In esilio"). 1960.
Due novelle. 1965.
Di là dal cuore. 1984.

Verse

- Storie di poveri amanti e altri versi*. 1945; enlarged edition, 1946.
Te lucis ante. 1947.
Un'altra libertà. 1952.
L'alba ai vetri: Poesie 1947–1950. 1963.

Epitaffio. 1974; parts translated in Rolls Royce and Other Poems, 1982.

In gran segreto. 1978; parts translated in Rolls Royce and Other Poems, 1982.

In rima e senza. 1982.

Rolls Royce and Other Poems (bilingual edition), edited and translated by Francesca Valente and others. 1982.

Plays

The Stranger's Hand (screenplay), with Guy Elmes and Graham Greene. 1954.

Screenplays: The Stranger's Hand, with Guy Elmes and Graham Greene, 1954.

Other

Le parole preparate e altri scritti di letteratura (essays). 1966.
Con Bassani verso Ferrara by Alberto Toni, 2001.

*

Critical Studies: Bassani by Giorgio Varanini, 1970; "The Storie ferraresi of Giorgio Bassani," in Italica, 49, 1972, and "Bassani's Ironic Mode," in Canadian Journal of Italian Studies, 1, 1978, both by Marianne Shapiro; "The Garden of the Finzi-Contini" by Stanley G. Eskin, in Literature/Film Quarterly, 1, 1973; "Mythical Dimensions of Micòl Finzi-Contini," in Italica, 51, 1974, "A Conversion to Death: Giorgio Bassani's L'airone," in Canadian Journal of Italian Studies, 1, 1978, and Vengeance of the Victim: History and Symbol in Giorgio Bassani's Fiction, 1986, all by Marilyn Schneider; "Transformation in Bassani's Garden," in Modern Fiction Studies, 21, 1975, "The Closed World of Giorgio Bassani," in Italian Culture, 3, 1981, "Exile in the Narrative Writings of Giorgio Bassani," in Italian Culture, 5, 1984, "Bassani: The Motivation of Language," in Italica, 62(2), 1985, The Exile into Eternity: A Study of the Narrative Writings of Giorgio Bassani, 1987, and "Bassani: The Guilt Beyond the Door," in Gradiva, 4(2[6]), 1988, all by Douglas Radcliff-Umstead; "Art and Death in Bassani's Poetry" by Stelio Cro, in Canadian Journal of Italian Studies, 1, 1978; Invito all lettura di Bassani by Massimo Grillandi, 1980; "Giorgio Bassani: The Record of a Confession" by Diego L. Bastianutti, in Queen's Quarterly, 88(4), 1981; Le forme del sentimento: Prosa e poesia in Giorgio Bassani by Anna Dolfi, 1981; "Insiders and Outsiders: Discourses of Oppression in Giorgio Bassani's Gli occhiali d'oro" by Mirna Cicioni, in Italian Studies, 41, 1986; "Visual Memory and the Nature of the Epitaph: Bassani's Epitaffio" by Linda Nemerow-Ulman, in Italian Quarterly, 27(106), 1986; "Narrated and Narrating I" in Il giardino dei Finzi-Contini by Harry Davis, in Italian Studies, 43, 1988; "The Structures of Silence: Re-reading Giorgio Bassani's Gli occhiali d'oro" by Lucienne Kroha, in The Italianist, 10, 1990; Studi in onore Umberto Mariani: Da Verga a Calvino, edited by Anthony G. Costantini and Franco Zangrilli, 2000.

* * *

All Giorgio Bassani's fiction is set in the northern Italian town of Ferrara in the years from the beginning of the 20th century to the late 1940s. He painstakingly revised his fictional writings twice, and finally published them as a whole under the comprehensive title Il romanzo di Ferrara [The Novel of Ferrara]. The town is a microcosm of Italian society, revisited in the light of memory by the first-person narrator of Gli occhiali d'oro (The Gold-Rimmed Eyeglasses), Il giardino dei Finzi-Contini (The Garden of the Finzi-Continis), and Dietro la porta (Behind the Door): a young middle-class Jew, who observes and judges the effects of history on social life and relationships between people divided by politics, sex, class, and, above all, race. Bassani's main focus is on the small Jewish community of Ferrara, which is represented as at first fully integrated with, and almost completely assimilated into, Gentile bourgeois—and later Fascist—society, only to face the shock, isolation, and despair of being labelled “other” and “undesirable” by the 1938 anti-semitic laws. In a 1964 interview Bassani defined himself as “the historian of the past,” and 20 years later stated that he had been the first Italian writer to have written about Italian Jews within their historical and political context. The emphasis in all his writings on meticulous reconstruction of details—such as street names, trade names of watches, bicycles, and typewriters, and contemporary cultural references such as journal articles, popular films, and names of well-known public figures—can thus be interpreted as a desire to commit the past to memory as accurately as possible, because that past was irreparably lost with the Holocaust. This desire is fully consistent with the basic notion in Jewish culture that remembering the past is a religious duty for each Jew, and that temporal history is indissolubly connected with sacred history.

This historical perspective has a linguistic correlative in Bassani's writings in its “social indirect speech,” where the narrator voices the collective opinions and judgements of the Ferrara bourgeoisie in its own vocabulary and phraseology. This “social indirect speech,” however, like the community itself, is never fully homogenous: the narrator distances himself from it by expressing his own historical and moral judgements, and within the community individual characters attempt to formulate alternative political and social discourses.

The protagonists of the Cinque storie ferraresi (Five Stories of Ferrara) are individuals who are, at the same time, both part of the Ferrara community and isolated from it, physically and socially: they are enclosed behind windows and within cell-like rooms, locked within their historical and personal failures. A Jewish doctor marries outside his faith and his class; an old Socialist schoolteacher under house arrest fruitlessly attempts to convey her historical insights to a young middle-class Jew; an invalid refuses to give evidence against the Fascist murderers of 11 anti-Fascist and Jewish prisoners; and, most compelling of all, a Jew returns to Ferrara from Buchenwald and disappears again after trying unsuccessfully to make the town confront its historical responsibilities.

The Gold-Rimmed Eyeglasses, set in 1937, depicts conflicting discourses about integration and “outsiders.” The heterosexual Jewish narrator tells the story of the gradual ostracism and destruction by the heterosexual bourgeoisie of a Gentile homosexual doctor who is driven to suicide, while his former Jewish friends, unable or unwilling to support him, begin to experience the alienation of the anti-semitic laws and to feel the shadow of their own destruction.

The title of The Garden of the Finzi-Continis displays both the self-imposed exile of the aristocratic Jewish family that lives within the garden's walls, and a temporary illusion of solidarity when its gates are opened up to the ostracized Jewish youth after the advent of the anti-semitic laws. Some of the characters (the 20-year-old narrator; his integrated, Fascist father; his friends Micòl and Alberto Finzi-Contini, and their elderly, scholarly father) do endeavour to define their identity in a multiplicity of Jewish discourses. However, none of these discourses is presented as strong enough to oppose the dominant Fascist ideology. Significantly, the novel is pervaded by images of death, from the opening scene which links an Etruscan necropolis to the Jewish cemetery of Ferrara, to recurring references to cemeteries and literary references to silence and mourning.

In Behind the Door, set during 1929–30, the first-person narrator recounts his loss of innocence and trust at the age of 15, as a consequence of being ruthlessly betrayed by a Gentile classmate, and emphasizes the covert intolerance present in Ferrara long before the anti-semitic laws.

With L'airone (The Heron)—his last novel, set in 1947—Bassani returned to third-person narration. The protagonist, a wealthy Jew who has survived the war relatively unscathed, resolves to take his own life because of his hopeless disillusionment with the new social order, and his own lack of a cultural and personal identity. His spiritual emptiness is heightened by his isolation and alienation from what is left of the Jewish community, irreparably shattered by the war. Symbols of death also abound in this work: the protagonist identifies his pain and despair with those of a heron wounded by a hunting party, and his longing for peace away from life with a display of stuffed animals in a taxidermist's window.

The Ferrara Cycle also includes L'odore del fieno (The Smell of Hay), a series of separate stories which further develop characters or situations mentioned in the longer fiction works. Bassani's poetry—most of which has not been translated into English—moves from early reflections on his own Jewishness to later sarcastic observations on the cultural trends of the Italy of the 1970s. Significantly, many poems have an hourglass shape: although Bassani's major “historiography” project is now complete, all his writings share its historical dimension.

—Mirna Cicioni

BAUDELAIRE, Charles (Pierre)

Born: Paris, France, 9 April 1821. Education: Educated at Collège de Lyon, 1832–36; École Louis-le-Grand, Paris, 1836; expelled 1839; completed studies at Pension Levêque et Bailly, Paris, baccalauréat, 1839; law student, University of Paris, 1839–41. Career: Contracted syphilis and fell into debt; sent on a voyage to India by his parents, 1841, left the ship in Mauritius and returned to Paris; after 1842, was able to live on an inheritance from his father; art critic and translator; publication of Les Fleurs du mal, 1861, led to a trial for indecency, fined for offences against public morals and six poems were suppressed; moved to Brussels, 1864; returned to Paris, 1866; spent rest of his life in a sanatorium. Died: 31 August 1867.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Oeuvres complètes: Les Fleurs du mal; Curiosités esthétiques; L'Art romantique; Petits poèmes en prose, Les Paradis artificiels, La Fanfarlo, Le Jeune Enchanteur, foreword by Théophile Gautier. 4 vols., 1868–69; as Artificial Paradises, translated with introduction and notes by Stacy Diamond, 1996.

Oeuvres complètes, edited by Jacques Crépet and Claude Pichois. 19 vols., 1922–53.

Oeuvres complètes, edited by Claude Pichois. 2 vols., 1975–76.

Complete Verse (bilingual edition), edited and translated by Francis Scarfe. 2 vols., 1986–89.

The Painter of Modern Life and Other Essays, translated and edited by Jonathan Mayne, 1995.

Complete Poems, translated by Walter Martin, 1997.

Verse

Les Fleurs du mal. 1861; revised editions, 1861, 1868 (in Oeuvres complètes); as The Flowers of Evil, 1909; numerous subsequent translations including by George Dillon and Edna St. Vincent Millay, 1936; Geoffrey Wagner, 1946; Roy Campbell, 1952; W. Aggeler, 1954; Francis Scarfe (in prose), 1961; Florence Louie Friedman, 1966; Richard Howard, 1982; as Poems of the Damned: Charles Baudelaire's Les Fleurs du mal—The Flowers of Evil, translated by Ulick O'Connor, 1995.

Les Épaves. 1866.

Le Parnasse contemporain (includes “Les Nouvelles Fleurs du mal”). 1866.

Petits Poèmes en prose. 1869; as Paris Spleen, translated by Louise Varèse, 1869; as Poems in Prose, translated by Arthur Symons, 1905; as Little Poems in Prose, translated by Aleister Crowley, 1928; as The Parisian Prowler, translated by Edward K. Kaplan, 1989.

Vers retrouvés. 1929.

Selected Verse, translated by Francis Scarfe. 1961.

Flowers of Evil and Other Works, edited and translated by Wallace Fowlie. 1964.

Selected Poems, edited and translated by Joanna Richardson. 1975.

City Blues, translated by F.W.J. Hemmings. 1977.

Selected Poems, translated by John Goudge. 1979.

Spleen, translated by Elliot Ross. 1984.

The Prose Poems and La Fanfarlo, translated by Rosemary Lloyd. 1991.

Fiction

La Fanfarlo. In Oeuvres complètes, 1868–69; as La Fanfarlo, translated by Greg Boyd, 1986; also translated by Rosemary Lloyd, 1991.

Other

Salon de 1845. 1845; edited by André Ferran, 1933.

Salon de 1846. 1846; edited by David Kelley, 1975.

Théophile Gautier. 1859; edited by Philippe Terrier, 1985.

Les Paradis artificiels: Opium et haschisch. 1860.

Richard Wagner et Tannhäuser à Paris. 1861.

Le Peintre de la vie moderne. 1863.

L'Oeuvre et la vie d'Eugène Delacroix. 1863; as Eugene Delacroix: His Life and Work, translated by Joseph Bernstein, 1948.

Journaux intimes. 1920; as Intimate Journals, translated by Christopher Isherwood, 1930.

Selected Writings on Art and Artists, translated by P.E. Charvet. 1932.

Selected Critical Studies, edited by Douglas Parmée. 1949.

The Mirror of Art: Critical Studies, edited and translated by Jonathan Mayne. 1955.

Baudelaire: A Self-Portrait (selected letters), edited by Lois Boe and F.E. Hyslop. 1957.

Baudelaire as a Literary Critic (essays), edited and translated by Lois Boe and F.E. Hyslop. 1964.

The Painter of Modern Life and Other Essays, edited and translated by Jonathan Mayne. 1964.

Art in Paris 1845–1862: Salons and Other Exhibitions, edited and translated by Jonathan Mayne. 1965.

Edgar Allan Poe, sa vie et ses ouvrages, edited by W.T. Bandy. 1973.

Correspondance, edited by Claude Pichois and Jean Ziegler. 2 vols., 1973.

Selected Letters, edited by Rosemary Lloyd, 1986.

My Heart Laid Bare and Other Prose Writings, edited by Peter Quennell, translated by Norman Cameron. 1986.

Critique d'art; suivi de, Critique musicale (essays), edited by Claude Pichois. 1992.

Translator, Histoires extraordinaires, Nouvelles histoires extraordinaires, Aventures d'Arthur Gordon Pym, Euréka, Histoires grotesques et sérieuses, by Edgar Allan Poe. 5 vols., 1856–65.

*

Bibliography: Baudelaire et la critique française 1868–1917 by A.E. Carter, 1936, supplemented by W.T. Bandy, 1953, and P.M. Trotman, 1971; Baudelaire Criticism 1950–1967 by R.T. Cargo, 1968.

Critical Studies: Baudelaire the Critic by Margaret Gilman, 1943; Baudelaire by P. Mansell Jones, 1952; Baudelaire: A Study of His Poetry by Martin Turnell, 1953; Baudelaire: Les Fleurs du Mal by Alison Fairlie, 1960; Baudelaire's Tragic Hero by D.J. Mossop, 1961; Baudelaire: A Collection of Critical Essays edited by Henri Peyre, 1962; Baudelaire by M.A. Ruff, 1966; Baudelaire and Nature, 1969, Collected Essays, 1953–1988, 1990, and Charles Pierre Baudelaire: Les Fleurs du mal, 1992, all by F.W. Leakey; Baudelaire as a Love Poet and Other Essays edited by Lois Boe Hyslop, 1969, and Baudelaire, Man of His Time by Hyslop, 1980; Baudelaire (in English) by Enid Starkie, 1971; Baudelaire: A Lyric Poet in the Era of High Capitalism by Walter Benjamin, translated by Harry Zohn, 1973; Baudelaire, Prince of Clouds by Alex de Jonge, 1976; Baudelaire and Freud by Leo Bersani, 1977; Charles Baudelaire by A.E. Carter, 1977; Baudelaire: A Fire to Conquer Darkness by Nicole Ward Jouve, 1980; Baudelaire's Literary Criticism by Rosemary Lloyd, 1981; Baudelaire the Damned: A Biography by F.W.J. Hemmings, 1982; Baudelaire, Mallarmé, Valéry: New Essays in Honour of Lloyd Austin edited by Malcolm Bowie, Alison Fairlie, and Alison Finch, 1982; Exploding Poetry: Baudelaire/Rimbaud by Georges Poulet, 1984; Baudelaire: La Fanfarlo and Le Spleen de Paris by Barbara Wright and David H.T. Scott, 1984; Baudelaire and Le Spleen de Paris by J.A. Hiddleston, 1987; Baudelaire in 1859: A Study of the Sources of Poetic Creativity, 1988, and Baudelaire and the Second Republic: Writing and Revolution, 1991, both by Richard D.E. Burton; Baudelaire and the Poetics of Craft by Graham Chesters, 1988; The Comical as Textual Practice in Les Fleurs du mal by John W. MacInnes, 1988; Narrative as Performance: The Baudelairean Experience by Marie Maclean, 1988; Baudelaire by Claude Pichois, translated by Graham Robb, 1989; A Poetics of Art Criticism: The Case of Baudelaire by Timothy Raser, 1989; Baudelaire's Prose Poems by E. Kaplan, 1990; Baudelaire's Argot plastique: Poetic Caricature and Modernism by Ainslie Armstrong McLees, 1990; Baudelaire and Intertextuality by Margery A. Evans, 1992; Baudelaire and Caricature: From the Comic to an Art of Modernity by Michele Hannoosh, 1992; Baudelaire's Voyages: The Poet and His Painters by Jeffrey Coven, 1993; Baudelaire and Schizoanalysis: The Sociopoetics of Modernism by Eugene W. Holland, 1993; Baudelaire by Joanna Richardson, 1994; Poetry and Painting: Baudelaire, Mallarmé, Apollinaire, and their Painter Friends by Alan Bowness, 1994; Resonant Gaps: Between Baudelaire and Wagner by Margaret Miner, 1995; Baudelaire: Individualism, Dandyism and the Philosophy of History by Bernard Howells, 1996; Baudelaire in Russia by Adrian Wanner, 1996; Baudelaire: At the Limits and Beyond by Nicolae Babuts, 1997; The Integrative Vision: Poetry and the Visual Arts in Baudelaire, Rilke and MacDiarmid by Tom Hubbard, 1997; Poetry and Moral Dialectic: Baudelaire's "Secret Architecture" by James R. Lawler, 1997; Understanding Les fleurs du mal: Critical Readings, edited by William J. Thompson, 1997; Baudelaire and the Aesthetics of Bad Faith by Susan Blood, 1997; Virtuosity of the Nineteenth Century: Performing Music and Language in Heine, Liszt, and Baudelaire by Susan Bernstein, 1998; Baudelaire's Prose Poems: the Practice and Politics of Irony by Sonya Stephens, 1999; Baudelaire and the Art of Memory by J.A. Hiddleston, 1999; Translating Baudelaire by Clive Scott, 2000; Remnants of Song: Trauma and the Experience of Modernity in Charles Baudelaire and Paul Celan by Ulrich Baer, 2000; Baudelaire and the Poetics of Modernity, edited by Patricia A. Ward, 2001.

* * *

Poet, critic, translator, Charles Baudelaire, though largely ignored in his own time, is today considered one of the literary giants of the 19th century. His translations of five volumes of Edgar Allan Poe's tales, in addition to his three essays on the American writer, are mainly responsible for Poe's fame in France and throughout Europe. His essays on art and literature and his article on Wagner make him one of the greatest critics of the 19th century. And finally his volume of verse Les Fleurs du mal (The Flowers of Evil) and his Petits Poèmes en prose (Little Poems in Prose) have earned him the title of our first modern poet as well as one of the finest of city poets.

Baudelaire is often called "the father of modern criticism" and "the first aesthete of his age," not so much because of his value judgements of individual artists and writers as because of the ideas and principles he articulated. If his essays on art are usually considered superior to those on literature, it is mainly because demands of publishers often made it necessary for him to discuss a number of minor writers, while laws of censorship forced him to resort to irony, parody, and pastiche in order to express unpopular opinions.

Except during the Revolutionary period, when for a short time he adopted a more utilitarian conception of art, Baudelaire, like Flaubert, believed that the goal of art was beauty—beauty which, when "purified by art," could be derived from even ugliness, evil, and horror. That is why, in an unfinished epilogue intended for the second edition of The Flowers of Evil, he could say to the city of Paris: "You have given me your mud and I have turned it into gold."

Baudelaire's personal conception of beauty, as noted in his Journaux intimes (Intimate Journals), was much like that of Poe. Though he was obviously influenced by the American writer, even to the point of extensively plagiarizing him in his three Poe essays, recent investigation has proved that what he found in Poe's literary doctrine was a confirmation of his own poetic practice as well as an affirmation of aesthetic principles he had already espoused.

Like Poe, Baudelaire prefers a beauty tinged with melancholy, regret, and sadness. Like Poe also, he insists on the importance of the bizarre or strange—"an artless, unpremeditated, unconscious strangeness," as he wrote in his Exposition universelle. In his 1857 essay on Poe, he even agrees that "the principle of poetry is . . . human aspiration toward a superior beauty"—a definition less characteristic of his poetry than his observation that "every lyric poet by virtue of his nature inevitably effects a return to the lost Eden." In his verse, Baudelaire himself often made that return, whether to the Eden of his childhood or to that of tropical seas and skies and of happiness he had known with his dusky mistress.

With Delacroix, whose art he never ceased to glorify and whose opinions he frequently cited, Baudelaire believed that every age and every nation possesses its own particular beauty. In addition to its eternal or absolute element, all beauty, he maintained, must necessarily contain this particular or transitory element which, for him, was really synonymous with modernity. It was his emphasis on modernity—his call for "the heroism of modern life" and his belief that Parisian life was "rich in poetic and marvellous subjects"—that did much to change the course of both literature and painting and is often reflected in his own best verse.

Baudelaire was violently opposed to the servile imitation of nature as practised by the Realists. For him, as for Delacroix, nature was a dictionary whose hieroglyphics he sought to interpret. Imagination, the "queen of all faculties," alone permits the poet to discover in the vast storehouse of nature the symbols, analogies, and correspondences that can transform reality into the poet's own vision of reality.

Baudelaire's chief claim to fame is his volume of verse The Flowers of Evil in which can be seen a strange amalgam of old and new. Classic in its clarity, discipline, and reliance on traditional forms, Romantic in its subjectivity, its spirit of revolt, and its macabre elements, The Flowers of Evil is also considered a distant forerunner of Surrealism in its use of dreams, myths, and fantasies. Far more important, however, is the fact that, by its use of suggestion as opposed to description and narration, it anticipates Symbolism and opens the door to modern poetry.

The unifying theme running throughout the six sections of The Flowers of Evil is that of the human condition, of the conflict between good and evil, spleen and ideal, dream and reality. Obsessed with a belief in original sin and in the duality of man and using his own personal experiences as raw material, Baudelaire examined the spiritual problems of his age with a probing, almost brutal self-analysis. Unlike the Romantics, however, he saw himself not as unique but closely akin to the reader, whom he addresses in his introductory poem as "hypocritical reader, my counter-part, my brother."

One of Baudelaire's most important innovations is his use of correspondences. Although in his essays he speaks of the transcendental correspondences between the visible and invisible worlds, it is the synesthetic correspondences between colours, sounds, and perfumes that he employs in both his poetry and prose. Even more characteristic is his use of the correspondences between exterior nature and his own inner world. By finding symbols in outer reality that correspond to and suggest his inner thoughts and feelings, he often succeeds in creating what he himself called "a suggestive magic . . . containing the world exterior to the artist and the artist himself"—a suggestive magic leaving a "lacuna" to be filled by the reader. Such use of the symbol not only allowed him to exteriorize his idea or mood, by giving concrete form to the abstract, but also helped him achieve what he termed an "indispensable obscurity" that stops short of being hermetic.

Almost as important as his use of suggestion is Baudelaire's use of the cityscape to replace the nature description of the Romantics.

Although the city is never described, its sounds are heard almost everywhere, and its presence everywhere felt. Both The Flowers of Evil and the Little Poems in Prose are permeated with the omnipresence of the city, if only through choice of imagery or through implication.

In style, Baudelaire introduced a number of innovations that have since been adopted by most modern poets. As a result of his emphasis on suggestion, the image, no longer merely peripheral, often becomes the very essence of the poem. His tendency to introduce a prosaic or even crude image in the midst of an otherwise highly poetic style as well as his remarkable ability to treat sordid reality without losing poetic elevation have been widely imitated. Equally characteristic are his musical sonorities, his subtle and suggestive rhythms, his frequent use of monologue or dialogue to achieve dramatic effect, and his mingling of the grand manner with a quiet, subdued, and conversational tone.

—Lois Boe Hyslop

See the essays on “Spleen,” “To the Reader,” and “Windows.”

BAZÁN, Emilia Pardo

See PARDO BAZÁN, Emilia

BEAUMARCHAIS

Born: Pierre-Augustin Caron, in Paris, France, 24 January 1732. Education: Educated at École des Métiers d’Alfort, for three years, to age 13, then apprenticed to his clockmaker father. Family: Married 1) Madeleine-Catherine Franquet in 1756 (died 1757); 2) Geneviève-Madeleine Warebled in 1768 (died 1770), one son (died in infancy); 3) Marie-Thérèse Willermawlas in 1786 (divorced 1794; remarried 1797), one daughter. Career: Clockmaker: his work recognized by Academy of Sciences, 1754, and popular at court; bought title of Clerk Controller in Royal Household, 1755; took name Beaumarchais from first wife’s estate, 1757; also a harpist (improved the pedal system): gave lessons and organized concerts at court; bought title of Secrétaire du Roi, 1761 (and consequently ennobled, 1761), and Lt.-General of hunting in the Varenne du Louvre, 1761; visited Spain, 1764–66; involved in several spectacular court cases in 1770s; government agent, 1774–75, and responsible for aid to American insurgents, 1775; involved in founding the Bureau de Législation Dramatique (later Société des Auteurs et Compositeurs Dramatiques), 1777; arrested on suspicion of profiteering from arms, 1792, took refuge in London, but imprisoned for debt, 1792; released on payment of ransom, returned to France, 1793; left for Holland, on mission to buy arms; family imprisoned, 1794; exiled in Holland and Germany until 1796. Died: 17/18 May 1799.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Oeuvres complètes, edited by Édouard Fournier. 1876.

Théâtres, Lettres relatives à son théâtre, edited by Maurice Allem and Paul Courant. 1957.

Oeuvres complètes, edited by Albert Demazière. 1973.

Théâtre, edited by Jean-Pierre de Beaumarchais. 1980.

Oeuvres, edited by Pierre Lathomas. 1988.

The Barber of Seville; The Marriage of Figaro; The Guilty Mother: Three Plays, translated by Graham Anderson, 1993.

The Three Figaro Plays, translated with introduction and notes by David Edney, 2000.

Plays

Colin et Colette; Les Bottes de sept lieues; Les Députés de la Halle; Léandre Marchand d’Agnus; Jean Bête à la foire (farces: probably produced c. 1760–63). In Théâtre, 1957.

Eugénie (produced 1767). 1767; as The School for Rakes, translated by Elizabeth Griffith, 1769.

Les Deux Amis; ou, Le Négociant de Lyon (produced 1770). 1770; as The Two Friends; or, the Liverpool Merchant, translated by C.H. London, 1800.

Le Barbier de Séville; ou, La Précaution inutile (produced 1775). 1775; as The Barber of Seville, translated by Elizabeth Griffith, 1776; also translated by Arthur B. Myrick, 1905; W.R. Taylor, 1922; Stewart Robb, 1939; Wallace Fowlie, in Classical French Drama, 1962; Vincent Luciani, 1964; John Wood, 1966; as Le Barbier de Séville, edited with introduction and notes by Malcolm Cook; as The Barber of Seville, or, The Futile Precaution: a New English Translation, translated by Gilbert Pestureau, Ann Wakefield and Gavin Witt, 1997; as The Barber of Seville, translated and adapted by Bernard Sahlins, 1998.

La Folle Journée; ou, Le Mariage de Figaro (produced 1784). 1785; as The Follies of a Day; or, The Marriage of Figaro, translated by Thomas Holcroft, 1785; as A Mad Day’s Work; or, The Marriage of Figaro, translated by Brodbury P. Ellis, 1961; as The Marriage of Figaro, edited by Malcolm Cook, 1992; translated by Vincent Luciani, 1964; also translated by John Wood, 1966; William Gaskill, in Landmarks of French Classical Drama, edited by David Bradby, 1991; as The Marriage of Figaro, translated and adapted by Bernard Sahlins, 1994.

Tarare, music by Antonio Salieri (produced 1787; revised version, produced 1790). 1790; translated as Axur, King of Ormus, 1813.

L’Autre Tartuffe; ou, La Mère coupable (produced 1792). 1794; as Frailty and Hypocrisy, translated by James Wild, 1804; as A Mother’s Guilt, in The Complete Figaro Plays, 1983.

Other

Mémoires contre M. Goëzman. 1775.

Mémoires, edited by J. Ravenal. 4 vols., 1830.

Lettres inédites, edited by Gilbert Chinard. 1929.

Correspondance, edited by Brian N. Morton. 1969–.

For the Good of Mankind: Political Correspondence Relative to the American Revolution, edited and translated by Antoinette Shewmake. 1987.

*

Bibliography: Bibliographie des oeuvres de Beaumarchais by H. Cordier, 1883; Beaumarchais: A Bibliography by Brian N. Morton and Donald C. Spinelli, 1988.

Critical Studies: Beaumarchais by G. Lemaître, 1949; The Comic Style of Beaumarchais by J.B. Ratermanis and W.R. Irwin, 1961; The Real Figaro: The Extraordinary Career of Caron de Beaumarchais by Cynthia Cox, 1962; Beaumarchais: Le Barbier de Seville by Robert Niklaus, 1968; A Critical Commentary on Beaumarchais's "Le Mariage de Figaro" by Anthony Pugh, 1968; Beaumarchais by Joseph Sungolowski, 1974; Beaumarchais: The Man Who Was Figaro by Frédéric Grendel, translated by Roger Greaves, 1977; "Beaumarchais's Transformations" by Jack Undank, in Modern Language Notes, 100(4), 1985; Beaumarchais: The Barber of Seville by John Dunkley, 1991; Beaumarchais, ou, La Passion du Drame by Béatrice Didier, 1994; Beaumarchais, l'insolent by Jean-Claude Brisville, 1996; Le Langage Dramatique dans la Trilogie de Beaumarchais: Efficacité, Gaieté, Musicalité by Sophie Lecarpentier, 1998; Beaumarchais, l'aventure d'une Écriture by Violaine Géraud, 1999; Pierre-Augustin Caron de Beaumarchais by Maurice Lever, 1999.

* * *

The creator of Figaro, perhaps the best known of all French fictional characters, was a highly successful businessman who smuggled arms to the American rebels of 1776, published a complete edition of the works of Voltaire between 1783 and 1790, and founded one of the first organizations to protect authors' rights, the Société des Auteurs Dramatiques (Society of Dramatic Authors), in 1777. The readiness of Figaro to defy his master Almaviva verbally in Le Barbier de Séville (The Barber of Seville) and to intrigue against him in La Folle Journée; ou, Le Mariage de Figaro (The Marriage of Figaro) was thus not the expression of any personal resentment on Beaumarchais's part towards a society which had not allowed him to prosper. It was much more the statement of a general need for the hierarchical, unjust, and inefficient society of the late 18th century to change so that other men of talent could more easily rise, as Beaumarchais himself had done, from being sons of clockmakers to becoming successful businessmen and even purchasing patents of nobility.

Both Beaumarchais's plays about Figaro have been turned into operas, the first by Rossini and the second by Mozart, and the musical genius of Le Nozze de Figaro inevitably makes a straight performance of the original play seem a little tame. Both plays are saved less by the plot, which is unoriginal in The Barber of Seville and not always easy to follow in The Marriage of Figaro, than by the character of Figaro himself, with his ready wit, verbal dexterity, and indomitable ingenuity. In this respect, he represents the archetypal Frenchman as the French would like to see themselves, mercifully free from the tendency to sentimental moralizing that makes its way into The Marriage of Figaro with the character of Marcelline, and which inspired other unperformable plays, such as L'Autre Tartuffe; ou, La Mère coupable (A Mother's Guilt). For Beaumarchais was also a man of his time in that he shared the opinion of Diderot about the need for serious plays that dealt in a serious manner with the sexual and other problems of the middle class. It is this rather than any Oedipal impulses that explains the presence of Marcelline as Figaro's mother in The Marriage of Figaro, and there is an interesting contrast with the lack of conviction which she carries for modern audiences and the much more genuine affection which links Figaro to Suzanne. In the history of the theatre, Beaumarchais stands as the first successful practitioner of a comic style deriving its appeal from rapidity of action, vivacity of dialogue, and complexity of intrigue. Sociologically, he provides a comment on his society by exploiting the paradox that it is the social inferior, Figaro, who far exceeds his official master, Almaviva, in wit and intelligence, and can thus be seen as an ancestor to the Jeeves/Bertie Wooster relationship in P.G. Wodehouse.

—Philip Thody

See the essay on The Barber of Seville.

BEAUVOIR, Simone (Lucie Ernestine Marie) de

Born: Paris, France, 9 January 1908. Education: Educated at Institut Normal Catholique Adeline-Désir, Paris, 1913–25; studied philosophy and literature at the Sorbonne, Paris, 1926; Institut Sainte-Marie, Neuilly-sur-Seine; École Normale Supérieure, Paris, agrégation in philosophy 1929. Family: Began lifelong relationship with the writer Jean-Paul Sartre, q.v., in 1929. Career: Part-time teacher, Lycée Victor Duruy, Paris, 1929–31; philosophy teacher, Lycée Montgrand, Marseilles, 1931–32, Lycée Jeanne d'Arc, Rouen, 1932–36, Lycée Molière, Paris, 1936–39, and Lycée Camille-Sée and Lycée Henri IV, both Paris, 1939–43. Founding editor, with Sartre, Les Temps Modernes, Paris, from 1945. Awards: Goncourt prize, 1954; Jerusalem prize, 1975; Austrian State prize for European literature, 1978. Honorary LL.D.: Cambridge University. Member: Consultative Committee, Bibliothèque Nationale, 1969; president, Choisir, 1972; president, Ligue des Droits des Femmes, from 1974. Died: 4 April 1986.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

- L'Invitée*. 1943; as She Came to Stay, translated by Yvonne Moysé and Roger Senhouse, 1949.
- Le Sang des autres*. 1945; edited by John F. Davis, 1973; as The Blood of Others, translated by Yvonne Moysé and Roger Senhouse, 1948.
- Tous les hommes sont mortels*. 1946; as All Men Are Mortal, translated by Leonard M. Friedman, 1956.
- Les Mandarins*. 1954; as The Mandarins, translated by Leonard M. Friedman, 1957.
- Les Belles Images*. 1966; as Les Belles Images, translated by Patrick O'Brian, 1968.
- La Femme rompue* (includes L'Âge de discrétion and Monologue). 1968; as The Woman Destroyed (includes The Age of Discretion and The Monologue), translated by Patrick O'Brian, 1969.
- Quand prime le spirituel* (stories). 1979; as When Things of the Spirit Come First: Five Early Tales, translated by Patrick O'Brian, 1982.

Plays

- Les Bouches inutiles* (produced 1945). 1945; as Who Shall Die?, translated by Claude Francis and Fernande Gontier, 1983.

Other

- Pyrrhus et Cinéas*. 1944.
- Pour une morale de l'ambiguïté*. 1947; as The Ethics of Ambiguity, translated by Bernard Frechtman, 1948.
- L'Amérique au jour le jour*. 1948; as America Day by Day, translated by Patrick Dudley, 1952.
- L'Existentialisme et la sagesse des nations*. 1948.
- Le Deuxième Sexe: Les Faits et les mythes and L'Expérience vécue*. 2 vols., 1949; as The Second Sex, edited and translated by H.M. Parshley, 1953; vol. 1 as A History of Sex, 1961, and as Nature of the Second Sex, 1963.
- Must We Burn de Sade?*, translated by Annette Michelson, 1953, and in The Marquis de Sade, edited by Paul Dinnage, 1953.
- Privilèges* (includes Faut-il brûler Sade?; La Pensée de droite aujourd'hui; Merleau-Ponty ou le pseudo-sartrisme). 1955.
- La Longue Marche: Essai sur la Chine*. 1957; as The Long March, translated by Austryn Wainhouse, 1958.
- Mémoires d'une jeune fille rangée*. 1958; as Memoirs of a Dutiful Daughter, translated by James Kirkup, 1959.
- Brigitte Bardot and the Lolita Syndrome*, translated by Bernard Frechtman, 1960.
- La Force de l'âge*. 1960; as The Prime of Life, translated by Peter Green, 1962.
- Djamila Boupacha*, with Gisèle Halimi. 1962; as Djamila Boupacha, translated by Peter Green, 1962.
- La Force des choses*. 1963; as Force of Circumstance, translated by Richard Howard, 1965.
- Une Mort très douce*. 1964; as A Very Easy Death, translated by Patrick O'Brian, 1966.
- La Vieillesse*. 1970; as Old Age, translated by Patrick O'Brian, 1972; as The Coming of Age, translated by O'Brian, 1972.
- Tout compte fait*. 1972; as All Said and Done, translated by Patrick O'Brian, 1974.
- La Cérémonie des adieux*. 1981; as Adieux: A Farewell to Sartre, translated by Patrick O'Brian, 1984.
- Lettres à Sartre*, edited by Sylvie Le Bon de Beauvoir. 2 vols., 1990; as Letters to Sartre, edited and translated by Quintin Hoare, 1991.
- Journal de guerre: septembre 1939–janvier 1941*, edited by Sylvie Le Bon de Beauvoir. 1990.
- Plays by Women: Volume Ten*, edited and introduced by Annie Castledine. 1994.
- A Transatlantic Love Affair: Letters to Nelson Algren*, translated, compiled, and annotated by Sylvie Le Bon de Beauvoir. 1998.
- Editor, Lettres au Castor et à quelques autres 1926–1939 and 1940–1963, by Sartre, 2 vols., 1983; as Witness to My Life: The Letters of Jean-Paul Sartre to Simone de Beauvoir 1926–1939 and Quiet Moments in a War: The Letters of Jean-Paul Sartre to Simone de Beauvoir 1943–63, translated by Lee Fahnestock and Norman MacAfee, 1993–94.

*

* * *

Bibliography: Les Écrits de Simone de Beauvoir by Claude Francis and Fernande Gontier, 1979; Simone de Beauvoir: An Annotated Bibliography by Jay Bennett and Gabriella Hochmann, 1989.

Critical Studies: Simone de Beauvoir: Encounters with Death by Elaine Marks, 1973, and Critical Essays on Simone de Beauvoir edited by Marks, 1987; Simone de Beauvoir by Robert D. Cottrell, 1975; Simone de Beauvoir on Woman by Jean Leighton, 1975; Hearts and Minds: The Common Journey of Simone de Beauvoir and Jean-Paul Sartre by Axel Madsen, 1977; Simone de Beauvoir by Konrad Bieber, 1979; Simone de Beauvoir: A Life of Freedom by Carol Ascher, 1981; Simone de Beauvoir and the Limits of Commitment by Anne Whitmarsh, 1981; Simone de Beauvoir: A Study of Her Writings by Terry Keefe, 1983; Understanding "The Second Sex" by Donald L. Hatcher, 1984; After "The Second Sex": Conversations with Simone de Beauvoir by Alice Schwarzer, translated by Marianne Howarth, 1984; Simone de Beauvoir: A Feminist Mandarin by Mary Evans, 1985; Simone de Beauvoir by Judith Okely, 1986; The Novels of Simone de Beauvoir by Elizabeth Fallaize, 1987; Simone de Beauvoir: A Critical View by Renee Winegarten, 1987; Simone de Beauvoir: A Life, A Love Story by Claude Francis and Fernande Gontier, translated by Lisa Nesselson, 1987; Simone de Beauvoir by Lisa Appignanesi, 1988; Simone de Beauvoir by Jane Heath, 1989; Feminist Theory and Simone de Beauvoir by Toril Moi, 1990; Simone de Beauvoir: A Biography by Deirdre Bair, 1990; Simone de Beauvoir: The Woman and Her Work by Margaret Crosland, 1992; Simone de Beauvoir: The Making of an Intellectual Woman by Toril Moi, 1994; Simone de Beauvoir and Jean-Paul Sartre: The Remaking of a Twentieth-Century Legend by Kate Fullbrook and Edward Fullbrook, 1994; Feminist Interpretations of Simone de Beauvoir, edited by Margaret A. Simons, 1995; Simone de Beauvoir, Le sang des autres by Alex Hughes, 1995; Philosophy as Passion: The Thinking of Simone de Beauvoir by Karen Vintges, 1996; Sex and Existence: Simone de Beauvoir's The Second Sex by Eva Lundgren-Gothlin, translated by Linda Schenck, 1996; A Disgraceful Affair: Simone de Beauvoir, Jean-Paul Sartre, and Bianca Lamblin by Bianca Lamblin, translated by Julie Plovnick, 1996; Simone de Beauvoir by Mary Evans, 1996; Simone de Beauvoir: A Critical Introduction by Edward Fullbrook and Kate Fullbrook, 1997; Existentialism, Feminism, and Simone de Beauvoir by Joseph Mahon, 1997; The Philosophy of Simone de Beauvoir: Gendered Phenomenologies, Erotic Generosities by Debra B. Bergoffen, 1997; Simone de Beauvoir by Terry Keefe, 1998; Simone de Beauvoir: A Critical Reader, edited by Elizabeth Fallaize, 1998; Simone de Beauvoir's The Second Sex: New Interdisciplinary Essays, edited by Ruth Evans, 1998; Identity Without Selfhood: Simone de Beauvoir and Bisexuality by Mariam Fraser, 1999; Colette, Beauvoir, and Duras: Age and Women Writers by Bethany Ladimer, 1999; Simone de Beauvoir: Gender and Testimony by Ursula Tidd, 1999; Simone de Beauvoir Writing the Self: Philosophy Becomes Autobiography by Jo-Ann Pilardi, 1999; Contingent Loves: Simone de Beauvoir and Sexuality, edited by Melanie C. Hawthorne, 2000; The Existential Phenomenology of Simone de Beauvoir, edited by Wendy O'Brien and Lester Embree, 2001; The Bonds of Freedom: Simone de Beauvoir's Existential Ethics by Kristana Arp, 2001; Simone de Beauvoir: Philosophy and Feminism by Nancy Bauer, 2001; Simone de Beauvoir's Philosophy of Lived Experience: Literature and Metaphysics by Eleanore Holveck, 2002.

Biographical criticism may be regarded in some quarters as an outmoded literary tool. However, exceptions seem to be made when discussing the work of French novelist, essayist, and thinker Simone de Beauvoir. As Toril Moi points out in Feminist Theory and Simone de Beauvoir, critical accounts of de Beauvoir's work regularly reduce her literary output to questions of personality, in a way that is not apparent (and would be regarded as unacceptable) in accounts of the work of contemporaries. More than almost any other woman writer, de Beauvoir has been subjected to accusations of bad faith, inauthentic experience, and compliance with masculine domination. This adverse reception has been particularly pronounced in her native France, among the second wave of feminist thinkers who emerged in the late 1960s, with more favourable appraisals coming from Britain and the United States.

Why this situation has developed with such a courageous writer can be difficult to understand. Moi locates the dismissal of de Beauvoir to the supplanting in France of her humanist and existentialist beliefs by other intellectual interests such as structuralism and post-structuralism, and to the dominant media image of the writer as a blue-stockinged, masculinized woman, an ersatz Sartre. This negative response, however, denies the achievement of de Beauvoir, whose literary output deserves continued interest and covers a lifetime of scrupulous thought. Although educated as a philosopher, de Beauvoir wrote only one full-length philosophical study, Le Deuxième Sexe (The Second Sex), her study of female identity, preferring to employ the literary forms of the novel, play, and autobiography to act as practical examples of her philosophical creed. In her fiction, she works through, and refines upon, ideas from Sartrian Existentialism, with problems relating to liberty, action, choice, responsibility, and the certainty of death prominent throughout. Although to some extent didactic, her work is no abstract demonstration, and her writing is further characterized by considerable incorporation of personal experience. However, such is the clarity and crispness of her expression, coupled with the continuing pertinence of many of her ideas, that it is possible to read her work without any knowledge of her philosophical tenets and biographical details.

De Beauvoir's first literary work to be published was L'Invitée (She Came to Stay), an account of how a couple's life is placed under scrutiny by the advent of a young girl from Rouen. This work investigates a theme prominent in de Beauvoir's work, that of jealousy. Françoise Miquel has had a happy relationship with the actor Pierre Labrousse for eight years. However, the pairing is threatened when Xavière Pagès comes into their life. To Françoise, Xavière represents a most unsuitable match for Pierre, and the novel ends in tragedy with Françoise murdering her rival. This tale of a crime passionnel, told from different viewpoints, goes beyond a realistic study of excessive jealousy, infidelity, and desire, though, as de Beauvoir also attempts to provide a concrete example of Sartre's concept of the Other (as outlined in L'Être et le néant [Being and Nothingness]), with Xavière's presence providing an extreme example of how an understanding between two people is tested by the intervention of a third.

On the whole, de Beauvoir's writings alternate between those that are locked into depicting personal relationships as such, and those that portray people's interaction within the context of historical and political events. Her only play, the overlooked Les Bouches inutiles (Who Shall Die?), adapts the Italian chronicles of Sismondi to examine the issues of political power and choice. The inhabitants of Vaucelles in Flanders have freed themselves from the tyranny of the Duke of Burgundy and have set up a representative government. But food is scarce, and the town's council must decide who is to die and who can live. The "useless mouths" of the title represent the weaker members of the community—women, the infirm, and children—who, in a reversal of humanitarian practice, are chosen to die.

With its vivid picture of French political life on the Left in the 1930s and during the early years of the war, Le Sang des autres (The Blood of Others) also has a firmly realized political context. The head of a resistance group is waiting beside his lover who has been wounded in a rescue attempt sanctioned by him. As he waits for Hélène to die, Blomart has to decide whether to carry out political action on the following day. He muses upon his bourgeois upbringing, upon his rejection of his family's values, and upon his relationship with Hélène. In recalling his past, de Beauvoir's narrative moves from personal memories to a more objective evaluation of how Blomart was viewed by others. As in her other novels, the narrative structure of The Blood of Others is divided up between characters; here between the once self-centred but now politically-committed Hélène and the serious, guilt-obsessed Blomart. As in She Came to Stay, the issues raised here are those of interdependence, personal liberty, and responsibility, to which de Beauvoir adds questions of moral choice and commitment in times of personal and political crisis.

Tous les hommes sont mortels (All Men Are Mortal) stands out, rather as Sartre's Les Jeux sont faits (The Chips Are Down), does in his oeuvre, as a departure from the consistent realism of her works. Here de Beauvoir explores the omnipotence of death by creating a love affair between a mortal woman, Régine, an actress who is terrified of death, and Fosca, who is immortal. Régine wishes to challenge Fosca's immortality by loving him more than any previous woman. Fosca recounts his life, and rather in the way that The Second Sex provided a broad historical sweep of a single issue (woman's identity as Other), she leads us through a questioning of justifiable political measures from the 13th century onwards.

Régine is death-haunted, self-centred, and ambitious, while Fosca is unable to die, altruistic, and in his immortality deprived of personal goals. The pairing of individuals with very different personae is a strategy used throughout de Beauvoir's work, and appears again in her longest and most accomplished novel, Les Mandarins (The Mandarins). In this expansive work, de Beauvoir returns to a contemporary setting, and drawing extensively upon her acquaintances and experience, she outlines the manners and mores of the Paris-based Left just after the Liberation. The debate begun in The Blood of Others, on commitment, responsibility to self and others, and the difficult ethical choices posed by political action, is continued in this stimulating and densely textured account of de Beauvoir's circle. Centred on the threat to the autonomy of a political magazine (not that remote from Les Temps Modernes, to which she contributed), this novelization of lived events contrasts the political behaviour of an enthusiastic and vital writer, Perron, with that of an older, more pragmatic and experienced political activist, Dubreuilh. A further perspective is provided by Anne Dubreuilh, who is a watchful and contained figure compared to the impulsive and active Henri.

De Beauvoir's next novel, Les Belles Images, recreates the codes and types of behaviour of a certain social group as acutely as The Mandarins does. This is much less of a roman à clef than previous works, as the milieu that de Beauvoir has chosen is that of the well-heeled elite who work in the media (la grosse bourgeoisie technocratique). Surrounded by expensive possessions, entertained by fashionable chatter, and preoccupied by getting on, the characters in Les Belles Images have affairs, take expensive holidays, and suffer under the stresses of late 20th-century affluence. Les Belles Images deals with the question of personal development, above all that of children. The book's main character Laurence, whose own mother is successful and domineering, is challenged by her daughter Catherine's awareness of poverty and misery outside their comfortable world. Forced to recall her own childhood and to reappraise her relations with her ambitious mother and her surprisingly self-centred father, Laurence undergoes a personal crisis.

Despite the fact that de Beauvoir elected not to be a mother, family life, in particular the effect of ageing on existing relationships, dominates this phase of her writing career, as is evident from her collection of short stories La Femme rompue (The Woman Destroyed), and her studies of old age, Une Mort très douce (A Very Easy Death), which deals with her mother's final illness, and La Vieillesse (The Coming of Age). In her three stories, de Beauvoir dissects the fears, failings, and personal stagnation of women who have reached a certain age. L'Âge de discrétion (The Age of Discretion) investigates how an elderly teacher has to come to terms with her son becoming another person from the one that she has nurtured and idealized. Unable to change or compromise, she rejects him and finds herself at odds with her husband's more phlegmatic attitude. Monologue is a powerful, first-person account of a woman consumed by self-destructive spleen and antagonism towards her family. Alone on New Year's Eve, Murielle, who has been rejected by two husbands, on account of her being held responsible for her daughter's suicide, rages madly against her lot. The Woman Destroyed is the strongest piece in the collection, and is a diary account of a middle-aged woman discovering her husband's infidelities. Monique has deceived herself into thinking she has the perfect marriage. Her husband's infatuation with what Monique considers to be a totally unsuitable woman, a glamorous and striving lawyer, leaves the distraught wife trapped within what remains of her marriage, unable to break free and create a life for herself.

The desire to seize what choices are possible, and to subject your own life to constant scrutiny, are the central impressions of de Beauvoir's four-part autobiography that runs alongside her fictional work. As with Anaïs Nin's journals, these volumes provide a fascinating account of intellectual and artistic life in Paris, here from 1914 to the 1960s. The first volume, Mémoires d'une jeune fille rangée (Memoirs of a Dutiful Daughter), investigates her own upbringing as a child of a Parisian middle-class family and her rejection of her family's religious and moral views. La Force de l'âge (The Prime of Life) evaluates her intellectual and personal development after leaving university and during the war years. La Force des choses (Force of Circumstance), the most pessimistic of her memoirs, delineates her life in the context of political events such as the liberation, the revelation of Nazi atrocities and the Algerian war of independence. Tout compte fait (All Said and Done), set in the 1960s, reveals de Beauvoir as more confident about her political involvement and socialist beliefs.

—Anna-Marie Taylor

See the essays on The Mandarins and The Second Sex.

BECKETT, Samuel (Barclay)

Born: Foxrock, near Dublin, Ireland, 13 April 1906. Education: Educated at Ida Elsner's Academy, Stillorgan; Earlsfort House preparatory school; Portora Royal School, County Fermanagh; Trinity College, Dublin (foundation scholar), B.A. in French and Italian 1927, M.A. 1931. Family: Married Suzanne Deschevaux-Dumesnil in 1961 (died 1989). Career: French teacher, Campbell College, Belfast, 1928; lecturer in English, École Normale Supérieure, Paris, 1928–30; lecturer in French, Trinity College, Dublin, 1930–31; translator and writer in Paris in the 1920s and 1930s, and closely associated with James Joyce's circle; in Dublin and London, 1933–37; returned to Paris, 1937; joined French Resistance, 1940; fled to Roussillon in unoccupied France, where he remained 1942–45; worked at the Irish Red Cross Hospital, St. Lô, France, 1945; resumed literary activity in Paris after World War II; after 1945, published the majority of his work in both French and English versions. Awards: Evening Standard award, 1955; Obie award, 1958, 1960, 1962, 1964; Italia prize, 1959, International Publishers prize, 1961; Prix Filmcritice, 1965; Tours film prize, 1966; Nobel prize for literature, 1969; National Grand prize for theatre (France), 1975; New York Drama Critics Circle citation, 1984. D.Litt.: Dublin University, 1959. Member: German Academy of Art; Companion of Literature, Royal Society of Literature, 1984; Aosdána, 1986. Died: 22 December 1989.

PUBLICATIONS

Collection

The Complete Dramatic Works. 1986.

Plays

Le Kid, with Georges Pelorson (produced 1931).

En attendant Godot (produced 1953). 1952; as Waiting for Godot: Tragicomedy, translated by Beckett, 1954; as Waiting for Godot: With a Revised Text, edited with an introduction and notes by Dougal McMillan and James Knowlson, 1993.

Fin de partie: suivi de Acte sans paroles, music by John Beckett (produced 1957). 1957; as Endgame, edited by John Fletcher and Beryl S. Fletcher, 1970; as Endgame: A Play in One Act; Followed by Act Without Words: A Mime for One Player, translated by Beckett, 1958.

All That Fall (broadcast 1957; produced 1965). 1957; as Tous ceux qui tombent, translated by Beckett and Robert Pinget, 1957.

Krapp's Last Tape (produced 1958). With Embers, 1959; as La Dernière Bande, translated by Beckett and Pierre Leyris, 1960.

Embers (broadcast 1959). With Krapp's Last Tape, 1959; as Cendres, translated by Beckett and Robert Pinget, 1960.

Act Without Words II (produced 1960). In Krapp's Last Tape and Other Dramatic Pieces, 1960; as Acte sans paroles II, translated by Beckett, 1966.

La Manivelle/The Old Tune (bilingual edition), from the play by Robert Pinget. 1960; Beckett's text only (broadcast 1960), in Plays I, by Pinget, 1963.

Krapp's Last Tape and Other Dramatic Pieces (includes All That Fall; Embers; Act Without Words I and II). 1960.

Happy Days (produced 1961). 1961; as Oh, Les Beaux Jours, translated by Beckett, 1963; bilingual edition, edited by James Knowlson, 1978.

Words and Music, music by John Beckett (broadcast 1962). In Play and Two Short Pieces for Radio, 1964; as Paroles et Musique, translated by Samuel Beckett, 1966.

Cascando, music by Marcel Milhalovici (broadcast in French 1963). In Dramatische Dichtungen I, 1963; as Cascando: A Radio Piece

- for Music and Voice, translated by Beckett, in Play and Two Short Pieces for Radio, 1964.
- Play* (in German, as Spiel, produced 1963; as Play, produced 1964). In Play and Two Short Pieces for Radio, 1964; as Comédie, translated by Beckett, 1966.
- Play and Two Short Pieces for Radio*. 1964.
- Eh Joe* (televised 1966; produced 1978). In Eh Joe and Other Writings, 1967.
- Va et vient: Dramaticule* (in German as Kommen und Gehen, produced 1966; as Va et vient, produced 1966). 1966; as Come and Go: Dramaticule, translated by Beckett, 1967.
- Eh Joe and Other Writings* (includes Acts Without Words II and Film). 1967.
- Cascando and Other Short Dramatic Pieces* (includes Words and Music; Eh Joe; Play; Come and Go; Film). 1968.
- Film* (screenplay). 1969.
- Breath* (part of Oh! Calcutta! produced 1969). In Breath and Other Shorts, 1971.
- Breath and Other Shorts* (includes Come and Go; Act Without Words I and II; and the prose piece From an Abandoned Work). 1971.
- Not I* (produced 1972). 1973; as Pas moi, translated by Beckett, 1975.
- Fragment de théâtre*. 1974; as Theatre I and II, translated by Beckett, in Ends and Odds, 1976.
- Ghost Trio* (as Tryst, televised 1976). In Ends and Odds, 1976.
- That Time* (produced 1976). 1976; as Cette fois, translated by Beckett, 1978.
- Footfalls* (produced 1976). 1976; as Pas, translated by Beckett, 1977.
- Ends and Odds: Eight New Dramatic Pieces* (includes Not I; That Time; Footfalls; Ghost Trio; Theatre I and II; Radio I and II). 1976; as Ends and Odds: Plays and Sketches (includes Not I; That Time; Footfalls; Ghost Trio; . . . but the clouds . . . ; Theatre I and II; Radio I and II), 1977.
- Rough for Radio* (broadcast 1976). As Radio II, in Ends and Odds, 1976.
- Theatre I and II* (produced 1985). In Ends and Odds, 1976.
- A Piece of Monologue* (produced 1980). In Rockaby and Other Short Pieces, 1981.
- Rockaby* (produced 1981). In Rockaby and Other Short Pieces, 1981; as Berceuse, translated by Beckett, 1982.
- Rockaby and Other Short Pieces*. 1981.
- Ohio Impromptu* (produced 1981). In Rockaby and Other Short Pieces, 1981; as Impromptu d'Ohio, 1982.
- Catastrophe* (produced 1982). 1982; in Collected Shorter Plays, 1984.
- Catastrophe et autres dramaticules: Cette fois, Solo, Berceuse, Impromptu d'Ohio* (produced 1982). 1982; in Collected Shorter Plays, 1984.
- Three Occasional Pieces* (includes A Piece of Monologue; Rockaby; Ohio Impromptu). 1982.
- Quad* (as Quadrat 1+2, televised in German 1982; as Quad, televised 1982). In Collected Shorter Plays, 1984.
- Nacht und Träume* (televised 1983). In Collected Shorter Plays, 1984.
- What Where* (in German, as Was Wo, produced 1983; in English, produced 1983). In Collected Shorter Plays, 1984.
- Collected Shorter Plays*. 1984.
- Ohio Impromptu, Catastrophe, and What Where*. 1984.
- The Shorter Plays*, edited by S.E. Gontarski. 1992.
- Eleuthéria*, translated from the French by Barbara Wright, 1996.
- Screenplays: Film, 1965.
- Radio Plays: All That Fall, 1957; Embers, 1959, The Old Tune, from a play by Robert Pinget, 1960; Words and Music, 1962; Cascando, 1963; Rough for Radio, 1976.
- Television Plays: Eh Joe, 1966; Tryst, 1976; Shades (Ghost Trio, Not I, . . . but the clouds . . .), 1977; Quadrat 1+2, 1982 (Germany); Quad, 1982; Nacht und Träume, 1983.

Fiction

- More Pricks Than Kicks*. 1934.
- Murphy* (in English). 1938; translated by Beckett and Alfred Péron, 1947.
- Molloy* (in French). 1951; translated by Beckett and Patrick Bowles, 1955.
- Malone meurt*. 1951; as Malone Dies, translated by Beckett, 1956.
- L'Innommable*. 1953; as The Unnamable, translated by Beckett, 1958.
- Watt* (in English). 1953; translated into French by Ludovic and Agnès Janvier in collaboration with Beckett, 1968.
- Nouvelles et textes pour rien*. 1955; as Stories and Texts for Nothing, translated by Beckett and Richard Seaver, 1967.
- From an Abandoned Work*, 1958; as D'un ouvrage abandonné, translated by Ludovic and Agnès Janvier in collaboration with Beckett, 1967.
- Three Novels*. 1959.
- Molloy, Malone Dies, The Unnamable*. 1960.
- Comment c'est*. 1961; as How It Is, translated by Beckett, 1964.
- Imagination morte imaginez*. 1965; as Imagination Dead Imagine, translated by Beckett, 1965.
- Assez*. 1966; as Enough, translated by Beckett, in No's Knife, 1967.
- Bing* (in French), 1966; as Ping, translated by Beckett, in No's Knife, 1967.
- Têtes-Mortes* (includes D'Un Ouvrage Adandonné; Assez; Bing; Imagination morte imaginez). 1967; translated by Beckett, in No's Knife, 1967.
- No's Knife: Collected Shorter Prose 1945–66* (includes Stories and Texts for Nothing; From an Abandoned Work; Enough; Imagination Dead Imagine; Ping). 1967.
- Dans le cylindre*. 1967.
- L'Issue*. 1968.
- Sans*. 1969; as Lessness, translated by Beckett, 1970.
- Mercier et Camier*. 1970; as Mercier and Camier, translated by Beckett, 1974.
- Séjour*. 1970.
- Premier Amour*. 1970; as First Love, translated by Beckett, 1973; in First Love and Other Novellas, edited by Gerry Dukes, 2000.
- Le Dépeupleur*. 1971; as The Lost Ones, translated by Beckett, 1972.
- The North*. 1972.
- Abandonné*. 1972.
- Au loin un oiseau*. 1973.
- First Love and Other Shorts*. 1974.
- Fizzles*. 1976.
- Pour finir encore et autres foirades*. 1976; as For to End Yet Again and Other Fizzles, translated by Beckett, 1976.
- All Strange Away*. 1976.
- Four Novellas (First Love; The Expelled; The Calmative; The End)*. 1977; as The Expelled and Other Novellas, 1980.
- Six Residua*. 1978.
- Company*. 1980.

Mal vu mat dit. 1981; as Ill Seen Ill Said, translated by Beckett, 1982; as Samuel Beckett's Mal vu mal dit/Ill Seen Ill Said, edited by Charles Krance, 1996.

Worstward Ho. 1983.

Stirrings Still. 1988.

Nohow On (includes Company; Ill Seen Ill Said; Worstward Ho). 1989.

Soubresauts. 1989.

Dream of Fair to Middling Women, edited by Eoin O'Brien and Edith Fournie. 1992.

Samuel Beckett: The Complete Short Prose, 1929–1989, edited with an introduction and notes by S.E. Gontarski, 1995.

Verse

Whoroscope. 1930.

Echo's Bones and Other Precipitates. 1935.

Gedichte (collected poems in English and French, with German translations). 1959.

Poems in English. 1961.

Poèmes. 1968.

Collected Poems in English and French. 1977; revised edition, as Collected Poems 1930–1978, 1984.

Mirlitonades. 1978.

Other

"Dante . . . Bruno. Vico . . . Joyce," in Our Exagmination Round His Factification for Incamination of Work in Progress. 1929.

Proust. 1931; with Three Dialogues with Georges Duthuit, 1965.

Bram van Velde (in French), with Georges Duthuit and Jacques Putman. 1958; translated by Beckett and Olive Classe, 1960.

A Beckett Reader. 1967.

The Collected Works. 1970.

I Can't Go On: A Selection from the Work of Beckett, edited by Richard Seaver. 1976.

Disjecta: Miscellaneous Writings and a Dramatic Fragment, edited by Ruby Cohn. 1983.

Collected Shorter Prose 1945–1980. 1984.

Happy Days: The Production Notebook, edited by James Knowlson. 1985.

As the Story Was Told: Uncollected and Late Prose. 1990.

Krapp's Last Tape: Beckett's Theatrical Notebook, edited by James Knowlson. 1991.

The Theatrical Notebooks of Samuel Beckett, edited by Dougald McMillan, James Knowlson, and S.E. Gontarski. 4 vols., 1992.

Samuel Beckett: Photographs by John Minihan. 1995.

No Author Better Served: The Correspondence of Samuel Beckett and Alan Schneider, edited by Maurice Harmon. 1998.

Samuel Beckett: A Casebook, edited by Jennifer M. Jeffers. 1998.

Beckett's Dream Notebook, edited by John Pilling. 1999.

Translator, Negro: An Anthology. 1934; as Beckett in Black and Red: The Translations for Nancy Cunard's Negro (1934), edited by Alan Warren Friedman. 2000.

Translator, Anthology of Mexican Poetry, edited by Octavio Paz. 1958.

Translator, The Old Tune, by Robert Pinget. 1960.

Translator, with others, Selected Poems, by Alain Bosquet. 1963.

Translator, Zone, by Guillaume Apollinaire. 1972.

Translator, Drunken Boat, by Arthur Rimbaud, edited by James Knowlson and Felix Leakey. 1977.

Translator, with others, No Matter No Fact. 1988.

*

Bibliography: Samuel Beckett: His Works and His Critics: An Essay in Bibliography by Raymond Federman and John Fletcher, 1970 (works to 1966); Samuel Beckett: Checklist and Index of His Published Works 1967–76 by Robin John Davis, 1979; Samuel Beckett: A Reference Guide by Cathleen Culotta Andonian, 1988.

Critical Studies: Samuel Beckett; A Critical Study, 1961, revised edition, 1968, and A Reader's Guide to Samuel Beckett, 1973, both by Hugh Kenner; Samuel Beckett: The Comic Gamut, 1962, Back to Beckett, 1974, and Just Play: Beckett's Theater, 1980, all by Ruby Cohn, and Samuel Beckett: A Collection of Criticism, 1975, and Waiting for Godot: A Casebook, 1987, both edited by Cohn; Samuel Beckett: The Language of Self by Frederick J. Hoffman, 1962; Beckett by Richard N. Coe, 1964, retitled as Samuel Beckett, 1964; The Novels of Samuel Beckett, 1964, and Samuel Beckett's Art, 1967, both by John Fletcher, and Beckett: A Study of His Plays by Fletcher and John Spurling, 1972, revised edition as Beckett the Playwright, 1985; Samuel Beckett by William York Tindall, 1964; Samuel Beckett: A Collection of Critical Essays edited by Martin Esslin, 1965; Journey to Chaos: Samuel Beckett's Early Fiction by Raymond Federman, 1965; Beckett at 60: A Festschrift edited by John Calder, 1967; Samuel Beckett's "Murphy": A Critical Excursion by Robert Harrison, 1968; Samuel Beckett by Ronald Hayman, 1968, revised edition, 1980; All I Can Manage More Than I Could: An Approach to the Plays of Samuel Beckett by Alec Reid, 1968; Twentieth Century Interpretations of "Endgame" edited by Bell Gale Chevigny, 1969; The Long Sonata of the Dead: A Study of Samuel Beckett by Michael Robinson, 1969; Samuel Beckett: A New Approach by Guy C. Barnard, 1970; Samuel Beckett Now: Critical Approaches to His Novels, Poetry, and Plays edited by Melvin J. Friedman, 1970; Samuel Beckett: Poet and Critic by Lawrence E. Harvey, 1970; Beckett: A Study of His Novels, 1970, and The Plays of Samuel Beckett, 1972, both by Eugene Webb; Samuel Beckett by Francis Doherty, 1971; The Shape of Chaos: An Interpretation of the Art of Samuel Beckett by David Hesla, 1971; Angels of Darkness: Dramatic Effect in Samuel Beckett by Colin Duckworth, 1972; The Fiction of Beckett: Form and Effect by H. Porter Abbott, 1973; Samuel Beckett by A. Alvarez, 1973, revised edition, 1992; Art and the Artist in the Works of Samuel Beckett by Hannah Case Copeland, 1975; Samuel Beckett's Dramatic Language by James Eliopoulos, 1975; Beckett the Shape Changer edited by Katharine J. Worth, 1975, and Waiting for Godot and Happy Days by Worth, 1990; Condemned to Life: The World of Samuel Beckett by Kenneth and Alice Hamilton, 1976; Samuel Beckett by John Pilling, 1976, and The Cambridge Companion to Beckett edited by Pilling, 1994; Forme et signification dans le théâtre de Samuel Beckett by Betty Rojzman, 1976; Beckett and Broadcasting: A Study of the Works of Samuel Beckett for and in Radio and Television by Clas Zilliacus, 1976; Beckett's Happy Days: A Manuscript Study, 1977, and The Intent of Undoing in Samuel Beckett's Dramatic Texts, 1985, both by S.E. Gontarski, and On Beckett: Essays and Criticism, 1986, and The Beckett Studies Reader, 1993, both edited by Gontarski, 1993; Beckett/Beckett by Vivian Mercier, 1977; Samuel Beckett: A Biography by Deirdre Bair, 1978; A Student's Guide to the Plays of Samuel Beckett by Beryl S. Fletcher,

1978, revised edition, with John Fletcher, 1985; The Shape of Paradox: An Essay on Waiting for Godot by Bert O. Slates, 1978; The Samuel Beckett Manuscripts: A Critical Study by Richard L. Admussen, 1979; Samuel Beckett: The Critical Heritage edited by Raymond Federman and Lawrence Graver, 1979; Beckett and Joyce: Friendship and Fiction by Barbara Reich Gluck, 1979; Frescoes of the Skull: The Later Prose and Drama of Samuel Beckett edited by James Knowlson and John Pilling, 1979; The Transformations of Godot by Frederick Busi, 1980; Waiting for Death: The Philosophical Significance of Beckett's En attendant Godot by Ramona Cormier, 1980; Samuel Beckett and the Voice of Species: A Study of the Prose Fiction by Eric P. Levy, 1980; Accommodating the Chaos: Samuel Beckett's Nonrelational Art by J.E. Dearlove, 1982; Abysmal Games in the Novels of Samuel Beckett by Angela B. Moorjani, 1982; Beckett's Real Silence by Hélène L. Baldwin, 1983; Samuel Beckett: Humanistic Perspectives edited by Morris Beja, S.E. Gontarski, and Pierre Astier, 1983; Samuel Beckett by Charles Lyons, 1983; Canter and Chronicles: The Use of Narrative in the Plays of Samuel Beckett and Harold Pinter by Kristin Morrison, 1983; Beckett's Theaters: Interpretations for Performance by Sidney Homan, 1984; The Development of Samuel Beckett's Fiction, 1984, and Innovation in Samuel Beckett's Fiction, 1993, both by Rubin Rabinovitz; Samuel Beckett and the Meaning of Being: A Study in Ontological Parable by Lance St. John Butler, 1984, Rethinking Beckett: A Collection of Critical Essays edited by St. John Butler and Robin J. Davies, 1990, and Critical Essays on Samuel Beckett edited by St. John Butler, 1993; Samuel Beckett: Modern Critical Views edited by Harold Bloom, 1985; Beckett on File edited by Virginia Cooke, 1985; Beckett at 80/ Beckett in Context edited by Enoch Brater, 1986, and Beyond Minimalism: Beckett's Late Style in the Theater, 1987, and Why Beckett, 1989, both by Brater; Samuel Beckett by Linda Ben-Zvi, 1986, and Women in Beckett: Performance and Critical Perspectives edited by Ben-Zvi, 1990; Understanding Beckett: A Study of Monologue and Gesture in the Works of Samuel Beckett by Peter Gidal, 1986; As No Other Dare Fail: For Samuel Beckett on His 80th Birthday, 1986; Beckett's New Worlds: Style in Metafiction by Susan D. Brienza, 1987; Beckett Translating/Translating Beckett edited by Alan Warren Friedman, Charles Rossman, and Dina Sherzer, 1987; The Broken Window: Beckett's Dramatic Perspective by Jane Alison Hale, 1987; Myth and Ritual in the Plays of Beckett by Katherine H. Burkman, 1988; Beckett: Repetition, Theory, and Text by Stephen Connor, 1988; Beckett and Babel: An Investigation into the Status of the Bilingual Work by Brian T. Fitch, 1988; Beckett's Critical Complicity: Carnival, Contestation and Tradition by Sylvia Debevec Henning, 1988; Beckett in the Theatre: The Author as Practical Playwright and Director 1: From Waiting for Godot to Krapp's Last Tape by Douglas McMillan and Martha Fehsenfeld, 1988; Theatre of Shadows: Beckett's Drama 1956–1976 by Rosemary Poutney, 1988; The Humour of Beckett by Valerie Topsfield, 1988; Beckett and Zen: A Study of Dilemma in the Novels of Samuel Beckett by Paul Foster, 1989; Beckett: Waiting for Godot by Lawrence Graver, 1989; Beckett in Performance by Jonathan Kalb, 1989; Beckett by Andrew K. Kennedy, 1989; The World of Beckett by Alan Astro, 1990; Waiting for Godot: Form in Movement by Thomas Cousineau, 1990; Beckett's Fiction: In Different Words by Leslie Hill, 1990; Beckett's Self-Referential Drama by Shimon Levy, 1990; Unwording the World: Beckett's Prose Works after the Nobel Prize by Carla Locatelli, 1990; Paradox and Desire in Beckett's Fiction by David Watson, 1990; Early Beckett: Art and Allusion in More Pricks Than Kicks and Murphy by Anthony Farrow, 1991; Wandering and Home: Beckett's

Metaphysical Narrative by Eyal Amiran, 1993; Beckett's Dying Words: The Clarendon Lecture 1990 by Christopher Ricks, 1993; Endgame: The Ashbin Play by Arthur N. Athanason, 1993; Women in Samuel Beckett's Prose and Drama: Her Own Other by Mary Bryden, 1993; Theatre on Trial: Samuel Beckett's Later Drama by Anna McMullan, 1993; Critical Essays on Samuel Beckett, edited by Lance St. John Butler, 1993; Directing Beckett, edited by Lois Oppenheim, 1994; The Drama in the Text: Beckett's Late Fiction by Enoch Brater, 1994; Beckett: the Irish Dimension by Mary Junker, 1995; Samuel Beckett and the End of Modernity by Richard Begam, 1996; Samuel Beckett: The Last Modernist by Anthony Cronin, 1996; Damned to Fame: The Life of Samuel Beckett by James Knowlson, 1996; Technique and Tradition in Beckett's Trilogy of Novels by Gönöl Pultar, 1996; Conversations With (and About) Beckett by Mel Gussow, 1996; The World of Samuel Beckett, 1906–1946 by Lois Gordon, 1996; Beckett Before Godot by John Pilling, 1997; Samuel Beckett and Music, edited by Mary Bryden, 1997; Beckett and the Mythology of Psychoanalysis by Phil Baker, 1997; Samuel Beckett's Artistic Theory and Practice: Criticism, Drama, and Early Fiction by James Acheson, 1997; The Critical Response to Samuel Beckett, edited by Cathleen Culotta Andonian, 1998; Samuel Beckett and the Idea of God by Mary Bryden, 1998; Beckett and Poststructuralism by Anthony Uhlmann, 1999; Saying I No More: Subjectivity and Consciousness in the Prose of Samuel Beckett by Daniel Katz, 1999; Samuel Beckett's Theatre: Life Journeys by Katharine Worth, 1999; No-thing Is Left to Tell: Zen/Chaos Theory in the Dramatic Art of Samuel Beckett by John Leeland and Kundert-Gibbs, 1999; After the Final No: Samuel Beckett's Trilogy by Thomas J. Cousineau, 1999; The Complete Critical Guide to Samuel Beckett by David Pattie, 2000; Chronicles of Disorder: Samuel Beckett and the Cultural Politics of the Modern Novel by David Weisberg, 2000; Sails on the Herring Fleet: Essays on Beckett by Herbert Blau, 2000; Samuel Beckett, edited and introduced by Jennifer Birkett and Kate Ince, 2000; How It Was: a Memoir of Samuel Beckett by Anne Atik, 2001; The Philosophy of Samuel Beckett by John Calder, 2001; Interpreting Narrative in the Novels of Samuel Beckett by Jonathan Boulter, 2001; A Beckett Canon by Ruby Cohn, 2001; Engagement and Indifference: Beckett and the Political, edited by Henry Sussman and Christopher Devenney, 2001.

* * *

Samuel Beckett has achieved recognition as a powerful creative writer working in both English and French. His prose fiction and drama are often startlingly innovative in form, and this break with tradition links him to the French new novelists, and to the theatre of the absurd. Like other writers of the 1950s and 1960s he moved away not only from realism and psychological presentation of character, but also from the limitations of rational sequence and plot. Beckett cannot be labelled however. He has a distinctive voice that places him outside all schools and categories. His best work combines a fiercely uncompromising struggle with essential questions and an awareness that there are no answers: the key word in his work is “perhaps.” This awareness that his is “an art of failure” could lead to despair, and most of his characters are certainly living in a grimly purgatorial world, condemned to talk or write, in the forlorn hope of finding the words which will give them the right to silence, or simply to help pass the time of waiting, as in En attendant Godot (Waiting for Godot). What makes the works life-enhancing is the fact that the black vision of characters struggling to make sense of a cruel universe is coupled with a superb poetic feeling for language, and a brilliant, self-mocking sense of humour.

Beckett wrote Watt, his last major novel in English, in 1953, and the change to French clearly marks a change of direction, and the discovery of his mature style. During the earlier period he published some poetry, and his first successful novel, Murphy. This has a serious theme, as Murphy, a “seedy solipsist,” seeks to escape the outer world, and spend more time in his mind, “in the dark, in the will-lessness,” but his way of achieving this, by tying himself up naked in a rocking chair, typically undermines the seriousness. The novel works best as a brilliantly comic account of Murphy’s battles with the everyday world he wishes to escape. Murphy is an odd novel, but it has characters, a plot, and a recognizable setting in London. Such traditional elements have been dropped in Watt, and the fiction in French confirms this new form.

The first major work in French is the trilogy: Molloy, Malone meurt (Malone Dies), and L’Innommable (The Unnamable). Molloy tells us at the beginning of his narrative that he is now in his mother’s room, compelled to write stories, and aware of an inner voice which speaks “of a world collapsing endlessly, a frozen world, under a faint untroubled sky.” He tells the story of his journey, through a hostile world, towards his mother. His progress is marked by a steady physical deterioration, until he is finally crawling through a forest, with the aid of his crutches. This grim quest is constantly interrupted by comic digressions that Molloy uses to escape from his “calvary with no hope of crucifixion.” For the reader these episodes, such as the detailed account of how Molloy organizes his “sucking stones,” give the novel a defiantly comic vigour, in the face of suffering. There is also a black irony about the society through which the tramp-like Molloy journeys: “Day is the time for lynching, for sleep is sacred.” The second part of Molloy is narrated by Moran, who seems the opposite of Molloy, comfortably settled in a regular social and domestic routine, until he is sent on a mission to find Molloy. He is vaguely aware at the outset that the Molloy he has to find is within himself, and by the time he returns he has come to resemble his quarry. The novel can be interpreted, John Fletcher suggests, as “an epic of the search for one’s real self” (The Novels of Samuel Beckett, 1964), and this is a central theme of the whole trilogy. Malone Dies focuses on the writer in his room, waiting to die, but hoping to tell the right story meanwhile. “Words and images run riot in my head,” he writes, but his stories are interrupted by comments on the decrepit, suffering body, whose pain is so bearable compared with that of the questing mind.

Malone wonders at times if he has not already died. The narrator of The Unnamable is simply a voice, not knowing whether he has died, or is waiting to be born. He is in a “hell of stories,” forced to go on speaking, but hoping to attain silence and peace. If he ever reaches that silence, however, he will not know it: “in the silence you don’t know.” The final words of the desperate voice are: “I can’t go on, I’ll go on.” Beckett himself did go on, and in the best of his later works found completely new ways of pursuing the same concerns, often starting from the images of suffering and guilt in the trilogy. Comment c’est (How It Is) for instance, develops around the image of a muddy hell, in which torturer and victim endlessly exchange roles.

Beckett’s plays explore the same themes as the novels, but in Waiting for Godot the two old tramps, waiting day after day for the mysterious Mr Godot to come, are given a comical human warmth towards each other that counterpoints the bleak hopelessness of their waiting. The only people who do pass by the stretch of country road, with its solitary tree, are the brutal whip-cracking Pozzo and his slave, Lucky. Perhaps, it is hinted, Pozzo is Godot, and they have not recognized him. They hope that Godot will “save” them—he is the only reason for their suffering existence; but when the second act shows the same situation, with Pozzo now blind, and Lucky dumb, this hope seems futile, and Pozzo sums up the feeling of the play in the image “they give birth astride of a grave.” The best productions keep a balance between the comic games the tramps play, and the blackness they are trying to forget. Fin de partie (Endgame) is more inhuman. Hamm, blind and crippled, spends his days in a cell-like room with Clov, perhaps his son, and his parents, confined to dustbins. They are waiting, but only for the end, which may never come. They pass the time with wearisome routines, aware that what keeps them there is the dialogue. The later plays take the process of compression even further, using powerful theatrical images, which work despite the absence of action or plot. In Happy Days (Oh, Les Beaux Jours) Winnie is buried to the waist in the earth, and by Act II she has sunk to her neck. The contrast between her situation and her determinedly optimistic chatter is the basis for the play. In Not I (Pas moi) the character is physically reduced to a mouth, pouring out a stream of words in the hope that one day she will be allowed to fall silent.

Beckett’s mastery, of form, the “power of the text to claw,” is an important element in his success, but so too is the fact that he struggles painfully, humorously, with questions which have always been central for the human spirit.

—John Rothenberg

See the essays on Endgame; Molloy, Malone Dies, The Unnamable; and Waiting for Godot.

BEI DAO

Born: Zhao Zhenkai in Beijing, 2 August 1949. Education: B.A., Chinese Language and Literature, the University Extension, Beijing, June 1983. Family: Divorced; one daughter. Career: Founding editor of Jintian [Today], 1978–80 and 1990–present; literary editor of Xin guan cha [New observation], 1980–81; literary editor of Zhongguo baodao [China report], 1981–85; deputy editor-in-chief of Guoji shitan [International poetry], 1986–1987; visiting writer, International Writers’ Program, University of Iowa, 1989; banished from China by the Chinese government, 1989 to 2001; visiting poet at European universities, 1989–1993; visiting poet or professor at American universities, 1994–present. Lives in Davis, California. Awards: May Fourth Literary prize from Beijing University, China, 1985; National award for Best Poetry Collection, China, 1988; Honorary member of the Swedish PEN, 1989; Tucholsky prize from the Swedish PEN, 1990; PEN American Center Freedom to Write award, 1990; Honorary member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters, 1996; Honorary member of the House of Poetry in Morocco, 1998; Guggenheim Fellow, 1998. Member: Chinese Writers Association, 1985; Advisory Board of PEN Foundation’s Emergency Fund, 1992; Board of Directors of the Human Rights in China; Board of Directors of the International Parliament of Writers, 1995.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Bei Dao shixun (Selected poems of Bei Dao). 1985.

Bei Dao xunji (Selected works of Bei Dao). 2000.

Verse

Taiyangcheng zhaji; as Notes From the City of Sun, translated by Bonnie S. McDougall. 1983.

Guilai de moshengren [The Homecoming Stranger]. 1987.

Bayue de mengyouzhe; as The August Sleepwalker, translated by Bonnie S. McDougall. 1988.

Jiuxue; as Old Snow, translated by Bonnie S. McDougall and Chen Maiping. 1991.

Juli de xingshi; as Forms of Distance, translated by David Hinton. 1994.

Wuye geshou [Midnight singer]. 1995.

Lingdu yishang de fengjing; as Landscape Over Zero, translated by David Hinton with Yanbing Chen. 1996.

Shouye; as Nightwatch, translated by David Hinton. 1999.

Kaisuo; as Unlock, translated by Eliot Weinberger and Iona Man-Cheong. 2000.

Zai tianya; as At the Sky's Edge, translated by David Hinton. 2001.

Fiction

Bodong; as Waves, translated by Bonnie S. McDougall and Susette Ternent Cooke. 1987.

Other

Lan fangzi; as Blue House, translated by Theodore Hutters and Fengying Ming. 2000.

Translator, Bei Ou xiandai shi xuan [Contemporary Scandinavian poetry]. 1987.

*

Critical Studies: "Bei Dao's Poetry: Revelation and Communication" by Bonnie S. McDougall, in Modern Chinese Literature, vol. 1, no. 2, 1985; "Zhao Zhenkai's Fiction: A Study in Cultural Alienation," in Modern Chinese Literature, vol. 1, no. 1, 1984; "Quest and Confrontation: The Poetic and Fictional Voices of Bei Dao/Zhao Zhenkai," in Vägar till Kina: Göran Malmqvist 60 år, Orientaliska studier, edited by Bert Edström et al., 1984; "A New Beginning for the Modernist Chinese Novel: Zhao Zhenkai's Bodong" by Philip Williams, in Modern Chinese Literature, vol. 5, no. 1, 1989; "What Is World Poetry?" by Stephen Owen, in The New Republic, 19 November 1990; "Ideology and Conflicts in Bei Dao's Poetry" by Dian Li, in Modern Chinese Literature, vol. 9, no. 2, 1996; "Translating Bei Dao: Translatability as Reading and Critique," in Babel, the Official Journal of the International Federation of Translators, vol. 44, no. 4, 1999.

* * *

Bei Dao has been writing poetry for over twenty years, and he is easily the best-known living Chinese poet in both China and the West today, although the reasons for his fame are very different. In China, he is a memory, a literary giant of the 1980s whose path-breaking writings influenced a generation and sparked the democracy movement that helped accelerate the country's reform and openness. In the West, he is a reminder of China's repression and intolerance, a poetic enigma whose well-translated elliptical syntax and cryptic imagery represent a complex interior response to a hostile exterior world. Such different reactions toward Bei Dao underscore the transformation of the poet himself—from an uncompromising young rebel in pre-1989 China to a mellowing and meditative poetic voice in exile in the West.

Poetry almost happened to Bei Dao by accident. After high school, Bei Dao was sent to work as a construction worker in a Beijing suburb, where he started to write perhaps to fight boredom and a feeling of despair. By the end of the 1970s, China had just awakened from the nightmare of its Cultural Revolution and the oppressive Maoist ideology had lost much of its credibility. After years of overfeeding on the formulaic propaganda of socialist literature, the public, especially young readers, was ready for an alternative. Thus Bei Dao's personal pulse became that of a generation. Although, understandably, his writings paralleled the official poetry in the style of grandiosity and slogan-ism, they could not be more different in their messages. The significance of a simple statement such as "I—do—not—believe!" can only be grasped by those who must believe nothing else but Mao.

The central concern of Bei Dao's poetry at this time was a plea for the restoration of personal space and life's ordinariness against a general deprivation of humanity in China for the past decade. "I am no hero," he writes, "In an age without heroes / I just want to be a man." Being a man means, Bei Dao repeatedly clarifies, living a life of dignity and fulfillment without political consequences. Such apolitical ideas were given a political reading by both the student protesters of the 1980s and the Chinese government. When Bei Dao's influence spread from small circles of friends to many college campuses, the literary establishment launched a campaign against him and a like-minded group of young poets and maliciously labeled their works as "Misty Poetry," a label that Bei Dao would later gleefully embrace. The official hostility made Bei Dao famous but it ultimately led to his forced exile in 1989 following the Tian'anmen Student Protest.

"The exile of the word has begun," Bei Dao announced upon his arrival in Europe and immediately became the symbol of China's abortive democracy movement. He revived his short-lived journal Jintian [Today] and made it an important forum for the community of exiled Chinese writers and artists. As tragic as exile has been to his family life, Bei Dao has relished the unexpected freedom and the opportunity to work "the word" to attain the realm of pure poetry, a poetry of linguistic exactitude and aesthetic bliss. In terms of style and techniques, he has become a bolder experimentalist in truncated word-combinations and disjointed images. He has also reinvigorated his efforts to draw on classical Chinese poetry as well as his favorite Western poets such as Paul Celan and César Vallejo. Removed from familiar sensations and relationships, Bei Dao seizes the singularity of his life in exile and contextualizes his heightened sense of subjectivity in everything that is happening—be it an accidental mosquito bite, a Bach concert or a phone call home. In this mundaneness of life, however, an opponent always lurks, invisible and in some cases unnamable, working to undermine life's promise and fragment the self. It can be argued that exile is only an occasion for Bei Dao's profound sense of alienation and pessimism and that he also is reiterating a truth about modern life in general, a truth that is more powerful and long-lasting than a single political ideology. This is the very reason that Bei Dao deserves to be among the most potent voices in contemporary Chinese and world poetry.

—Dian Li

BELLI, Gioconda

Born: Managua, Nicaragua, 9 December 1948. Education: Graduated from the Royal School of Santa Isabel, Madrid, Spain, 1964; diploma in advertising and journalism, Charles Morris Price School, Philadelphia, PA, 1965; studied advertising management at INCAE, Harvard University's school of business administration in Central America; took courses in philosophy and literature at Georgetown University. Family: Married 1) Mariano A. Downing, 1967 (divorced 1976), two daughters; 2) Sergio de Castro, 1977 (divorced, 1979), one son; 3) Charles Castaldi, 1987, one daughter. Career: Worked in advertising and publicity, 1973–78; political-diplomatic commission, FSLN (Sandinista Liberation Front), 1978–79; director of communications and public relations, Ministry of Economic Planning, Sandinista government, 1979–82; international press liaison, FSLN, 1982–83; director of State Communications, 1984–86; resigned political appointments to become a full time writer, 1986. Awards: National University of Nicaragua poetry prize, 1972; Casa de las Americas poetry prize, 1978; Editors and Publishers Best Political Novel of the Year award, Friedrich Ebert Foundation Book Sellers, for The Inhabited Woman, 1989; Anna Seghers prize, German Democratic Republic, 1989.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Amor insurrecto. 1985.
Poesía reunida. 1989.
El ojo de la mujer. 1991.
Sortilegio contra el frío. 1992.

Verse

Sobre la grama. 1972.
Línea de fuego. 1978.
Truenos y arco iris. 1982.
De la costilla de Eva. 1987, as From Eve's Rib, translated by Steven F. White, 1989.
Apogeo. 1997.

Fiction

La mujer habitada. 1988, as The Inhabited Woman, translated by Kathleen March, 1994.
Sofía de las presagios. 1990.
Waslala. 1996.

Other

El taller de las mariposas (for children). 1994.

El país bajo mi piel: memorias de amor y guerra (memoirs). 2001; translated by Gioconda Belli and Kristina Cordero, 2001.

*

Critical Studies: “Gioconda Belli: The Erotic Politics of the Great Mother” by Kathleen March, in Monographic Review, vol. 6, 1990; “Gioconda Belli, novelista revolucionaria” by Maria Salgado, in Monographic Review, vol. 8, 1992; “La transformación de la mujer y la nación en la poesía comprometida de Gioconda Belli” by Pilar Moyano, in Revista Canadiense de Estudios Hispánicos, vol. 2, 1993; “Entradas a la historia: La mujer habitada” by Amy Kaminsky, in Hispamérica, vol. 67, 1994; “Gioconda Belli: The Magic and/of Eroticism” by Arturo Arias, in The Postmodern in Latin and Latino American Cultural Narratives, 1996; Novels of Testimony and Resistance from Central America by Linda Craft, 1997.

* * *

Gioconda Belli is one of contemporary Central America's best known writers and one of the few women writers from this region whose works have been translated and published in the United States and throughout Europe. Belli's literary career has from its beginning been intimately connected to her political life and the political life of her country, Nicaragua. The Sandinista revolution, which ousted the dictator Anastasio Somoza in 1979, gained widespread international attention in the 1970s and 1980s. The image of youthful Sandinista revolutionaries who were often poets, artists, and intellectuals, appealed to many and Gioconda Belli was one of the revolution's most articulate spokespersons. Belli joined the FSLN (Sandinista National Liberation Front) in 1970 and was in the underground resistance until 1975, when she had to flee the Somoza regime's secret police and go into exile. During her exile, she continued to be active in communications and logistic operations. When the Sandinistas came to power in 1979, she held various government positions, working primarily in communications, journalism, and public relations. Her profound commitment to the revolutionary ideal of working together to create a more just society is unquestionably at the heart of her writing, both poetry and fiction.

Her early poetry, particularly Sobre la grama [On the Grass], primarily celebrates heterosexual womanhood. Some of her recurring poetic themes include erotic pleasures, the beauty and satisfactions of all the stages of motherhood, and the irrepressible longing to live a full, creative, committed life. As her personal involvement in the revolution grew, her poetry reflected this experience. In subsequent books of poetry she continued to write sensual poems that celebrated physical love, but often the lover in these poems is a comrade in arms. Her lyric voice matured and evolved into that of a committed militant and revolutionary muse, a patriot who passionately loves her small, impoverished, tropical country and hopes her poems will inspire other Nicaraguans to dare to dream of and fight for a better life in a free and equitable society. In her book of poetry, Apogeo [Apogee], she celebrates mature womanhood in poems that are sensual and self-confident and that challenge stereotypes of older women.

Belli published her first novel, La mujer habitada (The Inhabited Woman), in 1988, shortly after she resigned her political appointments to become a full time writer. It is the story of a young, middle class woman who joins the underground resistance and struggles to define her role in it in the face of her lover's objections and her own middle class values and prejudices. Elements of magic and indigenous history and myth are woven into the plot and foreshadow her next novel, Sofia de las presagios [Sophie of the Omens], in which a young woman rebels against traditional society with the aid of a local medicine woman. Her last work of fiction to date, Waslala, is a futuristic novel that addresses the urgent issues of environmental destruction and the fate of small, impoverished nations. The protagonist is a young woman who travels in search of her mother, who had left home many years earlier to help found a utopian community in a remote part of the country. Her quest teaches her the value of having a vision of a better world and the beauty of living one's life committed to its realization. In 2001, Belli published the memoir El país bajo mi piel: memorias de amor y Guerra, an intimate retelling of the history of the Sandinista movement and her participation in the historic events it precipitated.

While it may be that Belli's early work was recognized because of her association with the Sandinista revolution, it is clear that she has transcended that label. Some of her contemporaries abandoned their writing or floundered in confusion or pessimism after the Sandinista electoral defeat and subsequent discrediting of the revolution, but Belli has kept her vision and her energy alive. All of her works since 1995 have been published in Nicaragua as well as abroad. Her writing has been translated into several languages, including Italian, German, Turkish, Greek, Dutch, Chinese, and Finnish. Since 1992 she has divided her time between Nicaragua and Los Angeles, California. While her writing continues to reflect and incorporate the realities of Nicaragua, the depth of her themes and the originality of her voice have justifiably earned her recognition as a writer of international stature.

—Janet N. Gold

BELYI, Andrei

Born: Boris Nikolaevich Bugaev in Moscow, Russia, 26 October 1880. Education: Educated at gymnasium, Polivanov, 1891–99; studied science, then philology, then philosophy, University of Moscow, 1899–1906. Family: Married 1) Asia Turgeneva, c. 1910 (separated 1914); 2) Klavdiia Vasil'eva in 1924; 3rd marriage in 1931. Career: Associate editor, Scales, 1907–09; associated with the publishers Musaget, 1909; travelled abroad, studying with Rudolf Steiner, 1910–16; lecturer in Moscow and St. Petersburg; in Berlin, 1921–23; editor, Epopeia, 1922–23. Died: 7/8 January 1934.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

- Stikhotvoreniia i poemy* [Poetry and Narrative Verse], edited by T. Iu. Khmel'nitskaya. 1966.
Complete Short Stories, edited and translated by Ronald E. Peterson. 1979.
Stikhotvoreniia [Poetry], edited by John E. Malmstad. 3 vols., 1982–84.
Selected Essays, edited and translated by Steven Cassedy. 1985.
Sochineniia [Works], edited by V. Piskarev. 1990.

Verse

- Zoloto v lazuri* [Gold in Azure]. 1904.
Pepel [Ashes]. 1909; revised edition, 1929.
Urna [The Urn]. 1909.
Christos voskres [Christ Is Arisen]. 1918.
Pervoe svidanie. 1921; as The First Encounter, translated by Gerald Janeček, 1979.
Posle razluki: Berlinskii pesennik [After the Parting: A Berlin Songbook]. 1922.
Stikhi o Rossii [Poems about Russia]. 1922.
Vozyrashchen'e na rodinu [Returning Home]. 1922.
Stikhotvoreniia [Selected Poetry]. 1923.
Stikhotvoreniia [Selected Poetry]. 1940.

Fiction

- Serebriani golub'*. 1909–10; as The Silver Dove, translated by George Reavey, 1974.
Peterburg. 1916; revised edition, 1922; as St. Petersburg, translated by John Cournos, 1959; complete version, as Petersburg, translated by R.A. Maguire and John E. Malmstad, 1978; as Petersburg Nineteen Eighteen, edited by Efraim Sicher, 1989; as Petersburg: A Novel in Eight Chapters with a Prologue and an Epilogue, translated by David McDuff, 1995.
Kotik Letaev. 1922; as Kotik Letaev, translated by Gerald Janeček, 1971.
Moskva. 1926.
Kreshchenyi kitaets. 1927; as The Christened Chinaman, translated by Thomas R. Beyer, 1991.
Maski [Masks]. 1932.

Other

- Simfoniia (2-aia, dramaticheskaiia)*. 1902; as The Dramatic Symphony, translated by Roger and Angela Keys, with The Forms of Art, 1986.
Severnaia simfoniia (1-aia, geroicheskaia) [Northern Symphony (First, Heroic)]. 1904.
Vozyrat: III-ia simfoniia. 1905; as The Forms of Art, translated by John Elsworth, with The Dramatic Symphony, 1986.
Kubok metelei: Chetvertaia simfoniia [A Golet of Blizzards: Fourth Symphony]. 1908.
Lug zelonyi [The Green Meadow]. 1910.
Simvolizm [Symbolism]. 1910.
Arabeski [Arabesques]. 1911.
Tragediia tvorchestva: Dostoevskii i Tolstoi [The Tragedy of an Oeuvre]. 1911.
Revoliutsiia i kul'tura [Revolution and Culture]. 1917.
Rudol'f Shteiner i Gete v mirovozzrenii sovremenosti [Rudolf Steiner and Goethe from a Contemporary Viewpoint]. 1917.
Na perevale [At the Divide]. 3 vols., 1918–20.
Korolevna i rytsari [The Princess and the Knights]. 1919.
Zapiski chudaka [Notes of an Eccentric]. 2 vols., 1922.
Glossolaliia: Poema o zvuke [Glossolalia: Poem about Sound]. 1922.
Putevye zametki: Sitsiliia i Tunis [Travel Notes: Sicily and Tunis]. 1922.
Poeziia slova: Pushkin, Tiutchev, Baratynskii, V. Ivanov, A. Blok [Poetry of the Word]. 1922.
Vospominaniia o Bloke [Reminiscences of A.A. Blok], 1922–23.

- Odna iz obiteley tsarstva tenei* [In the Kingdom of the Shades]. 1924; as In the Kingdom of Shadows, translated by Catherine Spitzer, 2001.
- Veter s Kavkaza* [A Wind from the Caucasus]. 1928.
- Ritm kak dialektika i "Mednyi vsadnik"* [Rhythm as Dialectic and "The Bronze Horseman"]. 1929.
- Na rubezhe dvukh stoletii* [On the Brink of Two Centuries]. 1930.
- Nachalo veka* [The Turn of the Century]. 1933.
- Masterstvo Gogolia* [The Art of Gogol']. 1934.
- Mezhd u dvukh revoliutsii* [Between Two Revolutions]. 1934.

*

Critical Studies: The Frenzied Poets: Andrey Bely and the Russian Symbolists by Oleg Maslennikov, 1952; Andrey Bely by Konstantin Mochulsky, 1955, reprinted as Andrei Bely: His Life and Works, translated by N. Szalavitz, 1977; Andrey Bely, 1972, and Andrey Bely: A Critical Study of the Novels, 1983, both by J.D. Elsworth; The Apocalyptic Symbolism of Andrej Belyj by Samuel D. Cioran, 1973; Andrej Belyj: The "Symphonies" by Anton Kovač, 1976; The Poetic World of Andrey Bely, by Boris Christa, 1977, and Andrey Bely: Centenary Papers edited by Christa, 1980; Andrey Bely: A Critical Review edited by Gerald Janeček, 1978; Andrei Bely's Short Prose by Ronald E. Peterson, 1980; Word and Music in the Novels of Andrey Bely by Ada Steinberg, 1982; The Dream of Rebirth: A Study of Andrej Belyj's Novel "Peterburg" by Magnus Ljunggren, 1982; Andrei Bely: The Major Symbolist Fiction by Vladimir E. Alexandrov, 1985; "From Fact to Fiction: The Role of the Red Domino in Bely's Peterburg" by Milicz Banjanin, in Russian Language Journal, 40(135), 1986; Andrey Bely: Spirit of Symbolism edited by John E. Malmstad, 1987; Body of Words: A Reading of Bely's "Kotik Letaev" by M. Molnar, 1987; "The Grotesque Style of Bely's Moscow Novels" by Olga Muller Cook, in Slavic and East European Journal, 32(3), 1988; "Andrej Bely's Dramatic Symphony" by Willem G. Weststeijn, in Avant-Garde: Interdisciplinary and International Review, edited by Weststeijn and Jan van der Eng, 1991; Bely, Joyce, and Döblin: Peripatetics in the City Novel by Peter I. Barta, 1996; The Reluctant Modernist: Andrei Belyi and the Development of Russian Fiction, 1902–1914 by Roger Keys, 1996.

* * *

Andrei Belyi, Russia's greatest modernist writer and a leading poet of that most remarkable period of Russian intellectual history which is called the Silver Age, was also a theorist of symbolism, a pioneer in the structural method of literary analysis, and, according to Briusov and later Pasternak, "the most interesting man in Russia." Before he became A. Belyi (in 1901), he considered himself a philosopher, a follower of the mystical philosopher Solovev, a scientist, and a composer, regarding himself as "simply a person who is searching."

In his search to find new forms of art, he wanted to fuse art with music and religion, "to escape into a primitive phase of culture, into rhythm and gesture. . ." ("About Myself as a Writer"). He maintained that life reveals itself only through creative activity which is "unanalysable, integral, and omnipotent." It is only expressible in symbolic images which envelop the idea. In the process of cognitive symbolization the symbol becomes reality, it can run ahead, depicting the future. He claimed that he had foreseen in his novels people and historical events, such as Rasputin in Serebrianiy golub' (The Silver Dove), the downfall of tsarist Petersburg in Peterburg (Petersburg), and the fascist conspiracy in his projected novel Germany. Symbolism for Belyi was a way of thinking, writing, and living. The Belyi-Briusov-Petrovskaja triangle, and Belyi's dramatic affair with Blok's wife, conformed to the Symbolist doctrine that life and art should be unitary. The principal hero of his novels is a philosophizing eccentric, a madman-artist "whose only art is the creation of himself." Even the choice of the colour white (belyi) for his pseudonym was to be significant. White is a recurrent symbol in his poetry: it stands for the snowstorm, that vast elemental force, and for life itself. Sounds and colours always had for Belyi a mystical significance. As Belyi himself tells us, the subjects of his first four books "were drawn from musical leitmotifs, and I called them not stories or novels but Symphonies."

Belyi believed that, in moving towards music, a work of art becomes more profound. All his prose has distinct rhythmical qualities. The story Kreshchenyi kitaets (The Christened Chinaman), for example, was composed from the sounds of Schumann's Kreisleriana. The regular beat, the pause for breath are supposed to express a deep secret rhythm of the spirit. In poetry, too, phonetic structure is often more important than meaning. Words with similar consonants clutch at one another, cling to each other, echoing his favourite images of wind and storm. He deliberately obliterated all discourse from his poetry. There are hardly any developments of thought; instead Belyi repeats certain images pointing to a central theme. His poetry is, however, inferior to his prose. He saw rhythm as a "principle which unites poetry with prose." He called his last novel, Maski [Masks], a "lyrical epic poem." He often thought of himself more as a theoretician than as a poet. He devoted many years (from 1902 to 1910, and again from 1918 to 1921) to the development of the theory of symbolism. He gave many public lectures, wrote hundreds of essays, which were collected in the most complex book, Simvolizm [Symbolism]; he also conducted seminars and research work in the field of prosody. Only in 1924 did he return to literature completely, and he then began to fall into obscurity.

Like Blok, he saw the October Revolution as the birth of a new cosmical world. But Russia, risen anew, failed to appreciate him. In 1921, after Blok's death, he left Russia for Berlin only to find out that "the Russian émigré is as alien to me as the Bolsheviks." The two people he wanted to be with most, Asia Turgeneva and Rudolf Steiner, didn't need him. Bitterly disenchanted, exhausted and sick, he came back to Moscow: "I returned to my grave . . . all journals, all publishing houses are closed to me." After Trotskii's merciless attack, stating that Belyi's novels "poison your very existence," he appealed to Stalin (1931), and compromised with his conscience by becoming a Marxist. In Soviet Russia he remained a controversial writer, too modernist for the literary officials, too incomprehensible for the reading public. In the West his works have always been praised "without being understood or read," as the translators of Petersburg put it. Although Nabokov included Petersburg among the four "greatest masterpieces of 20th-century prose," Belyi never achieved such enormous popularity as Joyce, Kafka, and Proust. Like them he did his best to destroy the simplicity of forms, but it was precisely his linguistic experiments that cut him off from the foreign reader.

—Valentina Polukhina

See the essay on Petersburg.

BEMBO, Pietro

Born: Venice, Venetian Republic, 20 May 1470. Lived in Florence, where his father was ambassador, 1478–79. Education: Educated by the humanists Giovanni Alessandro Urticio and Giovanni Aurelio Augurello; studied Greek at the school of Costantino Lascaris, Messina, c. 1491–93. Family: Lived with Morosina (died 1535) in the 1520s, one daughter and two sons. Career: Accompanied his father on his ambassadorial mission in Rome, 1487–88; lived in Bergamo, where his father was podesta [governor], 1489–91, and subsequently returned to Venice; collaborated with the publisher Aldus Manutius: published his first work, De Aetna, at Manutius' press, 1496; lived in Ferrara, where his father was Vicedomino [co-ruler], 1497–99; studied philosophy under Niccolò Leonicensis; returned to Venice, 1499, and attempted to enter politics, with little success; lived at the court of Duke and Duchess of Urbino, 1506–12; lived in Rome, 1512–21; papal secretary to Leo X, 1513–21; settled in Padua, 1522; took up an ecclesiastical career, by virtue of his membership of the Order of Jerusalem; became historiographer and librarian of the Republic of Venice, 1530; elected to College of Cardinals, 1539, and moved to Rome; Bishop of Gubbio, 1541–44; lived in Rome, 1544–47. Died: 18 January 1547.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Opere, edited by A.F. Seghezzi. 4 vols., 1729.
Prose e rime, edited by Carlo Dionisotti. 1960.
Opere in volgare, edited by Mario Marti. 1961.

Verse

Rime. 1530; revised and enlarged editions, 1535, 1548.
Sonetti inediti, edited by Rinaldo Sperati. 1899.

Other

De Aetna (dialogue). 1496; as On Etna, translated by Betty Radice, in De Aetna/On Etna (bilingual edition), 1969.
Gli Asolani (treatise). 1505; revised edition, 1530; as Gli Asolani, translated by Rudolf Gottfried, 1954.
De imitatione Libellus. 1514 (unauthorized edition); 1530 (authorized edition).
Le prose della volgar lingua (treatise). 1525; revised edition, 1538; edited by Mario Marti, 1955, and by Carlo Dionisotti, 1955.
De Virgilii Culice et Terentii Fabulis. 1530.
De Guido Ubaldo Feretrio deque Elisabetha Gonzaga Urbini Ducibus. 1530.
Imitatione libri tres. 1541.
Carmina quinque illustrium poetarum. 1548; as Carminum libellus, 1552.
Lettere. 2 vols., 1548–50.
Rerum venetarum historiae libri XII. 1551; as Delia historia vinitiana, 1552.
Epistulae familiares (letters). 3 vols: 1552; as Lettere, 4 vols., 1562; edited by Ernesto Travi, 2 vols., 1987–90.
Lettere giovanili. 1554.
Nuove lettere famigliari (letters to his nephew G.M. Bembo). 1564.

Carteggio d'amore, with Maria Savorgnan (letters), edited by Carlo Dionisotti. 1950.

The Prettiest Love Letters in the World: Letters Between Lucrezia Borgia and Pietro Bembo, translated by Hugh Shankland. 1987.

Editor, Le cose volgari, by Petrarch. 1501.

Editor, Commedia, by Dante. 1502.

Editor, Opera, by Virgil. 1535.

*

Critical Studies: Un decennio della vita di M. Pietro Bembo (1521–1531), 1885, and Un medaglione del Rinascimento: Cola Bruno messinese e le sue relazioni con Pietro Bembo, 1901, both by Vittorio Cian; La gioventù di M.P. Bembo e il suo dialogo Gli Asolani by M. Tamburini, 1914; Pietro Bembo e le sorti della lingua nazionale nel Veneto by N. Schileo, 1923; Pietro Bembo by M. Santoro, 1937; Il Bembo critico e il principio d'imitazione by G. Santangelo, 1950; La vita avventurosa di Pietro Bembo, umanista-poeta-cortigiano by G. Meneghetti, 1961; Il petrarchismo del Bembo e di altri poeti del '500 by Giorgio Santangelo, 1967; "Pietro Bembo's Gli Asolani of 1505" by C.H. Clough, in Modern Language Notes, 84(1), 1969; "Imitatio: Theory and Practice—The Example of Bembo the Poet" by Dante Della Terza, in Yearbook of Italian Studies, 1, 1971; Pietro Bembo ed il suo epistolario by Ernesto Travi, 1972; "Bembo's Maneuvers from Virtue to Virtuosity in Gli Asolani" by Susan Delaney, in Italian Quarterly, 27(106), 1986; "Pietro Bembo and the Vat. Lat. 3226" by John N. Grant, in Humanistica Lovaniensia, 37, 1988; "Bembo and the Dialogic Path of Love" by Olga Zorzi Pugliese, in Italiana 1988 edited by Albert N. Mancini and others, 1990; Marsilio Ficino, Pietro Bembo, Baldassare Castiglione: Philosophical, Aesthetic, and Political Approaches in Renaissance Platonism by Christine Raffini, 1998.

* * *

Pietro Bembo is remembered chiefly as the foremost pioneering theoretician of the Italian language and the architect of its use as a vehicle for serious literature fit to stand beside the Latin of humanistic culture, based on the example of the great medieval writers: Dante, Petrarch, and Boccaccio. In particular for poetry, Bembo proposed imitation of the model of Petrarch, and in Gli Asolani, a discussion of the issues of love between three men and three women, set in Asolo at the court of Caterina Cornaro, Queen of Cyprus, he established Petrarch as the model for Italian love poetry, just as in his Prose della volgar lingua he was to establish Florentine as the vernacular language, and rules for the correct use of the Italian language in prose that have been widely influential since.

A Venetian patrician, expert in the courtier arts, Bembo had travelled widely, including to the court of Urbino that had produced Castiglione's Il libro del cortegiano (The Book of the Courtier)—in which he appears as a fictional protagonist. He rose to eminent positions, firstly as papal secretary, and later as cardinal. Bembo was among the first Renaissance figures to study Greek; he wrote fluently in Latin, and acquired a unique position in the Italian Renaissance as an arbiter of literary taste. The now famous exchange of letters between Bembo and Giovan Francesco (nephew of the famous Pico) della Mirandola in 1512, in which the latter upheld the independence of style of the individual writer, became a classic text on the principle of literary imitation in Latin proposing Cicero as a model for prose and Virgil for poetry. Thus was reached an ideal of classical literary imitation, which would be elaborated for the Italian language using the models of Petrarch for poetry and Boccaccio for prose in Bembo's Le prose della volgar lingua. The Italian language would henceforth acquire the dignity and reverence previously accorded only to the classics.

In Gli Asolani, Bembo discusses the relative merits of erotic and platonic love, describing the different kinds of love whose parameters are clearly Petrarchan, although there is no explicit reference to Petrarch: a schematization of the love of Petrarch's Laura, with her counterpart (a less literary and more sensual ideal), which is contrasted, in the work's third book, in the discussion of earthly and platonic love, with the conclusion that platonic love is the more elevated spiritual kind and brings the lover closer to God. The exposition of platonic love in the third book of Gli Asolani has been called "love in a cold climate," but it looks forward to the concluding section of Castiglione's The Book of the Courtier where, quite deliberately, the defence of Platonic love is voiced by the character of Pietro Bembo himself.

Bembo's own lyric poetry is the first chapter in the long history of Petrarchism. The poems were published first in a collection in 1530 as Rime (although many were well known to contemporaries long before then), and they put into practice the theories established in Gli Asolani. The slavish imitation of Petrarch's Canzoniere is apparent everywhere, and even whole lines are quoted from the poetry of the master, as in the celebrated example of "Solingo augello, se piangendo vai," where critics have identified quotations from five different Petrarchan poems. The whole is refined, elevated, literary—an intellectual elaboration of the imitation principle—but without the passion or individuality of a basis in real life or love, in the eyes of both modern commentators and contemporary satirists and parodists such as Berni and Aretino. None the less, in spite of his detractors, Bembo's position as a figure of literary transition in the tradition of the love lyric was to be decisive.

Le prose della volgar lingua is Bembo's monumental contribution to the "questione della lingua" debate in the Italian Renaissance. It imagines a debate in Venice in 1502 between such celebrated contemporary authorities on the matter of the appropriate language for literature as Giuliano de' Medici, Federigo Fregoso, Ercole Strozzi, and Carlo Bembo (brother of the author, and so his spokesman), who vigorously advance the theory of the supremacy of Florentine as the only language for literature, on the models of Petrarch and Boccaccio. Bembo's standpoint is that of the maintenance of literary and artistic validity—not factors to do with the spoken language—in his strict adherence to the Ciceronian principle of imitation of one model. So, the questions of everyday usage, accessibility to speakers, and a widening of the circle of readers are scarcely parts of this thesis. Bembo is concerned above all with formal elegance and literary precedent, convinced that the fullest intellectual expression of a language is in the work of its writers. Writers will be writing for posterity as much as for contemporaries. The novelty for readers of his works in the early 16th century would have been that Italian—in the examples of its great literary masters from the past—was now to take its place alongside Latin and Greek as one of the languages for great literature.

Among Bembo's minor works (apart from the recently discovered letters to Maria Savorgnan, datable to Bembo's youth in 1500–01) only his letters, written while he was Pope Leo X's secretary, and his history of Venice are worthy of mention here. The first establishing his literary credentials as a humanist (Latin) writer, and the second the recognition of his cultural and literary pre-eminence in his own time by his native Republic of Venice. A symbol and incarnation of all his efforts in a long career is his own translation of the history from Latin into Italian.

—Christopher Cairns

BEN JELLOUN, Tahar

Born: Fez, Morocco, 21 December 1944. Education: Attended primary school in Fez; French high school, Tangier, 1958–63; studied philosophy at Université Mohammed V, Rabat, 1963–71; Ph.D. in psychiatric social work, Université de Paris, 1975. Military Service: Served in Moroccan Army; spent 18 months in a disciplinary camp, 1966–1968. Family: Married Aicha in 1986; four children. Career: Teacher of philosophy in Tetouan and Casablanca, Morocco, 1967–71; emigrated to Paris, France, 1971; psychotherapist, 1972–75; contributor to many journals, particularly the Moroccan Soufflés and the French Le Monde, Le Monde Diplomatique, Le Nouvel Observateur, and Les Lettres Nouvelles, from 1971; hosted a weekly program for the Moroccan radio Médi I, from 1983; wrote for the Italian newspaper La Repubblica, 1999; appointed UN Ambassadeur de bonne volonté for the struggle against racism. Awards: Prix de l'Amitié Franco-Arabe, 1976; Prix de l'Association des Bibliothécaires de France et de Radio Montecarlo, 1978; Chevalier for Arts and Letters, 1983; Prix Goncourt for literature, 1987; Prix des Hemispheres for literature, 1991; Prix Maghreb, 1994; Chevalier de la Legion d'Honneur, 1998.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Poésie complète, 1966–1995. 1995.

Verse

Hommes sous linceul de silence. 1970.

Cicatrices du soliel. 1972.

Le discours du chameau. 1974.

Les amandiers sont morts de leurs blessures. 1976.

A l'insu du souvenir. 1980.

Sahara. 1987.

La remontée des cendres; suivi de Non identifiées. 1991.

Fiction

Harrouda. 1973.

La reclusion solitaire. 1976; as Solitaire, translated by Nick Hindley, 1988.

Moha le fou, Moha le sage. 1978.

La Prière de l'absent. 1981.

Muha al-ma'twa, Muha al-hakim. 1982.

L'écrivain public: Recit. 1983.

L'enfant de sable. 1985; as The Sand Child, translated by Alan Sheridan, 1987.
La nuit sacrée. 1987; as The Sacred Night, translated by Alan Sheridan, 1989.
Jour de silence a Tanger. 1990; as Silent Day in Tangier, translated by David Lobdell, 1991.
Les yeux baissés. 1991; as With Downcast Eyes, translated by Joachim Neugroschel, 1993.
L'ange aveugle (short stories). 1992; as State of Absence, translated by James Kirkup, 1994.
L'homme rompu. 1994; as Corruption, translated by Carol Volk, 1997.
Le premier amour est toujours le dernier (short stories). 1995.
Le raisins de la galère. 1996.
La nuit de l'erreur. 1997.
L'auberge des pauvres. 1999.
Labyrinthe des sentiments. 1999.

Plays

Chronique d'une solitude. 1976.
Entretien avec Monsieur Said Hammadi, ouvrier Algerien. 1982.
La fiancé de l'eau. 1984.

Other

La plus haute des solitudes: Misere sexuelle d'emigrees nord-africains. 1977.
Haut Atlas: L'exil de Pierres. 1982.
Hospitalité française: Racisme et immigration maghrébine. 1984; as French Hospitality: Racism and North African Immigrants, translated by Barbara Bray, 1999.
Marseille, comme un matin d'insomnie. 1986.
Giacometti (essays). 1991.
Éloge de l'amitié: la soudure fraternelle. 1994.
Medinas. 1998; translated as Medinas: Morocco's Hidden Cities, 1998.
Le racisme expliqué a ma fille. 1999; as Racism Explained to My Daughter, translated by Carol Volk, 1999.
Cette aveuglante absence de lumiere. 2001; as This Blinding Absence of Light, translated by Linda Coverdale, 2002.
Les Italiens. 2002; translated as The Italians, 2002.
L'islam expliqué aux enfants. 2002.
Translator, Le Pain nu: Recit autobiographique, by Mohamed Choukri. 1980.

*

Critical Studies: L'espace scriptural de Tahar Ben Jelloun by Majid el-Houssi, 1983; "Masculinity and Virility in Tahar Ben Jelloun's Work" by Ouzgane Lahoucine, in Contagion, 1997; Islam and Postcolonial Narrative by John Erickson, 1998; Tahar Ben Jelloun, l'écrivain des villes de Fes by Nadia Kamal-Trense, 1998; Tahar Ben Jelloun by Bernard Aresu, 1998; "Female Impersonation and Male Desire in Tahar Ben Jelloun's L'enfant de sable" by Laurel Taylor, in Women in French, 1999; Étude sur Tahar Ben Jelloun. L'enfant de sable, La nuit sacrée by Laurence Kohn-Pireux, 2000.

* * *

Tahar Ben Jelloun is one of the North Africa's most successful post-colonial writers. While still a university student, he began writing for the journal Soufflés [Breaths], but in 1971 completed his first poems, published in the collection Hommes Sous Linceul de Silence [Men under the Shroud of Silence]. Since 1977 Ben Jelloun has published regularly, but it was not until the publication, in 1985, of the novel L'Enfant de Sable (The Sand Child) that he became well known around the world. The final seal of his celebrity was the Prix Goncourt, received for his work La Nuit Sacrée (The Sacred Night) in 1987. Since then his works have been systematically translated into the most important Western languages, and he alternates between writing and participating in conferences related to matters of the Arab world.

Ben Jelloun's first book translated into English, The Sand Child, catapulted him into the literary spotlight and revealed the major themes of his work: gender identity in a male-dominated society, masking, storytelling and surrealism. The originality of Ben Jelloun's works resides in his ability to represent, in a remarkable synthesis, all the aspects of Moroccan tradition and culture with everyday life and the urgent problems of society. As a result, he produces a writing that disturbs the audience, since it stages taboo subjects and gives voice to characters normally debarred from speaking, such as prostitutes, immigrants, the demented, transsexuals, and other outcasts. These people, forced to silence or indifference, speak a forbidden language, related to the body, sensuality, and carnality. Their words usually provoke the sensibility of conformist readers, all the more so as these themes are frequently combined with the pitfalls of a chaotic and unfriendly writing, plagued by discontinuity and hallucination, which makes the narration impossible. This is true specially for the first novels, in particular Harrouda and Moha le fou, Moha le sage [Moha the Mad, Moha the Wise], whose erotic violence and exposure of the female body, together with the difficulties of the narrative, scandalize the reader and complicate the grasp of the plot. Nevertheless, with La Prière de l'Absent [The Absent's Prayer] and L'Enfant de Sable, Ben Jelloun's writing finds a more reassuring tone approaching the attitude of the traditional novel, at least at a first glance.

Although a native of Morocco and closely linked to Moroccan culture and hence to Arabic language, Ben Jelloun chose to write in French. When he started to write, he immediately found it natural to do so in French. It would be oversimplifying, however, to say that Arabic language has no part in his writing. In fact, bilingualism plays an active part in his life as well as in his works as a characterizing theme. He often plays with Arabic and French words, and this use of both languages adds to the complexity and sophistication of his writings.

Ben Jelloun's work represents a break with North Africa's literary tradition of the 1950–70s. The Moroccan audience, for instance, expected from the novelist a complete and committed awareness of the age, and Ben Jelloun's personages exist only in an imaginary world; they are creations of fantasy produced by everyday life's hallucinations and governed by the mess of memory and the intemperance of imagination. Therefore, not only does he write about Moroccan situations that may be seen as nonsensical or uncivilized, but he openly criticizes them. This has resulted in praise by certain strata of society, for example feminist groups, but disapproval from many critics, who protest that Ben Jelloun defends and appeals to Westerners through stereotyping and a skewed perception of semi-traditional North African life.

It has been said by critics that Tahar Ben Jelloun is basically and primarily a poet; therefore his writing style resembles that of a poet. His novels are full of poetic images and lyrical language. Dream-like states, hallucinations, and lyrical visions give his work a magical and intoxicated atmosphere. His use of fictitious narrators, different points of view of the same story, and statements of unreliable characters add to a mystical quality as well. The creative space for doubt and wonder give Ben Jelloun's plots a surrealist feel.

—Alessandro Cancian

BENN, Gottfried

Born: Mansfeld, Germany, 2 May 1886. Education: Educated at the Gymnasium, Frankfurt, 1896–1903; studied philosophy and theology, University of Marburg, 1903–04; studied medicine, University of Berlin, 1904–05; Kaiser Wilhelm Academy, 1905–12, Ph.D. 1912. Military Service: Served in the army, discharged because of health problems 1912; served in the army medical corps, 1914–18, and 1935–45: awarded Iron Cross, second class, 1914. Family: Married 1) Edith Brosin in 1914 (died 1922), one son (from Brosin's previous marriage) and one daughter; 2) Herta von Wedemeyer in 1938 (committed suicide 1945); 3) Ilse Kaul in 1946. Career: Assistant, Pathological Institute Westend Hospital, 1912–13; ship's physician, 1913; after 1918, specialist in skin disease and sexually transmitted infection, Berlin; embraced National Socialism, 1932–34, renounced National Socialist Party, 1934; acting chairman, literary section of the Prussian Academy of Art, 1933; after World War II, forbidden to publish anything he had written since 1937; private medical practice, West Berlin, from 1945. Awards: Büchner prize, 1951; Order of Merit, first class, Federal Republic of Germany, 1952. Member: Prussian Academy of Art, 1932. Died: 7 July 1956.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Gesammelte Werke, edited by Dieter Wellershoff. 4 vols., 1958–61.
Primäre Tage: Gedichte und Fragmente aus dem Nachlass, edited by Dieter Wellershoff. 1958; as Primal Vision: Selected Writings, edited by E.B. Ashton, 1960.
Medizinische Schriften, edited by Werner Rube. 1965.
Späte Gedichte: Fragmente, Destillationen, Aprèslude. 1965.
Poems, translated by Michael Lebeck. 1967.
Selected Poems, edited by Friedrich Wilhelm Wodtke. 1970.
Sämtliche Erzählungen. 1970.
Gesammelte Werke in der Fassung der Erstdrucke, edited by B. Hillebrand. 1982–.
Sämtliche Werke, edited by Gerhard Schuster. 4 vols., 1986–89.
Prose, Essays, Poems, edited by Volkmar Sandor. 1987.
Poems 1937–1947, translated by Simona Dradhici. 1991.

Verse

Morgue und andere Gedichte. 1912.
Söhne. 1913.
Fleisch. 1917.
Schutt. 1924.
Betäubung. 1925.
Spaltung. 1925.
Die Dänin. 1925.
Gesammelte Gedichte. 1927.
Ausgewählte Gedichte: 1911–1936. 1936.
Zweiundzwanzig Gedichte: 1936–1943. 1943.
Statische Gedichte. 1948.
Trunkene Flut: Ausgewählte Gedichte. 1949.
Fragmente. 1951.
Destillationen. 1953.
Aprèslude. 1955.
Gesammelte Gedichte 1912–1956. 1956.
Lyrik: Auswahl letzter Hand. 1956.
Sämtliche Gedichte. 1998.

Plays

Ithaka. 1919.
Etappe. 1919.
Der Vermessungsdirigent. 1919.
Das Unaufhörliche (oratorio), music by Paul Hindemith (produced 1931). 1931.
 Radio Plays: Die Stimme hinter dem Vorhang, 1952.

Fiction

Gehirne. 1916.
Diesterweg. 1918.
Die gesammelten Schriften. 1922.

Other

Das moderne Ich. 1920.
Gesammelte Prosa. 1928.
Fazit der Perspektiven. 1930.
Nach dem Nihilismus (essays). 1932.
Der neue Staat und die Intellektuellen (essays). 1933.
Kunst und Macht (essays). 1934.
Ausdruckswelt: Essays und Aphorismen. 1949.
Drei alte Männer. 1949.
Goethe und die Naturwissenschaften. 1949.
Der Ptolemäer. 1949.
Doppelleben: Zwei Selbstdarstellungen (autobiography). 1950.
Frühe Prosa und Reden. 1950.
Essays. 1951.
Probleme der Lyrik (speech). 1951.
Frühe Lyrik und Dramen. 1952.
Monologische Kunst: Ein Briefwechsel zwischen Alexander Lernet-Holenia und Gottfried Benn. 1953.
Altern als Problem für Künstler. 1954.
Provoziertes Leben: Eine Auswahl aus den Prosaschriften. 1955.
Reden. 1955.

Soll die Dichtung das Leben bessern?, with Reinhold Schneider. 1956.
Über mich selbst: 1886–1956. 1956.
Dr. Rönne: Frühe Prosa, edited by Ernst Neff. 1957.
Ausgewählte Briefe. 1957.
Briefe an Carl Werckshagen. 1958.
Roman des Phänotyp: Landsberger Fragment, 1944. 1961.
Das gezeichnete Ich: Briefe aus den Jahren 1900–1956. 1962.
Weinhaus Wolf und andere Prosa. 1967.
Briefe an F.W. Oelze, edited by Harald Steinhausen and Jürgen Schröder. 3 vols., 1977–80.
Briefwechsel mit Paul Hindemith, edited by Ann Clark Fehn. 1978.
Gottfried Benn, Max Rychner: Briefwechsel 1930–1956, edited by Gerhard Schuster. 1986.
Briefe an Tilly Wedekind 1939–1955. 1986.
Lieber Bennito: Briefe an Gottfried Benn, 1946–1951. 1995.
Hernach: Gottfried Benns Briefe an Ursula Ziebarth. 2001.
 Editor, Lyrik des expressionistischen Jahrzehnts. 1955.

*

Critical Studies: Gottfried Benn, Phänotyp dieser Stunde: Eine Studie über den Problemgehalt seines Werkes by Dieter Wellershoff, 1958; Gottfried Benn's Critique of Substance by Marion L. Adams, 1969; Die Statischen Gedichte von Gottfried Benn by Harald Steinhausen, 1969; Gottfried Benn: The Unreconstructed Expressionist by J.M. Ritchie, 1972; Gottfried Benn: The Artist and Politics 1910–1934 by Reinhard Alter, 1976; Change and Permanence: Gottfried Benn's Text for Paul Hindemith's Oratorio Das Unaufhörliche by Ann Clark Fehn, 1977; Consistency of Phenotype: A Study of Gottfried Benn's Views on Lyric Poetry by Angelika Manyoni, 1983; Gottfried Benn, Johannes R. Becher by Jürgen Haupt, 1994; Gottfried Benn: Essay und Dokumentation by Karl Schwedhelm, 1995; Gottfried Benn, Rainald Goetz: Medium Literatur zwischen Pathologie und Poetologie by Thomas Doktor and Carla Spies, 1997.

* * *

Gottfried Benn was one of the most important German poets of the 20th century. His early work—notably the poems of Morgue and the innovative prose works of the years 1915–21 (the so-called “önnestories”)—forms a significant but not always typical part of the German Expressionist movement. The poems of Morgue take up themes and topics not unknown in European poetry since Baudelaire, but approach them with a sense of the grotesque which is quite removed from all sentimentality, and with a metonymic technique which strongly alienates and shocks the reader. After this collection, a landmark in German literature, Benn's development in poetry was towards a Dionysian, ecstatic voice and—after a deep crisis in his life and work in 1921—subsequently towards a more and more absolutist cult of formal art.

During the 1920s, when Benn was working as a doctor in Berlin, the city to which he remained loyal throughout his life, his cult of art was based on a growing rejection of civilization and reason and on the withdrawal of the poetic into a hermetic world of dream, trance, and hallucination. His essays of this period—on history, technology, alternative medicine, and the psychopathology of the artist—have a provocative and critical tone that at the time caused Benn to be considered a radical critic of bourgeois society. Increasingly, however, public disputes with representatives of the political left, who were unwilling to accept the party-political independence of his aesthetic position, caused Benn to identify with the right. In 1933 he was one of the most prominent (and certainly one of the most surprising) writers to remain in Germany after the fascist takeover. He identified with Hitler's Germany not just in acquiescence but through active support for the state: a support that led to the celebrated controversy with Klaus Mann, who had appealed to Benn to recognize the barbarity of the National Socialist state (Benn's reply was the infamous speech “To the Literary Emigrés: A Reply,” 1933). Benn went so far as to express naive yet disquieting support for aspects of the new state's eugenic measures (“Züchtung I” [Breeding I], 1933) and finally completely compromised his own cherished principles of the self-referential nature of formal poetry (on whose distance from reality and social life he had insisted), as he identified aesthetic form with the brutal order of National Socialist Germany. Of Stefan George's poetry he wrote perhaps the most extraordinary sentence to be found in the unappetizing debris of cultural fascism: in one of George's most sensitive autumnal poems Benn claims to identify the spirit of the stormtroopers, for, he writes, discipline moves “in George's art and in the march-step of the brown battalions as one imperative.”

Disillusionment set in after the Röhm putsch in 1934, and Benn took refuge in the German army—in an insensitive phrase he referred to his move as “the aristocratic form of emigration”—and continued to publish until 1938, when (as part of the general hostility of the state to artistic modernism) his works were banned. The lyrical products of these years are collected in Statische Gedichte [Static Poems], which, after initial problems with allied censorship, appeared in 1948. In the following year the volume Der Ptolemäer [The Ptolemean] appeared. It contains the prose works that he had written in 1944, most notably the remarkable Roman des Phänotyp [Novel of the Phenotype], in which the pursuit of a world of pure expression and form—what Benn calls the Ausdruckswelt—leads to prose of a rare and formal innovation and intensity. Benn referred to these works as “absolute prose.” The controversial autobiography Doppelleben [Double Life]—the title refers to the double life of the artist in society—made clear that Benn's involvement with fascism was a topic for neither personal analysis nor regret.

The poems of the 1950s, by common critical consent, seldom attain the quality of Statische Gedichte. The speech Probleme der Lyrik [Problems of Lyric Poetry] became one of the most influential poetological works of the 1950s in West Germany. In this speech Benn tried to bring developments in modern poetry to the attention of a post-war German public whom—it has been argued—the Third Reich had cut off from international developments. Benn's judgements, like the language and themes of his own poetry at the time, were highly influential in the succeeding generation. The rehabilitation of Expressionism in West Germany (following its abrupt fall from grace in the 1930s) owes much to Benn's essays and anthologies in the years immediately before his death.

Voices critical of Benn had not been silent in the 1950s, but his influence waned sharply with the student revolt of the 1960s. The increasing interest in the socio-political function of literature and the subsequent (but by no means co-extensive) interest in the poetry of Bertolt Brecht contributed further to this decline. It was felt by young poets that aspects of Benn's language and poetic technique had exhausted themselves and that new models were called for. Benn's work came to be strongly identified with the restorative nature of the Adenauer years. The subsequent eclipse of Marxist positions and the establishment of post-modernism cleared a way for Benn's re-emergence. It is to be feared that present opinion is open more to the tired, sophisticated resignation of the later Benn than to the magnificent modernist experiments of the early poetry and prose.

—Hugh Ridley

See the essay on "Palau."

BEOLCO, Angelo

See RUZZANTE

BERGERAC, Cyrano de

See CYRANO DE BERGERAC

BERNANOS, Georges

Born: Paris, France, 20 February, 1888. Education: Educated at Jesuit school, Paris, 1897–1900; Notre-Dame-des-Champs, Paris, 1901–03; Collège Saint-Célestin, Bourges, 1903–04; Collège Sainte-Marie, Aire-sur-la-Lys, baccalauréat, 1905 and 1906; studied law and literature, University of Paris, 1906–09. Military Service: 1909–10, served in the French army, 1914–19. Family: Married Jehanne Pauline Marie Talbert d'Arc in 1917; three sons and three daughters. Career: Travelling salesman for an insurance company, 1922–26; editor, L'Avant-garde de Normandie, 1913–14; columnist, Le Figaro, 1930–32; evicted from family home due to financial difficulties; moved to Majorca, Spain, 1934–37; returned to France, 1937; travelled to Buenos Aires, via Rio de Janeiro, en route to Paraguay, in an attempt to establish a French colony, stayed in Paraguay for five days only and returned to Rio de Janeiro. Settled in Brazil, involved in the resistance movement, 1938–44; returned to France, 1945; contributor to numerous journals including Combat, La Bataille, and Le Figaro; travelled to North Africa, Switzerland, and Belgium giving lectures. Awards: prix Fémina, 1929; Grand prize for fiction, Académie française, 1936. Died: 5 July 1948.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Dialogue d'ombres (collected stories). 1955.
Oeuvres complètes, edited by Maurice Bardèche. 12 vols., 1955–65.
Oeuvres romanesques, edited by Michel Estève. 1961.
Essais et écrits de combat, edited by Yves Bridel, Jacques Charbot, and Joseph Jart. 1971.

Fiction

Sous le Soleil de Satan. 1926; edited by William Bush, 1982; as The Star of Satan, translated by Veronica Lucas, 1927; also translated by Pamela Morris, 1940; as Under the Sun of Satan, translated by Harry L. Binsee, 1949.

L'Imposture. 1927; as The Imposter, translated by J.C. Whitehouse, 1999.
Dialogue d'ombres (stories). 1928.
La Joie. 1929; revised edition, edited by Albert Béguin, 1954; as Joy, translated by Louise Varèse, 1946.
Un crime. 1935; as The Crime, translated by Anne Green, 1936, as A Crime, translated by Green, 1946.
Journal d'un curé de campagne. 1936; edited by Eithne M. O'Sharkey, 1969; as The Diary of a Country Priest, translated by Pamela Morris, 1937.
Nouvelle histoire de Mouchette. 1937; as Mouchette, translated by J.C. Whitehouse, 1966.
Monsieur Ouine. 1943; revised edition, edited by Albert Béguin, 1955; translated and introduced by William S. Bush, 2000; as The Open Mind, translated by Geoffrey Dunlop, 1945.
Un mauvais rêve, edited by Albert Béguin. 1951; as Night Is Darkest, translated by Walter J. Strachan, 1953.
The Heroic Face of Innocence: Three Stories by Georges Bernanos, 1999.

Plays

Dialogue des Carmélites (produced 1949). 1949; as The Fearless Heart, translated by Michael Legat, 1952; as The Carmelites, translated by Gerard Hopkins, 1961.

Other

Saint Dominique. 1927.
Noël à la maison de France. 1928.
La Grande Peur des bien-pensants. 1931.
Jeanne, relapse et sainte. 1934; as Sanctity Will Out: An Essay on St. Joan, translated by R. Batchelor, 1947.
Les Grands Cimetières sous la lune. 1938; as A Diary of My Times, translated by Pamela Morris, 1938.
Scandale de la vérité. 1939.
Nous autres, Français. 1939.
Lettres aux Anglais. 1942; as A Plea for Liberty, translated by Harry Lorin Binsse, 1944; also translated by Binsse and Ruth Bethell, 1970.
Écrits de combat. 1943–44.
Le Chemin de la Croix-des-Ames (articles). 4 vols., 1943–45; 1 vol., 1948; revised edition, 1987.
La France contre les robots. 1944; edited by Albert Béguin, 1955; also edited by Jean Loup Bernanos, 1970; as Tradition of Freedom, translated by Helen Beau Clark, 1950.
Réflexions sur le cas de conscience français. 1945.
Oeuvres. 6 vols., 1947.
Les Enfants humiliés: journal 1939–1940, edited by Albert Béguin, 1949; as The Tradition of Freedom, 1950.
La Liberté pour quoi faire?, edited by Albert Béguin, 1953; as Last Essays, translated by Joan and Barry Ulanov, 1955; as The Last Essays of Georges Bernanos, translated by Green, 1968.
Bernanos par lui-même, edited by Albert Béguin. 1954.
Le Crépuscule des vieux (articles), edited by Albert Béguin. 1956.
Français, si vous saviez, 1945–1948 (articles). 1961.
Le Lendemain c'est vous!, edited by Jean-Loup Bernanos. 1969.
Correspondance inédite, edited by Albert Béguin and Jean Murray. 2 vols., 1971.

La Vocation spirituelle de la France, edited by Jean-Loup Bernanos. 1975.

Les Prédestinés (essays), edited by Jean-Loup Bernanos. 1983.

Lettres retrouvées 1904–1948, edited by Jean-Loup Bernanos. 1983.

Georges Bernanos à la merci des passants (selection), edited by Jean-Loup Bernanos. 1986.

Bernanos (autobiography), edited by Jean-Loup Bernanos. 1988.

*

Critical Studies: The Double Image: Mutations of Christian Mythology in the Work of Four French Catholic Writers by Rayner Heppenstall, 1947; The Poetic Imagination of Georges Bernanos by Gerda Blumenthal, 1956; Bernanos: His Political Thought and Prophecy by Thomas Molnar, 1960; Georges Bernanos, 1965, and Georges Bernanos: Un triple itinéraire, 1981, both by Michel Estève; Bernanos: An Introduction by Peter Hebblethwaite, 1965; Georges Bernanos by Max Milner, 1967; Bernanos by Roger Pons, 1967; Georges Bernanos by William Bush, 1969; Georges Bernanos: Journal d'un curé de campagne by John Flower, 1970; Georges Bernanos: A Study of the Man and the Writer by Robert Speaight, 1973; Bernanos et la politique: La Société et la droite françaises de 1900 à 1950 by Serge Albouy, 1980; Georges Bernanos: A Study of Christian Commitment by John E. Cooke, 1981; La France dans l'histoire selon Bernanos by Alan R. Clark, 1983; Bernanos et l'angoisse by Pierre Gille, 1984; Bernanos aujourd'hui by Jean-Loup Bernanos and Luc Balbont, 1987; Temps et récit dans l'oeuvre romanesque de Georges Bernanos by Elisabeth Lagadec-Sadoulet, 1988; Bernanos et le monde moderne (essays) edited by Monique Gosselin and Max Milner, 1989; From Heaven to Hell: Imagery of Earth, Air, Water and Fire in the Novels of Georges Bernanos by Daniel R. Morris, 1989; Les Dialogues dans l'oeuvre de Bernanos by André Not, 1990; Bernanos: An Ecclesial Existence by Hans Urs von Balthasar, translated by Erasmo Leiva-Merikakas, 1996; Bernanos: Journal d'un curé de campagne by Malcolm Scott, 1997.

* * *

Today the fame of Georges Bernanos rests largely on three works that have been successfully translated for the stage and/or the screen. Dialogue des Carmélites (The Fearless Heart) was turned into an opera in 1957 by Francis Poulenc. Journal d'un curé de campagne (The Diary of a Country Priest), first adapted by Robert Bresson in a characteristically austere style, attracted a new generation of Bernanos enthusiasts when it was revived in the 1980s as a stage monologue starring Thierry Fortineau. Finally Sous le Soleil de Satan (The Star of Satan), made into a film starring Gérard Depardieu and Sandrine Bonnaire by Maurice Pialat, fuelled controversies at the Cannes Film Festival in 1987. However, for his contemporaries Bernanos was as much of a polemicist as he was a novelist. But breadth and variety of inspiration were never his trademark: both his essays and his fiction deal with a small number of themes: on a mundane level, the mediocrity or even corruption of secular and ecclesiastical authorities; on a metaphysical level, the inner tragedy brought about by pride, self-hatred, despair, or lack of faith.

Born in Paris in 1888, Bernanos owed his happiest and most vivid memories to his holidays in the north of France where hunting became one of his favourite pastimes at an early age (which would explain why firearms feature in most of his novels). A pupil of the Jesuits, he was soon noticed for his independent, passionate personality. The pantheon he selected for himself, composed of Barber d'Aureville, Chateaubriand, Balzac, Maurras, Barrès, and Leon Daudet among others, helped shape the course of his religious and political development. Just before World War I he was offered the editorship of a provincial monarchist weekly. The masterpiece of his later years, The Fearless Heart, presents a vision of the French Revolution predicated on his monarchist convictions. After the war, however, he had to give up journalism for a more lucrative job with an insurance company. He was nearly 40 when he published his first novel, The Star of Satan, to considerable critical acclaim. Bernanos had the idea of The Star of Satan as early as 1918, and the novel, published eventually in 1926, owes its coherence to certain thematic concerns rather than to its discontinuous structure. Donissan, who gives his name to the third part of the book, "The saint of Lumbres," is the first in the long series of priests who people Bernanos's fiction. After his encounter with the young murderess and suicide victim Germaine (nicknamed Mouchette), Donissan's spiritual crisis, which had culminated in a violent inner struggle with Satan, resolves itself. The novel follows Donissan's troubled spiritual itinerary. It is Donissan's fate to be first beset by doubts about his calling, and then to have to fight the temptation of desire at every step of the way.

Bernanos's decision to support himself and his family entirely through his writing from then on shows that he had come to trust in his creative gift. Yet, with six children born between 1918 and 1933, he was permanently under severe material pressure, a fact which obviously affected his career, though money was already a pervasive theme in his early stories. Thus, pressed for money, he abandoned his ambitious plan for a novel which was to be called Les Ténèbres (Darkness) in favour of an, in his eyes, unsatisfactory diptych, L'Imposture (The Imposture), ready for publication in book form at the end of 1927, and La Joie (Joy), published in 1929. In 1933 a motorbike accident crippled him for life. Ever more financially desperate, he then took two important steps: the first was to try and earn some easy money by writing thrillers, the second was to move to Majorca where the cost of living was lower than in France. History caught up with him in Spain. Moved by the Spanish Civil War, which he witnessed de facto at closer range than most European intellectuals, he felt called upon to give up fiction for committed writings. Admittedly, this change in focus probably coincided with a major crisis that revealed to him that his inspiration was running out. Such at least can be assumed from the most poignant passages about the exhausted novelist Ganse in Un mauvais rêve (Night Is Darkest). From 1938 to 1945 Bernanos lived in Brazil, where he carried on his work as a polemicist while trying his hand at farming. After the war he returned to France, but found it impossible to settle back into his own country after so many years abroad. His last residence was in Tunisia, but he died in Neuilly in 1948.

The Diary of a Country Priest is an important document because of the serious discussion it contains of Christian values in an indifferent society. But once again it is the outstanding portrayal of the priest that has grabbed the attention of generations of readers and spectators. This priest is a Christ-like figure but retains throughout the book his credibility as a human being. In The Diary Bernanos explores another type of saintliness—the country priest, unlike Donissan, attains sainthood through his humility and naive self-sacrifice.

Equally unique is Bernanos's skill at suggesting the power of evil. In Un crime (The Crime), the Simenon-inspired detective novel he always unjustly despised, he gives an hallucinatingly ambiguous portrayal of a young sapphic murderess who for a few days impersonates the priest she has killed before taking her own life. The choice of a lesbian dressed as a man of God for his heroine allows him to weave a brilliant web of images suggesting the Fallen Angel. Another study of a possessed soul is that of the priest and historian Cénabre who does not leave the Church even though he suddenly realizes that he has lost his faith. Cénabre is one of Bernanos's most interesting characters because of the writer's ability to make us empathize with Cénabre's excruciating terror in front of the void opened in his intellectual life by the loss of his faith. Bernanos is at his most oneiric when probing such dark areas of the mind and of the soul, a tendency still accentuated in his uncompleted novel Monsieur Ouine (The Open Mind), which accomplishes much more than a satire of the sterile introspective writer epitomized in his view by André Gide. At his best, Bernanos is indeed closest to Dostoevskii.

—Pascale Voilley

BERNHARD, Thomas

Born: Heerlen, near Maastricht, The Netherlands, 10 February 1931. Lived in Austria from 1932. Education: Educated at Salzburg Gymnasium, 1943–47, studied singing, directing, and theatrical technique, 1952–55, and at the Salzburg Mozarteum, 1955–57. Career: Commercial apprenticeship, Viennese Academy of Music and Drama, Salzburg, 1947–51; contracted tuberculosis and spent two years in convalescence, 1951–52; journalist for the socialist Demokratisches Volksblatt, from 1952, and contributor to the newspaper Die Furche, 1953–55; intermittent travel to Italy and Yugoslavia, 1953–57, to London, 1960, and to Poland, 1962–63; settled on a farm in Ohlsdorf an Herzversagen, Upper Austria, 1965. Awards: Bremen prize, 1965; Austrian State prize, 1967; Wildgans prize, 1968; Büchner prize, 1970; Grillparzer prize, 1971; Séguier prize, 1974; Premio prato, 1982; Premio Mondello, 1983; Prix Médicis, 1988. Died: 12 February 1989.

PUBLICATIONS

Collection

Gesammelte Gedichte, edited by Volker Bohn. 1991.

Fiction

Frost. 1963.
Amras. 1964.
Verstörung. 1967; as Gargoyles, translated by Richard and Clara Winston, 1970.
Prosa. 1967.
Ungenach (stories). 1968.
Watten: Ein Nachlass. 1969.
Ereignisse (stories). 1969.
An der Baumgrenze. 1969.

Das Kalkwerk. 1970; as The Lime Works, translated by Sophie Wilkins, 1973.
Gehen. 1971.
Midland in Stilfs: Drei Erzählungen. 1971.
Der Kulterer. 1974.
Korrektur. 1975; as Correction, translated by Sophie Wilkins, 1979.
Der Wetterfleck. 1976.
Der Stimmenimitator. 1978; as The Voice Impersonator, translated by Craig Kinosian, 1995; translated by Kenneth J. Northcott, 1997.
Ja. 1978; as Yes, translated by Ewald Osers, 1991.
Die Erzählungen, edited by Ulrich Greiner. 1979.
Die Billigesser. 1980; as The Cheap-Eaters, translated by Ewald Osers, 1990.
Beton. 1982; as Concrete, translated by David McLintock, 1984.
Der Untergeher. 1983; as The Loser, translated by Jack Dawson, 1991.
Holzfällen: Eine Erregung. 1984; as Woodcutters, translated by David McLintock, 1987; as Cutting Timber: An Imitation, translated by Ewald Osers, 1988.
Alte Meister: Komödie. 1985; as Old Masters, translated by Ewald Osers, 1989.
Auslöschung: Ein Zerfall. 1986; as Extinction: A Novel, translated by David McLintock, 1995.
In der Höhe: Rettungsversuch. 1989; as On the Mountain: Rescue Attempt, Nonsense, translated by Sophie Wilkins, 1991.

Plays

Die Rosen der Einöde: Fünf Sätze für Ballet, Stimmen und Orchester (opera libretti; includes Die Rose; Der Kartenspieler; Unter den Pflaumenbäumen; Der Kalbskopf; Phantasie). 1959.
Köpfe (libretto; produced 1960). 1960.
Ein Fest für Boris (produced 1970). 1970; as A Party for Boris, translated by Peter Jansen and Kenneth Northcott, in Histrionics: Three Plays, 1990.
Der Berg, in Literatur und Kritik 5. 1970.
Der Ignorant und der Wahnsinnige (produced 1972). 1972.
Die Jagdgesellschaft (produced 1974). 1974.
Die Macht der Gewohnheit (produced 1974). 1974; as The Force of Habit (produced 1976), translated by Neville and Stephen Plaice, 1976.
Die Salzburger Stücke (includes Der Ignorant und der Wahnsinnige and Die Macht der Gewohnheit). 1974.
Der Präsident (produced 1975). 1975; as The President, translated by Gitta Honegger, with Eve of Retirement, 1982.
Die Berühmten (produced 1976). 1976.
Minetti: Ein Porträt des Künstlers als alter Mann (produced 1976). 1977.
Immanuel Kant (produced 1978). 1978.
Der Weltverbesserer (produced 1980). 1979.
Vor dem Ruhestand (produced 1980). 1979; as Eve of Retirement, translated by Gitta Honegger, with The President, 1982.
Über allen Gipfeln ist Ruh: Ein deutscher Dichertag um 1980. 1981.
Am Ziel (produced 1981). 1981.
Der Schein trügt (produced 1984). 1983; as Appearances Are Deceiving, translated by Gitta Honegger, 1983.
Die Stücke 1969–1981. 1983.
Der Theatermacher (produced 1986). 1984; as Histrionics, translated by Peter Jansen and Kenneth Northcott, in Histrionics: Three Plays, 1990.

Ritter, Dene, Voss (produced 1986). 1984; as Ritter, Dene, Voss, translated by Peter Jansen and Kenneth Northcott, in Histrionics: Three Plays, 1990.
Einfach kompliziert (produced 1986). 1986.
Elisabeth II (produced 1989). 1987.
Heldenplatz (produced 1988). 1988.
Der deutsche Mittagstisch: Dramolette. 1988.
Stücke. 4 vols., 1988.
Claus Peymann kauft sich eine Hose und geht mit mir essen: Drei Dramolette, 1990.
Histrionics: Three Plays (includes A Party for Boris; Histrionics; Ritter, Dene, Voss), translated by Peter Jansen and Kenneth Northcott. 1990.

Screenplays: Der Italiener, 1971.

Verse

Auf der Erde und in der Hölle. 1957.
Unter dem Eisen des Mondes. 1958.
In hora mortis. 1958.
Psalm. 1960.
Die Irren—Die Häftlinge. 1962.
Ave Vergil. 1981.

Other

Die Ursache: Eine Andeutung. 1975.
Der Keller: Eine Entziehung. 1976.
Der Atem: Eine Entscheidung. 1978.
Die Kälte: Eine Isolation. 1981.
Ein Kind. 1982.
Wittgensteins Neffe: Eine Freundschaft. 1982; as Wittgenstein's Nephew: A Friendship, translated by Edward Osers, 1986.
Gathering Evidence: A Memoir (includes Die Ursache; Der Keller; Der Atem; Die Kälte; Ein Kind), translated by David McLintock. 1987.

*

Bibliography: Bernhard Werkgeschichte by Jens Dittmar, 1981.

Critical Studies: Über Thomas Bernhard edited by Anneliese Botond, 1970; Thomas Bernhard edited by Heinz Ludwig Arnold, 1974; Thomas Bernhard by Herbert Gamper, 1977; Thomas Bernhard by Bernard Sorg, 1977; "The Plays of Thomas Bernhard: A Report" by Alfred Barthoder, in Modern Austrian Literature, (11), 1978; "Bernhard's Austria: Neurosis, Symbol, or Expedient?" by A.P. Dierick, in Modern Austrian Literature, (12), 1979; New German Dramatists by Denis Calandra, 1983; "The Works of Thomas Bernhard: Austrian Literature?" in Modern Austrian Literature, (17), 1984, and "Life (and Death) after Life: The Portrayal of Old Age in the Works of Thomas Bernhard" in University of Dayton Review, (20), 1990, both by Gerald A. Fetz; Leiden an der "Natur": Thomas Bernhards metaphysische Weltdeutung im Spiegel der Philosophie Schopenhauers by Gerald Jurdzinski, 1984; Sprache, Handlung, Wirklichkeit im deutschen Gegenwartsdrama: Studien zu Thomas Bernhard, Botho Strauss und Bobo Kirchoff by Siegfried Steinmann, 1985; "Theatertheater/Theaterspiele: The Plays of Thomas Bernhard" by Nicholas Eisner, in Modern Drama, (30), 1987; "Thomas Bernhard Issue" of Modern Austrian Literature, (20), 1988; Thomas Bernhard and his Grandfather Johannes Freumbichler: Our Grandfathers Are Our Teachers by Caroline Markolin, translated by Petra Hartweg, 1993; The Nihilism of Thomas Bernhard: The Portrayal of Existential and Social Problems in his Prose Works by Charles W. Martin, 1995; The Imperative of Narration: Beckett, Bernhard, Schopenhauer, Lacan by Catharina Wulf, 1997; The Rhetoric of National Dissent in Thomas Bernhard, Peter Handke, and Elfriede Jelinek by Matthias Konzett, 2000; Thomas Bernhard: The Making of an Austrian by Gitta Honegger, 2001; The Novels of Thomas Bernhard: Form and Its Function by J.J. Long, 2001.

* * *

Praised for his radical exposure of a disintegrating world and for his calculating and uncompromising prose style, Thomas Bernhard developed in his writing a singlemindedly pessimistic view of life, in which cruelty, disease, and injustice dominate the world. The pointlessness and bleakness of human existence pervade his vast output, which ranges through poetry, plays, novels, and autobiographical works. With its intricate black humour and satirical portraits of the Austrian culture, society, and authorities, Bernhard's literary oeuvre has often evoked comparison with Kafka's labyrinthine irony, Beckett's theatre of the absurd, and Artaud's theatre of cruelty.

The element of melancholy and despair permeated his writing from the outset. Three early volumes of poetry deal with suffering and depression. Auf der Erde und in der Hölle [On Earth and in Hell], In hora mortis [In the Hour of Death], and Unter dem Eisen des Mondes [Under the Iron of the Moon]. The imagery of death and mourning in these early poems reveals what Bernhard described as the "uncertainty of the dim Gods." "Death is my theme because life is my theme," said Bernhard, and the early novel Frost pursues this idea through the narration of a medical student about a doomed painter, while Amras intensified this theme. Verstörung (Gargoyles) continued the macabre tone, with a doctor visiting a succession of grotesque figures and deformed consciousnesses: a diabetic industrialist in an incestuous relationship with his half-sister; three brothers who delight in strangling exotic birds; and a crippled musical prodigy whose sister keeps him locked in a cage. These stories of illness, brutality, and malice are characteristic of the preoccupations of Bernhard's fiction. Often dealing with the mentally ill or physically disabled, Bernhard asserts that all life is motivated by madness and disease. In Das Kalkwerk (The Lime Works), the story begins with Konrad having just blown off his wife's head, after imprisoning himself and her in a disused lime works so that he may experiment with sounds, in preparation for his masterwork, "A Sense of Hearing." The story is narrated by a life-insurance salesman, and tells of the events leading up to this dramatic opening. Again, in Ein Fest für Boris (A Party for Boris), legless guests attend a party hosted by a wealthy woman who is herself legless. Indeed, physical disability, mental disturbance, and obsessively cruel behaviour are not considered as extraordinary characteristics in humans, but exemplary of the overall pattern of things. People's activities are merely pathetic distractions from this basic and fundamental truth.

The five volumes of Bernhard's autobiography, Die Ursache [The Cause], Der Keller [The Cellar], Der Atem [The Breath], Die Kälte [The Cold], and Ein Kind [A Child], recount a disturbed and unhappy childhood: unsettled by illegitimate birth, the oppressive regimes of Nazi and Catholic boarding schools, a debilitating illness which developed into tuberculosis, and years of poverty as a student. Attempting to exorcise the misery of his past, he explodes the myth of Salzburg as a centre of cultural value in familiar terms in Der Keller: “My home city is in reality a deadly disease.” He vents his criticism of Austrian society and its cultural community further in Holzfällen (Cutting Timber or Woodcutters).

Individual freedom and development are often curtailed by circumstances beyond one’s control. Family relationships are frequently the locus of social imprisonment and repression, wherein a master-slave dialectic operates (as for example in A Party for Boris and Am Zeil). Elsewhere, subjects find themselves engaged in artistic projects which are fated to fail—Konrad’s study of hearing in The Lime Works, or Rudolf’s work on Mendelssohn in Beton (Concrete). Alternatively, the exigencies of creative practice placed upon artists transform them into performing automatons indistinguishable from circus creatures—as in the plays Der Ignorant und der Wahnsinnige [The Ignoramus and the Madman] and Die Macht der Gewohnheit (The Force of Habit).

It is noted frequently how Bernhard’s prose, utilizing a variety of unusual techniques, embodies a musical structure, with its counterpoint and fugal patterns, its leitmotif and harmony. The repetition and variation evident in the overall formal structure of the novels are complemented by an intricate, interlaced structure at the level of the sentence. His circular sentences and syntactical experimentation often set up the framework of traditional fictional expectations, only to undermine it. Describing the novel Korrektur (Correction), which recounts the self-corrective and self-refining actions which prompt Roithamer’s suicide, George Steiner has described Bernhard’s style as a “recursive and tidal motion,” and commented on the “clipped understatement” and “the bone-bleached economy” of the language. A characteristic sense of life appears in Correction. “Peace is not life, Roithamer wrote, perfect peace is death, as Pascal said, wrote Roithamer, I shouldn’t waste my time on truisms already demonstrated by history.” Bernhard deliberately models some of his subjects on real people, as when in this novel the character Roithamer is a reflective allusion to Ludwig Wittgenstein; while Paul Wittgenstein appears in Wittgensteins Neffe (Wittgenstein’s Nephew), the pianist Glenn Gould in Der Untergeher (The Loser), the philosopher in Immanuel Kant, and the actor in Minetti.

Bernhard’s plays tend to be long monologues with a scarcity of action and satirical of human foibles, especially intellectual and artistic pretensions, as in Der Weltverbesserer, Über allen Gipfeln ist Ruh, and Der Theatermacher (Histrionics). With dark and forbidding subjects like the Third Reich in Vor dem Ruhestand (Eve of Retirement) and his assertion that anti-semitism is rife in Austria in Heldenplatz or the more general political satire in Der Präsident (The President), his plays are usually made palatable by a lighter, ironic streak.

Nothing in Bernhard’s world is left sacred, including his own status as a writer, which he constantly calls into question. He considers, like Nietzsche, that truths are illusions, only just not recognized as such. Bernhard’s despair over the impersonality, the dreariness, of a manic world devoid of God, and his representations of lonely individuals trying to cast aside their isolation through the temporary use of language, are nevertheless offset by his unerring dedication and commitment to a quest for truth.

—Tim Woods

See the essay on The Lime Works.

BETTI, Ugo

Born: Camerino, Italy, 4 February 1892. Education: Educated at Parma University, law degree 1914. Family: Married Andreina Frosini in 1930. Career: Artillery officer during World War I: captured by the Germans after the Italian defeat at Caporetto, 1917: prisoner-of-war October 1917–December 1918; magistrate, 1919–23, then judge, 1923–26, in Parma; judge in Rome, 1930–43; contributor to Oggi, from 1933; retired to Camerino, 1943, later officially cleared of charges of supporting Mussolini; librarian, Ministry of Justice, 1944; spent last years as legal adviser for the Coordinamento Spettacolo, a national association for writers and publishers. Awards: Mondadori Academy prize, 1932; Italian Institute of Drama prize, 1949. Died: 9 June 1953.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Teatro. 1955.
Teatro postumo. 1955.
Teatro completo. 1957.
Scritti inediti, edited by Antonio di Pietro. 1964.
Teatro completo. 1971.

Plays

La padrona (produced 1926). 1929.
La donna sullo scudo, with Osvaldo Gibertini (produced 1927). 1957.
La casa sull’acqua (produced 1929). 1935.
L’isola meravigliosa (produced 1929). In Teatro, 1955.
Un albergo sul porto (produced 1933). In Teatro, 1955.
Frana allo scalo nord (produced 1936). 1939; as Landslide, translated by G.H. McWilliam, in Three Plays on Justice, 1964.
Una bella domenica di settembre (produced 1937). In Teatro, 1955.
I nostri sogni (produced 1937). In Teatro, 1955.
Il cacciatore d’anitre (produced 1940). In Teatro, 1955.
Il paese delle vacanze (produced 1942). 1942; as Summertime, translated by Henry Reed, in Three Plays, 1956.
Notte in casa del ricco (produced 1942). In Teatro, 1955.
Il diluvio (produced 1943). In Teatro, 1955.
Il vento notturno (produced 1945). In Teatro, 1955.
Ispezione (produced 1947). In Teatro, 1955; as The Inquiry, translated by D. Gullette and Gino Rizzo, in Ugo Betti: Three Plays, 1966.
Marito e moglie (produced 1947). In Teatro, 1955.
Favola di Natale (produced 1948). In Teatro, 1955.
Corruzione al palazzo di giustizia (produced 1949). In Teatro, 1955; as Corruption in the Palace of Justice, translated by Henry Reed, in The New Theatre of Europe I, edited by Robert Corrigan, 1962.
Lotta fino all’alba (produced 1949). In Teatro, 1955; as Struggle Till Dawn, translated by G.H. McWilliam, in Three Plays on Justice, 1964.
Irene innocente (produced 1950). In Teatro, 1955.
Spiritismo nell’antica casa (produced 1950). In Teatro, 1955.
Delitto all’isola delle capre (produced 1950). In Teatro, 1955; as Goat Island, translated by Henry Reed, 1960; as Crime on Goat Island, translated by D. Gullette and Gino Rizzo, in Ugo Betti: Three Plays, 1966.

La Regina e gli insorti (produced 1951). In Teatro, 1955; as The Queen and the Rebels, translated by Henry Reed, in Three Plays, 1956.

Il giocatore (produced 1951). In Teatro, 1955; as The Gambler, translated by B. Kennedy, in Ugo Betti: Three Plays, 1966.

L'aiuola bruciata (produced 1953). 1953; as The Burnt Flower-Bed, translated by Henry Reed, in Three Plays, 1956.

La fuggitiva (produced 1953). 1953; as The Fugitive, translated by G.H. McWilliam, in Three Plays on Justice, 1964.

Acque turbate; o, Il fratello protegge e ama (produced 1962). In Teatro postumo, 1955.

Three Plays (includes Summertime; The Queen and the Rebels; The Burnt Flower-Bed), translated by Henry Reed. 1956.

Three Plays on Justice (includes Landslide; Struggle Till Dawn; The Fugitive), translated by G.H. McWilliam. 1964.

I tre del pra' di sopra (screenplay). In Scritti inediti, 1964.

Ugo Betti: Three Plays (includes The Inquiry; Crime on Goat Island; The Gambler), translated by D. Gullette, B. Kennedy, and Gino Rizzo, edited by Rizzo. 1966.

Fiction

Caino (stories). 1928.

Le case (stories). 1933.

Una strana serata (stories). 1948.

La piera alta, from his screenplay I tre del pra' di sopra. 1948.

Raccolta di novelle, edited by Lia Fava. 1963.

Novelle (stories), edited by Mario Ortolani. 1968.

Verse

Il re penseroso. 1922.

Canzonette—La morte. 1932.

Uomo e donna. 1937.

Poesie (includes poems written 1938–53). 1957.

Il filo verde, poesie, edited by L. Fontanella. 1993.

Other

Considerazioni sulla forza maggiore come limite di responsabilità del vettore ferroviario (essay). 1920.

Religione e teatro. 1957; as “Religion and Theatre,” translated by Gino Rizzo, in Tulane Drama Review, 8, 1964.

Translator, Le nozze di Teti e di Peleo, from poems by Catullus. 1910.

*

Critical Studies: La poesia di Ugo Betti by E. de Michelis, 1937; Il teatro di Ugo Betti by E. Barbetti, 1943; Ugo Betti by N.D. Aloisio, 1952; Ugo Betti by A. Fiocco, 1954; La fortuna del Teatro di Ugo Betti, 1959, and Ugo Betti, 1960, both by F. Cologni; “Interpreting Betti” by G.H. McWilliam, in Tulane Drama Review, 5, 1960; Ugo Betti by A. Alessio, 1963; “Regression-Progression in Ugo Betti’s Drama” by G. Rizzo, in Tulane Drama Review, 8(1), 1963; L’opera di Ugo Betti by Antonio di Pietro, 2 vols., 1966–68; “Ugo Betti: The Theater of Shame” by Harold Watts, in Modern Drama, 12, 1969; “The Purgatorial Theatre of Ugo Betti” by Robert Corrigan, in his The Theatre in Search of a Fix, 1973; Il teatro di Ugo Betti by Gildo Moro, 1973; Impegno e astrazione nell’opera di Ugo Betti by F. Musarra, 1974; “Ugo Betti’s Last Plays” by Antonio Illiano, in Perspectives on Contemporary Literature, 1(1), 1975; Coscienza e responsabilità nell’opera di Ugo Betti: Da La padrona a Corruzione al palazzo di giustizia by Gianni Spera, 1977; Atti del congresso internazionale Betti drammaturgo edited by F. Doglio and W. Raspolini, 1984; Il teatro di Ugo Betti by Giorgio Fontanelli, 1985; Ugo Betti: An Introduction by Emanuele Licastro, 1985; La drammatica di Ugo Betti. Tematiche e archetipi by Gaetana Marrone, 1988; “Tragedy in a Postmodern Vein: Ugo Betti, Our Contemporary?” by Lloyd A. Arnett, in Modern Drama, 33, 1990.

* * *

Of all the Italian dramatists, Ugo Betti is undoubtedly one of the best known and yet still little understood. Such critics as Pandolfi, Quasimodo, and Momigliano have addressed his thematic texts in a variety of ways, but have failed to grasp the core of Betti’s artistic world, its “vibrant poetic truth” as philosopher Gabriel Marcel has called it. After World War I, during the years of disillusionment and despair which brought to power Benito Mussolini, Betti, a socialist, emerged with poems, short stories, and plays that debated modern man’s metaphysical predicament and moral anguish. Betti’s work is often compared to that of his illustrious contemporary Luigi Pirandello. Like the Sicilian playwright, the basic terms of Betti’s existentialist discourse are alienation and authenticity, but their conclusions ostensibly differ. With modern notions of absurdity and nihilism, Pirandello dissects man’s soul and traditional values. A passionate reader of Tolstoi and Dostoevskii, Betti revitalizes formal techniques for the projection of haunting images of death and loneliness. He is concerned with the immediate realities of the human experience and refuses to abide on nothingness, whereas Pirandello’s appeal is toward the appropriation of the absurd in order to discover man’s ambivalent nature. Anyone who attempts to acquire a comprehensive view of Betti discovers that, beyond the familiar paradigms of guilt, justice, and redemption, his is a disconcertingly complex road to follow.

Chronologically, any fundamental approach to Betti ought to begin with La padrona [The Mistress], which became an instant success in 1926. Simple in plot and naturalistic in style, La padrona is remembered mostly for its “Preface,” an ideal introduction to Betti’s theatre. From the beginning, the playwright promotes a plane of existence that is ethical. He explores the power of determining one’s choice, the freedom of will that displaced Adam’s progeny into a liminal stage of suffering. To Betti, “we are all poor, restless creatures, who try to understand the incongruity between our actual existence and the potential nature given to us.” Guilt is a felix culpa motif. Angelo says in Delitto all’isola delle capre (Crime on Goat Island): “Our salvation is in sin; it’s only our wretched pride that doesn’t want to accept it.” The ontological basis of Betti’s tragic vision rests upon the myth of the Fall, which supports the heroic dimension of life, an idea of disorder which initiates the character’s revolt and search for self-knowledge.

Betti’s theatre evolves from realism into myth. The earlier plays evoke the dark settings of French naturalism. For example, in Un albergo sul porto [An Inn on the Harbour], the emblems of estrangement are foreshadowed by sailors, unscrupulous merchants, and prostitutes: in Il cacciatore d’anitre [The Duck Hunter], the symbolic inquiry into the unconscious is personified by the diabolic Michial, a wealthy merchant, and by Marco, an idealistic young man who uses logos and intuition to comprehend the most obscure part of himself, and chooses death over psychological chaos. The archetype of the unconscious is fully explored in La fuggitiva (The Fugitive), a posthumous play. The fugitive of the title is Nina, a neurotic character in whom Betti portrays the dialectic of the ascent from the abyss (a demonic parody of the Lost Eden) to the top of the mountain—the sacred space that defines microcosm and macrocosm. For Betti, man's test starts at the bottom: "What I would like to do, in my writings, is to place certain characters and certain feelings, naked and alone, almost at the bottom of a big ladder. And to watch if there is in them, without any help, the capacity and the need to climb." This premise is implied in the dramas of Eros. Crime on Goat Island, La padrona, and Acque turbate [Troubled Waters] examine a theology of sin embodied in devouring female figures; they represent an epitome of desire and transgression, and yet are instrumental in any aspiration to a superior level of being. In Crime on Goat Island, Agata debates the causality of good and evil before letting Angelo die in the well; in Acque turbate, Alda's incestuous love for her brother, revealed by anamnesis, promotes cosmic awareness. Betti's plays on justice implement this investigation into man's existential stance by representing the legal responsibilities of guilt through an inquiry that is both judicial and metaphysical. To Betti, we are all part of "a machine that moves us." Consequently, a crime triggers reactions that invalidate any individual punishment and call for collective responsibility. In Ispezione (The Inquiry), Frana allo scalo nord (Landslide), and Corruzione al palazzo di giustizia (Corruption in the Palace of Justice), Betti's Kafkaesque inspectors search for individual guilt, but they ultimately formulate a broader definition that transforms the verdict into a crisis of conscience. In existentialist terms, guilt is an essential liminal situation.

Betti's minor works are also worthy of consideration—poems, short stories, screenplays, essays, and a novel—most of which are an orchestration of his dramatic themes. Excluding a translation of Catullus' Epithalamion, Betti's first literary endeavour was a collection of poems, Il re pensieroso [The Pensive King], written in German prison camps between 1917 and 1918. This overture—like the subsequent Canzonette—La morte [Little Songs—Death] and Uomo e donna [Man and Woman]—seems designed to serve as a meditation on human suffering. The adult's cosmic terror, often symbolized by the myth of the child, remains a vital motif in the short story collections, Caino, Le case [Houses], Una strana serata [A Strange Evening], and the novel La pietra alta [The High Stone], all of which are an elaboration on loneliness and authenticity. In the dramatic ballet L'isola meravigliosa [The Marvellous Island], the solitary King Nadir and his elusive quest for happiness symbolize the alienation of 20th-century guilt-ridden man. During the 1930s, Betti's escapist mood was translated into fables and farcical comedies. Il diluvio [The Flood], Una bella domenica di settembre [A Beautiful September Sunday], Il paese delle vacanze (Summertime), I nostri sogni [Our Dreams], and Favola di Natale [Christmas Story] engage in a critique of bourgeois values. Through the analysis of mediocre characters, obsessed by the urge to hide their defeats and weaknesses, Betti exposes the inauthenticity of conventional living.

Betti was not a formalist. In emphasizing his thought, as well as his theatrical achievements, we must remember, however, that Betti considered himself primarily a poet whose interest was ethical, and whose ultimate goal was artistic. Betti sought to restore to mankind a meaningful contact with transcendence. As in Il giocatore (The Gambler), should the protagonist dare to pass the threshold, there is the promise of an unprecedented encounter with the mystery of man himself. Ennio's leap of faith will be rewarded: "He is a bad gambler who cannot risk all at the last moment." Compelled at every step to realize himself freely, but without the support of any established certainties, modern man must risk it all. Betti's theatre affirms faith not as a theological speculation but as a norm, bound to the moral life of the individual in society.

—Gaetana Marrone

BIBBIENA, Bernardo Dovizi da

See DOVIZI DA BIBBIENA, Bernardo

BILDERDIJK, Willem

Born: Amsterdam, The Netherlands, 7 September 1756. Education: Studied law at Leiden, 1780–82. Family: Married 1) Catharina Rebecca Woesthoven in 1785 (marriage not dissolved), one daughter; 2) Katharina Wilhelmina Schweikhardt. Career: Lawyer in The Hague; because of his loyalty to the House of Orange he was forced to leave the Netherlands after French troops proclaimed it a republic in 1795; lived in exile in London, then in Germany; returned to the Netherlands in 1806; King Louis Napoleon's court poet and private tutor in Dutch; nominated member of Royal Dutch Institute, 1808; sheltered from financial difficulties by the king; promised university post in 1813 by Regent William I but blocked by other academics. Died: 18 December 1831.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Geschiedenis des Vaderlands [History of the Fatherland], edited by H.W. Tydeman. 13 vols., 1832–53.
Brieven [Letters], edited by W. Meeschert. 5 vols., 1836.
Dichtwerken [Poetical Works], edited by I. da Costa. 16 vols., 1856–59.

Verse

Prijsvaerzen [Prize Verses]. 2 vols., 1776–77.
Op het afsterven van den dichter Lucas Pater [On the Death of the Poet Lucas Pater]. 1781.
De Leydsche Weezen aan de burgery. 1781.
Myn verlustiging [My Delight]. 1781.
Ellius. 1788.
Vertoogen van Salomo [Sayings of Solomon]. 1788.
De alleenheersching [Sole Rule]. 1793.
Treurzang van Ibn Doreid [Lament of Ibn Doreid]. 1795.
Urzijn en Valentijn [Urzijn and Valentijn]. 1795.
Mengelpoezy [Miscellaneous Verse]. 1799.
Raad van een Hollander aan Engeland [Advice from a Dutchman to England]. 1799.
Losse stukken in verzen [Loose Pieces in Verse]. 1803.
Mengelingen [Miscellaneous]. 1804.

Vaderlandsche oranjezucht [Patriotic Longings for the House of Orange]. 1805.
Ode aan Napoleon [Ode to Napoleon]. 1806.
Nieuwe mengelingen [New Miscellany]. 1806.
Aan den Koning [To the King]. 1807.
De ziekte der geleerden [The Disease of the Learned]. 1807.
Najaarsbladen [Autumn Leaves]. 1808.
Odilde. 1808.
Vreugdezang [Song of Joy]. 1808.
Konings komst tot den thron [Accession of the King]. 1809.
Pestel. 1809.
Verspreide gedichten [Scattered Poems]. 1809.
Wapenkreet [Call to Arms]. 1809.
Hulde aan Zijne Koninklijke en Keizerlijke Majesteit [Homage to His Royal and Imperial Majesty]. 1810.
De geestenwereld [The Spirit World]. 1811.
Winterbloemen [Winter Flowers]. 1811.
De echt. 1812.
Geologie. 1813.
Krijgsdans [War Dance]. 1813.
Affodillen [Asphodels]. 1814.
Nieuwe uitspruitsels [New Shoots]. 1817.
Wit en rood [White and Red]. 2 vols., 1818.
De ondergang der eerste waereld [The Ruin of the First World] (unfinished). 1820; edited by J. Bosch, 1959.
Zedelijke gispingen [Moral Strictures]. 1820.
Taal en dichtkundige verscheidenheden [Linguistic and Poetical Varieties]. 4 vols., 1820–22.
De muis en kikvorschrij [The Battle of Mice and Frogs], from Homer. 1821.
Sprokkelingen [Gleanings]. 1821.
Ter uitvaart van Nicolaas Schotsman [On the Passing of Nicholas Scotsman]. 1822.
Krekelzangen [Cricket Songs]. 3 vols., 1822–23.
De derde oktober [The Third of October]. 1823.
Aan de Roomsche-Katholieken dezer dagen [To Present-Day Catholics]. 1823.
Spreuken [Sayings]. 1823.
Rotsgalmen [Rock Echoes]. 2 vols., 1824.
Navonkeling [Afterglow]. 1826.
Oprakeling [Raking Up]. 1826.
Afscheid aan Leyden [Farewell to Leiden]. 1827.
Nieuwe oprakeling [New Raking Up]. 1827.
De voet in 't graf [A Foot in the Grave]. 1827.
Avondschemering [Twilight]. 1828.
Naklank [Echo]. 1828.
Vermaking [Amusement]. 1828.
Nieuwe vermaking [New Amusement]. 1829.
Schemerschijn [Twilight]. 1829.
Proeve eener navolging van Ovidius' gedaanterverwisselingen [Result of an Adaptation of Ovid's Metamorphoses]. 1829.
Nasprokkeling [Late Gleaning]. 1830.
Rondedans [Round Dance]. 1832.
Nederland hersteld [The Netherlands Reinstated]. 1836.

Plays

Floris de Vijfde [Floris V]. 1808.
Treurspelen [Tragedies], with K.W. Bilderdijk. 3 vols., 1808–09.

Fiction

Kort verhaal van eene aanmerkelijke luchtreis (story). 1813; as A Remarkable Aerial Voyage and Discovery of a New Planet, translated by Paul Vincent, 1986.

Other

Brief van den navolger van Sofokles' Edipus [Letter from the Adaptor of Sophocles' Oedipus]. 1780.
Redevoering over de voortreffelijkheid der schilderkunst [Discourse on the Excellence of Poetry]. 1794.
Verhandeling over de geslachten der naamwoorden [Treatise on the Gender of Nouns]. 1805.
De kunst der poezy [The Art of Poetry]. 1808.
Het treurspel [Tragedy]. 1808.
Van het letterschrift. 1820.
Geslachtlijst der Nederduitsche naamwoorden [List of Gender of Low-German Nouns]. 1821.
Korte ontwikkeling der gronden van het natuurrecht [Short Essay on the Fundamentals of Natural Law]. 1821.
Verhandelingen de zede en rechtsleer betreffende [Discourse on Morality and Law], 1821.
De bezwaren tegen den geest der eeuw van Mr I. da Costa toegelicht [Objections to the Spirit of the Age Elucidated by Mr I. da Costa]. 1823.
Bijdragen tot de toneelpoezy [Contributions to Dramatic Poetry]. 1823.
Nieuwe taal- en dichtkundige verscheidenheden [New Linguistic and Poetical Varieties] (collected works on philology). 4 vols., 1824–25.
Nederlandsche spraakleer [Dutch Grammar]. 1826.
Korte aanmerkingen op Huydecopers Proeve van taal en dichtkunde [Brief Remarks on Huydecoper's Essay on Language and Poetry]. 1827.
Grondregelen der perspectief of doorzichtkunde [Ground Rules of Perspective]. 1828.
Uitzicht op mijn dood [Prospect of My Death]. 1829.
Beginschels der woordvorsching [Principles of Linguistic Research]. 1831.
 Translator, Edipus, Koning van Thebe, by Sophocles. 1780.
 Translator, De Dood Van Edipus, by Sophocles. 1789.
 Translator, Het Buitenleven, by J. Delille. 1803.
 Translator, Fingal, in zes gezangen, by "Ossian" [James Macpherson]. 1805.
 Translator, Lofzangen, by Callimachus. 1808.
 Translator, De Mensch, by Pope. 1808.
 Translator, Hekeldichten, by Persius. 1820.
 Translator, Cinna, by Corneille. 1824.
 Translator, De Cycloop, by Euripides. 1828.
 Translator, Redevoeringen, by St. John Chrysostom. 1832.
 Translator, Kerkredenen, by Merle d'Aubigné. 1833.
 Translator, Het Bewijs en gezag der Christelijke openbaring, by T. Chalmers. 1833.

*

Critical Studies: De mensch en de dichter Willem Bilderdijk by I. da Costa, 1859; Bilderdijk, zijn leven en zijn werken by R.A. Kollewijn, 1891; Bilderdijk als denker en dichter by H. Bavinck, 1906; Gedenkboek voor Mr. W. Bilderdijk by R.A. Kollewijn, 1906; Willem Bilderdijk als dichter by A. Heyting, 2 vols., 1931–40; Een Eeuw strijd om

Bilderdijk by P. Geyl, 1958; Folia Bilderdijkiana edited by M. van Hattum and others, 1985; Bilderdijk en het Jodendom: Bilderdijks waardering van het joodse denken in confrontatie met zijn tijd by L. Engelfriet, 1995; Hogere sferen: de ideeënwereld van Willem Bilderdijk (1756–1831) by Joris van Eijnatten, 1998; Wie leert 't krekeltjen zijn lied?: de poëtische oorspronkelijkheid van Willem Bilderdijk: negen beschouwingen over gedichten van Bilderdijk by Piet Gerbrandy and Marinus van Hattum, 2000.

* * *

Willem Bilderdijk is without a doubt the most prolific Dutch writer but probably the least read, both by his countrymen and by the world at large. Virtually none of his huge output has been translated into English. His large output was caused mainly by the fact that he had to live off his pen, but also because he found writing easy. Bilderdijk was probably one of the last Dutch writers to be seen as a major figure on the cultural, social, and political scene of his time, but his influence scarcely survived his death. Although his many works had been brought out by different publishers, when one of them tried to launch a collected edition a few years after Bilderdijk's death, the project had to be abandoned for lack of interest.

Bilderdijk made his most lasting mark as one of the leading figures of what Dutch historians have called the "Réveil," or national awakening, under the leadership of the still largely autocratic first king of the Netherlands, William I. Bilderdijk's anti-republican, ultra-patriotic, and exceedingly conservative ideas proliferate in his lectures on the history of the Netherlands which he gave in his own living room in Leyden (at no point in his life did he become linked to any Dutch university) to a select group of people who were to become the leaders of the new Dutch state after 1815. Not only did Bilderdijk write an oeuvre of almost unbelievable volume, he did so in different languages and on a variety of topics. He wrote about law in Latin and in Dutch, about philology and literature in French and in Dutch, about botany in French, and about philosophy, theology, and history in Dutch. Three years before his death he published a theoretical book on perspective.

Bilderdijk probably learned to write with such ease in the dichtgenootschappen (poetry clubs) that existed throughout the Netherlands until the French occupation and beyond. His father belonged to one, and that is probably where the young Bilderdijk acquired what was then known as "Parnassian language," the polished, ornamental, somewhat obscure, sonorous, and mostly bombastic diction, replete with classical and mythological references, which he used both in his verse and in his prose. He supplemented it however, with strict metrical schemes in his verse, the only part of his oeuvre ever to be republished in anything resembling a collected edition.

The diction that greatly facilitated Bilderdijk's enormous production also proved an insurmountable barrier between his work and those who tried to read it in later generations. One has the feeling of a machine running on, endlessly and effortlessly, and only very few readers ever catch a glimpse of the sensitive, honest, sometimes even witty ghost imprisoned within it. Bilderdijk wrote in all the genres expected of a true man of letters at the time: prose, mainly polemical, political, and scientific, with his greatest output in verse. His tragedies were inspired by Dutch history and more exotic tales; an epic, De ondergang der eerste waereld [The Ruin of the First World], published unfinished during his lifetime, became his most popular work, and is perhaps the best example of his stature in the Dutch world of letters during his lifetime. Perhaps the truest measure of the reversal of fate Bilderdijk has suffered since his death is the fact that his only complete work that is readily available in Dutch bookstores today is Kort verhaal van eene aanmerkelijke luchtreis (A Remarkable Aerial Voyage and Discovery of a New Planet), published in 1813, the first work of science fiction to be written in Dutch. Science fiction was the only genre in which Bilderdijk was an innovator in Dutch literature, albeit not consciously so. He probably believed that he was continuing 18th-century travel writing, but with other means: after the discovery of Australia, strange lands had to be looked for, and found, on other planets.

In his other works Bilderdijk never progressed beyond the "Parnassian speech" he found so easy. What is still published on Bilderdijk today is published in the form of articles on certain manageable aspects of his work, not on the work as a whole. Those few literary historians tempted to tackle Bilderdijk find his translations easier and more rewarding to read than his original work. Bilderdijk translated Ossian, Delille, and Alexander Pope, but also Sophocles, Persius, and Ovid. His Ossian translation was highly influential in the development of Dutch pre-Romanticism. One gets the impression that only in his translations does his work become less self-referential. Here Bilderdijk was relieved to be the craftsman and nothing more. In his other writings, whatever the subject, the reader is extremely likely to meet Bilderdijk. Many of the tragedies and the narrative poems contain thinly veiled autobiographical passages, and Bilderdijk unashamedly pushes his own views in his more "scientific" writings as well. His literary craftsmanship allowed him to cut a wide path for himself through the contemporary world of letters, so wide that none attempted to follow. Similarly, his unselfconscious egocentrism served as a protective armour. He was in his world but not really of it, like the sickly child not expected to take too great a part in everyday life.

In many ways Bilderdijk occupies a position in Dutch literature and culture not unlike that of Goethe in German literature and culture. Goethe, however, was a genius, whereas Bilderdijk was, in the words of the Dutch historians Annie and Jan Romein, a "genius crippled," a prophet with a club foot.

—André Lefevere

BJØRNSON, Bjørnstjerne (Martinius)

Born: Kvikne, Norway (then united with Sweden), 8 December 1832. Education: Educated at Molde grammar school, 1844–49; Christiania University, Christiania (now Oslo), 1852–54. Family: Married the actress Karoline Reimers in 1858. Career: Contributed articles to newspapers while at university; theatre reviewer, Morgenbladet, 1854–56; editor and contributor, Illustreret Folkeblad, from 1856; director (succeeding Ibsen, q.v.), Det Norske Theater [Norwegian Theatre], Bergen, 1857–59; editor, Bergensposten, Bergen; returned to Christiania to edit the newspaper Aftenbladet, 1859, but subsequently had to resign because of his political views; founder, Norwegian Cultural Society; lived in Rome, 1860–62; director, Christiania Theatre, 1865–67; editor, Norsk Folkeblad, 1866–71; returned to Rome, 1873; became increasingly involved in political and social debate in the late 1870s; travelled and lectured in the United States, 1880–81; lived in Paris, 1882–87; promoter of world peace and minority rights during the 1890s. Awards: Nobel prize for literature, 1903. Died: 26 April 1910.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Works, edited and translated by Rasmus B. Anderson. 6 vols., 1882.
Novels, edited by Edmund Gosse. 13 vols., 1895–1909.
Samlede værker, edited by Carl Nærup. 11 vols., 1900–02.
Samlede digter-verker, edited by Francis Bull. 9 vols., 1919–20.
Samlede digte, edited by Francis Bull. 2 vols., 1926.
Samlede verker. 5 vols., 1960.

Plays

Mellem slagene (produced 1857). 1857; translated as Between the Battles, in The Nobel Prize Treasury, 1948.
Halte-Hulda [Limping Hulda] (produced 1858). 1858.
Kong Sverre [King Sverre] (produced 1861). 1861.
Sigurd Slembe (produced 1863). 1862; as Sigurd Slembe, translated by William Morton Payne, 1888.
Maria Stuart i Skotland (produced 1864). 1864; as Mary Stuart in Scotland, translated by August Sahlberg, 1912; as Mary, Queen of Scots, translated by Sahlberg, 1912.
De nygifte (produced 1865). 1865; as The Newly-Married Couple, translated by Sivert and Elizabeth Hjerleid, 1870; also translated by R. Farquharson Sharp, in Three Comedies, 1912; as The Newly Married, translated by John Volk, 1885; as A Lesson in Marriage, translated by Grace Isabel Colbron, 1910.
Sigurd Jorsalfar [Sigurd the Crusader]. 1872; in Kongebrødrene, edited by Francis Bull, 1932.
Redaktøren (produced 1875). 1874; as The Editor, translated by R. Farquharson Sharp, in Three Dramas, 1914.
En fallit (produced 1875). 1874; as The Bankrupt, translated by R. Farquharson Sharp, in Three Dramas, 1914.
Kongen (produced 1902). 1877; as The King, translated by R. Farquharson Sharp, in Three Dramas, 1914.
Det ny system (produced 1878). 1879; as The New System, translated by Edwin Brörkman, in Plays 1, 1913.
Leonarda (produced 1879). 1879; as Leonarda, translated by Daniel L. Hanson, in The Drama, 3, 1911; also translated by R. Farquharson Sharp, in Three Comedies, 1912.
En hanske (produced 1883). 1883; as A Gauntlet, translated by H.L. Brækstad, 1880; also translated by Osman Edwards, 1894; R. Farquharson Sharp, in Three Comedies, 1912; as The Gauntlet, translated by Edwin Björkman, in Plays 1, 1913.
Over ævne I (produced 1886). 1883; as Pastor Sang, translated by William Wilson, 1893; as Beyond Our Power, translated by Edwin Björkman, in Plays 1, 1913; as Beyond Human Power, translated by Lee M. Hollander, in Chief Contemporary Dramatists, edited by T.H. Dickinson, 1915.
Geografi og kjærlighed (produced 1885). 1885; as Love and Geography, translated by Edwin Björkman, in Plays 2, 1914.
Over ævne II (produced 1895). 1895; as Beyond Human Might, translated by Edwin Björkman, in Plays 2, 1914.
Lyset (libretto). 1895.
Paul Lunge og Tora Parsberg (produced 1901). 1898; as Paul Lange and Tora Parsberg, translated by H.L. Brækstad, 1899.
Laboremus (produced 1901). 1901; translated as Laboremus, 1901; also translated by Edwin Björkman, in Plays 2, 1914.
På Storhøve [At Storhøve] (produced 1902). 1902.
Daglammet [Dag's Farm] (produced 1905). 1904.

Når den ny vin blomstrer (produced 1909). 1909; as When the New Wine Blooms, translated by Lee M. Hollander, 1911.
Three Comedies (includes The Newly-Married Couple; Leonarda; A Gauntlet), translated by R. Farquharson Sharp. 1912.
Plays (vol. 1 includes The Gauntlet; Beyond Our Power; The New System; vol. 2 includes Love and Geography; Beyond Human Might; Laboremus), translated by Edwin Björkman. 2 vols., 1913–14.
Three Dramas (includes The Bankrupt; The Editor; The King), translated by R. Farquharson Sharp. 1914.
Kongebrødrene (includes Sigurd Jorsalfar and Kong Eystejn), edited by Francis Bull, 1932.

Fiction

Synnøve Solbakken. 1857; as Trust and Trial, translated by Mary Howitt, 1858; as Love and Life in Norway, translated by Augusta Bethell and Augusta Plesner, 1870; as Betrothal, translated in Half Hours with Foreign Novelists, 1880; as Synnøve Solbakken, translated by Julie Sutter, 1881; also translated by Rasmus B. Anderson, 1881; part translated as Sunny Hill, 1932.
Arne. 1858; translated as Arne, 1861; also translated by Augusta Plesner and S. Rugeley-Powers, 1866; Rasmus B. Anderson, 1881; Walter Low, with The Fisher Lassie, 1890.
En glad gut. 1859; as Ovind, translated by Sivert and Elizabeth Hjerleid, 1869; as The Happy Boy, translated by Helen R.A. Gade, 1870; as A Happy Boy, translated by Rasmus B. Anderson, 1881; also translated by W. Archer, 1896; translated as The Happy Lad, in “The Happy Lad” and Other Tales, 1882.
Smaastykker [Sketches]. 1860.
Fiskerjenten. 1868; as The Fisher-Maiden, translated by M.E. Niles, 1869; as The Fishing Girl, translated by Augusta Plesner and Frederika Richardson, 1870; as The Fisher Girl, translated by Sivert and Elizabeth Hjerleid, 1871; as The Fisher Maiden, translated by Rasmus B. Anderson, 1882; as The Fisher Lassie, translated by Walter Low, with Arne, 1890; translated as The Fisher Lass, 1896.
Fortællinger [Tales]. 2 vols., 1872.
Brudeslåtten. 1872; as The Bridal March, in Life by the Fells and Fjords, translated by Augusta Plesner and S. Rugeley-Powers, 1879; also translated by Rasmus B. Anderson, in “The Bridal March” and Other Stories, 1882; J. Evan Williams, 1893.
Magnhild. 1877; as Magnhild, translated by Rasmus B. Anderson, 1883.
Life by the Fells and Fjords. 1879.
Kaptejn Mansana. 1879; as Captain Mansana, in “Captain Mansana” and Other Stories, translated by Rasmus B. Anderson, 1882; also translated by Marian Ford, 1883.
Frygten for flertallet. 1881.
“The Bridal March” and Other Stories, translated by Rasmus B. Anderson. 1882.
“Captain Mansana” and Other Stories, translated by Rasmus B. Anderson. 1882.
Det flager i byen og på havnen. 1884; as The Heritage of the Kurts, translated by Cecil Fairfax, 1890.
Støv. 1887.
På guds veje. 1889; as In God's Way, translated by Elizabeth Carmichael, 1890.
Nye fortællinger [New Tales]. 3 vols., 1893–94.
Mary. 1906; as Mary, translated by Mary Morison, 1909.

Verse

Digte og sange [Poems and Songs]. 1870.

Arnljot Gelline. 1870; as Arnljot Gelline, translated by William Morton Payne, 1917.

Poems and Songs (collection), translated by Arthur Hubbell Palmer. 1915.

Other

Mine brev til Petersburgskija Vjedomosti m.m. (letters). 1898.

Udvalgte artikler og taler (articles and speeches). 4 vols., 1902–04.

Aulestad-breve til Bergliot Ibsen, edited by Bergliot Ibsen. 1911.

Gro-tid: Breve fra årene 1857–1870, edited by Halvdan Koht. 2 vols., 1912.

Udvalgte artikler og taler (articles and speeches), edited by Christen Collin and H. Eitrem. 2 vols., 1912–13.

Brytnings-år: Breve fra årene 1871–1878, edited by Halvdan Koht. 2 vols., 1921.

Breve til Alexander L. Kielland, edited by Francis Bull. 1930.

Kamp-liv: Breve fra årene 1879–1884, edited by Halvdan Koht. 2 vols., 1932.

Bjørnstjerne Bjørnsons og Christen Collins brevveksling, 1889–1909, edited by Dagny Bjørnson Sautreau. 1937.

Brevveksling med danske 1875–1910, edited by Øyvind Anker, Francis Bull, and Torben Nielsen. 3 vols., 1953.

Din venn far, edited by Dagny Bjørnson Sautreau. 1956.

Breve til Karoline 1858–1907, edited by Dagny Bjørnson Sautreau. 1957.

Brevveksling med svenske 1858–1909, edited by Øyvind Anker, Francis Bull, and Örjan Lindberger. 3 vols., 1960–61.

Brevveksling med danske 1854–1874, edited by Øyvind Anker, Francis Bull, and Torben Nielsen. 3 vols., 1970–74.

Selvstændighedens Æresfølelse: artikler og taler i udvalg 1879–1905, edited by Knut Johansen. 1974.

Land of the Free: Bjørnson's American Letters, 1880–1881, edited and translated by Eva Lund Haugen and Einar Haugen. 1978.

“Og nu vil jeg tale ut”—“men nu vil jeg også tale ud,” brevvekslingen mellom Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson og Amalie Skram 1878–1904, edited by Øyvind Anker and Edvard Beyer. 1982.

Briefwechsel mit Deutschen, edited by Aldo Keel. 1986.

God morgen, Rosalinde! brev til Rosalinde Thomsen, Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson, edited by Bodil Nævdal. 1990.

*

Bibliography: Bjørnson-bibliografi by Arthur Thuesen, 5 vols., 1948–57.

Critical Studies: Critical Studies of Ibsen and Bjørnson by Georg Brandes, 1899; Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson: Hans barndom og ungdom [Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson: His Childhood and Youth] by Christen Collen, 1907, revised edition, 2 vols., 1923; Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson 1832–1910 by William Morton Payne, 1910; The Norwegian-American Reaction to Ibsen and Bjørnson, 1850–1900 by Arthur Paulson, 1937; Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson: A Study in Norwegian Nationalism by Harold Larson, 1944; Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson, the Man and His Work by Øyvind Anker, 1955; “Bjørnson and Tragedy,” in Scandinavica, 1(1), 1962, and “Bjørnson,” in his Modern Norwegian Literature, 1860–1918, 1966, both by Brian Downs; “Bjørnson Research: A Survey” by Harald Noreng, in Scandinavica, 4(1), 1965: “Bjørnson’s ‘Trond’ and Popular Tradition,” in Scandinavian Studies, 41(1), 1969; Bjørnson’s Bondefortellinger and Norwegian Folk Literature, 1970, and “The Self in Isolation: A New Reading of Bjørnson’s Arne,” in Scandinavian Studies, 45(4), 1973, all by Henning K. Sehmsdorf; “The Multifarious Bjørnson” by Øystein Rottem, in Scandinavica, 24(1), 1985; Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson: kunstneren og samfunnsmennesket 1832–1880 by Per Amdam, 1993; Hvor gjerne vilde jeg have været i deres sted: Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson, de intellektuelle og Dreyfus-saken by Bernt Hagtvat, 1998.

* * *

Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson, along with Henrik Ibsen and August Strindberg, focused the attention of the world upon Scandinavian theatre during the late 19th century. Each of these authors began his career by drawing upon the stories and myths of the Nordic tradition. Bjørnson, a Norwegian, was a prolific and distinguished writer in a number of fields, leaving 21 plays, eight novels, many short stories and poems, several epic-lyric works, critical articles, and nearly 20 volumes of letters. The variety of his literary interest was clear early in his career. In 1857 he published Svinnøve Solbakken, the first of the Norwegian peasant tales that gained him renown throughout Scandinavia, as well as his first play, Mellem slagene (Between the Battles), a one-act work set in the 12th century. The following year saw the play Halte-Hulda [Limping Hulda] and the story Arne. The eponymous Synnøve and Arne, placed in poetically rendered northern landscapes, can be taken as two aspects of the Norwegian peasant, the one rough and swaggering, the other gifted with fancy and imagination, both seen (in a somewhat less sympathetic treatment) in Ibsen’s more famous Peer Gynt. Kong Sverre [King Sverre] continued to work the popular vein of Romantic interest in national history and folklore, and was staged by Ibsen at the nationalist Norwegian Theatre in Christiania (now Oslo). The first of several epic poems on Nordic themes, “Bergliot,” appeared the following year.

The play that first gained Bjørnson a major following was the brilliant historical trilogy Sigurd Slembe, much admired by Ibsen, and echoed to some extent in Ibsen’s great success in historical drama, Kongs-Emnerne (The Pretenders). This was followed by Maria Stuart i Skotland (Mary Stuart in Scotland) in 1864. Having achieved success in national historical dramas, Bjørnson, like Ibsen, but over a decade earlier, then turned to a realistic study of contemporary domestic life. His popular problem play, De nygifte (The Newly-Married Couple), looks backward to Augier and Dumas fils and forward to Ibsen’s Et dukkehjem (A Doll’s House). Indeed, Ibsen’s play may be seen in part as a corrective to Bjørnson’s, which focuses upon the adjustment of the husband to married life: a husband who, in Bjørnson’s own phrase, is treated “like a doll.” Ibsen, once embarked upon his studies of contemporary life, continued to work that vein consistently for a series of brilliant dramas, but Bjørnson, after The Newly-Married Couple, returned to the themes and subjects of his earlier years, producing some of his most popular works, beginning with the short story Fiskerjenten (The Fisher Maiden) in 1868. Two years later appeared both the short but tremendously influential and popular collection of lyric and patriotic verse Digte og sange [Poems and Songs] and the lengthy poem Arnljot Gelline, with an epic imagination and lyric beauty as powerful as anything in this artist’s extensive canon. Another Romantic historical work, Sigurd Jorsalfar [Sigurd the Crusader], was completed in 1872.

In 1875, encouraged perhaps by Georg Brandes's call in 1871 for a Nordic literature engaged with the problems of the present, Bjørnson returned to the territory opened by The Newly-Married Couple with two new problem dramas: Redaktøren (The Editor), showing how an unscrupulous journalist destroys the reputation of a leading citizen, and En fallit (The Bankrupt), his best-known work internationally and Norway's first drama on a financial theme. The latter is a naturalistic study of a wealthy family achieving a happier, if more modest, domestic life after the loss of its ill-gotten riches. Despite its rather dry and untheatrical discussions, Kongen (The King), which questioned the significance of royalty in a democratic era, aroused strong protest from those who considered it an attack not only on the monarchy, but on the Church and other traditional institutions. Det ny system (The New System) responded, like Ibsen's later En folkefiende (An Enemy of the People), to such attacks with an allegory depicting the social martyrdom of a protagonist who dares to express an unpopular truth. Bjørnson's Kampe, however, is a closer relative to Holberg's Erasmus Montanus than to Ibsen's Dr. Stockmann, giving up at last to the superior social force of his opponents.

Bjørnson's two "women's" plays, Leonarda and En hanske (A Gauntlet), continued to bring their author under attack as unsocial and immoral, since the first sympathetically portrays the efforts of a divorced woman to make her way in society and the second attacks a social system that has different laws of morality for men and for women. Both plays, however, were overshadowed at the time and subsequently by the much more radical and more richly textured contemporary social dramas of Ibsen, beginning with A Doll's House in 1879.

Like many European authors of his generation, Bjørnson experienced the tension between traditional religious beliefs and the new scientism represented by such authors as Hippolyte Taine, J. Ernest Renan, and Charles Darwin. This tension forms the basis for what has often been considered his greatest play, Over ævne I (Beyond Human Power), depicting the agony of the Nordic Pastor Sang, whose miraculous powers of healing cannot save his dying and unbelieving wife. The faith and power of God are shown at last beyond human control or comprehension, even by so inspired a figure as Sang. In a much weaker sequel, Over ævne II (Beyond Human Might), Sang's two sons carry on his quest, seeking salvation on the social level through the new religion of revolution. This dynamic is also proven to be beyond their control, and the ever pragmatic Bjørnson seems to advocate a kind of Fabian gradualism to the solving of human problems.

The suicide of a former friend, in whose political downfall Bjørnson may have played a role, inspired the scathing Paul Lange og Tora Parsberg (Paul Lange and Tora Parsberg), which returns to the condemnation of political intolerance previously dealt with in The Editor. Of Bjørnson's final plays, including Laboremus, På Storhove [At Storhove], and Daglannet [Dag's Farm], only the last, Når den ny vin blomstrer (When the New Wine Blooms), a gently ironic study of a somewhat eccentric family disturbed by the stresses of the new feminism, achieved a continuing success.

—Marvin Carlson

See the essay on "peasant tales."

BLIXEN, Karen

See DINESEN, Isak

BLOK, Aleksandr (Alexandrovich)

Born: St. Petersburg, Russia, 28 November 1880. Education: Educated at Vvedenskii School, St. Petersburg, 1891–99; studied law, 1899–1901, and philology, 1901–06, University of St. Petersburg. Family: Married Liubov Dmitrievna Mendeleeva in 1903. Career: Professional writer from 1906; served behind the lines in 1916; later had government jobs: verbatim reporter, Extraordinary Investigating Commission, 1917–18; on various cultural committees after 1918: in theatrical department of People's Commissariat for Education (and chairman of Repertory Section), 1918–19, and involved with Gor'kii's publishing house Vsemirnaia Literatura [World Literature], 1918–21; adviser, Union of Practitioners of Literature as an Art, 1919; chairman of Directorate of Bolshoi Theatre, 1919–21. Died: 7 August 1921.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

- Sobranie stikhotvorenii* [Collected Poetry]. 3 vols., 1911–12.
Sobranie sochinenii [Collected Works]. 7 vols. (of 9 planned), 1922–23; edited by Vladimir N. Orlov and others, 8 vols., 1960–63 (includes diaries and letters), in 6 vols., 1971 (includes notebooks).
Selected Poems, edited by James B. Woodward. 1968.
Selected Poems, edited by Avril Pyman. 1972.
Selected Poems, translated by Jon Stallworthy and Peter France. 1974.
Collected Poems, translated by Sidney Guthrie-Smith. 1975.
Teatr, edited by P.P. Gromova. 1981.
Selected Poems, translated by Alex Miller. 1981.

Verse

- Stikhi o prekrasnoi dame* [Verses on a Most Beautiful Lady]. 1905.
Nechaiannaya radost' [Unexpected Joy]. 1907.
Snezhnaia maska [The Snow Mask]. 1907.
Zemlia v snegu [The Earth in Snow]. 1908.
Nochnye chasy [The Night Watches]. 1911.
Skazki: Stikhi dlia detei [Fairy Tales: Poems for Children]. 1913.
Kruglyi god: Stikhotvoreniiia dlia detei [All the Year Round: Poetry for Children]. 1913.
Stikhi o Rossii [Poems about Russia]. 1915.
Solov'inyi sad [The Nightingale Garden]. 1918.
Dvenadtsat', with Skify. 1918; Dvenadtsat' (bilingual edition), edited by Avril Pyman, 1989; as The Twelve, translated by C.E. Bechhofer, 1920; also translated by B. Deutsch and Avrahm Yarmolinsky, 1931; Robin Fulton, 1968; as The Twelve and the Scythians, translated by Jack Lindsay, 1982.
Iamby: Sovremennye stikhi (1907–1914) [Iambs: Contemporary Poems]. 1919.
Za gran'iu proshlykh dnei [Beyond the Bounds of Days Gone By]. 1920.
Sedoe utro [The Grey Morning], 1920.
Stikhotvoreniiia [Poetry]. 1921.
The Twelve and Other Poems. translated by Peter France and Jon Stallworthy. 1970.
Stikhotvoreniiia i poemy. 1998.

Plays

- Balaganchik* (produced 1906). In Liricheskie dramy, 1908; as The Puppet Show, translated by M. Kriger and Gleb Struve, in Slavonic Review, 28 (71), 1949–50.
- Korol' na ploshchadi* [The King in the Square]. 1907.
- O lyubvi, poezii i gosudarstvennoi sluzhbe*; as Love, Poetry and the Civil Service, translated by F. O'Dempsey, 1953. 1907.
- Pesnia sud'by* [The Song of Fate]. 1907; revised edition, 1919.
- Liricheskie dramy* [Lyrical Dramas]. 1908.
- Neznakomka* [The Stranger] (produced 1914). In Liricheskie dramy, 1908.
- Primater'* [The Ancestress], from a play by Grillparzer (produced 1908).
- Roz'a i krest* (produced 1921). 1913; translated as The Rose and the Cross, in The Russian Symbolist Theatre, edited and translated by Michael Green. 1986.
- Ramzes* [Ramses]. 1921(?).

Other

- Molnii iskusstva* [Lightning Flashes of Art] (travel sketches; unfinished). 1909–20(?).
- Sobranie stikhotvorenii i teatr* [Collected Poetry and Plays]. 4 vols., 1916.
- Rossia i intelligentsiia (1907–1918)* [Russia and the Intelligentsia] (essays). 1918; revised edition, 1919; translated in part in The Spirit of Music, 1943.
- Katilina*. 1919.
- Otrocheskie stikhi; Avtobiografiia* [Adolescent Poems; Autobiography]. 1922.
- The Spirit of Music*, translated by I. Freiman. 1943.
- An Anthology of Essays and Memoirs*, edited by Lucy E. Vogel. 1982.
- Editor, Poslednye dni imperatorskoi vlasti [The Last Days of the Imperial Regime]. 1921.

*

Bibliography: Blok by N. Ashukin, 1923; in O Bloke by E. Blium and V. Goltsev, 1929; by E. Kolpakova and others, in Vilniuskkii gosudarstvennyi pedagogicheskii Institut 6, 1959; by Avril Pyman, in Blokovskii Sbornik 1, 1964, and in Selected Poems, 1972; by P.E. Pomirchii, in Blokovskii Sbornik 2, 1972.

Critical Studies: Blok, Prophet of Revolution by C.H. Kisch, 1960; Aleksandr Blok: Between Image and Idea by F.D. Reeve, 1962; Alexander Blok: A Study in Rhythm and Metre by Robin Kember, 1965; Aleksandr Blok: The Journey to Italy (includes translations) by Lucy Vogel, 1973; The Poet and the Revolution: Aleksandr Blok's "The Twelve" by Sergei Hackel (includes translation), 1975; Listening to the Wind: An Introduction to Alexander Blok by James Forsyth, 1977; The Life of Aleksandr Blok by Avril Pyman, 2 vols., 1979–80; Hamayun: The Life of Aleksandr Blok by Vladimir N. Orlov, translated by Olga Shartse, 1981; Alexander Blok as Man and Poet by Kornei Chukovsky, translated and edited by Diana Burgin and Katherine O'Connor, 1982; Aleksandr Blok by Konstantin Mochulsky, 1983; Aleksandr Blok's Ital'yanskii stikhi: Confrontation and Disillusionment by Gerald Pirog, 1983; Aleksandr Blok Centennial Conference edited by Walter N. Vickery, 1984; "The Structure and Theme of Blok's Cycle Jamby" by James B. Woodward, in Seando-Slavica, 31, 1985; Aleksandr Blok and the Dynamics of the Lyric Cycle by David A. Sloane, 1987; Between Time and Eternity: Nine Essays by P. Kirschner, 1992; Aspects of Dramatic Communication: Action, Non-action, Interaction by J. Stelleman, 1992; Aleksandr Blok: A Life by Nina Berberova, translated by Robyn Marsack, 1996.

* * *

Aleksandr Blok is Russia's last great Romantic poet and one of her most charismatic personalities. Blok's legend began when he discovered his great theme of the Eternal Feminine—this myth-making Symbolists' ideal, which they saw as the link between the earthly and the divine. His first book of poems, Stikhi o prekrasnoi dame [Verses on a Most Beautiful Lady], comprised 800 "romantic hymns to one woman," his future wife Liubov Mendeleeva. These, the most immaterial, rarified lyrics in Russian literature, are "poems of praise," "heavenly songs" to idealistic Beauty. Blok believed that the world was created according to absolute Beauty. The ecstatic vision of the Beautiful Lady appeared in Blok's poetry in various incarnations representing the spirit of harmony. It became the Symbolists' symbol of symbols and "passions" game. B. Eikhenbaum called Blok a "dictator of feelings," saying that Blok always lived in the "aura of those emotions which he himself aroused." Blok, indeed, "went from cult to cult" (Mandel'shtam), from the Beautiful Lady and "The Unknown Lady" through "The Snow Mask" and "Carmen" to Russia and the Revolution. He tried to find "the truth" through intensely lived emotional experiences, and his poetry mirrored his inner life which was essentially dualistic. "I am afraid of my two-faced soul," he confessed, "and carefully bury its demonic and fierce visage in shining armour." He was torn between his apocalyptic predictions and hope for future harmony, between the music of the spheres and the tumult-rhythms of the coming social upheavals.

Russia, as the theme of his life, also troubled him with her two faces—beautiful and hungry, great and drunken. The dissonance between vision and reality constitutes Blok's tragedy: "The love and hate I have within me—no one could endure." He found irony as the best weapon to deal with discontent and despair. He ridiculed mysticism in his dramatic trilogy Balaganchik (The Puppet Show), Korol' na ploshchadi [The King in the Square], and Neznakomka [The Stranger]. Blok shed his mysticism by 1906 but wanted to stay in touch with the infinite, having the capacity to hear the music of the "world's orchestra."

Music was the "essence of the world" for Blok. He built his metaphysical system on the conception of the "spirit of music": "There are . . . two times, two dimensions," he wrote in his essay "The Downfall of Humanism," "one historical, chronological, the other immeasurable and musical." Unlike Belyi, Blok was never a theorist or a thinker. He possessed enormous sensitivity and an impeccable ear, but not a great intellect. Blok's strictly poetic achievement has usually been exaggerated. As Mandel'shtam said: "In literary matters Blok was an enlightened conservative. He was exceedingly cautious with everything concerning style, metrics or imagery: not one overt break with the past." Harmony between the ear and the eye led him to use symbols of an auditory nature, elemental sounds, the wild howl of violins, the tune of the wind, the harps and strings of a blizzard. He incorporated the lilting rhythms of gypsy songs, their uneven beat and abrupt alternations of fire and melancholy. Many of his best lyrics are a curious transposition of gypsy tunes into the moods, forms, and vocabularies of modern symbolism. The predominance of the musical over the discursive and the logical was a feature of his poetry as much as of his character.

Blok dreamt all his life about creating a musical poem that would reflect this antimusical world. He realized his dream in the poem Dvenadtsat' (The Twelve), which he wrote in two days. Here chaos and music almost fuse. The imagery of snow-storms formed the background of the birth of the new world. Twelve Red soldiers, spreading terror and death, become 12 apostles with Christ as their invisible leader. In the Revolution Blok saw a new manifestation of "the Spirit of Music." But it was too loud for Blok's hypersensitive ear: soon after The Twelve and Skify (The Scythians), 1918, he ceased to "hear." "I have not heard any new sounds for a long time; they have all vanished for me and probably for all of us . . . it would be blasphemous and deceitful to try deliberately to call them back into our soundless space," he told Chukovsky, and he ceased writing poetry. Not all Blok's friends shared his belief that the time had come for the intellectuals to sacrifice themselves under the wheels of the "troika." Hostility toward Blok was inevitable. He was told to his face that "he had outlived his time and was inwardly dead"—a fact with which, Pasternak told us, he calmly agreed. Russia's last poet-nobleman with Decembrist blood in his veins was out of time. It was unfortunate for Blok that greater poets followed him so quickly. For them, however, Blok, as a man and a poet, became a symbol, a "monument of the beginning of the century" and the "tragic tenor of the epoch" (Akhmatova).

—Valentina Polukhina

See the essay on The Twelve.

BOBROWSKI, Johannes

Born: Tilsit, East Prussia (now Sovetsk, CIS) 9 April 1917. Education: Educated at high school in Königsberg (now Kaliningrad); studied art history, University of Berlin, 1937–41. Military Service: Served in the army 1939–45; prisoner of war in Russia, captured 1945, released 1949. Family: Married Johanna Buddrus in 1943; four children. Career: Editor, Lucie Groszer, children's book publishers, Berlin, 1950–59, and with Union Verlag, East Berlin, 1959. Awards: Gruppe 47 prize, 1962; Alma König prize, 1962; Heinrich Mann prize 1965; Veillon prize (Switzerland), 1965; Weiskopf prize, 1967 (posthumously). Died: 2 September 1965.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Gesammelte Werke, edited by Eberhard Haufe. 3 vols., 1987.
Shadow Lands: Selected Poems (includes the collections Shadow Land and From the Rivers and other poems), translated by Ruth and Matthew Mead. 1984.

Verse

Sarmatische Zeit. 1961.
Schattenland Ströme. 1962.
Wetterzeichen. 1966.
Shadow Land, translated by Ruth and Matthew Mead. 1966.
Im Windgesträuch, edited by Eberhard Haufe. 1970.

Selected Poems: Johannes Bobrowski, Horst Bienek, translated by Ruth and Matthew Mead. 1971.
Gedichte 1952–1965. 1974.
From the Rivers, translated by Ruth and Matthew Mead. 1975.
Literarisches Klima: Ganz neue Xenien, doppelte Ausführung. 1978.
Yesterday I Was Leaving, translated by Rich Ives. 1986.
The White Mirror: Poems, translated by Muska Nagel, 1993.

Fiction

Levins Mühle. 1964; as Levin's Mill, translated by Janet Cropper, 1970.
Böhlendorff und andere: Erzählungen. 1965.
Mäusefest und andere Erzählungen. 1965.
Litauische Claviere. 1966.
Der Mahner: Erzählungen und andere Prosa. 1968.
Erzählungen. 1969.
Drei Erzählungen. 1970.
I Taste Bitterness (stories), translated by Marc Linder. 1970.
Die Erzählungen. 1979.
Böhlendorff: A Short Story and Seven Poems, translated by Francis Golfing. 1989.
Darkness and a Little Light, translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1994.

Other

Nachbarschaft: Neun Gedichte; Drei Erzählungen; Zwei Interviews; Zwei Grabreden; Zwei Schallplatten; Lebensdaten. 1967.
Editor, Die schönsten Sagen des klassischen Altertums, by Gustav Schwab. 1954.
Editor, Die Sagen von Troja und von der Irrfahrt und Heimkehr des Odysseus, by Gustav Schwab. 1955.
Editor, Der märkische Eulenspiegel, by Hans Clauert. 1956.
Editor, Leben Fibels, by Jean Paul. 1963.
Editor, Wer mich und Ilse sieht im Grase: Deutsche Poeten des 18. Jahrhunderts über die Liebe und das Frauenzimmer. 1964.
Translator, with Günther Deicke, Initialen der Leidenschaft, by Boris Pasternak. 1969.

*

Bibliography: Das Werk von Johannes Bobrowski by Curt Grützmacher, 1974; bibliography by Adolf Sckerl, in Schattenfabel von den Versuchungen. Johannes Bobrowski. Zur 20. Wiederkehr seines Todestages, 1985.

Critical Studies: West-Östliches in der Lyrik Johannes Bobrowski by Sigrid Höfert, 1966; Johannes Bobrowski: Selbstzeugnisse und Beiträge über sein Werk, 1967, expanded edition, 1982; Bobrowski und andere. Die Chronik des Peter Jokostra, 1967; Johannes Bobrowski. Leben und Werk, 1967, and Beschreibung eines Zimmers. 15 Kapitel über Johannes Bobrowski, 1971, both by Gerhard Wolf; Johannes Bobrowski. Versuch einer Interpretation by Rudolf Bohren, 1968; Johannes Bobrowski by Brian Keith-Smith, 1970; Beschwörung und Reflexion. Bobrowskis sarmatische Gedichte by Wolfram Mauser, 1970; Johannes Bobrowski. Prosa. Interpretationen by Mechthild and Wilhelm Dehn, 1972; Johannes Bobrowski. Chronik, Einführung, Bibliographie by Bernhard Gajek and Eberhard Haufe, 1977; Facetten. Untersuchungen zum Werk Johannes Bobrowskis by Alfred Behrmann, 1977; Erinnerung Johannes Bobrowski by Christoph Meckel, 1978;

Ahornallee 26; oder, Epitaph für Johannes Bobrowski edited by Gerhard Rostin, 1978; Johannes Bobrowski. Studien und Interpretationen by Bernd Leistner, 1981; Johannes Bobrowskis Lyrik und die Tradition by Fritz Minde, 1981; Die aufgehobene Zeit. Zeitstruktur und Zeitelemente in der Lyrik Johannes Bobrowskis by Werner Schulz, 1983; Schattenfabel von den Versuchungen. Johannes Bobrowski. Zur 20. Wiederkehr seines Todestages, 1985; Understanding Johannes Bobrowski by David Scrase, 1995; Between Sarmatia and Socialism: The Life and Works of Johannes Bobrowski by John P. Wiczorek, 1999.

* * *

Johannes Bobrowski, who died from peritonitis in 1965 at the age of 45, was one of the most humane German writers of the 20th century, and the concept of “humanitas” to bind communities together informs his works. This implies a willingness to learn from past mistakes and an openness to the needs of others. His declared central theme of atonement for German crimes against Eastern neighbours implies an awareness both of hidden, half-forgotten forces in the landscape and of a variety of ethnic characteristics among the villages and small towns along the river Memel. His combination of locally-based prejudices and events—the novel Levins Mühle (Levin’s Mill) and a sophisticated application of culture from the classical world (the sapphic form of “Ode to Thomas Chatterton”), 18th-century writers and musicians (the story “Epitaph for Pinnau” and his unpublished anthology “Lieder von Heinrich Albert”) produced a highly personal style. Essential was the relationship of the individual to his environment and to language (the poem “Dead Language”). This led him to search for the lifestyle and history of his ancestors (as can be seen from documents in his posthumous papers), and also to speak out against the inhumanity of his time, especially the Nazi period (the poem “eport”). The border atmosphere and village life as a world theatre in miniature form the background to his landscape poetry (the poems “Das Holzhaus über der Wilna,” “Village,” and “The Sarmatian Plain,” also the stories “Lipmann’s Leib” [Lipmann’s Body] and “In Pursuance of City Planning Considerations”). Equally important to him were the river landscapes (the poems “In the Stream,” “By the River,” “The Don”) that he presents as coordinates of both time and place. School in Königsberg—the town of Hamann and Kant—opened up to him a rich literary and musical heritage, and he developed a taste for Baroque music, for Bach, Buxtehude, and Mozart. He also learnt to appreciate the form and discipline of classical Greek and Latin writers. War service, especially in the army invading Poland, made him realize how fragile common humanity can be. This influenced much of his early, sometimes unpublished poetry and some of his short prose texts (the poems on Russia and texts such as “Mouse Banquet” and “The Dancer Malige”).

The link between his poetry and prose, which was written mainly during the last few years of his life, lies in the use of signs, on which Minde and Behrmann among others have written. Yet he was constantly aware of the foreshortening, deadening, and dehumanizing potentials of language—hence the search in his second novel Litauische Claviere for an operatic form where reconciliation of political views and fusion of modes of expression might be fully explored. His works, set in a frontier land of German and Lithuanian districts (e.g. the novels Levin’s Mill and Litauische Claviere) include examples of a level of consciousness between dream and wide-awake reality (the poem “Eichendorff” and the short story “Das Käuzchen” [The Little Owl]) where memories bring an awakening to a further dimension of reality. Through an unexpected event the everyday is revealed as only one level of experience (the poem “Elder Blossom”).

Literature can function as a breaker of time barriers and create a sense of mythic existence as in the poem “Die Günderrode” [Gunderrode]. A Weg nach innen (way inwards) à la Novalis is based on the magic power of the word, yet Bobrowski used myth not to expand into the elemental, endless, or universal as with the Romantics, but to refer with his metaphors to a more intense understanding on the local human level. His works were thus a deliberate quest for cultural, historical, and natural roots. The use of open form bringing heterogenous elements together in an apparently often unresolved manner was designed to shock the reader, assist him sometimes to laugh, and help him to comprehend more fully the nature of the reasons behind his existence (the poem “Village Music” and the short story “De homine publico tractatus”). In both prose and poetry he paid strict attention to metric as opposed to strophic or linear structure as basic building blocks, thus emphasizing his sense of control, of Bebauung over his material.

The more “naïve” evocation of the past in his poems of the 1950s—“Der litauische Brunnen” [The Lithuanian Well], “Der Singschwan” [Singing Swan], “Die alte Heerstrasse” [The Old Army Road]—contained a definite epic quality. This gave way to a tone of lament for the loss of a previous world, and the poetic images began to assume the qualities of a cipher (“Always to Be Named,” “Nänie”). He became a master of finding objective correlatives and set them with great verbal economy and rich variety of poetic device. Most of his poems are short, but they are full of nuances and hidden allusions. His prose works also developed from evocation and direct assimilation of the past towards emphatic statements of a new sense of community service (“Contemplation of a Picture”). Basic to poems and prose is often a structure that includes a negative warning that registers the past, followed by a call for closer involvement with nature, and finally an act of naming or finding the fitting poetic language to resuscitate a lost dimension of human awareness.

By including the perspective of a narrator, Bobrowski often ensured that sentimentality is cut out and the reader becomes aware of a directed form of detailed portrayal highlighting the co-existence of different worlds (especially in the longest of his short prose works “Böhlendorff”). A form of score with variants and counterpoint emerged in his prose works, just as with a work for an organ, an instrument that Bobrowski particularly cherished.

Since his early death Bobrowski has become known throughout the world because he developed a poetic language with a mastery of imagery, rhythm, and musicality. He understood the everyday world and political theories to be sterile and non-creative—the interplay of history and landscape seemed to him healthier and closer to the secret wishes of man in general. He combined a serious-minded, peace-loving message with an almost therapeutically ironic distancing from all human foibles. It is not surprising that half of his posthumous papers consist of letters from friends from many countries, for he sought above everything dialogue between all human beings (the poem “The Word Man”). The freshness of his works depends on his success in keeping them free from nostalgia and sentimentality, his rare mastery of technical detail, knowledge of several historical atmospheres, a light touch, and an eye for positive humanity.

—Brian Keith-Smith

BOCCACCIO, Giovanni

Born: Florence or Certaldo between June and July in 1313. Education: Apprentice in his father's banking business, Naples, 1327–31; studied canon law, 1331–36. Career: Worked in banking in Naples until 1341; returned to Florence in 1341 and was there during the Black Death, 1348; met Petrarch, q.v., in 1350 and thereafter devoted himself to humanistic scholarship; took minor clerical orders, 1357; active in Florentine public life, and went on several diplomatic missions in the 1350s and 1360s; lectured on Dante, q.v., in Florence, 1373–74. Died: 21 December 1375.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Opere latine minori, edited by A.F. Massèra. 1928.
Opere, edited by Vittore Branca and others. 12 vols., 1964.
Opere minori in volgare, edited by Mario Marti. 4 vols., 1969–72.
Opere, edited by Cesare Segre. 1980.
Poetry through Typography, compiled by Hermann Zapf, 1993.

Fiction

Elegia di Madonna Fiammetta, edited by Cesare Segre, 1966, and by Mario Marti, in Opere minori, 3, 1971; as Amorous Fiammetta, translated by Bartholomew Young, 1587, reprinted 1926; as The Elegy of Lady Fiammetta, edited and translated by Mariangela Causa-Steindler and Thomas Hauch, 1990.
Decameron, edited by Vittore Branca. 1976; as The Decameron, translated anonymously, 1620; numerous subsequent translations including by John Payne, 1866 (revised edition by Charles Singleton, 1984); Richard Aldington, 1930; Frances Winwar, 1930; G.H. McWilliam, 1972; Mark Musa and Peter E. Bondanella, 1977; J.M. Rigg, 1978.
Il filocolo, edited by Antonio Enzo Quaglio. 1967; translated in part as Thirteen Questions of Love, edited by Harry Carter, 1974.
Boccaccio's First Fiction, edited and translated by Anthony K. Cassel and Victoria Kirkham. 1991.

Plays

L'ameto, edited by Antonio Enzo Quaglio, in Opere, 2. 1964; as L'ameto, translated by Judith Powers Serafini-Sauli. 1985.

Verse

Il filostrato, edited by Vittore Branca, in Opere, 2. 1964; as The Filostrato, translated by N.E. Griffin and A.B. Myrick, 1929; as Il Filostrato: The Story of the Love of Troilo, translated by Hubert Cummings, 1934.
Rime, edited by Vittore Branca. 1958.
Il ninfale fiesolano, edited by Armando Balduino. 1974; as The Nymph of Fiesole, translated by Daniel J. Donno, 1960; as Nymphs of Fiesole, translated by Joseph Tusiani, 1971.
La caccia di Diana, edited by Vittore Branca, in Opere, 1. 1964.
Il Teseida, edited by Alberto Limentani, in Opere, 2. 1964; as The Book of Theseus, translated by Bernadette Marie McCoy, 1974.

L'amorosa visione, edited by Vittore Branca, in Opere, 3. 1964; translated by Robert Hollander, Timothy Hampton, and Margherita Frankel, 1986.

Eclogues, translated by Janet Levarie Smarr. 1987.

Other

Le lettere, edited by Francesco Corazzini. 1877.
Trattatello in laude di Dante, edited by Pier Giorgio Ricci. 1974; translated in The Early Lives of Dante, 1904; as The Life of Dante, translated by Vincenzo Zin Bollettino, 1990.
Il commento alto Divina Commedia e altri scritti intorno a Dante, edited by Domenico Guerri. 4 vols., 1918–26.
De genealogia deorum gentilium [The Genealogies of the Gentile Gods], edited by Vincenzo Romano. 1951; section as Boccaccio on Poetry, translated by Charles Osgood, 1930; as Boccaccio: In Defense of Poetry, edited by Jeremiah Reedy, 1978.
De claris mulieribus, edited by Vittorio Zaccaria. 1967; as Concerning Famous Women, translated by Guido A. Guarino. 1963; as Famous Women, edited and translated by Virginia Brown, 2001.
De casibus virorum illustrium, abridged as The Fates of Illustrious Men, translated by Louis Hall. 1965.
Il corbaccio, edited by Tauno Nurmela. 1968; as The Corbaccio, edited and translated by Anthony K. Cassell, 1975.

*

Bibliography: Linee di una storia della critica al Decameron. Con bibliografia boccaccesca completamente e aggiornata by Vittore Branca, 1939; Boccacciana: Bibliografia delle edizioni e degli scritti critici 1939–1974 by Enzo Esposito, 1976; Giovanni Boccaccio: An Annotated Bibliography by Joseph P. Consoli, 1992; Boccaccio in English: A Bibliography of Editions, Adaptations, and Criticism by F.S. Stych, 1995.

Critical Studies: Boccaccio: A Biographical Study by E. Hutton, 1910; The Life of Giovanni Boccaccio by Thomas C. Chubb, 1930; The Tranquil Heart: Portrait of Giovanni Boccaccio by Catherine Carswell, 1937; Boccaccio by Francis MacManus, 1947; Boccaccio in England from Chaucer to Tennyson by Herbert G. Wright, 1957; Nature and Love in the Middle Ages: An Essay on the Cultural Context of the Decameron by Aldo D. Scaglione, 1963; An Anatomy of Boccaccio's Style, 1968, and Order from Chaos: Social and Aesthetic Harmonies in Boccaccio's Decameron, 1982, both by Marga Cottino-Jones; The Writer as Liar: Narrative Technique in the "Decameron" by Guido Almansi, 1975; Nature and Reason in the Decameron by Robert Hastings, 1975; Critical Perspectives on the Decameron edited by Robert S. Dombrowski, 1976; Boccaccio: The Man and His Works by Vittore Branca, translated by Richard Monges, 1976, and Boccaccio medievale e nuovi studi sul Decameron by Branca, 1986; Boccaccio's Two Venuses, 1977, and Boccaccio's Last Fiction: Il Corbaccio, 1989, both by Robert Hollander; Studies on Petrarch and Boccaccio by Ernest H. Wilkins, 1978; An Allegory of Form: Literary Self-Consciousness in the Decameron by Millicent Joy Marcus, 1979; Boccaccio by Thomas G. Bergin, 1981; Five Frames for the Decameron: Communication and Social Systems in the Cornice by Joy Hambuechen Potter, 1982; Giovanni Boccaccio by Judith Powers Serafini-Sauli, 1982; Religion and the Clergy in Boccaccio's Decameron by Cormac O'Cuilleanáin, 1984; Chaucer and the Early Writings of Boccaccio by David Wallace, 1985; Boccaccio and Fiammetta: The Narrator as Lover by Janet Levarie Smarr, 1986; The World at Play in Boccaccio's Decameron by Giuseppe Mazzotta, 1986; Before the Knight's Tale: Imitation of Classical Epic in Boccaccio's Teseida by David Anderson, 1988; The Shades of Aeneas: The Imitation of Vergil and the History of Paganism in Boccaccio's Filostrato, Filocolo and Teseida by James H. MacGregor, 1991; Ambiguity and Illusion in Boccaccio's Filocolo by Steven Grossvogel, 1992; The Sign of Reason in Boccaccio's Fiction by Victoria Kirkham, 1993; Boccaccio's and Chaucer's Cressida by Laura D. Kellogg, 1995; Boccaccio's Des cleres et nobles femmes: Systems of Signification in an Illuminated Manuscript by Brigitte Buettner, 1996; Chaucer, Boccaccio, and the Debate of Love: A Comparative Study of the Decameron and the Canterbury Tales by N.S. Thompson, 1996; Adventures in Speech: Rhetoric and Narration in Boccaccio's Decameron by Pier Massimo Forni, 1996; Boccaccio's Dante and the Shaping Force of Satire by Robert Hollander, 1997; Visualizing Boccaccio: Studies on Illustrations of The Decameron, from Giotto to Pasolini by Jill M. Ricketts, 1997; The Ethics of Nature in the Middle Ages: On Boccaccio's Poetaphysics by Gregory B. Stone, 1998; The Decameron and the Canterbury Tales: New Essays on an Old Question, edited by Leonard Michael Koff and Brenda Deen Schildgen, 2000; Fabulous Vernacular: Boccaccio's Filocolo and the Art of Medieval Fiction by Victoria Kirkham, 2001.

* * *

Boccaccio's literary production is characterized by an unusual versatility; his work, both in prose and verse, contains a variety of genres, many of which were pioneer ventures, destined to exercise a powerful influence on succeeding generations. His essay in the field of narrative in verse was La caccia di Diana [Diana's Hunt], an allegory of love, designed, it would seem, to memorialize the glamorous ladies of the Neapolitan court. It is a very "Dantean" composition, written in terza rima and with numerous echoes of Commedia (The Divine Comedy); it is a trifle but a well-constructed trifle. Of the same period is Il filocolo (Thirteen Questions of Love), a prose romance of Byzantine stamp composed, the author tells us, in honour of his "Fiammetta," the Neapolitan siren who charmed and betrayed him. Called by some critics "the first prose romance in European literature," Thirteen Questions of Love is long and digressive; although the central characters are of royal blood, the peripatetic plot anticipates the picaresque. For all its rhetoric and prolixity the narrative is well told and the characters in the main believable. This cumbrous initiative was followed by Il filostrato (The Filostrato), telling in ottava rima of the ill-starred love of the Trojan prince Troilo for the faithless Criseida. It is a skilfully planned composition, set forth with economy, and successful in its depiction of characters; the romantic prince is artfully paired with the worldly Pandaro, his friend and counsellor. Il Teseida (The Book of Theseus), which followed a few years later, is, in spite of its Greek title and background, essentially a medieval work; the "epic" is actually a love story. All of these early productions reflect the feudal tastes of the Neapolitan court.

A change of inspiration becomes evident in the works written after Boccaccio's return to Tuscany in 1341. L'ameto is a moralizing allegory, combining prose and verse (as had Dante's La vita nuova) yet the use of "frame" to serve as a background for moralizing tales (paradoxically erotic in tone) points to The Decameron. In L'amorosa visione [Vision of Love] (a somewhat confused allegory) the presence of Dante is even more patent. Elegia di Madonna Fiammetta (The Elegy of Lady Fiammetta), which follows, is by contrast, original and strikingly "modern"—one might say timeless. The abandoned Fiammetta, who tells in her own words (in prose) of her misplaced obsession for a false lover, though somewhat prolix, wins our sympathy. In one sense the Fiammetta is a reversion, for the background is Naples. Truly Tuscan, on the other hand, is the charming idyll Il ninfaie fiesolano (The Nymph of Fiesole). With winning simplicity in ottava rima of unpretentious construction, the story is told of a simple shepherd and his beloved "nymph of Diana" who is in effect a simple contadina.

The Decameron, Boccaccio's masterpiece, marks a new departure in the author's trajectory. We deal no more with Trojan princes or even woodland nymphs—we have left Naples for good, and allegory has no part in the author's intention (though it must be conceded that in the flight of the narrators of the "frame" from the plague-stricken city one can argue some implications regarding the relation of art to its subject matter). The essential feature of The Decameron is realism; the world of the tales is the world of here and now. The demographic range is wide: it includes not only lords and princes but merchants, bankers, doctors, scholars, peasants, priests, monks—and a surprising number of women. A token of the feminist thrust of the work may be seen in the fact that seven of the ten "frame characters" or narrators are women. All of the actors in this extensive comedy are presented deftly, with sympathetic tolerance for their motivation and participant relish in their adventures, vicissitudes, and resourceful stratagems. If the work is without didactic intent—"Boccaccio doesn't want to teach us anything," the Italian critic Umberto Bosco has justly observed—yet the nature of its substance carries its own implications. The Decameron is democratic, feminist, and au fond optimistic. No doubt heaven is our destination but life can be joyous too, given a certain amount of wit and adaptability. Only in the last day does a kind of medievalism creep in, as the author sets before us a series of exempla, signifying sundry abstract virtues. Yet the narratives told even on that day are set forth with skill and verve and without undue lingering on their moralizing purpose; Griselda, for example, may seem an absurdly morbid creature (as in fact she does to some of the frame characters), but her story is told with a brio that compels the reader's attention. As entertaining today as when it was written, Boccaccio's great work both reflects and inspires a new appreciation of the human pilgrimage.

Save for Il corbaccio, a violent misogynistic satire, The Decameron is the last work of a creative nature to issue from Boccaccio's pen—and the last work in the vernacular as well. Moved by the example of Petrarch, he put aside fiction and turned to exercises in erudition, notably the massive compilation of the De genealogia deorum gentilium [The Genealogies of the Gentile Gods], an encyclopedia that would serve scholars for generations to come, and the catalogue of rivers, lakes, and mountains, both composed in Latin, as were his Eclogues (Buccolicum Carmen), patently in imitation of his revered master. After The Decameron, too, a certain inner spiritual change is apparent in the hitherto worldly Boccaccio; he took holy orders, and although the instinct for storytelling was still strong—witness La vita di Dante (The Life of Dante) and De claris mulieribus (Concerning Famous Women)—it was clearly affected by his new outlook on life. A letter suggests even a repudiation of The Decameron. His last work, and one of importance to Dantists, was his exposition of The Divine Comedy, a series of lectures given in Florence.

Many of Boccaccio's creative works are seminal: The Book of Theseus foreshadows the Renaissance epic, The Filostrato has left a trail of progeny ranging from Chaucer through Shakespeare to many contemporary writers. The Nymph of Fiesole has 15th-century echoes. And The Decameron has had many imitators. Boccaccio's contribution to the literature of the Western world is of impressive and all but unique dimensions.

—Thomas G. Bergin

See the essay on "The Ninth Tale of the Fifth Day of The Decameron."

BOETHIUS

Born: Anicius Manlius Severinus Boethius, probably in Rome, c. AD 480. Family: Married to Rusticiana; two sons. Career: Consul under the Ostrogothic King Theodoric, 510; head of government and court services (magister officiorum), 520; accused of treason, practising magic, and sacrilege: sentence ratified by the Senate, and he was imprisoned near Pavia, 522. Also a Hellenist: translator (with commentary) of works of Aristotle, Plato, and Porphyry. Died: (executed) in AD 524.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

[Works], edited by J.P. Migne, in Patrologia Latina., vols. 63–64. 2 vols., 1847.

The Theological Tractates and The Consolation of Philosophy [Loeb Edition], translated by S.J. Tester, H.F. Stewart, and E.K. Rand. 1918, revised edition, 1973.

Works

De arithmetica, De musica, edited by G. Friedlein. 1867.

De consolazione philosophiae (prose and verse), edited by Rudolph Peiper. 1871; also edited by A. Fortescue and G.D. Smith, 1925, G. Weinburger, 1934, and Ludwig Bieler, 1957; as The Consolation of Philosophy, translated by "I.T.," 1609, revised by H.F. Stewart [Loeb Edition], with Tractates, 1918; also translated by Richard Green, 1963; V.E. Watts, 1969; R.W. Sharpies, 1992; P.G. Walsh, 1999; commentaries by H. Scheible, 1972, J. Gruber, 1978, and J.J. O'Donnell, 1984; as John Bracegirdle's Psychopharmacoon: A Translation of Boethius' De consolazione philosophiae, 1999.

De inuisione, edited by Paulus Maria de Loe. 1913; as Anicii Manlii Severini Boethii De divisione liber, translated by John Magee, 1998.

De institutione musica, as Fundamentals of Music, translated by Calvin H. Bower. 1989.

De syllogismo hypothetico, edited by Luca Obertello. 1969.

De topicis differentiis, translated by Eleanore Stump. 1978.

In Ciceronis topica, edited by J.C. Orelli and G. Baiterus, in Ciceronis opera, vol. 5, pt 1. 1833; translated by Eleanore Stump, 1988.

In Isagogen, edited by Samuel Brandt. 1906.

In Perihermeneias, edited by Carl Meiser. 1880.

Tractates, edited and translated by E. Rapisarda. 1960; as Tractates [Loeb Edition], translated by H.F. Stewart and E.K. Rand, with The Consolation of Philosophy, 1918.

[Commentaries on De interpretatione by Aristotle], edited by Carl Meiser. 2 vols., 1877–80.

[Commentaries on Porphyry], edited by G. Schepss and Samuel Brandt. 1906; translated by E.W. Warren, 1975.

Translator, Categoriae, De interpretatione, Analytica priora, Topica, Elenchi sophistici, by Aristotle, edited by Lorenzo Minio-Paluello, in Aristoteles Latinus. 1961–.

*

Critical Studies: The Tradition of Boethius: A Study of His Importance in Mediaeval Culture by Howard R. Patch, 1935; Boethius: Some Aspects of His Times and Works by Helen M. Barrett, 1940; Poetic Diction in the Old English Meters of Boethius by Allan A. Metcalf, 1973; Boethian Fictions: Narratives in the Medieval French by Richard A. Dwyer, 1976; Boethius and the Liberal Arts: A Collection of Essays edited by Michael Masi, 1981; Boethius: His Life, Thought, and Influence edited by Margaret Gibson, 1981; Boethius: The Consolations of Music, Logic, Theology, and Philosophy by Henry Chadwick, 1981; The Tradition of the Topics in the Middle Ages: The Commentaries on Aristotle's and Boethius' Topics by Niels Jørgen Green-Pedersen, 1984; Boethius and Dialogue: Literary Method in The Consolation of Philosophy by Seth Lerer, 1985; The Fate of Fortune in the Early Middle Ages: The Boethian Tradition by Jerold C. Frakes, 1988; Boethius on Signification and Mind by John C. Magee, 1989; The Poetry of Boethius by Gerard O'Daly, 1991; The Consolation of Boethius: An Analytical Inquiry into His Intellectual Processes and Goals by Stephen Varvis, 1991; Chaucer's "Boece" and the Medieval Tradition of Boethius, edited by A.J. Minnis, 1993; Clarembald of Arras as a Boethian Commentator by John R. Fortin, 1995; Boethius in the Middle Ages: Latin and Vernacular Traditions of the Consolatio philosophiae, edited by Maarten J.F.M. Hoenen and Lodi Nauta, 1997.

* * *

As a member of the Roman senatorial class, which still kept its identity in the barbarian Italy of c. AD 500, Boethius expected to hold political and ceremonial office: he was consul and (fatally) magister officiorum, the dispenser of patronage at Theodoric's court in Ravenna. But most of his time was his own. He lived in his town house and his country estates immersed in his books, and also entertaining his friends: see Sidonius Apollinaris' letters and poems on the life of "senatorial ease" in Roman Gaul in the later 5th century. It was for these friends and protégés of his own family and class that Boethius wrote his literary and scholarly works. He was no schoolmaster, no compiler of encyclopedias, dependent on an unknown popular audience.

Boethius' interest in language and the structure of argument is seen in his many studies of logic and rhetoric. He translated some key texts from the Greek, and much of his analysis derived from Greek writers and teachers in the universities of Athens and Alexandria. These translations gave readers who knew only Latin access to mainstream philosophical discussion. In the same way Boethius' highly technical writing on mathematics and musical theory made Greek thought available to a Roman audience. That is the context for his "papers"—they are too brief to be called books—on Christian doctrine: Boethius' careful definitions have a solid basis in Greek philosophy.

His masterpiece, De consolazione philosophiae (The Consolation of Philosophy), is his most readable and literary work. He had been informed on by his enemies and faced almost certain death. Could he face it? He argues through issue after conflicting issue, still the practised logician: but now he himself is a term in the problem. Why me? Why do the wicked prosper? Doesn't God care? Can God care? His partner in the argument is the Lady Philosophy, who is the traditional literary, mathematical, and philosophical learning to which he has devoted most of his life. Later readers thought of her as the Wisdom of the Old Testament: "Wisdom hath builded her house, she hath hewn out her seven pillars." But Boethius is not so easily brought into line. His argument with himself in The Consolation of Philosophy reaches the point of an omniscient God, who is fully in control of the universe. Because it is an argument—rather than, for example, a vision or a confession—it can go no further. The Consolation of Philosophy stops short of the Christianity in which Boethius, judging by his theological papers (above), was an informed believer.

Boethius was executed in 524. His books seem to have lain undisturbed until about the time of Charlemagne (c. 800), when Alcuin and succeeding medieval scholars with little or no Greek read and transcribed and discussed this treasury of material on argument and on mathematics. Above all they welcomed The Consolation, in which the great questions of justice, chance, and freedom were analysed by the man who, in a changed intellectual climate, was now regarded as "Boethius, the Christian philosopher."

—Margaret Gibson

See the essay on The Consolation of Philosophy.

BOILEAU (-DESPRÉAUX), Nicolas

Born: Paris, France, 1 November 1636. Education: Educated at Collège d'Harcourt, Paris, 1643–48; Collège de Beauvais, Paris, 1648–52; studied law, University of Paris, 1652–56; admitted to the bar 1656. Career: Writer from 1657: slowly achieved a reputation; friend of Molière, Racine, La Fontaine; favoured by the court from 1674; historiographer to Louis XIV (with Racine), 1677. Member: Académie française, 1684. Died: 13 March 1711.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Works, translated by Nicholas Rowe. 3 vols., 1711–13.
Oeuvres complètes, edited by Charles-H. Boudhors. 7 vols., 1932–43.
Oeuvres complètes, edited by Françoise Escal. 1966.

Verse

Satires (12). 1666–1711; edited by A. Adam, 1941: translated as Satires, 1904.
Épîtres (12). 1670–98; edited by A. Cahen, 1937.
Oeuvres diverses. 1674; enlarged edition, 1683.
L'Art poétique, in Oeuvres diverses. 1674; edited by V. Delaporte, 3 vols., 1888; as The Art of Poetry, translated by William Soames (in verse), 1683; revised edition by John Dryden, 1710.
Le Lutrin. 1674–83; translated by Nicholas Rowe, 1708.

Other

L'Arrêt burlesque. 1671.
Réflexions sur Longin. 1694; as On Longinus, edited by John Ozell. 1972.
Selected Criticism, translated by Ernest Dilworth. 1965.
Lettres d'une amitié: Correspondance 1687–1698, edited by Pierre-Eugène Leroy, 2001.
Translator, Traité du sublime, by Longinus, in Oeuvres diverses. 1674.

*

Critical Studies: Boileau and the Classical Critics in England by Alexander F.B. Clark, 1925; Racine and the "Art Poétique" of Boileau by Sister M. Haley, 1938; Boileau and Longinus by Jules Brody, 1958; Pour le commentaire linguistique de l'Art poétique by John Orr, 1963; Boileau by Julian Eugene White, Jr., 1969; Boileau and the Nature of Neo-Classicism by Gordon Pocock, 1980; Du sublime: (De Boileau à Schiller: Suivi de la traduction de Über das Erhabene de Friedrich Schiller) by Pierre Hartmann, 1997; Reading Boileau: An Integrative Study of the Early Satires by Robert T. Corum, Jr., 1998.

* * *

Although Nicolas Boileau's fame has rested as much on his reputation as high-priest of French classicism as on his poetry, it is doubtful whether he added much to the critical ideas of his day, or significantly influenced his contemporaries.

His literary personality is complex. His iconoclasm comes out strongly in his early satires, and remains in his later work, even when he was in favour at court. His early series of Satires (I–IX) is concerned with literary and social themes. In his social satires (I, III, IV, V, VI, and VIII), he often paints with representational detail, but his comic exuberance lifts them well beyond realism. In the literary satires, he is less a critic of specific authors than a creator of startling images of poetry at war with dunces. The best of his satires (especially VII and IX) are dramatic in method. They bring together with kaleidoscopic brilliance wit, word-play, eloquence, and straight-speaking, leading the reader to heightened awareness of his responses which transcends the often banal content. The first series of Epistles (I–IX) is frequently plainer and more didactic, but even those addressed to Louis XIV (the Discourse to the King, Epistles I, IV, and VIII) mix humour with seriousness. Epistles VII and IX, on literary themes, express poignantly Boileau's sense of the high role of poetry, and its vulnerability in the face of ignorance and barbarism.

His verse L'Art poétique (The Art of Poetry) is on the surface an assertion of the Classical demand for rationalism and craftsmanship, with summaries of the neo-Aristotelian rules for different kinds of poem. More fundamentally, however, it demonstrates again Boileau's use of verbal dexterity (it is full of puns) to dramatize the effect of good and bad poetry on the reader. The mock-heroic Le Lutrin [The Lectern] is in lighter vein, but dazzles by its mixture of comedy with genuine grandeur.

His later works show a slackening of verve. The best are the long Satire X [On Women] in which some of the portraits recapture his earlier mordant vigour, and Epistles X and XI, in which he skilfully represents himself as a man of honest but endearing simplicity. The last works, much concerned with theological disputes, are clumsily written and hectoring in tone.

Boileau's lyrics have little merit. His ambitious Ode on the Capture of Namur fails to accommodate in lyric form his mixture of grandiloquence and satire. Of his prose, the early L'Arrêt burlesque [Mock Edict] is the liveliest, with its exuberant satire on official hostility to new ideas. His translation of Longinus with his Remarks and Reflections on it and his 1701 preface to his works, gave him the opportunity to reassert the moral and aesthetic dignity of poetry, against what he saw as the triviality and decadence of his contemporaries. Of his work as historiographer to Louis XIV (a post he shared with Racine) only a few occasional pieces remain. His surviving letters, mainly from his old age, display his passionate and quirky temperament.

—Gordon Pocock

See the essay on The Art of Poetry.

BÖLL, Heinrich (Theodor)

Born: Cologne, Germany, 21 December 1917. Education: Educated at Gymnasium, Cologne; University of Cologne. Military: Served in the German army, 1939–45; prisoner of war, 1945. Family: Married Annemarie Cech in 1942; three sons. Career: Joiner in his father's shop, then apprentice in the book trade before the war; full-time writer from 1947; co-editor, Labyrinth, 1960–61, and L, from 1976; president, PEN International, 1971–74. Awards: Bundesverband der Deutschen Industrie grant; Gruppe 47 prize, 1951; Rene Schickele prize, 1952; Tribune de Paris prize, 1953; Prix du Meilleur Roman Étranger, 1955; Heydt prize, 1958; Bavarian Academy of Fine Arts award, 1958; Nordrhein-Westfalen prize, 1959; Veillon prize, 1960; Cologne prize, 1961; Elba prize, 1965; Büchner prize, 1967; Nobel prize for literature, 1972; Scottish Arts Council fellowship, 1973. Honorary degrees: D.Sc.: Aston University, Birmingham, 1973; O.Tech.: Brunel University, Uxbridge, Middlesex, 1973; Litt.D.: Trinity College, Dublin, 1973. Died: 16 July 1985.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

Der Zug war pünktlich. 1949; as The Train Was on Time, translated by Richard Graves, 1956; also translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1973.

Wanderer, kommst du nach Spa. . . 1950; as Traveller, If You Come to Spa, translated by Mervyn Savill, 1956.

Die schwarzen Schafe. 1951.

Wo warst du, Adam? 1951; as Adam, Where Art Thou?, translated by Mervyn Savill, 1955; as And Where Were You Adam?, translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1973.

Nicht nur zur Weihnachtszeit. 1952.

Und sagte kein einziges Wort. 1953; as Acquainted with the Night, translated by Richard Graves, 1954; as And Never Said a Word, translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1978.

Haus ohne Hüter. 1954; as Tomorrow and Yesterday, translated by Mervyn Savill, 1957; as The Unguarded House, translated by Savill, 1957.

Das Brot der frühen Jahre. 1955; as The Bread of Our Early Years, translated by Mervyn Savill, 1957; as The Bread of Those Early Years, translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1976.

So ward Abend und Morgen. 1955.

Unberechenbare Gäste: Heitere Erzählungen. 1956.

Im Tal der donnernden Hufe. 1957.

Doktor Murkes gesammelte Schweigen und andere Satiren. 1958.

Der Mann mit den Messern. 1958.

Die Waage der Baleks und andere Erzählungen. 1958.

Der Bahnhof von Zimpren. 1959.

Billard um halb zehn. 1959; as Billiards at Half-Past Nine, translated by Patrick Bowles, 1961.

Als der Krieg ausbrach, Als der Krieg zu Ende war. 1962; as Absent Without Leave (2 novellas), translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1965.

Ansichten eines Clowns. 1963; as The Clown, translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1965.

Entfernung von der Truppe. 1964.

Ende einer Dienstfahrt. 1966; as The End of a Mission, translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1967; as End of a Mission, translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1994.

Eighteen Stories, translated by Leila Vennewitz. 1966.

Absent Without Leave and Other Stories, translated by Leila Vennewitz. 1967.

Geschichten aus zwölf Jahren. 1969.

Children Are Civilians Too (stories), translated by Leila Vennewitz. 1970.

Gruppenbild mit Dame. 1971; as Group Portrait with Lady, translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1973.

Der Mann mit den Messern: Erzählungen (selection). 1972.

Die verlorene Ehre der Katharina Blum. 1974; as The Lost Honor of Katharina Blum, translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1975.

Berichte zur Gesinnungslage der Nation. 1975.

Fürsorgliche Belagerung. 1979; as The Safety Net, translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1982.

Du fährst zu oft nach Heidelberg und andere Erzählungen. 1979.

Gesammelte Erzählungen. 2 vols., 1981.

Das Vermächtnis. 1982; as A Soldier's Legacy, translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1985.

Die Verwundung und andere frühe Erzählungen. 1983; as The Casualty, translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1986.

Der Angriff: Erzählungen 1947–1949. 1983.

Veränderungen in Staack: Erzählungen 1962–1980. 1984.

Mein trauriges Gesicht: Erzählungen. 1984.

Frauen vor Flusslandschaft: Roman in Dialogen und Selbstgesprächen. 1985; as Women in a River Landscape: A Novel in Dialogues and Soliloquies, translated by David McLintock, 1988.

Stories, translated by Leila Vennewitz. 1986.

Der Engel schwieg. 1992; as The Silent Angel, translated by Breon Mitchell, 1994.

The Mad Dog: Stories, translated by Breon Mitchell, 1997.

Plays

Die Brücke von Berczaba (broadcast 1952). In Zauberei auf dem Sender und andere Hörspiele, 1962.

Der Heilige und der Räuber (broadcast 1953). In Hörspielbuch des Nordwestdeutschen und Süddeutschen Rundfunks, 4, 1953; as Mönch und Räuber, in Erzählungen, Hörspiele, Aufsätze, 1961.

Ein Tag wie sonst (broadcast 1953). 1980.

Zum Tee bei Dr. Borsig (broadcast 1955). In Erzählungen, Hörspiele, Aufsätze, 1961.

Eine Stunde Aufenthalt (broadcast 1957). In Erzählungen, Hörspiele, Aufsätze, 1961.

Die Spurlosen (broadcast 1957). 1957.

Bilanz (broadcast 1957). With Klopffzeichen, 1961.

Klopffzeichen (broadcast 1960). With Bilanz, 1961.

Ein Schluck Erde (produced 1961). 1962.

Zum Tee bei Dr. Borsig (includes Mönch und Räuber; Eine Stunde Aufenthalt; Bilanz; Die Spurlosen; Klopffzeichen; Sprechanlage; Konzert für vier Stimmen). 1964.

Hausfriedensbruch (broadcast 1969). 1969.

Aussatz (produced 1970). With Hausfriedensbruch, 1969.

Radio Plays:: Die Brücke von Berczaba, 1952; Ein Tag wie sonst, 1953; Der Heilige und der Räuber, 1953; Zum Tee bei Dr. Borsig, 1955; Anita und das Existenzminimum, 1955, revised version, as Ich habe nichts gegen Tiere, 1958; Die Spurlosen, 1957; Bilanz, 1957; Eine Stunde Aufenthalt, 1957; Die Stunde der Wahrheit, 1958; Klopffzeichen, 1960; Hausfriedensbruch, 1969.

Verse

Gedichte. 1972.

Other

Irishes Tagebuch. 1957; as Irish Journal, translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1967.

Im Ruhrgebiet, photographs by Karl Hargesheimer. 1958.

Unter Krähnenbäumen, photographs by Karl Hargesheimer. 1958.

Menschen am Rhein, photographs by Karl Hargesheimer. 1960.

Brief an einen jungen Katholiken. 1961.

Erzählungen, Hörspiele, Aufsätze. 1961.

Assisi. 1962.

Hierzulande. 1963.

Frankfurter Vorlesungen. 1966.

Aufsätze, Kritiken, Reden. 1967.

Leben im Zustand des Frevels. 1969.

Neue politische und literarische Schriften. 1973.

Politische Meditationen zu Glück und Vergewöhnlichkeit, with Dorothee Sölle. 1973.

Der Lorbeer ist immer noch bitter: Literarische Schriften. 1974.

Drei Tage in März, with Christian Linder. 1975.

Der Fall Staeck; oder, Wie politisch darf die Kunst sein?, with others. 1975.

Briefe zur Verteidigung der Republik, with Freimut Duve and Klaus Staeck. 1977.

Einnischung erwünscht: Schriften zur Zeit. 1977.

Missing Persons and Other Essays, translated by Leila Vennewitz. 1977.

Querschnitte: Aus Interviews, Aufsätzen, und Reden, edited by Viktor Böll and Renate Matthaei. 1977.

Werke, edited by Bernd Balzer. 10 vols., 1977–78.

Gefahren von falschen Brüdern: Politische Schriften. 1980. Warum haben wir aufeinander geschossen?, with Lew Kopelew. 1981.

Rendezvous mit Margaret. Liebesgeschichten. 1981.

Was soll aus dem Jungen bloss werden?; oder, Irgendwas mit Büchern. 1981; as What's to Become of the Boy?; or, Something to Do with Books (memoir), translated by Leila Vennewitz, 1984.

Der Autor ist immer noch versteckt. 1981.

Vermintes Gelände: Essayistische Schriften 1977–1981. 1982.

Antikommunismus in Ost und West. 1982.

Ich hau dem Mädchen nix jedonn, ich hart et bloss ens kräje. Texte, Bilder, Dokumente zur Verteilung des Ehrenbürgerrechts der Stadt Köln, 29 April 1983. 1983.

Ein- und Zusprüche: Schriften, Reden und Prosa 1981–83. 1984.

Weil die Stadt so fremd geworden ist. 1985.

Bild-Bonn-Boenish. 1985.

Die Fähigkeit zu trauern: Schriften und Reden 1983–1985. 1986.

Denken mit Heinrich Böll. 1986.

Rom auf den ersten Blick. Landschaften, Städte, Reisen. 1987.

Editor, with Erich Kock, Unfertig ist der Mensch. 1967.

Editor, with Freimut Duve and Klaus Staeck, Verantwortlich für Polen?. 1982.

Translator, with Annemarie Böll:

Kein Name bei den Leuten [No Name in the Street], by Kay Cicellis. 1953.

Ein unordentlicher Mensch, by Adriaan Morriën. 1955.

Tod einer Stadt [Death of a Town], by Kay Cicellis. 1956.

Weihnachtsabend in San Cristobal [The Saintmaker's Christmas Eve], by Paul Horgan. 1956.

Zur Ruhe kam der Baum des Menschen nie [The Tree of Man], by Patrick White. 1957.

Der Teufel in der Wüste [The Devil in the Desert], by Paul Horgan. 1958.

Die Geisel [The Hostage], by Brendan Behan. 1958.

Der Mann von morgen früh [The Square Fellow], by Brendan Behan. 1958.

Ein wahrer Held [The Playboy of the Western World], by J.M. Synge. 1960.

Die Boote fahren nicht mehr aus [The Islandman], by Tomás O'Crohan. 1960.

Eine Rose zur Weihnachtszeit [One Red Rose for Christmas], by Paul Horgan. 1960.

Der Gehilfe [The Assistant], by Bernard Malamud. 1960.

Kurz vor dem Krieg gegen die Eskimos, by J.D. Salinger. 1961.

Das Zauberefass [The Magic Barrel], by Bernard Malamud. 1962.

Der Fänger im Roggen [The Catcher in the Rye], by J.D. Salinger. 1962.

Ein Gutshaus in Irland [The Big House], by Brendan Behan, in Stücke. 1962.

Framny und Zooey, by J.D. Salinger. 1963.

Die Insel der Pferde [The Island of Horses], by Eilís Dillon. 1964.

Hebt den Dachbalken hoch, Zimmerleute; Seymour wird vorgestellt [Raise High the Roof Beam, Carpenters; Seymour: An Introduction], by J.D. Salinger. 1965.
Caesar und Cleopatra, by G.B. Shaw. 1965.
Der Spanner [The Scarperer], by Brendan Behan. 1966.
Die Insel des grossen John [The Coriander], by Eilís Dillon. 1966.
Das harte Leben [The Hard Life], by Flann O'Brien. 1966.
Neun Erzählungen [Nine Stories], by J.D. Salinger. 1966.
Die schwarzen Füchse [A Family of Foxes], by Eilís Dillon. 1967.
Die Irrfahrt der Santa Maria [The Cruise of the Santa Maria], by Eilís Dillon. 1968.
Die Springflut [The Sea Wall], by Eilís Dillon. 1969.
Seehunde SOS [The Seals], by Eilís Dillon. 1970.
Erwachen in Mississippi [Coming of Age in Mississippi], by Anne Moody. 1970.
Candida, Der Kaiser von Amerika, Mensch und Übermensch [Candida, The King of America, Man and Superman], by G.B. Shaw. 1970.
Handbuch des Revolutionärs, by G.B. Shaw. 1972.

*

Bibliography: Heinrich Böll: Eine Bibliographie seiner Werke by Werner Martin, 1975; Der Schriftsteller Böll: Ein biographisch-bibliographischer Abriss edited by Werner Lenging, 5th edition, 1977; Heinrich Böll in America 1954–1970 by Ray Lewis White, 1979; Heinrich Böll Auswahlbibliographie zur Primär- und Sekundärliteratur edited by Gerhard Redemacher, 1989.

Critical Studies: Böll, Teller of Tales: A Study of His Works and Characters by Wilhelm Johannes Schwartz, 1969; A Student's Guide to Böll by Enid Macpherson, 1972; Böll: Withdrawal and Re-Emergence, 1973, and Heinrich Böll: A German for His Time, 1986, both by J.H. Reid; The Major Works of Böll: A Critical Commentary by Erhard Friedrichsmeyer, 1974; The Writer and Society: Studies in the Fiction of Günter Grass and Heinrich Böll by Charlotte W. Ghurye, 1976; The Imagery in Böll's Novels by Thor Prodanuk, 1979; Heinrich Böll by Robert C. Conard, 1981; Heinrich Böll by Klaus Schröter, 1982; Heinrich Böll and the Challenge of Literature by Michael Butler, 1988; Heinrich Böll: Forty Years of Criticism by Reinhard K. Zachau, 1994; The Narrative Fiction of Heinrich Böll: Social Conscience and Literary Achievement, edited by Michael Butler, 1995; On the Rationality of Poetry: Heinrich Böll's Aesthetic Thinking by Frank Finlay, 1996.

* * *

More consistently than any of his contemporaries Heinrich Böll documented the development of the Federal Republic from its inception. In doing so he achieved the remarkable feat of becoming a best-selling author who was under constant attack from the popular press. His works are invariably provocative and the subject of critical disagreement in both academic and non-academic circles. Abroad he had a solid reputation as “the good German” who unambiguously condemned fascism and the less appealing features of the land of the Economic Miracle. Sales of his books in Eastern Europe are still considerable and in the former Soviet Union he is one of the best-known Western writers.

Implicit in all his works is the theme of the individual under threat from impersonal forces of all kinds. In Wo warst du, Adam? (And Where Were You Adam?) and Ende einer Dienstfahrt (The End of a Mission) it is the war machine; in Und sagte kein einziges Wort (And Never Said a Word) and Ansichten eines Clowns (The Clown) it is the Roman Catholic church; in Gruppenbild mit Dame (Group Portrait with Lady) it is big business; in Die verlorene Ehre der Katharina Blum (The Lost Honor of Katharina Blum) and Fürsorgliche Belagerung (The Safety Net) it is the unholy empire of press and industry working hand in hand with the police. His standpoint is that of left-wing humanism tinged with a strong element of non-conformist, anti-clerical Catholicism. He was publicly involved in all the important issues of his day. Böll's particular literary strength lies in satire, the medium most suited to his conception of a literature which must in content be socially committed and in technique “exaggerate” (“Second Wuppertal Speech,” 1960), test the limits to artistic freedom by “going too far” (“The Freedom of Art,” 1966); it also relates to his notable sense of humour allied to his eye for the significant, absurd detail. His most memorable writings include those on the broadcaster who collects “silences,” the family which celebrates Christmas all the year round, and the man who is employed to defeat the packaging industry by unpacking goods for the customer.

Böll was essentially a writer of prose fiction—his few excursions into other genres were unsuccessful. He experimented in a moderate way with narrative techniques. In the 1950s his favourite form was the short story, that genre peculiarly suited to existentialist statement. His novels of these years are marked by a preoccupation with the phenomenon of time and make extensive play with fluctuating narrative perspectives. Billard um halb zehn (Billiards at Half-Past Nine) comes closest to the nouveau roman of the day. In the more politically charged atmosphere of the 1960s and later, his writing became deliberately more casual and direct, although the ironic play with the convention of a first-person biographer-narrator in Group Portrait with Lady betrays a continued concern for questions of form. It is interesting therefore that The Safety Net reverts to the peculiar narrative economy of the earlier works with its condensation of narrated time and its use of multiple limited points of view.

—J.H. Reid

See the essays on Group Portrait with Lady and The Lost Honor of Katharina Blum.

BORGES, Jorge Luis

Born: Buenos Aires, Argentina, 24 August 1899. Education: Educated at Collège de Genève, Switzerland; Cambridge University. Family: Married 1) Elsa Millan in 1967 (separated 1970); 2) María Kodama in 1986. Career: Lived in Europe with his family, 1914–21; co-founding editor, Proa, 1924–26, and Sur, 1931; also associated with Prisma; literary adviser, Emecé Editores, Buenos Aires; columnist El Hogár weekly, Buenos Aires, 1936–39; municipal librarian, Buenos Aires, (fired from his post by the Péron regime) 1939–46; poultry inspector, 1946–54; went blind, 1955; director, National Library (after Péron's deposition), 1955–73; professor of English literature, University of Buenos Aires, 1955–70; Norton professor of poetry, Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts; visiting lecturer, University of Oklahoma, Norman, 1969. President, Argentine Writers Society, 1950–53. Awards: Buenos Aires Municipal prize, 1928; Argentine Writers Society prize, 1945; National prize for literature, 1957; Prix Formentor, 1961; Ingram Merrill award, 1966; Bial Foundation Inter-American prize, 1970; Jerusalem prize, 1971; Alfonso Reyes prize, 1973; Cervantes prize, 1979; Yoliztli prize, 1981. Honorary Degrees: D.Litt.: University of Cuyo, Argentina, 1956; Oxford University, 1971; Columbia University, New York, 1971; University of Michigan, East Lansing, 1972; University of Chile, 1976; University of Cincinnati, 1976; Ph.D.: University of Jerusalem, 1971. Honorary fellow, Modern Language Association (United States), 1961. Order of Merit (Italy), 1968; Order of Merit (German Federal Republic), 1979. Honorary KBE (Knight Commander, Order of the British Empire). Légion d'honneur. Member: Argentine National Academy; Uruguayan Academy of Letters. Died: 14 June 1986.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Collected Fictions, translated by Andrew Hurley, 1998.
Selected Non-fictions, edited by Eliot Weinberger, translated by Esther Allen, Suzanne Jill Levine, and Eliot Weinberger, 1999.
Everything and Nothing, translated by Donald A. Yates, 1999.

Fiction

Historia universal de la infamia. 1935; as A Universal History of Infamy, translated by Norman Thomas di Giovanni, 1971.
El jardín de senderos que se bifurcan. 1942.
Seis problemas para don Isidro Parido, with Adolfo Bioy Casares (as H. Bustos Domecq). 1942; as Six Problems for Don Isidro Parodi, translated by Norman Thomas di Giovanni, 1981.
Ficciones (1935–1944). 1944; enlarged edition, 1956; as Ficciones, edited and translated by Anthony Kerrigan, 1962; edited and translated by Gordon Brotherston and Peter Hulme, 1999; as Fictions, translated by Kerrigan, 1965.
Dos fantasías memorables, with Adolfo Bioy Casares. 1946.
Un modelo para la muerte, with Adolfo Bioy Casares (as B. Suárez Lynch). 1946.
El Aleph. 1949; as The Aleph and Other Stories 1933–1969, edited and translated by Norman Thomas di Giovanni, 1970.
La muerte y la brújula. 1951.
La hermana de Elosía, with Luisa Mercedes Levinson. 1955.
Crónicas de Bustos Domecq, with Adolfo Bioy Casares. 1967; as Chronicles of Bustos Domecq, translated by Norman Thomas di Giovanni, 1976.
El informe de Brodie. 1970; as Dr. Brodie's Report, translated by Norman Thomas di Giovanni, 1972.
El congreso. 1970; as The Congress, translated by Norman Thomas di Giovanni, 1974.
El libro de arena. 1975; as The Book of Sand, translated by Norman Thomas di Giovanni (includes The Gold of the Tigers), 1977.

Verse

Fervor de Buenos Aires. 1923.
Luna de enfrente. 1925.
Cuaderno San Martín. 1929.
Poemas 1922–1943. 1943.
Poemas 1923–1958. 1958.

El hacedor (includes prose). 1960; as Dreamtigers, translated by Mildred Boyer and Harold Morland, 1964.
Obra poética. 6 vols., 1964–78.
Para las seis cuerdas. 1965; revised edition, 1970.
Nueva antología personal. 1968.
Elogio de la sombra. 1969; as In Praise of Darkness, translated by Norman Thomas di Giovanni (bilingual edition), 1974.
El otro, el mismo. 1969.
El oro de los tigres. 1972.
Selected Poems 1923–1967, edited by Norman Thomas di Giovanni. 1972.
La rosa profunda. 1975.
La moneda de hierro. 1976.
Historia de la noche. 1976.
The Gold of the Tigers: Selected Later Poems, translated by Alastair Reid, in The Book of Sand, 1977.
Adrogué (includes prose). 1977.
La cifra. 1981.
Antología poética, 1923–1977. 1981.

Screenplays: Los orilleros; El paraíso de los creyentes, with Adolfo Bioy Casares. 1955.

Other

Inquisiciones (essays). 1925.
El tamaño de mi esperanza (essays). 1926.
El idioma de los Argentinos (essays). 1928; enlarged edition, as El lenguaje de Buenos Aires, with José Edmundo Clemente, 1963.
Evaristo Carriego (essays). 1930; as Evaristo Carriego: A Book about Old-Time Buenos Aires, translated by Norman Thomas di Giovanni, 1983.
Discusión. 1932.
Las Kennigar. 1933.
Historia de la eternidad. 1936; enlarged edition, 1953.
Nueva refutación del tiempo. 1947.
Aspectos de la literatura gauchesca. 1950.
Antiguas literaturas germánicas, with Delia Ingenieros. 1951.
Otras inquisiciones 1937–1952. 1952; as Other Inquisitions 1937–1952, translated by Ruth L.C. Simms, 1964.
El "Martín Fierro", with Margarita Guerrero. 1953.
Obras completas, edited by José Edmundo Clemente. 9 vols., 1953–60.
Leopoldo Lugones, with Betina Edelberg. 1955.
Manual de zoología fantástica, with Margarita Guerrero. 1957; revised edition, as El libro de los seres imaginarios, 1967; as The Imaginary Zoo, translated by Tim Reynolds, 1969; revised edition, as The Book of Imaginary Beings, translated by Norman Thomas di Giovanni, 1969.
Antología personal. 1961; as A Personal Anthology, edited and translated by Anthony Kerrigan, 1967.
Labyrinths: Selected Stories and Other Writings, edited and translated by Donald A. Yates and James E. Irby, 1962; enlarged edition, 1964.
The Spanish Language in South America: A Literary Problem; El Gaucho Martín Fierro (lectures). 1964.
Introducción a la literatura inglesa, with María Esther Vázquez. 1965; as An Introduction to English Literature, edited and translated by L. Clark Keating and Robert O. Evans, 1974.

- Literaturas germánicas medievales*, with María Esther Vázquez. 1966.
- Introducción a la literatura norteamericana*, with Esther Zemborain de Torres. 1967; as An Introduction to American Literature, translated by L. Clark Keating and Robert O. Evans, 1973.
- Nueva antología personal*. 1968.
- Conversations with Borges*, by Richard Burgin. 1968.
- Borges on Writing*, edited by Norman Thomas di Giovanni, Daniel Halpern, and Frank MacShane. 1973.
- Obras completas*, edited by Carlos V. Frías. 1974.
- Tongues of Fallen Angels: Conversations with Borges*, edited by Selden Roman, 1974.
- Prólogos*. 1975.
- Qué es el budismo?*, with Alicia Jurado. 1976.
- Libros de sueños*. 1976.
- Borges oral* (lectures). 1979.
- Siete noches* (essays). 1980; as Seven Nights, translated by Eliot Weinberger, 1984.
- Prosa completa*. 2 vols., 1980.
- Borges, A Reader: Selections from the Writings*, edited by Emir Rodríguez Monegal and Alastair Reid. 1981.
- Nueve ensayos dantescos*. 1982.
- Borges at Eighty: Conversations*, edited by Willis Barnstone. 1982.
- Atlas*, with María Kodama. 1985; as Atlas, translated by Anthony Kerrigan, 1985.
- Conversaciones*, with Alicia Moreau de Justo. 1985.
- Borges en dialogo*, with Osvaldo Ferrari. 1985.
- Los conjurados*. 1985.
- Conversaciones*, with Roberto Alifano. 1986.
- Conversaciones*, with Francisco Tokos. 1986.
- Textos Cautivos: Ensayos y reseñas en El Hogar (1936–1939)*, edited by Enrique Socerio-Gari and Emir Rodríguez Monegal. 1987.
- Páginas escogidas*, edited by Roberto Fernández Retamar. 1988.
- Biblioteca personal: Prólogos*. 1988.
- Últimas conversaciones con Borges*, with Roberto Alifano. 1988.
- The Secret Books: Writings by Jorge Luis Borges*, with photographs by Sean Kernan, 1999.
- The Craft of Verse*, edited by Calin-Andrei Mihailescu, 2000.
- The Library of Babel*, translated by Andrew Hurley, 2000.
- Editor, with Pedro Henrique Ureña, Antología clásica de la literatura argentina. 1937.
- Editor, with Silvana Ocampo and Adolfo Bioy Casares, Antología de la literatura fantástica. 1940; as The Book of Fantasy, 1988.
- Editor, with Silvana Ocampo and Adolfo Bioy Casares, Antología poética argentina. 1941.
- Editor, with Adolfo Bioy Casares, Los mejores cuentos policiales. 2 vols., 1943–51.
- Editor, with Silvina Bullrich Palenque, El Campadrito: Su destino, sus barrios, su música. 1945.
- Editor, with Adolfo Bioy Casares, Prosa y verso, by Francisco de Quevedo. 1948.
- Editor, with Adolfo Bioy Casares, Cuentos breves y extraordinarios. 1955; as Extraordinary Tales, edited and translated by Anthony Kerrigan, 1971.
- Editor, with Adolfo Bioy Casares, Libro del cielo y del infierno. 1960.
- Editor, Paulino Lucero, Aniceto y gallo, Santos Vega, by Hilario Ascasubi. 1960.
- Editor, Macedonia Fernández (selection). 1961.
- Editor, Páginas de historia y de autobiografía, by Edward Gibbon. 1961.
- Editor, Prosa y poesía, by Almafuerte. 1962.
- Editor, Versos, by Evaristo Carriego. 1963.
- Editor, with Maria Komada, Breve antología anglosajona. 1978.
- Editor, Micromegas, by Voltaire. 1979.
- Editor, Cuentistas y pintores argentinos. 1985.
- Editor and translator, with Adolfo Bioy Casares, Poesía gauchesca. 2 vols., 1955.
- Translator, La metamorfosis, by Kafka. 1938.
- Translator, Bartleby, by Herman Melville. 1944.
- Translator, De los héroes; Hombres representativos, by Carlyle and Emerson. 1949.
- *
- Bibliography: Borges: Bibliografía total 1923–1973 by Horacio Jorge Becco, 1973; Jorge Luis Borges: An Annotated Primary and Secondary Bibliography by David William Foster, 1984.
- Critical Studies: Borges, The Labyrinth Maker by Ana María Barrenchea edited and translated by Robert Lima, 1965; The Narrow Act: Borges's Art of Illusion by Ronald J. Christ, 1969; The Mythmaker: A Study of Motif and Symbol in the Short Stories of Borges by Carter Wheelock, 1969; Jorge Luis Borges, 1971, and Borges and the Kabbalah and Other Essays on His Fiction and Poetry, 1988, both by Jaime Alazraki, and Critical Essays on Jorge Luis Borges edited by Alazraki, 1987; Borges, 1971, and Borges Revisited, 1991, both by Martin S. Stabb; The Cardinal Points of Borges edited by Lowell Dunham and Ivor Ivask, 1971; Jorge Luis Borges by John M. Cohen, 1973; Prose for Borges edited by Charles Newman and Mary Kinzie, 1974; Borges: Ficciones by Donald Leslie Shaw, 1976; Paper Tigers: The Ideal Fictions of Borges by John Sturrock, 1977; Borges: Sources and Illumination by Giovanna De Garayalde, 1978; Jorge Luis Borges: A Literary Biography by Emir Rodríguez Monegal, 1978; Jorge Luis Borges by George R. McMurray, 1980; Borges and His Fiction: A Guide to His Mind and Art by Gene H. Bell-Villada, 1981; The German Response to Latin American Literature and the Reception of Jorge Luis Borges and Pablo Neruda by Yolanda Julia Broyles, 1981; The Aleph Weaver: Biblical, Kabbalistic and Judaic Elements in Borges by Edna Aizenberg, 1984, and Borges and His Successors: The Borges Impact on Literature and the Arts edited by Aizenberg, 1990; The Prose of Jorge Luis Borges: Existentialism and the Dynamics of Surprise, 1984, and The Meaning of Experience in the Prose of Jorge Luis Borges, 1988, both by Ion Tudro Agheana; Jorge Luis Borges: Life, Work and Criticism by Donald Yates, 1985; Jorge Luis Borges edited by Harold Bloom, 1986; The Literary Universe of Jorge Luis Borges: An Index to References and Allusions to Persons, Titles and Places in His Writings, 1986, and Out of Context: Historical Reference and the Representation of Reality in Borges, 1993, both by Daniel Balderston; The Poetry and Poetics of Jorge Luis Borges by Paul Cheselka, 1987; The Emperor's Kites: A Morphology of Borges's Tales by Mary Lusky Friedman, 1987; In Memory of Borges edited by Norman Thomas Di Giovanni, 1988; A Dictionary of Borges by Evelyn Fishburn, 1990; Jorge Luis Borges: A Study of the Short Fiction by Naomi Lindstrom, 1990; Orientalism in the Hispanic Literary Tradition: In Dialogue with Borges, Paz and Sarduy by Julia A. Kushigian, 1991; Borges and Artificial Intelligence: An Analysis in the Style of Pierre Menard by Ema Lapidot, 1991; The Contemporary Praxis of the Fantastic: Borges and Cortázar by Julio Rodríguez-Luis, 1991; Jorge Luis Borges: A Writer at the Edge by Beatriz Sarlo, 1992; Jorge Luis Borges and His Predecessors, or, Notes Towards a Materialist History of Linguistic Idealism by Malcolm K. Read, 1993; With Borges on an Ordinary Evening in Buenos Aires: A Memoir by Willis Barnstone, 1993; Signes of Borges by Sylvia Molloy, translated and adapted by Oscar Montero, 1994; The Borges Tradition, edited with introduction by Norman Thomas di Giovanni, 1995; The Man in the Mirror of the Book: A Life of Jorge Luis Borges by James Woodall, 1996; Ravishing Tradition: Cultural Forces and Literary History by Daniel Cottom, 1996; Nightglow: Borges' Poetics of Blindness by Florence L. Yudin, 1997; Borges and Europe Revisited, edited by Evelyn Fishburn, 1998; Borges and the Politics of Form by Jose Eduardo Gonzalez, 1998; Jorge Luis Borges: Thought and Knowledge in the XXth Century by Alfonso de Toro, 1999; Humor in Borges by René de Costa, 2000.

* * *

Jorge Luis Borges was one of the most influential writers of the 20th century. His lasting contribution to world literature is to be found in his short stories. Ficciones (Fictions) and El Aleph (The Aleph and Other Stories) collect his classic tales, the ones that secured his place among the masters of world literature and became the cornerstone of the new Spanish-American narrative. It is in these two books, along with the essays of Inquisiciones [Inquisitions] and the texts (prose, poetry, fragments) of El hacedor (Dreamtigers) that the synthesis of his literary art can be found. In later books of short stories, such as El informe de Brodie (Dr. Brodie's Report), he turned to simplicity, to straightforward storytelling. El libro de arena (The Book of Sand), however, his last collection of short stories, returned to the creative lines developed earlier. The recurrent aesthetic and philosophical concerns of his writing (time, the identity of the self, human destiny, eternity, infinite multiplicity, the double, the mirages of reality) remained predominant themes, but the rigorous verbal precision of his celebrated stories becomes a freer, simpler, and more direct prose.

His narrative develops within a tradition that has been called fantastic literature. Borges himself highlights the four basic procedures of fantastic fiction: the work of art within the work of art, the contamination of reality by dream, travels through time, and the use of the double. These procedures, along with his favourite devices and symbols (the labyrinth, mirrors, symmetry, plurality and multiplicity, infinite bifurcations, the cyclical nature of reality), contribute to reveal the essential unreality of all human constructions. His stories focus on man's relation with the world and convey a deep and disquieting uneasiness. Borges's fictions are a lengthy interrogation (philosophical, theological, metaphysical) without a possible answer, a terrifying questioning of the problematic and illusory nature of reality, of the existence itself of the universe. The anguish caused by the implacable destiny of humanity haunted by the passing of time and by the dissolution of the image of the self is a basic motif of all his writing.

Borges founded an imaginary universe based on intellectual premises (idealism is a guiding principle of his fiction), and discovered in literature a coherent order in contrast with the chaos of the world, but his fictions always ended up by being a terrifying duplication of our chaotic universe. Incapable of comprehending reality, he wrote self-reflective, involuted, ironic, or ludic stories, that become continuous dialogues with nothingness, where reality and dream are indistinguishable.

Borges's technical control, the evocative and allusive strength of his prose, the verbal rigour, the subtle conceptual irony, the lucid exercise of intelligence, and the power to create a world of his own, distinguishable from any other, are lasting contributions of his prose. He proposed that literature be, above all, literature, and that fiction accept, in the words of Rodríguez Monegal, "deliberately and explicitly its character of fiction, of verbal artifice."

Borges's writing can be seen, in short, as an elaborate way to justify life through art. His inexhaustible imagination justified, aesthetically, his reason for being. Borges found in the creative act and in the invention of ideal worlds a provisory salvation. He created his own reality in order to erase the inscrutable chaos of the world. "Unreality is the condition of art," he wrote in "The Secret Miracle," and in "Examination of the Work of Herbert Quain" he affirmed that "of the many joys that literature can provide, the highest is invention." Borges's scepticism with regard to the elusive and inexplicable universe becomes elaborately constructed fictions, games that mirror life but undermine all facile assumptions.

—Hugo J. Verani

See the essay on "Death and the Compass."

BOROWSKI, Tadeusz

Born: Zhitomir, Ukraine (Soviet Union), 12 November 1922. Education: Primary and secondary in Soviet Union and Poland 1928–32, 1933–40; Polish philology, underground University of Warsaw 1941–43. Family: Married Maria Rundo. Career: Father sent to a labor camp, 1926; mother to Siberia, 1930; Borowski left in the care of his aunt; Repatriated to Poland 1932. Underground cultural activity in German-occupied Warsaw 1939–43; arrested by the Nazis April 1943; spent over two months in the notorious Pawiak Prison, was then sent to Auschwitz, where his fiancée had also been taken; transferred to a camp near Stuttgart (Natzweiler-Dautmergen), August 1944, and subsequently to Dachau-Allach; liberated by the American Seventh Army on 1 May 1945, stayed in the West until 1946, and worked for the Red Cross; returned to Poland; until 1948 worked as a bibliography researcher at the University of Warsaw, contributed to several periodicals, edited the Gazette of the Congress of Intellectuals for Peace in Wrocław 1948; joined the Communist Party 1948; Cultural officer in the Polish Press Bureau in East Berlin 1949–50, worked also for the Polish Secret Police; Member of the Executive of the Union of Polish Writers 1950. Died: 1 July 1951, committed suicide in Warsaw by opening the valves of a gas oven.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Utwory zebrane. 5 vols, 1954.

Utwory wybrane. 1991.

This Way for the Gas, Ladies and Gentlemen and Other Stories, edited and translated by Barbara Vedder, with an introduction by Jan Kott. 1967; reprinted 1976 and several other times.

Fiction

Byliśmy w Oświęcimiu, with Nel Siedlecki and K. Olszewski. 1946 (contains four Auschwitz stories by Borowski, and several other stories written collaboratively).

Pewien żołnierz. Opowieści szkolne. 1947.

Kamienny świat. Opowiadanie w dwudziestu obrazach. 1948.

Pożegnanie z Marią. Opowiadania. 1948, 1987.

Opowiadania z książek i gazet. 1949.

Poetry

Gdziekolwiek ziemia . . . Cykl poetycki (self-published). 1942.

Arkusze poetycki. 1944.

Imiona nurtu (poems). 1945.

Poszukiwania. Tracing (with K. Olszewski). 1945.

Poezje wybrane. 1971.

Poezje. 1972.

Other

Do młodych agitatorów pokoju. 1951.

Mała kronika wielkich spraw. 1951.

*

Critical Studies: “Beta, the Disappointed Lover,” in The Captive Mind by Czesław Miłosz, 1953; “A Discovery of Tragedy (The Incomplete Account of T.B.)” by Andrzej Wirth, in Polish Review, 1967; Zwyczajna apokalipsa by Andrzej Werner, 1971, 1981; “Reise an die Grenzen einer Moral: Tadeusz Borowski's Auseinandersetzung mit Auschwitz als einen Modell des faschistischen Systems,” in Zeitschrift für Slawistik, 1971; Sugestie interpretacyjne by Andrzej Tauber-Ziółkowski, 1972; Ucieczka z kamiennego świata by Tadeusz Drewnowski, 1977; Wielka choroba by Jan Walc, 1992.

* * *

Tadeusz Borowski's significance as a writer rests primarily on his Auschwitz stories, which are perhaps the most incisive literary treatment of life and death in the Auschwitz camp. But he was also a poet as well as a writer of critical and political prose. The latter, full of ideological cant and simplistic argument, is a stark contrast to most of his short stories and poems, as by this time Borowski treated literature as a weapon in anti-imperialist and class struggle. The apprehension that in writing these pieces he had destroyed himself as a writer probably contributed to Borowski's decision to commit suicide.

His poetry, traditional in form, but written with considerable expressive power comprises: a cycle of poems written before his arrest, Gdziekolwiek ziemia [Wherever the Earth . . .] which is apocalyptic in theme and contains some powerful passages; poems written in Auschwitz and the other camps (three of which are included in Hilda Schiff's anthology Holocaust Poetry, 1995); and poems written after his liberation, which are on the whole less accomplished, and at times shockingly brutal. However, there are among them some remarkable lyrics.

Borowski's short stories fall into two groups—the Auschwitz stories proper and those dealing with his experiences immediately after the liberation, and stories unrelated to these experiences, which are of limited interest only. The first group forms a thematic cycle: the depiction of the behavior and fate of people in Auschwitz is followed by the depiction of the behavior of the survivors and their liberators. It is most of these stories that make up the English volume This Way for the Gas, Ladies and Gentlemen.

In a review of Zofia Kossak-Szczucka's account of her experiences in Auschwitz, Z otchłani, (From the Abyss, 1946) Borowski wondered angrily why the author failed to describe how she had managed to survive. And he asserted that no book by an inmate of German concentration camps had credibility unless the author described openly his or her own behavior. In Borowski's case the narrator, Vorarbeiter Tadek is clearly identifiable with the author. Another significant aspect of the stories concerns their genre. Borowski's stories are not reminiscences or a factual account. Yet what motivated Borowski in writing them was the moral obligation to bear witness and to tell the truth. They are thus best described as fictionalized documentary narrative. The crucial question is: how strong is the fictional element? The 1946 edition contains brief introductory comments appended to some of the pieces (which the later editions and the English translations omit). One of the comments reads: “The events here described have been placed within the span of one day. People have no surnames, but the first names remain unchanged, except for the name of one woman. Only Becker had a different name. The real Becker worked on the Kommando, but he did not come from Poznań.” This suggests, and is borne out by comparing Borowski's stories with other accounts, that fictionalization affects not the types of happenings and behavior, but the plotting of incidents and the treatment of characters, who are not necessarily identical in all respects with real people in the camp. The character that is in part a deliberate construct is the narrator, who is presented as behaving worse than did his prototype, the author. In fact, the narrator is presented in the cycle in two different ways: as a character, and as the author of letters to his fiancée. This long story in letters, which with poignant irony makes Auschwitz almost sound like home, “U nas, w Auschwitzu” (translated as “Auschwitz, Our Home”) is a reconstruction of letters Borowski actually wrote to his fiancée in Birkenau, and it shows a very different person from that of the self-serving and unscrupulous Vorarbeiter Tadek. We thus have a double perspective on Auschwitz, one that is chillingly objective (some have said nihilistic), and another one in which a poet and a man in love writes about his experiences, reflections and feelings to another person in the same camp. It is in this story that moral values, which are at best indirect in the other stories, are fully articulated.

What contributes further to the effectiveness of the stories is Borowski's style, which uses dialogue extensively, is spare and sharply realistic in description, and lets the narrated incidents themselves convey the horror, the suffering and the monstrosity of what human beings are capable of doing to their fellow men. Finally, there is Borowski's choice of scenes and incidents, many of which evoke the most powerful emotions of pity mixed with moral outrage.

Borowski's Auschwitz stories focus not on the efficient, professionalized barbarism of the camp authorities, but rather emphasize the fact that without the complicity of the victims, the camp could not have achieved its purposes, the chief one of which was the extermination of the Jews and Gypsies in the gas chambers. And the horrifying character of Auschwitz is perhaps best conveyed by his explicit argument, that what made the death of hundreds of thousands possible was not only the desire to survive at all costs and without regard to other human beings, but that it was also hope:

It is that very hope that makes people go without a murmur to the gas chambers, keeps them from risking a revolt, paralyzes them into numb inactivity. It is hope that breaks down family ties, makes mothers renounce their children, or wives sell their bodies for bread, or husbands kill. It is hope that compels man to hold on to one more day of life, because that day may be the day of liberation . . . Never before in the history of mankind has hope been stronger than man, but never also has it done so much harm as it has in this war, in this concentration camp. We were never taught how to give up hope, and that is why today we perish in gas chambers.

It was the hope of surviving the Auschwitz hell that made the victims almost as humanly inhuman as were those who ran the camp. That is the supreme irony of Borowski's unique collection of stories.

Borowski's Auschwitz stories will remain, like Kafka's "Penal Colony," Conrad's Heart of Darkness, and Céline's Journey to the End of the Night, a classic of the horror that human beings are capable of creating for themselves, except that in his stories the degree of the imagined unimaginable is unfortunately minimal.

—Bogdan Czaykowski

BRANT, Sebastian

Born: Strasbourg, Germany, 1457. Education: Educated privately; studied law, Basle University, 1475–77, baccalauréat, 1477. Family: Married Elisabeth Burg in 1485. Career: Licentiate in Canon law, 1484; doctor of Roman and Canon law, 1492, dean of the faculty of law, 1496, Basle University; editor for numerous publishing houses in Basle; set up as legal adviser to city council, Strasbourg, 1501; summoned to Innsbruck by Emperor Maximilian as a consultant, 1502 and 1509; town clerk, 1503, and municipal secretary, 1504, Strasbourg. Died: 10 May 1521.

PUBLICATIONS

Verse

Rosarium ex floribus vitae passionisque domini nostri Jesu Christi concertum. 1492.

Das Narrenschiff. 1494; edited by Friedrich Zarncke, 1854; reprinted 1964, also edited by H.A. Junghans (modern German translation and commentary), 1966, and by Manfred Lemmer, 1968; as The Ship of Fools of the World, translated from the Latin version by J. Locher and adapted by Alexander Barclay, 1509, reprinted 1874 and 1970; as The Great Ship of Fools of the World, translated by Henry Watson, 1517; as The Ship of Fools, translated by Edwin H. Zeydel, 1944, reprinted 1966; also translated by William Gillis, 1971.

Carmina in Laudem B. Mariae Virginis multorumque sanctorum. 1494.

Varia carmina. 1498.

Other (selection)

Von der wunderbaren geburd des kinds bey wurmb. 1495.

Von der wunderlichen zamefügung der obersten Planeten. 1504.

Von dem anfang und Wesen der statt Jerusalem. 1518.

In Laudem divi Maximiliani Caesaris invict. 1520.

Kleine Texte, edited by Thomas Wilhelmi. 1998.

Editor, De civitate Dei by Saint Augustine. 1489.

Editor, De moribus et facetijs mense Thesmophagia, by Reinerus. 1490.

Editor, Opera Sancti Ambrosii. 1492.

Editor, De conceptu et triplici Mariae Virginis gloriosissimae candore. 1494.

Editor, Vita beati Brunonis. 1495.

Editor, Concordantiae maiores Bibli. 1496.

Editor, Theologica emphasis, by Jacob Locher. 1496.

Editor, Passio St. Meynrhadi martyris et heremite. 1496.

Editor, Librorum Francisci Petrarchae Annotatio. 1496.

Editor, Joannis Reuchlin Phorcensis Scenica Progymnasmata. 1498.

Editor, Aesopus appologi sive Mythologi cum quibusdam carminum et fabularum. 1501.

Editor, De philosophico consolatu sive de consolatione philosophie, by Boethius. 1501.

Editor, Hortulus animae. 1501.

Editor, Der heiligen leben nüw mit vil Heiligen, und clarz der Passion und die Grossen fest, das lessen, mit figuren zierlich und nutzlich den menschen. 1502.

Editor, Opera, by Virgil. 1502.

Editor, De laudibus crucis, by Hrabanus. 1503.

Editor, Bescheidenheit, by Freidank. 1508.

Editor, with Jacob Locher, Layen Spiegel, by Ulrich Tengler. 1509.

Editor, In mortem Johannis Keiserspergii. 1510.

Editor, Der richterlich Clagspiegel. 1516.

Editor, Von der Artzney beyder Glück, der guten und widerwertigen. 1532.

Translator, Phagifacetus seu de moribus et facetiis mensae. 1490.

Translator, Liber faceti. 1496.

Translator, Liber moreti. 1496.

Translator, Disticha Catonis. 1498.

*

Bibliography: Sebastian Brant Bibliographie by Thomas Wilhelmi, 1990; Sebastian-Brant-Bibliographie. Forschungsliteratur von 1800 bis 1985 by Joachim Knappe and Dieter Wuttke, 1990.

Critical Studies: The English Versions of the Ship of Fools by A. Pompen, 1925; Sebastian Brant: Studies in Religious Aspects of His Life and Works with Special Reference to the Varia Carmina by Mary A. Rajewski, 1944; Studien zu Sebastian Brants Narrenschiff by Ulrich Gaier, 1966; Sebastian Brant, Das Narrenschiff by Barbara Könneker, 1966; Sebastian Brant by Edwin H. Zeydel, 1967; Das Narrenschiff by Klaus Manger, 1983; Dichtung, Recht und

Freiheit. Studien zu Leben und Werk Sebastian Brants 1457–1521 by Joachim Knape, 1992; Sebastian Brant's The Ship of Fools in Critical Perspective, 1800–1991 by John Van Cleve, 1993; Das Mittelniederdeutsche Narrenschiff (Lübeck 1497) und Seine Hochdeutschen Vorlagen by Friederike Voss, 1994; Ein Interpretierendes Wörterbuch der Nominalabstrakta im Narrenschiff Sebastian Brants von Abenteuer bis Zwietracht by Dietmar Benkartek, 1996; Sebastian Brant als Politischer Publizist: Zwei Flugblatt-Satiren aus den Folgejahren des Sogenannten Reformreichstags von 1495 by Vera Sack, 1997.

* * *

After graduating from the University of Basle in 1477 Sebastian Brandt studied and subsequently taught and practised law there, receiving his doctorate in 1489. From 1486–96 he also lectured on poetics. During this period he wrote occasional verse, some of it published as broadsides illustrated with woodcuts, on such topics as floods on the Rhine in 1480, an eclipse in 1485, or a hailstorm in 1487. A collection of his religious verse appeared in 1494, followed in 1498 by his Varia carmina [Diverse Lyric Poems], containing many panegyrics on Maximilian I and poems on various historical and contemporary personalities. Most of this early verse was in Latin and pedantic in style, but he soon started experimenting with translation into German, publishing versions of medieval didactic works: Thesmophagia, Disticha Catonis, Facetus, and Moretus in 1490. His interest in such writings points forward to the work for which he is chiefly remembered today, Das Narrenschiff (The Ship of Fools).

The Ship of Fools was an instant success. The first edition (Basle 1494) was followed in the same year by unauthorized reprints from Nuremberg, Reutlingen, and Augsburg, as well as by a Strasbourg edition with interpolations. New editions and adaptations continued to appear right down to 1625. The learned abbot Johannes Trithemius declared The Ship of Fools to be a “Divine Satire,” the equal of Dante’s Commedia (Divine Comedy), and the Strasbourg humanist Jacob Wimpfeling likewise compared Brant to Dante and Petrarch and considered that even Homer could not have produced a poem to match it; he proposed to introduce The Ship of Fools as a school textbook. The renowned Strasbourg preacher Johann Geiler von Kaisersberg delivered more than a hundred sermons based on it in Strasbourg Minster in 1498, as though it were a canonical book of the church. Its success was not confined to southern Germany. Low German versions were published at Lübeck in 1497 and Rostock in 1519. The year 1497 also saw the publication of a Latin translation, made by Jacob Locher and supervised by Brant, and printed at Basle under the title Stultifera navis. Through this translation the book came to the attention not only of a humanist public but of an international readership too; indeed it was the only work of German literature to achieve international acclaim before Goethe’s The Sufferings of Young Werther (1774). The Latin text was soon translated into French, English (by Alexander Barclay and Henry Watson), and Dutch, these versions becoming popular in their turn. The work had a major role in establishing “folly literature” as a genre which was cultivated by writers like Thomas Murner, Hans Sachs, and Johann Fischart and would remain popular down to the 17th century. To the modern reader, the book’s extraordinary success is something of a mystery. Even specialists in the field have been baffled. Thus Zarncke, who edited the work in 1854, felt that it was only “the intellectual impoverishment” of Brant’s age which could explain the success of this “compilation” which bore the marks of “laboured industry and countless sleepless nights!”

One reason for its success is the appeal of the figure of the fool, though Brant cannot be credited with creating it—it has both medieval and classical antecedents, and of course the distinction between fools and wise men is as old as the Bible. Brant parades before us 112 fools, each of them standing for a different kind of breach of moral or social convention. In its way, the book is an illuminating document on the intellectual and moral history of the period. Brant is a stern moralist, conservative in his religious convictions, who does not share the humanists’ sneaking belief in the innate goodness of man. For him it is foolish to sacrifice eternal salvation for passing pleasures. The “follies” that he castigates—whether blasphemy, adultery, or slavery to fashion, gluttony, sloth, or gossiping in church, bibliomania, failing to follow doctor’s orders, or selling forged relics—seem to him to be equally reprehensible. The fool is not seen as a social outcast but rather as a person who fails to heed a warning about the folly of his ways, Brant’s criticism being aimed at people who, despite warnings, persist in their sinful folly. The satire is rarely relieved with flashes of humour.

Each chapter can be read independently of the whole. Some scholars have believed that the individual chapters may originally have been published as separate poems. While this cannot be substantiated, it is certainly the case that approximately two-thirds of the chapters, especially in the first half of the work, were designed to fill neatly a two-page opening of the book, with the left-hand page having a three-line motto and a woodcut; the main text, usually 34 lines of rhyming couplets, then fills the rest of the page and the whole of the recto. The later chapters vary considerably in length. Another indication of Brant’s changing approach to the work is that the allegory of the ship voyaging with a full complement of fools is treated in a sustained manner only in the second half of the work and in the prologue (which was probably written last). The concept of the ship of fools is not Brant’s invention; the most likely source, albeit perhaps indirect, was a sermon, apparently preached in Strasbourg in the 1460s or 1470s, in which the anonymous preacher describes a ship laden with 21 fools who are invited by Christ to board his own St. Ursula’s ship. What Brant did invent is the pun on German Narr “fool” when he says that the starting point of the voyage is Narbonne and the destination is the land of Narragonia.

The Ship of Fools can be said to have “grown” rather than to have been planned. In another sense, too, the work is a compilation. Brant is always at pains to buttress his arguments by citing recognized authorities, principally the Bible (notably Proverbs and Ecclesiastes), then canon law, the Church Fathers, and ancient writers (particularly Plutarch, Xenophon, Homer, Ovid, Juvenal, and Seneca). Gaier (1966) has also revealed the classical rhetorical structures underpinning the chapters, so that we are again able to understand more readily some of the subtleties appreciated by Brant’s contemporaries.

But one feature that appeals to us as much as it did to them is the woodcuts which are an indispensable, integral part of the work. Brant himself says that he wanted to ensure that even fools unable to read might recognize themselves in the pictures. The woodcuts, which are remarkable for their vitality, are clearly the work of several artists; some have been attributed to the young Albrecht Dürer. Though Brant claims in the preface (line 25) to have designed the pictures, this doubtless means no more than that he suggested motifs and collaborated closely with the artists.

—John L. Flood

See the essay on The Ship of Fools.

BRASILLACH, Robert

Born: Perpignan, France, 31 March 1909. Education: Educated at Lycée Louis-le-Grand, Paris, 1925–28; École Normale Supérieure, Paris. Military: Served in the French army during World War II, taken prisoner, released 1941. Career: Associated with the fascist press during the 1930s; literary critic, L'Action française, 1929; contributor, Le Coq Catalan, Perpignan, L'Intransigeant, and Candide, both Paris, during 1930s; staff writer, La Revue Universelle, 1930s; member of the editorial board, with Marcel Aymé, q.v., and Jean Anouilh, q.v., Je Suis Partout, 1936–44 (resigned). Gave himself up to the Resistance, imprisoned and tried. Died: (executed) 6 February 1945.

PUBLICATIONS

Collection

Oeuvres complètes, edited by Maurice Bardèche. 12 vols., 1963–66.

Fiction

Le Voleur d'étincelles. 1932.

L'Enfant de la nuit. 1934.

Le Marchand d'oiseaux. 1936.

Comme le temps passe. 1937; as Youth Goes Over, translated by Warre Bradley Wells, 1938.

Les Sept Couteurs. 1939; with preface by Anne Brassié, 1995.

La Conquérante. 1943.

Six heures à perdre. 1953.

Los Captifs (unfinished), 1974.

Plays

Bérénice. 1954; as La Reine de Césarée (produced 1957). 1957.

Domrémy. 1961.

Verse

Poèmes. 1944.

Poèmes de Fresnes. 1949.

Other

Présence de Virgile. 1931.

Portraits. 1935.

L'Histoire du cinéma, with Maurice Bardèche. 1935; as History of the Film, translated by Iris Barry, 1938; as History of Motion Pictures, translated by Barry, 1970.

Animateurs de théâtre. 1936.

Léon Degrelle et l'avenir de Rex. 1936.

Les Cadets de l'Alcazar, with Henri Massis. 1936; as The Cadets of the Alcazar, translated anonymously, 1937.

Le Siège de l'Alcazar, with Henri Massis. 1936.

Pierre Corneille. 1938.

Histoire de la guerre d'Espagne, with Maurice Bardèche. 1939.

Notre avant-guerre. 1941; as Une génération dans l'orage, 1941.

Le Procès de Jeanne d'Arc. 1941.

Les Quatre Jéudis. 1944.

Chénier. 1947.

Morceaux choisis, edited by Marie Madeleine Martin. 1949.

Lettres écrites en prison (correspondence). 1952.

Journal d'un homme occupé. 1955.

Lettre à un soldat de la classe 60, suivie de textes écrits en prison. 1960.

Poètes oubliés. 1961.

Écrit à Fresnes (correspondence). 1967.

Vingt lettres de Robert Brasillach. 1970.

Editor and translator, Anthologie de la poésie grecque. 1950.

*

Critical Studies: Robert Brasillach (in French) by Bernard George, 1968; The Fascist Ego: A Political Biography of Robert Brasillach by William Rayburn Tucker, 1975; The Mystique of Fascism: Ideological and Artistic Function in the Works of Brasillach by Peter Tame, 1980; Robert Brasillach; ou, Encore un instant de bonheur by Anne Brassié 1987; Brasillach; ou, La célébration du mépris by Jacqueline Baldran and Claude Bochorberg, 1988; Robert Brasillach maître de l'évasion by Marie-Lute Parton Monferron, 1988; Brasillach: L'Illusion fasciste by Pascal Louvrier, 1989; Littérature et fascisme: les romans de Robert Brasillach by Luc Rasson. 1991; The Collaborator: The Trial and Execution of Robert Brasillach by Alice Kaplan, 2000.

* * *

Robert Brasillach's short life had to it many aspects of that of a 19th-century Romantic struck with a severe case of the mal du siècle. That boredom, or ennui, which was essentially a rejection of traditional bourgeois values, had no real political dimension to it, but its 20th-century counterpart, fascism, had a strong attraction for young men like Brasillach. Somewhat anarchistic by nature (but not without a great deal of ambition), he left the provinces as a boy to attend the Lycée Louis-le-Grand in Paris at the age of 16. From there he passed the difficult competitive entrance examination for the École Normale Supérieure, yet he seems to have frittered away his time there, spending all too much energy as an extreme right activist in rebellion against the status quo.

He began his career as a right-wing journalist in 1931, working on the literary staff of the L'Action française, Maurras's royalist newspaper. He embarked on a parallel career as a critic and novelist at the same time. Having excelled in his studies of Greek and Latin, his first book, Présence de Virgile, established one of the underpinnings of his life's work: his admiration for classicism and Mediterranean culture.

His later admiration for Mussolini would be partly attributable to this, as were later books on Corneille and the Anthologie de la poésie grecque, which he prepared in prison shortly before his death in 1945.

Brasillach continued to spread himself very thin throughout this decade, using his vast energies to study and elucidate widely divergent fields. Thus, in collaboration with his brother-in-law Maurice Bardèche, he published the Histoire du cinéma (History of the Film) and the Histoire de la guerre d'Espagne [History of the Spanish War]. From 1937 to 1943 he was a key member of the right wing and later collaborationist daily newspaper Je Suis Partout [I Am Everywhere], which in its heyday boasted a circulation of 300,000. Brasillach had an enormous audience before he resigned from the paper in 1943 because it had gone too far in its pro-German commitment. In the European civil war of the day, Brasillach was surely a "national" who bitterly opposed the Allied "cosmopolitans," but at the same time he refused to allow his identity as a Frenchman to be lost in the alliance with Germany. After the Liberation of Paris, he deliberately did not listen to the advice of friends who counselled emigration to Switzerland. Instead, he chose to face up to what he seems to have known would be his fate. He was arrested in September 1944; his trial in January of the following year was delayed while the authorities looked for a judge who would be willing to decree the death sentence for the crime of having an unpopular opinion. When that judge was found, the trial was conducted quickly and Brasillach was predictably sentenced to death, like so many other victims of the épuration (purge). Despite a petition signed by many intellectuals of both Left and Right, including a direct appeal to General de Gaulle by François Mauriac (who had so often been on the receiving end of Brasillach's barbs during the war), he was executed on 6 February 1945. In the last half century he has taken on the status of a martyr among French nationalists, who liken him to Joan of Arc in his honesty and courage in standing up to the English-led cosmopolitan coalition of the 1940s.

Interest in recent years has turned to Brasillach the novelist. The blacklisting of his work by intellectuals was far more effective than the one used on Céline, for example, and it remained in effect well into the 1970s. If Brasillach is to be truly rehabilitated, as his admirers seek to do, he must be shown to have been more than a mere journalist, albeit a courageous one. His first novel, Le Voleur d'étincelles, appeared in 1932. The hero, Lazare, like Brasillach, is about 23 years old. In his desire to escape from the dreaded landscape of bourgeois conformity, he discovers a mythological world of dreams. Brasillach's classical background and his own personal debt to the author of Le Grand Meaulnes (The Wanderer) are evident influences here. This theme of escape was continued in the next novel, L'Enfant de la nuit [Child of the Night], but with an important modification. Brasillach, still young and looking for something to say, links the notion of escape to that of discovery. Thus his young hero, Robert, breaks out from his rather self-centred bourgeois universe to discover the everyday world of ordinary Parisians. Literary populism was in the air and the novel of social concern was thriving. In addition, a film like René Clair's Sous les toits de Paris [Beneath the Roofs of Paris], which brought out whatever poetic elements were to be found in working class existence of the day, had been an enormous success. Brasillach's novel tries to exploit, but unconvincingly, this formula. Le Marchand d'oiseaux [The Bird Seller] continues in the same vein. Comme le temps passe (Youth Goes Over) utilizes once again Robert, the narrator of L'Enfant de la nuit, but here his escape takes place not so much in space as in time—back to the days before World War I. Like many people who could see a new war coming, Brasillach seemed to be trying to stop the passage of time in this novel, as if to somehow stave off World War I. Some critics have seen this as his best fictional effort, but it has the same self-referential and somewhat decadent limitation as the earlier ones. Brasillach's hero never really overcomes his obsession with himself.

Les Sept Couleurs [The Seven Colours] signalled a new and welcome departure. It is a political novel whose action is set in the late 1930s. It was widely read and commented upon at the time, and nominated for the Goncourt prize. The seven colours of the title represent as many different fictional techniques, which are used in the various sections of the novel. Brasillach exhibits impressive control over each form while depicting the lure of escape for his young hero, Patrice, who discovers fascism in Italy and who attends the Nazi Party Congress in Nuremberg in 1938. This is Brasillach's major literary achievement, although to date it has not been studied seriously. It combines in potent form his interest in ancient Mediterranean culture (rekindled in Italian fascism) with the desire to escape into a world of dreams (as represented in the disciplined and anti-bourgeois mise en scène at Nuremberg). Patrice's fantasy is skilfully played off against the lucidity of his friend and classmate Catherine, who is able to accept bourgeois reality. This lucidity sets the work apart from the earlier novels as well as from La Conquérante [The Conquering Woman], an escapist work set in Morocco at the turn of the century, and Six heures à perdre, a pseudo-detective novel written in the spring of 1944 before Brasillach's arrest and execution.

Brasillach has emerged from literary and civil purgatory in the last several years and a large amount of research is now being done, mostly biographical. An objective assessment of the quality of his aesthetic achievement as a novelist has not yet begun, but this will be a critical stage in the process of rehabilitation if he is to be remembered as more than a mere journalist. In the meantime, the arbitrary and unjust death sentence that was imposed upon him for political reasons will continue to exert a powerful attraction for many.

—David O'Connell

BRECHT, Bertolt

Born: Eugen Berthold Friedrich Brecht in Augsburg, Germany, 10 February 1898. Education: Educated at elementary school, 1904–08, and Gymnasium, Augsburg, 1908–17; University of Munich, 1917–18, 1919. Military Service: Served as medical orderly during World War I. Family: Married 1) Marianne Zoff in 1922 (divorced 1927), one daughter; 2) the actress Helene Weigel in 1929, one son and one daughter; also had one son by Paula Banholzer. Career: Drama critic, Der Volkswille, Augsburg, 1919–21; dramaturg, Munich Kammerspiele, 1923–24; in Berlin, 1924–33; dramaturg, Deutsches Theater; following Hitler's assumption of power, left Germany, 1933; based in Denmark, 1933–39; stripped of German citizenship, 1935; editor, with Lion Feuchtwanger and Willi Bredel, Das Wort, 1936–39; moved to Sweden, 1939; fled Sweden, 1941, arrived in the United States via Moscow and Vladivostok; based in California, 1941–47, called before the House Un-American Activities Committee, 1947; flew to Europe immediately after testifying; based in Switzerland, 1947–49; became Austrian citizen, 1950; moved to East Berlin after 1949; artistic adviser, Berliner Ensemble (directed by his wife), 1949–56. Awards: Kleist prize, 1922; Stalin Peace prize, 1954. Died: 14 August 1956.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

- Gesammelte Werke (Stücke, Gedichte, Prosa, and Schriften)*. 20 vols., 1967; supplemented with: Texte für Filme, 2 vols., 1969; Arbeitsjournal, 2 vols., 1974; Gedichte aus dem Nachlass, 2 vols., 1982.
- Collected Plays*, edited by John Willett and Ralph Manheim. 1970–; the United Kingdom and United States versions of this collection have a slightly different arrangement; some translations reprinted as Plays.
- Poems 1913–1956*, edited and translated by John Willett and Ralph Manheim. 3 vols., 1976; revised edition, 1979.
- Collected Short Stories: 1921–1946*, edited by John Willett and Ralph Manheim, translated by Yvonne Kapp, Hugh Rorrison, and Anthony Tatlow. 1983.
- Werke: Grosse kommentierte Berliner und Frankfurter Ausgabe*, edited by Werner Hecht and others. 1989–.

Plays

- Baal* (produced 1922; revised version 1926). 1922; revised version, in Stücke, 1, 1955; edited by Dieter Schmidt, 1968; as Baal, translated by Eric Bentley, in Baal; A Man's A Man; The Elephant Calf, 1964; also translated by Peter Tegel, in Collected Plays, 1970.
- Trommeln in der Nacht* (produced 1922). 1922; as Drums in the Night, translated by Frank Jones, in Jungle of Cities and Other Plays, 1966; also translated by John Willett, in Collected Plays, 1, 1970.
- Im Dickicht der Städte* (as Im Dickicht, produced 1923; revised version 1927). 1927; edited by Gisela E. Bahr, 1968; as In the Jungle of Cities, translated by Gerhard Nellhaus, 1957; as Jungle of Cities, translated by Anselm Hollo, in Jungle of Cities and Other Plays, 1966.
- Pastor Ephraim Magnus*, with Arnolt Bronnen, from the work by Hans Henry John (produced 1923).
- Leben Eduards des Zweiten von England*, with Lion Feuchtwanger, from the play by Christopher Marlowe (produced 1924). 1924; edited by Reinhold Grimm, 1968; as Edward II, translated by Eric Bentley, 1966; as The Life of Edward II of England, translated by Jean Benedetti, in Collected Plays, 1, 1970.
- Die Kleinbürgerhochzeit* (as Die Hochzeit, produced 1926). 1966; as A Respectable Wedding, translated by Jean Benedetti, in Collected Plays, 1, 1970.
- Mann ist Mann*, with others (produced 1926). 1927; as Man Equals Man, translated by Eric Bentley, in Seven Plays, 1961, also translated by Gerhard Nellhaus, in Collected Plays, 2, 1979; as A Man's a Man, also translated by Bentley, in Baal; A Man's a Man; The Elephant Calf, 1964.
- Das Elefantenkalb*. With Mann ist Mann, 1927; as The Elephant Calf, translated by Eric Bentley, in Baal; A Man's A Man; The Elephant Calf, 1964; also translated by Gerhard Nellhaus, in Collected Plays, 2, 1979.
- Kalkutta 4 Mai*, with Lion Feuchtwanger, from a play by Feuchtwanger, in Drei Angelsächsische Stücke. 1927; translated as Warren Hastings, in Two Anglo-Saxon Plays, 1928.
- Die Dreigroschenoper*, music by Kurt Weill, from the play The Beggar's Opera by John Gay (produced 1928). 1929; as The Threepenny Opera, translated by Desmond I. Vesey and Eric

- Bentley, in From the Modern Repertoire, edited by Bentley, 1958; also translated by Hugh McDiarmid, 1973; Ralph Manheim and John Willett, in Collected Plays, 2, 1979.
- Happy End*, with Elisabeth Hauptmann, music by Kurt Weill (produced 1929). Happy End, translated and adapted by Michael Feingold, 1982.
- Lindberghflug*, music by Kurt Weill and Paul Hindemith (produced 1929). 1929; retitled Der Ozeanflug.
- Aufstieg und Fall der Stadt Mahagonny*, music by Kurt Weill (produced 1930). 1929; as The Rise and Fall of the City of Mahagonny, translated by W.H. Auden and Chester Kallman, 1976.
- Das Badener Lehrstück vom Einverständnis*, music by Paul Hindemith (produced 1929). In Versuche, 2, 1930; as The Didactic Play of Baden-Baden on Consent, in Tulane Drama Review, May 1960.
- Der Jasager/Der Neinsager*, music by Kurt Weill (produced 1930). In Versuche, 4, 1931; edited by Peter Szondi, 1966; as He Who Said Yes; He Who Said No, translated by Wolfgang Sauerlander, in The Measures Taken and Other Lehrstücke, 1977.
- Die Massnahme*, music by Hanns Eisler (produced 1930). In Versuche, 4, 1931; edited by Reiner Steinweg, 1972; as The Measures Taken, translated by Eric Bentley, in The Modern Theatre, 6, edited by Bentley, 1960; in The Jewish Wife and Other Short Plays, 1965; also translated by Carl R. Müller, in The Measures Taken and Other Lehrstücke, 1977.
- Versuche*, 1–7, 9–15. 14 vols., 1930–57.
- Die heilige Johanna der Schlachthöfe* (broadcast 1932; produced 1959). In Versuche, 5, 1932; edited by Gisela E. Bahr, 1971; as Saint Joan of the Stockyards, translated by Frank Jones, in From the Modern Repertoire, series 3, edited by Eric Bentley, 1956; also translated by Ralph Manheim, in Collected Plays, 3, 1991.
- Die Mutter*, music by Hanns Eisler, from the novel by Gor'kii (produced 1932). In Versuche, 7, 1932; edited by W. Hecht, 1969; as The Mother, translated by Lee Baxandall, 1965; also translated by Steve Gooch, 1978.
- Die Sieben Todsünden der Kleinbürger*, music by Kurt Weill (produced 1933). 1959; as The Seven Deadly Sins of the Petty Bourgeoisie, in Plays, 1979.
- Die Rundköpfe und die Spitzköpfe*, music by Hanns Eisler (produced 1936). In Gesammelte Werke, 2, 1938; as Roundheads and Peakheads, translated by N. Goold-Verschoyle, in Jungle of Cities and Other Plays, 1966.
- Die Gewehre der Frau Carrar* (produced 1937). 1938; as The Guns of Carrar, 1971; as Señora Carrar's Rifles, in Collected Plays, 4, 1983.
- Furcht und Elend des Dritten Reiches* (produced as 99%, 1938). 1945; as The Private Life of the Master Race, translated by Eric Bentley, 1944; as Fear and Misery in the Third Reich, in Collected Plays, 4, 1983.
- Die Ausnahme und die Regel*, music by Paul Dessau (produced 1938). In Gesammelte Werke, 2, 1938; as The Exception and the Rule, translated by Eric Bentley, in The Jewish Wife and Other Short Plays, 1965; also translated by Ralph Manheim, 1977.
- Die Horatier und die Kuriatier*, music by Kurt Schwän (produced 1958). In Gesammelte Werke, 2, 1938; as The Horatians and the Curatians, in Accent, 1947.
- Das Verhör des Lukullus* (broadcast 1940; revised version, music by Paul Dessau, produced 1951). 1951; as The Trial of Lucullus, translated by H.R. Hays, 1943; as Lucullus, in Plays, 1, 1960.
- Mutter Courage und ihre Kinder* (produced 1941). 1949; In Versuche, 9, 1949; revised edition, 1950; edited by W. Hecht, 1964; as

- Mother Courage and Her Children*, translated by H.R. Hays, 1941; also translated by Eric Bentley, in Seven Plays, 1961, and Collected Plays, 2, 1962; John Willett, in Collected Plays, 5, 1980; translated by David Hare, 1995.
- Der gute Mensch von Sezuan* (produced 1943). In Versuche, 12, 1953; revised edition, 1958; edited by W. Hecht, 1968; as The Good Woman of Setzuan, translated by Eric Bentley, in Parables for the Theatre, 1948; as The Good Person of Szechwan, translated by John Willett, in Plays, 2, 1962; as The Good Person of Sichuan, translated by Michael Hofmann, 1989.
- Galileo* (produced 1943; revised version, with Charles Laughton, produced 1947; revised version, as Leben des Galilei, produced 1955). 1955; edited by W. Hecht, 1963; as Galileo, translated by Brecht and Charles Laughton, in From the Modern Repertoire, series 2, edited by Eric Bentley, 1953; as The Life of Galileo, translated by Desmond I. Vesey, 1960; also translated by John Willett, in Collected Plays, 5, 1980.
- Der kaukasische Kreidekreis* (produced 1948). In Sinn und Form—Sonderheft, 1949; as The Caucasian Chalk Circle, translated by Eric Bentley, in Parables for the Theatre, 1948; also translated by James and Tania Stern, with W.H. Auden, in Collected Plays, 7, 1960.
- Herr Puntila und sein Knecht Matti* (produced 1948). In Versuche, 10, 1950; as Mr. Puntila and His Man Matti, translated by John Willett, in Collected Plays, 6, 1977.
- Die Antigone des Sophokles*, from Hölderlin's translation of Sophocles' play (produced 1948). 1955; translated as Antigone, 1989.
- Der Hofmeister*, from the play by J.M.R. Lenz (produced 1950). In Versuche, 11, 1951; as The Tutor, in Collected Plays, 9, 1973 (United States edition only); also translated and adapted by Pip Broughton, 1988.
- Herrnburger Bericht*, music by Paul Dessau (produced 1951). 1951.
- Der Prozess der Jeanne d'Arc zu Rouen 1431*, from his radio play (produced 1952). In Stücke, 12, 1959; as The Trial of Joan of Arc, in Collected Plays, 9, 1973 (United States edition only).
- Don Juan*, from the play by Molière (produced 1953). In Stücke, 12, 1959; as Don Juan, in Collected Plays, 9, 1973 (United States edition only).
- Die Gesichte der Simone Machard*, with Lion Feuchtwanger (produced 1957). In Sinn und Form, 5–6, 1956; as The Visions of Simone Machard, translated by Hugh and Ellen Rank, in Collected Plays, 7, 1976.
- Die Tage der Kommune*, music by Hanns Eisler (produced 1956). In Versuche, 15, and Stücke, 10, both 1957; as The Days of the Commune, in Dunster Drama Review, 1971; also translated by Clive Barker and Arno Reinfrank, 1978.
- Pauken und Trompeten*, with Elisabeth Hauptmann and Benno Besson, music by Rudolf Wagner-Regeny, from a play by George Farquhar (produced 1956). In Stücke, 12, 1959; as Trumpets and Drums, in Collected Plays, 9, 1973 (United States edition only).
- Der aufhaltsame Aufstieg des Arturo Ui* (produced 1958). In Stücke, 9, 1957; as The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui, translated by Ralph Manheim, in Collected Plays, 6, 1976.
- Schweik im zweiten Weltkrieg*, music by Hanns Eisler (produced 1957). In Stücke, 10, 1957; edited by Herbert Knust, 1974; as Schweik in the Second World War, translated by William Rowlinson, in Collected Plays, 7, 1976.
- Coriolan*, from the play by Shakespeare (produced 1962). In Stücke, 11, 1959; as Coriolanus, in Collected Plays, 9, 1973 (United States edition only).
- Seven Plays* (includes Jungle of Cities; Man Equals Man; St. Joan of the Stockyards; Mother Courage and Her Children; Galileo; The Good Woman of Setzuan; The Caucasian Chalk Circle), edited and translated by Eric Bentley. 1961.
- Der Bettler; oder, Der tote Hund*. In Stücke, 13, 1966; as The Beggar; or, the Dead Dog, translated by Michael Hamburger, in Collected Plays, 1, 1970.
- Er treibt den Teufel aus*. In Stücke, 13, 1966; as Driving Out a Devil, translated by Richard Greenburger, in Collected Plays, 1, 1970.
- Lux in Tenebris*. In Stücke, 13, 1966; as Lux in Tenebris, translated by Eva Geisel and Ernest Borneman, in Collected Plays, 1, 1970.
- Der Fischzug*. In Stücke, 13, 1966; as The Catch, translated by John Willett, in Collected Plays, 1, 1970.
- Jungle of Cities and Other Plays* (includes Jungle of Cities; Drums in the Night; Roundheads and Peakheads), translated by Anselm Hollo and others. 1966.
- Turandot; oder, Der Kongress der Weisswäscher*, music by Harms Eisler (produced 1969). In Gesammelte Werke, 1967.
- Der Brotladen* (produced 1967). 1969.
- Kühle Wampe: Protokoll des Films und Materialien*, edited by W. Gersch and W. Hecht. 1969.
- Screenplays: Kühle Wampe, with others, 1932; Hangmen Also Die, with John Wexley and Fritz Lang, 1943.
- Radio Plays: Macbeth, from the play by Shakespeare, 1927; Hamlet, from the play by Shakespeare, 1931; Die heilige Johanna der Schlachthöfe, 1932.

Fiction

- Der Dreigroschenroman*. 1934; as A Penny for the Poor, translated by Desmond I. Vesey and Christopher Isherwood, 1937; as Threepenny Novel, translated by Vesey and Isherwood, 1956.
- Kalendergeschichten*. 1948; as Tales from the Calendar, translated by Yvonne Kapp and Michael Hamburger, 1961.
- Die Geschäfte des Herrn Julius Cäsar*. 1957.
- Stories of Mr. Keuner*, translated by Martin Chalmers, 2001.

Verse

- Taschenpostille*. 1926.
- Hauspostille*. 1927; as Manual of Piety, translated by Eric Bentley, 1966.
- Lieder Gedichte Chöre*, with Hanns Eisler. 1934.
- Svendborger Gedichte*. 1939.
- Selected Poems*. 1947.
- Die Erziehung der Hirse*. 1951.
- Hundert Gedichte*. 1951.
- Gedichte*, edited by S. Streller. 1955.
- Gedichte und Lieder*, edited by P. Suhrkamp. 1956.
- Selected Poems*, translated by H.R. Hays. 1959.
- Poems on the Theatre*, translated by John Berger and Anna Bostock. 1961.
- Gedichte aus dem Nachlass*, edited by Herta Ramthun. 2 vols., 1982.
- Poems and Songs from the Plays*, translated by John Willett. 1990.

Other

- Gesammelte Werke*. 2 vols., 1938.
Theaterarbeit, with others. 1952.
Gesammelte Werke. 40 vols., 1953–.
Kriegsfiabel. 1955; as War Primer, translated by John Willett, 1998.
Schriften zum Theater. 1957; as Brecht on Theater, edited and translated by John Willett, 1964.
Flüchtlingsgespräche. 1961.
Dialoge aus dem Messingkauf. 1964; as The Messingkauf Dialogues, translated by John Willett, 1965.
Arbeitsjournal, edited by Werner Hecht. 2 vols., 1973; as Journals, 1934–1955, edited by John Willett, translated by Hugh Rorrison, 1993.
Autobiographische Aufzeichnungen 1920–1954, Tagebücher 1920–22, edited by Herta Ramthun. 1975; Tagebücher as Diaries 1920–22, translated by John Willett, 1979.
Briefe, edited by Günter Gläser. 2 vols., 1981.
Über die bildenden Künste, edited by Jost Hermand. 1983.
Letters 1913–1956, edited by John Willett, translated by Ralph Manheim. 1990.
Bertolt Brecht: Bad Time for Poetry: Was It? Is It?: 150 Poems and Songs, edited and introduced by John Willett, 1995.
Brecht on Film and Radio, translated and edited by Marc Silberman, 2000.
 Translator, with Margarete Steffin, Die Kindheit, by Martin Andersen-Nexö. 1945.

*

Bibliography: in Sinn und Form, 1957; Brecht-Bibliographie by Gerhard Seidel, 1975–.

Critical Studies: Die dramatischen Versuche Bertolt Brechts 1918–1933, 1955, and Drama und Geschichte. Bertolt Brechts "Leben des Galilei" und andere Stücke, 1965, both by Ernst Schumacher; Brecht: A Choice of Evils: A Critical Study of the Man, His Work, and His Opinions by Martin Esslin, 1959, 4th revised edition, 1984; The Theatre of Bertolt Brecht, 1959, revised edition, 1977, and Brecht in Context: Comparative Approaches, 1984, both by John Willett; Brecht: A Collection of Critical Essays edited by Peter Demetz, 1962; Bertolt Brecht: The Despair and the Polemic by C.R. Lyons, 1968; Bertolt Brecht: His Life, His Art, and His Times by Frederic Ewen, 1970; The Essential Brecht, 1972, and Bertolt Brecht: Chaos, According to Plan, 1987, both by John Fuegi; Understanding Brecht by Walter Benjamin, 1973; Essays on Brecht: Theater and Politics edited by Siegfried Mews and Herbert Knust, 1974; Brecht Chronicle, 1975, and Brecht: A Biography, translated by John Nowell, 1979, both by Klaus Völker; The Dialectic and the Early Brecht: An Interpretative Study of "Trommeln in der Nacht" by David Bathnick, 1975; Bertolt Brecht's Adaptations for the Berliner Ensemble by Arrigo Subiotto, 1975; Brecht the Dramatist by Ronald Gray, 1976; Der Hofmeister: A Critical Analysis of Bertolt Brecht's Adaptation of Lenz's Drama by Laurence P.A. Kitching, 1976; The Mask of Evil: Brecht's Response to the Poetry, Theatre and Thought of China and Japan by Anthony Tatlow, 1977; Brecht: A Study by Michael Morley, 1977; Towards Utopia: A Study of Brecht by Keith Dickson, 1978; Bertolt Brecht and Post-War French Drama by Victoria Williams Hill, 1978; Bertolt Brecht by Karl H. Schoeps, 1978; Bertolt Brecht's Great Plays by Alfred D. White, 1978; Brecht's Misgivings by Roy Pascal, 1978; Approaching "Mother Courage," or, Who's Afraid of Bertolt Brecht?

by Christopher Michael Sperberg, 1979; Brecht as Thinker: Studies in Literary Marxism and Existentialism by Ralph J. Ley, 1979; Bertolt Brecht in America by James K. Lyon, 1980; Bertolt Brecht: Political Theory and Literary Practice edited by Betty N. Weber and Hubert Heinen, 1980; The Morality of Doubt: Brecht and the German Dramatic Tradition by Edward McInnes, 1980; Brecht by Jan Needle, 1981; Brecht's America by Patty Lee Parmalee, 1981; The Brecht Commentaries 1943–1980, 1981, and The Brecht Memoir, 1985, both by Eric Bentley; Brecht in Perspective edited by Graham Bartram and Anthony Waine, 1982; Characterisation of Women in the Plays of Bertolt Brecht by Bernard Fenn, 1982; Brecht's Early Plays, 1982, and Bertolt Brecht, 1987, both by Ronald Speirs; Brecht in Exile by Bruce Cook, 1983; Brecht: A Biography, 1983, and Bertolt Brecht: The Plays, 1984, both by Ronald Hayman; Brecht's Poetry: A Critical Study by Peter Whitaker, 1985; Lukács and Brecht by David Pike, 1985; Exception and Rules: Brecht, Planchon and "The Good Person of Szechwan" by Pia Kleber, 1987, and Re-interpreting Brecht: His Influence on Contemporary Drama and Film, edited by Kleber and Colin Visser, 1990; Bertolt Brecht: Dialectics, Poetry and Politics by Peter Brooker, 1988; Critical Essays on Bertolt Brecht edited by Siegfried Mews, 1989; Brecht and the West German Theatre: The Practice and Politics of Interpretation by John Rouse, 1989; The Poetry of Brecht by Philip J. Thomson, 1989; Postmodern Brecht: A Re-presentation by Elizabeth Wright, 1989; Brecht and the Theory of the Media by Roswitha Müller, 1990; Leitmotif and Drama: Wagner, Brecht and the Limits of "Epic" Theatre by H.M. Brown, 1991; Received Truths: Bertolt Brecht and the Problem of Gestus and Musical Meaning by Kenneth Fowler, 1991; The Young Brecht by Hanns Otto Münsterer, translated by Tom Kuhn and Karen Leeder, 1992; Citation and Modernity: Derrida, Joyce, and Brecht by Claudette Sartillot, 1993; After Brecht: British Epic Theater by Janelle Reinelt, 1994; Brecht and Company: Sex, Politics, and the Making of the Modern Drama, 1994; The Cambridge Companion to Brecht, edited by Peter Thomson and Glendyr Sacks, 1994; Brecht and France by Chetana Nagavajara, 1994; Brecht's Reception in Brazil by Lorena B. Ellis, 1995; Elisabeth Hauptmann: Brecht's Silent Collaborator by Paula Hanssen, 1995; Brecht: Leben des Galilei by John J. White, 1996; Performing Brecht: Forty Years of British Performances by Margaret Eddershaw, 1996; Brecht: Mother Courage and Her Children by Peter Thomson, with conclusion by Viv Gardner, 1997; Proletarian Performance in Weimar Berlin: Agitprop, Chorus, and Brecht by Richard Bodek, 1997; A Bertolt Brecht Reference Companion, edited by Siegfried Mews, 1997; Brecht and Method by Fredric Jameson, 1998; Bentley on Brecht by Eric Bentley, 1999; Space and Time in Epic Theater: The Brechtian Legacy by Sarah Bryant-Bertrail, 2000; Brecht Sourcebook, edited by Carol Martin and Henry Bial, 2000; Shakespeare, Brecht, and the Intercultural Sign by Antony Tatlow, 2001.

* * *

Bertolt Brecht is the single most innovative and influential force in 20th-century theatre. He wrote some three dozen plays, and these, together with his theories and productions, prose and verse, are all of a unity, generated by and contributing to a coherent and rational philosophy of man and society. This philosophy is essentially political in the widest sense, defining theatre as the depiction in artistic terms of the interaction of individuals in social situations, affecting each other's lives. Brecht was not satisfied with illusory depiction—the mimetic reproduction of the world, he was a realist who aimed at illuminating his audience's perception of society. He sought to articulate the underlying, objective "truth" of a situation, to explain how "what is" comes about. Such a view rested on the conviction that all human actions are explicable in terms of the workings of society, that "the fate of a man is determined by other men."

For most of his life Brecht was a Marxist. He endeavoured to assimilate into drama the investigative methods and findings of the "new" sciences of sociological, political, and economic analysis, and tried to evolve for the theatre a strategy of writing, acting, and production that would render it adequate to its role in the contemporary world. This he called "epic" theatre because of its fundamental rejection of the primacy of illusion and emotion, and its emphasis on the "narrative," reflective stance of the historian.

In his early plays after World War I Brecht showed a predilection for the rejects of society, victims of the grinding capitalism of the bourgeois world. The "beaten hero," as Walter Benjamin called him, reflected the imbalance of overwhelming economic forces and individual powerlessness. Baal showed an asocial hero in an asocial world; Im Dickicht der Städte (Jungle of Cities) provided a model of the isolated individual's struggle for survival in a capitalist structure; and the dismantling and reassembly of the hero in Mann ist Mann (Man Equals Man) thematized the manipulation of human beings by exploitative powers. During the period of his systematic study of Marxism after 1926 Brecht evolved from a rebellious to a disciplined supporter of the working-class struggle. The idiosyncratic "learning plays" like Die Massnahme (The Measures Taken) and Die Ausnahme und die Regel (The Exception and the Rule) are milestones in Brecht's developing conception of the function of theatre in a social context, offering openly didactic Marxist studies in models of (political) action. Even the apparently innocuous entertainment of Die Dreigroschenoper (The Threepenny Opera)—audiences have long been captivated by Kurt Weill's catchy tunes—masked a virulent attack on the bandit morality of bourgeois capitalism.

On the accession to power of the Nazi regime in 1933 Brecht immediately went into exile. This caesura paradoxically signalled the start of his most productive period, an astounding output of major plays, theoretical essays, prose writing, and a stream of poetry from 1933 to 1945. It is symptomatic of Brecht's single-mindedness, perseverance, and vision that at this time, driven as he was from one country to another and almost entirely deprived of a German-speaking public—Denmark, Finland, and the United States were his major staging-posts—he created a handful of plays that were to establish his truly international reputation: Mutter Courage und ihre Kinder (Mother Courage and Her Children), Galileo (The Life of Galileo), Der gute Mensch von Sezuan (The Good Person of Szechwan), Herr Puntila und sein Knecht Matti (Mr. Puntila and His Man Matti), Der kaukasische Kreidekreis (The Caucasian Chalk Circle). To some extent these plays compromise with the traditional Aristotelian drama from which Brecht had earlier dissociated himself so vehemently. They rely partly for their effect—and certainly for their popularity—on full-bodied characters caught in the classical dilemmas of dramatic heroes. Yet Brecht does ascribe the emotionally absorbing contradictions of human behaviour to the dialectics of society and its distorting, brutalizing effects on human personality.

The Nazis provided Brecht with a precise and concrete target in place of the formless, anonymous capitalism of Marxist theory and rhetoric, for he saw the actual fascist regime in Germany as a manifestation of "the most naked, shameless, oppressive and deceitful form of capitalism." His literary attacks on this virulent menace range from the sober documented realism of Furcht und Elend des

Dritten Reiches (The Private Life of the Master Race), culled from newspaper items and information leaking from inside Germany, to the gangster satire of Der aufhaltsame Aufstieg des Arturo Ui (The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui), and a range of vitriolic, elegiac, admonishing, hopeful poems.

After World War II Brecht eventually made his way back to Europe, settling in East Berlin in 1949. Here he was afforded every facility as the most prized cultural figure in the German Democratic Republic; supported by generous subsidies, he founded the world-renowned Berliner Ensemble with his wife, the actress Helene Weigel. Under Brecht's direction this theatre company established a wide-ranging repertoire, including Brecht's own plays as well as his free adaptations of many classics, such as Shakespeare's Coriolanus and Molière's Don Juan. Brecht also had the freedom and complete control of theatrical resources to try out, alter, and refine his ideas on epic writing, acting, and production. It was largely in these years until his death in 1956 that Brecht's dramatic style and theories were disseminated throughout the world to establish him as the focal point of 20th-century theatre.

The most important element in Brecht's theories was the celebrated "alienation effect" (Verfremdungseffekt), a term he used to describe the technique of "distancing" the audience from the play. The purpose of this was to enable the spectator to retain a detached, dispassionate, critical view of the events being enacted on stage, and not to be totally absorbed emotionally with a consequent loss of rational judgement. Brecht demanded that an alienating depiction should be "one that allows the object to be recognized but at the same time makes it appear unfamiliar"; it requires "a technique of taking the human social incidents to be portrayed and labelling them as something striking, something that calls for explanation, and is not to be taken for granted, not just natural. The object of this 'effect' is to allow the spectator to criticize constructively from a social point of view." Alienation, Brecht found, could be induced in many ways. Hence his free borrowing and parodying of other writers, his liberal use of music and songs (along with all the other "sister arts" of theatre), his exploitation of full lighting, placards, masks, "montage" and cinematic techniques—all to break the "atmosphere" of the stage and prevent the mystification of the spectator. By these means Brecht tried to reflect in the dialogue, structure, and production of individual scenes and whole plays the inconsistencies, ironical illogicalities, and dialectical contradictions of history and of individuals. His purpose was to foster insight into the workings of society and open the way to progress by emancipating man's thinking from the rigidities of tradition.

—Arrigo V. Subiotto

See the essays on Baal, The Caucasian Chalk Circle, The Good Person of Szechwan, The Life of Galileo, Mother Courage and Her Children, and The Threepenny Opera.

BREDERO, Gerbrand Adriaensz

Born: Amsterdam, The Netherlands, in 1585. Career: Studied painting with Francesco Badens: only one painting survives. Associated with the Amsterdam Rederijkerskamer (Rhetoricians' Club, established by Burgundians in 15th century for staging of plays and pageants) and d'Eglantier; broke to join the Nederduytsche Academie; ensign in Schutterij (local militia). Lived in Amsterdam all his life; friend of Pieter Hooft, q.v., and Hugo Grotius. Died: 23 August 1618.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Alle de spelen [Complete Plays], edited by P. van Waesberge. 1622.
Werken [Works], edited by J. ten Brink, H.E. Moltzer, G. Kalff, and others. 3 vols., 1890.
Werken [Works], edited by J.A.N. Knuttel. 3 vols., 1918–29.
Verspreid werk [Extended Work], edited by G.A. Stuiveling and B.C. Damsteegt. 1986.

Plays

Treur-spel van Rodd'rick ende Alphonsus [Tragedy of Roderick and Alphonse] (produced 1611). 1616.
Griane (produced 1612). 1616.
Klucht van de koe [Farce of the Cow] (produced 1612). 1619, reprinted 1971.
Klucht van den molenaer [Farce of the Miller] (produced 1613). 1618, reprinted 1971.
Het Moortje [The Little Moor], adaptation of Eunuchus by Terence (produced 1615). 1617.
Lucelle. 1616.
De Spaanschen Brabanter Ierolimo. 1618; as The Spanish Brabanter, translated by H. Dixon Brumble, 1982.
De stomme ridder [The Mute Knight] (produced 1618). 1619.
De Klucht van Symen sonder soeticheyt [The Farce of Simon Without Sweetness]. 1619, reprinted 1971.
Klucht van den hoochduytschen quacksalver [Farce of the German Quack], from Terence. 1619.
Van een huys-man en een barbier [Of a Householder and a Barber]. 1622.
Claes Cloet met een roumantel [Claes Cloet in Penitential Garb]. 1622.
Angeniet, completed by Jan Starter (produced 1628). 1623.
Schijn-heylich [Hypocrite]. 1624.

Verse

Apollo of Ghesangh der Musen [Apollo or Song of the Muses]. 1615.
Geestigh Liedt-Boecxken [Spiritual Verse Book]. 1616; corrected posthumous edition, 1621.
Boertigh, amoreus, en aendachtig groot Lied-Boek [Comic, Amorous, and Religious Verse Book]. 1622, reprinted 1974; two poems and two songs translated by Paul Vincent, in Dutch Crossing, 25 and 27, 1985.

*

Bibliography: G.A. Bredero: Eene bibliographie by J.H.W. Unger, 1884.

Critical Studies: Bredero by J.A.N. Knuttel, 1949; De Waardering van Gerbr. Adr. Bredero by J.P. Naeff, 1960; Memoriaal van Bredero and Rendom Bredero, een vierstal verkenningen, both by Garnt

Stuiveling, 1970; 't Kan verkeren, Leven en werk van Gerbrandt Bredero by H. Cartens, 1972; Bredero edited by M.A. Schenkeveld van der Dussen and others, 1985.

* * *

Like his contemporaries Pieter Hooft and Joost van den Vondel, Gerbrandt Adriaensz Bredero belongs to the generation of Dutch writers that made the transition between the Middle Ages and the Renaissance. He learned to write in the medieval genres and traditions established and propagated by the Rederijkerskamers (Rhetoricians' Club), but celebrated his greatest successes with works that adhered more closely to the emerging Renaissance poetics.

Bredero's first works for the stage were kluchten, or farces, often realistic and sometimes more than a trifle scatological, in the medieval tradition that confronted the audience with its failings in order to cure it of them. Bredero succeeded admirably in the former, as he was to prove again in his farces Klucht van de koe [Farce of the Cow], Klucht van den molenaer [Farce of the Miller], and Klucht van den hoochduytschen quacksalver [Farce of the German Quack]. Like his contemporaries, he wrote for a double audience. The farces and, generally speaking, the works more attributable to the Middle Ages, were aimed at the less educated, whereas the Renaissance comedies were addressed to the educated but written in a way that appealed to every spectator and reader. Of all the Dutch writers of the "Golden 17th Century," Bredero had perhaps the closest personal experience of this dichotomy. Unlike his contemporaries, he did not receive a classical education, although he knew French. As a result, even though he could read the Classics in translation, he did not—with the exception of Het Moortje [The Little Moor], a transposition to Amsterdam of Terence's Eunuchus—write any of his works on a Classical theme, as other writers of his time did as a matter of course.

Bredero's tragicomedies and poems may be said to occupy a middle position between medieval and Renaissance poetics. The tragicomedies continue the Dutch medieval tradition of the abele spelen by dramatizing epic/novelistic sources, while the title of Bredero's final collection of poems very obviously reflects the traditional division of poetry (humorous, amorous, and religious) established by the Rhetoricians. This mid-way position may well have made Bredero's poems popular with the readers of his day; they were given the highest accolade readers could bestow on them at the time—three pirated editions (of which not a single copy survives, suggesting that they were literally "read to pieces") appeared before Bredero himself prepared a more or less authorized fourth one, published posthumously.

Romantic critics, in particular, have tried to reveal Bredero, the man behind the poet, but to little avail. The myth of the poète maudit, driven to drink because he could not marry any of the better-educated women he wooed, and who repented on his death bed, has been shattered by the discovery that the very poem often quoted as "proof" of the man's heartfelt repentance was, in fact, a translation of a French original made by the poet interested in a fellow poet's work. Today Bredero the poet is generally considered a consummate craftsman, trying his hand at various genres, not only with a view to emulating them in the Renaissance tradition, but also with a sound instinct for what would go down well with the audiences of his time.

He first established himself as a writer for the theatre which, in his time, led a somewhat precarious existence in Amsterdam under the stern gaze of orthodox Calvinist preachers. While continuing to produce farces, he began to write tragicomedies, modelled not on Aristotle, but rather on contemporary English and Spanish drama. This “modern” theatre was much more popular than the “classical” comedies and tragedies written for the élite. Bredero found the material for his tragicomedies in the immensely popular Spanish romances of chivalry published, in his time, as frequently in Antwerp (the richest city in the Spanish Empire, a day’s journey south of Amsterdam) as in Madrid, and translated into Dutch. They are constructed around the age-old “boy meets, loses, weds girl” sequence. Bredero’s own hand can be seen in the transposition of the material to the Netherlands, in particular Amsterdam, the city whose speech he incorporated into many of his works, giving it literary respectability at a time when his contemporaries tried to write a less regionally marked Dutch, more closely modelled on Greek and Latin.

Bredero’s most celebrated play is the comedy De Spaanschen Brabander Ierolimo (The Spanish Brabanter). Its protagonist, Ierolimo, is one of the many immigrants from what is now Flanders, in the north of Belgium, who flocked to Amsterdam after the Spanish armies reconquered Antwerp. These immigrants, usually much richer and better educated than the Amsterdammers themselves, were to no small extent responsible for the phenomenal growth of their adopted city. They also caused enormous resentment, thematized in the play by the exchanges between the would-be rich and educated, foppish and Hispanicized Ierolimo, and his down-to-earth Amsterdam servant Robbeknol, who confirms the native Amsterdammers in the audience in their self-esteem. Even though Bredero used as his source Lazarillo de Tormes, recently published in Antwerp, Ierolimo and Robbeknol are to some extent reminiscent of Don Quixote and Sancho Panza. The archetypal nature of both the characters and their situation has allowed them to transcend the context of 17th-century Amsterdam.

Because of the “uncouth” nature of his material, Bredero was held in low esteem by subsequent writers and critics who propagated the ideals of French neo-classicism. By casting him in the role of a poète maudit, Romantic critics managed to credit him with a certain acceptability. In recent years, Bredero has regained his popularity—his works are taught in literature courses and, more importantly, staged in theatres. These historical metamorphoses seem fitting for a writer who signed most of his works with the motto “Things change.”

—André Lefevere

BRENTANO, Clemens (Maria Wenzeslaus)

Born: Ehrenbreitstein, Germany, 9 September 1778. Grandson of the writer Sophie von La Roche and brother of the writer Bettina von Arnim, q.v. Spent his youth in Frankfurt and Koblenz. Education: Educated at the University of Bonn, 1794; Halle University, 1794; studied medicine at the University of Jena, 1798–1800. Family: Married 1) Sophie Mereau in 1803 (died in childbirth 1806); three children (all deceased in infancy); 2) Auguste Busmann in 1807 (dissolved 1810, divorced 1812). Career: Met Achim von Arnim in Göttingen, 1801 and travelled the Rhine with him, 1802; associated with the Heidelberg group of Romantics; founding editor, with von Arnim, of the journal Zeitung für Einsiedler, 1808; lived in Bohemia, 1811–13 and Vienna, 1813–14. Amanuensis for the nun Anna Katharina Emmerich, 1817–24. Died: 28 July 1842.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

- Die Märchen*, edited by Guido Görres. 2 vols., 1847.
Gesammelte Schriften, edited by Christian Brentano. 9 vols., 1851–55.
Ausgewählte Schriften, edited by J. Diel. 2 vols., 1873.
Die Märchen von Clemens Brentano, edited by Hans E. Giehrl. 1955.
Gedichte, Erzählungen, Briefe, edited by Hans Magnus Enzensberger. 1958.
Werke, edited by Friedhelm Kemp. 4 vols., 1963–68.
Gedichte, edited by Wolfgang Frühwald. 1968.
Werke, edited by Max Preitz. 3 vols., 1974.
Sämtliche Werke und Briefe, edited by Jürgen Behrens, Wolfgang Frühwald, and Detlev Lüders. 6 vols., 1975–85.
The Legend of Rosepetal, translated by Anthea Bell. 1985.
Gedichte und Erzählungen, edited by Hans-Georg Werner. 1986.
Romantic Fairy Tales, translated and edited by Carol Tully. 2000.

Plays

- Satiren und poetische Spiele*. Gustav Wasa. 1800.
Die lustigen Musikanten (opera libretto), music by E.T.A. Hoffmann (produced 1805). 1803.
Ponce de Leon. 1804; as Valeria: oder, Vaterlist (produced 1804), 1901.
Die Gründung Prags. 1815.
Viktoria und ihre Geschwister mit fliegenden Fahnen und brennender Lunte. 1817.
Aloys und Imelde, edited by Agnes Harnack. 1912.

Fiction

- Godwi; oder, Das steinerne Bild der Mutter*. 1801.
Entweder wunderbare Geschichte von Bogs dem Uhrmacher, wie er zwar alas menschliche Leben längst verlassen, nun aber doch, nach vielen musikalischen Leiden zu Wasser und zu Lande, in die bürgerliche Schützengesellschaft aufgenommen zu werden Hoffnung hat; oder, die über die Ufer der badischen Wochenschrift als Beilage ausgetretene Konzert-Anzeige, with Joseph von Görres. 1807.
Geschichte vom braven Kasperl und dem schönen Annerl. 1817; published separately, 1838; as Honor; or, The Story of Brave Caspar and the Fair Annerl, translated by T.W. Appell, 1847; as The Story of Just Caspar and Fair Annie, translated by Helene Scher, in Four Romantic Tales, 1975.
Die drei Nüsse. 1834.
Gockel, Hinkel, und Gackeleia (stories). 1838; as The Wondrous Tale of Cocky, Clucky, and Cackle, translated by C.W. Heckethorn, 1889; as The Tale of Gockel, Hinkel and Gacketiah, translated by Doris Orgel, 1961.
Die mehreren Wehmüller und ungarischen Nationalgesichter. 1843.
Fairy Tales from Brentano, translated by Kate Freiligrath Krocker. 1885.
New Fairy Tales from Brentano, translated by Kate Freiligrath Krocker. 1888.
Das Märchen von dem Baron von Hüpfenstich (stories). 1918.
Die Schachtel mit der Friedenspuppe, edited by Josef Körner. 1922.
Chronika eines fahrenden Schülers (stories). 1923.

Verse

Legende von der heiligen Marina. 1841.
Romanzen vom Rosenkranz. 1852.
Gedichte. 1854.

Other

Universitati Litterariae Kantate auf den 15 October 1810. 1810.
Der Philister vor, in und nach der Geschichte. 1811.
Rheinübergang; Kriegsrunigesang. 1814.
Das Lied vom Korporal. 1815.
Das Mosel-Eisgangs-Lied von einer wunderbar erhaltenen Familie und einem traurig untergegangenen Magdlein in dem Dorf Lay bei Koblenz. 1830.
Die Barmherzigen Schwestern in Bezug auf Armen- und Krankenpflege; Nebst einem Bericht über das Bürgerhospital in Koblenz und erläuternden Beilagen. 1831.
Das bittere Leiden unseres Herrn Jesu Christi. Nach den Betrachtungen der gottseligen Klosterfrau Anna Katharina Emmerich. 1833; as The Passion of Our Lord Jesus Christ According to the Revelations of Anna Catharina Emmerich, 1914.
Rothkehlchens, Liebseelchens, Ermordung und Begräbnis. 1843.
Der unglückliche Franzose, oder der deutschen Freiheit Himmelfahrt, ein Schattenspiel mit Bildern, edited by Christian Brentano. 1850.
Leben der heil. Jungfrau Maria. Nach den Betrachtungen der gottseligen Anna Katharina Emmerich. 1852; as Das Marienleben nach Betrachtungen der Anna Katherina Emmerich, edited by Claire Brauflacht, 1952; as The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary from the Visions of Anne Catherine Emmerich, translated by Michael Palairet, 1954.
Das Leben unseres Herrn und Heilandes Jesu Christi, edited by Karl E. Schmöger. 3 vols., 1858–60; as The Life of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, combined with the Bitter Passion of the Life of Mary from the Revelations of Anne Catherine Emmerich as Recorded in the Journals of Clemens Brentano, 1954.
Lied von eines Studenten Ankunft in Heidelberg. 1882.
Briefe an Johann Georg. 1888.
Briefwechsel zwischen Clemens Brentano und Sophie Mereau, edited by Heinz Amelung. 1908.
Clemens Brentano and Edward von Steinle, edited by Alexander von Bernus and Alfons M. von Steinle. 1909.
Clemens Brentano und Minna Reichenbach. Ungedruckte Briefe des Dichters, edited by W. Limburger. 1921.
Rheinmärchen: für die romantische Gemeinde neu bearbeitet, edited by Vereger Werneck. 1926.
Satiren und Parodien, edited by Andreas Müller. 1935.
Das unsterbliche Leben. Unbekannte Briefe von Clemens Brentano, edited by Wilhelm Schellberg and Friedrich Fuchs. 1939.
Clemens und Bettina: Geschwisterbriefe, edited by Ina Seidel. 1948.
Briefe, edited by Friedrich Seebass. 2 vols., 1951.
Briefwechsel mit Heinrich Remigius Sauerländer, edited by Anton Krättli. 1962.
Briefe an Emile Linder, edited by Wolfgang Frühwald. 1969.
Clemens Brentano (correspondence), edited by Werner Vordtriede and Gabriele Bartenschläger. 1970.
Clemens Brentano, Philipp Otto Runge: Briefwechsel, edited by Konrad Feilchenfeldt. 1974.
Visionen und Leben: Anna Katharina Emmerich aufgezeichnet, edited by Anton Brieger. 1974.

Lebe der Liebe und liebe das Leben: der Briefwechsel von Clemens Brentano und Sophie Mereau. 1981.
Freundschaftsbriefe: Achim von Arnim und Clemens Brentano: vollständige und kritische Edition von Hartwig Schultz. 1998.
 Editor, with Sophie Brentano, Spanische und italienische Novellen. 2 vols., 1804–06.
 Editor, with Ludwig Achim von Arnim, Des Knaben Wunderhorn: Alte deutsche Lieder. 3 vols., 1806–08; translated in part by Margarete Münsterberg as “The Boy’s Magic Horn,” in The German Classics of the Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries, edited by Kuno Francke and W.G. Howard, vol. 5, 1913.
 Editor, Der Goldfaden: Eine Schöne alte Geschichte, by Jörg Wickram. 1809.
 Editor, Trutz Nachtigall, ein geistlich poetisches Lustwäldlein, by Friedrich Spee. 1817.
 Editor, Goldnes Tugendbuch, by Friedrich Spee. 2 vols., 1829.

*

Bibliography: Clemens Brentano: Ein Lebensbild nach gedruckten und ungedruckten Quellen by Johannes B. Diel and Wilhelm Kreiten, 2 vols., 1877–78.

Critical Studies: Romantic Orpheus: Profiles of Clemens Brentano, 1974, and Clemens Brentano, 1981, both by John F. Fetzer; “Anxiety of the Spirit: Brentano and Arnim” by Eric A. Blackall, in The Novels of the German Romantics, 1983; Negative Spring: Crisis Imagery in the Works of Brentano, Lenau, Rilke, and T.S. Eliot by David B. Dickens, 1989; Poetic Wreaths: Art, Death and Narration in the Märchen of Clemens Brentano by Lawrence O. Frye, 1989; Schwarzer Schmetterling: zwanzig Kapitel aus dem Leben des romantischen Dichters Clemens Brentano by Hartwig Schultz, 2000.

* * *

Clemens Brentano’s work is both intensely personal and extensively reflective. The contemporary satire in early works such as Gustav Wasa and Entweder wunderbare Geschichte von Bogs dem Uhrmacher [Bogs, The Watchmaker] made them effective only within the age they depicted. In spite of their linguistic virtuosity they are now considered merely as literary-historical documents.

If the same fate has been shared by Brentano’s first novel Godwi, it is due mainly to the overly complex plot and the often slight characterization, both typical failings of the 18th-century novel. There is much in this work that demonstrates the influence of the Romantic school. The construction of the narrative in the form of letters, with each character presenting their own view of events, is reminiscent of Ludwig Tieck’s William Lovell and reflects a modern, Romantic awareness of reality as a purely subjective category. The epistolary framework breaks down in the second part of the work, and in discussions between the main character and the fictional author on the writing of the novel the fiction reflects on itself as fiction: an illustration of Friedrich Schlegel’s theory of “poetry of poetry.” Godwi also confirms to Schlegel’s concept of the novel as a mixed form, incorporating prose, lyric, and drama: a principle which was to characterize all Brentano’s work.

Brentano’s receptiveness to outside influence explains the importance he placed on joint literary ventures. He worked with Achim von Arnim on the collection of folktales Des Knaben Wunderhorn (The Boy’s Magic Horn) and with Joseph von Görres on “Bogs, The Watchmaker.” His Romanzen vom Rosenkranz [Romances of the Rosary] was conceived in conjunction with illustrations by the artist Philipp Otto Runge, and Brentano’s interest in the project faded after Runge’s death. More significantly, Brentano’s own work is “contaminated” by outside influences. Rather than merely copying or quoting, this procedure involves the reworking of sources into a new and personal construct. In the editing of The Boy’s Magic Horn this entailed both contributors adapting their sources and even inserting examples of their own work, while in the publication of the poetry of Brentano’s wife Sophie Mereau and later of Luise Hensel, and finally in the recording of the visions of the ecstatic nun Anna Katharina Emmerick, Brentano interwove his own ideas inextricably with those of his subject.

Subjective adaptation also informs Brentano’s creative writing. Much is inspired by old material, but all is imbued with the poet’s own personality and style. Wherever Brentano turns to sources he blends report with interpretation, fact with opinion. This results in a complex mix of history and mythology in its widest sense in the prose fragment “Poor Raymond,” the drama Die Gründung Prags [The Foundation of Prague], the revised version of the fairytale Gockel, Hinkel and Gackeliah, and the ambitious cycle of poetry Romanzen vom Rosenkranz, which was to unite Biblical themes (the flight into Egypt; original sin and redemption) with legend (Tannhäuser), history (the arrival of the gypsies in Europe; the Crusades), and mythology (the origin of the Rosary).

Brentano’s Italian fairytales are based on Giovanni Battista Basile’s Il Pentamerone (The Pentamerone), but Brentano devises his own tales, which become tales for their own sake, told and enjoyed for the linguistic exuberance of the plays on words, sounds, and meanings, and the verbal leitmotifs which culminate in the endless variations of the egg theme in “Gockel and Hinkel.” His Rhine fairy-tales are inspired by the traditional folktales of this area, but again Brentano allows his fertile imagination full rein, and these stories, with their digressive, oral style, are a further testimony to his talent as a storyteller and to his linguistic inventiveness. Brentano’s true virtuosity in these tales, however, lies in his amalgamation of simplicity and subtlety in both structure and content. These are sophisticated revisions of children’s stories, which do not lose the freshness and vigour of the original.

Brentano’s poetry likewise combines old and new, spontaneity and self-awareness. In “The Song of the Spinning-Woman” and “On the Rhine” the simple language and tone of the folksong is enriched by subtle imagery and intricate construction. In the poem “Spring Song” Brentano takes a medieval love lyric as the basis for a complex personal statement. His sensitivity to language is evident in the exploitation of sound, rhythm, and rhyme, for example, in “Nightingale” or in Radlauf’s song in “The Story of Miller Radlauf.”

It is perhaps in his poetry that Brentano expresses his most personal feelings. Erotic and religious sentiments are repeatedly interlinked, for example, in “Love’s Despair at Love” and “The Evening Breezes Blow,” reflecting his unceasing attempt to reconcile these two kinds of love and achieve sanctuary from isolation. The poem “A Servant’s Spring Cry from the Depths” is the anguished cry of a sinner for redemption.

Brentano’s work on The Boy’s Magic Horn and the folktale orientation of his own poetic creations indicate his profound interest in the common people and his genuine belief in the aesthetic stature of their art. “The Rose,” “The Minstrel,” and “The Chronicle of the Travelling Scholar” turn to the idealized simplicity of the middle ages to depict young and innocent men in harmony with God and nature. The naïvety is, however, studied. These works express the longing for innocence by the sinner, for simplicity by the sophisticate. In such works the self-conscious author adopts the mask of spontaneity, aware that this is a game. In the poem “On the Rhine” the mask is of a fisherman, dreaming of his dead lover. In the final stanza the third-person narrative voice reveals itself as a first-person lyrical self, expressing personal experience in the guise of objective report. In the poem “Lore Lay” the same device is employed in triplicate.

It is in this sense that art becomes understood as artificiality in Brentano’s work, reflected, for example, in the melancholy Johannes feels when comparing his mother’s song to that of the nightingale (representing nature and naturalness) in the poem “The Song of the Spinning-Woman,” in “The Chronicle of the Travelling Scholar,” and in the despair of the siren in the poem “Lore Lay,” whose evil magic is poetry itself. The poet’s alienation and his tragic yearning for lost innocence and harmony are articulated in the poems “Echoes of Beethoven’s Music” and “When the Crippled Weaver Dreams” which, like Godwi, exemplify modern aesthetic self-reflection.

In the novella Geschichte vom braven Kasperl und dem schönen Annerl (The Story of Just Caspar and Fair Annie), the contrast of naïve and self-aware is presented through the confrontation of a poet, torn by religious and poetic selfdoubt, with an old woman, a genuine folk figure secure in her beliefs, who weaves her personal experience quite unconsciously into an artistic tale. The poet as scribe to the natural folkpoet was the role Brentano wished for himself, but he never succeeded in eliminating subjectivity and self-consciousness from his work.

—Sheila J. Dickson

See the essay on The Story of Just Caspar and Fair Annie.

BRETON, André (Robert)

Born: Tinchebray, France, 19 February 1896. Education: Educated at Collège Chaptal, Paris, 1906–12; Faculté de Médecine, Paris, 1913–15. Military Service: Served as medical assistant in army psychiatric centres, 1915–19, and medical director of Ecole de Pilotage, Poitiers, 1939–40. Family: Married 1) Simone Kahn in 1921 (divorced); 2) Jacqueline Lamba in 1934 (divorced), one daughter; 3) Elisa Bindhoff in 1945. Career: Co-founding editor, with Louis Aragon q.v. and Philippe Soupault, Littérature, 1919–24; founded Bureau of Surrealist Research, 1924; editor, La Révolution Surréaliste, 1925–29, Le Surréalisme au Service de la Révolution, 1930–33, and Minotaure, 1933–39; joined the Communist Party, 1927; broadcaster, Voice of America, 1942–45; editor, VVV, 1942–44; director, Galerie à l’Étoile Scellée, 1952–54; editor, Le Surréalisme Mème, 1956–57. Organized exhibitions of Surrealist art from 1936. Died: 28 September 1966.

PUBLICATIONS

Collection

Oeuvres complètes [Pléiade Edition], edited by Marguerite Bonnet. 1988–.

Verse

- Mont de piété*. 1919.
Les Champs magnétiques, with Philippe Soupault. 1920; as The Magnetic Fields, translated by David Gascoyne, 1985.
Clair de terre. 1923; as Earthlight, translated by Bill Zavatsky and Zack Rogow, 1993.
Ralentir travaux, with René Char and Paul Éluard. 1930.
L'Union libre. 1931.
Le Revolver à cheveux blancs. 1932.
L'Air de l'eau. 1934.
Le Château étoilé. 1937.
Fata morgana. 1941; as Fata Morgana, translated by Clark Mills, 1969.
Les États-Généraux. 1943.
Pleine marge. 1943.
Young Cherry Trees Secured Against Hares, translated by Edouard Roditi. 1946.
Ode à Charles Fourier. 1947; as Ode to Charles Fourier, translated by Kenneth White, 1969.
Martinique charmeuse de serpents. 1948.
Poèmes. 1948.
Au regard des divinités. 1949.
Constellations. 1959.
Le là. 1961.
Selected Poems, translated by Kenneth White. 1969.
Poems (bilingual edition), translated by Jean-Pierre Cauvin and Mary Ann Caws. 1982.
Earthlight, translated by Bill Zavatsky and Zack Rogow. 1993.

Other

- Manifeste du surréalisme; Poisson soluble*. 1924, enlarged edition, 1929.
Les Pus perdus (essays). 1924; as The Lost Steps, translated by Mark Polizzotti, 1996.
Légitime défense. 1926.
Introduction au discours sur le peu de réalité. 1927.
Le Surréalisme et la peinture. 1928, enlarged edition, 1965; as Surrealism and Painting, translated by Simon Watson Taylor, 1972.
Nadja. 1928, revised edition, 1963; as Nadja, translated by Richard Howard, 1960.
Second manifeste du surréalisme. 1930.
L'Immaculée Conception, with Paul Éluard. 1930.
Misère de la poésie: "L'Affaire Aragon" devant l'opinion publique. 1932.
Les Vases communicants. 1932; as Communicating Vessels, translated by Mary Ann Caws and Geoffrey T. Harris, 1990.
Point du jour (essays). 1934, revised editions, 1970, 1992; as Break of Day, translated by Mark Polizzotti and Mary Ann Caws, 1999.
Qu'est-ce que le surréalisme? 1934; as What Is Surrealism?, translated by David Gascoyne, 1936.
Position politique du surréalisme. 1935.
Notes sur la poésie, with Paul Éluard. 1936.
L'Amour fou. 1937; as Mad Love, translated by Mary Ann Caws, 1987.
Arcane 17. 1944, enlarged edition, 1947; as Arcanum 17: With Apertures Grafted to the End, translated by Zack Rogow, 1994.
Situation du surréalisme entre les deux guerres. 1945.
Yves Tanguy (bilingual edition). 1946.

- Les Manifestes du surréalisme*. 1947, revised editions, 1955, 1962; complete edition, 1972; as Manifestations of Surrealism, translated by Richard Seaver and Helen R. Lane, 1969.
La Lampe dans l'horloge. 1948.
Flagrant délit: Rimbaud devant la conjuration de l'imposture et du truquage. 1949.
Entretiens 1913–1952. 1952, revised edition, 1973.
La Clé des champs (essays). 1953; as Free Rein, translated by Michel Parmentier and Jacqueline d'Amboise, 1995.
Toyen, with Jindrich Heisler and Benjamin Péret. 1953.
Adieu ne plaise. 1954.
Farouche à quatre feuilles, with others. 1954.
L'Art magique, with Gérard Legrand. 1957.
Pierre Moliner: Un film de Raymond Borde. 1964.
Perspective cavalière (essays), edited by Marguerite Bonnet. 1970.
Conversations: The Autobiography of Surrealism with André Parinaud, 1993.
The Automatic Message: The Magnetic Fields: The Immaculate Conception with Paul Éluard and Philippe Soupault, translated by David Gascoyne, Antony Melville and Jon Graham, 1997.
Editor, Trajectoire du rêve. 1938.
Editor, with Paul Éluard, Dictionnaire abrégé du surréalisme. 1938.
Editor, Anthologie de l'humour noir. 1940(?), enlarged edition, 1950; as Anthology of Black Humor, translated by Mark Polizzotti, 1997.

*

Bibliography: André Breton: A Bibliography by Michael Sheringham, 1972; André Breton: A Bibliography (1972–1989) by Elza Adamowicz, 1992.

Critical Studies: Surrealism and the Literary Imagination: A Study of Breton and Bachelard, 1966, The Poetry of Dada and Surrealism, 1970, and Breton, 1971, all by Mary Ann Caws; Breton, Arbiter of Surrealism by Clifford Browder, 1967; André Breton, Magus of Surrealism by Anna E. Balakian, 1971, and André Breton Today edited by Balakian and Rudolf E. Kuenzli, 1989; André Breton and the Basic Concepts of Surrealism by Michael Carrouges, translated by Maura Prendergast, 1974; Breton and the First Principles of Surrealism by Franklin Rosemont, 1978; Breton: "Nadja" by Roger Cardinal, 1986; André Breton: Sketch for an Early Portrait by J.H. Matthews, 1986; André Breton the Poet by Keith Aspley, 1989; Revolution of the Mind: The Life of André Breton by Mark Polizzotti, 1995; Issues of Otherness and Identity in the Works of Izquierdo, Kahlo, Artaud, and Breton by Gina McDaniel Tarver, 1996; André Breton by Mary Ann Caws, 1996; Literary Polemics: Bataille, Sartre, Valéry, Breton by Suzanne Guerlac, 1997.

* * *

Founder of the Surrealist movement, André Breton was one of the 20th century's great writers; his highly poetic prose, even more than his poems, bears witness to a magnetic power of language as the equivalent of thought.

Believing that we can remake the world by our imagination as it is activated by and through our words, Breton was able to persuade, by those words, a whole generation of thinkers and artists to pay attention to their inner gifts and intuitions as they could be seen not only to respond to the world outside but even to discover in that world "an answer to a question we were not conscious of having." By what he called the law of objective chance, it comes about that the inner and the outer experiences mingle in an ongoing constant communion he compared to the scientific experiment of Les Vases communicants (Communicating Vessels). Like the mingling of day and night, life and death, up and down, the two contraries are held in balance and provide the dynamism of the activated images which make over, for us, what we live by, “the unacceptable human condition.”

Surrealism is, then, by the vision of Breton, turned towards a positive future possibility; surrealist sight insists—with the Zen master Basho—that, instead of, for example, removing the wings from a dragonfly and calling it a red pepper, we add wings to the pepper to have it become that dragonfly. The attitude is characteristic of the entire movement, whose compartment Breton repeatedly defined as “lyric.”

In his own works, Breton stressed the overwhelming power and frightening effect of love L'Amour fou (Mad Love) as it participates in the irrational mystery of complete surprise. Walking amid the garbage peelings on the streets of the marketplace at midnight, wondering whether it is not too late to turn back, the narrator and the poet are one with the observer of that love itself, always to be kept as marvellous, safe from the “null and void moments” that go to make up an ordinary life.

Nadja, Breton's quite unordinary heroine, herself mad, is no more adapted to “real” life than were the alchemists, with whom Breton feels such a bond—they aimed at transmuting our own base metal into our highest or golden selves. The impulse towards the arcane (Arcane 17) in no way rules out an openness to the simple everyday things; nor does madness invalidate the love of the marvellous, that child-like expectation of the next moment, this disponibilité or openness to chance that infuses surrealist writing and thinking at its best.

Nor was Breton separated from dailiness: against the worst of it, he insisted that art had to maintain its own urgency, “for the problem is no longer, as it used to be, whether a canvas can hold its own in a wheat field, but whether it can stand up against the daily paper, open or closed, which is a jungle.” Art has to hold good against famine, against reality, and against what people have done and thought.

Surrealism, as Breton conceived it, was directed against habit and against the predictable: the famous experiments in automatic writing, made to unleash the dams of imagination as the Surrealist manifestos point out, provocatively, worked towards this end, as did the images in the poems, upsetting to “normal” ways of seeing. But always the style and the vision of Breton went far past the limits of any experiment, and worked together to—as he put it—“prevent the paths of desire from being overgrown.”

In a time of despair and uncaring, Breton may be read as resolutely turned towards what he perceived as just, with an ardour we know as genuine, and with a poetic temperament that is all too rare.

—Mary Ann Caws

See the essays on “Free Union,” Mad Love, and Ode to Charles Fourier.

BROCH, Hermann

Born: Vienna, Austria, 1 November 1886. Education: Educated privately, 1892–96; Imperial and Royal State Secondary School, Vienna, 1897–1904; Technical College for Textile Manufacture, Vienna, 1904–06; Spinning and Weaving College, Mülhausen, 1906–07. Military Service: Administrator for Austrian Red Cross during World War I. Family: Married 1) Franziska von Rothermann in 1909 (divorced 1923), one son; 2) AnneMarie Meier-Gräfe in 1949. Career: Managed family's factory in Teesdorf, 1907–27; reviewer, Moderne Welt, Vienna, 1919; studied mathematics, philosophy, and psychology, Vienna University, 1926–30; then writer; arrested by the Nazis and detained briefly, 1938; moved to London, 1938; then settled in the United States; involved in refugee work, from 1940; became American citizen, 1944; fellow, Saybrook College, Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, 1949. Awards: Guggenheim fellowship, 1941. Member: American Academy, 1942. Died: 30 May 1951.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Gesammelte Werke, edited by Felix Stössinger and others. 10 vols., 1953–61.

Kommentierte Werkausgabe, edited by Paul Michael Lützeler. 13 vols., 1976–86.

Fiction

Die Schlafwandler: Ein Romantrilogie. 1952; as The Sleepwalkers: A Trilogy, translated by Edwin and Willa Muir, 1932.

Pasenow; oder, Die Romantik—1888. 1931; as The Romantic, translated by Willa Muir and Edwin Muir, 2000.

Esch; oder, Die Anarchie—1903. 1931.

Hugenau; oder, Die Sachlichkeit—1918. 1932.

Die unbekannt Grösse. 1933; as The Unknown Quantity, translated by Edwin and Willa Muir, 1935.

Der Tod des Vergil. 1945; as The Death of Virgil, translated by Jean Starr Untermeyer, 1945.

Die Schuldlosen. 1950; as The Guiltless, translated by Ralph Manheim, 1974.

Der Versucher, edited by Felix Stössinger. In Gesammelte Werke, 4, 1953.

Der Bergroman, edited by Frank Kress and Hans Albert Maier. 4 vols., 1969.

Barbara und andere Novellen, edited by Paul Michael Lützeler. 1973. Die Verzauberung, edited by Paul Michael Lützeler, 1976; as The Spell, translated by H.F. Broch de Rothermann. 1987.

Plays

Die Entsöhnung (produced 1934).

Aus der Luft gegriffen; oder, die Geschäfte des Baron Laborde (produced 1981).

Other

Zur Universitätsreform, edited by Götz Wienold. 1969.

Gedanken zur Politik, edited by Dieter Hildebrand. 1970.

Briefwechsel 1930–1951, with Daniel Brody, edited by Bertold Hack and Marietta Kleiss. 1971.

Völkerbund-Resolution, edited by Paul Michael Lützeler. 1973.

Hofmannsthal und seine Zeit: Eine Studie. 1974; as Hugo von Hofmannsthal and His Time: The European Imagination 1860–1920, edited and translated by Michael P. Steinberg, 1984. Menschenrecht und Demokratie: Politische Schriften, edited by Paul Michael Lützeler. 1978. Briefe über Deutschland, 1945–1949: Die Korrespondenz mit Volkmar von Zühlsdorff, edited by Paul Michael Lützeler. 1986.

*

Critical Studies: Broch by Theodore Ziolkowski, 1964; The Sleepwalkers: Elucidations of Broch's Trilogy by Dorrit C. Cohn, 1966; The Novels of Hermann Broch by Malcolm R. Simpson, 1977; Hermann Broch by Ernestine Schlant, 1978; Hermann Broch: Eine Biographie by Paul Michael Lützeler, 1985, translated by Janice Furness, 1987; Sprache und Metaphorik in Hermann Broch's Roman Der Tod des Vergil by Barbara Lube, 1986; Sympathy for the Abyss: A Study in the Novel of German Modernism: Kafka, Broch, Musil, and Thomas Mann by Stephen D. Dowden, 1986, and Broch: Literature, Philosophy, Politics edited by Dowden, 1988; Hermann Broch by Rudolf Koester, 1987; Culture and Catastrophe: German and Jewish Confrontations with National Socialism and Other Crises by Steven E. Aschheim, 1996; The Problem of Autonomy in the Works of Hermann Broch by Robert Halsall, 2000.

* * *

At the age of 42, Hermann Broch gave up a distinguished career in industry to devote himself to writing. His first major work, the trilogy Die Schlafwandler (The Sleepwalkers), is set in Germany between 1880 and 1918. It depicts a society in crisis: the old social and political order is breaking up, traditional ethical and religious tenets are being challenged. People, left without moral guidance, seem like sleepwalkers, only dimly aware of their course of action.

The first novel of the trilogy, Pasenuow; oder, Die Romantik—1888 [The Romantic], portrays the symptoms of decline among the aristocracy; in the second part, Esch; oder, Die Anarchie—1903 [The Anarchist], a bookkeeper, failing in his search for justice, turns against society. The last novel, Hugenau; oder, Die Sachlichkeit—1918 [The Realist], set during the revolution of 1918, shows how the total disregard for moral values leads to betrayal and murder.

In the course of writing, Broch began to experiment with new modes of narration. His essay “James Joyce und die Gegenwart” [“James Joyce and the Present”] (1936) is a tribute to Joyce and to the modern novel in general. It also reveals much about Broch's own thoughts about art. He rejects the purely aesthetic point of view as “Kitsch,” arguing that as science promotes man's material well-being, art should set standards for his ethical conduct. The main theme of Broch's works is a plea for a re-evaluation of moral values without which he thought the political and social decay of modern society could not be prevented.

Besides being a prolific essayist, Broch wrote plays and poems which, however, do not seem to measure up to his accomplishments as a novelist.

In the light of Broch's earlier dedication to modern narrative techniques, his next major work, Der Bergroman (which went through three versions), marked a surprise return to the traditional form of the novel. The narrator is an old country doctor who witnesses with horror and some fascination how a charlatan is able to gain, at least for a short time, control over the minds of his villagers.

Der Tod des Vergil (The Death of Virgil), considered by many critics to be Broch's greatest achievement, depicts in the form of inner monologue Virgil's visions and dreams during the last 18 hours before his death.

Broch's last work, the short story cycle Die Schuldlosen (The Guiltless), is essentially a reworking of earlier published material. The Death of Virgil, therefore, remains, as Broch had wished it to be, his true farewell as a writer.

—Helena Szépe

See the essays on The Death of Virgil and The Sleepwalkers.

BRODSKII, Iosif (Aleksandrovich)

Also known as Joseph Brodsky. Born: Leningrad, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, 24 May 1940; emigrated to the United States in 1972, naturalized 1977. Education: Educated at schools in Leningrad to age 15. Family: Married; one son and one daughter. Career: Convicted as a “social parasite” in 1964 and served 20 months of a five-year sentence of hard labour in the far north; later exiled by the Soviet government; poet-in-residence and special lecturer, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, 1972–73, 1974–80; has taught at Queen's College, City University of New York, Columbia University, New York, New York University, Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts, Amherst College, Massachusetts, and Hampshire College. Andrew W. Mellon Professor of literature, Mount Holyoke College, South Hadley, Massachusetts, 1990–96. Awards: Guggenheim fellowship; MacArthur fellowship; Mondello prize (Italy), 1979; National Book Critics' Circle award, 1987; Nobel prize for literature, 1987; Légion d'honneur (France), 1991. D.Litt.: Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, 1978; Oxford University, 1991. United States Poet Laureate, 1991–92. Member: American Academy of Arts and Letters; resigned in 1987 to protest against Evgenii Evtushenko, q.v., being made an honorary member; corresponding member, Bavarian Academy of Sciences. Died: Of heart failure, 28 January 1996, in Brooklyn Heights, New York.

PUBLICATIONS

Verse

Stikhotvoreniia i poemy [Poems and Narrative Verse]. 1965.

Elegy to John Donne and Other Poems, edited and translated by Nicholas Bethell. 1967.

Ostanovka v pustyne [A Halt in the Wilderness]. 1970; corrected edition, 1988.

Selected Poems, translated by George L. Kline. 1973.

Debut, translated by Carl R. Proffer. 1973.

The Funeral of Bobo, translated by Richard Wilbur. 1974.

Three Slavic Poets, with Tymoteusz Karpowicz and Djordje Nikolic, edited by John Rezek. 1975.

Konets prekrasnoi epokhi: Stikhotvoreniia 1964–1971 [The End of the Belle Epoque: Poetry]. 1977.

Chast' rechi: Stikhotvoreniia 1972–1976 [A Part of Speech: Poetry]. 1977.
V Anglii [In England]. 1977.
A Part of Speech, translated by Anthony Hecht and others. 1980.
Verses on the Winter Campaign 1980, translated by Alan Meyers. 1981.
Rimskie elegii [Roman Elegies]. 1982.
Novye stasy k Avguste: Stikhi k M.B. 1962–1982 [New Stanzas to Augusta: Poems to M.B.]. 1983.
Urania [Urania]. 1987.
To Urania: Selected Poems 1965–1985, translated by Brodskii and others. 1988.
Primechaniia paporotnika [A Fern's Commentary]. 1990.
Osenii krik iastreba [The Hawk's Cry in Autumn]. 1990.
Stikhotvoreniia [Poetry]. 1990.
Chast' rechi: Izbrannye stikhi 1962–1989 [A Part of Speech: Selected Poems]. 1990.
Nazidanie [Edification]. 1990.
Pis'ma rimskomu drugu [Letters to a Roman Friend]. 1991.
Kholmy: bol'shie stikhotvoreniia i poemy [Hills: Poetry and Narrative Verse]. 1991.
Rozhdestvenskie stikhi [Christmas Poems]. 1992.
Forma vremeni [The Form of Time] (vol. 2 includes essays and plays). 2 vols., 1992.
Kappadokia: stikhi [Cappadocia: Poems]. 1993.
Izbrannoe [Selected Poems]. 1993.
Izbrannye stikhotvoreniia [Selected Poetry]. 1994.
Persian Arrow, with etchings by Edik Steinberg, 1994.
So Forth: Poems, 1996.
Collected Poems in English, edited by Ann Kjellberg, 2000.

Plays

Mramor. 1984; as Marbles: A Play in Three Acts, translated by Alan Myers, 1989.
Demokratiia!/Démocratie!, translated by Véronique Schiltz (bilingual edition in Russian and French). 1990; translated as Democracy, 1990.

Other

Less than One: Selected Essays (in English). 1986.
The Nobel Lecture. 1988.
Razmerom podlinnika [In the Metre of the Original] (essays; includes essays by others about Brodskii's work). 1990.
Ballada o malen'kom buksire: detskie stikhi [Ballad about a Small Tugboat: Children's Poems]. 1991.
Bog sokhraniaet vse: stikhi i perevody [God Preserves All: Poems and Translations]. 1992.
Watermark. 1992.
Vspominaia Akhmatovu [Remembering Akhmatova] (interview), with Solomon Volkov. 1992.
Sochineniia [Works]. 4 vols., 1992–95.
On Grief and Reason: Essays, 1995
Conversations with Joseph Brodsky: A Poet's Journey Through the Twentieth Century by Solomon Volkov, translated by Marian Schwartz, 1998.
Portrait of the Poet: 1978–1996: Joseph Brodsky by Marianna Volkova, 1998.

Editor, with Carl R. Proffer, Modern Russian Poets on Poetry: Blok, Mandelstam, Pasternak, Mayakovsky, Gumilev, Tsvetaeva. 1982.
 Editor, An Age Ago: A Selection of Nineteenth-Century Russian Poetry. 1988.

*

Bibliography: by George L. Kline, in Ten Bibliographies of Twentieth Century Russian Literature, 1977; in Joseph Brodsky: A Poet for Our Time by Valentina Polukhina, 1989.

Critical Studies: "A Struggle against Suffocation" by Czeslaw Miłosz, in New York Review of Books, 14 August 1980; Joseph Brodsky: A Poet for Our Time, 1989, and Brodsky Through the Eyes of His Contemporaries, 1992, both by Valentina Polukhina, and Joseph Brodsky's Poetics and Aesthetics edited by Polukhina and Lev Loseff, 1990; Joseph Brodsky and the Creation of Exile by David M. Bethea, 1994; The Poet as Traveler by Alice J. Speh, 1996; Joseph Brodsky and the Baroque by David MacFadyen, 1998; Joseph Brodsky: The Art of the Poem, edited by Lev Loseff and Valentina Polukhina, 1999; Styles of Ruin: Joseph Brodsky and the Postmodernist Elegy by David Rigsbee, 1999; Joseph Brodsky and the Soviet Muse by David MacFadyen, 2000.

* * *

Iosif Brodskii seems to be condemned to success not only by his enormous talent and his desire "to go always for a greater thought," but also by the attention of the state. On the latter, Anna Akhmatova commented: "What a biography they're fashioning for our red-haired friend! It's as if he'd hired them to do it on purpose." On the basis of the former she declared him a genius after he read his "Bol'shaia elegiia. Dzhonu Donnu" ("Great Elegy to John Donne") to her in 1963 and endorsed him as the heir of Mandel'shtam. It looks as if he justified her judgement by becoming, in 1987, the youngest ever poet to receive the Nobel prize for literature. His unique position in Russian literature is underlined by the fact that as a poet, essayist, and playwright he is widely known and read in the English-speaking world: in May 1991 he was appointed as Poet Laureate of the United States. His complex cultural inheritance includes the Latin and English Metaphysical poets, Derzhavin and Tsvetaeva, Frost and Auden. He also learned a great deal from classical music.

Right from the start he struck a searingly tragic note in his poetry that set him apart from the work of his contemporaries. His first collection of poetry, Stikhotvoreniia i poemy [Poetry and Narrative Verse], was published in the United States while he was still in his northern exile. It reveals him as a lyrical and melancholic ironist brimming with understatement. It was followed by his second book, Ostanovka v pustyne [A Halt in the Wilderness]. The vulgarity of the human heart is his greatest enemy and a target for his art: "I'm trying to see how inhuman you can become and still remain a human being." His superiority lies, however, not so much in the subject matter as in its treatment. His main concern has always been to write better. He experiments with various poetic genres—descriptive poems, odes, elegies, and sonnets—by introducing new and provocative elements in their structure, prosody, and syntax. It is on the level of syntax, of this "circulatory system of poetry" (Mandel'shtam) which can so easily be struck by sclerosis, that Brodskii's innovations are especially significant. He used ellipses, short nominative phrases alternating with cumbersome periods, which occupy an entire stanza. In his extensive use of enjambment, which allows the renovation of Russian rhymes, he took after Tsvetaeva, another metaphysical maximalist. If he did not aim to surpass her, he moved in that direction: like Tsvetaeva he was a poet of ultimate truth, and as with Tsvetaeva all his devices display the unity of ethics and aesthetics, craftsmanship and humility. Unlike her, he was always restrained both in his grief and in his joy. His was the style of coolness, of irony with an air of reserve.

With the physical journey away from his native city, Brodskii began his anti-lyrical journey. In the poetry he published after he was forced into exile, the stylistic vector was clearly directed towards abstraction, rationalism, and even greater tonal neutrality. To use Coleridge's expression, Brodskii did not operate under the "despotism of the eye," but under that of reason. What made his poetry so semantically saturated was his intense thought. Trying to re-examine traditional conceptions of good and evil, he forced his poetry to discuss the "accursed" questions in the context of the post-Christian situation. In changing his angle of vision, intensifying his focus, Brodskii carried on from where Dostoevskii, Berdiaev, and Shestov left off. Like these predecessors, he was not afraid to admit aloud: "Here is one more/combo of numbers/that hasn't opened the door." Brodskii did for Russian poetry what Dostoevskii did for Russian prose: he stripped it of naïveté and innocence.

The greatest compensation for all the losses of 1972 was the meeting with W.H. Auden. Their meeting is commemorated in the poem "York" in the cycle of poems dedicated to England (in his collection Uranii [Urania]). Here Brodskii clearly orientated himself towards the Auden text, in which landscape is used for meditating on death, love, and poetry. The elegy's deliberate prosaic quality was supported by excess of enjambments that were motivated by one of the themes of the elegy, the theme of death. He learned from Auden the poetic qualities he admired most: intellectual wit, unpredictability of plot, dry tone, and the sense of perspective. He was captivated by English poetry from youth, and this lasting love affair brought something qualitatively new to Russian poetry: he adjusted some aspects of Russian prosody, introduced an unusually restrained tone to his poems, and to a quite incredible extent widened the harmonic range in Russian poetic tradition.

For the English reader Brodskii's greatness was made clear by his prose more than by his poetry. His collection of essays, Less than One, won the United States National Book Critics' award for criticism in 1987. It is the best introduction to Brodskii's poetry because most of his essays have "borrowed the clothes of poetry itself" or, to use Brodskii's own words, they are "nothing but continuation of poetry by other means." This book includes his historical and culturological musings, homages to his favourite poets (Cavafy, Montale, Auden, Walcott, Akhmatova, Mandel'shtam, Tsvetaeva) and writers (Dostoevskii, Platonov, Nadezhda Mandel'shtam), and a personal memoir. Broad in scope, they stress the unity of European culture.

Critics are more ambiguous about Brodskii the playwright. His first play, Mramor (Marbles), was a philosophical dialogue between two prisoners in a luxury cell in Rome which is part ancient and part futuristic. This ironic journey to antiquity is a variation on some of Brodskii's main themes: empire, time, and the fate of culture in the post-Christian civilization. Here Brodskii also deals with the "after end" theme which he touched upon in many of his poems—after the end of love, after the end of life in Russia, after the end of Christianity. Furthermore, the play echoed his two masterpieces: a long poem dialogue, "Gorbunov i Gorchakov" (1965–68), a reflection on his own experience in the Soviet prison, and Rimskie elegii [Roman Elegies], a brilliant succession of snapshots of the city in August where one "runs the risk of being turned to stone" (George Nivat). Brodskii's second play, Demokratii! (Democracy), is a humorous musing on the collapse of communism in the Soviet Union. In both plays, with a certain dose of puns, paradox, and irony, Brodskii doesn't quite succeed in creating effective stage characters.

But, whatever Brodskii writes, his readers are aware of his relentless thinking on the grand scale. Finding himself outside his own culture, Brodskii continued to serve it by introducing to Russian culture an entirely different sensibility. Trying to get rid of its sentimentality, Brodskii encountered all kinds of fierce resistance and criticism. At the same time his universality earned him comparison with Pushkin himself. No Russian poet could ask for more.

—Valentina Polukhina

See the essay on A Part of Speech.

BRODSKY, Joseph

See BRODSKII, Iosif

BROSSARD, Nicole

Born: Montreal, Quebec, 27 November 1943. Education: Attended Collège Marguerite-Bourgeoys, 1955–60; Université de Montreal, B.A. 1965, Licence en lettres, 1968, Scolarité de maîtrise en lettres, 1972; Université du Québec à Montreal, Baccalaureate spécialisé en pédagogie, 1971. Family: Married Roger Soublière, 1966 (divorced); one daughter. Career: Poet and novelist. Worked as a secretary, 1961–63; began publishing poetry and cofounded influential literary journal La Barre du Jour, 1965; organized jazz and poetry shows at the Pavilion de la jeunesse at Montreal's Expo 67, 1967; taught high school, Regina Mundi School, Ville Saint-Laurent, 1969–70 and 1971–72; codirected the film Some American Feminists, 1976; cofounded feminist journal Les Têtes de pioche, 1976–79; codirector La Nouvelle Barre du Jour, 1977–79; codirector of Collections réelles, 1979–81; founded and directed publishing house L'Intégrale, 1982; visiting professor at Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, 1982, 1984; short term fellow, Princeton University, New Jersey, 1991; organized and participated in numerous conferences, colloquiums, and festivals. Lives in Quebec, Canada. Awards: Governor General's award for Mecanique jongleuse, 1975; Governor General's award for Double Impression, 1984; Le Grand Prix de Poesie de la Fondation Les Forges, 1989; Le prix Athanase-David, 1991; Prix du Québec, 1991; The Harbourfront Festival Prize, 1991. Honorary doctorate: l'Université de Sherbrooke, 1997.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Le Centre blanc: poèmes 1965–75. 1978.

Double Impression: Poèmes et textes 1967–1984. 1985.

Verse

- Aube a la saison*. 1965.
Mordre en sa chair. 1966.
L'Echo bouge beau. 1968.
Suite logique. 1970.
Le Centre blanc. 1970.
Mecanique jongleuse. 1973; as Daydream Mechanics, translated by Larry Shouldice, 1980.
Mecanique jongleuse; Masculin grammaticale. 1974.
La Partie pour le tout. 1975.
D'Arcs de cycle la derive. 1979.
Amantes, Quinze. 1980; as Lovhers, translated by Barbara Godard, 1986.
L'Aviva. 1985.
Mauve, with Daphne Marlatt. 1985.
Domaine d'écriture. 1985.
Character/Jeu de lettres, with Daphne Marlatt. 1986.
Sous la langue/Under the Tongue, translation by Susanne de Lotbiniere-Harwood. 1987.
A tout regard, with Daphne Marlatt. 1989.
Installations: avec et sans pronoms. 1989; as Installations, translated by Erin Mouré and Robert Mejtels, 2000.
Langues obscures. 1992.
Typhon dru. 1990.
La Nuit Verte du Parc Labyrinthe. 1992; as Green Night of Labyrinth Park, translated by Lou Nelson and Marina Fe, 1992.
Vertige de l'avant scène. 1997.
Raddle Moon 17. 1998.
Musée de l'os et de l'eau. 1999.
Au présent des veines. 1999.
Installations. 2000.

Fiction

- Un Livre*. 1970; as A Book, translated by Larry Shouldice, 1976.
Sold-out: Etreinte/illustration. 1973; as Turn of a Pang, translated by Patricia Claxton, 1976.
French Kiss: Etreinte/exploration. 1974; as French Kiss; or, A Pang's Progress, translated by Patricia Claxton, 1986.
Picture Theory. 1982; translated by Barbara Godard, 1991.
Le Desert mauve. 1987; as Mauve Desert, translated by Susanne de Lotbiniere-Harwood, 1990.
Baroque d'aube: roman. 1995; as Baroque at Dawn, translated by Patricia Claxton, 1997.
Elle serait la première phrase de mon prochain roman. 1998; as She Would Be the First Sentence of My Next Novel, translated by Susanne de Lotbiniere-Harwood, 1998.

Essays

- L'Amer ou, Le Chapitre effrite: Fiction theorique*. 1977; revised, 1988; as These Our Mothers; or, The Disintegrating Chapter, translated by Barbara Godard, 1983.
Le Sens apparent. 1980; as Surfaces of Meaning, translated by Fiona Strachan, 1989.
La Lettre aerienne. 1985; as The Aerial Letter, translated by Marlene Wilderman, 1988.

Plays

- Narrateur et personnages*. First aired by Radio Canada, 1971.
L'Ecrivain (produced 1976). In La Nef des sorcieres, 1976; as The Writer, translated by Linda Gaborian, in A Clash of Symbols, 1979.
Une Impression de fiction dans le retroviseur (produced 1978).
Journal intimes; ou, Voila donc un manuscrit (produced, 1983). 1984.
La Falaise (produced 1985).

Other

- Contributor, Emergence d'une culture au feminin. 1987.
 Editor, The Story so Far: Les Strategies du reel (anthology). 1979.
 Editor with Lisette Girouard, Anthologie de la poesie des femmes au Quebec. 1991.

*

Critical Studies: "La Passion De La Beauté: Entretien avec Nicole Brossard," by Cépald Gaudet, in Lettres québécoise, no. 57, Spring 1990; Discoveries of the Other: Alterity in the Work of Leonard Cohen, Hubert Aquin, Michael Ondaatje, and Nicole Brossard by Winfried Siemerling, 1994; "From Lesbos to Montreal: Nicole Brossard's Urban Fictions" by Lynne Huffer, in Yale French Studies, no. 90, 1996; "Region/Body: In? Of? And? Or? (Alter/native) Separatism in the Politics of Nicole Brossard" by Kimberly Verwaayen, in Essays on Canadian Writing, no. 61, Spring 1997; Liminal Visions of Nicole Brossard by Alice Parker, 1998; "Nothing Sacred: Nicole Brossard's Baroque at Dawn at the Limits of Lesbian Feminist Discourses of Sexuality" by Lianne Moyes, in Essays on Canadian Writing, no. 70, Spring 2000; Narrative in the Feminine: Daphne Marlatt and Nicole Brossard, by Susan Knutson, 2000; "Delirium and Desire in Nicole Brossard's Le Desert Mauve/Mauve Desert" by Susan Holbrook, in Differences, 12, no. 2, Summer 2001.

* * *

One of Quebec's foremost writers, Nicole Brossard is an innovative lesbian-feminist poet and novelist who began publishing her writing during the early days of the modern feminist movement. Early in the women's liberation movement of the late 1960s and 1970s, feminists began to question the masculine assumptions they felt were present in everyday language. As a poet who grew up in a French-speaking province of a largely English-speaking nation, Brossard had become fascinated with language and the way language shapes perception and experience. These interests meshed well with developing feminist philosophy, and Brossard's experiments with language made her a very influential feminist writer.

In La Lettre aerienne (The Aerial Letter), Brossard writes, "I think the wild love between two women is so totally inconceivable that to talk or write that in all its dimension, one almost has to rethink the world, to understand what it is that happens to us. And we can rethink the world only through words." A major element of early feminist thought was the idea that most language had been developed under patriarchy, or the rule of men. A new feminist literature would require more than simply replacing the hero with a heroine. Expressing the lives and experiences of women would require a new language, and that language would be developed by women themselves. Much of Brossard's work has been devoted to developing a language that expresses the experience and inner landscape of women and lesbians.

Brossard is also considered an important post-modernist writer. As such, she combines classical elements of the past with technologies of the present to present a complex point of view that encompasses both past and present. Her multi-layered writing style has been called baroque after a seventeenth century fashion of elaborate ornamentation, but it also includes elements from such twenty-first century fields as internet communication, holography, quantum physics, and atomic weaponry. In her 1998 work Elle serait la première phrase de mon prochain roman (She Would Be the First Sentence of My Next Novel), Brossard describes herself:

I'm a woman of the present fascinated by the history that enters into the composition of the words with which each generation bears witness to its anguish, invents its hope, modifies the collective tale. I am interested in what confines each generation inside themes, metaphors, theoretical and stylistic attitudes. I imagine the passion of the language that is allowed to escape from this. The turbulence that cracks open history.

Though Brossard writes poetry, novels, plays and essays, she is most consistently a poet, deeply interested in and motivated by language and words. She approaches every genre with a poet's consciousness, giving great attention to the play, motion, and juxtaposition of words. Her writing is always dense and layered with meaning, challenging the reader to explore the limitations and possibilities of language. As a Quebecoise, she essentially grew up in a country within a country, surrounded by French, English, and Joul, the working class Quebecois dialect that is almost a hybrid of French and English. Therefore the notion of translation became an integral part of Brossard's work, denoting not only translation from one language to another but also translation of one person's experience to another and the translation of experience and thought to the written page. Much of her writing is devoted to the exploration of what is lost and what is gained through translation.

Brossard is also deeply interested in the creative process. The complexity of translation shows up clearly in her novels and her books of essays exploring the many facets of the artist's experience. Her 1987 novel, Le Desert Mauve (Mauve Desert), is at its core an examination of the writer's creative process. A novel within a novel, Mauve Desert begins with a short novel written by fifteen-year-old Melanie, who lives in the southwestern United States. Melanie writes of her love of driving at high speed over the highways of her desert home and her obsession with a woman who died as a result of the atomic bomb tests there. Her novel is found by an older woman writer, who in turn becomes obsessed with expanding and re-imagining Melanie's vision. She then translates the young woman's novel, not into another language, but into another vision, titled Mauve, l'horizon.

Mauve Desert is, like much of Brossard's work, a blend of poetry, fiction, and theory. In other works as well, she approaches the idea of the artist's attempt to communicate experience. Baroque d'aube (Baroque at Dawn) also describes this creation process. Using vibrant imagery and wordplay, Brossard tells the story of three women, a writer, a photographer and an oceanographer, who combine energies to create a symbolic representation of the sea. She Would Be the First Sentence of My Next Novel is an autobiographical, confessional essay about being a novelist and how a novelist sees the world and translates that vision to the page.

Though Brossard is a demanding writer who challenges the reader to leave behind old forms and assumptions, her complexity is never somber or dreary. In Picture Theory she leaves behind the traditional (and, in her view, patriarchal) linear narrative and uses an unconventional experimental narrative form that some critics have called "holographic hyperfiction." She manipulates language playfully and erotically to convey feelings as well as ideas, as in: "Responding to certain signs, with complete fluidity, our bodies interlaced n'urged to fuse in astonishment or fascination."

Brossard's work, with its focus on the constant creation of new language to describe and communicate new experience, continues to fascinate and inspire readers into a new millennium. Reading Brossard is not a passive experience, for she demands a questioning, flexible reader, who will conspire with her in the creative process. Perhaps the best example of this is media artist Adriene Jenek, who read Le Desert Mauve and became so inspired by it, that, in 1992, she created an appropriate companion work, an interactive CD-ROM titled Mauve Desert.

—Tina Gianoulis

BRUNO, Giordano

Born: Filippo Bruno, in Nola, Kingdom of Naples, in January or February 1548. Education: Studied theology, 1572–75; taught and studied (degree in theology), University of Toulouse, 1579–81. Career: Admitted as a novice to the Dominican monastery of San Domenico Maggiore, 1565, assumed the monastic name Giordano; lived in various priories in the Kingdom of Naples, 1565–76; left Naples after charges of heresy were levelled against him by the Inquisition, 1576, and spent 15 years travelling in Europe: travelled through the northern Italian states, Savoy and Lyon, 1577–79, before arriving in Geneva, where he was briefly a follower of Calvinism; reached Paris, 1581, found favour with Henri III, who awarded him a lectureship, and first published his writings, 1582; accompanied French ambassador to England, lectured briefly at Oxford University, and lived in London, 1583–85, published prolifically and frequented the court of Elizabeth I (and was associated with Sir Philip Sidney and Robert Dudley); returned to Paris, 1586; moved to Marburg, 1586; lectured at the University of Wittenberg, 1586–88, and converted to Lutheranism; visited Prague, 1589, and Helmstädt; lectured in Frankfurt, 1590–91; returned to Venice, 1591, and lived in the household of Giovanni Mocenigo; denounced to the Inquisition by Mocenigo, 1592: on trial in Venice, 1593, and in Rome, 1593–1600, found guilty of heresy. Died: (burned at the stake) 17 February 1600.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Opere italiane. 2 vols., 1830; edited by P. de Lagarde, 2 vols., 1888; edited by Giovanni Gentile and Vincenzo Spampinato, 3 vols., 1925–1927.

Opera latine conscripta publicis sumptis edita, edited by F. Fiorentino, Felice Tocco, and G. Vitelli. 3 vols., 1879–91; reprinted 1962.

Le opere latine esposte e confrontate con le italiane, edited by Felice Tocco. 1889.

Scritti scelti, edited by Luigi Firpo. 1950.

Opere, edited by A. Guzzo and Romano Amerio. 1953.

Opera Latine, edited by Carlo Monti. 1980.

Prose

De umbris idearum (includes Ars memoriae). 1582.

Cantus Circaeus. 1582.

De compendiosa architectura et complemento artis Lullii. 1582.

Ars reminiscendi; Explicatio triginta sigillorum; Sigillus sigillorum. 1583.

La cena delle ceneri. 1584; edited by Giovanni Aquilecchia, 1955; as The Ash Wednesday Supper, translated by Stanley L. Jaki, 1965; also translated by E.A. Gosselin and L.S. Lerner, 1977.

De la Causa, Principio et Uno. 1584; edited by A. Guzzo, 1933, and by Giovanni Aquilecchia, 1973; as Concerning the Cause, Principle and One, translated by D.W. Singer, in The Infinite in Giordano Bruno, by Sidney T. Greenberg, 1950; as Five Dialogues by Giordano Bruno: Cause, Principle and Unity, translated by Jack Lindsay, 1962; second dialogue translated by I. and K. Royce, in Rand's Modern Classical Philosophies, 1908; as Cause, Principle, and Unity, translated and edited by Robert de Lucca, 1998.

De l'Infinito Universo et Mondi. 1584; as On the Infinite Universe and Worlds, translated by D.W. Singer, in Giordano Bruno: His Life and Thought, 1950.

Lo spaccio de la bestia trionfante. 1584; as The Expulsion of the Triumphant Beast, translated by W. Morehead, 1713; also translated by Arthur D. Imerti, 1964.

La cabala del cavallo pegaseo. 1584.

L'asino cillenico del Nolano. 1584.

De gli eroici furori. 1585; as The Heroic Enthusiasts, translated (first part only) by L. Williams, 2 vols., 1887–89; as The Heroic Frenzies, translated by Paul E. Memmo, 1964.

Dialogi duo de Fabricii Mordentis Salernitani. 1586.

Idiota triumphans; De somnii interpretatione; Dialogi duo de Fabricii Mordentis Salernitani. 1586.

Centum et viginti articuli de natura et mundo adversus peripateticos. 1586.

De lampade combinatoria Lulliana. 1587; translated in part by J. Lewis McIntyre, in Giordano Bruno, 1903.

De progressu et lampade venatoria logicorum. 1587.

De specierum scrutinio et lampade combinatoria Raymondii Lullii Doctoris. 1588.

Camoeracensis acrotismus. 1588.

Articuli centum et sexaginta adversus huius tempestatis mathematicos atque philosophos. 1588.

Summa terminorum metaphysicorum ad capessendum logicae et philosophiae studium. 1595; edited by Eugenio Canone, 1979.

In tristitia hilaris, in hilaritate tristis, edited by E. Troilo. 1922.

Documenti della vita di Giordano Bruno, edited by Vincenzo Spampanato. 1933.

Due dialoghi sconosciuti e due dialoghi noti: Idiota triumphans; De somnii interpretatione; Mordentius; De Mordentii Circino, edited by Giovanni Aquilecchia. 1957.

Dialoghi italiani: Dialoghi metafisici e Dialoghi morali, edited by Giovanni Aquilecchia and Giovanni Gentile. 1958.

Praelectiones geometricae e ars deformationum: Testi inediti, edited by Giovanni Aquilecchia. 1964.

Verse

De monade, numero et figura libea consequens quinque de minimo magno. Menura. 1591.

De innumerabilibus, immenso et infigurabilii seu de universo et mundis. 1591.

De triplici minimo et mensura ad trium speculativarum scientiarum et multarum activarum artium principia. 1591.

De imaginum, signorum, et idearum compositione. 1591; as On the Composition of Images, Signs and Ideas, translated by Dick Higgins, 1991.

Plays

Il Candelaiio. 1582; edited by Vincenzo Spampanato, 1923, and by G. Barbieri Squarotti, 1964; as The Candle Bearer, translated by J.R. Hale, in The Genius of the Italian Theater, edited by Eric Bentley, 1964; as Candlebearer, translated with notes by Gino Moliterno, 2000.

*

Bibliography: Bibliografia delle opere di Giordano Bruno e degli scritti a esso attinenti by Virgilio Salvestrini, 1926; revised edition, as Bibliografia di Giordano Bruno (1582–1950), by Luigi Firpo, 1958.

Critical Studies: Life of Giordano Bruno by J. Frith, 1887; Giordano Bruno by J. Lewis McIntyre, 1903; La filosofia di Giordano Bruno by E. Troilo, 1907; Giordano Bruno, His Life, Thought and Martyrdom by W. Boulting, 1914; Giordano Bruno e il pensiero del Rinascimento by Giovanni Gentile, 1920, revised edition, 1925; Vita di Giordano Bruno con documenti editi ed inediti by Vincenzo Spampanato, 1921; Giordano Bruno by L. Olschki, 1927; Il pensiero di Giordano Bruno nel suo svolgimento by A. Corsano, 1940; Il processo di Giordano Bruno by Luigi Firpo, 1949; The Infinite in Giordano Bruno by Sidney T. Greenberg, 1950; Giordano Bruno: His Life and Thought by D.W. Singer, 1950; The Renaissance Philosophy of Giordano Bruno by I.L. Horowitz, 1952; La filosofia di Giordano Bruno by N. Badolini, 1955; From the Closed World to the Infinite Universe by A. Koyré, 1957; The Individual and the Cosmos in Renaissance Philosophy by E. Cassirer, 1963; Eight Philosophers of the Italian Renaissance by O. Kristeller, 1964; Giordano Bruno and the Hermetic Tradition, 1964, The Art of Memory, 1966, and Lull and Bruno, 1982, all by Frances A. Yates; Giordano Bruno by E. Garin, 1966; The Infinite Worlds of Giordano Bruno by A. Mann Paterson, 1970; Giordano Bruno by Giovanni Aquilecchia, 1971; La ruota del tempo: interpretazione di Giordano Bruno, 1986, and Giordano Bruno (includes critical bibliography) both by M. Ciliberto, 1990; The Renaissance Drama of Knowledge: Giordano Bruno in England by Hilary Gatti, 1989; Giordano Bruno and the Embassy Affair by John Bossy, 1991; Giordano Bruno and the Philosophy of the Ass by Nuccio Ordine, translated by Henryk Baranski and Arielle Saiber, 1996; Giordano Bruno and the Kabbalah: Prophets, Magicians, and Rabbis by Karen Silvia De León-Jones, 1997; The Last Confession by Morris West, 2000.

* * *

The number of Giordano Bruno's writings exceeds 60 works, the majority written in Latin. These include works concerning philosophy, astronomy, mathematics, mnemonics (which was not "a mere set of mechanical rules for aiding memory, but was freighted with a very large content of mysticism and magic," as Gosselin and Lerner point out in the introduction to The Ash Wednesday Supper, 1977), and the various controversies in which Bruno was engaged. Bruno was asked on several occasions to give lectures on a variety of subjects; he became famous especially for his interest in mnemonics and the works of the 14th-century Catalan monk Ramón Lull.

By the time he left Naples, Bruno had embraced the system of belief called hermetic Neoplatonism or Hermeticism. In the Renaissance the prestige of this system was fostered by the belief that it was based on the writings of Hermes Trismegistus, an Egyptian sage who foretold the advent of Christianity, and whose wisdom had inspired Plato and the Platonists. Bruno held the belief that the Hermetic religion (with its magical component) was the only true religion, and felt a need to return to the beliefs of the Egyptians. He also believed in metempsychosis (the transmigration of souls at the time of death) and that the living earth moved around the divine sun; this latter belief brought him to embrace Copernicus' ideas and to formulate his most notable theories on the infinite universe and the multiplicity of worlds. Bruno's religion cannot be separated from his philosophy, and while he was conciliatory towards religious practices, he was intolerant of pedants and those who would not, or could not, accept occult truths: hence his anti-Aristotelianism. A brief survey of his major works will illustrate the broad spectrum of Bruno's ideas.

The De umbris idearum [The Shadows of Ideas], with the Ars memoriae [The Art of Memory,] in appendix, was published in Paris during Bruno's first visit to that city. These two works consolidated his fame as an expert in mnemonics, and earned him the privilege of entering the group of lecteurs royaux (royal lecturers) whose attitudes, in contrast with their Sorbonne counterparts, were anti-Aristotelian. In the first part of the De umbris, Bruno re-elaborates material dealing with Lull and mnemonics with a didactic purpose: he intends proving, from a platonic point of view, the correspondence between the physical and the ideal world. The Neoplatonists relied on the directness of intuition concerning high matters since man is incapable of achieving the essence of truth; hence our ideas are only shadows of truth and, in mnemonics, are shadows (signs) of these shadows. The second and third parts of the De umbris are a mnemotechnic manual purporting to instruct the reader, as Bruno does in the Ars memoriae, by drawing upon elements from the astrological and Hermetic traditions. The art of memory in its incantational perception—since the nature of memory is occult, the recall of ideas may be regarded as a magical exercise—forms the basis for the Cantus Circaeus [The Incantation of Circe]. By far the most successful and enjoyable publication of Bruno's first visit to Paris is Il Candelaio (The Candle Bearer), a play in five acts with 18 characters, written in popular Italian, but with many plebeian expressions derived from Neapolitan dialect. The play mainly satirizes three aspects of human behaviour and belief in Bonifacio's love, Bartolomeo's alchemy, and Manfurio's pedantry.

In 1583, while a guest of the French ambassador in London, Michel de Casteineau, Bruno lectured at Oxford on the Copernican theory of the movement of the earth, thus anticipating by one year what he says in La cena delle ceneri (The Ash Wednesday Supper). It is in the five dialogues making up this work that Bruno recaptures the ill-fated evening of 14 February 1584, when he walked out of a dinner party at Sir Fulke Greville's house because of the intolerance shown by two Oxonian doctors towards his explanation of heliocentric theories. From Copernicus, Bruno moves on to other theories of astronomy (plurality of worlds in an infinite universe), language (repudiation of Latin and adoption of vulgar Italian in scientific treatises), and politics (support for Robert Dudley's puritanical faction). Besides its philosophical and theological content (God is defined along the lines of the Hermetic tradition as an infinite sphere, the centre of which is everywhere and the circumference of which is nowhere), The Ash Wednesday Supper lashes out at the English society of the times and, particularly, at the pedantry of the Oxonian doctors who had prevented Bruno, the year before, from completing his course of lectures on the grounds that he had been plagiarizing Marsilio Ficino's De vita Coelitus Comparanda. Bruno's publication of De la Causa, Principio et Uno (Cause, Principle and Unity) was intended to fend off the criticism aroused by his previous work. Bruno failed to do this, but produced a most brilliant and original treatise on metaphysics, dealing with the concepts of "causa" and "principio" which, according to his physical theory, are to be considered the equivalents of "forma" [form] and "materia" [matter]: together they form an inextricable unity ["l'uno"]. In elaborating this theory, Bruno rejects the traditional dualism inherent in Aristotelian physics, and moves instead towards a monistic conception of the world. These ideas are also reaffirmed in the De l'Infinito Universo et Mondi (On the Infinite Universe and Worlds).

The first dialogue of Lo spaccio de la bestia trionfante (The Expulsion of the Triumphant Beast) is a satire on contemporary superstitions and vices, embodied in the "triumphant beast," which, Bruno implies, have distorted man's reason in all ages and cultures. In The Expulsion Bruno reaffirms that the search for truth is the very foundation of the ethical system, and he equates truth with Divinity itself. Bruno leans heavily upon the Pythagorean belief in metempsychosis, a teaching considered heretical by the Catholic Church since it does not uphold the ultimate return of the soul to its resurrected body. The relationship between the individual and universal soul is taken up in the Cabala. In De gli eroici furori (The Heroic Frenzies), dedicated to Sir Philip Sidney, Bruno establishes the premise that intellectual love is superior to physical love, and declares that the soul, in its pursuit of truth, progressively strives for an intellectual understanding of the Being, Truth itself. Couched in Ficinian terminology the ten dialogues also become testimony to Bruno's criticism of Aristotelian poetics and imitation of Petrarch in the 16th century.

The remainder of Bruno's works that were published in his lifetime are all in Latin, and are, to a large extent, a re-elaboration of the theories expounded in the Italian dialogues. Worthy of mention however, are the three verse dialogues published in Frankfurt in 1591. In the De minimo [Concerning the Least], the argument is concerned with three units: God (the unit of units), the soul (the eternal minimum) and the atom (the physical minimum). De monade is filled chiefly with mystical, philosophical and geometrical constructions, founded upon the theory of mathematical minima invested with metaphysical significance: one is the perfect number, the source of infinite series. The De immenso [Concerning the Immeasurable] amplifies Bruno's philosophy of the infinite universe and the innumerable worlds, which Bruno had derived from Lucretius, "animating it with the universal animation of the magical philosophy and using it in the Hermetic manner, to reflect in the mens the universe in this immensely extended form and so to absorb the infinite divinity” (Frances A. Yates, Giordano Bruno and the Hermetic Tradition).

Bruno’s originality and legacy appear to be ambiguous: on the one hand he transformed the art of memory from a fairly rational technique into a magical and religious instrument for reaching towards the divine, and, he thought, obtaining divine powers. Even the concepts of an infinite universe, of planetary life derived from the sun, and of the cosmic insights (which anticipate the findings of Galileo, Kepler, and Newton) are connected to his attempts to picture the intangible, the unknown, the arcane: this approach is in line with the Hermetic aim of becoming one with the universe through imaginative effort (as Yates explains). On the other hand, Bruno, in his endeavour to establish truth, defied the ecclesiastical authorities, most blatantly when he embraced the Copernican theories of heliocentricity; on account of this, Bruno is regarded as a precursor of modern scientific thought. At his trial Bruno made several attempts to demonstrate that his views were not incompatible with the Catholic conception of God and creation. He first retracted some of the contentious theological points on which he was to be found guilty, but, at the end, he refused to do so because he did not know any longer (after eight years’ imprisonment) what he was expected to retract. It is his final stance at the trial (well documented in Luigi Firpo’s Il processo di Giordano Bruno) and his horrific death that have made him a symbol of freedom and humanistic activism, while his emphasis on the magical and the occult dimmed his image as scientific investigator. The fact remains, however, that Bruno stands as one of the most thought-provoking and complex figures in the history of western thought.

—Bruno Ferraro

BÜCHNER, Georg

Born: Goddelau, Duchy of Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, 17 October 1813. Education: Educated at Carl Weitershausen’s school, 1822–25; Gymnasium, Darmstadt, 1825–31; studied medicine at University of Strasbourg, 1831–33, and University of Giessen, 1833–34; studied biology: earned membership of the Strasbourg Société d’Histoire Naturelle and a doctorate from University of Zurich, 1836. Career: Politically active as a student in Darmstadt, founded the society, Gesellschaft der Menschenrechte, 1834, and wrote the political pamphlet Der hessische Landbote, 1834; fled Germany to escape impending arrest for sedition, 1835, and sought refuge in Strasbourg. Lecturer in comparative anatomy, University of Zurich, 1836–37. Died: 19 February 1837.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Nachgelassene Schriften, edited by Ludwig Büchner. 1850.
Sämtliche Werke, edited by K. Franzos. 1879.
Gesammelte Werke und Briefe, edited by Fritz Bergemann. 1922.
Complete Plays and Prose, translated by Carl Richard Mueller. 1963.
Sämtliche Werke und Briefe, edited by Werner R. Lehmann. 2 vols., 1967–71.

Plays, translated by Victor Price. 1971; also translated by Michael Hamburger, 1972.
Complete Works and Letters, edited by Walter Hinderer, translated by Henry J. Schmidt. 1986.
Complete Plays, edited by Michael Patterson, translated by John MacKendrick. 1987.
Werke und Briefe, edited by Karl Pörnbacher. 1988.
Complete Plays, Lenz and Other Writings, edited and translated by John Reddick. 1993.
Dantons Tod and Woyzeck, edited with introduction and notes by Margaret Jacobs, 1996.

Plays

Dantons Tod (produced 1902). 1835 (incomplete version); complete version in Nachgelassene Schriften, 1850; as Danton’s Death, translated by Stephen Spender and Goronwy Rees, 1939; also translated by T.H. Lustig, in Classical German Drama, edited by Lustig, 1963; James Maxwell, 1968; Victor Price, 1971; Jane Fry and Howard Brenton, 1982; John MacKendrick, 1987.
Leonce und Lena (produced 1895). In Mosaik, Novellen, und Skizzen, edited by K. Gutzkow, 1842; as Leonce and Lena, translated by Eric Bentley, in From the Modern Repertoire, 3, 1956; also translated by Victor Price, 1971.
Woyzeck (produced 1913). As Wozzeck, in Sämtliche Werke, 1879; as Woyzeck, translated by Theodore Hoffmann, in The Modern Theatre, 1, edited by Eric Bentley, 1955; also translated by Carl Richard Mueller, in Complete Plays and Prose, 1963; Henry J. Schmidt, 1969; Victor Price, 1971; Michael Hamburger, 1972; John MacKendrick, 1979.

Fiction

Lenz. In Telegraph für Deutschland, January 1839; as Lenz, translated by Carl Richard Mueller, in Complete Plays and Prose, 1963; also translated by Michael Hamburger, in Three German Classics, edited by Ronald Taylor, 1966; F.J. Lampont, in The Penguin Book of Short Stories, 1974; John MacKendrick, in Complete Plays, 1987.

Other

Der hessische Landbote, with Pastor Weidig (pamphlet). 1834 (privately printed); as The Hessian Courier, translated by John MacKendrick, in Complete Plays, 1987; as The Hessian Messenger, translated by Henry J. Schmidt, in Complete Works and Letters, 1987.

*

Bibliography: Das Büchner Schrifttum bis 1965 by Werner Schlick, 1968; “Kommentierte Bibliographie zu Büchner” by Gerhard P. Knapp, in Text und Kritik Sonderband Büchner, 1979; revised edition, 1984; Georg Büchner by Marianne Beese, 1983.

Critical Studies: Georg Büchner by Arthur Knight, 1951; Georg Büchner by Herbert Lindenberger, 1964; Satire, Caricature, and Perspectivism in the Works of Büchner by Henry J. Schmidt, 1970; Georg Büchner by Ronald Hauser, 1974; The Drama of Revolt: A Critical Study of Georg Büchner by Maurice B. Benn, 1976; Georg

Büchner and the Birth of Modern Drama by David G. Richards, 1977; Georg Büchner by William C. Reeve, 1979; Georg Büchner by Julian Hilton, 1982; Georg Büchner's "Dantons Tod": A Reappraisal by Dorothy James, 1982; Lenz and Büchner: Studies in Dramatic Form by John Guthrie, 1984; Love, Lust, and Rebellion: New Approaches to Georg Büchner by Reinhold Grimm, 1985; Büchner in Britain: A Passport to Georg Büchner edited by Brian Keith-Smith and Ken Mills, 1987; Georg Büchner's Woyzeck by Michael Ewans, 1989; George Büchner: Tradition and Innovation: Fourteen Essays, 1990; Büchner, Woyzeck by Edward McInnes, 1991; Georg Büchner: The Shattered Whole by John Reddick, 1994; Büchner and Madness: Schizophrenia in Georg Büchner's Lenz and Woyzeck by James Crichton, 1998; Georg Büchner's Woyzeck: A History of Its Criticism by David G. Richards, 2001.

* * *

Georg Büchner died in 1837 at the age of 23 with only one play, Dantons Tod (Danton's Death), in print and that in a bowdlerized version. His Woyzeck was not performed until the centenary of his birth. Yet he is now acknowledged to be a crucial link in the chain of innovative German drama which stretches from J.M.R. Lenz through Büchner, Frank Wedekind, the Expressionists, and Bertolt Brecht to the present day. In a wider context he is recognized as a seminal figure in the history of modern drama.

At Giessen University Büchner was a republican activist and co-editor of Der hessische Landbote (The Hessian Courier), an inflammatory pamphlet exposing the exploitative taxation which kept the aristocracy in Hesse in luxury. This led to a warrant being issued for his arrest, and he had to flee the country and complete his studies in Strasbourg. It was while he was in hiding on the way that he wrote Danton's Death, which broke with the idealist drama of Schiller and tried to present history "as it really happened." He revealed the bloody and bawdy side of revolution, showing the clash between Robespierre's ideological asceticism ("Virtue is the strength . . . terror the weapon of the Republic") and Danton's liberal hedonism as a mere phase in the inexorable, inscrutable cycle of history. It is a powerful but bleak piece of writing, in which the masses feature mainly as rabble, and it is so poised that left and right wing interpreters have struggled in vain for half a century to make it their own. Leonce und Lena (Leonce and Lena) is an ironic, satirical variant of the romantic comedy, set among the blasé and inane aristocrats of the lands of Pipi and Popo.

Büchner left his most important work, Woyzeck, unfinished, with only vague indications of possible endings. It is a study of social victimization. The passive, plebeian hero, Woyzeck, is a common soldier who acts as barber to his Captain and as dietetic guinea-pig to a demented physician in order to support his mistress and child. She succumbs haplessly to the crude blandishments of the virile drummajor, and Woyzeck, hounded by imaginary voices, stabs her to death. The fragment, of which there are several drafts, ends with Woyzeck wading into a pond to recover the murder weapon he has thrown away, but the play would not have ended there. Büchner based it on the controversial case of a murderer who was executed in Leipzig in 1824 after two years of medical examinations to determine whether he was responsible for his actions, and here, as in Danton's Death, historically authentic speeches are woven seamlessly into the dialogue. Büchner presents a crime passionnel in which degradation, debility, sexuality, love, and Christian conscience weave an intricate, compelling pattern which, one is tempted to say, positively benefits from being incomplete. Its 24–29 brief scenes (depending on the edition), which add up to a longish one-act play, are the model for the montages of short scenes that are characteristic of Expressionism and epic theatre. Like Danton and Robespierre, Woyzeck is a puppet with an inscrutable controller. Inside themselves, Büchner's more positive characters see an abyss. Büchner was a humane pessimist to whom human life seemed locked in the grip of events. He has the unblinking vision of the moderns, and he provides his suffering characters, no matter what their station, with a voice that is natural and authentic, and at the same time universal and poetic.

—Hugh Rorrison

See the essays on Danton's Death and Woyzeck.

BULGAKOV, Mikhail (Afnas'evich)

Born: Kiev, Ukraine, 3 May 1891. Education: Educated at First Kiev High School, 1900–09; Medical Faculty, Kiev University, 1909–16, doctor's degree 1916. Military Service: Served as doctor in frontline and district hospitals, 1916–18. Family: Married 1) Tatiana Nikolaevna Lappa in 1913; 2) Liubov' Evgenievna Belozerskaia in 1924; 3) Elena Sergeevna Shilovskaia in 1932. Career: Doctor in Kiev, 1918–19, but abandoned medicine in 1920; organized a "sub-department of the arts," Vladikavkaz, 1920–21; in Moscow from 1921: journalist for various groups and papers; associated with the Moscow Art Theatre from 1925: assistant producer, 1930–36; librettist and consultant, Bolshoi Theatre, Moscow, 1936–40. Much of his writing was published posthumously. Died: 10 March 1940.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

P'esy [Plays]. 1962.

Dramy i komedii [Dramas and Comedies]. 1965.

Izbrannaia proza [Selected Prose]. 1966.

The Early Plays, edited by Ellendea Proffer, translated by Ellendea and Carl R. Proffer. 1972.

Sobranie sochinenii [Collected Works], edited by Ellendea Proffer. 1982–90.

Romany [Novels]. 1988.

P'esy 1920-kh godov [Plays of the 1920s]. 1989.

Sobranie sochinenii v piati tomakh [Collected Works]. 5 vols., 1989–91.

Izbrannye proizvedeniia [Selected Works]. 1990.

Fiction

Zapiski na manzhetakh [Notes on the Cuff]. 1923.

Diavoliada: Rasskazy. 1925; as Diaboliad and Other Stories, edited by Ellendea and Carl R. Proffer, translated by Carl R. Proffer, 1972.

Rasskazy [Stories]. 1926.

Dni Turbinykh (Belaia gvardiia). 2 vols., 1927–29; as The White Guard, translated by Michael Glenny, 1971.
Rokovye iaitsa [The Fatal Eggs] (stories). 1928.
Zapiski iunogo vracha. 1963; enlarged edition as A Country Doctor's Notebook, translated by Michael Glenny, 1975.
Zapiski pokoinika (Teatralnyi roman), in Izbrannaia proza. 1966; as Black Snow: A Theatrical Novel, translated by Michael Glenny, 1967.
Master i Margarita. 1965–66; uncut version, 1969; complete version, 1973; as The Master and Margarita, translated by Mirra Ginsburg, 1967; uncut version, translated by Michael Glenny, 1967; translated by Diana Burgin and Katherine Tiernan O'Connor, 1995.
Sobach'e serdtse. 1969; as The Heart of a Dog, translated by Michael Glenny, 1968; also translated by Mirra Ginsburg, 1990.
Notes on the Cuff and Other Stories, edited by Ellendea Proffer, translated by Alison Rice. 1992.

Plays

Dni Turbinykh, from his novel (produced 1926). With Poslednie dni (Pushkin), 1955; as The Days of the Turbins, in Six Soviet Plays, translated by Eugene Lyons, 1935; also in The Early Plays, edited by Ellendea Proffer, 1972; as The White Guard, translated by Michael Glenny, 1979.
Zoikina kvartira (produced 1926). Edited by Ellendea Proffer, 1971; as Zoya's Apartment, in The Early Plays, edited by Proffer, 1972; as Madame Zoya, translated by Michael Glenny, in Six Plays, 1991.
Bagrovyi ostrov (produced 1928). In P'esy, 1971; as The Crimson Island, in The Early Plays, edited by Ellendea Proffer, 1972.
Mertvye dushi [Dead Souls], from the novel by Gogol' (produced 1932). With Ivan Vasil'evich, 1964.
Kabala sviatosh (as Mol'er, produced 1936). In P'esy, 1962; as A Cabal of Hypocrites, in The Early Plays, edited by Ellendea Proffer, 1972; as Molière, translated by Michael Glenny, in Six Plays, 1991.
Skupoi [The Miser], from the play by Molière, in Polnoe sobranie sochinenii, 4, by Molière. 1939.
Don Kikhot [Don Quixote], from the novel by Cervantes (produced 1940). In P'esy, 1962.
Poslednie dni (Pushkin) (produced 1943). With Dni Turbinykh, 1955; as The Last Days (Pushkin), in Russian Literature Triquarterly, 15, 1976; also translated by William Powell and Michael Earley, in Six Plays, 1991.
Rashel', edited by Margarita Aliger, music by R.M. Glière (broadcast 1943; produced 1947). Edited by A. Colin Wright, in Novyi zhurnal, 108, September 1972; Bulgakov's original text, 1988.
Beg (produced 1957). In P'esy, 1962; as Flight, translated by Mirra Ginsburg, 1969, and with Bliss, 1985, also translated by Michael Glenny, in Six Plays, 1991; as On the Run, translated by Avril Pyman, 1972.
Ivan Vasil'evich (produced 1966). With Mertvye dushi, 1964; as Ivan Vasilievich, in Modern International Drama, 7(2), 1974; as Beg = Flight, edited with introduction and notes by J.A.E. Curtis, 1997.
Poloumnyi Zhurden, from Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme by Molière (produced 1972). In Dramy i komedii, 1965.
Blazhenstvo (Son inzhenera Reina v 4-kh deistviakh), in Zvezda vostoka, 7. 1966; as Bliss, translated by Mirra Ginsburg, with Flight, 1985.
P'esy: Adam i Eva; Bagrovyi ostrov; Zoikina kvartira. 1971.

Adam i Eva, in P'esy. 1971; as Adam and Eve, in Russian Literature Triquarterly, 1, Fall 1971; also translated by Michael Glenny, in Six Plays, 1991.
Minin i Pozharskii, music by Boris Asafiev, edited by A. Colin Wright, in Russian Literature Triquarterly, 15. 1976.
Voina i mir [War and Peace], from the novel by Tolstoi, edited by A. Colin Wright, in Canadian-American Slavic Studies, 15, Summer–Fall. 1981.
Batum. 1988.
Chernoye more [The Black Sea]. 1988.
Petr Veliky [Peter the Great]. 1988.
Six Plays (includes The White Guard; Madame Zoya; Flight; Molière; Adam and Eve; The Last Days), edited by Lesley Milne, translated by Michael Glenny, William Powell, and Michael Earley. 1991.

Other

Zhizn' gospodina de Mol'era. 1962; as The Life of Monsieur de Molière, translated by Mirra Ginsburg, 1970.
Rannjaja neizdannaja proza [Early Unpublished Prose] (German edition). 1976.
Rannjaja nesobranajaja proza [Early Uncollected Prose] (German edition). 1978.
Rannjaja neizvestnaja proza [Early Unknown Prose] (German edition). 1981.
Pod piatoi. Moi dnevniki (early diary entries). 1990.
Manuscripts Don't Burn: A Life in Letters and Diaries, edited by J.A.E. Curtis. 1991.

*

Bibliography: An International Bibliography of Works by and about Bulgakov by Ellendea Proffer, 1976; A Bibliography of Works by and about Mikhail Bulgakov by Nadine Natov, in Canadian-American Slavic Studies, XV, 1981; Mikhail Bulgakov in English: A Bibliography 1891–1991 by Garth M. Terry, 1991.

Critical Studies: Bulgakov's "The Master and Margarita": The Text as a Cipher by Elena N. Mahlow, 1975; The Master and Margarita: A Comedy of Victory, 1977, and Mikhail Bulgakov: A Critical Biography, 1990, both by Lesley Milne; Mikhail Bulgakov: Life and Interpretations by A. Colin Wright, 1978; My Life with Mikhail Bulgakov by L.E. Belozerskaia-Bulgakova, 1983; Bulgakov: Life and Work by Ellendea Proffer, 1984; A Mind in Ferment: Mikhail Bulgakov's Prose by Kalpana Sahni, 1984; Mikhail Bulgakov by Nadine Natov, 1985; Mikhail Bulgakov v Khudozhestvennom teatre by Anatolii Smel'ianskii, 1986; Between Two Worlds: A Critical Introduction to the Master and Margarita by Andrew Barratt, 1987; Bulgakov's Last Decade: The Writer as Hero by J.A.E. Curtis, 1987; Vospominaniia o Mikhaile Bulgakove, 1988; Zhizn' i smert' Mikhaila Bulgakova by Anatolii Shvartz, 1988; Zhizneopisanie Mikhaila Bulgakova by M. Chudakova, 1988; Mikhail Bulgakov issue, Soviet Literature, 7(484), 1988; Pis'ma. Zhizneopisanie v dokumentakh edited by V.I. Losev and V.V. Petelin, 1989; Biografiia M.A. Bulgakova. Pis'ma. Zhizneopisanie v dokumentakh by P.S. Popov, 1989; The Apocalyptic Vision of Mikhail Bulgakov's The Master and Margarita by Edwin Mellen, 1991; The Writer's Divided Self in Bulgakov's The Master and Margarita by Riitta H. Pittman, 1991; Is Comrade Bulgakov Dead?: Mikhail Bulgakov at the Moscow Art Theatre by Anatoly Smeliansky, translated by Arch Tait, 1993; Bulgakov: The Novelist Playwright, edited by Lesley Milne, 1995; Bulgakov's Apocalyptic Critique of Literature by Derek J. Hunns, 1996; The Master and Margarita: A Critical Companion, edited by Laura D. Weeks, 1996.

* * *

Mikhail Bulgakov is today one of the best-loved writers in the former Soviet Union, seen by many as reflecting the absurdities of that society under Stalinism and—although he died in 1940—of a later period as well. Although he was generally acclaimed following the publication of his masterpiece Master i Margarita (The Master and Margarita) in 1965–66, official attitudes towards him remained tolerant rather than acclamatory (with many works remaining unpublished) until the advent of glasnost in the late 1980s. The first Soviet edition of his Sobranie sochinenii [Collected Works] was published just in time for the centenary of his birth in 1991, and his plays are now widely performed throughout Russia and other former republics of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, as well as in Eastern Europe.

Bulgakov began his career as a doctor, and his experiences in a country hospital during World War I became the basis for a number of humorous stories which may be seen as self-satire (later collected under the title Zapiski iunogo vracha [A Country Doctor's Notebook]). After leaving his native Kiev in 1919 for Vladikavkaz in the Caucasus—the result of being forcibly mobilized into various different armies during the Civil War and then attempting to find his younger brother—he abandoned medicine for literature, becoming “literary manager” for a “sub-department of the arts” and writing five plays (which have not survived) for the local population. Returning to Moscow in 1921, he supported himself and his wife by journalism, writing feuilletons which, although of minor literary value, provide an interesting and amusing picture of Russian life in the 1920s. He also published a number of satirical stories, of which Sobach'e serdtse (The Heart of a Dog) is best known. With its bitter criticism of Communist society, this story long remained unprintable—and indeed unmentionable—in the Soviet Union, but, with glasnost, not only has it been widely published but dramatizations of it have been performed in most major cities (Bulgakov himself had intended to adapt it for the stage in 1926). Bulgakov's first major work was his novel, Belaita gvardiia (The White Guard), based on his own experiences in Kiev during the Civil War. After its publication in 1925—although only in part, since the journal in which it appeared was closed down—Bulgakov was invited to rewrite it as a play for the Moscow Art Theatre. Its performance in 1926 as Dni Turbinykh (The Days of the Turbins) was a major theatrical event in that, despite the necessary changes to make it more politically acceptable, it was a sensitive portrayal of the problems of a “white” family during the upheavals that followed the revolution. (It has now been performed in an earlier version, without the politically motivated changes.) Withdrawn in 1929, along with two further plays Zoikina kvartira (Madame Zoya), a surrealist tragic-farce, and Bagrovyyi ostrov (The Crimson Island), an allegory on the revolution and a satire on censorship, The Days of the Turbins was restaged in 1932 with Stalin's approval. Indeed, in the later, oppressive post-war years of Stalinism, when Bulgakov's name could not even be mentioned publicly, he would be remembered, if at all, only as the author of this play. Another play Beg (Flight), with its psychological study of a white general in the Civil War, was banned while still at the rehearsal stage.

In 1930, after an unsuccessful appeal to Stalin to be allowed to leave the country, Bulgakov was found employment with the Moscow Art Theatre, which led ultimately to his (uncompleted) satire Teatralnyi roman (Black Snow: A Theatrical Novel) including a humorous portrait of Stanislavskii in his later years. Bulgakov's stage version of Gogol's Mertvye dushi (Dead Souls) enjoyed a modest success, as did too, posthumously, an adaptation of Cervante's Don Quixote and a play about Pushkin, Poslednie dni (The Last Days). The failure of his major play Mol'er (Molière), in which he treated the French dramatist as a fallible human being instead of the “great man” Stanislavskii demanded, led to his resignation from the Art Theatre in 1936, when he became a librettist for the Bolshoi. Further works include an imaginative biography, Zhizn' gospodina de Mol'era (The Life of Monsieur de Molière); a pacifist and anti-Communist play, Adam i Eva (Adam and Eve); two comedies, Blazhenstvo (Bliss) and Ivan Vasil'evich; an adaptation of Tolstoi's Voina i mir (War and Peace); various film scenarios and opera librettos; and a play based on the young Stalin, Batum, none of which appeared during Bulgakov's lifetime.

Aware that he was suffering from nephrosclerosis and had little time remaining to him, Bulgakov devoted his last years to a major effort to complete The Master and Margarita, dictating the final changes to his wife (his third, on whom the figure of Margarita was based) on his deathbed after he had become blind. His principal claim to fame in the West rests on this novel, arguably one of the major works of world literature of the 20th century. Published 25 years after his death, it combines an account of the devil's visit to Moscow in the 1930s with an unorthodox interpretation of Christ before Pilate in ancient Jerusalem: this presented through a “novel” written by the book's hero. As well as being fantasy, satire, comedy, mystery, and romance, it is a work of considerable philosophical depth, drawing equally on biblical and apocryphal sources and on the Faust tradition. Its basic postulates are that “Jesus existed,” that “manuscripts don't burn”—a belief in the enduring nature of art—and that “everything will turn out right. That's what the world is built on”: an extraordinary metaphysical optimism for a man whose life was characterized by recurring disappointment.

—A. Colin Wright

See the essays on The Master and the Margarita and The White Guard.

BUNIN, Ivan Alekseevich

Born: Voronezh, Russia, 10 October 1870. Education: Educated at the Gymnasium, Elets, 1881–85, and then at home in Ozerki; University of Moscow. Family: Married 1) Anna Nikolaevna Tsakni in 1898 (separated 1900), one son; 2) Vera Muromtseva, with whom he had lived since 1907, in 1921. Career: Editorial assistant, Orlovskii vestnik [Orel Courier], 1889–91; secretary, department of statistics, Poltava district administration, 1892–94; opened bookstore, 1894, and distributed publications of Tolstoi's, q.v., publishing house, Posrednik: arrested for selling books without a license, but escaped prison sentence; entered literary circles in St. Petersburg and Moscow, 1895: in early years associated with the Symbolist publishing house Skorpion, and, after 1901, with Gor'kii's, q.v., Znanie publishing house until 1909; travelled to Switzerland and Germany, 1900, Constantinople (now Istanbul), 1903, Egypt, Ceylon (now Sri Lanka), and Singapore, 1911, and three times to Capri, visiting Gor'kii, 1911–14; lived in Moscow, Kiev, and Odessa during Revolutionary turmoil, 1918–20; moved to Constantinople, 1920, and eventually arrived in Paris, 1923, via Serbia and Bulgaria; settled in Grasse, southern France. Elected to the Russian Academy of Sciences, 1909. Awards: Pushkin prize, 1903, 1909; Nobel prize for literature, 1933. Died: 8 November 1953.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Sobranie sochinenii [Collected Works]. 5 vols., 1956.
Sobranie sochinenii [Collected Works]. 9 vols., 1965–67.
Sochineniia [Works]. 3 vols., 1982–84.
Sobranie sochinenii [Collected Works], edited by A.K. Baboreko. 6 vols., 1987.
Sobranie sochinenii [Collected Works]. 4 vols., 1988.

Fiction

Derevnia. 1910; as The Village, translated by Isabel F. Hapgood, 1923.
Sukhodol [Dry Valley]. 1911.
Grammatika liubvi. 1915; as The Grammar of Love, translated by John Courmos, 1977.
Gospodin iz San-Frantsisko. 1915; as The Gentleman from San Francisco and Other Stories, translated by Bernard Guilbert Guerny, 1934.
Fifteen Tales, translated by Bernard Guilbert Guerny. 1924.
Zhizn' Arsen'eva [The Life of Arsen'ev]. 1933; complete edition, 1952; translated in part as The Well of Days, by Gleb Struve and Hamish Miles, 1934.
The Dreams of Chang and Other Stories, translated by Gleb Struve and Hamish Miles. 1935.
The Elaghin Affair and Other Stories, translated by Bernard Guilbert Guerny. 1935.
Temnye allei [Dark Avenues] (stories). 1943.
Dark Avenues and Other Stories, translated by Richard Hare. 1949.
Vesnoi, v Iudee [Spring, in Judea]. 1953.
Petlistye ushi i drugie rasskazy [Loop Ears and Other Stories]. 1954.
Rasskazy [Stories]. 1955.
Lika. 1958.
Shadowed Paths, translated by Olga Shartse. 1958.
Povesti. Rasskazy. Vospominiia [Short Stories. Stories. Reminiscences]. 1961.
Rasskazy [Stories]. 1962.
Rasskazy [Stories]. 1971.
Povesti. Rasskazy [Short Stories]. 1973.
Sueta suet [The Fuss of Vanities]. 1973.
Povesti i rasskazy [Short Stories]. 1977.
Poslednee svidanie [The Last Meeting]. 1978.
Stories and Poems, translated by Olga Shartse and Irina Zheleznova. 1979.
Rasskazy [Stories]. 1980.
Chasha zhizni [The Cup of Life]. 1983.
In a Far Distant Land: Selected Stories, translated by Robert Bowie. 1983.

Long Ago: Fourteen Stories, translated by David Richards and Sophie Lund. 1984.
Kholodnaia vesna [Cold Spring]. 1986.
Poeziia i proza [Poetry and Prose]. 1986.
Light Breathing and Other Stories, translated by Olga Shartse. 1988.
Velga (for children), translated by Guy Daniels. 1989.
Wolves and Other Love Stories, translated by Mark C. Scott. 1989.
Povesti i rasskazy [Short Stories and Stories]. 1990.

Verse

Stikhotvoreniia [Poetry]. 1956.
Listopad [Autumn]. 1982.
Stikhotvoreniia. Rasskazy [Poetry. Stories]. 1986.

Other

Sobranie sochinenii [Collected Works]. 1934–35.
Osvobozhdenie Tolstogo [The Emancipation of Tolstoi] (biography). 1937.
O Chekhove [About Chekhov] (unfinished manuscript). 1955.
Okaiannye dni: k dvadtsatiletiiu so dnia smerti I.A. Bunina [The Last Days: Twenty Years after the Death of I.A. Bunin]. 1973.
Buninskii sbornik [Bunin's Notebook]. 1974.
Pis'ma Buninykh k khudozhnitse T. Loginovoi-Murav'evoi (1936–1961) [Letters from the Bunins to the Artist T. Loginova-Murav'eva]. 1982.
Ivan Bunin i literaturnyi protsess nachala XX veka [Ivan Bunin and the Literary Process at the Beginning of the 20th Century]. 1985.
Stikhotvoreniia i perevody [Poetry and Translations]. 1985.
I sled moi v mire est' . . . = j'ai laissé une trace dans ce monde. . . [I Have Left My Mark on the World]. 1989.
Lish' slovu zhizn' dana. . . [Life is Given Only to the Word. . .]. 1990. [Life is Given Only to the Word. . .]. 1990.
Ivan Bunin (collections). 1991.
Solnechnii udar [Sunstroke]. 1992.
Russian Requiem 1885–1920: A Portrait from Letters, Diaries and Fiction, edited by Thomas Gaiton Marullo. 1993.
Catalogue of the I.A. Bunin, V.N. Bunina, L.F. Zurov and E.M. Lopatina Collections by Anthony J. Heywood, 2000.
 Translator, Pesn' o Gaivate, by G.V. Longfellow. 1941.
 Translator, Zolotoi disk (poems). 1975.

*

Critical Studies: “The Art of Ivan Bunin” by Gleb Struve, in Slavonic and East European Review, 11, 1932–33; “The Art of Ivan Bunin” by Renato Poggioli, in The Phoenix and the Spider, 1957; The Works of Ivan Bunin by Serge Kryzyski, 1971; Ivan Bunin: A Study of His Fiction by James B. Woodward, 1980; Ivan Bunin by Julian W. Connolly, 1982; The Narratology of the Autobiography: An Analysis of the Literary Devices Employed in Ivan Bunin's “The Life of Arsenev” by Alexander F. Zweers, 1997; If You See the Buddha: Studies in the Fiction of Ivan Bunin by Thomas Gaiton Marullo, 1998.

* * *

Ivan Bunin was the last major Russian writer to emerge from the ranks of the landed gentry and the first Russian writer to win the Nobel prize for literature. His most notable early successes were achieved as a poet and translator of poetry, and he continued to write poetry throughout his career. His reputation rests chiefly, however, on his two short novels Derevnia (The Village) and Sukhodol ("Dry Valley"), the autobiographical novel Zhizn' Arsen'eva [The Life of Arsen'ev], and, above all, his collections of short stories. All his work reflects the loyalty to the 19th-century realistic tradition which he advocated passionately in the literary polemics of the pre-revolutionary years. But the mark of the "Silver Age" is nevertheless visible in his outlook as a writer, in the poetic qualities of his prose and meticulous attention to matters of style and craftsmanship, and in the general character of an art that eschews ideas and attaches greater importance to tone than to incident.

One of the most frequently noted features of Bunin's art is the impression of coldness that it conveys, and his fastidiousness as a stylist is commonly adduced in this connection as a contributory factor. The explanation lies mainly, however, in the conception of life that informs almost all his work and in its implications for the status of the individual in his fiction. It is a view of man's life as governed by irrational forces that perpetually defy and subvert all his efforts to control it. In his early stories, such as "Antonovskie iabloki" ("Antonov Apples") and "Epitafiia" ("The Epitaph"), these forces are social. Reflecting the experience of his own family, they evoke lyrically and nostalgically the passing of the traditional rural way of life in which the landed gentry and peasantry, in Bunin's somewhat idealistic portrayal, lived in harmony with each other and in contented communion with nature. But in the transition from these stories to The Village and Sukhodol nostalgia and sorrow give way not only to anger and embitterment, but also to a broader philosophical understanding, according to which this process of social change is seen as the expression of an impersonal law of nature, of the natural law of decay to which societies, he had come to believe, like individuals, are unalterably subject and which begins ineluctably to operate as soon as the communion with nature is broken. In the two short novels, as in the stories "Veselyi dvor" ("A Happy Farmhouse"), 1911, "Ernil" (1912), and "Vesennii vecher" ("An Evening in Spring"), 1914, the behaviour and attitudes of individual landowners and peasants are examined as reflections of the moral and psychological effects of this law which Bunin interprets as inducing a kind of mental paralysis, a compulsion to maim and destroy, and a crippling insensitivity to the irrational aspects of life. By 1914, drawing on the experience of his travels in Europe and his journeys to Turkey and the Middle East described in "Ten' ptitsy" [The Shadow of the Bird] (1907–11), he was already intent on demonstrating the universal implications of this judgement. Hence "Brat'ia" ("The Brothers") and his most famous tale, Gospodin iz San-Frantsisko (The Gentleman from San Francisco), in which the same symptoms of moral decay, attributed to essentially the same basic cause, are explored in the portraits of an English traveller in Ceylon and an American capitalist on a voyage to Europe.

The most striking feature of all these works is the switch of emphasis from character to setting that results from the impersonality of Bunin's thought. Here action results not from rational decisions or free moral choices but from psychological conditions represented as reflecting the relation of the characters to the world about them. Thus the murder committed by the brutal Sokolovich in "Petlistye ushi" ("Loop Ears"), in which Bunin directly challenges Dostoevskii's faith in conscience and free will, is implicitly explained by nature's exclusion, by the transposition of the action to the dehumanizing urban setting of Petrograd. The result in each case is that descriptions of the setting acquire an unusual prominence. Often describing the structure and style of these works in musical terms, Bunin regarded them as performing an essentially musical function, as evoking a sense of the "rhythms" of life that determine the conduct of men and societies. He conceived of motivation as deriving less from events than from "harmonies" or "discords" between these "rhythms" and the human psyche.

The philosophical impersonality that gave birth to this distinctive kind of short story explains the profound interest, documented in "The Brothers" and later in "Noch" ("Night") and Osvobozhdenie Tolstogo [The Emancipation of Tolstoy] (1937), that Bunin had in Buddhism and the Buddhist conception of personality. It also determined his treatment of the theme that developed ultimately into the principal expression of his view of life—the theme of love. The most notable pre-revolutionary stories devoted to this theme are "Ignat," "Pri doroge" ("By the Road"), "Legkoe dykhanie" ("Light Breathing"), and "Syn" ("The Son"), and after his emigration to France it became almost his only theme, inspiring such well known works as "Mitina liubov'" ("Mitia's Love"), "Delo Korneta Elagina" ("The Elaghin Affair"), Solnechnii udar ("Sunstroke"), and the stories that comprise his final volume Temnye allei [Dark Avenues]. As depicted by Bunin, love is always a pre-eminently sensual experience, a blinding flash of light that briefly illuminates the ultimate realities of life: the impotence of human reason, the impermanence of everything on earth, and man's inescapable thralldom to remorseless impersonal forces. With few exceptions, therefore, the love stories are tragic tales, the characters of which are torn by passion from the normal routines of their lives and repeatedly impelled, like automata, to embark on self-destructive courses of action. Here love is almost invariably experienced in the shadow of death. Yet the tragic conclusions of these tales are to be taken as expressing a judgement less on love than on life. For, as "Sunstroke" and the stories of Temnye allei make abundantly clear, love was also for Bunin the source of the greatest happiness that life affords man, offering an intensity of experience that transforms all preconceived notions of life and its meaning. Like Zhizn' Arsen'eva, the love stories convey the supreme value attached to sensory experience by a writer who thanked God for every moment that he spent on earth, yet was able to conceive of Him only as the creator of the laws of nature. For this reason Bunin continued to wrestle to the end with the mystery of man's ephemeral existence, for the representation of which he developed his highly personal and expressive medium.

—James B. Woodward

See the essay on The Gentleman from San Francisco.

BUZZATI, Dino

Born: Dino Buzzati-Traverso in San Pellegrino, near Belluno, Italy, 16 October 1906. Education: Educated at the Ginnasio Parini, Milan, 1916–24; University of Milan, 1924–26, 1927–28, degree in law 1928. Military Service: Served 1926–27: 2nd lieutenant. Family: Married Almerina Antoniazzi in 1966. Career: Correspondent, Il Corriere della Sera, Milan, 1928–72, which first published much of his writing; contributor, Il Popolo di Lombardia, from 1931; war correspondent for various newspapers, 1940–43; reporter in Tokyo, 1963, Jerusalem, New York, Washington, DC, and Bombay, 1964, Prague and New York, 1965. Also a painter (first exhibition, 1958, and subsequent exhibitions in Milan and Paris, 1966, Rome, 1971, Milan 1972) and occasional director of plays, operas, and ballets.

Awards: Gargano prize, 1951; Naples prize, 1954; Strega prize, 1958; Paese Sera prize, 1969; Mario Massai prize (for journalism), 1970. Died: 28 January 1972.

PUBLICATIONS

Collection

Teatro, edited by Guido Davico Bonino. 1980; selections as Un caso clinico e altre commedie in un atto, 1985.
Opere Scelte, edited by Giulio Carnazzi, 1998.
Il Borghese Stregato e Altri Racconti, with introduction by Carmen Covito, 1994.

Fiction

Barnabò delle montagne. 1933.
Il segreto del Bosco Vecchio. 1935.
Il deserto dei Tartari. 1940; as The Tartar Steppe, translated by Stuart C. Hood, 1952.
I sette messaggeri (stories). 1942.
La famosa invasione degli orsi in Sicilia (for children), illustrations by Buzzati. 1945; as The Bears' Famous Invasion of Sicily, translated by Frances Lobb, 1947.
Paura alla Scala (stories). 1949.
Il crollo della Baliverna (stories). 1954.
Esperimento di magia. 1958.
Sessanta racconti (includes I sette messaggeri; Paura alla Scala; Il crollo della Baliverna). 1958.
Il grande ritratto. 1960; as Larger Than Life, translated by Henry Reed, 1962.
Egregio signore, siamo spiacenti di . . . (stories). 1960.
Un amore. 1963; as A Love Affair, translated by Joseph Green, 1964.
Il colombre e altri cinquanta racconti (stories). 1966.
Catastrophe: The Strange Stories of Dino Buzzati, translated by Judith Landry and Cynthia Jolly. 1966; as Catastrophe and Other Stories, translated by Landry and Jolly, 1982.
La boutique del mistero. 1968.
Poema a fumetti. 1969.
Le notti difficili (stories). 1971.
Romanzi e racconti, edited by Giuliano Gramigna. 1975.
180 racconti, edited by Carlo Della Corte. 1982.
Restless Nights: Selected Stories, translated by Lawrence Venuti. 1984.

Verse

Il capitano Pic e altre poesie. 1965.
Due poemetti. 1967.
Poesie. 1982.

Plays

Piccola passeggiata (produced 1942). 1942.
La rivolta dei poveri (produced 1946). In Teatro, 1980.
Un caso clinico, from his story "Sette piani" (produced 1953). 1953.
Ferrovìa sopraelevata, music by Luciano Chailly (produced 1955). 1960.

Drammatica fine di un noto musicista (produced 1955). In Teatro, 1980.
Sola in casa (produced 1958). In Teatro, 1980.
Una ragazza arrivò (radio play; broadcast 1959). 1958.
Le finestre (produced 1959). In Teatro, 1980.
L'orologio (produced 1959). In Teatro, 1980.
Procedura penale, music by Luciano Chailly (produced 1959). 1959.
Il mantello (produced 1960). In Teatro, 1980; revised version, music by Luciano Chailly (produced 1960), 1960.
Un verme al ministero (produced 1960). In Teatro, 1980.
I suggeritori (produced 1960). In Teatro, 1980.
L'uomo che andrà in America (produced 1962). 1968.
La colonna infame (produced 1962). In Teatro, 1980.
Battono alla porta, music by Riccardo Malipiero (television opera; broadcast 1962; produced 1963). 1963.
Era proibito (produced 1962). 1963.
La fine del borghese (produced 1966). 1968.

Radio Plays: Una ragazza arrivò, 1959.

Television Writing: Battono alla porta, music by Riccardo Malipiero, 1962.

Other

Il capitano delle pipe, with Epe Ramazzotti. 1945.
In quel preciso momento (miscellany). 1950; enlarged edition, 1955.
Miracoli di Val Morel (sketches). 1971.
Cronache terrestri (essays), edited by Domenico Porzio. 1972.
Il pianeta Buzzati (biographical documents, photographs), edited by Almerina Buzzati. 1974.
I misteri d'Italia. 1978.
Dino Buzzati al Giro d'Italia. 1981; as The Giro d'Italia: Coppi Versus Bartali at the 1949 Tour of Italy, introduced by John Wilcockson, 1999.
Cronache nere (essays), edited by Oreste Del Buono. 1984.
Il reggimento parte all'alba. 1985.
Lettere a Brambilla, edited by Luciano Simonelli. 1987.
Le montagne di vetro (stories and articles). 1989.

*

Critical Studies: Dino Buzzati by Fausto Gianfranceschi, 1967; Il racconto fantastico da Tarchetti a Buzzati by Neuro Bonifazi, 1971; Dino Buzzati: Un autoritratto by Yves Panafieu, 1971; Invito alla lettura di Dino Buzzati, by Antonia Arslan Veronese, 1974; Come leggere Il deserto dei Tartari by Marcello Carlino, 1976; "Spatial Structures in the Narrative of Dino Buzzati" by Elaine D. Cancalon, in Forum Italicum, 11(36–46), 1977; Dino Buzzati by Ilaria Crotti, 1977; Anormalità e angoscia nella narrativa di Dino Buzzati by Mario B. Mignone, 1981; Guida alla lettura di Dino Buzzati by Claudio Toscani, 1987; Dino Buzzati by Giovanna Ioli, 1988; Il coraggio della fantasia. Studi e ricerche intorno a Dino Buzzati by Nella Giannetto, 1989; Dino Buzzati tra fantastico e realistico by Antonia Arslan, 1993; Tre voci sospette: Buzzati, Piovene, Parise by Ilaria Crotti, 1994; Il sudario delle caligini: Significati e fortune dell'opera buzzatiana by Nella Giannetto, 1996; Dino Buzzati e il segreto della montagna by Luigi De Anna, 1997; Buzzati: Il limite dell'ombra by Giorgio Cavallini, 1997; Dino Buzzati: Le laboratoire secret by Michel Suffran, 1998.

* * *

The critical fortunes of Dino Buzzati have fluctuated with the times. In the 1950s and 1960s he was extremely highly regarded as a writer, but after his death in 1972 his international popularity declined in the face of more fashionable Italian writers, such as Italo Calvino, Umberto Eco, and Primo Levi. Nevertheless, as the less ephemeral aspects of his output are being reassessed he is once again recognized as a major writer, both within and outside Italy.

A journalist for most of his life on Italy's leading daily newspaper, Il Corriere della Sera, Buzzati was convinced in theory, and proved in practice, that the best journalism could also be good literature. His first novel, Barnabò delle montagne [Barnabò of the Mountains], concerns a young woodsman who waits years for revenge, but when he finally has his enemy in his sights he refuses to shoot him. The two themes of waiting and abnegation, as well as a passion for mountain landscapes, recur in all Buzzati's works. His second novel, Il segreto del Bosco Vecchio [The Secret of the Old Wood], is, in its woodland setting, reminiscent of Tolkien; but it was his third and most ambitious novel that established the authentic Buzzati style.

Buzzati wrote Il deserto dei Tartari (The Tartar Steppe) in the first year of World War II, typing it in the mornings after he finished night shift at the Corriere. Perhaps these circumstances account for some of the pessimistic ennui of the novel, but there was also a considerable streak of innate melancholy in Buzzati himself. The novel's hero, Giovanni Drogo, sets out for military duty in a fortress that guards the steppe across which the Tartars may invade at any moment. Drogo spends the whole of his life there, waiting for the attack which only materializes when he is too old and too ill to fight. At the end, Drogo's true moment of glory arrives when he learns to face his own death, in an anonymous hotel room, with a stoicism that would have befitted the battlefield. The novel, later translated into French by Camus, was a resounding success. Its Kafkaesque pessimism suited the dark days of its composition; but there are many memorable passages which still appeal. Particularly powerful are his exploration of the passing of time, his visual descriptions of the mountains and the desert, his attention to sonorous detail in describing military routine, and his celebration of the mediocre existence of an everyman.

After this work, Buzzati was to write only two more novels, and both were flawed affairs, inspired by external contingencies rather than by an inner compulsion to write: Il grande ritratto (Larger Than Life) was submitted anonymously to a competition run by the magazine Oggi, while Un amore (A Love Affair) was written only after the death of Buzzati's mother, with whom he had lived until he was 55, and after he himself had fallen seriously in love for the first time.

In the meantime, Buzzati had found his true vein as a writer of short stories. His first collection, I sette messaggeri [The Seven Messengers] was enlarged to become Sessanta racconti [Sixty Stories], which included the best of his output to date, and which won him Italy's major literary prize, the Strega prize, in 1958. This latter volume includes some of the masterpieces in the genre. "Il mantello" ("The Cloak"), for example, which is like The Tartar Steppe, in miniature, has a haunting opening passage reminiscent of Poe at his best; it contains dialogue full of pathos in the exchanges between a mother and her son who, unknown to her, has died in battle but has been allowed to visit her; and it concludes with an evocative finale, as the black figure waiting outside the garden gate accompanies the son to his final destination. "Qualcosa era successo" ("Something Had Happened") is in the same dark vein: the passengers in the north-bound express realize some unknown disaster must have occurred in the north, since from the window they can see the inhabitants fleeing southwards in cars and trains. As they arrive in the deserted northern station a woman's scream concludes the tale in a verbal equivalent of Edvard Munch's famous painting "The Scream." There are also sunnier stories in the collection. "Il disco si posò" ("The Saucer Landed"), for instance, opens with a village priest noticing a flying saucer landing on the church roof and two Martians coming out to investigate its cross. When Don Pietro launches into the story from the Bible in order to convert them, he learns, to his chagrin, that the Tree of Good and Evil is still blooming on Mars, since the ancestors of these superior intelligences obeyed God's command. Yet, underneath this more humorous style, Buzzati remains melancholic about the imperfection of humanity. He published other volumes of short stories, including Egregio signore, siamo spiacenti di... [We Are Sorry To...], Il colombre, the title story being about a mythical sea monster, and Le notti difficili [Difficult Nights]. However, none of them has attained the impressive consistency of Sessanta racconti.

Buzzati's abilities as a visual artist not only inform some of the stories and adorn most of his own book covers, but also led to his publication of picture books, including a children's book, La famosa invasione degli orsi in Sicilia (The Bears' Famous Invasion of Sicily), a book about curious ex-votos in Northern Italy, and Miracoli di Val Morel [Miracles of Val Morel], as well as a reworking of the Orpheus myth, in which Orpheus is a rock singer in 1960s Milan.

The themes of Buzzati's work are co-terminous with some of the key themes of 20th-century literature: man's solitude, the ineluctability of time and destiny, and the frisson of pleasure and terror inspired by landscapes of mountains, deserts, and cities. Though many critics have written of Kafka's influence, Buzzati evolved, in his best short stories and in his major novel, a compelling and distinctive style with which to elaborate these motifs.

—Martin L. McLaughlin

BYKAW, Vasil (Vladimirovich)

Born: Chernovshchina, Vitebsk region, Belorussia, Soviet Union (now independent as Belarus), 19 June 1924. Education: Educated at art academy, Vitebsk. Military Service: Served in the army during World War II: officer; remained in the army for ten more years. Career: Journalist for newspaper in Grodno; deputy of the Supreme Soviet of Belorussia. Lives in Minsk. Awards: Belorussian Republic Yakub Kolas prize; State prize, 1974; Lenin prize, 1986. Member: Bureau of the secretariat of the Writers Union of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, 1986.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

- U toy dzien'* [That Day]. 1949.
U pershym bai [In the First Battle]. 1949.
Abaznik [The Transport Driver] (story). 1956.
Žhurawliny kryk [The Cry of the Crane] (stories). 1956.
Zdrada [Treachery]. 1961.

Tretsiya raketa (stories). 1962; as The Third Flare, translated by Robert Daglish, 1966.
Al'piyskaya balada. 1964; as Alpine Ballad, translated by George Hanna, 1966.
Mertvym ne balits' [The Dead Feel No Pain]. 1965.
Praklyataya vyshnyia [The Accursed Hill]. 1968.
Kruhlyansky most [The Bridge at Kruhlyany]. 1969.
Sotnikaw. 1970; as The Ordeal, translated by Gordon Clough, 1972; as Sotnikov, translated by Brian Bean, in Soviet War Stories, 1990.
Abelisk [The Obelisk] (story). 1971.
Dažhys' da svitannya (story). 1973; as His Battalion and Live until Dawn, translated by Jennifer and Robert Woodhouse, 1981.
Vovčhaya zhraya (story). 1974; translated as "The Wolf Pack," in Soviet Literature, 5, 1975; as A Pack of Wolves, 1981.
Paytsi i ne viarnutstva [To Go and Not Return]. 1978.
Znak byady. 1982; as Sign of Misfortune, translated by Alan Myers, 1990.
Kar'er [The Pit]. 1987.
V tumane [In the Mist]. 1987.
Ablava [The Swoop]. 1989.

Plays

Rashenne [The Decision]. 1972.
Aposhni shants [The Last Chance]. 1974.

Other

Rečh' na s'ezde Soiza pisatelei Belorussii [Speech to the Union of Belarusian Writers], in Grani, 61. 1966.

*

Critical Studies: Vasil Bykaw: Narys tvorchastsi by Vasil Buran, 1976; "Vasil' Bykov and the Soviet Byelorussian Novel," in The Languages and Literatures of the Non-Russian Peoples of the Soviet Union, 1977; "War and Peace in the Prose of Vasil Bykau," in Die Welt der Slaven, 8(1), 1983, and "Recovery of the Past and Struggle for the Future: Vasil' Bykaw's Recent War Fiction," in World War II and the Soviet People, edited by John and Carol Garrard, 1993, all by Arnold B. McMillin; Vasil' Bykov: Ocherk tvorchestva, 1979, and Vasil Bykov (in English; includes interviews with Bykaw), 1987, both by L. Lazarev; "The Growth of Crystal: Vasil' Bykov, Characters and Circumstances" by Igor' Shtokman, in Soviet Studies in Literature, 15(2), 1979; Vasil' Bykov: Ocherk tvorchestva by I. Dedkov, 1980; Vasil' Bykov: Povesti o voine by A. Shagalov, 1989; "The Art of Vasil' Bykov" by Deming Brown, in Zapisy Belaruskaha Instytuta Navuki i Mastatstva, 20, 1992; Belarusian Literature in the 1950s and 1960s: Release and Renewal by Arnold McMillin, 1999.

* * *

Vasil Bykaw, an outstanding figure in present-day Belarusian prose, has chosen to write almost exclusively about World War II, raising the genre of war literature from one beset by cliché and hollow heroics to a level of sophistication marked by unvarnished realistic description of small-scale events, and a psychological truthfulness matched by few, if any, of his contemporaries. The consistent and unflinching moral focus of Bykaw's prose fiction brought him great popularity in the post-Stalin era, and, particularly in the last years of the Soviet Union, he has played a major role in the struggle for Belarus's true independence. He has more than once been described by his fellow-countrymen as "the conscience of the Belarusian people."

Bykaw's writing came to prominence in the atmosphere of comparative freedom associated with the Thaw. Only 17 when the war broke out, he characteristically makes very young men the central figures in his stories and novellas, seeing events, actions and moral decisions through their eyes, and often contrasting them with the demagoguery, self-seeking, bullying, and, at times, treachery and cowardice of their superiors, whose actions in the fight against a cruel enemy can sometimes be hardly less ruthless. Bykaw depicts the war on a human rather than epic scale, using tight spatial and temporal contexts, often at moments of life-and-death crisis for a small group of soldiers or partisans. Stark moral choices are to the fore, and it is Bykaw's highlighting of uncomfortable questions, often with a strong contemporary resonance that, with his avoidance of cant and stereotyping, helps to account for his works' great popularity and also for the fierce attacks he sustained from Communist critics in the 1960s and 1980s.

The narrow compass of Bykaw's works is often extended by means of memory, flashback, and dreams. Alluding to such features of Stalinism as sudden arrests and collectivization, Bykaw shows how their consequences affected the conduct of Soviet citizens during the war. For example, an episode in Zdrada [Treachery] tells the story of how a popular Komsomol secretary had been declared an "enemy of the people" in the 1930s before reappearing as a regular frontline soldier; in a later work, Znak byady (Sign of Misfortune), the behaviour of some Nazi collaborators is implicitly traced back to the bitter injustices suffered by their parents during the enforced collectivization of agriculture a decade earlier.

Often, too, Bykaw relates his war fiction to the present day, underlining the lessons of Stalinist immorality for Belarus and, indeed, the whole Soviet Union in the 1960s and 1970s. In his most expansive, autobiographical, and controversial novel, Mertvym ne balits' [The Dead Feel No Pain], a work long banned by the authorities, cruel and immoral Stalinist attitudes are graphically shown as being no less strong in Belarus of the 1960s than in the war; in Abelisk [The Obelisk] wartime injustices are hard to put right, even in the conditions of peace, and at the end of the novella Bykaw, never a dogmatist, seems to leave the ultimate decision to the reader: "And now let the reader decide. Let him sort it out. Each according to his outlook on the world, his view of the war, of heroism, of his obligation to conscience and to history . . ." The linking of past and present is continued in Bykaw's latest works, such as Kar'er [The Pit].

Bykaw's thematic consistency has led to hostile critics accusing him of repetition, but there is a world of difference between his first major novella, Žhurawlina kryk [The Cry of the Crane], the outstanding story, Kruhlyansky most [The Bridge at Kruhlyany], the novel Mertvym ne balits', his gripping first partisan novella, Sotnikaw (The Ordeal), and Sign of Misfortune. Not only does the last centre on old people rather than young heroes, it is set not in an area of conflict but in a run-down and deserted farm which has been taken over by the Germans and is being plagued by their henchmen. Again moral choices are prominent, but Bykaw shows a sensitive understanding of the various shades of grey, at the same time creating two memorable and contrasting peasant characters, and throwing much light on the misery of their lot in Soviet peacetime as well as war.

The moral imperative found throughout Bykaw's writing does not in any way impair his works' literary quality. His prose is always muscular and often lapidary, capable of vivid description and concise characterization, with sparing but effective imagery. The crises around which nearly all his works revolve make them both exciting and thought-provoking to read, both at a universal level and for a specifically Soviet readership, all too well aware that Khrushchev's denunciation of Stalin in 1956 did not mean abolition of Stalinist attitudes.

Translated into many languages (usually from Russian versions, no longer subjected to political bowdlerization in the process), Bykaw's works have set new moral and artistic standards for Soviet and Belarusian literature. Topicality and universality combine in what is amongst the most powerful war prose in any language.

—Arnold McMillin

See the essay on The Ordeal.

C

CAESAR, (Gaius) Julius

---

Born: Rome in 100 or 102 BC. Family: Married 1) Cornelia in 83 BC (died); 2) Pompeia in 67 BC (divorced 62 BC); 3) Calpurnia in 59 BC. Career: Exiled in Asia because of opposition to Sulla, 82–78 BC; fought his first military campaign in Asia, 81 BC; on return to Rome entered politics and may have assisted in Catiline's conspiracy against Cicero, q.v., and other senators; after a successful military campaign and governorship in Spain (61 BC), returned to Rome in 60 BC and formed a triumvirate with Pompey and Lucinius Crassus; consul, 59 and 56 BC; won support by his conquest of the province of Gaul, of which he was made governor, 58–50 BC; invaded Britain in 55 and 54 BC, subduing part of the country; crossed the river Rubicon without the authorization of the Senate, in effect declaring war on Pompey, his rival for power, but was victorious in the three months of civil war that followed; appointed dictator for one year; after Pompey's death, appointed for another year, and consul for five years; subdued Egypt and placed Cleopatra on the throne; made consul for ten years, and, in February 44 BC, dictator for life. Died: (assassinated) 15 March 44 BC.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

[Commentaries], edited by Bernard Hübler. 3 vols., 1893–97; also edited by Alfred Klotz, 3 vols., 1920–27, and by Klotz, Otto Seel, and Winifried Trillitzsch, 1961–; as War Commentaries, edited and translated by John Warrington, 1953; as The Commentaries, translated by William Duncan, 1753; also translated by Somerset de Chair, 1951; as The Gallic War and Other Writings, translated by Moses Hadas, 1957; as War Commentaries of Caesar, translated by Rex Warner, 1960.

Works

De bello civili, edited by Charles E. Moberly, 1872; also edited by F. Kraner and F. Hofmann, revised by H. Meusel, 1906; Books I and II edited and translated by J.M. Carter, 1991; Book III edited and translated by J.M. Carter, 1993; as Civil War with Pompeius, translated by F.P. Long, 1906; as The Civil Wars [Loeb Edition], translated by A.G. Peskett, 1914; as The Civil War, translated by Jane F. Mitchell (now Gardner), 1967; as The Civil War: With the Anonymous Alexandrian, African, and Spanish Wars, translated with introduction by J.M. Carter, 1997.

De bello Gallico, edited by Charles E. Moberly. 2 vols., 1871; also edited by John Brown, 7 vols., 1900–03, T. Rice Holmes, 1914, and E.C. Kennedy, 1959–; as Commentaries on the Gallic War, translated by F.P. Long, 1906; also translated by T. Rice Holmes, 1908; as The Gallic War, translated by H.J. Edwards, 1917; as The Conquest of Gaul, translated by S.A. Handford, 1951; also translated by Anne and Peter Wiseman, 1980; as The Gallic Wars, translated by John Warrington, 1954; as Seven Commentaries on the Gallic War, translated by Carolyn Hammond, 1996.

*

Critical Studies: Julius Caesar by Alfred Duggan, 1955; Caesar as Man of Letters by Franz E. Adcock, 1956; Julius Caesar by Michael Grant, 1969; Caesar and Roman Politics 60–50 BC by James S. Clare, 1971; Caesar and Contemporary Roman Society by Erik Wistrand, 1979; End of the Ancient Republic: Essays on Julius Caesar by Jan H. Blits, 1983; Julius Caesar and His Public Image by Zwi Yaetz, 1983; Julius Caesar, the Pursuit of Power by Ernle Bradford, 1984; Fortune's Favorites by Colleen McCullough, 1993; Cicero's Caesarian Speeches: A Stylistic Commentary, edited by Harold C. Goff, 1993; Caesar by Allan Massie, 1993; Caesar by Christian Meier, translated by David McLintock, 1995; Caesar Against the Celts by Ramon L. Jiménez, 1996; Caesar's Women by Colleen McCullough, 1996; The Comet of 44 B.C. and Caesar's Funeral Games by John T. Ramsey and A. Lewis Licht, 1997; Julius Caesar as Artful Reporter: The War Commentaries as Political Instruments, edited by Kathryn Welch and Anton Powell, 1998; Caesar Against Rome: The Great Roman Civil War by Ramon L. Jiménez, 2000; Tense and Aspect in Caesar's Narrative by Fredrik Oldsjö, 2001.

* * *

“In eloquence and in military skill Julius Caesar equalled or even surpassed the most famous.” This was the judgement of Suetonius, a biographer not given to excessive praise, and what is particularly noteworthy is that Caesar is praised as much for his excellence in the arts of language as for his prowess as a soldier. This tireless man of action, one of history's most accomplished captains, a politician whose burning ambition was matched by his consummate skill, and a lover whose passions have beguiled the imaginations of later generations, was also an orator whose reputation in Rome in the first century BC was second only to Cicero's and a writer whose excellence won the admiration of all around him.

Such was Caesar's personality that it might be supposed his was an untutored talent. However, nothing could be further from the truth. In his early years he received a basic training in oratory from the freed slave Antonius Gniphos and put his newly acquired skills to use when, in a speech which he is reported to have delivered in a somewhat high pitched voice with great fluency and vehement gestures, he accused the provincial governor Dolabella of extortion. He did not secure a conviction but he succeeded in his primary aim of drawing attention to himself. Shortly afterwards, on his way to the island of Rhodes, Caesar was taken prisoner by pirates, released on ransom, and then returned to punish his captors with condign severity. That characteristic and colourful episode becomes even more interesting when it is recalled that his motive for this journey was, in fact, the desire to study under Apollonius Molon, one of the great teachers of rhetoric of the time. Whether or not the politically clever speech attacking Catiline, which is cited by Sallust, is in fact an accurate reproduction of the words Caesar actually spoke, we certainly have further evidence here of his importance as an orator. Cicero himself draws particular attention in his Brutus to the purity of Caesar's Latin style.

Caesar's speeches are, however, no more the most important part of his literary output than is a work he wrote on philological concerns, though that too shows his concern for language. What really counts, of course, are the seven books of his De bello Gallico (The Gallic War) and the three of his De bellum civile (The Civil War). As an account of major events related by the principal actor in the unfolding drama, this is a work without parallel in ancient historical writing. The literary aspect, however, is hardly less remarkable. The Gallic War and The Civil War are categorized technically as "commentaries." They are not what the Greeks and Romans of the days would have classed as "histories." What commentaries were supposed to provide was only a bald, factual narrative of events. This was thought to be only the bare bones of history, considered a high literary form, replete with graphic battle scenes, for instance, and stirring speeches allegedly delivered to the troops by eloquent generals at suitable moments in the campaign. Nowadays we set the highest premium on the truthfulness of any historical narrative, but for antiquity some embellishment of fact was deemed legitimate in turning commentaries into the distinctly superior literary form of history.

Although Caesar purported to be writing only commentaries, it seems likely that he saw in their plain style an ideal way of presenting himself favourably to the public as an energetic man of deeds. "Gaul is all divided into three parts," the famous opening of The Gallic War, reveals something of his manner, especially when it is recalled that the sequence of Latin words permitted Caesar to place the word "three" emphatically after the noun "parts." It was notorious that Gaul was a vast, inchoate mish-mash of warring tribes, but the business-like commander Caesar cut the problem down to size. He likewise rejected the contemporary fashion of seeking to impress both by complexity in syntax and by inexhaustible variety in vocabulary, opting for something far more straightforward. His contemporaries, with their expertise in rhetoric, recognized that Caesar was, in fact, turning away from the so-called Asiatic style and using instead the Attic. Whether Caesar consciously adopted it may perhaps be debated, but that his choice was educated is undeniable. Successive generations have lauded Caesar's language as the reflection of a soldier's mind. The point that has not always been properly understood is that Caesar composed his commentaries precisely in order to create that impression.

The Gallic War, with its accounts of vast conquests north of the Alps and including, at the end of Book IV and the beginning of Book V, fascinating information about the Romans' first two raids on Britain, and The Civil War, describing the complex operations after 50 bc, were most likely written year by year after campaigning stopped. They succeeded admirably in ensuring that heed is paid above all to Caesar's role in events and to an interpretation that is most flattering to himself. What is more, it was recognized from the outset that there was in fact no way in which some man of letters could improve these particular commentaries by giving them literary polish and transforming them into history. Typically enough, Caesar had triumphed in yet another field of human endeavour.

—Christopher Smith

CALDERÓN DE LA BARCA, Pedro

Born: Madrid, Spain, 17 January 1600. Education: Educated at the Jesuit Colegio Imperial; studied canon law at the University of Alcalá, 1614–15, and University of Salamanca, 1615–c. 1621, no degree. Career: Entered the household of the Constable of Castille, Don Bernardino Fernández de Velasco, 1621; began writing plays for the court from 1623; entered order of St. James, 1637; served in the campaign against the Catalans, 1640–42; served in the household of the Duke of Alba from 1645; became a priest in 1651, but continued to write plays as court dramatist for Philip IV; chaplain of the Chapel of Reyes Nuevos, Toledo, from 1653, but lived in Madrid after 1657; Honorary Chaplain to the King, 1663. Died: 25 May 1681.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Obras, edited by Joseph Calderón. 5 vols., 1636–77.

Autos sacramentales. 1677.

Obras, edited by J. de Vera Tassis. 9 vols., 1682–91.

Poesias, edited by Adolfo de Castro Cádiz. 1845.

Dramas of Calderón: Tragic, Comic and Legendary (includes Love after Death; The Scarf and the Flower; The Physician of His Own Honour; The Constant Prince; The Purgatory of St. Patrick), translated by Denis F. McCarthy. 2 vols., 1853.

Six Dramas of Calderón (includes The Mayor of Zalamea; Beware of Smooth Water; Gil Perez the Gallician; Keep Your Own Secret; The Painter of His Own Dishonour; Three Judgements at a Blow), translated by Edward Fitzgerald. 1853; revised and enlarged edition as Eight Dramas (including additionally the adaptations Such Stuff as Dreams Are Made Of and The Mighty Magician), 1906.

Mysteries of Corpus Christi (includes The Divine Philothea; Belshazzar's Feast; The Poison and the Antidote), translated by Denis F. McCarthy. 1867.

Three Dramas of Calderón (includes The Devotion of the Cross; The Sorceries of Sin; Love Is the Greatest Enchantment), translated by Denis F. McCarthy. 1870.

Calderón's Dramas, translated by Denis F. McCarthy. 1873.

Obras escogidas. 1940.

Obra lírica, edited by M. de Montoliu. 1943.

Obras completas, edited by Luis Astrana Marín and Ángel Valbuena Briones. 3 vols., 1956–59:

Dramas, edited by Luis Astrana Marín. 1959.

Comedias, edited by Ángel Valbuena Briones. 1956.

Autos sacramentales, edited by Ángel Valbuena Prat. 1959.

Four Plays (includes Secret Vengeance for Secret Insult; The Devotion of the Cross; The Mayor of Zalamea; The Phantom Lady), translated by Edwin Honig. 1961.

Tragedias, edited by Francisco Ruiz Ramón. 3 vols., 1967–69.

Four Comedies (includes From Bad to Worse; The Secret Spoken Aloud; The Worst Is Not Always Spoken; The Advantages and Disadvantages of a Name), translated by Kenneth Muir. 1980.

Three Comedies (includes A House with Two Doors Is Difficult to Guard; Mornings of April and May; No Trifling with Love), translated by Kenneth Muir and Ann L. Mackenzie. 1985.

Teatro cómico breve, edited by María Luisa Lobato. 1989.

Plays 1 (The Surgeon of Honour; Three Judgements in One; Life Is a Dream), translated by Gwynne Edwards. 1990.

Plays (selection: modern editions or plays translated into English)

A María el corazón, edited by Giacomo Vaifro Sabatelli (with La hidalga del valle). 1962.

A secreto agravio, secreta venganza, edited by Edward Nagy. 1966; in Tragedias, 2, 1968; as Secret Vengeance for Secret Insult, translated by Edwin Honig, in Four Plays, 1961.

El alcalde de Zalamea, edited by Peter N. Dunn. 1966; also edited by Alberto Porqueras Mayo, 1977; as The Mayor of Zalamea, translated by Edward Fitzgerald, in Six Dramas, 1853, and Eight Dramas, 1906; also translated by William E. Colford, 1959; Edwin Honig, in Four Plays, 1961; Walter Starkie, in Eight Spanish Plays of the Golden Age, 1964; adapted by Adrian Mitchell, 1981.

Amar después de la muerte, as Love after Death, translated by Denis F. McCarthy, in Dramas of Calderón. 1853; also translated by Roy Campbell, in Classic Theatre, 3, edited by Eric Bentley, 1960.

Amar y ser amado; divina Filotea, as The Divine Philothea, translated by Denis F. McCarthy, in Mysteries of Corpus Christi. 1867.

La aurora en Copacabana, edited by Antonio Pages Larraya. 1956.

La banda y la flor, as The Scarf and the Flower, translated by Denis F. McCarthy, in Dramas of Calderón. 1853.

Los cabellos de Absalón, edited by Helmy F. Giacomani. 1968, also edited by Evangelina Rodríguez Cuadros, 1989.

Cada uno para sí, edited by José M. Ruano de la Haza. 1982.

Casa con dos puertas mala es de guardar, edited by G.T. Northrup, in Three Plays. 1926; as A House with Two Doors Is Difficult to Guard, translated by Kenneth Muir and Ann L. Mackenzie, in Three Comedies, 1985.

El castillo de Lindabridis, edited by Victoria B. Torres. 1987.

Celos aun del aire matan, edited by J. Subirá. 1933; as Even Baseless Jealousy Can Kill, translated by M. Stroud, 1981.

La cena de Baltazar, in Tragedias, 3. 1969; as Belshazzar's Feast, translated by Denis F. McCarthy, in Mysteries of Corpus Christi, 1867.

La cisma de Inglaterra, as The Schism in England, edited and translated by Ann L. Mackenzie and Kenneth Muir. 1990.

La dama duende, edited by José Luis Alonso. 1966; as The Phantom Lady, translated by Edwin Honig, in Four Plays, 1961.

La desdicha de la voz, edited by Gwynne Edwards. 1970.

La devoción de la Cruz, edited by Sidney F. Wexler. 1966; in Tragedias, 3, 1969; as The Devotion of the Cross, translated by Denis F. McCarthy, in Three Dramas of Calderón, 1870; also translated by Edwin Honig, in Four Plays, 1961.

Dicha y desdicha del nombre, as The Advantages and Disadvantages of a Name, translated by Kenneth Muir, in Four Comedies. 1980.

La divina Filotea, edited by José Carlos de Torres Martínez, in Segismundo 3. 1967.

El divino Jasón, edited by Ignacio Arellano and Ángel L. Cilveti. 1992.

Eco y Narciso, edited by Charles V. Aubrun. 1961.

En esta vida todo es verdad y todo mentira, edited by D.W. Cruickshank. 1971.

Los cantos de la culpa, as The Sorceries of Sin, translated by Denis F. McCarthy, in Three Dramas of Calderón. 1870.

La estatua de Prometeo, edited by Charles V. Aubrun. 1961; also edited by Margaret Rich Greer, 1986.

Fieras afemina amor, edited by Edward M. Wilson. 1984.

El golfo de las sirenas, edited by Sandra L. Nielson. 1989.

El gran duque de Gandía, edited by Václav Cerný. 1963.

El gran teatro del mundo, edited by Eugenio Frutos Cortés. 1958; also edited by Domingo Ynduráin, 1973; as The Great Theatre of the World and Genius of Calderón, translated by Richard C. Trench, 1856; as The Great World Theatre, translated by Francis E. Sipman, 1955; as The Great Stage of the World, translated by George W. Brandt, 1976.

Guárdate del agua mansa, edited by Ignacio Arellano and Víctor García Ruiz. 1989; as Beware of Smooth Water, translated by Edward Fitzgerald, in Six Dramas, 1853, and Eight Dramas, 1906.

Gustos y disgustos son no más que imaginación, edited by Claudio Y. Silva. 1974.

La hidalga del valle, edited by Giacomo Vaifro Sabatelli (with A María el corazón). 1962.

La hija del aire, edited by Gwynne Edwards. 1970; also edited by Francisco Ruiz Ramón, 1987.

Luis Pérez el gallego, as Gil Perez the Gallician, translated by Edward Fitzgerald, in Six Dramas, 1853, and Eight Dramas, 1906.

El mágico prodigioso, edited by Alexander A. Parker and Malveena McKendrick. 1972; as The Wonderworking Magician, translated by Denis F. McCarthy, in Calderón's Dramas, 1873; also translated by Bruce W. Wardropper, 1982; as The Mighty Magician, translated by Edward Fitzgerald, in Eight Dramas, 1906; as The Prodigious Magician, translated by Wardropper, 1982.

Mañanas de abril y mayo, as Mornings of April and May, translated by Kenneth Muir and Ann L. Mackenzie, in Three Comedies. 1985.

El mayor encanto amor, as Love Is the Greatest Enchantment, translated by Denis F. McCarthy, in Three Dramas of Calderón. 1870.

El mayor monstruo los celos, edited by Everett W. Hess. 1965; in Tragedias, 1, 1967.

El médico de su honra, edited by C.A. Jones. 1961; in Tragedias, 2, 1968; also edited by D. W. Cruickshank, 1981; as The Physician of His Own Honour, translated by Denis F. McCarthy, in Dramas of Calderón, 1853; as The Surgeon of His Honour, translated by Roy Campbell, 1960; as The Surgeon of Honour, translated by Gwynne Edwards, in Plays 1, 1990; as The Physician of His Honour, translated by Dian Fox with Donald Hindley, 1997.

Mejor está que estaba, as Fortune Mends, in The Theatrical Recorder, 2. 1806.

Nadie fie su secreto, as Keep Your Own Secret, translated by Edward Fitzgerald, in Six Dramas. 1853, and Eight Dramas, 1906.

No hay burlas con el amor, edited by I. Arellano. 1981; as No Trifling with Love, translated by Kenneth Muir and Ann L. Mackenzie, in Three Comedies, 1985.

No hay cosa como callar, edited by Ángel Valbuena Briones, in Comedias de capa y espada, 2. 1954.

No hay más fortuna que Dios, edited by Alexander A. Parker. 1949.

No hay que creer ni en la verdad, edited by Václav Cerný. 1968.

No siempre lo peor es cierto, edited by Luis G. Villaverde and Lucile Fariñas. 1977; as The Worst Is Not Always Certain, translated by Kenneth Muir, in Four Comedies, 1980.

Peor está que estaba, as From Bad to Worse, translated by Kenneth Muir, in Four Comedies. 1980.

El pintor de su deshonra, edited by Manuel Ruiz Lagos. 1969; as The Painter of His Own Dishonour, translated by Edward Fitzgerald, in Six Dramas, 1853, and Eight Dramas, 1906; as The Painter of His Dishonour, edited and translated by A.K.G. Paterson, 1991.

El pleito matrimonial del cuerpo y el alma, edited by Manfred Engelbert. 1969.

El postrer duelo de España, edited by Guy Rossetti. 1977.

El príncipe constante, edited by Alexander A. Parker. 1975; as The Constant Prince, translated by Denis F. McCarthy, in Dramas of Calderón, 1853.

Tu prójimo como a ti, edited by Mary Lorene Thomas. 1989.

El purgatorio de san Patricio, as The Purgatory of St. Patrick, translated by Denis F. McCarthy, in Dramas of Calderón. 1853.

El secreto a voces, edited by José M. de Osmá. 1938; as The Secret Spoken Aloud, translated by Kenneth Muir, in Four Comedies, 1980.

El sitio de Bredá, edited by Johanna R. Schrek. 1957.

Las tres justicias en una, as Three Judgements at a Blow, translated by Edward Fitzgerald, in Six Dramas. 1853, and Eight Dramas, 1906; as Three Judgements in One, translated by Gwynne Edwards, in Plays 1, 1990.

El veneno y la triaca, translated in part as The Poison and the Antidote by Denis F. McCarthy, in Mysteries of Corpus Christi. 1867.

El verdadero dios Pan, edited by José M. de Osmá. 1949.

La vida es sueño, edited by Augusta Cortina. 1955; also edited by A.E. Sloman, 1961, Everett W. Hesse, 1978, José María García Martín, 1983, J.M. Ruano de la Haza, 1992, and by Ann L. Mackenzie, 1992; as Such Stuff as Dreams Are Made Of, translated by Edward Fitzgerald, in Eight Dramas, 1906; several subsequent translations as Life Is a Dream, including by William E. Colford, 1958, Roy Campbell, in The Classic Theatre 3, edited by Eric Bentley, 1960, Kathleen Raine and R.M. Nadal, 1968, and by Gwynne Edwards, in Plays 1, 1990.

Verse

Psalle et sile, edited by Leopoldo Trenor. 1936.

Other

Obras menores, edited by A. Pérez Gómez. 1969.

*

Bibliography: A Chronology of the Plays of Calderón de la Barca by H.W. Bilborn, 1928; Bibliografía temática de estudios sobre el teatro español antiguo by Warren T. McCready, 1966; Calderón de la Barca Studies 1951–69 by Jack H. Parker and Arthur M. Fox, 1971.

Critical Studies: The Allegorical and Metaphorical Language in the Autos Sacramentales of Calderón by Frances de Sales MacGarry, 1937; The Allegorical Drama of Calderón, 1943, and The Mind and Art of Calderón: Essays on the "Comedies," 1988, both by Alexander A. Parker; The Dramatic Craftsmanship of Calderón: His Use of Earlier Plays by Albert E. Sloman, 1958; Pedro Calderón de la Barca: A Biography by Harry, Lund, 1964; Critical Essays on the Theatre of Calderón edited by Bruce W. Wardropper, 1965; A Literary History of Spain: The Golden Age: Drama by Edward M. Wilson and Duncan Moir, 1971; Calderón and the Seizures of Honor by Edwin Honig, 1972; The Textual Criticism of Calderón's Comedias

by E.M. Wilson and D.W. Cruikshank, 1973; Calderón de la Barca: Imagery, Rhetoric, and Drama by John V. Bryans, 1977; The Prison and the Labyrinth: Studies in Calderonian Tragedy by Gwynne Edwards, 1978; On Calderón by James E. Maraniss, 1978; Calderón's Characters: An Existential Point of View by Barbara Louise Mujica, 1980; Critical Perspectives on Calderón de la Barca edited by Frederick A. De Armas and others, 1981, and The Return of Astrea: An Astral-Imperial Myth in Calderón by De Armas, 1986; The Characters, Plots and Settings of Calderón's Comedias by W. Richard Tyler and Sergio D. Elizondo, 1981; Calderón de la Barca at the Tercentenary: Comparative Views edited by P. Sydney Cravens, 1982; Reason and the Passions in the "Comedias" of Calderón by David Jonathan Hildner, 1982; Calderón: The Secular Plays by Robert Ter Horst, 1982; Approaches to the Theater of Calderón edited by Michael McGaha, 1982; The Development of Imagery in Calderón's Comedias by William R. Blue, 1983; Calderón in the German Lands and the Low Countries: His Reception and Influence 1654–1780 by Henry W. Sullivan, 1983; The Limits of Illusion: A Critical Study of Calderón by Anthony J. Cascardi, 1984; Calderón and the Baroque Tradition edited by Kurt Levy, Jesús Ava, and Gethin Hughes, 1985; Kings in Calderón: A Study in Characterization and Political Theory by Dian Fox, 1986; Myth and Mythology in the Theater of Pedro Calderón de la Barca by Thomas Austin O'Connor, 1988; The Mind and Art of Calderón: Essays on the Comedias by Alexander A. Parker, 1989; On the Boards and in the Press: Calderón's "Las tres justicias en una" by Isaac Benazbu, 1991; The Play of Power: Mythological Court Dramas of Calderón de la Barca by Margaret Rich Greer, 1991; Calderón: The Imagery of Tragedy by Charlene E. Suscavage, 1991; The Prince in the Tower: Perceptions of "La Vida es Sueño," edited by Frederick A. de Armas, 1993; Allegories of Kingship: Calderón and the Anti-Machiavellian Tradition by Stephen Rupp, 1996; The Calderonian Stage: Body and Soul, edited by Manuel Delgado Morales, 1997; Calderón del la Barca: "La Vida es Sueño" by Paul Lewis-Smith, 1998; Metaphors of Conversion in Seventeenth-century Spanish Drama by Leslie Levin, 1999.

* * *

Don Pedro Calderón de la Barca, one of the two greatest dramatists of the Spanish Golden Age, was extremely prolific, and his work was of many different kinds. Although he was not ordained until he was over 50, his plays are frequently religious in spirit, and many of them are directly doctrinal. In particular he wrote more than 70 one-act allegorical dramas which Shelley, although an atheist, called "incomparable autos." They resemble, but are greatly superior to, English Morality plays; and, like the Mystery cycles, they were performed on wagons in the open air. The best known of the autos, outside Spain, is El gran teatro del mundo (The Great Stage of the World) in which representative human beings are put into the world to perform their allotted parts on the stage of life. Calderón sometimes rewrote his secular plays as allegories: there is, for example, an auto of La vida es sueño (Life Is a Dream) and another based on El mayor encanto amor (Love Is the Greatest Enchantment), dramatizing the story of Ulysses and Circe.

Several of Calderón's full-length plays, written for performance in the public theatres of Madrid, have religious themes. It is arguable that El mágico prodigioso (The Wonderworking Magician) is the finest religious play in any language; and El príncipe constante (The Constant Prince), in which the phantom of the martyred prince leads the Portuguese army to victory, and La devoción de la Cruz (The Devotion of the Cross), which ends in the miraculous resurrection and repentance of a scoundrel, are among Calderón's most admired plays. When he wrote about Henry VIII in La cisma de Inglaterra (The Schism in England), he concentrated, in a way Shakespeare did not, on the religious issue. His most famous play, Life Is a Dream, is directly didactic, demonstrating that the pursuit of fame or wealth is foolish, that we ought to overcome our passions, and set our hearts on eternal things. Segismundo, returned to prison, is made to believe that he has only dreamed that he was a prince with absolute power; but when he is released again he decides to behave morally instead of selfishly.

Several of Calderón's important plays are marriage tragedies, demonstrating the disastrous effects of the code of honour under which husbands were expected to kill their wives on the mere suspicion of infidelity. In two of these plays the wives are innocent and in a third the imprudent wife has been compelled to marry a man she does not love. In El médico de su honra (The Surgeon of Honour) a husband has his wife bled to death; in A secreto agravio, secreta venganza (Secret Vengeance for Secret Insult) another deluded husband murders both his wife and her lover; and in El pintor de su deshonra (The Painter of His Own Dishonour) Juan Roca kills the innocent wife whom he still loves. Calderón contrasts the honour code with Christian ethics, most obviously in the first of these plays, but the husbands are regarded as mistaken rather than evil: one is provided by the King with another wife, another, tortured with remorse, is allowed to go free, and the third seeks to die in battle. Othello, who commits suicide when he discovers that Desdemona was innocent, provides an illuminating contrast. A modern reader has to make an effort of imagination to put himself in the place of the original audience; but it is important to note that the cruelty of the code is criticized by a number of sympathetic characters, even by those who conform to it in practice.

One of the most popular of Calderón's dramas, El alcalde de Zalamea (The Mayor of Zalamea), contrasts two conceptions of honour: that of the aristocratic rapist who prefers to die rather than marry the woman he has wronged, and that of her father, the Mayor, who believes that his own honour can be redeemed by the marriage of the rapist to his daughter or, failing that, by his execution. The King, who arrives opportunely, commends the justice of the execution, although the man should properly have been given a court-martial.

Calderón also wrote a large number of love comedies—cloak and sword plays, as they are often called. These have ingenious plots, witty dialogue, charming poetry, comic jealousy, sword fights, confusion over identity, humorous servants, and romantic lovemaking. The heroes, fashionable gallants, are, as Goethe complained, often indistinguishable; but the heroines, whether unjustly suspected of unchastity or gay flouters of convention, are expertly characterized. In a male-dominated society, with rigid notions of female propriety, they can obtain the husbands of their choice only by refusing to conform. One of the two heroines of Mañanas de abril y mayo (Mornings of April and May) finally persuades her jealous lover to trust her, and not to insist on a proof of her innocence; the other one exposes, and refuses to marry, a conceited philanderer. Marcela, in Casa con dos puertas malas es de guardar (A House with Two Doors Is Difficult to Guard), secures a husband by meeting her brother's guest clandestinely; Angela in La dama duende (The Phantom Lady) uses a concealed door to obtain access to a guest's room; and the lovers in El secreto a voces (The Secret Spoken Aloud) communicate with each other in public by use of an ingenious code.

These comedies often have an element of satire, as of the affected Beatriz in No hay burlas con el amor (No Trifling with Love). Other plays in this genre raise more serious issues: Dicha y desdicha del nombre (The Advantages and Disadvantages of a Name) contains an attempted murder and an attempted rape; and No hay cosa como callar begins with a rape and ends, years later, with the marriage of the rapist to his victim.

In his later years Calderón wrote mainly for the Court theatres, and here he made use of elaborate scenery, spectacle, and music. The plays were often on classical and mythological subjects, and usually didactic.

There were adaptations of some of Calderón's plays in France and England during the second half of the 17th century; but if one compares, for example, Wycherley's Love in a Wood with Mornings of April and May, Calderón's plots are submerged in several others; the tone is vulgarized: the rake is rewarded with a bride; and undistinguished prose is substituted for the delicate verse of the original.

—Kenneth Muir

See the essays on The Great Stage of the World and Life Is a Dream.

CALLIMACHUS

Born: Cyrene, North Africa (now Libya), c. 310–305 BC; active during first half of 3rd century BC and until at least 246 BC. Career: Said to have been a schoolteacher in the Alexandrian suburb of Eleusis before working at the royal library and museum at Alexandria; once believed to have been librarian, but apparently never held that post, though he was responsible for compiling the main bi-bibliographical reference catalogue (Pinaces) from which is derived much of the information we have today about ancient Greek writers and their works. Traditionally supposed to have quarrelled with Apollonius of Rhodes, q.v., but evidence for this is poor, though he does seem to have been involved in numerous literary enmities. The scholars Eratosthenes and Aristophanes of Byzantium were among his pupils. Died: c. 240 BC.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

[Works], edited by R. Pfeiffer. 2 vols., 1949–53; supplemented by P. Parsons and H. Lloyd-Jones, in Supplementum Hellenisticum (Texte und Kommentare 11), 1983; translated by A.W. and G.R. Mari [Loeb Edition], 1921, and C.A. Trypanis [Loeb Edition], 1958; selection translated by Robert A. Furness, 1931.

Verse

Hymn to Zeus, edited by G.R. McLennan (with commentary). 1977.
Hymn to Apollo, edited by F. Williams (with commentary). 1978.
Hymn to Delos, edited by W.H. Mineur (with commentary). 1984.
Hymn to Demeter, edited by N. Hopkinson (with commentary). 1984.
The Fifth Hymn, edited by A.W. Bulloch. 1985.

Hymns, Epigrams, Select Fragments, translated by Stanley Lombardo and Diane Rayor. 1988.

Hecale, edited by A.S. Hollis (with commentary). 1990.

The Poems of Callimachus, translated by Frank Nisetich, 2001.

*

Critical Studies: The Discovery of the Mind by Bruno Snell, 1953; History of Classical Scholarship from the Beginnings to the End of the Hellenistic Age by R. Pfeiffer, 1968; Callimachus' Iambi by D.L. Clayman, 1980; Callimachus by John Ferguson, 1980; Cambridge History of Classical Literature I: Greek Literature edited by P.E. Easterling and B.M.W. Knox, 1984; The Well-Read Muse: Present and Past in Callimachus and the Hellenistic Poets by Peter Bing, 1988; Callimachus: Hecale by A.S. Hollis, 1990; The Song of the Swan: Lucretius and the Influence of Callimachus by Harold Donohue, 1993; Callimachus and his Critics by Alan Cameron, 1995; Callimachus' Book of Iambi by Arnd Kerkhecker, 1999.

* * *

Callimachus was the most brilliant intellectual and poet of his time, and, although an extremely controversial figure, had a more radical influence on the course of Greek (and Roman) poetry than almost any other writer except Homer. He wrote prolifically, but few of his works now survive (or they are known only in fragmentary form), and we have to gauge Callimachus' importance from his effect on other writers. Yet his vivacious, penetrating, and rather quixotic intelligence shows through in almost every line that we have. He was said to have written more than 800 works altogether, and was one of the few writers who was equally scholar and poet, in both activity and achievement.

His research involved compilation and classification of data rather than speculative thinking; he wrote scarcely anything of a philosophical or historical nature, and although some of his works have titles such as On Birds, or On Winds, these were surveys rather than scientific enquiries based on independent observation. However, his work was of fundamental importance in another way: he lived at a point in history when modern scholarship was just beginning to evolve, and in a place where the resources to conduct that scholarship were being assembled for the first time; the principles of philosophical and scientific enquiry were laid down in Athens by Plato and Aristotle and their pupils, but the idea of a body of knowledge, and its collection and transmission, came to maturity in 3rd-century bc Alexandria. Callimachus played a key part in the evolution of the principles and standards of true, energetic scholarship, and was one of its most important practitioners; many of the great intellectuals of the next generation were his pupils. His most important work, the Pinaces, the reference catalogue to the library, consisted of 120 books, and was the first of its kind and exemplary: it classified the works of all Greek writers of any importance and attempted to provide all the basic information that a reader might need (biography, contents, authenticity, etc.). In effect the Pinaces was the first encyclopedia in Western culture.

As a poet Callimachus was equally vigorous and idiosyncratic. He thought that he diagnosed muddle and mediocrity in the mainstream of contemporary Greek poetry, and set a premium in his own work on originality and refreshment of the language. Late in his career Callimachus produced a collection of his own poetry, and wrote a preface for it, in verse, expounding the critical principles that had guided him as a writer ('The Prologue' to the Aetia). He claimed to have avoided the trite, uninspired, hackneyed, "high" manner which was popular at the time and to have been uncompromisingly unorthodox and original, even if that took him "along a narrower path." Concision and clarity were of the utmost importance in his work; he was fascinated by language and words, and set out, almost ideologically, to transform the linguistic material of poetry. Like any Greek poet he was thoroughly imbued with Homer, but was too great a writer to think that Homer needed to be overthrown: he advocated passionately the creation of a "fine," spare, even elegant style, with none of the inflation of unthinking traditionality. Poetry had to be wrought, and writing was the result of work. Despite being a court poet, dependent on, and gratefully acknowledging, the support of royal patronage, he was a nonconformist, an experimenter, at times an iconoclast, and seems always to have been controversial and involved in fierce argument and criticism. He had a perpetual sense of the odd or bizarre. Thus it was the mundane dimensions of what were supposed to be the ideal realms that intrigued him: what are the practicalities of being a hero, and what are the day-to-day effects when man encounters god? His gods are often children and his men involved in pursuing their own odd rituals, and although he represents religious passion with sympathetic insight, he suggests that the only real meaning comes from the limited warmth of human friendship, not from the spiritual or the sublime.

His most important work was the Aetia [Origins or Causes], an eccentrically learned work in 4,000–6,000 lines, which mixed strange and wonderful stories into an episodic, almost picaresque narrative of religious rituals and practices: the length was epic, but the style and concerns crankily different, with off-beat accounts, bizarre humour, unpredictable climaxes, and intricate but razor-sharp language. Narrative poetry was never the same again. The Hecale was an inverted epic, nominally "about" Theseus' defeat of the bull of Marathon, but mostly comprising an account of his stay overnight, during a rainstorm, in the hut of a solitary peasant woman. His 13 Iambi were mostly social satire, with some personal invective, directed at the foibles of human ambition. None of these works survives in full, but we do possess the complete text of six "hymns." All are complex but fine texts, superficially dealing with the myths and rituals connected with some of the principal Olympian deities, with some recognition of the semi-divine power of his royal patrons; but their overall effect is to convey, behind a brilliant, edgy, and often entertaining manner, that traditional religion is puzzling and disturbing. All is not, in fact, right with the world. Callimachus also wrote epigrams which are taut, wry, witty, and pungent, and among the very best in the long history of the genre.

Callimachus changed the course of Greek poetry: writers who saw themselves as "mainstream" thereafter were deeply influenced by both his style and outlook, and for poets rebelling against their own traditions he was the archetypal avant-garde nonconformist.

—A.W. Bulloch

See the essays on Aetia and Hecale.

CALVINO, Italo

Born: Santiago de las Vegas, Cuba, 15 October 1923. Family moved to San Remo, Italy, 1925. Education: Educated at Ginnasio-liceo

Cassini, San Remo; University of Turin, 1941–47; Royal University, Florence, 1943. Family: Married Esther Judith Singer (“Chichita”) in 1964, one daughter. Career: Conscripted into the Young Fascists, 1940; left, sought refuge in the Alps with his brother, and joined the Communist Resistance, 1943–45. Contributor, La Nostra Lotta, Il Garibaldino, Voce Della Democrazia, and other periodicals, from 1945; first contributed to L’Unità, 1945; member of the editorial staff, Einaudi, publishers, Turin, 1948–84; contributor, Contemporaneo and Città Aperta, from 1954; co-editor, with Elio Vittorini, Il Menabò, Milan, 1959–67; travelled to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, 1952, and the United States, 1959–60; settled in Paris, 1967, while continuing to work for Einaudi; contributor, La Repubblica, from 1979; moved to Rome, 1980; member, editorial board, Garzanti, publishers, 1984. Awards: L’Unità prize, 1945; Viareggio prize, 1957; Bagutta prize, 1959; Veillon prize, 1963; Feltrinelli prize, 1972; Austrian State prize for European literature, 1976; Nice Festival prize, 1982. Member: Honorary member, American Academy, 1975. Died: 19 September 1985.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Romanzi e racconti, edited by Claudio Milanini, Mario Barenghi, and Bruno Falchetto. 1991–.

Fiction

Il sentiero dei nidi di ragno. 1947; as The Path to the Nest of Spiders, translated by Archibald Colquhoun, 1956.

Ultimo viene il corvo. 1949; as Adam, One Afternoon, and Other Stories, translated by Archibald Colquhoun and Peggy Wright, 1957.

I nostri antenati. 1960; as Our Ancestors, translated by Archibald Colquhoun, 1980.

Il visconte dimezzato. 1952; as The Cloven Viscount, translated by Archibald Colquhoun, with The Non-Existent Knight, 1962.

Il barone rampante. 1957; edited by J.M. Woodhouse, 1988; as The Baron in the Trees, translated by Archibald Colquhoun, 1959.

Il cavaliere inesistente. 1959; as The Non-Existent Knight, translated by Archibald Colquhoun, with The Cloven Viscount, 1962.

L’entrata in guerra (trilogy of stories). 1954.

I racconti (stories). 1958.

Marcovaldo; ovvero, Le stagioni in città, illustrations by Sergio Tofano. 1963; as Marcovaldo; or, The Seasons in the City, translated by William Weaver, 1983.

La giornata d’uno scrutatore. 1963.

La nuvola di smog e La formica argentina. 1965; La nuvola di smog as Smog, in Difficult Loves; Smog; A Plunge Into Real Estate, 1983.

Le cosmicomiche (stories). 1965; enlarged edition, as Cosmicomiche, vecchie e nuove, 1984; as Cosmicomics, translated by William Weaver, 1969.

Ti con zero (stories). 1967; as T Zero, translated by William Weaver, 1969; as Time and the Hunter, translated by Weaver, 1969.

La memoria del mondo e altre storie cosmicomiche. 1968.

Gli amori difficili. 1970; as Difficult Loves, in Difficult Loves; Smog; A Plunge Into Real Estate, 1983.

The Watcher and Other Stories, translated by William Weaver and Archibald Colquhoun. 1971.

Le città invisibili. 1972; as Invisible Cities, translated by William Weaver, 1974.

Il castello dei destini incrociati. 1973; as The Castle of Crossed Destinies, translated by William Weaver, 1976.

Il gigante orripilante. 1975.

Se una notte d’inverno un viaggiatore. 1979; as If on a Winter’s Night a Traveller, translated by William Weaver, 1981.

Palomar. 1983; as Mr. Palomar, translated by William Weaver, 1985.

Difficult Loves; Smog; A Plunge Into Real Estate, translated by William Weaver, Archibald Colquhoun, and Peggy Wright. 1983.

Sotto il sole giaguaro (unfinished). 1986; as Under the Jaguar Sun, translated by William Weaver, 1988.

Prima che tu dica “Pronto.” 1993; as Numbers in the Dark: And Other Stories, translated by Tim Parks, 1995.

Plays

La panchina (libretto), music by Sergio Liberovici (produced 1956).

La vera storia (libretto), music by Luciano Berio (produced 1982).

Un re in ascolto (libretto), music by Luciano Berio (produced 1984).

Other

Italo Calvino racconta l’Orlando furioso di Ludovico Ariosto, edited by Carlo Minoia. 1970.

Una pietra sopra: Discorsi di letteratura e società (essays). 1980; as The Uses of Literature, translated by Patrick Creagh, 1986; as The Literature Machine, translated by Creagh, 1987.

Collezione di sabbia: Emblemi bizzarri e inquietanti del nostro passato e del nostro futuro gli oggetti raccontano il mondo. 1984.

Lezioni americane: Sei proposte per il prossimo millennio (texts for Charles Eliot Norton lectures). 1988; as Six Memos for the Next Millennium, translated by Patrick Creagh, 1988.

Sulla fiaba, edited by Mario Lavagetto. 1988.

La strada di San Giovanni. 1990; as The Road to San Giovanni, translated by Tim Parks, 1993.

Perchè leggere i classici (essays). 1992.

Editor, Fiabe italiane: Raccolte della tradizione popolare durante gli ultimi cento anni e trascritte in lingua dai vari dialetti. 1956, re-edited by Ersilia Zamponi, 3 vols., 1986–89; selections as Italian Fables, translated by Louis Brigante, 1959; as Italian Folk Tales, translated by Sylvia Mulcahey, 1975; as Italian Folktales (complete), translated by George Martin, 1980.

Editor, Poesie edite e inedite, by Cesare Pavese. 1962.

Editor, Lettere 1945–1950, by Cesare Pavese. 1966.

Editor, with Lorenzo Mondo, Lettere 1924–1950, by Cesare Pavese. 1966.

Editor, Vittorini: Progettazione e letteratura. 1968.

Editor, Teoria dei quattro movimenti: Il nuovo mondo amoroso e altri scritti, by Charles Fourier. 1971.

Editor, Porfira, by Silvina Ocampo. 1973.

Editor, Il Principe Granchio e altre fiabe italiane. 1974.

Editor, Le più belle pagine, by Tommaso Landolfi. 1982.

Editor, Racconti fantastici dell’Ottocento. 2 vols., 1983.

Translator, I fiori blu, by Raymond Queneau. 1967.

Translator, La canzone di polistirene, by Raymond Queneau. 1985.

*

Critical Studies: Italo Calvino by Germana Pescio Bottino, 1967; Italo Calvino: A Reappraisal and an Appreciation of the Trilogy by J.R. Woodhouse, 1968; Invito alla lettura di Calvino by Giuseppe Bonura, 1972, revised edition, 1987; Italo Calvino by Contardo Calligaris, 1973, augmented by G.P. Bernasconi, 1985; I segni nuovi di Italo Calvino by Francesca Bernardini Napoletano, 1977; Italo Calvino: Writer and Critic by Jo Ann Cannon, 1981; With Pleated Eye and Garnet Wing: Symmetries of Italo Calvino by I.T. Olken, 1984; Calvino issue of Review of Contemporary Fiction, 6(2), 1986; Italo Calvino: Metamorphoses of Fantasy by Albert Howard Carter III, 1987; Italo Calvino: Tra realtà e favola by Giovanna Finocchiaro Chimirri, 1987; Italo Calvino: Introduzione e guida allo studio dell'opera calviniana: Storia e antologia della critica by Giorgio Baroni, 1988; Introduzione a Calvino by Cristina Benussi, 1989; Le capre di Bikini: Calvino giornalista e Saggista 1945–1985 by Gian Carlo Ferretti, 1989; Calvino Revisited edited by Franco Ricci, 1989; L'Utopia discontinua. Saggio su Italo Calvino by Claudio Milanini, 1990; Calvino and the Age of Neorealism: Fables of Estrangement by Lucia Re, 1990; Difficult Games: A Reading of I racconti by Franci Ricci, 1990; Italo Calvino: a San Remo by Piero Ferrua, 1991; Calvino's Fictions: Cogito and Cosmos by Kathryn Hume, 1992; Understanding Italo Calvino by Beno Weiss, 1993; Italo Calvino: Eros and Language by Tommasina Gabriele, 1994; Humility's Deceit: Calvino Reading Ariosto Reading Calvino by Wiley Feinstein, 1995; Italo Calvino by Martin McLaughlin, 1998; Italo Calvino: A Journey Towards Postmodernism by Constance Markey, 1999; Under the Radiant Sun and Crescent Moon: Italo Calvino's Storytelling by Angela M. Jeannot, 2000.

* * *

Italo Calvino was perhaps the greatest, and certainly the most versatile, Italian novelist in the second half of the 20th century. This versatility is apparent not only in the sophisticated content of his prolific output, but also in the complex structuring devices and the range of styles he deployed in his many fictions.

He began as a "neorealist", one of the post-World War II generation of Italians who sought to depict, in a new, explicit style influenced by American novelists, the new realism of Italy which had been ignored in the 20 years of Fascist rule. His first novel, Il sentiero dei nidi di ragno (The Path to the Nest of Spiders), examined the partisan movement not in hagiographic terms, but as seen through the naive eye of an engaging urchin, Pin. This technique allowed Calvino to mix a serious message with irony, and blend realism with elements borrowed from fairy-tales and Robert Louis Stevenson's Treasure Island.

At the beginning of the 1950s, disillusioned with trying to deliver a serious socialist message in tales that could no longer narrate the heroics of the Resistance, Calvino turned to writing the kind of story he himself would have liked to read. I nostri antenati (Our Ancestors) is a trilogy which, in its three separate parts, owes much, respectively, to the fairy-tale, the adventure story, and the chivalric romance. In Il visconte dimezzato (The Cloven Viscount), a viscount is torn in two by a cannonball, and the two halves, the Good Half and the Bad Half, return to torment his kingdom with both excessive goodness and excessive cruelty. Il barone rampante (The Baron in the Trees) also has an allegorical dimension, but is a fuller story; indeed it is the longest novel Calvino ever wrote. It recounts the life of a rebel aristocrat who rejects the outmoded values of his eccentric family to embrace the ideals of the French Enlightenment and Revolution. Although the cause (refusing to eat a plate of snails) and nature (climbing into the trees and staying there) of his rebellion seem trivial, the book argues a profound view about the place of the intellectual in society during times of ideological upheaval. Il cavaliere inesistente (The Non-Existent Knight) narrates a young knight's search for identity between the extremes offered by Agilulf, who is a perfect being devoid of body but inhabiting a suit of armour, and Gurdulù, who is all body and no intellect. Yet the novel is also about narratology, most of the characters opening with the thoughts of Suor Teodora, who is the narrator and who speculates about the limits of realism and other authorial problems. The final volte-face, in which the nun Teodora is revealed to be the female warrior Bradamante, typifies Calvino's anxieties in this period about his own role as contemplative intellectual, as opposed to active political partisan.

The rest of Calvino's output up to 1963 was in the form of short stories or novellas, either in a fantasy vein, as in the humorous cycle of Marcovaldo stories, or in ironic attempts at realism, as in Gli amori difficili (Difficult Loves), "La speculazione edilizia" (A Plunge into Real Estate), and La nuvola di smog (Smog). The year 1963 was a turning point in the author's career, neatly encapsulated by the publication of La giornata d'uno scrutatore [The Watcher], the last "full-length" novel he published (though even it is under 100 pages long) and of Marcovaldo, the first work of Calvino's new "serial" manner, based on a sequence of modular units combined to form a single, composite macrotext. In a prophetic passage in La giornata d'uno scrutatore the protagonist rejects novels about people and turns instead to scientific works.

Le cosmicomiche (Cosmicomics) inaugurated fully this new anti-novelistic and "scientific" period. The stories which comprise the volume are each introduced by an epigraph from a scientific text (about the Big Bang, the appearance of the first mammals, etc.), which is then illustrated in a comical manner by the protagonist with the unpronounceable name, Qfwfq. Calvino here is consciously challenging some of the assumptions of realism—about human protagonists, with human lifespans and recognizable names. Ti con zero (Time and the Hunter) contains more Qfwfq tales, but also includes others that showed Calvino's new interest in deductive logic and mathematical constraints on narrative, as practised then by Calvino's friends Queneau and other members of the "Ouvroir de littérature potentielle." Further experiments with combinatorial narrative technique followed: in Il castello dei destini incrociati (The Castle of Crossed Destinies), in which storytelling is carried out by means of tarot cards, since the knights in the enchanted castle have all been struck dumb; and in Le città invisibili (Invisible Cities), in which Marco Polo describes to the Great Khan, in 55 sections of poetic prose, the cities of his empire. These last two books, broadly based on works by Ariosto and Marco Polo, testify to Calvino's interest in rewriting texts. This fascination is also evident in his masterpiece, Se una notte d'inverno un viaggiatore (If on a Winter's Night a Traveler), which in structure is a reworking of The Thousand and One Nights. This "hypernovel" consists of a frame of 12 chapters, in which "you," the reader (a male subject) and a female reader try to read Calvino's If on a Winter's Night, but instead are given an apocryphal first chapter from ten different novels. This approach allows Calvino to parade his virtuosity in reproducing widely differing styles of contemporary fiction, and at the same time to play off the events in the frame-story against the episodes read by the readers. The whole book is informed by Calvino's narrative verve, as well as his sense of humour and his interest in contemporary literary theory.

The final work published in his lifetime, Palomar (Mr. Palomar), represents a complete change of style, since it consists of the meditations of Mr. Palomar, an elderly man living in 1980s Italy, but it is divided into 27 sections, each of which is subdivided into three units. The protagonist takes his name from the huge astronomical telescope in California, thus linking Calvino's twin fascinations—observation and scientific exploration of the universe. Sotto il sole giaguaro (Under the Jaguar Sun), published posthumously, continues Calvino's predilection for narrative patternings. An unfinished work, it was to have consisted of five stories about the five senses; but in the end only those concerning smell, taste, and hearing were written.

A provocative essayist as well as occasional librettist, Calvino holds an important place in world literature because of his constant awareness of the limits of realism and the written word in general, and his brilliant and humorous attempts to expand those limits, to innovate constantly, and to inscribe history, science, and philosophy within literature.

—Martin L. McLaughlin

See the essay on If on a Winter's Night a Traveller.

CAMÕES, Luís (Vaz) de

Born: Portugal, possibly in 1525. Education: May have attended the University of Coimbra. Career: Served as a soldier in North Africa, and may have lost an eye, perhaps in combat; went to India as a soldier, 1553; stayed for a year or two in East Africa, and possibly went to Macao and Goa; returned to Lisbon, 1569; received a small pension from the king. Died: 1580.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Obras completas, edited by Hernâni Cidade. 5 vols., 1946–47.

Obra completa, edited by Antônio Salgado, Jr. 1963.

Verse

Os Lusíadas. 1572; edited by Frank Pierce, 1973; as The Lusiads, translated by Richard Fanshawe, 1655; also translated by Leonard Bacon, 1950; William C. Atkinson, 1952; Landeg White, 1997.

Rhythmas. 1595, as The Lyricks, translated by Richard Burton, 2 vols., 1884.

Lírica completa, edited by Maria de Lurdes Saraiva. 3 vols., 1980–81.

Plays

Auto dos Enfatriões, from a play by Plautus, in Autos e comedias portuguesas. 1587.

Auto de Filodemo, in Autos e comedias portuguesas. 1587.

El Rei-Seleuco, in Rimas. 1645.

*

Critical Studies: The Lusiads, in From Virgil to Milton by C.M. Bowra, 1945; Forms of Nationhood: The Elizabethan Writing of England by Richard Helgerson, 1992; Epic and Empire: Politics and Epic Form from Virgil to Milton by David Quint, 1993; The Presence of Camões: Influences on the Literature of England, America, and Southern Africa by George Monteiro, 1996; The Poetics of Empire in the Indies: Prophesy and Imitation in La Araucana and Os Lusíadas by James Nicolopoulos, 2000.

* * *

Luís de Camões's most important work is his epic poem, Os Lusíadas (The Lusiads), which deals with Vasco da Gama's successful attempt to discover a sea route to India. Camões's poem owes a great deal to classical epic, and especially to Virgil's Aeneid. Gama is not, however, the protagonist of Camões's poem, as Aeneas is of Virgil's. For much of the poem he is not an actor at all but a narrator, and the story he tells is not just that of his own voyage, like the account of his adventures that Aeneas gives Dido, but embraces the whole history of Portugal from its legendary beginnings right down to Camões's own day.

The Lusiads offers abundant evidence of Camões's mastery of the sublime style that he inherited from Virgil. Like Virgil, Camões is fond of complex sentences, full of subordinate clauses, but, again like Virgil, his predilection for elaborate patterns of subordination does not keep him from being a superb storyteller. On the contrary, it can be said, as C.S. Lewis said of Milton, that he "avoids discontinuity by avoidance of what grammarians call the simple sentence" and that he "compensates for the complexity of his syntax by the simplicity of the broad imaginative effects beneath it and the perfect rightness of their sequence."

The Lusiads is not merely a faithful imitation of an admired model. Perhaps the most striking feature of the poem is the way it combines repeated reminders that it belongs to the noblest of the established literary kinds, the epic, with daring innovations. Camões repeatedly acknowledges Homer and Virgil as his models, but he insists just as firmly on the differences that separate his work from theirs. The most important difference is that the story he tells is true. Many passages of the poem follow closely the accounts given by the great Portuguese historians of Asia who were Camões's contemporaries, most notably João de Barros. Camões repeatedly asserts that the real achievements of the Portuguese rival can even outdo the fictional ones attributed to Odysseus and Aeneas. It is because he has a greater subject than the ancient epic poets that his poem may hope to surpass theirs. Camões stresses not only the truthfulness of his account but also its exemplary character. He believes, like Dryden, that "the design of [the heroic poem] is to form the mind to heroic virtue by example." Camões's conception of heroic virtue is, however, one that many modern readers find hard to accept; The Lusiads can serve as a magnificent example of Wallace Stevens's assertion that "poetry is a cemetery of nobilities." Another obstacle for many modern readers is Camões's readiness to evoke the hand of God to explain the course of historical events, a readiness he shares with many 16th-century historians.

Much of the poem is, of course, invention, not historical reporting. Sixteenth-century poets saw the marvellous as an indispensable element in poetry, and Camões supplies it in his mythological framework which pits Venus against Bacchus, one aiding Gama and the other opposing him. For many readers the most memorable episodes in the poem are those that spring from Camões's imagination, often sparked, of course, by his memories of classical poetry: the giant Adamastor, for example, a personification of the Cape of Good Hope, who represents the hostile forces of nature that the Portuguese must confront on their voyages of discovery, on the Isle of Love, where Venus and her nymphs offer Gama and his men an erotic romp on their return voyage to Portugal.

The Lusíads is an extremely personal poem. Just how personal is difficult to appreciate without some familiarity with Camões's lyrics, which elaborate many of the motifs touched on in the epic, most notably a note of melancholy which has much in common with the Virgilian lacrimae return. The lyrics are not autobiographical poetry; they do not deal directly with the experiences of the poet's life but rather with their emotional effect on him. For this reason, and because so little is known with certainty about Camões's life, they have often served as points of departure for arbitrary and incompatible biographical interpretations. Like The Lusíads, Camões's lyrics offer an astonishing fusion of tradition and innovation. He is a master of both the principal currents that flow into 16th-century Portuguese poetry, one deriving from the 15th-century cancioneiros (songbooks, though the poems in them were not always intended to be sung) and the other from the love-poetry of Petrarch and his 16th-century Spanish followers, notably Garcilaso de la Vega. Camões sometimes combines elements of both traditions in a single poem, just as he sometimes combines traditional materials with an intensely individual development presumably drawn from his own lived experience. An outstanding example is the long poem "Sôbolos rios," which begins as a paraphrase of Psalm 137 ("By the waters of Babylon. . .") and turns into a moving meditation on the poet's own life, expressed with incomparable grace in an inimitably personal style that nevertheless is firmly rooted in the tradition of the songbooks.

Camões's three plays turn away from the classical comedies and tragedies of Francisco de Sá de Miranda and António Ferreira and return to the tradition established by Gil Vicente, though with important differences, most notably Camões's choice, in two of the three, of subjects drawn from classical antiquity. The apparent amorality of Camões's theatre also sets it apart from that of Vicente. The prose passages in the Auto de Filodemo, like Camões's letters, show a mastery of language comparable to that of his lyrics or of The Lusíads, though both style and subject matter are entirely different. In the plays and letters we often encounter a playful and mocking Camões quite unlike the despairing lover of some of the lyrics or the inspired bard of The Lusíads.

—Thomas R. Hart

See the essay on The Lusíads.

CAMPANELLA, Tommaso

Born: Giovan Domenico Campanella in Stilo, Calabria, Spanish Viceroyalty of Naples, 5 September 1568. Education: Studied law in Naples. Career: Entered Dominican Order, 1582, took the monastic name Tommaso, and studied logic, physics, and Aristotelian metaphysics at the Convent of San Giorgio Morgeto, 1583–85; lived in Nicastro, 1586–87, Cosenza, 1588, Altomonte, 1588–89; returned to Naples, 1589, and moved into the palazzo of Mario del Tufo, 1590; his views and writings brought him into increasing conflict with the Order, from 1592; travelled throughout Italy, 1592–93; first arrest by the Inquisition, 1594: imprisoned and tortured, 1595–96, and forbidden to publish; rearrested, 1597, on accusations of heresy, released and returned to Calabria, settled in Stilo, 1598; forced to flee to Franciscan monastery in Stignano, 1599, subsequently captured and imprisoned in Naples for involvement with (and possible organization of) an abortive anti-Spanish rebellion; sentenced by the Holy Office in Rome to life imprisonment for heresy, 1602, remained in confinement in the castles of Uovo, Sant'Elmo, and Nuovo, 1602–26, where he continued writing; released in May, 1626, but rearrested in June and taken to Rome; allowed by the Inquisition to live under house arrest, and settled in the Dominican Convent of Santa Maria sopra Minerva; pardoned completely by Pope Urban VIII, 1629, and his name and works deleted from the Inquisition's Index; named a Master of Theology by the Dominican Order, 1629; lived under papal patronage, 1629–34; fled to Paris, via Marseilles, because of the repercussions of a pupil's involvement in an anti-Spanish plot, 1634; received a pension from Louis XIII, 1635, and spent final years publishing many of his works. Died: 21 May 1639.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Opere, edited by Alessandro d'Ancona. 2 vols., 1854.

Tutte le opere, edited by Luigi Firpo. 1954.

Opera Latina Francofurti Impressa Annis 1617–1630, edited by Luigi Firpo. 1975.

Opere letterarie, edited by Lina Bolzoni. 1977.

Works

Philosophia sensibus demonstrata. 1591; as La filosofia che i sensi ci additano, edited by Luigi De Franco, 1974.

Prodromus philosophia instaurandae (Compendium de return natura). 1617.

De belgio sub hispani potestatem redigendo. 1617.

Monarchia di Spagna. In German, as Von der spanischen Monarchie, 1620; as De monarchia hispanica, 1640; as Monarchia di Spagna, 1854; as A Discourse Touching the Spanish Monarchy, translated by Edmund Chilmead, 1654; as Tommaso Campanella . . . His Advice to the King of Spain, 1659.

De sensu return et magia, edited by Tobias Adami. 1620; as Del senso delle cose e della magia, edited by Antonio Bruers, 1925.

Apologia pro Galileo. 1620; edited by R. Carebba, 1911, also edited by Salvatore Femiano, 1971; as Apologia di Galileo, edited by Luigi Firpo, 1969; as The Defense of Galileo, translated by Grant McColley, 1937; as A Defense of Galileo, the Mathematician of Florence: Which Is an Inquiry as to Whether the Philosophical View Advocated by Galileo is in Agreement with, or Is Opposed to, the Sacred Scriptures, translated by Richard J. Blackwell, 1994.

Civitas solis. In Realis philosophae epilogisticae partes quatuor, 1623; single edition, 1643; in Italian, as La città del sole, 1840; edited by Edmondo Solmi, 1904, also edited by Norberto Bobbio (Italian and Latin), 1941, Adriano Seroni, 1977, F. Bartoletta, 1985, and by G. Berrettoni, 1991; as The City of the Sun, translated by Thomas W. Halliday, in Ideal Commonwealths, edited by Henry Morley, 1885, revised edition, 1901; reprinted in Ideal Empires and Republics, 1901, Famous New Deals of History, 1935, and Famous Utopias of the Renaissance, 1948; also translated by William J. Gilstrap, in The Quest for Utopias, edited by Glenn Negley and J. Max Patrick, 1952; Daniel J. Donno (bilingual edition), 1981; R. Millner and A.M. Elliott, 1981.

Realis philosophiae epilogisticae partes quatuor. 1623; revised and enlarged edition, as Disputationum in quatuor partes suae philosophiae realis, 4 vols., 1637.

Astrologicorum. 7 vols., 1629; 8 vols., 1630.

Atheismus triumphatus. 1631.

Monarchia messiae (political treatise). 1633; edited by Luigi Firpo, 1960.

Medicinalium iuxta propria principia. 7 vols., 1635.

Philosophiae rationalis. 5 vols., 1638.

Universalis philosophiae, seu metaphysicarum rerum iuxta propria dogmata partes tres. 18 vols., 1638; as Metafisica, edited by Giovanni Di Napoli, 3 vols., 1967.

De libris propriis et de recta ratione studendi syntagma. 1642; edited by Vincenzo Spampinato, 1927.

Discorsi politici ai principi d'Italia, edited by Pietro Garzilli. 1848; also edited by Luigi Firpo, 1945.

Opere scelte, edited by Alessandro d'Ancona. 2 vols., 1854.

Theologicorum, edited by Romano Amerio. 1936–88; of the 30 books in Campanella's manuscript, the following have been edited:

Teologia (Book I). 1936; as Dio e la predestinazione, 2 vols., 1949–51.

La prima e la seconda resurrezione (Books XXVII–XXVIII). 1955.

Magia e grazia (Book XIV). 1957.

De sancta monothriade (Book II). 1958.

Cristologia (Book XVIII). 2 vols., 1958.

Della grazia gratificante (Book XIII). 1959.

Il peccato originale (Book XVI). 1960.

De homine (Book IV, part II), 1961.

Vita Christi (Book XXI). 1962.

Cosmologia (Book III). 1964.

I sacri segni (Book XXIV). 5 vols., 1965–68.

De Antichristo (Book XXVI). 1965.

De dictis Christi (Book XXIII). 1969.

E scatalogia (Books XXIX–XXX). 1969.

Le creature sovranaturali (Book V). 1970.

Della beatitudine (Book VII). 1971.

Origine temporale di Cristo (Book XIX). 1972.

Le profezie di Cristo (Book XXV). 1973.

De remediis malorum (Book XVII). 1975.

Delle virtù e dei vizi in particolare (Book X). 1976; as De virtutibus et vitiis Speciatum, 1984.

De virtutibus supernaturalibus quibus ad beatitudinem homo regitur (Books XI–XII). 1988.

Epilogo magno, edited by Carmelo Ottaviano. 1939.

Aforismi politici, edited by Luigi Firpo. 1941.

Poetica, edited by Luigi Firpo. 1944.

Antiveneti, edited by Luigi Firpo. 1945.

Opuscoli inediti, edited by Luigi Firpo. 1951.

Articoli prophetales, edited by Germana Ernst. 1977.

Parole universali della dottrina politica, edited by Giuseppe Campanella. 1980.

Mathematica, edited by Armando Brissoni. 1989.

Verse

Scelta d'alcune poesie filosofiche. 1622; edited by Vincenzo Paladino, 1977, enlarged edition, 1983; as Poesie filosofiche, edited by Giovanni Gaspare Orelli, 1834, and by Marziano Guglielminetti, 1982; as Le poesie, edited by Giovanni Papini, 2 vols., 1913, by Giovanni Gentile, 1915, and by Mario Vinciguerra, 1938; parts translated by J.A. Symonds, in The Sonnets of Michael Angelo Buonarroti and Tommaso Campanella, 1878; as Sonnets, translated by John Addington Symonds, 1999.

Ecloga Christianissimus regi et reginae in portentosam delphini. 1639.

Other

Lettere, edited by Vincenzo Spampinato. 1927.

*

Bibliography: Bibliografia degli scritti di Tommaso Campanella by Luigi Firpo, 1940; Tommaso Campanella in America: A Critical Bibliography and a Profile, 1954, and A Supplement to the Critical Bibliography, 1957, by Francesco Grillo.

Critical Studies: Campanella by Léon Blanchet, 1920; Tommaso Campanella, by C. Dentice D'Accadia, 1921; Tommaso Campanella and His Poetry by Edmund Gardner, 1923; Tommaso Campanella, metafisico by Maria M. Rossi, 1923; La filosofia politica di Tommaso Campanella by Paolo Treves, 1930; Campanella by Nino Valeri, 1931; Studi campanelliani by Romano Amerio, 1934; Famous Utopias edited by Charles Andrews, 1937; Tommaso Campanella by Aldo Testa, 1941; Studi campanelliani by R. De Mattei, 1943; Tommaso Campanella by A. Corsano, 1944, revised edition, 1961; Ricerche campanelliane by Luigi Firpo, 1947; Tommaso Campanella filosofo della restaurazione cattolica by G. Di Napoli, 1947; Tommaso Campanella by Alfio and Antonietta Nicotra, 1948; Tommaso Campanella: La crisi della coscienza in sè by A. Maria Jacobelli Isoldi, 1953; Tommaso Campanella by Nicola Badaloni, 1965; Lo spiritualismo di Tommaso Campanella by Salvatore Femiano, 2 vols., 1965; Renaissance Philosophers: The Italian Philosophers edited by Arturo B. Fallico and Herman Schapiro, 1967; Il sistema teologico di Tommaso Campanella by R. Amerio, 1972; L'eresia cattolica e riformatrice di T. Campanella e il Concilio Vaticano II by F. Grillo, 1975; "Tommaso Campanella's La città del sole: Topography and Astrology" by Ilona Klein, in Italiana 1987 edited by Albert N. Mancini and others, 1989; "Tommaso Campanella and the End of the Renaissance," in Journal of Medieval and Renaissance Studies, 20 (2), 1990, and "Tommaso Campanella and Jean de Launois: The Controversy over Aristotle and His Reception in the West," in Renaissance Quarterly, 43 (3), 1990, both by John M. Headley; Tommaso Campanella and the Transformation of the World by John M. Headley, 1997.

* * *

Born in Calabria amid the harsh realities of Southern Italy and of an illiterate family sunk in the most extreme poverty, Campanella was educated in the only way possible for the poor—by taking priestly vows as a Dominican monk. He lived a life of incredible hardship, torture, persecution, and rejection by his contemporaries. However, upheld by an insatiable thirst for knowledge, an irrepressible intellectual curiosity, and a highly developed memory, he rose above the most extreme misfortune and the cruelty of the Inquisition to compose works on every subject imaginable—from philosophy to science and literature (over 100 works)—publicly championed Galileo at both his trials, yet he received only abuse in return, and lived in exile in Paris, at last recognized by educated society as a phenomenal intellectual, and able to oversee publication of many of his works. In a sense, the last Italian “Renaissance” man and a champion of the inexhaustibility of human knowledge, Campanella also preserved enough faith in human destiny to compose his own utopia (in the wake of Plato’s Republic and More’s Utopia), La città del sole (The City of the Sun), and composed moving poems and letters to contemporaries.

After initially devouring the knowledge available in his first monastery library, his first attempt to broaden his knowledge by moving to another monastery was harshly suppressed by his superiors, obliging him to flee to Northern Italy. By the age of 27 he had already been forced to adjure heresy by the Roman Inquisition, and by 1598 was obliged by the church to return to Calabria, where he became involved in an idealistic attempt to found an independent utopian state in the mountains, one governed by egalitarian principles and freed from the yoke of foreign domination. The harsh repression by the vice-regal government, with its mass arrests and executions, brought a swift end to this conspiracy, and Campanella, an acknowledged ringleader, was dragged in chains to Rome, only escaping execution by his resistance to torture and by feigning madness, to languish in prison almost forgotten, for 27 years.

Nevertheless, the creation of an enduring work of the literary imagination from first-hand experience of utopian idealism gave posterity The City of the Sun, the only work by Campanella to survive the test of time. In it, he described an utopian civilization located on a remote island in the Indian Ocean, founded on egalitarian principles and the rule of reason, where the Christian religion has not arrived to favour the life to come over earthly happiness, and where greed and corruption are not society’s prime movers. Nature becomes the universal law, and a communistic sharing of property and duties characterizes this society, while children are brought up not by families, but by society, generated by principles of selection that smack (perhaps uncomfortably) of far more modern times. The city is laid out according to principles of the greatest benefit to all, while eating, sleeping, and working are all controlled by rigid rules, as are the clothes worn by the citizens—reminiscent to us of the uniforms of the science fiction imagination. Work is for all—of both sexes—and absolute equality between men and women extends even to military service.

The only hierarchy permitted is that of merit—an archetypal meritocracy—but defined in the terms of Campanella’s time as the search for knowledge of all things: he who can understand more of nature’s knowledge has the whip-hand in guiding those who know less, in working together for the common good. Thus we have a portrait of a society of happiness and peaceful concord, where private ambitions and clan affinities have been abandoned and family affection and concern for the future have been swept aside in favour of zealous dedication to the common good, leaving time for the cultivation of genial pursuits and learning.

It is clear that this utopian vision is the fruit of wide reading and not only of Campanella’s experience of the failed Calabrian insurrection (and we have mentioned Plato and More in this connection). But there is also an autobiographical element stemming from Campanella’s memories of his native Calabria—of the discipline of the monastic regime with its rigid rules, of the hardships of poverty, ignorance, and superstition that characterized Southern Italy. These were elevated here by one of the region’s most distinguished sons—against impossible odds and through incredible hardships—to the dignity of great literature, almost constituting a cry for a better society, founded on saner principles and guided by the light of reason, that resounds down the centuries to the present, where, however dated and naïve it is in certain respects, it nonetheless seems to have an enduring vitality.

—Christopher Cairns

CAMUS, Albert

Born: Mondovi, Algeria, 7 November 1913. Education: Educated at the University of Algiers, graduated 1936. Family: Married 1) Simone Hié in 1934 (divorced); 2) Francine Faure in 1940 (died 1979), twin son and daughter. Career: Worked as meteorologist, shipbroker’s clerk, automobile parts salesman, clerk in the automobile registry division of the prefecture, actor and amateur theatre producer, Algiers, 1935–39; staff member, Alger-Républicain, 1938–39, and editor, Soir-Républicain, 1939–40, both Algiers; sub-editor for layout, Paris-Soir, 1940; teacher, Oran, Algeria, 1940–42; convalescent in central France, 1942–43; joined Resistance in Lyon region, 1943; journalist, Paris, 1943–45; reader, and editor of Espoir series, Gallimard, publishers, Paris, 1943–60; co-founding editor, Combat, 1945–47. Awards: Critics prize (France), 1947; Nobel prize for literature, 1957. Member: Communist Party, 1935–39. Died: 4 January 1960.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Complete Fiction, translated by Stuart Gilbert and Justin O’Brien. 1960.

Théâtre, récits, nouvelles; Essais, edited by Roger Quilliot. 2 vols., 1962–65.

Collected Plays, translated by Stuart Gilbert and Justin O’Brien. 1965.

Oeuvres complètes. 5 vols., 1983.

Fiction

L’Étranger, 1942; as The Stranger, translated by Stuart Gilbert, 1946; as The Outsider, translated by Gilbert, 1946; also translated by K. Griffith, 1982; Joseph Laredo, 1984.

La Peste. 1947; as The Plague, translated by Stuart Gilbert, 1948.

La Chute. 1956; as The Fall, translated by Justin O’Brien, 1957.

L’Exil et le royaume (stories). 1957; as Exile and the Kingdom, translated by Justin O’Brien, 1958.

La Mort heureuse. 1971; as A Happy Death, translated by Richard Howard, 1972.

Le Premier Homme (unfinished). 1994; as The First Man, translated by David Hapgood, 1995.

Plays

- Le Malentendu* (produced 1944). With Caligula, 1944; as Cross Purpose, translated by Stuart Gilbert, with Caligula, 1948.
- Caligula* (produced 1945). With Le Malentendu, 1944; 1941 version (produced 1983), 1984; as Caligula, translated by Stuart Gilbert, with Cross Purpose, 1948.
- L'État de siège* (produced 1948). 1948; as State of Siege, translated by Stuart Gilbert, in Caligula and Three Other Plays, 1958.
- Les Justes* (produced 1949). 1950; as The Just Assassins, translated by Stuart Gilbert, in Caligula and Three Other Plays, 1958; as The Just, translated by Henry Jones, 1965.
- La Dévotion à la croix*, from the play by Calderón (produced 1953). 1953.
- Les Esprits*, from a work by Pierre de Larivey (produced 1953). 1953.
- Un cas intéressant*, from a work by Dino Buzzati (produced 1955). 1955.
- Requiem pour une nonne*, from the novel by William Faulkner (produced 1956). 1956.
- Le Chevalier d'Olmedo*, from the play by Lope de Vega (produced 1957). 1957.
- Caligula and Three Other Plays* (includes Cross Purpose; State of Siege; The Just Assassins), translated by Stuart Gilbert. 1958.
- Les Possédés*, from the novel by Dostoevskii (produced 1959). 1959; as The Possessed, translated by Justin O'Brien, 1960.

Other

- L'Envers et l'endroit*. 1937.
- Noces*. 1939.
- Le Mythe de Sisyphe*. 1942; as The Myth of Sisyphus and Other Essays, translated by Justin O'Brien, 1955.
- Lettres à un ami allemand*. 1945.
- L'Existence*. 1945.
- Le Minotaure; ou, La Halte d'Oran*. 1950.
- Actuelles [1]–3: Chroniques 1944–1948, Chroniques 1948–1953, Chronique algérienne 1939–1958*. 3 vols., 1950–58.
- L'Homme révolté*. 1951; as The Rebel: An Essay on Man in Revolt, translated by Anthony Bower, 1953.
- L'Été*. 1954.
- Réflexions sur la guillotine*, in Réflexions sur la peine capitale, with Arthur Koestler. 1957; as Reflections on the Guillotine, translated by Richard Howard, 1960.
- Discours de Suède*. 1958; as Speech of Acceptance upon the Award of the Nobel Prize for Literature, translated by Justin O'Brien, 1958.
- Resistance, Rebellion, and Death* (selection), translated by Justin O'Brien. 1960.
- Méditation sur le théâtre et la vie*. 1961.
- Carnets: Mai 1935–février 1942*. 1962; as Carnets 1935–1942, translated by Philip Thody, 1963; as Notebooks 1935–1942, 1963.
- Lettre à Bernanos*. 1963.
- Carnets: Janvier 1942–mars 1951*. 1964; as Notebooks 1942–1951, edited and translated by Justin O'Brien, 1965.
- Lyrical and Critical* (essays), edited and translated by Philip Thody. 1967.
- Le Combat d'Albert Camus*, edited by Norman Stokle. 1970.
- Selected Essays and Notebooks*, edited and translated by Philip Thody. 1970.
- Le Premier Camus*. 1973; as Youthful Writings, translated by Ellen Conroy Kennedy, 1977.

- Journaux de voyage*, edited by Roger Quilliot. 1978; as American Journals, translated by Hugh Levick, 1987.
- Fragments d'un combat 1938–1940: Alger-Républicain, Le Soir-Républicain*, edited by Jacqueline Lévi-Valensi and André Abbou. 1978.
- Correspondance 1932–1960*, with Jean Grenier, edited by Marguerite Dobrenn. 1981.
- Selected Political Writings*, edited by Jonathan King. 1981.
- Oeuvre fermée, oeuvre ouverte*, edited by Raymond Gay-Crosier and Jacqueline Lévi-Valensi. 1985.
- Carnets: Mars 1951–Décembre 1959*. 1989.
- Translator, La Dernière Fleur, by James Thurber. 1952.

*

Bibliography: Camus: A Bibliography by Robert F. Roeming, 1968; and subsequent editions by R. Gay-Crosier, in A Critical Bibliography of French Literature, 6, 1980; Camus in English: An Annotated Bibliography of Albert Camus's Contributions to English and American Periodicals and Newspapers by Peter C. Hoy, 2nd edition, 1971.

Critical Studies: Albert Camus: A Study of His Work, 1957, Albert Camus, 1913–1960: A Biographical Study, 1961, and Albert Camus, 1989, all by Philip Thody, 1961; Camus by Germaine Brée, 1959, revised edition, 1972, and Camus: A Collection of Critical Essays edited by Brée, 1962; Albert Camus: The Artist in the Arena by Emmett Parker, 1965; Camus by Phillip H. Rhein, 1969, revised edition, 1989; Albert Camus by Conor Cruise O'Brien, 1970; The Theatre of Albert Camus by Edward Freeman, 1971; Camus: The Invincible Summer by Albert Maquet, 1972; The Unique Creation of Albert Camus by Donald Lazere, 1973; Witness of Decline: Albert Camus: Moralism of the Absurd by Lev Braun, 1974; Albert Camus: A Biography by Herbert R. Lottman, 1979; The Descent of the Doves: Camus's Journey to the Spirit by Alfred Cordes, 1980; Camus's Imperial Vision by Anthony Rizzuto, 1981; The Narcissistic Text: A Reading of Camus's Fiction by Brian T. Fitch, 1982; Camus: A Critical Study of His Life and Work, 1982, and Camus: The Stranger, 1988, both by Patrick McCarthy; Exiles and Strangers: A Reading of Camus's Exile and the Kingdom by Elaine Showalter, Jr., 1984; Exile and Kingdom: A Political Rereading of Albert Camus by Susan Tarrow, 1985; The Ethical Pragmatism of Albert Camus: Two Studies in the History of Ideas by Dean Vasil, 1985; Beyond Absurdity: The Philosophy of Albert Camus by Robert C. Trundle, 1987; Camus: A Critical Examination by David Sprintzen, 1988; Albert Camus and Indian Thought by Sharad Chandra, 1989; Understanding Albert Camus by David R. Ellison, 1990; Camus's L'Étranger: Fifty Years On edited by Adele King, 1992; Albert Camus: Le Premier Homme, La Peste by Edward J. Hughes, 1995; Looking for Heroes in Postwar France: Albert Camus, Max Jacob, Simone Weil by Neal Oxenhandler, 1996; Camus: The Challenge of Dostoevsky by Ray Davison, 1997; Albert Camus: A Life by Oliver Todd, translated by Benjamin Ivry, 1997; The Burden of Responsibility: Blum, Camus, Aron, and the French Twentieth Century by Tony Judt, 1998; Camus: Love and Sexuality by Anthony Rizzuto, 1998; Camus: Portrait of a Moralism by Stephen Eric Bronner, 1999; Camus: La Peste by James S. Williams, 2000; On Camus by Richard Kamber, 2001.

* * *

Although French critics on the Right and the Left have proclaimed Albert Camus passé for every imaginable reason, he has remained the bestselling author of France's largest and most prestigious literary publisher, Gallimard. In 1971, eleven years after his death at the age of 46, the publication of an early novel that Camus had had the good sense to abandon stimulated sales that pushed the French edition of La Mort heureuse (A Happy Death) to the top of the bestseller list within a few weeks. This is but one belated aspect of the paradox of Camus's career and reputation as a writer. When he was selected in 1957 to receive the Nobel prize for literature, he was, at 44, the youngest literary laureate but one, Rudyard Kipling having received the prize at 42. He himself stated publicly at the time that he would have voted for Malraux.

Camus is exceptional among French writers, the majority of whom have come from comfortable middle-class origins even in recent times. He was reared in Algiers by his mother, an illiterate charwoman. His first writings published in Paris catapulted him to a literary celebrity for which he was ill prepared. The climate of the immediate post-war period, combined with his position as a popular editorial writer for the Resistance newspaper Combat, rapidly created an aura about Camus that he had not sought and that was to cause him considerable difficulty a decade later.

In the first important review of L'Étranger (The Outsider or The Stranger), Jean-Paul Sartre was struck by the contemporaneity of this objective, apparently dispassionate, non-novel. An essay on the notion of the Absurd, entitled Le Mythe de Sisyphe (The Myth of Sisyphus), has been taken by many readers since Sartre to be the theory of which The Outsider is the illustration. Camus's Absurd is a description of a state more familiar to some English-speaking readers as a variety of contemporary thought posited on the death of God. It owes a great deal to such thinkers as Pascal, Kierkegaard, Dostoevskii, and Nietzsche. Camus was at pains to point out that there were, in his view, few points of contact between the Absurd and Sartrean existentialism, a distinction that readers, critics, and historians have tended to honour in the breach. The third piece in this cycle is Caligula, which remains the most important and the most popular of his plays.

Camus's view of his own career involved cycles of trilogies. The cycle of the Absurd antedates his experience of the war in the Resistance. It was essentially complete by 1941, and in 1942 he began work on the cycle of Revolt which owed a great deal more to the war than did its predecessor. Once again the trilogy included a novel, La Peste (The Plague), an essay, L'Homme révolté (The Rebel), and a play, Les Justes (The Just Assassins). The Rebel was attacked in Les Temps Modernes, a pro-communist magazine edited by Sartre. The subsequent polemic caused Camus to break with Sartre and to become disgusted with left-wing intellectuals. Several works written after this experience testify to a deepened awareness of human motivation, resulting in a more complex and satisfying style. The most substantial of these is La Chute (The Fall). During the 1950s Camus turned progressively to the theatre for both solace and stimulation. At the time of his death he was preparing a third cycle, to be called Nemesis, and had begun a novel entitled Le Premier Homme (The First Man), which was published in 1994. He left interesting Carnets (Notebooks), in three volumes, and an important collection of journalistic writings, Actuelles.

—A. James Arnold

See the essays on The Fall, The Outsider, and The Plague.

CANETTI, Elias

Born: Ruse (Ruschuk), Bulgaria, 25 July 1905. Education: Educated at schools in England, Austria, Switzerland, and Germany; University of Vienna, Ph.D. in chemistry, 1929. Family: Married 1) Venetia Taubner-Calderón in 1934 (died 1963); 2) Hera Buschor in 1971 (died 1988), one daughter. Career: Full-time writer; resident of England from 1939. Awards: Foreign Book prize (France), 1949; Vienna prize, 1966; Critics prize (Germany), 1967; Great Austrian State prize, 1967; Büchner prize, 1972; Nelly Sachs prize, 1975; Franz Nabl prize (Graz), 1975; Keller prize, 1977; Order of Merit (Bonn), 1979; Europa Prato prize (Italy), 1980; Order of Merit (Germany), 1980(?); Hebbel prize, 1980; Nobel prize for literature, 1981; Kafka prize, 1981; Great Service Cross (Germany), 1983. D.Litt.: University of Manchester. Honorary Ph.D.: University of Munich. Died: 14 August 1994.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

Die Blendung. 1936; as Auto-da-Fé, translated by C.V. Wedgwood, 1946; as The Tower of Babel, translated by Wedgwood, 1947.

Plays

Hochzeit (produced 1965). 1932; as The Wedding, 1986.

Komödie der Eitelkeit (produced 1965). 1950; as Comedy of Vanity, translated by Gitta Honegger, with Life-Terms, 1982.

Die Befristeten (produced 1967). In Dramen, 1964; as Life-Terms, translated by Gitta Honegger, with Comedy of Vanity, 1982; as The Numbered, translated by Carol Stewart, 1984.

Dramen (includes Hochzeit; Komödie der Eitelkeit; Die Befristeten). 1964.

Comedy of Vanity and Life-Terms, translated by Gitta Honegger. 1982.

Other

Fritz Wotruba. 1955.

Masse und Macht. 1960; as Crowds and Power, translated by Carol Stewart, 1962.

Welt im Kopf (selection), edited by Erich Fried. 1962.

Aufzeichnungen 1942–1948. 1965.

Die Stimmen von Marrakesch: Aufzeichnungen nach einer Reise. 1967; as The Voices of Marrakesh, translated by J.A. Underwood, 1978.

Der andere Prozess: Kafkas Briefe an Felice. 1969; as Kafka's Other Trial: The Letters to Felice, translated by Christopher Middleton, 1974.

Alle vergeudete Verehrung: Aufzeichnungen 1949–1960. 1970.

Die gespaltene Zukunft: Aufsätze und Gespräche. 1972.

Macht und Überleben: Drei Essays. 1972.

Die Provinz des Menschen: Aufzeichnungen 1942–1972. 1973; as The Human Province, translated by Joachim Neugroschel, 1978.

Der Ohrenzeuge: 50 Charaktere. 1974; as Earwitness: Fifty Characters, translated by Joachim Neugroschel, 1979.

Das Gewissen der Worte: Essays. 1975; as The Conscience of Words, translated by Joachim Neugroschel, 1979.

Der Überlebende. 1975.

Der Beruf des Dichters. 1976.

Die gerettete Zunge: Geschichte einer Jugend. 1977; as The Tongue Set Free: Remembrance of a European Childhood, translated by Joachim Neugroschel, 1979.

Die Fackel im Ohr: Lebensgeschichte 1921–1931. 1980; as The Torch in My Ear, translated by Joachim Neugroschel, 1982.

Das Augenspiel: Lebensgeschichte 1931–1937. 1985; as The Play of the Eyes, translated by Ralph Manheim, 1986.

Das Geheimherz der Uhr: Aufzeichnungen 1973–1985. 1987; as The Secret Heart of the Clock: Notes, Aphorisms, Fragments 1973–1985, translated by Joel Agee, 1989.

Notes from Hampstead: The Writer's Notes, 1954–1971, translated by John Hargraves, 1998.

Translator, Leidweg der Liebe, by Upton Sinclair. 1930.

Translator, Das Geld schreibt: Eine Studie über die amerikanische Literatur, by Upton Sinclair. 1930.

Translator, Alkohol, by Upton Sinclair. 1932.

*

Critical Studies: Canetti: Stationen zum Werk by Alfons-M. Bischoff, 1973; Kopf und Welt: Canettis Roman "Die Blendung" by D.G.J. Roberts, 1975; Canetti by Dagmar Barnouw, 1979; Essays in Honor of Elias Canetti, translated by Michael Hulse, 1987; Elias Canetti by Thomas H. Falk, 1993; Blind Reflections: Gender in Elias Canetti's Die Blendung by Kristie A. Foell, 1994; Canetti and Nietzsche: Theories of Humor in Die Blendung by Harriet Murphy, 1997; Metaphor as Thought in Elias Canetti's Mass und Macht by David Scott, 1999; The End of Modernism: Elias Canetti's Auto-da-fé by William Collins Donahue, 2001; Anthropology as Memory: Elias Canetti's and Franz Baermann Steiner's Responses to the Shoah by Michael Mack, 2001.

* * *

Elias Canetti has never been widely known in Britain, although he lived in England from 1939. From 1981, when he won the Nobel prize for literature, the contemporary relevance of his work once again attracted attention. A reticent man, Canetti dedicated his life to the study of a single theme: the behaviour of the individual within the mass and the power struggle associated with this conflict.

His best known works are the novel, Die Blendung (Auto-da-Fé), and a study of the behaviour of the mass, Masse und Macht (Crowds and Power). His autobiographies of more recent years, Die gerettete Zunge (The Tongue Set Free), Die Fackel im Ohr (The Torch in My Ear), and Das Augenspiel (The Play of the Eyes) have underlined the origins of and inspiration for his lifetime's work. His dramas and essays, too, reflect a preoccupation with hallucination, political pressure, linguistic ambiguity, and the destructive power of the masses.

The events of most outstanding significance for Canetti in the formation of his interest in crowd psychology and the hypnotic power of the masses were the awaited arrival of a comet in Ruse, the sinking of the Titanic, the fire at the Law Courts in Vienna in 1927, and an experience in Vienna's Alserstrasse in the winter of 1924–25. These powerful emotional experiences are linked in Canetti's mind and work by images of great energy, of blood, of a rushing sound, and of fire. Fire is frequently seen as a magnetic driving force and is associated with the uncontrolled rhythm of the masses. These symbols recur in Canetti's work. Sight and blindness, insight and illusion are related themes. In Auto-da-Fé the central character, Kien, who becomes increasingly deluded by his world of books, eventually perishes in a fire with them. Canetti is always at pains to point out the contrasts and similarities between a character's external appearance, his environment, and his use of language. Each character, e.g., the man of books, the collector, the spend-thrift, has "fixed ideas" which stand out because reality is portrayed as fragmented, communication as very partial. Canetti distanced himself from the suggestiveness of his characters, and yet he had clearly been closely involved with the experience of each of them. Attempts at communication between these different kinds of people are often portrayed as grotesque, leading only to an intensification of individual isolation.

Despite themes which are characteristic of a period of social and political upheaval, Canetti's style is serene, controlled, and lucid, almost part of another era and tradition. His work reflects self-assurance and composure. Its stylistic poise and balance based on an authoritative use of language, rich in imagery, set him apart from many younger contemporary writers.

Nevertheless, his subject matter is complex and his vision powerful—a confidence in one's own destiny, a respect for the experience of others, and a resistance to illusion, manipulation, and death.

—Barbara Saunders

See the essay on Auto-da-Fé.

ČAPEK, Karel

Born: Malé Svatoňovice, Bohemia (now in the Czech Republic), 9 January 1890; brother of the writer Josef Čapek. Education: Educated at Charles University, Prague, 1909–15. Ph.D. in philosophy 1915; universities of Paris and Berlin, 1909–10. Family: Married the actress Olga Scheinpflugová in 1935. Career: Journalist, Lidové noviny; co-founder, with Josef Čapek, František-Langer, and with Edmond Konrad, of the avant-garde circle "The Pragmatists"; stage director and dramaturg, Vinohrady Theatre, Prague, 1921–23. Died: 25 December 1938.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Spisy bratří [Collected Works]. 51 vols., 1928–47.

Spisy [Works]. 1981.

Toward the Radical Center: A Karel Čapek Reader, edited by Peter Kussi. 1990.

Fiction

Zářivé hlubiny a jiné prózy [The Luminous Depths and Other Prose Works], with Josef Čapek. 1916.

Boží muka [Stations of the Cross]. 1917.

Krakonošova zahrada [The Garden of Krakonos], with Josef Čapek. 1918.

Trapné povídky. 1921; as Money and Other Stories, translated by Francis P. Marchant, Dora Round, F.P. Casey, and O. Vočadlo, 1929.

Továrna na absolutno. 1922; as The Absolute at Large, translated by M. and R. Weatherall, 1927.

Krakatit. 1924; as Krakatit, translated by Lawrence Hyde, 1925; as An Atomic Fantasy, translated by Hyde, 1948.

Povídky z jedné kapsy [Tales from One Pocket], Povídky z druhé kapsy [Tales from the Other Pocket]. 2 vols., 1929; in part as Tales from Two Pockets, translated by Paul Selver, 1932; also translated by Norma Comrada, 1994.

Apokryfy; Kniha apokryfů. 2 vols., 1932–45; as Apocryphal Stories, translated by Dora Round, 1949; as Apocryphal Tales: With a Selection of Fables and Would-be Tales, translated by Norma Comrada, 1997.

Devatero pohádek a ještě jedna od Josefa Čapek jako přívazek. 1932; as Fairy Tales with One Extra as a Makeweight, translated by M. and R. Weatherall, 1933.

Hordubal. 1933; as Hordubal, translated by M. and R. Weatherall, 1934.

Povětroň. 1934; as Meteor, translated by M. and R. Weatherall, 1935.

Obyčejný život. 1934; as An Ordinary Life, translated by M. and R. Weatherall, 1936.

Válka s mloky. 1936; as War with the Newts, translated by M. and R. Weatherall, 1937; also translated by Ewald Osers, 1985.

První parta. 1937; as The First Rescue Party, translated by M. and R. Weatherall, 1939.

Život a dílo skladatele Foltýna. 1939; as The Cheat, translated by M. and R. Weatherall, 1941.

Nine Fairy Tales and One More, translated by Dagmar Hermann, 1990.

Plays

Lásky hra osudná [The Fateful Game of Love], with Josef Čapek (produced 1922). 1910.

R.U.R. (produced 1920). 1920; as R.U.R. (Rossum's Universal Robots), translated by Paul Selver, 1923.

Loupežník (produced 1921). 1920; as The Robber, translated by Rudolph C. Bednar, 1931.

Ze života hmyzu, with Josef Čapek (produced 1922). 1921; as And So Ad Infinitum (The Life of the Insect): An Entomological Review, translated by Paul Selver, 1923; as The Insect Play, translated by Selver, 1923; as The World We Live In (The Insect Comedy), adapted by Owen Davis, 1933.

Věc Makropulos (produced 1922). 1922; as The Macropoulos Secret, translated by Paul Selver, 1927.

Adam Stvořitel, with Josef Čapek (produced 1927). 1927; as Adam the Creator, translated by Dora Round, 1929.

Bílá nemoc (produced 1937). 1937; as Power and Glory, translated by Paul Selver and Ralph Neale, 1938.

Matka (produced 1938). 1938; as The Mother, translated by Paul Selver, 1939.

Other

Pragmatismus; čili, Filosofie praktického života [Pragmatism; or, a Philosophy of Practical Life]. 1918.

Kritika slov [A Critique of Words]. 1920.

Italské listy. 1923; as Letters from Italy, translated by Francis P. Marchant, 1929.

Anglické listy. 1924; as Letters from England, translated by Paul Selver, 1925.

O nejbližších věcech. 1925; as Intimate Things, translated by Dora Round, 1935.

Jak vzniká divadelní hra a průvodce po zákulisí. 1925; as How a Play Is Produced, translated by P. Beaumont Wadsworth, 1928.

Skandální aféra Josefa Holouška [The Scandalous Affair of Josef Holoušek]. 1927.

Hovory s T.G. Masarykem. 3 vols., 1928–35; as President Masaryk Tells His Story, 1934, and Masaryk on Thought and Life, 1938, both translated by M. and R. Weatherall; as Talks with T.G. Masaryk, translated by Michael Henry Heim, 1995.

Zahradníkuv rok. 1929; as The Gardener's Year, translated by M. and R. Weatherall, 1931.

Výlet do Španěl. 1930; as Letters from Spain, translated by Paul Selver, 1932.

Minda; čili, Ochova psu. 1930; translated as Minda; or, On Breeding Dogs, 1940.

Obrázky z Holandska. 1932; as Letters from Holland, translated by Paul Selver, 1933.

O věcech obecných; čili, Zoon politikos [Ordinary Things; or, Zoon Politikon]. 1932.

Dášeňka čili Život štěněte. 1933; as Dashenka; or, the Life of a Puppy, translated by M. and R. Weatherall, 1940.

Legenda o člověku zahradníkovi [Legend of a Gardening Man]. 1935.

Cesta na sever. 1936; as Travels in the North, translated by M. and R. Weatherall, 1939.

Jak se co dělá. 1938; as How They Do It, translated by M. and R. Weatherall, 1945.

Kalendář [Calendar]. 1940.

O lidech [About People]. 1940.

Vzrušené tance [Wild Dances]. 1946.

Bajky a podpovídky [Fables and Would-Be Tales]. 1946.

Sedm rozhlásku [Seven Notes for the Wireless]. 1946.

Ratolest a vavřík [The Sprig and the Laurel]. 1947.

In Praise of Newspapers and Other Essays on the Margin of Literature, translated by M. and R. Weatherall. 1951.

Obrázky z domova [Letters from Home]. 1953.

Sloupkový ambit [The Pillared Cloister]. 1957.

Poznámky o tvorbě [Comments on Creation]. 1959.

Na břehu dnů [On the Boundaries of Days]. 1966.

Divadelníkem proti své vůli [A Drama Expert Against My Will]. 1968.

V zajetí slov [In the Bondage of Words]. 1969.

Ctení o T.G. Masarykovi [Readings about T.G. Masaryk]. 1969.

Místo pro Janathana! [Make Way for Jonathan]. 1970.

Listy Olze 1920–38 [Letters to Olga]. 1971.

Droby pod stolem doby [Crumbs under the Table of the Age]. 1975.

Listy Anielce [Letter to Anielce]. 1978.

Neuskutečněný dialog [Selected Essays], edited by Gustav Földi. 1978.

Dopisy ze zásuvky [Letters Out of a Drawer] (letters to Vera Hruzová), edited by Jiří Opelík. 1980.

Cesty k přátelství [Selected Correspondence]. 1987.

Od člověka k člověku [From Person to Person]. 1988.

Filmová libreta [Film Libretto]. 1989.

*

Bibliography: Bibliografie Karla Čapka: soupis jeho díla, 1990; Karel Čapek, bibliografie díla a literatury o životě a díle, publikace v Československu a v Sovětském svazu by Margita Křepinská, 4 vols., 1991.

Critical Studies: Karel Čapek by William E. Harkins, 1962; Karel Čapek: An Essay by Alexander Matuška, 1964; Karel Čapek (in German) by Eckehard Thiele, 1988; The Narratives of Čapek and Cexov: A Typological Comparison of the Authors' World Views by Peter Z. Schubert, 1997; Karel Čapek: In Pursuit of Truth, Tolerance, and Trust by Bohuslava R. Bradbrook, 1998.

* * *

Karel Čapek sprang into world fame with his play R.U.R. about the production and commercial exploitation of semi-human automata. It gave the English language a new word—"robot." He and his brother Josef followed this up with Ze Života hmyzu (The Insect Play), where the jungle law of the insect world was portrayed as a reflection of the amorality of human society. Later plays included Věc Makropulos (The Macropoulos Secret; best known today in Janáček's operatic version) about a woman who was the victim of an experiment to prolong life, in which Čapek, unlike Shaw, reached the comforting conclusion that our existing life span is about right.

Although Čapek was a gifted playwright, his best work did not lie in the theatre. The world publicity he received for his plays with their sensational themes obscured the merit of his more philosophical works like his "Trilogy"—Hordubal, Povětroň (Meteor), and Obyčejný život (An Ordinary Life)—his series of short stories Povídky z jedné kapsy and Povídky z druhé kapsy (Tales from Two Pockets), and his feuilletons, which were admirably suited to his particular genius. His delightful travel books, some of which he illustrated himself, achieved popularity in the countries he was describing.

In his "Trilogy" Čapek expresses his relativist view of life by showing that human personality comprises many disparate elements, some completely hidden and others only rarely coming to the surface. The Ukrainian peasant Hordubal is murdered by his wife and her paramour, but at the trial it is clear that the facts and motives are impossible for outsiders to determine. In Meteor three people make conflicting but plausible conjectures about the past history of an unknown airman who has been brought into a hospital unconscious, while in An Ordinary Life a man discovers, in retrospect, that he has had not one personality but several. Čapek adopts the same approach in his last, unfinished novel, Život a dílo skladatele Foltýna (The Cheat).

In his brilliant "Pocket" tales Čapek shows himself to be a master of short-story writing, following the example of G.K. Chesterton, just as his "utopian" plays and novels show the influence of H.G. Wells.

Less successful was his satirical fantasy Továrna na absolutno (The Absolute at Large), which tells how the discovery of the power of electrons and their application in a factory lead to overproduction and unemployment (including not "butter mountains" but all other "mountains" from tacks to rolls of paper) and release "fall-out" in the form of widespread religious hysteria; Krakatit, a half-mystical and strongly erotic story of the struggle of foreign powers to obtain the secret of an atomic bomb; and První parta (The First Rescue Party), a social realist novel about working-class heroism during an accident in a coal mine. His novel Válka s mloky (War with the Nwets)—an extension of the theme in R.U.R.—was particularly topical at the time as it reflected the alarm felt at the power of the Nazi system and the threat of Hitler's aggression.

Čapek's writings are the product of his highly original imagination and deep philosophical thought. They are strongly influenced by his preoccupation with epistemology. His novels and plays are full of thought-provoking ideas and intriguing situations but lack fully rounded characters. He has continued to maintain his hold over the Czech reading public in spite of (or perhaps because of) his close identification with the officially rejected Masaryk Republic, but his work is today less well-known abroad, perhaps because many of the problems he dealt with so imaginatively have been overtaken or are seen today in a more modern light. The failure of existing English translations to match his highly individual literary style has proved an additional handicap to full appreciation of his talents. He had great faith in the West, and the Munich "betrayal" robbed him of his will to live. "It's not so bad. They haven't sold us out, only given us away" (Bajky [Fables]).

—Cecil Parrott

See the essays on The Insect Play and R.U.R.

CARDENAL, Ernesto

Born: Granada, Nicaragua, 20 January 1925. Family moved to León, 1930. Education: Educated at the Colegio Centro América, Granada; National Autonomous University, Mexico City, 1944–48, degree 1948; Columbia University, New York, 1948–49. Career: Travelled through France, Italy, Spain, and Switzerland, 1949; co-founder, Hilo Azul publishers, 1951; member, National Union for Popular Action, and contributor of political articles to La Prensa, 1950s; Trappist novice, Gethsemani, Kentucky, 1957–59; member of Benedictine monastery of Santa María de la Resurrección, Cuernavaca, Mexico, 1959–65, and a seminary in Colombia, 1961; ordained Roman Catholic priest, 1965; founder and leader, religious community "Nuestra Señora de Solentiname," Solentiname Archipelago, Nicaragua, during the 1960s and 1970s; visited Cuba to serve on poetry jury, 1970; chaplain, anti-government Sandinista Front, and subsequently appointed Minister of Culture in the Sandinista government in 1979. Lives in Managua. Awards: Managua Centenary prize, 1952; Christopher Book award, 1972; La Paz prize grant, 1980.

PUBLICATIONS

Verse

La ciudad deshabitada. 1946.

Proclama del conquistador. 1947.

Gethsemani, Ky. 1960.

La hora 0. 1960.

Epigramas: Poemas. 1961.

- Oración por Marilyn Monroe, y otros poemas.* 1965; as Marilyn Monroe and Other Poems, edited and translated by Robert Pring-Mill, 1975.
- El estrecho dudoso.* 1966; as The Doubtful Strait, translated by John Lyons, 1995.
- Antología.* 1967.
- Poemas.* 1967.
- Salmos.* 1967; as Psalms of Struggle and Liberation, translated by Emile G. McAnany, 1971; as Psalms, translated by Thomas Blackburn, 1981.
- Mayapán.* 1968.
- Poemas reunidos 1949–1969.* 1969.
- Homenaje a los indios americanos.* 1969; as Homage to the American Indians, translated by Carlos and Monique Altschul, 1973.
- La hora 0 y otros poemas.* 1971; as Zero Hour and Other Documentary Poems, edited by Donald D. Walsh, translated by Paul W. Borgeson, Jr. and Jonathan Cohen, 1980.
- Antología*, edited by Pablo Antonio Cuadro. 1971.
- Poemas.* 1971.
- Antología.* 1972.
- Canto nacional.* 1973.
- Oráculo sobre Managua.* 1973.
- Poesía escogida.* 1975.
- Apocalypse and Other Poems*, edited and translated by Robert Pring-Mill and Donald D. Walsh. 1977.
- Antología.* 1978.
- Canto a un país que nace.* 1978.
- Poesía de uso: Antología, 1949–1978.* 1979.
- Poesía.* 1979.
- Nueva antología poética.* 1979.
- Tocar el cielo.* 1981.
- Waslala*, translated by Fidel López-Criado and R.A. Kerr. 1983.
- Antología: Ernesto Cardenal.* 1983.
- Poesía de la nueva Nicaragua.* 1983.
- Vuelos de victoria.* 1984; as Flights of Victory: Songs of Celebration of the Nicaraguan Revolution, translated by Marc Zimmerman (bilingual edition), 1985.
- Quetzalcóatl.* 1985.
- With Walker in Nicaragua and Other Early Poems, 1949–1954*, translated by Jonathan Cohen. 1985.
- From Nicaragua with Love: Poems, 1976–1986*, translated by Jonathan Cohen. 1987.
- Cántico cósmico.* 1989; as The Music of the Spheres (bilingual edition), translated by Dinah Livingstone, 1990; as Cosmic Canticle, translated by John Lyons, 1993.
- Los ovnis de oro: Poemas indios.* 1991; as Golden UFOs: The Indian Poems, edited by Russell O. Salmon, translated by Carlos and Monique Altschul. 1992.
- Other
- Vida en el amor.* 1970; as To Live Is to Love, translated by Kurt Reinhardt, 1972; as Vida en el amor/Love, translated by Dinah Livingstone, 1974; as Abide in Love, translated by Dinah Livingstone, 1995.
- En Cuba.* 1972; as In Cuba, translated by Donald D. Walsh, 1974.
- Cristianismo y revolución*, with Fidel Castro. 1974.
- Cardenal en Valencia* (interviews). 1974.
- El Evangelio en Solentiname.* 1975; as The Gospel in Solentiname, translated by Donald D. Walsh, 1976; as Love in Practice: The Gospel in Solentiname, 1977; selections as Evangelio, pueblo, y arte, 1983; selections as The Gospel in Art by the Peasants of Solentiname, edited by Philip and Sally Sharper, 1984.
- La santidad de la revolución.* 1976.
- La paz mundial y la revolución de Nicaragua.* 1981.
- Nostalgia del futuro: Pintura y buena noticia en Solentiname.* 1982.
- La democratización de la cultura.* 1982.
- Nicaragua: La guerra de liberación—der Befreiungskrieg*, with Richard Cross. 1982(?).
- Nuevo cielo y tierra nueva.* 1985.
- Del Monasterio al Mundo: Correspondencia entre Ernesto Cardenal y Thomas Merton (1959–1968)*, edited by Santiago Daydí-Tolson. N.d.
- Editor, with José Coronel Urtecho, Antología de la poesía norteamericana. 1963.
- Editor, with Jorge Montoya Toro, Literatura indígena americana: Antología. 1964.
- Editor, Poesía nicaragüense. 1973.
- Editor, Poesía nueva de Nicaragua. 1974.
- Editor, Poesía cubana de la revolución. 1976.
- Editor, Antología de poesía primitiva. 1979.
- Editor, Poemas de un joven, by Joaquín Pasos. 1983.
- Editor, Antología: Azarias H. Pallais. 1986.
- Translator, Catulo-Marcial en versión de Ernesto Cardenal. 1978.
- Translator, Ezra Pound: Antología, with José Coronel Urtecho. 1979.
- Translator, Tu paz es mi paz, by Ursula Schulz. 1982.
- *
- Bibliography: An Annotated Bibliography of and about Ernesto Cardenal by Janet Lynne Smith, 1979.
- Critical Studies: Poetas de América en España: Cardenal, político by M.R. Barnatán, 1973; Emblems of a Season of Fury by T. Merton, 1973; Homenaje a Ernesto Cardenal, edited by P.R. Gutierrez, 1975; “Daniel Boone, Moses and the Indians: Ernesto Cardenal’s Evolution from Alienation to Social Commitment”, in Chasqui, 11(1), 1981, and “The Image of the United States in the Poetry of René Depestre and Ernesto Cardenal,” in Revista/Review Interamericana, 11(2), 1981, both by Henry Cohen; “A Search for Utopia on Earth: Toward an Understanding of the Literary Production of Ernesto Cardenal” by C. Schaefer, in Crítica Hispánica, 4(2), 1982; Ernesto Cardenal en Solentiname by H. Tones, 1982; “The Evolution of Ernesto Cardenal’s Prophetic Poetry,” in Latin American Literary Review, 12(23), 1983, “Cardenal’s Poetic Style: Cinematic Parallels,” in Revista Canadiense de Estudios Hispánicos, 11(1), 1986, and “Cardenal’s Exteriorismo: The Ideology Underlying the Esthetic,” in Mid Hudson Languages Studies, 10, 1987, all by Jorge H. Valdés; “Prophecy of Liberation: The Poetry of Ernesto Cardenal” by Edward Elias, in Poetic Prophecy in Western Literature edited by Jan Wojcik and Raymond-Jean Frontain, 1984; La poesía de Ernesto Cardenal: Cristianismo y revolución by E. Urdanivia Bertarelli, 1984; “Poetry in the Central American Revolution: Ernesto Cardenal and Roque Dalton” by John Beverley, in Literature and Contemporary Revolutionary Culture, 1, 1984–85; “Peace, Poetry and Popular Culture: Ernesto Cardenal and the Nicaraguan Revolution” by Claudia Scharfer-Rodríguez, in Latin American Literary Review, 13(26), 1985; “Tradition and Originality in the Denunciator y Salmos of Ernesto Cardenal” by G.B. Barrow, in Chispa, 1987; “Political Poetry and the Example of Ernesto Cardenal” by Reginald Gibbons, in Critical Inquiry, 13(3), 1987; “Ernesto Cardenal and North American Literature: Intertextuality and Reality and the Formulation of an Ethical Identity,” in Inti, 31, 1990, and “Ernesto Cardenal’s El estrecho dudoso: Reading/Re-Writing History,” in Revista Canadiense de Estudios Hispánicos, 15(1), 1990, both by Steven F. White; La Poesía Cómica de Ernesto Cardenal by Ma. Angeles Pastor Alonso, 1998; Poets of Contemporary Latin America: History and the Inner Life by William Rowe, 2000.

* * *

In reading Ernesto Cardenal’s poetry one must separate the charismatic personality of the ex-Sandinista Minister of Culture, and once Trappist priest, from the actual poems. Cardenal’s crucial position in the Nicaraguan hierarchy, and his public image, have led to him being heavily criticized in Mario Vargas Llosa’s novel about a failed revolutionary in Peru, Historia de Mayta (The Real Life of Alejandro Mayta), and positively celebrated in Julio Cortázar’s short story “Apocalypse in Solentiname.”

When Cardenal began publishing his poems in the 1940s it was under two crucial influences, one literary, the other political. Literary surrealism had an enormous liberating impact on Latin American poetry, for it seemed to combine personal freedom of expression with a revolutionary context. Cardenal first published poems in the magazine Letras de México in 1946 in free verse, and he has acknowledged his debt to the “mad” Nicaraguan poet Alfonso Cortés. However, the ferocious political situation under the successive dictatorships of the Somozas made Cardenal reconsider the ambition of a merely personal liberation in a written text. From this questioning emerged one of the constants of Cardenal’s developing poetics. The position of the poet’s “ego” is made secondary to the need to write a poem that urges action. By taking the effect of the poem on the reader as central to the poem’s area of action, the poet relegates the more Romantic notion of the poem as the sincere expression of his own inner world.

Cardenal discovered the means to carry out his new perception of the role of the poet in an illiterate country like Nicaragua through reading Ezra Pound while studying at Columbia University in New York. He began translating Pound, William Carlos Williams, and others, aware that most of the Latin American poets of his generation were still, like Rubén Darío before him, looking towards French culture, and especially French surrealism, for their examples. To Cardenal, Pound’s Cantos, with their incorporation of quotations, with the collage technique of confronting documentary texts with Chinese poems, and with their ambitious attempt to go beyond the limitations of an individual’s private world, suggested a new sound to poetry. Cardenal called this technique “exteriorismo” (exteriorism), the term denoting an attitude that pays more attention to the outer world than to the inner one. It must be emphasized that Cardenal sounded strange and new to most of his contemporaries because he had turned to another literary tradition. Over time Cardenal published his translations in Antología de la poesía norteamericana [Anthology of North American Poetry], and Ezra Pound: Antología.

The briefly mentioned political context to Cardenal’s poetry further drives the ego-obsessed Romantic out of the poems. In 1961, in Mexico, Cardenal published his Epigramas, based, through Pound, on his reading of Latin and Greek poets. Cardenal develops a counterpointing technique of opposing the past (Caesar and others) with the present (Somoza), and by pretending to write love poems avoids direct political denunciation. His little poem “Imitation of Propertius” ends, “And she prefers me, poor, to all Somoza’s millions.” Through Pound, Cardenal also learnt that a poem must be clear and understood immediately. The epigrams remain fresh and provocative.

For protest poetry to work on its audience it must be direct, immediately comprehensible, and, in Latin America, readable aloud. The Chilean poet Pablo Neruda had led the way in the early 1950s with his realization that a poem must be read aloud to spread beyond the confines of the printed word and the few who can afford to buy books. Surrealism, with its twisted dark metaphors, its forays into the unconscious, would not do. All Cardenal’s post-1960s poetry is narrative. It avoids the condensation of meaning in metaphors and uses the syntax of prose.

In some ways Cardenal, by expanding what can be included in a lyrical poem, has become the unofficial historian of Nicaragua, then Central America, and finally for the whole Latin American sub-continent. In La hora 0 (“Zero Hour”) there are poems with specific references to local Nicaraguan revolutionaries like Adolfo Bález Bone or Sandino; Cardenal names places, dictators, characters from the past and the present that have no universal poetic appeal as such, but who represent his version of evil. It is this moral vision that allows Cardenal to blend his Christian messianism (he was ordained as a priest in 1965) with his reading of Karl Marx. Salmos (Psalms of Struggle and Liberation) combines a rewriting of the Biblical psalms with a critique of Somoza. This political-religious vein continues through the poems of Oración por Marilyn Monroe, y otros poemas (Marilyn Monroe and Other Poems) where, in the title poem, Cardenal mentions Monroe’s last unanswered phone call and ends “Lord answer that phone.” The title of that poem shows how Cardenal has moved beyond Pound to the pop culture of 1960s America; but he gives Warhol’s icon a moral value. His criticism of the United States’ consumer culture flows from this stance.

In the collections El estrecho dudoso (The Doubtful Strait) and Homenaje a los indios americanos (Homage to the American Indians) Cardenal expands his poems by recreating the history of the conquest of Central America and catalogues the pre-Columbian Indian heritage, basing his work on archival studies, and incorporating voices and historical documents into the poems so that a reader actually learns about the forgotten past. A good example is “Economy of Tahuantinsuyu,” where Cardenal contrasts capitalist North American uses of money with pre-Columbian ones, where political truth and religious truth “were but the one truth for the people.” The poem that best conveys Cardenal’s radical moral vision is his lament on the death of his mentor, the Trappist poet Thomas Merton (whose poems Cardenal has translated into Spanish), which ends, “We only love and only are on dying/The final deed the gift of all one’s being/okay.” On reading this poem in conjunction with the notes he was allowed to write during his stay at the Trappist monastery (see his Gethsemani, Ky) few would doubt Cardenal’s deserved position as a much-admired poet.

Cardenal has written Vida en el amor (To Live Is to Love), a book on love, which is close in form to a sermon, En Cuba (In Cuba) on his crucial stay in Cuba, El Evangelio en Solentiname (The Gospel in Solentiname) on his religious beliefs, as well as poems celebrating the Sandinista victory of 1979, Vuelos de victoria (Flights of Victory). His poem Cántico cósmico (Cosmic Canticle) is a celebration of the energy of the cosmos, based on his reading of science and cosmology in pursuit of an interest that derives from his earlier reading of the theologian Teilhard de Chardin. However, in this later poetry the fertile juxtaposition of his moral stance with his readings of Pound and his opposition to Somoza has given way to a lax prose syntax that carries few poetic surprises.

—Jason Wilson

CARDUCCI, Giosuè (Alessandro Giuseppe)

Also known as Giosue Carducci. Born: Valdicastello, near Pisa, territory of Tuscany, 27 July 1835. Lived in Maremma, 1838–49. Education: Educated at home; studied the humanities, rhetoric, and philosophy in Florence, from 1849; Scuola Normale, Pisa, 1853–56, degree in philology and philosophy 1856. Family: Married Elvira Menicucci in 1859, two sons and three daughters; had affair with Carolina Cristofori Piva (“Lina”) in the 1870s. Career: Co-founder, Amici Pedanti society; teacher of rhetoric, Ginnasio di San Miniato al Tedesco, 1856–57; returned to live with his family in Florence, 1857; private tutor, and edited and wrote prefaces to the Diamante series of classics produced by Barbèra, publishers, Florence, from 1858; professor of Greek, then Italian and Latin, Liceo Forteguerri, Pistoia, 1860; professor of Italian, University of Bologna, 1861–1904 (retired). Elected as republican deputy to parliament, 1876; later a monarchist candidate, but failed to get elected; named a senator, 1890. Awards: Nobel prize for literature, 1906. Died: 16 February 1907.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Opere. 20 vols., 1889–1909.
Edizione nazionale delle opere. 30 vols., 1935–42; supplemented with Lettere (21 vols.), 1938–60, and Aggiunte (1 vol.), 1968.
Poesie, edited by Albano Sorbelli. 1950.
Poesie scelte, edited by P. Treves. 1968.
Poesie scelte, edited by Luigi Baldacci. 1974.
Poesie e prose scelte, edited by Aulo Greco. 1974.
Poesie, edited by Giorgio Barberi Squarotti. 1978.
Poesie, edited by Guido Davico Bonino. 1980.

Verse

Rime. 1857; as Juvenilia (definitive edition), 1880.
Levia gravia. 1868; definitive edition, 1881.

Poesie: Decennalia, Levia Gravia, Juvenilia. 1871; revised edition, 1875.
Primavera elleniche. 1872.
Nuove poesie. 1873.
Odi barbare. 3 vols., 1877–89; in 2 vols., 1893; edited by M. Valgimigli, 1959, and Gianni A. Papini, 1988; parts translated in Poems, 1907, and by J.E. Watson as To the Sources of the Clitumnus, 1912; as The Barbarian Odes, translated by William Fletcher Smith, 1939, revised (bilingual edition), 1950.
Il canto dell'amore. 1878.
Satana e polemiche sataniche. 1879.
Giambi ed Epodi. 1882; edited by E. Palmieri, 1959.
Ça ira. 1883.
Rime nuove. 1887; edited by P.P. Trompeo and G.B. Salinari, 1961; parts translated in Poems, 1907; as Rime nuove, translated by Laura Fullerton Gilbert, 1916; as The New Lyrics, translated by William Fletcher Smith, 1942.
Poems, translated by Frank Sewall. 1892.
La chiesa di Polenta. 1897.
Rime e ritmi. 1899; edited by M. Valgimigli and G.B. Salinari, 1964; parts translated in Poems, 1907; as The Lyrics and Rhythms, translated by William Fletcher Smith, 1942.
Poesie, edited by Carducci. 1901.
Poems of Italy, translated by M.W. Arms. 1906.
Poems (selections), translated by Maud Holland. 1907.
Carducci: A Selection of His Poems, translated by G.L. Bickersteth. 1913.
A Selection from the Poems, translated by Emily A. Tribe. 1921.
From the Poems of Giosuè Carducci, translated by Romilda Rendel. 1929.
Political and Satirical Verse, translated by William Fletcher Smith. 1942.
24 Sonnets, translated by Arthur Burkhard (bilingual edition). 1947.
Selected Verse, translated by David H. Higgins, 1994.

Other

Studi letterari. 1874.
Delle poesie latine edite ed inedite di L. Ariosto. 1875; as La gioventù di L. Ariosto e le sue poesie latine, 1881.
Ai parentali di Giovanni Boccaccio in Certaldo. 1876.
Bozzetti critici e discorsi letterari. 1876.
Confessioni e battaglie. 3 vols., 1882–84.
Eterno femminino regale: Dalle mie memorie. 1882.
Conversazioni critiche. 1884.
Petrarca e Boccaccio. 1884.
Il libro delle prefazioni. 1888.
L'opera di Dante: Discorso. 1888; as Dante's Work, translated by Gina Dogliotti, 1923.
Lo studio bolognese: Discorso. 1888.
La libertà perpetua di San Marino. 1894.
Degli spiriti e delle forme nella poesia di Giacomo Leopardi: Considerazioni. 1898.
Discorsi letterari e storici. 1899.
Da un carteggio inedito (letters to Countess Silvia Pasolini-Zanelli). 1907.
Antologia carducciana: Poesie e prose, edited by Guido Mazzoni and Giuseppe Picciola. 1908; several subsequent editions.

Lettere, edited by Alberto Dallolio and Guido Mazzoni. 2 vols., 1911–13.

Pagine di storia letteraria (selection), edited by G. Lipparini. 1913.

Pagine autobiografiche, edited by G. Lipparini. 1914.

Prose scelte, edited by L. Bianchi and P. Nediani. 1935.

Lettere (supplement to Opere). 21 vols., 1938–60.

Il Carducci (selection), edited by F. Selmi. 1965.

Prose e poesie, edited by G. Getto and Guido Davico Bonino. 1965.

Poesie e prose scelte, edited by M. Fubini and R. Ceserani. 1968.

Lettere scelte, edited by G. Ponte and F. De Nicola. 1985.

Prose critiche, edited by Giovanni Falaschi. 1987.

Editor, Satire e poesie minori, by V. Alfieri. 1858.

Editor, La secchia rapita e l'Oceano, by A. Tassoni. 1858.

Editor, Poesie minori, by G. Parini. 1858.

Editor, Poesie liriche, by V. Monti. 1858.

Editor, Del Principe e delle lettere con altre prose, by V. Alfieri. 1859.

Editor, Poesie di Lorenzo de' Medici. 1859.

Editor, Poesie di G. Giusti. 1859.

Editor, Satire odi e lettere di S. Rosa. 1860.

Editor, Poesie di Gabriele Rossetti. 1861.

Editor, Rime di M. Cino da Pistoia e d'altri del Secolo XIV. 1862.

Editor, Canti e poemi di V. Monti. 1862.

Editor, Le Stanze l'Orfeo e le Rime di Messer A. Ambrogini Poliziano. 1863.

Editor, Di T. Lucrezio Caro Della natura delle cose Libri VI volgarizzati da A. Marchetti. 1864.

Editor, Tragedie drammi e cantate di V. Monti. 1865.

Editor, Rime di Matteo e di Dino Frescobaldi. 1866.

Editor, Poeti erotici del Sec. XVIII. 1868.

Editor, Versioni poetiche di V. Monti. 1869.

Editor, Lirica del Sec. XVII. 1871.

Editor, Cantilene e ballate, strambotti e madrigali nei secoli XIII e XIV. 1871.

Editor, Satire, rime e lettere scelte, by B. Menzini. 1874.

Editor, Rime di F. Petrarca sopra argomenti storici morali e diversi. 1876.

Editor, Strambotti e rispetti dei secoli XIV, XV e XVI. 1877.

Editor, Lettere, by F.D. Guerrazzi. 2 vols., 1880–82.

Editor, La poesia barbara nei secoli XV e XVI. 1881.

Editor, G. Garibaldi: Versi e prose. 1882.

Editor, with U. Brilli, Lettere italiane. 1883.

Editor, Lettere disperse e inedite di Pietro Metastasio. 1883.

Editor, Scelte poesie di V. Monti, con le varie lezioni. 1885.

Editor, Cacce in rima dei secoli XIV, XV. 1896.

Editor, Lettere del Risorgimento italiano. 2 vols., 1896–97.

Editor, with S. Ferrari, Le rime di Francesco Petrarca di su gli originali. 1899.

Editor, with others, Raccolta degli storici italiani dal 500 al 1500 ordinata da L.A. Muratori. 1900.

Editor, Scritti politici, by A. Mario. 1901.

Editor, Scritti letterari e artistici, by A. Mario. 1901.

Editor, Primavera e fiore della lirica italiana. 1903.

Editor, Carlo Goldoni: Sonetti. 1903.

Editor, Giuseppe Monti: Epodo. . . : Documenti storici. 1904.

Illustrator, Della Scelta di curiosità letterarie inedite o rare illustrazione. 1863.

*

Bibliography: A Bibliography of Critical Material (1859–1940) on Giosuè Carducci by William Fletcher Smith, 1942.

Critical Studies: Giosuè Carducci (in English) by Orlo Williams, 1914; L'uomo Carducci by G. Papini, 1918; Giosuè Carducci: Studio intorno alla critica e alla lirica carducciana by E. Palmieri, 1926; Giosuè Carducci: L'uomo e il poeta by G. Petronio, 1930; L'opera critica di Giosuè Carducci by D. Mattalia, 1934; I giorni e le opere di Giosuè Carducci by Giulio Natali, 1935, reprinted as Giosuè Carducci, 1950; Giosuè Carducci: Studio critico by Benedetto Croce, 1937; Carducci: His Critics and Translators in England and America 1881–1932 by S.E. Scalia, 1937; La prosa di Giosuè Carducci by A. Cerea, 1957; Carducci senza retorica by L. Russo, 1957; Giosuè Carducci: L'uomo, il poeta, il critico e il prosatore by N. Busetto, 1958; Il grande Carducci by F. Giannessi, 1958; La poesie e la prosa di Giosuè Carducci by Francesco Flora, 1959; Discorsi nel cinquantenario della morte di Giosuè Carducci by various authors, 1959; Il poeta della Terza Italia: Vita di Giosuè Carducci by M. Biagini, 1961; Carducci nelle lettere by R. Bruscaagli, 1973; Carducci (survey of criticism) by Giorgio Santangelo, 1973; Per una lettura storica di Carducci by F. Mattesini, 1975; Carducci poeta barbaro by Franco Robecchi, 1981; "The Mixed Blessings of Tradition: An Examination of Carducci's 'Idillio maremmano'" by Remo Catani, in The Italian Lyric Tradition, 1993; Carducciana by Renato Serra, 1996; Carducci di Carducci by Umberto Panozzo, 2000.

* * *

Giosuè Carducci's critical fortune has swung sharply from inordinate veneration to out-and-out rejection. With the passing of the historical and political circumstances of a united Italy, which had assured the fame of Carducci's patriotic compositions, he came to be regarded as rhetorical, outdated, and of doubtful creative ability. This view has, however, been moderately redressed in recent decades through a quiet appreciation of more intimate aspects of his writings.

His reputation owes much to a vast output of critical, occasional, and epistolary prose, but his contribution to creative literature is his verse. The collections, as definitively established by Carducci himself, are the result of a meticulous lifelong process of reordering and reworking. These give the mistaken impression that, after youthful experimentation, a period in which his work had a socio-political orientation was succeeded by a calmer phase, imbued with classical myth, whereas the two aspects in fact co-existed throughout his productive life. The reordering process responds to the desire for a classical ideal of harmony and represents the attempt to transcend a dialectic that sees the poetry of commitment vying with that of aesthetic purity.

The imitative early poems of Rime (Juvenilia) draw heavily on the classical tradition, but often herald the mature Carducci, both in their robust tone and in the combination of personal sadness (memories of his brother Dante's tragic suicide) and patriotic feeling (support of the house of Savoy in its quest to unify Italy). A similar amalgam can be found in Levia gravia, where Carducci finds something of his own voice in the forceful expression of socio-political sentiment and a new-found republicanism, and in the introduction of elegiac and idyllic notes. Important, too, in the evolution of his style, is the controversial "Inno a Satana" ("Hymn to Satan") of 1863 where, in a vigorous outburst of anti-clerical materialism, he exalts the forces of science, progress, and freedom of thought. His satire and political invective culminate in Giambi ed Epodi [Iambs and Epodes], which are classical in form, as the title indicates, but are concerned with contemporary issues and, in part, influenced by Hugo. It can be argued that here Carducci gives vent to his indignation and anti-papal feeling in too strident a voice; yet the collection has been admired by Natalino Sapegno who sees it as the most vital part of the poet's opus.

Carducci's creative peak, however, is generally perceived in the poems of Rime nuove (The New Lyrics) and parts of Odi barbare (The Barbarian Odes). While maintaining a thematic mixture, these collections introduce a restrained intimacy, the hallmark of his maturity, in the intense poems of longing, suffering, nostalgia and melancholy, as well as in the more imaginative of the historico-literary compositions. The expression of these feelings is not dissipated in sentimental effusion but translated into rapid movements and sharp visions that have found the approval of even the harshest critics.

Although some poems in The New Lyrics are inspired by history (like the "Ça ira" cycle on the French Revolution), the majority are personal, recalling Carducci's childhood in the Maremma—"Davanti a San Guido" ("In Front of San Guido")—and the death of his son Dante—"Pianto antico" ("Ancient Lament")—or animated by his love for Lina Piva. Many depict the simple attractions of rustic life—"Il bove" ("The Ox") or "Idillio maremmano" ("Maremman Idyll"). The collection also amply illustrates Carducci's mastery of the sonnet form.

The Barbarian Odes reproduce the rhythm of quantitative classical metre through the "barbarian" use of the tonic accents of modern Italian. Although this erudite experiment, with its origins in the Renaissance, had little following and now seems idiosyncratic, it was a bold and partially successful attempt to renew Italian verse. But too many odes seem outmoded in their rhetorical exaltation of the values of ancient Rome—"Alle fonti del Clitumno" ("At the Source of the Clitumnus")—in their scholastic idealization of epic and dramatic literature—"Presso l'urna di P.B. Shelley" ("Near P.B. Shelley's Urn")—or in their pedantic examination of the workings of historical Nemesis—"Per la morte di Napoleone Eugenio" ("On the Death of Napoleon Eugene"). Yet the collection is largely redeemed, and the potential of Carducci's innovations revealed, in a few simple odes that present the ancient world as an ideal source of solace, as in "Fantasia" ("Fantasy"), or which express a universal feeling of melancholy and transience that communicates the ennui of the modern psyche, as in "Alla stazione in una mattina d'autunno" ("At the Station on an Autumn Morning") and "Nevicata" ("Snowfall").

The later poems collected in Rime e ritmi (The Lyrics and Rhythms) show a tired Carducci flagging in inspiration, producing commemorative verses that accentuate his academic shortcomings, and they are only occasionally relieved by more felicitous, impressionistic moments.

Although it is often claimed that Carducci's classicism and rhetorical nationalism, which dominated the second half of the 19th century, exerted a regressive influence on Italian culture, isolating it from avantgarde Europe, a total repudiation of Benedetto Croce's fundamental approbation would be extreme. It has nevertheless been argued convincingly that Carducci marks the end of an era, and that the moral basis of his poetry separates him from Giovanni Pascoli and Gabriele D'Annunzio with whom he is traditionally linked. Conversely, one should not disregard the merits of his rigorously traditional aesthetics in the crisis and confusion of post-unification culture. His classicism is polemical: it militates against the excesses of both the late Romantics and the bohemian Scapigliati, and strives for a return to ancient naturalism in the name of lay values and scientific progress. What is more, his poetry was enriched by an assimilation of writers such as Hugo, Heine, and Shelley; and recent critical examination of unpretentious moments of everyday realism and inner feeling has brought out a modern affinity: Carducci emerges, at least in part, not as the national poet of yester-year, but as an elegiac poet of wider appeal, who, while remaining undaunted in his classicism, reveals a Romantic need for the illusion of beauty in the ephemerality of the past.

—Remo Catani

CARLET DE CHAMPLAIN DE MARIVAUX, Pierre

See MARIVAUX

CARPENTIER (Y VALMONT), Alejo

Born: Havana, Cuba, 26 December 1904. Education: Educated at the University of Havana. Family: Married Andrea Esteban. Career: Journalist, Havana, 1921–24; editor, Carteles magazine, Havana, 1924–28; director, Foniric Studios, Paris, 1928–39; writer and producer, CMZ radio station, Havana, 1939–41; professor of history of music, Conservatorio Nacional, Havana, 1941–43; lived in Haiti, Europe, the United States, and South America, 1943–59; director, Cuban Publishing House, Havana, 1960–67; cultural attaché, Cuban Embassy, Paris, from 1967. Columnist, El Nacional, Caracas; editor, Imam, Paris. Died: 24 April 1980.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Obras completas. 9 vols., 1983–86.

Fiction

¡Écue-yamba-Ó! 1933.

Viaje a la semilla (story). 1944.

El reino de este mundo. 1949; as The Kingdom of This World, translated by Harriet de Onís, 1957.

Los pasos perdidos. 1953; as The Lost Steps, translated by Harriet de Onís, 1956.

El acoso. 1956; as The Chase, translated by Alfred MacAdam, 1989.

Guerra del tiempo: Tres relatos y una novela: El Camino de Santiago, Viaje a la semilla, Semejante a la noche, y El acoso. 1958; as War of Time (includes The Highroad of Saint James; Right of Sanctuary; Journey Back to the Source; Like the Night; The Chosen), translated by Frances Partridge, 1970.

El siglo de las luces. 1962; as Explosion in a Cathedral, translated by John Sturrock, 1963.

El derecho de asilo, Dibujos de Marcel Berges (stories). 1972.

Los convidados de plata. 1972.

Concierto barroco. 1974; as Baroque Concerto, translated by Asa Zatz, 1991.

El recurso del método. 1974; as Reasons of State, translated by Frances Partridge, 1976.

Cuentos (stories). 1976.

La consagración de la primavera. 1978.

El arpa y la sombra. 1979; as The Harp and the Shadow, translated by Thomas and Carol Christensen, 1990.

Plays

Yamba-Ó, music by M.F. Gaillard (produced 1928).

La passion noire, music by M.F. Gaillard (produced 1932).

Verse

Dos poemas afrocaribios, music by A. García Caturla. 1929.

Poèmes des Antilles, music by M.F. Gaillard. 1929.

Other

La música en Cuba. 1946; as Music in Cuba, translated by Alan West-Durán, 2001.

Tientos y diferencias: Ensayos. 1964.

Literatura y conciencia política en América Latina. 1969.

La ciudad de las columnas (on Havana architecture), photographs by Paolo Gasparini. 1970.

Letra y solfa (articles), edited by Alexis Márquez Rodríguez. 1975.

Crónicas (articles). 1975.

Críticas de arte: 1922–39. 1975.

Razón de ser (lectures). 1976.

Bajo el Signo de la Cibeles: Crónicas sobre España y los españoles, 1925–1937, edited by Julio Rodríguez Puértolas. 1979.

El adjetivo y sus arrugas. 1980.

Ese músico que llevo dentro (selection), edited by Zolla Gómez. 1980.

La novela latinoamericana en vísperas de un nuevo siglo y otros ensayos. 1981.

Ensayos (essays). 1984.

Entrevistas, edited by Virgilio López Lemus. 1985.

Conferencias, edited by Virgilio López Lemus. 1987.

*

Bibliography: Carpentier: 45 años de trabajo intelectual, 1966; Bibliografía de Alejo Carpentier by Araceli García-Garranza, 1984.

Critical Studies: Three Authors of Alienation: Bombal, Onetti, Carpentier by M. Ian Adams, 1975; Major Cuban Novelists: Innovation and Tradition by Raymond D. Souza, 1976; Alejo Carpentier: The Pilgrim at Home by Roberto González Echevarría, 1977, revised edition, 1990; Alejo Carpentier and His Early Works by Frank Janney, 1981; Carpentier: Los pasos perdidos (in English) by Verity Smith, 1983; Alchemy of a Hero: A Comparative Study of the Works of Alejo Carpentier and Mario Vargas Llosa by Bob M. Tusa, 1983; Alejo Carpentier by Donald L. Shaw, 1985; Myth and History in Caribbean Fiction: Alejo Carpentier, Wilson Harris and Édouard Glissant by Barbara J. Webb, 1992; Carpentier's Proustian Fiction: The Influence of Marcel Proust on Alejo Carpentier by Sally Harvey, 1994; Postmodern Tales of Slavery in the Americas: From Alejo Carpentier to Charles Johnson by Timothy J. Cox, 2001.

* * *

Musicologist, journalist, critic, leader in the Afro-Cuban and vanguardia movements in Cuba in the 1920s, associate of the surrealists in Paris in the 1930s, Alejo Carpentier gave to 20th-century Latin American letters an important critical concept and a distinctive vision of American identity through history. In the prologue to El reino de este mundo (The Kingdom of This World), Carpentier proposed that there exists “lo real maravilloso americano” (“marvellous American reality”). A conflation of the vocabulary of surrealism (“marvellous”) and the primitivism of the Afro-Cuban movement, the term has, along with “magic realism,” been used to justify and to describe the element of the fantastic so prominent in much Latin American writing of the 20th century. (Among the authors significantly influenced by Carpentier’s precept and practice is the Colombian Gabriel García Márquez.) Almost as soon as he had elaborated the concept, however, Carpentier turned in his own work from the marvellous as the impossible and folkloric to the marvellous as the real, perceived by a modern, alienated eye, struck by the incongruity and irreality of what it really sees.

His early works include the first history of Cuban music, a scenario for an Afro-Cuban ballet, poems on Afro-Cuban themes, and a novel, ¡Écue-yamba-Ó! (God Be Praised), which follows a contemporary rural black into the city and through the rites of the santería and ñañigo cults. His second novel was a product of his middle age, and in it he began to redefine the essentially American less as the primitive than as a paradoxical synthesis of times, peoples, cultures, and styles, simultaneously primitive and sophisticated, European, African, and Indian. While his fictions remained conventional in structure, over time he elaborated an allusive, witty, ornately encrusted style, heterogeneous and baroque, itself both original and a synthesis.

Set in Haiti during the period of the French Revolution, The Kingdom of This World juxtaposes the effete high culture of Europeans with the primitive powers of their black slaves. Such folkloric impossibilities as taking animal shapes parallel cyclic political metamorphoses in which a black revolution re-enacts and intensifies the white oppression violently thrown off and is in its turn violently replaced by the oppressive rule of mulattoes. In Los pasos perdidos (The Lost Steps) a modern protagonist is on a search for primitive musical instruments from inauthentic, synthetic Paris through a Latin American city in the grip of a civil war that appears to be a quarrel “between the Guelphs and the Ghibellines” to the upper reaches of the Orinoco, a journey still further back in time, to “the roots of life.” In part a parable of Carpentier’s own efforts to discover the essential America, the project of modern man’s finding himself by losing himself in the primitive is doomed: the journey cannot be made twice.

Thereafter, Carpentier embraced his distinctive vision of Latin America as a place and a history split between its American realities and its European origins and consciousness. A volume of short stories, obsessed with origins, returns, and time, four novels and a fragment, all of the first order, complete an oeuvre distinguished by a paradoxical habit of seeing things twice, as past and as present, a multiplication of illusions with artifice as the nature of man, fallen into history, committed to “Adam’s task of naming things.” El siglo de las luces (Explosion in a Cathedral) returned to the Caribbean to chart once again the betrayals of the French Revolution, but this time from the perspective of the creole bourgeoisie. El recurso del método (Reasons of State) set an exemplary dictator amid real and fictive personages in Paris in 1913, and followed him back and forth across the Atlantic, never fully at home on either side, until his death in homesick Parisian exile, sometime in the 1940s, with a brief epilogue dated 1972. Concierto barroco (Baroque Concerto) reached an apotheosis of heterogeneous synthesis as a Mexican and his black servant give Vivaldi a topic for an opera, Motezuma, and as the trumpet in Handel's Messiah becomes the trumpet of Louis Armstrong, a glorious concert of incongruities in which all is transformed, but nothing is lost. It is a final, fitting paradox that Carpentier, still writing at the age of 76, should have died while at work on a novel celebrating a triumph of the Cuban revolution—in Paris.

—Regina Janes

See the essays on The Kingdom of this World and The Lost Steps.

CASSOLA, Carlo

Born: Rome, Italy, 17 March 1917. Education: Educated at the University of Rome, 1935–39, degree in law 1939. Military Service: In Spoleto, 1937. Family: Married Giuseppina Rabage, one daughter. Career: Journalist after World War II; lived in Grosseto, Tuscany, from 1950, where he was a teacher of history and philosophy; contributor, Il Contemporaneo, Il Mondo, Nuovi Argomenti, and other publications. Awards: Prato prize, 1955; Salento prize, 1958; Marzotto prize, 1959; Strega prize, 1960; Naples prize, 1970; Bancarella prize, 1976; Bagutta prize, 1978. Died: 29 January 1987.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

- Alla periferia* (stories). 1942.
La visita (stories). 1942; enlarged edition (includes Alla periferia), 1962.
Fausto e Anna. 1952; revised edition, 1958; as Fausto and Anna, translated by Isabel Quigly, 1960.
I vecchi compagni. 1953.
Il taglio del bosco (stories). 1954; edited by Tom O'Neill, 1970; as The Cutting of the Woods, translated by Raymond Rosenthal, in Six Modern Italian Novellas, edited by William Arrowsmith, 1964.
La casa di via Valadier. 1956.
Un matrimonio del dopoguerra. 1957.
Il soldato. 1958.
La ragazza di Bube. 1960; as Bebo's Girl, translated by Marguerite Waldman, 1962.
Un cuore arido. 1961; as An Arid Heart, translated by William Weaver, 1964.
Il cacciatore. 1964.
Tempi memorabili. 1966.
Storia di Ada (includes La maestra). 1967.
Il soldato e Rosa Gagliardi. 1967.
Ferrovia locale. 1968.
Una relazione. 1969.
Paura e tristezza. 1970; as Fear and Sadness, translated by Peter N. Petroni, in Portland Review, Fall-Winter 1981.

- Monte Mario*. 1973; as Portrait of Helena, translated by Sebastian Roberts, 1975.
Gisella. 1974.
Troppo tardi. 1975.
L'antagonista. 1976.
La disavventura. 1977.
L'uomo e il cane. 1977.
Un uomo solo. 1978.
Il superstite. 1978.
Il paradiso degli animali. 1979.
La morale del branco. 1980.
Vita d'artista. 1980.
Ferragosto di morte. 1980.
Il ribelle. 1980.
L'amore tanto per fare. 1981.
La zampa d'oca. 1981.
Gli anni passano. 1982.
Colloquio con le ombre. 1982.
Mio padre. 1983.

Other

- Viaggio in Cina*. 1956.
I minatori della Maremma, with Luciano Biancardi. 1956.
Poesia e romanzo, with Mario Luzi. 1973.
Fogli di diario. 1974.
Ultima frontiera. 1976.
Il gigante cieco. 1976.
Conversazione su una cultura compromessa, edited by Antonio Cardella. 1977.
La lezione della storia. 1978.
Letteratura e disarmo: Intervista e testi, edited by Domenico Tarizzo. 1978.
Il mondo senza nessuno. 1980.
Il romanzo moderno. 1981.
Cassola racconta (interview), edited by Pietro Poiana. 1981.
La rivoluzione disarmista. 1983.

*

Critical Studies: Letteratura e ideologia: Bassani, Cassola, Pasolini by Gian Carlo Ferretti, 1964; Carlo Cassola by Rodolfo Macchioni Jodi, 1967, revised edition, 1975; Carlo Cassola by Renato Bertacchini, 1977; Invito alla lettura di Cassola by G. Manacorda, 1981; Existence as Theme in Carlo Cassola's Fiction by Peter N. Pedroni, 1985; Il realismo esistenziale di Carlo Cassola by Vittorio Spinazzola, 1993.

* * *

Although born in Rome in 1917, Carlo Cassola chose Tuscany and the Maremma as the background against which he placed much of his early work, including the autobiographical novel Fausto e Anna (Fausto and Anna), based on his experiences as a partisan in 1944. This choice of a topographical setting that is neither city nor countryside but a twilight zone between the two—it is significant that one of his early works was in fact called Alla periferia [On the Outskirts]—provided Cassola with the possibility of exploiting to the full his predilection for an understated, almost colourless style of writing such as that used by Joyce in Dubliners, a book that Cassola admitted influenced him profoundly. More significantly, however, the peripheral setting of much of Cassola's early—and best—work underlines his attitude to life and the transformation of life into art. In other words it gives him the possibility of expressing his fascination with a life lived on the margins of society, a life that does not have any precise or easily defined characteristics or outlines. Hence Cassola's adoption, at the beginning of his career, of the word sublimare to describe his poetics, which he saw as the translation of the subconscious emotions of the artist into a language that was divested of all overt ideological, ethical, or psychological attributes. This early understated style adopted by Cassola reached its highest point artistically in the short novel Il taglio del bosco (The Cutting of the Woods), written shortly after the death of his wife.

In the novels published after The Cutting of the Woods, and in particular in Fausto and Anna, I vecchi compagni [The Old Companions], La casa di via Valadier [The House in the Via Valadier], and Un matrimonio del dopoguerra [A Post-War Marriage], there emerges a rather polemical tone, as the author seeks to investigate the disappointed hopes and aspirations of the partisans. His often ambiguous attitude to the achievements of the Resistance movement as expressed through the dialogue and through the protagonists' attitudes characterizes this second phase of Cassola's writing, and has been criticized by the Italian Left, including such writers as Pier Paolo Pasolini and Giorgio Bassani: when, for instance, the prizewinning La ragazza di Bube (Bebo's Girl) was published in 1960.

From 1961 onwards, with the publication of Un cuore arido (An Arid Heart), Cassola may be said to have returned, more or less, to his early style in which the rhythm of the narration seems to coincide with the rhythm of life itself—the humble, usually uneventful life of unsophisticated characters who nevertheless impart dignity to that life by virtue of their calm and stoical acceptance of the odds against them, mostly of an economic kind. It must be added, however, that it is only in such works as Ferrovía locale [Local Railway] that Cassola manages to recapture the high artistic tone of his best work. For the most part, unfortunately, in this last phase, the reader is made increasingly uneasy by a sense of aridity in the lives of Cassola's protagonists—a sense of lost opportunities and in the last analysis, of an inability to live life in any full or meaningful human sense of the term.

—Gabrielle Barfoot

CASTELLANOS, Rosario

Born: Mexico City, Mexico, 25 May 1925. Grew up in Comitán; family moved to Mexico City, 1941, after losing its estate in land reforms. Education: Educated at the National Autonomous University, Mexico City, 1944–50, M.A. in philosophy 1950; University of Madrid, 1950–51. Family: Married Ricardo Guerra in 1958 (divorced); one son. Career: Visited Spain, France, Austria, Italy, the Netherlands, and Germany, 1951; director, Chiapas cultural programmes, 1951–53, and staff member, Institute of Arts and Sciences, both in Tuxtla Gutiérrez; director, El Teatro Guiñol (puppet theatre) for the National Indigenist Institute, San Cristóbal, 1956–59, and toured Chiapas, 1956–58; journalist for various Mexico City newspapers and periodicals, from 1960; press and information director, 1960–66, and professor of comparative literature, 1967–71, National Autonomous University, Mexico City, 1960–66; visiting professor of Latin American literature at the United States universities of Wisconsin, Indiana, and Colorado, all 1967; Mexican ambassador to Israel, Tel Aviv, and lecturer in Mexican literature, Hebrew University, Jerusalem, 1971–74. Awards: Mexican Critics' award, 1957; Chiapas prize, 1958; Xavier Villaurrutia prize, 1961; Woman of the Year award, Mexico, 1967. Died: 7 August 1974.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

A Rosario Castellanos Reader, edited and translated by Maureen Ahern, with others. 1988.

Obras, edited by Eduardo Mejía. 1989.

Another Way To Be: Selected Works (poetry, essays, stories), edited and translated by Myralyn F. Allgood. 1990.

Fiction

Balún Canán. 1957; as The Nine Guardians, translated by Irene Nicholson, 1959.

Ciudad Real: Cuentos (stories). 1960; as The City of Kings, edited by Yvette E. Miller, translated by Gloria Chacon de Arjona and Robert S. Rudder, 1993.

Oficio de tinieblas. 1962; fragment as Office of Tenebrae, translated by Anne and Christopher Fremantle, in Latin American Literature Today, 1977.

Los convidados de agosto (stories). 1964.

Álbum de familia (stories). 1971.

Verse

Trayectoria del polvo. 1948.

Apuntes para una declaración de fe. 1948.

De la vigilia estéril. 1950.

Dos poemas. 1950.

Presentación al templo: Poemas (Madrid, 1951), with El rescate del mundo. 1952.

Poemas 1953–1955. 1957.

Al pie de la letra. 1959.

Salomé y Judith: Poemas dramáticos. 1959.

Lívica luz. 1960.

Materia memorable (verse and essays). 1969.

Poesía no eres tú: Obra poética 1948–1971. 1972.

Looking at the Mona Lisa, translated by Maureen Ahern. 1981.

Bella dama sin piedad y otros poemas. 1984.

Meditación en el umbral: Antología poética, edited by Julian Palley. 1985; as Meditation on the Threshold (bilingual edition), translated by Palley, 1988.

Selected Poems (bilingual edition), edited by Cecilia Vicuña and Magda Bogin, translated by Bogin. 1988.

Plays

Tablero de damas: Pieza en un acto. In América: Revista Antológica, 68, 1952.

El eterno femenino. 1975; as Just Like a Woman, translated by V.M. Bouvier, 1984; as The Eternal Feminine, in A Rosario Castellanos Reader, 1988.

Other

- Sobre cultura femenina* (essays). 1950.
La novela mexicana contemporánea y su valor testimonial. 1965.
Rostros de México, photographs by Bernice Kolko. 1966.
Juicios sumarios: Ensayos. 1966; revised edition, as Juicios sumarios: Ensayos sobre literatura, 2 vols., 1984.
Mujer que sabe latín (criticism). 1973.
El uso de la palabra (essays), edited by J.E. Pacheco. 1974.
El mar y sus pescaditos (criticism). 1975.

*

Bibliography: 'Rosario Castellanos (1925–1974) by Maureen Aherne, in Spanish American Women Writers, edited by Diane E. Marting, 1990; 'Rosario Castellanos' in Mexican Literature: A Bibliography of Secondary Sources by William David Foster, 1992 (2nd edition).

Critical Studies: Rosario Castellanos: Biografía y novelística by Rhoda Dybvig, 1965; La obra poética de Rosario Castellanos by Víctor N. Baptiste, 1972; Rosario Castellanos by Beatriz Reyes Nevares, 1976; 'Images of Women in Castellanos' Prose' by Phyllis Rodríguez-Peralta, in Latin American Literary Review, 6, 1977; 'Women and Feminism in the Works of Rosario Castellanos' by Beth Miller, in Feminist Criticism: Essays on Theory, Poetry, and Prose, edited by Cheryl L. Brown and Karen Olson, 1978; El universo poético de Rosario Castellanos by Germaine Calderón, 1979; Homenaje a Rosario Castellanos edited by Maureen Aherne and Mary Seale Vásquez, 1980; 'Point of View in Selected Poems by Rosario Castellanos' by Esther W. Nelson, in Revista/Review Interamericana, 12(1), 1982; 'Women in the Work of Rosario Castellanos' by Claire Tron de Bouchony, in Cultures, 8(3), 1982; 'Rosario Castellanos and the Structures of Power' by Helene M. Anderson, in Contemporary Women Authors of Latin America: Introductory Essays, 1983; Rosario by Oscar Bonifaz Caballero, 1984, as Remembering Rosario: A Personal Glimpse into the Life and Works, translated by Myralyn F. Allgood, 1990; 'Balún-Canán: A Model Demonstration of Discourse as Power,' in Revista de Estudios Hispánicos, 19(3), 1985, and 'Onomastics and Thematics in Balún-Canán,' in Literary Onomastic Studies, 13, 1986, both by Sandra Messinger Cypress; 'The Function of Interiorization in Oficio de tinieblas' by Frank R. Dorward, in Neophilologus, 69, 1985; The Double Strand: Five Contemporary Mexican Poets by Frank N. Dauster, 1987; 'Toward the Ransom of Eve: Myth and History in the Poetry of Rosario Castellanos' by N. Mandlove, in Retrospect: Essays on Latin American Literature edited by E.S. and T.J. Rogers, 1987; Lives on the Line: The Testimony of Contemporary Latin American Authors edited by Doris Meyer, 1988; Women's Voice by Naomi Lindstrom, 1989; 'Rosario Castellanos: Demythification through Laughter' by Nina M. Scott, in Humor, 2(1), 1989; 'Confronting Myths of Oppression: The Short Stories of Castellanos' by Chloe Funival, in Knives and Angels edited by Susan Bassnett, 1990; Prospero's Daughter: The Prose of Rosario Castellanos by Joanna O'Connell, 1995; Testamento de Hécuba: Mujeres e Indígenas en la Obra de Rosario Castellanos by María Luisa Gil Iriarte, 1999.

* * *

In 'If Not Poetry, Then What?' Rosario Castellanos identifies three points she considers cardinal in her writing: 'humour, solemn meditation, and contact with my carnal and historical roots.' Her complete works give evidence that she kept these points in mind. Her historical and carnal roots are most evident in 'El hombre del destino' ('Man of Destiny'), an essay about Lázaro Cárdenas (post-revolutionary Mexican president), and in 'Tres nudos en la red' ('Three Knots in the Net') and Balún Canán (The Nine Guardians), works that chronicle fictionally her family's adjustment to the loss of their properties when Cárdenas's administration implemented agrarian reform. In fact, most of her writing is intimately bound to her biography, reflecting from her personal perspective events and conditions around her. A preferred mode of approach to 'solemn meditation' in her writing is through a domestic vignette which then yields to thoughtful reflection. Humour in her writing takes the form of irony.

In Castellanos's works, significant thematic unity exists across genres. Themes in her essays (weekly newspaper columns written for several Mexico City newspapers) such as social inequality, injustice, and feminist thought, along with a sense of personal isolation and an almost obsessive concern with death, are echoed in her novels, short stories, theatre, and, especially, poetry.

Her early fiction portrays the lives of contemporary native peoples in her home state of Chiapas, defining the people's existence in terms of their history and mythology and the relation to, and contrast with, the history and mythology of Creole society. Castellanos's natives are neither Romanticism's 'noble savages' nor the positive pole of the Manichean opposition (good native victim/evil Creole oppressor) of the Indigenist movement. Her native characters seem authentic because they emerge from her first-hand observation of, and personal contact with, the Tzotzil-Tzeltal of Chiapas. Her recognition of the unequal status of natives in relation to Creoles is evident in 'La suerte de Teodoro Méndez Acubal' ('The Luck of Teodoro Méndez Acubal'). Inequality of status and the tragedy to which it often leads are explored in her essays such as 'Discriminación en Estados Unidos y en Chiapas' ('Discrimination in the United States and in Chiapas'), her novels (The Nine Guardians and Oficio de tinieblas—a fragment of which has been translated as Office of Tenebrae), and many of her short stories.

Oficio de tinieblas provides a bridge between her advocacy of the native and her focus on women from a feminist perspective. The protagonist is deemed inferior by both natives and Creoles because she is a woman, a native, and barren. However, by mastering the healing arts, she becomes a leader in her community and catalyses actions that lead to a native boy's expiatory crucifixion. Castellanos's concern for the natives oppressed by Chiapas's feudal society yields to probing examinations of the subordinate status of all women in that society. The questions of the subjugation of women—who are expected to be 'under a man's hand,' 'be it her father's, her brother's, her husband's, or her priest's'—and of masculine honour, which depends upon the behaviour of women, are given fictional form in many of her short stories, notably 'El viudo Roman' ('The Widower Román'), 'El advenimiento del águila' ('The Eagle'), and 'Las amistades efímeras' ('Fleeting Friendships'). An evolution from Rosario's concepts of woman's inherent intellectual inferiority expressed in Sobre cultura femenina [On Feminine Culture], to feminist conviction is easily discernible. She labours to raise the consciousness of her contemporaries, pointing out inequalities between the sexes in Mexico, yet insisting (as in 'Self-Sacrifice Is a Mad Virtue') that Mexican women have no right to complain about their subordinate status because they remain subjugated by choice in their failure to avail themselves of 'what the constitution gives them: the category of human being.'

Castellanos's theatrical works include two long dramatic poems and a play. El eterno femenino (The Eternal Feminine), despite its ironic humour, is a serious work, which deserves to be regarded as the pinnacle of her feminist writings. Using a double stage, Castellanos criticizes the reality of contemporary Mexican women as they play the roles dictated by the present-day myths of innocent bride, self-sacrificing wife, fulfilled mother, emancipated woman, mistress, and prostitute, while simultaneously recreating more authentic portraits of historical women long ago rendered into myths in Mexico: Eve, Sor Juana Inés de la Cruz, the Empress Carlotta, Malinche (Cortés's native mistress/translator), and so on.

Women's alienation and their oppression in contemporary urban life is the thread that runs through the short stories of Los convidados de agosto [The Guests of August] and Álbum de familia [Family Album]. The best known of these is "Lección de cocina" ("Cookery Lesson") a story that alternates the preparation of a meat recipe with acerbic comments on the life of a new bride.

A consummate poet, Castellanos once acknowledged that she "came to poetry after discovering that other roads were not viable for survival"; that for her, "the words of poetry constituted the only way to achieve permanence in this world." Still, in "An Attempt at Self-Criticism," she admits that it was not until 1950 that she "was beginning to discover [her] individuality and validity which, in poetry, has to express the moods of the soul." But discover it she did: her poems have unequivocally a woman's poetic voice. She speaks directly and intimately to her women readers about their isolation and the constraints that have limited their lives. By defamiliarizing the feminine context, she makes it, and its inequalities, visible, and leads her readers in the search for another way of being female, as she says in "Meditación en el umbral" ("Meditation on the Brink"), one "que no se llame Safo/ni Mesalina ni María Egipcíaca/ni Magdalena ni Clemencia Isaura" ("that's not named Sappho/or Messalina or Mary of Egypt/or Magdalene or Clémence Isaure").

Both in her early works expressing concern for the Indian's unjust existence in Chiapas and in her later writings about woman's inequitable situation in the world, Castellanos acknowledged "the other" and attempted to span the space of alienation with her poetic words.

—Oralia Preble-Niemi

CASTIGLIONE, Baldassarre

Also known as Baldesar Castiglione. Born: Casatico, territory of Mantua, 6 December 1478. Education: Studied Latin and Greek at the school of Giorgio Merula and Demetrio Calcondila, Milan, early 1490s. Family: Married Ippolita Torelli in 1516 (died 1520); one son and two daughters. Career: Attended the Court of Ludovico Sforza ("il Moro") in Milan, c. 1494–99; returned to Mantua, 1499, and entered service of the French-sponsored Francesco Gonzaga, ruler of Mantua, as diplomat and military commissioner: participated in the Battle of Garigliano against the Spanish-controlled Vice-royalty of Naples, 1503; entered the service of Guidobaldo di Montefeltro, Duke of Urbino, and his wife Elisabetta, 1504: commanded 50 men-at-arms to recapture lost territory for Urbino, 1504; travelled to England to receive the Order of the Garter from Henry VII, 1506; ambassador in Milan, 1507; on death of Guidobaldo, 1508, continued service with his successor, Francesco Maria, nephew of Pope Julius II; participated with papal forces in the Romagna campaign against Venice, 1509, the siege of Mirandola, 1511, and the reconquest of Romagna and Emilia after the Battle of Ravenna, 1512; wrote the prologue for La calandria by Dovizi da Bibbiena, q.v., 1513; ambassador in Rome on the death of Julius II and election of Leo X, 1513; received the castle of Novilara for his diplomatic and literary services, 1513, but settled in Rome as ambassador, 1514–16; followed Francesco Maria into exile in Mantua after the conquest of Urbino by papal forces, 1516; re-established stable relations between Rome and Mantua, 1519; resettled in Rome, 1520, and remained in the service of Rome and Mantua, 1520–24; neutral broker between Milan, France, and Spain to decide the fate of Lombardy, 1524; nuncio for Pope Clement VII at the Court of Emperor Charles V, Madrid, 1525–29. Died: 1529.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Opere volgari e latine, edited by G.A. and G. Volpi. 1733.

Opere di Baldassarre Castiglione e Giovanni Della Casa, edited by G. Prezzolini. 1937.

Il libro del cortegiano con una scelta delle opere minori, edited by Bruno Maier. 1955; second edition, 1964; third, supplemented edition, 1981.

Opere di Baldassarre Castiglione, Giovanni della Casa, Benvenuto Cellini, edited by Carlo Cordié. 1960.

Prose

Il libro del cortegiano. 1528; edited by Vittorio Cian, 1894, revised editions, 1910, 1929, and 1947, also edited by G. Preti, 1960, Ettore Bonora, 1972, Salvator Battaglia, 1988, and Carlo Cordié, 1991; as The Book of the Courtier, translated by Sir Thomas Hoby, 1561, reprinted 1974; also translated by Robert Samber, 1724; Leonard Eckstein, 1901; Charles Singleton, 1959; George Bull, 1967.

Plays

Il tirsi, with Cesare Gonzaga (produced 1506). 1553; edited by F. Torraca, in Teatro italiano dei secoli XII–XV, 1885.

Other

L'epistola ad regem Henricum de Guidubaldo Urbini duce. 1513.

Lettere (includes the Latin poetry and vernacular works). 2 vols., 1769–71.

Lettere inedite o rari, edited by G. Gorini. 1969.

Tutte le opere: Lettere, edited by Guido La Rocca. 1978.

*

Bibliography: "Studi sul Castiglione" by G.G. Ferrero, in Rivista di Sintesi Letterari, II, 1935.

Critical Studies: Baldassarre Castiglione, the Perfect Courtier: His Life and Letters by Julia Cartwright, 2 vols., 1908; Baldassarre Castiglione by G. Bongiovanni, 1929; Baldassarre Castiglione: Il cortegiano, il letterato, il politico by A. Vicinelli, 1931; La lingua di

Baldassarre Castiglione, 1942, and Un illustre nunzio pontificio del Rinascimento: Baldassarre Castiglione, 1951, both by Vittorio Cian; Baldassarre Castiglione: La sua personalità; la sua prosa by Mario Rossi, 1946; Il Cortegiano nella trattatistica del Rinascimento by G. Toffanin, 1962; La seconda redazione del Cortegiano di Baldassarre Castiglione edited by Ghino Ghinassi, 1968; Courtly Performances: Masking and Festivity in Castiglione's Book of the Courtier by Wayne A. Rebhorn, 1978; La misura e la grazia sul Libro del cortegiano by Antonio Gagliardi, 1989; The Economy of Human Relations: Castiglione's Libro del Cortegiano by Joseph D. Falvo, 1992; The Fortunes of the Courtier: The European Reception of Castiglione's Cortegiano by Peter Burke, 1996; Marsilio Ficino, Pietro Bembo, Baldassarre Castiglione: Philosophical, Aesthetic, and Political Approaches in Renaissance Platonism by Christine Raffini, 1998; Donne, Castiglione, and the Poetry of Courtliness by Peter DeSa Wiggins, 2000; The Absence of Grace: Sprezzatura and Suspicion in Two Renaissance Courtesy Books by Harry Berger Jr., 2000.

* * *

Combining a noble upbringing with a humanistic education, Baldassarre Castiglione's life—as a soldier, diplomat, courtier, and papal legate—never gave him the freedom to develop a literary career in the generation of Bembo, Ariosto, and Machiavelli, and gave rise to his Il libro del cortegiano (The Book of the Courtier) for which he is best remembered, as well as an eclogue, Il tirsi, and Latin and Italian verses. He is also remembered for a production at Urbino in 1513 of Bibbiena's comedy, La Calandria (The Follies of Calandro), for which it was long held that he had written a prologue.

The genesis of The Book of the Courtier took place at, and the work was modelled on, the court of Urbino under Francesco Gonzaga, where Castiglione resided between 1504 and 1513, though it is really more of a nostalgic memoir of the rule of Frederico da Montefeltro some years before. This exposition of the qualities of the ideal courtier, the archetype and model for many treatises on behaviour and books of manners that were to follow, was circulated among scholars for suggestions, debate, and corrections from the time of its inception in 1507–08 until publication in 1528, and translated the Ciceronian idea of the perfect orator (De Oratore) into the Renaissance concept of a manual and formula for the perfectibility of the gentleman (and lady) at court. Others had written treatises for the perfect cardinal (Cortese) and the perfect prince (Machiavelli). Yet the realism of Machiavelli's Il principe (The Prince) contrasted starkly with the idealism of Castiglione's The Book of the Courtier: like the theoretical writings on language by Bembo, the latter was a refined and cultivated literary ideal, based as much on cultural antecedents and tradition as on observed experience at the court of Urbino. Castiglione's treatise provided a model for the educated and cultivated gentleman at court (the basic social structure for the power base and government of many European states, and most, though not all, of the Italian states in the Renaissance period) and projected into the arena of politics and government the idea of the polymath, an educated ideal of the multi-talented humanist, an ideal that has had a measurable impact on subsequent educational systems. All this was articulated as the ideal in spite of the traditional clash of interests between the form of the principality as an absolutist state and the freedom of an artist's creativity, enshrined in the complaints of writers from Ariosto to Tasso (and projected by the iconoclasm or anti-classicism of satirists like Aretino), which began in Castiglione's own generation and continued long after him. By 1525, Castiglione's refined ideal courtier had its antidote in the satire of the papal court in Aretino's courtesan (La cortigiana), since, as noted, the book had been widely read long before its official publication.

The Book of the Courtier identifies the qualities a successful courtier should possess, from the martial arts to artistic flair in poetry and music, from sprezzatura (an effortless gracefulness in accomplishments that eschews the boastful and arrogant) to a finely developed aesthetic sense. Already we have the formula for a gentleman which was to be widely influential. But the gentleman must have his mate, and the donna di palazzo is given similar arts and graces (and similar artfulness and gracefulness) in the work, and a notable equality with man that is in tune with the prominence of women (as warriors, as poetesses, as governors) in the society of Ariosto and Castiglione. On the appropriate language for discourse (as opposed to writing) Castiglione is more pragmatic than Bembo is in Le prose della volgar lingua, since usage is admitted as arbiter, though in the conclusion to The Book of the Courtier the supremacy of the Platonic ideals of Ficino is given to Bembo to expound. In broadest outline then, The Book of the Courtier is a discussion between Castiglione's authoritative contemporaries, and roughly approximates to the three ages of man: youth, maturity, and old age. The first part, from Ludovico di Canossa and Federico Fregoso, represents the earthly and humanistic courtier; the second, from Ottaviano Fregoso, projects the ideal courtier as wise counsellor to the prince; whereas the third proposes the sublimation of love into the metaphysical Neoplatonic philosophy of Ficino, through the mouth of Pietro Bembo.

Politically, of course, The Book of the Courtier had to favour the form of a principality, for this is its explicit frame of reference; but the work does not blind itself to other possibilities, and contemporary "mixed" forms of government (from Machiavelli in the most recent exposition) find their way in with election of councils of nobles and the people, even if, with the image of Duke Federico da Montefeltro in the background as memory and inspiration, the figure of the prince is benignly paternalistic, caring, civilizing, and morally upright—at some remove, therefore, from the opportunism and pragmatism of the Machiavellian idea. As a window on the world of the Italian Renaissance—whether escapist fantasy fossilized in an already outdated cultural ideal, or a manual for courtly deportment and a survival package in an age of rapidly changing values—The Book of the Courtier has had an enduring influence on educational and political thinking ever since it was written, and seems resolutely contemporary in several of its themes—in man's sense of cultural identity and the function of the arts in his make-up and personal ambitions, in the notion of mens sana in corpore sano, and, not least, in the long debate between service (servility) and freedom in politics.

—Christopher Cairns

CATULLUS

Born: Gaius Valerius Catullus, c. 84 BC; father a citizen of Verona. Career: Lived in Rome, and probably had a villa near Tivoli; also owned property at Sirmio (now Sirmione); friend of Cicero and other important men; accompanied C. Memmius Gemellus on visit to Bithynia, Asia Minor, 57–56 BC. Died: c. 54 BC.

PUBLICATIONS

* * *

Verse

[Verse], edited by R.A.B. Mynors. 1958, revised edition, 1972; also edited by Henry Bardon, 2nd edition, 1973, D.F.S. Thomson, 1978; edited and translated by G.P. Goold, 1983; translated by Frederick A. Wright, 1926; also translated by Jack Lindsay, 1929; Horace Gregory, 1956; Frank Copley, 1957; R.A. Swanson, 1959; C.H. Sisson, 1966; Peter Whigham, 1966; Reney Myers and Robert J. Ormsby, 1972; James Michie, 1972; Frederic Raphael and Kenneth McLeish, 1978; Charles Martin, 1979; Guy Lee, 1990; commentaries by Robinson Ellis, 1876; Elmer T. Merrill, 1893, reprinted 1951; C.J. Fordyce (in part), 1961; Kenneth Quinn, 1970, revised edition, 1973; and J. Ferguson, 1985; as Catullus: Poems 61–68, edited and translated by John Godwin, 1995; as Catullus: The Shorter Poems, edited and translated by John Godwin, 1999.

*

Bibliography: A Bibliography to Catullus by Hermann Harrauer, 1979; Gaius Valerius Catullus: A Systematic Bibliography by James P. Holoka, 1985.

Critical Studies: Catullus and His Influence by Karl P. Harrington, 1923; Catullus in English Poetry by E.S. Duckett, 1925; Catullus and Horace: Two Poets in Their Environment by Frank Tenney, 1928; Catullus and the Traditions of Ancient Poetry by A.L. Wheeler, 1934; Catullus and the Traditions of Ancient Poetry by E.A. Havelock, 1939, revised edition, 1967; Catullus in Strange and Distant Britain by J.A.S. McPeck, 1939; The Catullan Revolution, 1959, revised edition, 1969, and Catullus: An Interpretation, 1973, both by Kenneth Quinn, and Approaches to Catullus edited by Quinn, 1972; Enarratio Catulliana by C. Witke, 1968; Style and Tradition in Catullus by David O. Ross, Jr., 1969; Catullan Questions, 1969, and Catullus and His World, 1985, both by T.P. Wiseman; Studies in Catullan Verse by Julia W. Loomis, 1972; Interpreting Catullus by G.P. Goold, 1974; Catullus' Indictment of Rome: The Meaning of Catullus 64 by David Konstan, 1977; Catullan Self-Revelation by E. Adler, 1981; Catullus' "Passer": The Arrangement of the Book of Polymetric Poems by M.B. Skinner, 1981; Sexuality in Catullus by Brian Arkins, 1982; Three Classical Poets: Sappho, Catullus, and Juvenal by Richard Jenkyns, 1982; Catullus 68: An Interpretation by John Sarkissian, 1983; Catullus: A Reader's Guide to the Poems by Stuart P. Small, 1983; Catullus by John Ferguson, 1988; The Student's Catullus by David H. Garrison, 1989; The Abhorrence of Love: Studies in Rituals and Mystic Aspects in Catullus' Poem of Attis by Britt-Mari Näsström, 1989; Roman Catullus and the Modification of the Alexandrian Sensibility by J.K. Newman, 1990; Catullus by Charles Martin, 1992; Catullus and His Renaissance Readers by Julia Haig Gaisser, 1993; "When the Lamp Is Shattered": Desire and Narrative in Catullus by Micaela Janan, 1994; Martial's Catullus: The Reception of an Epigrammatic Rival by Bruce W. Swann, 1994; Catullan Provocations: Lyric Poetry and the Drama of Position by William Fitzgerald, 1995; The Child and the Hero: Coming of Age in Catullus and Vergil by Mark Petrini, 1997; The Catullan Revolution by Kenneth Quinn, 1999; Catullus in English, edited by Julia Haig Gaisser, 2001; Cicero, Catullus, and the Language of Social Performance by Brian A. Krostenko, 2001.

Catullus' poems are traditionally divided into three distinct groups: the short polymetric poems (1–60), the long poems (61–68), and the epigrams (69–116). Whether this arrangement, and that of the poems within each group, were Catullus' own work is much disputed; some, for example, believe that he intended 65–116 as a group, since they are all written in elegiacs. At present, the weight of scholarly opinion favours the view that at least the majority of the polymetrics were arranged in their present order by the poet, though some interference by a later editor is generally accepted to be evident.

Two types of poem, by virtue of their frequency, dominate the polymetrics and epigrams. First, there are roughly three dozen poems of invective (e.g., 28–29, 39, 69, 71, 94), which very often employ obscene language (incest is a recurrent theme) and of which several are directed at a single target (thus 74, 88–91, 116 against one Gellius). Second, and most famously, there are between two dozen and 30 poems which relate to Catullus' love affair with Lesbia (the exact number is uncertain because she is named explicitly in only 13). This woman ('Lesbia' is a pseudonym) is usually identified with Clodia, the wife of Q. Metellus Celer who was consul in 60 BC and died the following year.

These two main types of poem are interspersed with a refreshing variety of others: e.g., poems on homecoming (4, 9, 31, 46), homosexual love (e.g., 15, 48, 81, 99), his dead brother (101) the death of a friend's wife (96), and literature (e.g., 35, 50, 95); there are mock hymns (36, 44) and a real hymn (34); and there is vers de société (e.g., 10, 12–13, 25, 55, 84, 103), sometimes of a risqué nature (e.g., 6, 32, 56, 110). As for the group of long poems, there are two on weddings (61–62); one (63) on the fanatical cult of the goddess Cybele, depicting the self-castration of her devotee Attis; an epyllion (miniature epic) on the marriage of Peleus and Thetis (64); a translation into Latin of Callimachus' "Lock of Berenice" (66), together with its epistolary introduction in verse (65); a dialogue with a door (67); another verse letter, on the death of his brother (68A); and an elegy which combines the themes of his brother's death and his love for Lesbia with a complicated series of mythological illustrations (68B) (these last two are written as a single poem in the MSS and are still so regarded by many scholars). Of these long poems, 63 is one of the most remarkable poems in Latin on account of its theme; 64 is the only epyllion which survives from the literature of the late republic and early empire; and 68B is the forerunner of the poetry, of Propertius, Tibullus, and Ovid. On these grounds alone, Catullus' work would be significant; but his principal achievement lies elsewhere.

Such long poems as 64, 68, and 68B are characterized above all by the doctrina (learning, scholarship) which was dear to the other novi poetae (new poets) of Catullus' generation and which was inspired by the work of the Greek librarian-poet Callimachus (ft. 250 BC). Until fairly recently it was often thought that there were, so to speak, "two Catulluses": the scholar-poet of the long poems, whose obscure and allusive verse was very much an acquired taste; and the simple poet of the polymetrics and epigrams, whose direct and passionate language had impressed centuries of readers. Yet this myth has been exploded by more recent scholarship, which has shown that learning, allusiveness, and technical refinement are not restricted to the long poems but permeate much of the other poetry too. Indeed it is precisely in the area where doctrina interacts with the portrayal of emotion that Catullus holds most fascination for the reader who knows Latin and Greek and is prepared to put his knowledge to good use. For it is by no means easy to fully appreciate the poetry written by Callimachus and his followers, and many of Catullus' polymetrics and epigrams require considerable effort for their understanding. Six examples, which appear to reflect his love affair from its beginning to its end, will make this clear.

Poem 51 is an expression of Catullus' love for Lesbia, yet the poem is a translation and adaptation of a famous poem by Sappho (31); and the fact that Catullus has troubled to clarify the meaning of his exemplar suggests that he expected his readers, including Lesbia, to be aware of the problems raised by Sappho's poem and to notice his own view of their solution. Poems 7 and 70 both have a "twin" (5 and 72 respectively), which suggests that all four poems reflect episodes in the poet's affair and are thus heavily biographical; yet 7 is full of learned allusion to the life and works of Callimachus, quite apart from treating us to a virtuoso display of oral imagery, while 70 is actually an adaptation of an epigram by Callimachus (25), which Catullus has completely transformed. Poem 85 is a two-line epigram of deceptive simplicity; yet its first three words (Odi et amo, "I hate and love") recall a theme which echoes back to the beginnings of Greek personal poetry, and the remainder of the couplet is a superb example of the arrangement and suggestiveness of apparently simple words. Poems 8 and 11 reflect the end of the affair, with all its bitterness; yet the former seems inspired by a soliloquy from the comic playwright Menander's Samia (The Girl from Samos), and in the latter Catullus finds time to demonstrate his knowledge of the vernacular name for Egypt, of the original name for the Nile, and of the etymology of the word "Alps" (we must remember that Callimachus' most famous work was entitled Origins and that another work dealt with the foundations of islands and cities and their changes of name).

To the modern reader, these and countless other instances of doctrina may seem strange; but it is vital to appreciate that they in no way detract from, but rather enhance, the conviction with which Catullus expresses himself. He achieved that fusion of form and emotion which many believe to be the quintessence of poetry and which has made his work everlastingly memorable.

—A.J. Woodman

See the essays on "poem 85" and "three poems: 2, 63, and 76."

CAVAFY, C(onstantine) P(etrou)

Born: Alexandria, Egypt, 29 April 1863. Lived in England as a child, 1872–79, and in Constantinople, 1882–85; otherwise lived in Alexandria. Education: Educated at Hermis Lyceum, 1879. Career: Worked at Egyptian Stock Exchange, 1888; clerk, Irrigation Service, Ministry of Public Works, 1892–1922. Issued one private pamphlet of his verse in 1904, and thereafter compiled notebooks of verse for distributing to friends. Died: 29 April 1933.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Poemata, edited by Alexander Singopoulos. 1935.

Poems, translated by John Mavrogordato. 1951.

Complete Poems, translated by Rae Dalven. 1961; enlarged edition, 1976.

Collected Poems, edited by G.P. Savidis, translated by Edmund Keeley and Philip Sherrard. 1975.

The Greek Poems, translated by Memas Kolaitis. 2 vols., 1989.

Before Time Could Change Them: The Complete Poems of Constantine P. Cavafy, translated by Theoharis Constantine Theoharis. 2001.

The Essential Cavafy, translated by Edmund Keeley and Philip Sherrard. 1995.

Verse

Fourteen Poems, translated by Nikos Stangos and Stephen Spender. 1966.

Anecdota poemata 1882–1923 [Unpublished Poems], edited by G.P. Savidis. 1968.

Passions and Ancient Days: Twenty One New Poems, translated by Edmund Keeley and G.P. Savidis. 1972.

Ta Apokirigmena: Poemata kai Metafrasis [The Rejected Works: Poems and Translation]. 1983.

Other

Peza [Prose], edited by G. Papoutsakis. 1963.

Anecdota Peza [Unpublished Prose], edited by M. Peridis. 1963.

Epistoles ston Mario Valano [Letters to Mario Valano], edited by E.N. Moschou. 1979.

*

Critical Studies: Constantine Cavafy, 1964, and Three Generations of Greek Writers: Introductions to Cavafy, Kazantzakis, Ritsos, 1983, both by Peter Bien; Cavafy: A Critical Biography by Robert Liddell, 1974; Cavafy's Alexandria: Study of a Myth in Progress by Edmund Keeley, 1976; "A Concise Introduction to Cavafy" by Marguerite Yourcenar, in Shenandoah, 32(1), 1980; "Cavafy Issue" of Journal of the Hellenic Diaspora, 10, 1983; The Mind and Art of C.P. Cavafy: Essays on His Life and Work by Denise Harvey, 1983; The Poetics of Cavafy: Textuality, Eroticism, History by Gregory Jusdanis, 1987; C.P. Cavafy by Christopher Robinson, 1988.

* * *

Solemnly asked his opinion of his own work, C.P. Cavafy towards the end of his life is said to have replied, "Cavafy in my opinion is an ultra-modern poet, a poet of future generations." History has proved him right, but the tone of the reply also reveals an important ingredient of the unique poetic voice that is Cavafy's: a gentle mockery of all pretension, even that of the poet interviewed about his own work, and a light-hearted concealment of his true self at the very moment when he appears about to lay his cards on the table. "Cavafy," he says, not "I," as if "Cavafy" were someone different.

Cavafy's poetry is distinguished by many subtle forms of irony, and also by an intriguing self-effacement in poems that purport to tell of personal experience and feeling. The subject matter of his poems is equally unusual. Approximately half of what that he published in his lifetime (consisting of 154 fairly short poems) and a similar proportion of those published posthumously, are devoted to subjects taken from Greek history, chiefly between 340 BC and AD 1453, while the remainder deal more or less explicitly with homosexual encounters against a backdrop of contemporary Alexandria. Cavafy's uniqueness has posed a problem for critics, for whom he continues to exercise a profound fascination. To many his erotic poetry is a disreputable appendage to more "sublime" poetry dedicated to the Greek past, but Cavafy's uncompromisingly "historical" treatment of that past has also disconcerted many. And those critics who have not chosen to ignore the erotic poems have been hard put to identify the source of powerful emotion, felt by many readers, in response to poems from which all reference to love is lacking, and the sordidness and triviality of the sexual encounters evoked are freely confessed.

The common denominator between Cavafy's two principal preoccupations, the distant Greek past and contemporary homosexual experiences, is time, which plays a major role in both types of poem. Often it appears that the true subject of the erotic poems is not the experience described so much as its loss to the passage of time. Time takes away and alienates all real experience, but through art the poet can sometimes regain it in the creation of a poem, though what is regained is both more and less than the original. More, because, as the poet frankly says in several of these poems, he is free to touch up reality in the imaginative act of writing; less, because, no matter how "perfect" an experience can become thus imaginatively recreated, it is only imaginary, the real thing remaining lost to the past. This sense of "lost to the past" is central, too, to Cavafy's historical poems, in which he juxtaposes vivid pictures of flesh-and-blood, fallible human beings with a chillingly historical sense of how remote they are, and how futile are these people's preoccupations now.

In their treatment of time, all Cavafy's poems can be said to belong to his third type, into which he once said his work could be divided, namely "philosophical" poetry.

—Roderick Beaton

See the essay on "Waiting for the Barbarians."

CAVALCANTI, Guido

Born: Florence, c. 1255; member of a Guelph merchant family. Family: Engaged to Bice, a member of the Ghibelline family, in 1267. Career: Guelph guarantor for a peace settlement, 1280; member of the general council of the commune, 1284 and 1290; an ardent supporter of the white Guelph faction, he was banished on 24 June 1300 by order of the council on which Dante, q.v., served as a prior (from June to August) and confined to Sarzana. Contracted malaria and was recalled to Florence in August but died soon after. Friend of Dante, whose La vita nuova was dedicated to him but who no longer spoke of him after his death. Died: Buried 29 August 1300.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

The Poetry, edited and translated by Lowry Nelson, Jr. 1986.
The Complete Poems, translated by Marc Cirigliano (bilingual edition). 1992.
Thirty-three Sonnets of Guido Cavalcanti, translated by Ezra Pound. 1991.

Verse

Rime, edited by Guido Favati. 1957; edited by Marcello Ciccutto, 1978; also edited by Letterio Cassata, 1993; translated by Dante Gabriel Rossetti, in The Early Italian Poets, 1861, revised edition, as Dante and His Circle, 1874; as The Sonnets and Ballate, translated by Ezra Pound, 1912.

*

Critical Studies: Guido Cavalcanti's Theory of Love: The "Canzone d'Amore" and Other Related Problems by J.E. Shaw, 1949; "Cavalcanti" by Ezra Pound, in Literary Essays, 1954; Medieval Latin and the Rise of the European Love Lyric by Peter Dronke, 2 vols., 1968; "Pound and Cavalcanti" by G. Singh, in Essays in Honour of J.H. Whitfield, 1975.

* * *

Guido Cavalcanti's merit as a lyricist has never been overshadowed by the genius of his close friend Dante. A dolce stil nuovo poet, he imposed on the conventions of that school his own particular individuality and moulded them to suit his own taste and poetic exigency. Ezra Pound, the creator of modern poetry, singled him out as an inspiration in his own poetry, and as an embodiment of something authentically modern. He put Cavalcanti in the same category as Sappho and Theocritus—poets who have sung, "not all the modes of life, but some of them, unsurpassedly; those who in their chosen or fated field have bowed to no one." What characterizes Cavalcanti's lyricism as such is the dramatic intensity of his passions as well as the stark individuality of diction in which it is couched, together with the conceptual richness and subtlety of his content. If, as Pound said, "no psychologist of emotions is more keen in his understanding, more precise in his expression" than Cavalcanti, it is because he conveys the feelings, intuitions, and convictions of a highly gifted mind and because of his use of a singularly concrete and poetically charged language with no trace of conventionality.

Cavalcanti's concept of love—and love is the leitmotif of the dolce stil nuovo school of poetry—is significantly different from that of a contemporary like Guido Guinizzelli, in that it is conceived more in earthly and sensuous terms than in mystical and transcendental ones, and the language Cavalcanti uses to characterize it is direct and graphic rather than symbolic or abstract. And this in spite of the fact that he brought to bear on his treatment of love all his philosophic learning and intellectual curiosity, a large share of it derived from Averroës, so that his similes, metaphors, and descriptions, even though they might at times appear to be arid and prosaic, always embody a definite concept or meaning as well as a fineness of perception. Apropos of this, Pound's evaluative comparison between Cavalcanti and Petrarch, or between Cavalcanti and Dante, is worth quoting. After noting how Cavalcanti "thought in accurate terms" and how his phrases "correspond to definite sensations undergone," Pound goes on to argue that "the 'figure,' the strong metaphoric or 'picturesque' expression in him is there to convey or to interpret a definite meaning. In Petrarch, on the other hand, it is ornament, the prettiest ornament he could find, but not an irreplaceable ornament, or one that he couldn't have used just about as well somewhere else." Pound's comparison between Cavalcanti and Dante is equally illuminating—Dante "qui était diablement dans les idées reçues," Cavalcanti more independent and unconventional; Dante willing "to take on any sort of holy and orthodox furniture,” Cavalcanti “eclectic,” swallowing “none of his authors whole,” and lastly, “Dante himself never wrote more poignantly, or with greater intensity than Cavalcanti . . . a spirit more imperious, more passionate, less likely to give ear to sophistries; his literary relation to Dante is not unlike Marlowe’s to Shakespeare” (though, Pound adds, “such comparisons are always unsafe”).

—G. Singh

CELA (TRULOCK), Camilo José

Born: Iria Flavia, La Coruña, Galicia, Spain, 11 May 1916. Education: Educated at the University of Madrid, 1933–36, 1939–43. Military Service: Served in General Franco’s forces during the Spanish Civil War, 1936–39; corporal. Family: Married 1) Maria del Rosario Conde Picavea in 1944 (divorced 1990), one son; 2) Marina Castaño in 1991. Career: Freelance writer in Madrid until 1954, then in Palma de Mallorca; travelled to Chile, 1952, and Venezuela, 1953; founder, Papeles de Son Armadans, 1956–79; travelled to Italy, France, and the United States, 1990. Awards: Critics prize, 1956; National literature prize, 1984; Prince of Asturias prize for literature, 1987; Nobel prize for literature, 1989; Santiago de Compostela gold medal, 1990. Honorary doctorates: Syracuse University, USA, 1965; University of Santiago (Chile), 1974 (refused); University of Birmingham (England), 1976; John F. Kennedy University, Buenos Aires, 1978; Interamericana University, Puerto Rico, 1980; University of Palma, Mallorca, 1980; Hebrew University, Jerusalem, 1986; University of Miami, University of Tel Aviv, University of San Marcos, Peru, Dowling College, New York, Millersville University, Pennsylvania, and University of Murcia, all 1990; Universidad Complutense, Madrid, and La Trobe University, Australia, 1991. Honorary professor, University of Santo Domingo, 1990. Member: Spanish Royal Academy, since 1957. Created Royal Senator, 1977. Died: 17 January 2002.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

La familia de Pascual Duarte. 1942; edited by Jorge Urrutia, 1977, and by Harold L. Boudreau and John W. Kronik, 1989; as Pascual Duarte’s Family, translated by John Marks, 1946; as The Family of Pascual Duarte, translated by Anthony Kerrigan, 1964.

Pabellón de reposo. 1943; as Rest Home, translated by Herma Briffault, 1961.

Nuevas andanzas y desventuras de Lazarillo de Tormes. 1944.

Esas nubes que pasan. . . 1945.

El bonito crimen del carabinero y otras invenciones. 1947.

El gallego y su cuadrilla y otros apuntes carpetovetónicos. 1949; enlarged edition (includes “En el lomo de la cubierta dice”), 1951.

La colmena. 1951; edited by Jorge Urrutia, 1988; as The Hive, translated by J.M. Cohen, 1953.

Santa Balbina 37, gas en cada piso. 1952.

Timoteo, el incomprendido. 1952.

Café de artistas. 1953.

Mrs. Caldwell habla con su hijo. 1953; as Mrs. Caldwell Speaks to Her Son, translated by J.S. Bernstein, 1968.

Baraja de invenciones. 1953.

Historias de Venezuela: La catira. 1955.

El molino de viento y otras novelas cortas. 1956.

Nuevo retablo de Don Cristobita: Invenciones, figuraciones y alucinaciones. 1957.

Cajón de sastre. 1957.

Historias de España: Los ciegos, Los tontos. 1958.

Los viejos amigos. 2 vols., 1960–61.

Gavilla de fábulas sin amor. 1962.

Tobogán de hambrientos. 1962.

Once cuentos de fútbol. 1963.

Las compañías convenientes y otros fingimientos y cegueras. 1963.

El solitario; Los sueños de Quesada. 1963.

Garito de hospicianos o Guirigay de imposturas y bambollas. 1963.

Cuentos 1941–1953; Nuevo retablo de Don Cristobita. 1964.

Apuntes carpetovetónicos: Novelas cortas 1949–56. 1965.

A la pata de palo: Historias de España; La familia del héroe; El ciudadano Iscariote Reclús; Viaje a USA. 4 vols., 1965–67; selection as El tacatá oxidado: Florilegio de carpetovetonismos, y otras lindezas, 1973.

Nuevas escenas matritenses. 7 vols., 1965–66; as Fotografías al minuto, 1972.

San Camilo, 1936: Visperas, festividad y octava de San Camilo del año 1936 en Madrid. 1969; as San Camilo, 1936: The Eve, Feast and Octave of St. Camillus of the Year 1936 in Madrid, translated by J.H.R. Holt, 1992.

Café de artistas y otros cuentos. 1969.

Timoteo et incomprendido y otros papeles ibéricos. 1970.

Obras selectas. 1971.

Oficio de tinieblas 5 o Novela de tesis escrita para ser cantada por un coro de enfermos. 1973.

Cuentos para leer despues del baño. 1974.

Prosa, edited by Jacinto-Luis Guerna. 1974.

Café de artistas y otros papeles volanderos. 1978.

El espejo y otros cuentos. 1981.

Mazurca para dos muertos. 1983; as Mazurka for Two Dead Men, translated by Patricia Haugaard, 1993.

Cristo versus Arizona. 1988.

Las orejas del niño Raúl (for children). 1989.

Cachondeos, escareos y otros meneos. 1991.

O Camaleón solteiro. 1991.

Plays

Maria Sabina, music by Balada (produced 1970). 1967.

Homenaje al Bosco I: El carro de heno o El inventor de la guillotina. 1969.

Verse

Poemas de una adolescencia cruel. 1945; as Pisando la dudosa luz del día, 1945.

Cancionero de la Alcarria. 1987.

Other

Mesa revuelta. 1945; enlarged edition (includes Ensueños y figuraciones), 1957.

San Juan de la Cruz (as Matilde Verdú). 1948.

Las botas de siete leguas: Viaje a la Alcarria. 1948; as Journey to the Alcarria, translated by Frances M. Lopez Morillas, 1964. Ávila. 1952; revised edition, 1968.

Del Miño al Bidasoa: Notas de un vagabundaje. 1952.

Ensueños y figuraciones. 1954.

Vagabundo por Castilla. 1955.

Mis páginas preferidas (selection). 1956.

Judíos, moros y cristianos: Notas de un vagabundaje por Ávila, Segovia y sus tierras. 1956.

La rueda de los ocios. 1957.

La obra literaria del pintor Solana. 1957.

Recuerdo de don Pío Baroja. 1958.

La cucaña: Memorias. 1959.

Primer viaje andaluz: Notas de un vagabundaje por Jaén, Córdoba, Sevilla, Huelva y sus tierras. 1959.

Cuaderno del Guadarrama. 1959.

Cuatro figuras del '98: Unamuno, Valle-Inclán, Baroja, Azorín y otros retratos y ensayos españoles. 1961.

Obra completa. 17 vols., 1962–86.

Toreo de salón. 1963.

Izas, rabizas y colipoterras. 1964.

Páginas de geografía errabunda. 1965.

Viaje al Pirineo de Lérida: Notas de un paseo a pie por el Pallars Sobira, el Valle de Aran y el Condado de Ribagorza. 1965.

Viajes por España. 3 vols., 1965–68. Madrid. 1966.

El solitario, illustrated by Rafael Zabaleta. 1966.

Calidoscopio callejero, marítimo y campestre de Camilo José Cela para el reino y ultramar. 1966.

Xam, with Cesáreo Rodríguez Aguilera, 1966.

Viaje a USA. 1967.

Diccionario secreto. 2 vols., 1968–71.

Al servicio de algo. 1969.

La bandada de palomas (for children). 1969.

Barcelona, illustrated by Federico Lloveras. 1970.

La Mancha en el corazón y en los ojos. 1971.

La bola del mundo: Escenas cotidianas. 1972.

Fotografías al minuto. 1972.

A vueltas con España. 1973.

Cristina Mallo (monograph). 1973.

Balada del vagabundo sin suerte y otros papeles volanderos. 1973.

Diccionario manual castellá-catalá, catalá-castellá. 1974.

Danza de las gigantas amorosas. 1975.

Rol de cornudos. 1976.

Crónica del cipote de Archidona. 1977.

La rosa. 1979.

Los sueños vanos, los ángeles curiosos. 1980.

Lectura de Quijote. 4 vols., 1981.

Vuelta de hoja. 1981.

Los vasos comunicantes. 1981.

Album de taller (art commentary). 1981.

Enciclopedia de erotismo. 4 vols., 1982–86; revised edition, as Diccionario del erotismo, 2 vols., 1988.

El juego de los tres madroños. 1983.

Madrid, color y siluta. 1985.

Nuevo viaje a la Alcarria. 1986.

El asno de Buridán (articles). 1986.

Of Genes, Gods, and Tyrants: The Biological Causation of Reality. 1987.

Conversaciones españolas. 1987.

Los caprichos de Francisco de Goya y Lucientes. 1989.

Vocación de repartidor. 1989.

Toda ta vida a una carta, 1989.

Obras completas. 37 vols., 1989–90.

Cela, lo que dijo en TVE. 1989.

Galicia. 1990.

Blanquito, peón de Brega. 1991.

Páginas escogidas (anthology). 1991.

Desde et palomar de Hita. 1991.

Torerías: El gallego y su cuadrilla; Madrid toreo de salón. 1991.

El camaleón. 1992.

El huevo del juicio. 1993.

Memorias, entendimientos y voluntades. 1993.

Editor, Homenaje y recuerdo a Gregorio Marañón (1887–1960). 1961.

Translator, La Celestina, by Fernando de Rojas. 1979.

Translator, La resistible ascensión de Arturo Ui, by Bertolt Brecht. 1986.

*

Critical Studies: El sistema estético de Camilo José Cela by Olga Prjevalinsky, 1960; Camilo José Cela: Acercamiento a un escritor by Alonso Zamora Vicente, 1962; The Novels and Travels of Camilo José Cela, 1963, and “Camilo José Cela’s Quest for a Tragic Sense of Life,” in Romance Quarterly, 17, 1970, both by Robert Kirsner; “Social Criticism, Existentialism and Tremendismo in Camilo José Cela’s La familia de Pascual Duarte,” in Romance Quarterly, 13 (supplement), 1967, and Forms of the Novel in the Work of Camilo José Cela, 1967, both by David William Foster; El léxico de Camilo José Cela by Sara Suárez Solís, 1969; Camilo José Cela by D.W. McPheeters, 1969; Cela by Mariano Tudela, 1970; La novelística de Camilo José Cela, 1971, and “The Politics of Obscenity in San Camilo, 1936,” in Anales de la Novela de Posguerra, 1, 1976, both by Paul Ilie; Cela issue of Contemporary Fiction, 4(3), 1984; Cela: Masculino singular: Biografía by Francisco García Marquina, 1991; La familia de Pascual Duarte by Alan Hoyle, 1994; La Familia de Pascual Duarte and El Túnel: Correspondences and Divergencies in the Exercise of Craft by Cedric Busette, 1994; Novel Into Film: The Case of La familia de Pascual Duarte and Los Santos Inocentes by Patricia J. Santoro, 1996; Understanding Camilo José Cela by Lucile C. Charlebois, 1998; Camilo José Cela Revisited: The Later Novels by Janet Pérez, 2000.

* * *

Camilo José Cela’s first novel, La familia de Pascual Duarte (Pascual Duarte’s Family), is a strange hybrid, reading in parts like a picaresque novel (though managing, unlike the later Nuevas andanzas y desventuras de Lazarillo de Tormes [Further Adventures of Lazarillo de Tormes], to keep away from pastiche), and in parts like a Lorca “rural tragedy.” These sources of inspiration reveal the combined ideological intentions that underlie the book: nationalism, vitalism, and aestheticism. The nationalism is most evident in the choice of the picaresque as a model, while it is in the passages inspired by “rural tragedy” that can best be seen the vitalistic philosophy that pervades the whole story and provides its main message: Pascual is a primitive man who has not learned to interpose between his actions and the mysterious natural forces that rule them—as they rule all other men’s—the distorting screen of civilization. In return, however, Pascual keeps in close contact with those same forces and, unlike the rest of us, is able to understand them intuitively, which is the only way in which they can be understood. Pascual is a nationalistic Spanish version of a Nietzschean hero, and the novel, rather than the isolated exception it is usually made out to be, is arguably the best example of the Spanish brand of fascist literature that flourished briefly during the very early Franco years.

The aestheticist dimension of Pascual Duarte's Family is developed more fully in some of Cela's early stories and in his second novel, Pabellón de reposo (Rest Home), in which the flimsy story line is entirely subservient to the elegant narrative orchestration and the poetic prose. This purely aestheticist strain remains a constant, if secondary, aspect of Cela's work, re-emerging in occasional short stories, in the never completed pseudo-memoirs "La cucaña" [The Greasepole] and, in tediously extreme form, in Mrs. Caldwell habla con su hijo (Mrs. Caldwell Speaks to Her Son). But, above all, aestheticism is inseparable from the other two essential dimensions of Cela's literature, and the full measure of it is given precisely by the marriage of the crudeness of the subject matter to the lyricism of the prose, as illustrated by his best short stories, like "Marelo Brito," "La naranja es una fruta de invierno" [Oranges Are Winter Fruit], or the significantly entitled "El bonito crimen del carabiniere" [The Carabiniere's Lovely Murder]. With Viaje a la Alcarria (Journey to the Alcarria), Cela's nationalism too gets partly shunted off into a special genre, though description is not Cela's forte and his travelogues tend to become a series of vignettes of (largely imaginary) encounters with odd characters. Yet nationalism is also an essential component of Cela's work as a whole, embedded in the stories themselves: the sickening brutality of their world is to be seen as a vital national Spanish characteristic, not to be decried, but to be upheld as such.

Cela's best work is undoubtedly La colmena (The Hive), which, however, is neither the technically sophisticated nor the social-realist novel it is often made out to be. It was, in the Spain of its day, innovative, but it is most emphatically not objectivist: its supposedly life-like randomness is largely an illusion. It does reflect very accurately the reality of 1940s Spain, not so much on the surface, where it leans often to the atypical, but at a deeper level, conveying the essential truth about that society—its sharp division between winners and losers, and the uninhibited exploitation and constant humiliation of the latter by the former. This it does, however, almost entirely by accident, for Cela believed that Spanish society was like that not because of its recent history, but because any human society must always be like that. The specific circumstances of Franco's Spain simply fitted his social and Darwinistic preconceptions. Still, The Hive remains an accurate portrayal of post-war Spain, and is also the best expression of Cela's artistic powers. It manages to keep a balance between being moving and being outrageously funny, and to retain its coherence in spite of its very fragmented structure, and, though many of its characters are on the fringes of normality or even beyond it, it gives, somehow, an overall impression of social realism. Here also, Cela's distinctive style reaches its perfection. The style is very simple, based almost entirely on one single technique, the delaying of the conclusion of his sentences by a series of triple repetitions at every syntactical level. It works, however, to great effect, thanks above all to Cela's extremely rich lexical resources.

After The Hive, Cela's work declined sharply. His travelogues became collections of improbable anecdotes involving freakish characters and having little to do with any actual place, and his stories degenerated into hackneyed portraits of misfits with ludicrous names and ludicrous lives, generously spiced for titillation with vulgarity and gratuitous violence. In fact, Cela simply parodied himself endlessly, in a descent into the pits of shallow commercialism which reached its bottom with Enciclopedia del erotismo [Encyclopedia of Eroticism]. He eventually tried his hand again at some real writing with San Camilo, 1936, a version of The Hive translated to the days of the outbreak of the Spanish Civil War. Unfortunately, the vision had not changed. At the very time when their collective destiny is being decided, the characters of San Camilo are all shown scurrying about purposelessly, obsessed only with the urge to satisfy their most basic needs. This is demonstrably false: there is abundant evidence that, at that fateful moment, many Spaniards were only too conscious of what was happening to them and were determined to shape history one way or another. But the worst thing about San Camilo is that Cela, having neglected his artistic powers for so long, failed to recapture them. The precarious but real balance between outrageous humour, lyricism, and social observation that he had achieved in The Hive eluded him this time, and his characters were too much the hacked versions of Los viejos amigos [Old Friends] and Tobogán de hambrientos [Tramps Down the Chute] rather than their original selves.

—J.F. Marfany

See the essay on Pascual Duarte's Family.

CELAN, Paul

Born: Paul Antschel in Czernowitz, Bukovina, Romania, 23 November 1920. Education: Educated at the Czernowitz Gymnasium; École de Médecine, Tours, France, 1938–39; University of Czernowitz, 1939–41; studied for a Licence-ès-Lettres in Paris, 1950. Family: Married Gisèle Lestrangé in 1952. Career: In a forced labour camp during World War II; emigrated to Vienna, 1947; settled in Paris in 1948; language teacher and translator. Awards: Bremen literary prize, 1958; Büchner prize, 1960; Nordrhein-Westfalen prize, 1964. Died: (suicide) 20 April 1970.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Gedichte. 2 vols., 1975.

Gesammelte Werke, edited by Beda Allemann and S. Reichert. 5 vols., 1983; volume 3 as Collected Prose, translated by Rosemarie Waldrop, 1986.

Gedichte 1938–1944. 1985.

Verse

Der Sand aus den Urnen. 1948.

Mohn und Gedächtnis. 1952.

Von Schwelle zu Schwelle. 1955.

Sprachgitter. 1959.

Die Niemandrose. 1963.

Atemwende. 1967; as Breathturn, translated and introduced by Pierre Joris, 1995.
Totmauberg. 1968.
Fadensonnen. 1968; as Threadsunns, translated and introduced by Pierre Joris, 2000.
Lichtzwang. 1970.
Speech-Grille and Selected Poems, translated by Joachim Neugroschel. 1971.
Schneepart. 1971.
Selected Poems, translated by Michael Hamburger and Christopher Middleton. 1972.
Nineteen Poems, translated by Michael Hamburger. 1972.
Zeitgehoft: Späte Gedichte aus dem Nachlass. 1976.
Poems (bilingual edition), translated by Michael Hamburger. 1980.
65 Poems, translated by Brian Lynch and Peter Jankowsky. 1985.
Thirty-Two Poems, translated by Michael Hamburger. 1985.
Last Poems (bilingual edition), translated by Katharine Washburn and Margaret Guillemin. 1986.

Other

Edgar Jené und der Traum vom Traume. 1948.
Der Meridian. 1961.
Übertragungen aus dem Russischen. 1986.
Paul Celan, Nelly Sachs: Correspondence by Paul Celan, translated by Christopher Clark. 1995.
 Translator (into Romanian), Taranii, by Chekhov. 1946.
 Translator (into Romanian), Un eroual timpalu, by Mikhail Lermontov. 1946.
 Translator (into Romanian), Chestimea Rusa, by Konstantin Simonov. 1947.
 Translator, Lehre vom Zerfall, by E.M. Cioran. 1953.
 Translator, Die Zwölf, by Aleksandr Blok. 1958.
 Translator, Das trunkene Schiff, by Arthur Rimbaud. 1958.
 Translator, Gedichte, by Osip Mandel'shtam. 1959.
 Translator, Die junge Parze, by Paul Valéry. 1960.
 Translator, Gedichte, by Sergei Esenin. 1961.
 Translator, Im Bereich einer Nacht, by Jean Cayrol. 1961.
 Translator, Maigret und die schrecklichen Kinder; Hier irrt Maigret, by Georges Simenon. 1963.
 Translator, Dichtungen, by Henri Michaux. 1966.
 Translator, Einundzwanzig Sonette, by Shakespeare. 1967.
 Translator, Gedichte, by Jules Supervielle. 1968.
 Translator, Vakante Glut: Gedichte, by André du Bouchet. 1968.
 Translator, Das verheissene Land, by Giuseppe Ungaretti. 1968.

*

Critical Studies: Zur Lyrik Celans by P.H. Neumann, 1968; Über Celan edited by Dietlind Meinecke, 1970, revised edition, 1973; Celan by Jerry Glenn, 1973; Celans Poetik by Gerhard Buhr, 1976; "Celan Issue" of Text + Kritik (53–54), edited by H.L. Arnold, 1977; Paul Celan by Holger A. Pausch, 1987; "Celan Issue" of Acts: A Journal of New Writing, (8–9), 1989; Paul Celan: Holograms of Darkness by Amy Colin, 1990; Paul Celan: A Biography of His Youth by Israel Chalfen, translated by Maximilian Bleyleben, 1991; Word Traces: Readings of Paul Celan edited by Floretas Aris, 1994; Holocaust Visions: Surrealism and Existentialism in the Poetry of Paul Celan by Clarise Samuels, 1994; Word Traces: Readings of Paul Celan, edited by Aris Fioretos, 1994; Language Mysticism: The Negative Way of Language in Eliot, Beckett, and Celan by Shira Wolosky, 1995; Paul Celan: Poet, Survivor, Jew by John Felstiner, 1995; Gadamer on Celan: "Who am I and who are you?" and Other Essays by Hans-Georg Gadamer, translated by Richard Heinemann and Bruce Krajewski, 1997; The Early Poetry of Paul Celan: In the Beginning was the Word by Adrian Del Caro, 1997; Economy of the Unlost: (Reading Simonides of Keos with Paul Celan) by Anne Carson, 1999; Ethics and Dialogue: In the Works of Levinas, Bakhtin, Mandelstam, and Celan by Michael Eskin, 2000; Remnants of Song: Trauma and the Experience of Modernity in Charles Baudelaire and Paul Celan by Ulrich Baer, 2000; Five Portraits: Modernity and the Imagination in Twentieth-century German Writing by Michael André Bernstein, 2000.

* * *

Paul Celan is arguably the most important poet who wrote in German in the period after 1945. His poetry met with early and widespread recognition, although critics have always found difficulty in reconciling its manifestly superior stature—it has an immediate and haunting appeal—with its considerable resistance to interpretation.

Celan's complex poetic idiom is rooted in the Jewish-Hasidic mystical tradition of his ancestors, and also in the heritage of European symbolism. The uncompromisingly reflexive nature of his language—as elusive as it is allusive—has, however, less in common with the hermeticism of Mallarmé's art, than with the extreme tendency towards internalization that characterized the work of Hölderlin, Trakl, and Rilke.

Celan's poetry is a profoundly serious response to the darkest period of modern history, and a statement, too, of its own invalidity in such an age of crisis. One cannot afford to overlook the significance of Celan's position as a Jew writing in German after the Holocaust; the poet's parents were among the millions who are mourned in countless of his poems. The most famous of these—"Todesfuge" ("Death Fugue"), in Mohn und Gedächtnis [Poppy and Memory]—superbly illustrates his ability to fuse the historically specific with the universal; to term his poetry political is indeed to underestimate its power and relevance, for, above all, the fate of the Jew in the Diaspora is for Celan a metaphor for the existential condition of humanity as a whole.

Acutely aware of the chasm dividing individual perception from the generalities of speech, which can convey but a "darkling splinterecho" of a distorted, fragmented reality, Celan's poetic voice withdraws into extreme semantic privacy. The metaphor of the "Sprachgitter" (Speech-Grille)—the title of one poem and the collection in which it stands—is applicable to his poetry as a whole. Representing language as a complex framework which obstructs man's relation to reality, it is also a metaphor for the net of words and associations with which we attempt to capture that reality. Such paradox is central to Celan's art. As the bars of the grille delimit and connect empty spaces, so Celan used language to circumscribe the silent interstices between words. He was constantly preoccupied with the poem's precarious, marginal existence "on the verge of falling silent." However, his poetry remains essentially dialogic (between man and woman, man and God, life and death—the situation is rarely fully defined), and this communicative quality constitutes a dimension of hope.

Celan's work does not allow for easy division into "phases": from the flowing rhythms and surrealist imagery of Mohn und Gedächtnis it developed steadily towards increasing concentration and fragmentation, while continuing to draw and elaborate on a wide range of recurring metaphors and highly expressive neologisms, and making intricate use of repetition, allusion, antithesis, and paradox. The same features mark Celan's prose poem "Gespräch im Gebirg" [Conversation in the Mountains] (in Neue Rundschau, 71[2], 1960), which directly complements his theoretical discussion of his art in Der Meridian [Meridian].

—Andrea C. Cervi

See the essay on "Death Fugue."

CÉLINE, Louis-Ferdinand

Born: Louis-Ferdinand Destouches in Courbevoie, France, 27 May 1894. Adopted the pseudonym Céline. Education: Educated at a school in Paris; Diepholz Volksschule in Germany, 1908; a school in Rochester, Kent, 1909; Rennes Medical School, 1919–24, qualified as doctor 1924. Military Service: Served in the French cavalry, 1912–15; sergeant; military medal; worked in French passport office, London, 1915; worked as ship's doctor, 1939–40. Family: Married 1) Suzanne Nebout in 1915 (marriage never registered); 2) Edith Follet in 1919 (divorced 1926), one daughter; 3) Lucette Almanzoe in 1943. Career: Worked as a clerk in a silk shop, an errand boy in Paris and Nice, and for a goldsmith while studying for his baccalauréat; Trader for a French forestry company, West Africa, 1917; practising doctor: in Rennes, then with League of Nations, 1925–28; in Clichy, 1928–38; in Bezons 1940–44, Germany, 1944–45, and Denmark, 1945; imprisoned in Denmark, 1945–47; returned to France in 1950: found guilty of collaboration with Germany during World War II, and sentenced to one year in prison: pardoned in 1951; then lived in Meudon, near Paris. Awards: Prix Renaudot, 1933. Died: 1 July 1961.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Oeuvres complètes, edited by Henri Godard. 2 vols., 1962–74.

Oeuvres, edited by Jean Ducourneau. 5 vols., 1966–69.

Oeuvres, edited by Frédéric Vitoux. 1981–.

Fiction

Voyage au bout de la nuit. 1932; revised edition, 1952; as Journey to the End of the Night, translated by John H.P. Marks, 1934, revised edition, 1983; also translated by Ralph Manheim, 1988.

Mort à crédit. 1936; as Death on the Installment Plan, translated by John H.P. Marks, 1938; also translated by Ralph Manheim, 1966; as Death on Credit, translated by Manheim, 1989.

Guignol's Band. 1944; translated as Guignol's Band, translated by Bernard Frechtman and Jack T. Nile, 1954.

Féerie pour une autre fois. 1952; edited by Henri Godard, 1985.

Normance, 1954.

D'un château à l'autre. 1957; as Castle to Castle, translated by Ralph Manheim, 1968; also translated by Ralph Manheim, 1997.

Nord. 1960; as North, translated by Ralph Manheim, 1972.

Le Pont de Londres. 1964; as London Bridge: Guignol's Band II, translated by Dominic Di Bernardi, 1995.

Rigodon. 1969; as Rigodon, translated by Ralph Manheim, 1974.

Maudits soupirs pour une autre fois, edited by Henri Godard. 1986.

Cannon Fodder, translated by K. De Coninck and B. Childish. 1988.

Plays

L'Eglise. 1933.

Ballets, sans musique, sans personne, sans rien (includes La Naissance d'une fée and Voyou Paul, Pauvre Virginie). 1959; as Ballets without Music, without Dancers, without Anything, translated by Thomas and Carol Christensen, 1999.

Progrès. 1978.

Other

La Quinine en thérapeutique. 1925.

Mea Culpa, suivi de La Vie et l'oeuvre de Semmelweis. 1936; as Mea Culpa and the Life and Work of Semmelweis, translated by Robert A. Parker, 1937.

Bagatelles pour un massacre. 1937.

L'École des cadavres. 1938.

Les Beaux Draps. 1941.

A l'agité du bocal. 1948.

Foudres et flèches. 1948.

Casse-pipe: suivi du Carnet du Cuirassier Detouches. 1949.

Scandale aux abysses. 1950.

Entretiens avec le Professor Y. 1955; as Conversations with Professor Y (bilingual edition), translated by Stanford Luce, 1986.

Céline et l'actualité littéraire 1932–1957 and 1957–1961, edited by Jean-Pierre Dauphin and Henri Godard. 2 vols., 1976.

Cahiers. 1976–.

Semmelweis et autres écrits médicaux, edited by Jean-Pierre Dauphin and Henri Godard. 1977.

Lettres et premier écrits d'Afrique (1916–1917), edited by Jean-Pierre Dauphin. 1978.

Lettres à des amies, edited by Colin W. Nettelbeck. 1979.

Lettres à Albert Paraz, 1947–1957, edited by Jean-Paul Louis, 1980.

Chansons, edited by Frédéric Monnier. 1981.

Lettres à son avocat: 118 lettres inédites à maître Albert Naud, edited by Frédéric Monnier. 1984.

Lettres à Tixier: 44 lettres inédites à maître Tixier-Vignancourt, edited by Frédéric Monnier. 1985.

Lettres à Joseph Garcin (1929–1938), edited by Pierre Lainé. 1987.

Lettres à N.R.F.: 1931–1961, edited by Pascal Fouché. 1991.

Lettres à Marie Bell Céline, edited by Jean Paul Louis. 1991.

Céline et les éditions Denoël 1932–48: Correspondances et documents, edited by Pierre-Edmond Robert. 1991.

*

Bibliography: Essai de bibliographie des études en langue française consacrées à Louis-Ferdinand Céline, 1977; A Half-Century of Céline: An Annotated Bibliography, 1932–1982 by Stanford Luce, 1983.

Critical Studies: The Crippled Giant: A Literary Relationship with Louis-Ferdinand Céline by Milton Hindus, 1950, revised edition, 1986; Céline by David Hayman, 1965; Céline and His Vision, 1967, and Voyeur Voyant: A Portrait of L.-F. Céline, 1971, both by Erika Ostrovsky; Céline: The Novel as Delirium by Allen Thiher, 1972; Céline, Man of Hate by Bettina L. Knapp, 1974; Céline by Patrick McCarthy, 1975; Louis-Ferdinand Céline by David O'Connell, 1976; Louis-Ferdinand Céline by Merlin Thomas, 1979; Understanding Céline by James Flynn and C.K. Mertz, 1984; Céline and His Critics edited by Stanford Luce, 1986; Céline's Imaginative Space by Jane Carson, 1987; The Golden Age of Louis-Ferdinand Céline by Nicholas Hewitt, 1987; Language and Narration in Céline's Writings: The Challenge of Disorder by Ian Noble, 1987; Enfin Céline vint: A Contextualist Reading of Journey to the End of the Night and Death on the Installment Plan by Wayne Burns, 1988; Louis-Ferdinand Céline: Journey to the End of the Night by John Sturrock, 1990; Louis-Ferdinand Céline: The I of the Storm by Charles Krance, 1992; Understanding Céline by Philip Solomon, 1992; Céline and the Politics of Difference, edited by Rosemarie Scullion, Philip H. Solomon, and Thomas C. Spear, 1995; The Life of Céline: A Critical Biography by Nicholas Hewitt, 1999; Céline, Gadda, Beckett: Experimental Writings of the 1930s by Norma Bouchard, 2000.

* * *

Louis-Ferdinand Céline emerged as a great writer in 1932 with his first novel, Voyage au bout de la nuit (Journey to the End of the Night). Although the early pages, which depict the carnage of World War I and hallucinatory journeys to Africa and America, are more brilliant and were responsible for the book's immediate success, the second half of the book may be of greater significance. The doctor-hero, Bardamu, undertakes a quest to understand and absorb the suffering of modern life, which allows Céline to demonstrate not merely the collapse of traditional values but the inadequacy of traditional fiction with its reliance on plot, rounded characters, and familiar language.

So in Mort à crédit (Death on Credit) he dismembers his sentences and introduces a tide of Parisian slang that is meant more as a lyrical than as a realistic device. This novel reverses the conventional view of childhood in order to depict the pain the child undergoes as he awakens to his surroundings, and the broken rhythms, the slang, and the obscenity permit Céline to render the child's world with great immediacy.

Obsessed with his own nightmares and convinced that another world war was imminent, Céline then wrote his pamphlets Bagatelles pour un massacre [Bagatelles for a Massacre] and L'École des cadavres [School for Corpses]. Although their message is appalling, they are an integral part of his work and cannot be ignored. The solution to Hitler's threat is, Céline maintains, appeasement and the author of all the world's evil is the Jew. Whereas evil in Céline's novels is not so easily explained away, for it is inherent in the human condition, here it is personified in the figure of the Jew. During the Occupation Céline remained in France and continued to publish and, while in no sense a leading collaborator, he certainly helped the cause of anti-Semitism.

For this reason his work was banned at the Liberation, was afterwards long neglected and has only in the last several decades been widely read. His later novels are generally considered to be less good than the early ones, but one of them, Féerie pour une autre fois [Fairy-Tale for Another Time], is a fascinating work that is an investigation both of World War II and of artistic creation itself. Céline attempts to incorporate into the novel other arts like painting and film while giving pride of place to the ballet. Art is depicted as making and unmaking the universe, and its demonic, destructive quality is emphasized, although the role of the ballet-dancer is to restore harmony. In this novel Céline created a multiple work of art that is not governed by a single point of view and invites many different readings.

The only one of his later novels to be appreciated in his lifetime was D'un château a l'autre (Castle to Castle), a satire of the collaborators and a good example of Céline's black humour. In general Céline was the voice of the 1930s and 1940s who sought to express with a novel intensity the violence of his age. But he was also a consummate artist whose experiments with the language and structure of novels have influenced contemporary writers, both French and foreign.

—Patrick McCarthy

See the essay on Journey to the End of the Night.

CENDRARS, Blaise

Born: Frédéric Sauser Hall in La Chaux-de-Fonds, Switzerland, 1 September 1887. Naturalized French citizen, 1916. Education: Educated at International School, Naples; Basle Gymnasium; L'École de commerce, Neuchâtel, 1903–04; studied medicine and philosophy, University of Berne, 1908–09. Military Service: Served with the French Foreign Legion during World War I; injured in Navarin, right arm amputated, 1916; Order of the Army, Croix de Guerre, and Médaille Militaire, all 1915. Family: Married 1) Fela Poznanska in 1914 (divorced), one daughter and two sons; 2) Raymone Duchâteau in 1949. Career: Assistant to the film director, Abel Gance, Rome, 1918–20. Worked at a variety of jobs including juggling, prospecting, journalism; producer and director of films in France, Italy, and Hollywood; travelled extensively throughout Africa and South America. Editor, Les Hommes Nouveaux and Paris-Soir; reporter for several provincial newspapers, including Le Jour and Paris-Soir, 1934–40. Associated with the early Cubist movement. Awards: Grand prix littéraire de la ville de Paris, 1961. Died: 21 January 1961.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Oeuvres complètes [Denoël Edition]. 8 vols., 1960–65.
Selected Writings, edited by Walter Albert, translated by Albert, John Dos Passos, and Scott Bates. 1962.
Poésies complètes 1912–1924. 1967.
Oeuvres complètes. 16 vols., 1968–71.
Selected Poems, translated by Peter Hoida, 1979.

Fiction

La Fin du monde. 1919.
L'Anthologie nègre (folklore). 1921; as The African Saga, translated by Margery Bianco, 1927.
La Perle fiévreuse. 1921–22.

L'Or, la merveilleuse histoire du Général Johann August Sutter. 1925; as Sutter's Gold, translated by Henry Longan Stuart, 1926; as Gold: The Marvellous History of General John Augustus Sutter, translated by Nina Rootes, 1982.

Moravagine. 1926; revised edition, 1956; as Moravagine, translated by Alan Brown, 1968.

L'Eubage: Aux antipodes de l'unité 1926; as At the Antipodes of Unity, 1922.

Petits contes nègres pour les enfants des Blancs. 1928; as Little Black Stories for Little White Children, translated by Margery Bianco, 1929.

Le Plan de l'aiguille. 1929; as Antarctic Fugue, translated anonymously, 1948; as Dan Yack, translated by Nina Rootes, 1987.

Les Confessions de Dan Yack. 1929; as Confessions of Dan Yack, translated by Nina Rootes, 1990.

Rhum, ou l'aventure de Jean Galmot. 1930.

Comment les Blancs sont d'anciens Noirs (stories). 1930.

Carolina (story). 1931.

Vol à voile. 1932.

Histoires vraies (stories). 1937.

La Vie dangereuse (stories). 1938.

D'Oultramer à Indigo (stories). 1940.

Emmène-moi au bout du monde! . . . 1956; as To the End of the World, translated by Alan Brown, 1967.

Verse

Les Pâques. 1912; as Les Pâques à New York, 1918; as Easter in New York, translated by Scott Bates, 1918.

La Prose du Transsibérien et de la petite Jehanne de France. 1913; as The Trans-Siberian, translated by John Dos Passos, in Panama; or, the Adventures of My Seven Uncles, 1931.

Séquences. 1913.

La Guerre au Luxembourg. 1916.

Le Panama; ou, les Aventures de mes sept oncles. 1918; as Panama; or the Adventures of My Seven Uncles, translated by John Dos Passos, 1931.

Dix-neuf poèmes élastiques. 1919; edited by Jean-Pierre Goldenstein, 1986.

Sonnets dénaturés. 1923.

Feuilles de route I: Le Formose. 1924; with parts I and II, in Poésies complètes, 1944; in Complete Postcards from the Americas, translated by Monique Chefedor, 1976.

Kodak. 1924; as Kodak, translated by Ron Padgett, 1976; in Complete Postcards from the Americas, translated by Monique Chefedor, 1976.

Poésies complètes. 1944; as Complete Poems, translated by Ron Padgett, 1992.

Du monde entier au coeur du monde (complete poems). 1957.

Amours. 1961.

Shadow, translated by Marcia Brown, 1996.

Plays

Danse macabre de l'amour. 1912.

La Création du monde (ballet, with Darius Milhaud and Fernand Léger; produced 1923). 1931.

Films sans images (radio plays). 1959.

Screenplays: La Roue, 1922; La Fin du monde, 1931.

Other

Le Cahier noir, le cahier rouge (lectures). 1906.

Novogorod, la légende de l'or gris et du silence. 1909.

Le Dernier des masques: Rémy de Gourmont. 1910.

Moganni Nameh. 1912.

Profond aujourd'hui. 1917; as Profound Today, translated by Harold Loeb, 1922.

J'ai tué. 1918; as I Have Killed, translated by Harold Ward, 1919.

Peintres. 1919.

L'A B C du cinéma. 1926.

L'Éloge de la vie dangereuse. 1926.

La Métaphysique du café. 1927.

Une nuit dans la forêt. 1929; as Night in the Forest, translated by Margaret Ewing, 1985.

Aujourd'hui. 1931.

Cassandra. 1933.

Panorama de la pègre (articles). 3 vols., 1935.

Hollywood, la Mecque du cinéma. 1936; as Hollywood: Mecca of the Movies, translated by Garrett White, 1995.

Chez l'armée anglaise (articles). 1940.

L'Homme foudroyé (autobiography). 1945; as The Astonished Man, translated by Nina Rootes, 1970.

La Main coupée (autobiography). 1946; as Lice, translated by Nina Rootes, 1973.

Bourlinguer (autobiography). 1948; as Planus, translated by Nina Rootes, 1972.

La Banlieue de Paris (on Robert Doisneau's photographs). 1949.

Le Lotissement du ciel, photographs by Robert Doisneau. 1949.

Blaise Cendrars vous parle (interviews with Michel Manoll). 1952.

Le Brésil—Des hommes sont venus, photographs by Jean Manzon. 1952.

Noël aux quatre coins du monde (radio broadcasts). 1953; as Christmas at the Four Corners of the Earth, translated by Bertrand Mathieu, 1994.

Trop c'est trop (articles and stories). 1957.

A l'aventure (selection). 1958.

Films sans images: Sarajevo, Gilles de Rais, Le Divin Arétin (radio broadcasts). 1959.

Dites-nous, Monsieur Blaise Cendrars, edited by Hughes Richard. 1969.

Inédits secrets (journals, correspondence, plays), edited by Miriam Cendrars. 1969.

Paris ma ville. 1987.

John Paul Jones; ou, L'Ambition. 1989.

J'écris. Écrivez-moi: Correspondance Blaise Cendrars—Jacques-Henry Lévêque: 1924–1959, edited by Monique Chefedor. 1991.

Modernities and Other Writings (essays), edited by Monique Chefedor, translated by Esther Allen. 1992.

Correspondance, 1934–1979: 45 Ans d'Amitié, introduction by Frédéric-Jacques Temple, 1995.

Translator, Hors la loi!, by Alphonso J. Jennings. 1936.

Translator, Forêt vierge, by Ferreira de Castro. 1938.

*

Bibliography: Bibliographie générale de l'oeuvre de Blaise Cendrars by Hughes Richard, 1965.

Critical Studies: Blaise Cendrars by Henry Miller, 1951; Blaise Cendrars by Jean Buhler, 1960; Situation de Blaise Cendrars by Jean-Claude Lovey, 1965; Blaise Cendrars; ou, La Passion de l'écriture by Yvette Bozon-Scalzitti, 1977; Cendrars aujourd'hui; présence d'un romancier edited by Michel Décaudin, 1977; Au coeur du texte: essai sur Blaise Cendrars by John Carlo Flückiger, 1977; Blaise Cendrars: Bilans nègres by Martin Steins, 1977; Blaise Cendrars: Discovery and Re-Creation by Jay Bochner, 1978; Blaise Cendrars by Monique Chefedor, 1980; Blaise Cendrars by Miriam Cendrars, 1984; Le Premier Siècle de Cendrars 1887–1987, 1987, and Cendrars et l'Homme Foudroyé, 1989, both edited by Claude LeRoy; Genèse et dossier d'une polémique: "La Prose du Transsibérien et de la petite Jehanne de France" by Antoine Sidoti, 1987; Le Texte cendrarsien edited by Jacqueline Bernard, 1988; Blaise Cendrars by Anne-Marie Jaton, 1991; La Main de Cendrars, preface by Miriam Cendrars, 1996; Blaise Cendrars: Le Désir du Roman, 1920–1930 by Michèle Touret, 1999.

* * *

A fast-moving, exciting novel whose graphic events come gradually to take on a mythic character, L'Or (Sutter's Gold) is a work that reflects in fiction many of the factors making up Blaise Cendrars's complex personality, including a tendency to mingle fact and fantasy in an inextricable web. General John Augustus Sutter, based on a historical figure, is Swiss, like Cendrars, and around his life story the novelist weaves a tale of travel, violence, and adventure. This man, "bankrupt, vagabond, thief and swindler," as he is uncompromisingly described, sets out from his village, makes his way through France to Le Havre, whence, on a square-rigged paddle-steamer, he crosses the Atlantic to New York where in 1834 "all the shipwrecked souls from the Old World disembark." Before long Sutter is making his way west, farming in Missouri and then moving eventually on to California where he acquires land and becomes master of a vast domain. All might seem set fair. In 1848, however, gold is discovered on his land, and in the rough and tumble of the gold rush, Sutter finds, not prosperity, but personal ruination. At the end we see the figure of a pathetic old man in his second childhood. Told in short chapters and laconic prose, Sutter's Gold captures all the excitement of an epic life that rises from the depths only to fall again, and the novel, which has been translated into many languages, remains Cendrars's most popular work.

Before writing it, Cendrars had had an exciting life which included journeys from his native Switzerland to Russia and to the United States. His period of service in the French Foreign Legion ended with the amputation of his right arm after he had been wounded in the Battle of the Marne in September 1915. Though his education had been cut short, he had, from his childhood on, always been a voracious reader, especially of the French Romantic authors, and he had soon also begun to find expression of his restless and enquiring spirit in the more advanced forms of literature and the other arts. He wrote experimental poetry, and he became particularly involved in the emergence of Cubism. The cinema was another medium that seemed to him to have great potential, and a collection of his film reviews was published in his L'A B C du cinéma in 1926. Another interest was jazz, at a time when its lively rhythms and vivid instrumental colour struck European ears as the sort of music that had genuine elemental vigour. A product of this interest was Cendrars's collaboration with Darius Milhaud, one of the group of French avant-garde composers known as "Les Six," on the jazz ballet La Création du monde. It was first performed by the Ballets Suédois in Paris in 1923, with its "African" idiom inevitably provoking something of an outcry. Work of this sort appealed, however, only to a relatively restricted coterie, and Cendrars owes his wider reputation to his prose works.

Sutter's Gold was published in 1925, and Moravagine, of which excerpts had been printed half a decade earlier, followed the year after. In it is reflected the Surrealists' passionate curiosity about the nature of insanity. This topic is explored through the investigations carried out by a young psychiatrist on Moravagine, a particularly fascinating patient. Moravagine is an old man who turns out to be the heir to the Hungarian throne. Having been brought up in isolation, he has become excessively inward-looking and consequently developed a morbid sensitivity. Doctor and patient flee from the Swiss sanatorium. Moravagine subsequently becomes a serial killer of women before getting involved in terrorist activity in Moscow at the time of the 1905 uprising then escaping to the New World. Les Confessions de Dan Yack (Confessions of Dan Yack) also has adventurous journeying as one of its major structures, this time by a playboy from St. Petersburg who goes to the Antarctic, but the second volume of the two in which it was originally published is an exploration of the hero's relationship with his wife who had died some time earlier.

Rhum, l'aventure de Jean Galmot [Rum, Jean Galmot's Adventure] owes something to the style and to the inspiration of Sutter's Gold. It is based on a real-life event that Cendrars was invited to report on for the Paris newspaper, Vu—the trial of the murderer of Jean Galmot, a député for Guiana in the French National Assembly whose rise and fall in exotic surroundings had been as spectacular as that of Sutter.

Cendrars continued to write throughout his life, producing film criticism and a book on Hollywood as well as novels and verse. In the first year of World War II he was attached as a war correspondent to the British Headquarters in France, publishing a collection of his newspaper articles in Chez l'armée anglaise [With the British Army] in 1940. Cendrars also wrote a number of autobiographical books, the exact veracity of which has been increasingly questioned by critics who are now more inclined to see them either as exercises in mystification or as quasi-fictional works.

—Christopher Smith

CERNUDA (Y BIDÓN), Luis

Born: Seville, Spain, 21 September 1902. Education: Educated at school in Seville, 1914–18; University of Seville, 1919–25, degree in law 1925. Military Service: Served in 1923. Career: Lecturer in Spanish literature, École Normale, Toulouse, 1928–29; worked in bookshop, Madrid, 1929; contributor to Heraldo de Madrid, 1933–34; worked for the government Misiones Pedagógicas, 1934; secretary to Spanish ambassador in Paris, 1936; returned to Madrid, 1936, and wrote for several newspapers; Spanish assistant, Cranleigh School, Surrey, England, and gave pro-Republican lectures, 1938; reader in Spanish, Glasgow University, 1939–43, Cambridge University, 1943–45; lecturer, Instituto Español, London, 1945; professor of Spanish, Mount Holyoke College, Massachusetts, 1947–52; moved to Mexico, 1952; professor of Spanish, Autonomous University of Mexico, Mexico City, 1954–60; visiting professor, University of California, Los Angeles, and San Francisco State College, 1960–62. Died: 5 November 1963.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

- Poesía*, edited by A.E. Kins and D. Morris. 1971.
Poesía completa, edited by Derek Harris and Luis Maristany. 1974; revised edition, 1977.
Prosa completa, edited by Derek Harris and Luis Maristany. 1975.
Obra Completa, 1993.

Verse

- Perfil del aire*. 1927.
La invitación a la poesía. 1933.
Donde habite el olvido. 1934.
El joven marino. 1936.
La realidad y el deseo. 1936; revised editions, 1940, 1958, 1964; edited by Miguel Flys, 1982.
Ocnos (prose poems). 1942; revised and enlarged editions, 1949, 1963; edited by D. Musacchio, 1977.
Las nubes. 1943; edited by Luis Antonio de Villena, with Desolación de la quimera, 1984.
Como quien espera el alba. 1947.
Poemas para un cuerpo. 1957.
Díptico español (1960–1961). 1961.
Desolación de la quimera. 1962; edited by Luis Antonio de Villena, with Las nubes, 1984.
Antología poética, edited by P.L. Ávila. 1966; also edited by César López, 1996.
Antología poética, edited by Rafael Santos Torroella. 1970.
Eglogà, edited by Gregorio Prieto. 1970.
Perfil del aire; Con otras obras olvidadas e inéditas, edited by Derek Harris. 1971.
The Poetry of Luis Cernuda, edited by Anthony Edkins and Derek Harris. 1971.
Invitación a la poesía de Luis Cernuda, edited by Carlos Peregrin Otero. 1975.
Antología poética, edited by Philip W. Silver. 1975.
Selected Poems, translated by Reginald Gibbons. 1977.
El exilio en la poesía de Luis Cernuda (selection), edited by Douglas Barnette. 1984.
Sonetos clásicos sevillanos. 1986.
The Young Sailor and Other Poems, translated by Rick Lipinski. 1987.
Luis Cernuda para niños. 1992.
Un río, un amor; Los placeres prohibidos, edited by Derek Harris, 1999.

Fiction

- Tres narraciones*. 1948.

Other

- Variaciones sobre tema mexicano*. 1952.
Estudios sobre poesía española contemporánea. 1957.
El pensamiento poético en la lírica inglesa (siglo XIX). 1958.
Poesía y literatura. 2 vols., 1960–64; in one volume, 1971.
Crítica, ensayos y evocaciones, edited by Luis Maristany. 1970.
Cartas a Eugenio de Andrade, edited by Ángel Crespo. 1979.
Epistolario inédito. 1981.

La familia interrumpida; Juegos de memoria y olvido por Octavio Paz. 1988.

Translator, Poemas, by Friedrich Hölderlin. 1942; revised edition, 1974.

Translator, Troilo y Cresida, by Shakespeare. 1953.

*

Critical Studies: Cuadrivio (on Darío, López Velarde, Pessoa, Cernuda) by Octavio Paz, 1965; Et in Arcadia Ego: A Study of the Poetry of Luis Cernuda, 1966, and De la mano de Cernuda, 1989, both by Philip W. Silver; Other Voices: A Study of the Late Poetry of Luis Cernuda by J. Alexander Coleman, 1969; A Generation of Spanish Poets 1920–1936 by Cyril Brian Morris, 1969; El periodo sevillano de Luis Cernuda, 1971, and El surrealismo en la poesía de Luis Cernuda, 1976, both by J.E. Capote Benot; La poesía de Luis Cernuda: Estudio cuantitativo del léxico de La realidad y el deseo by J.A. Bellón Cazabán, 1973; Luis Cernuda: A Study of the Poetry by Derek Harris, 1973, and Luis Cernuda (in Spanish) edited by Harris, 1977; La poética de Luis Cernuda by Agustín Delgado, 1975; Luis Cernuda y su obra poética, 1975, and Luis Cernuda y la generación del 27, 1983, both by C. Real Ramos; El espacio y las máscaras: Introducción a la lectura de Luis Cernuda by Jenaro Talens, 1975; Luis Cernuda edited by Gil de Biedma and others, 1977; Luis Cernuda (in English) by Salvador Jiménez-Fajardo, 1978, and The Word as Mirror: Critical Essays on the Poetry of Luis Cernuda edited by Jiménez-Fajardo, 1989; Arte, amor y otras soledades en Luis Cernuda by Carlos Ruiz Silva, 1979; Espanoles en la Gran Bretaña: Luis Cernuda: El hombre y sus temas by Rafael Martínez Nadal, 1983; Cernuda y el poema en prosa, 1984, and La prosa narrativa de Luis Cernuda, both by James Valender, 1984; En torno a la poesía de Luis Cernuda by Richard K. Curry, 1985; Luis Cernuda: Escritura cuerpo y deseo by Manuel Ulacia, 1986; Luis Cernuda and the Modern English Poets by Brian Hughes, 1988; Los finales poemáticos en la obra de Luis Cernuda by Hilda Pato, 1988; The Poetry of Luis Cernuda: Order in a World of Chaos by Neil C. McKinlay, 1999; Art, Gender, and Sexuality: New Readings of Cernuda's Later Poetry by Philip Martin-Clark, 2000.

* * *

Luis Cernuda was a member of that brilliant group of Spanish poets known as the Generation of 1927, which included such major poets as Federico García Lorca, Jorge Guillén, Pedro Salinas, Gerardo Diego, and Rafael Alberti. Not until the decade of the 1960s did Cernuda achieve his just recognition as one of the most original and profound poets of 20th-century Spain. With exemplary versatility, depth, and poetic skill he explored a number of poetic techniques from the romantic to the surrealist. Thematically, Cernuda's is a poetry of continuous tension, grounded in his desperate attempt to escape the conflicts between reality and desire, appearances and truth. He sought to escape an alienating and hostile world in the dream of some transcendent existence which would unify self and world. La realidad y el deseo [Reality and Desire] became the title of his collected work, and has continued to influence the generations of Spanish poets that followed him.

The first book of poetry by Cernuda was entitled Perfil del aire [Profile of the Air]. In an impressionistic and melancholy work, the young poet seeks to fuse his personal experience and the surrounding environment. Recreating the memories of his childhood, he retreats to a hidden garden symbolic of Paradise and escapes the threatening world of objective reality. This first collection is reminiscent of the impressionistic techniques of Juan Ramón Jiménez and the refined Romantic verse of Gustavo Adolfo Bécquer, and the classical forms and elegance recall the poetry of Jorge Guillén. The theme of the artist isolated in a lost Paradise continues in “Égloga, elegía, oda” [Eclogue, Elegy, Ode], with its extended verse and classical form.

Cernuda himself later repudiated what he felt to be the artificiality and imitative beauty of these early volumes, and with “Un río, un amor” [A River, a Love] embraced the techniques of surrealism, which offered a new freedom in its use of free association to explore the subconscious. This collection initiates the perception of the vital conflict between reality and desire, an opposition which evolves into the dominant force in the poetry of Cernuda. The persona of the poems is hurled into a fractured and alien world of tearless sorrow, pits of snakes, thorns, and ashes—pain upon pain. The poem “As the Wind” portrays the weary speaker abandoned, as the reality of love becomes the threat of death:

As the wind throughout the night
Love in torment or lonely body,
Knocks in rain against the glass,
Abandons corners, sobbing.

(translated by Anthony Edkins)

“Los placeres prohibidos” [Forbidden Pleasures] continues the theme of rejection and, in a number of poems, the surrealistic technique. The defence of erotic desire as a part of the self implies an increasingly apparent ethical concern on the part of the poet. As the eroticism of the verse intensifies, so does the indictment of a blind and repressive society paralysed in the false dichotomy of good versus evil. Surrealism not only liberated Cernuda’s poetics; it also encouraged a more intellectualized response to his feelings. Because the poet finds the knowledge of self in memory, a bond is created between image and memory.

Donde habite el olvido [Where Oblivion Dwells], whose title is taken from Bécquer, moves from surrealism to the dark images of romanticism and its idea of an Edenic private world created by the dual attraction of love and death. While the verse is calmer and more measured, the reader encounters a cold scepticism and disillusionment as Cernuda reflects on the adolescent years. The private dream has become a spiritual wasteland, and desire becomes suffering. With this collection, Cernuda enters a more meditative phase. Seeking knowledge of himself by confronting reality, he discovers solitude and alienation as the truth of the human condition. If love can lead only to destruction and pain, then the only exit leads to oblivion and insensibility:

Where oblivion dwells
In vast gardens without a dawn;
Where I shall only be
The memory of a stone. . .

(translated by Anthony Edkins)

Acute consciousness of the vocation of the poet is apparent in the poems of “Invocaciones” which Cernuda began in 1935 and which were later included in La realidad y el deseo. While it is somewhat more hopeful than the verse of Donde habite el olvido, the themes of evasion, isolation, and solitude dominate the work.

The title of Cernuda’s masterpiece, La realidad y el deseo, is an encapsulation of his experience, poetry, and philosophy of life. The work ultimately was to include 11 separate editions under the same title. From its inception, the verse of Cernuda merged an erotic awareness with the essence of poetry. The struggle to acknowledge his homosexuality and to identify its relationship with his poetry was arduous and painful. In the later poetry this becomes the defence of his own identity and an attempt to unify self and world. Yet, as Derek Harris observes in Luis Cernuda: A Study of the Poetry (1973), this vital existential question of Cernuda’s homosexuality creates a metaphor for the alienation of the human condition, for “he was not a homosexual poet, but a homosexual and a poet.”

The tone of the elegiac form of Las nubes [The Clouds] is distant and aloof. This verse represents the mature poetry of Cernuda, with the appearance of autodiologue and monologue. Poems like “Elegía española” [Spanish Elegy] and “A un poeta muerto” [To a Poet Dead]—dedicated to the assassinated poet Federico García Lorca—lament the destruction of the values, vitality, and spirit of Mother Spain by her sons. Spain as a social and political entity is a new theme, although Cernuda does not address the horrible reality of the Civil War directly. In one of the most acclaimed of the poems, “La adoración de los Magos” [The Adoration of the Magi], the Wise Men find the God for whom they are sent, but cannot recognize him. “They sought a new god, and some say they found him/I rarely saw men. I have never seen any gods.” Man is estranged from any idea of God or gods. Some of Cernuda’s finest poetry appears in this collection, which reveals a compelling artistry in the complexity of its images, metaphors, and symbols.

In another work of this period Como quien espera el alba [Like Someone Waiting for the Dawn], Cernuda continues to seek both engagement with the world and the discovery of his identity in the essence of his poetry. Such poems as “La familia” [The Family] and “Las ruinas” [The Ruins] give voice to his alienation and defiance. “Noche del hombre y su demonio” [A Man’s Night with His Demons] finds the poet alone in tormented dialectic with the demonic, as the demon tempts him with the idea of social acceptance and attacks the illusion that there is immortality in art. The commitment of the poet to the meaning and authenticity of his verse holds firm as the poem ends in sad resignation. Death itself is viewed as offering dimensions and a sense to life, as well as providing energy to create and even to love. In the mature verse, Cernuda finds beauty, however transitory, superior to reality, and several of the poems are devoted to the creation of pure lyric.

The next two collections of exile poetry, “Vivir sin estar viviendo” [Living Without Being Alive] and “Con las horas contadas” [With Time Running Out], became part of the 1958 edition of La realidad y el deseo. The perception of time as fleeting and escaping becomes more intense, as the preoccupation with self-analysis is reflected in only slightly disguised self-portraits. There is a new acceptance of alienation and suffering as real and inseparable from the eminent calling of the poet. In “Sombra de mí” [Shadow of Myself] the poet suffers, weeps, and desires, but possesses “. . . the shadow/of love which exists in me/While my time is still not run out.”

The final work of Cernuda, Desolación de la quimera [The Disconsolate Chimera], takes its title from The Four Quartets by T.S. Eliot, whom Cernuda greatly admired. It is clearly intended as a final testament of his poetic creed, and his attitudes regarding Spain, art, and beauty—in sum, his life philosophy. A good number of the verses reveal a dark cynicism and anger regarding what he denounces as a spiteful misunderstanding of his personality and work. It is a work of incredible honesty, however, without apology or false humility. Cernuda fuses art and the self, and, in the process of recreating and restructuring reality, art creates its own vision and ultimate reality. With complex imagery and multiple metaphors, Cernuda offers changing and increasing planes of meaning which evoke the universal from personal experience in such celebrated poems as “Luis de Baviera escucha Lohengrin” [Ludwig of Bavaria listens to Lohengrin].

Cernuda’s poetry is the chronicle of a proud and sensitive man’s search for individual truth. He sought to flee an alienating and hostile world in a dream of Paradise inspired by his Andalusian youth. The dream of unity somewhere between reality and desire was never fully realized; the existential pain of the confrontation between the poet’s experience and his personal desires endured. Finally, he learned to accept the tension of an imperfect reality in the understanding that the poetic and vital struggle itself was the instrument of self-realization. His work reflects a singular dimension of passion, integrity, and ethical dignity in the pursuit of truth and beauty.

—Jerry Phillips Winfield

CERVANTES (SAAVEDRA), Miguel de

Born: Alcalá de Henares, Spain, October 1547. Grew up in Córdoba, Cabra, and Seville. Education: Attended the Estudio de la Villa, Madrid, 1567–68, and studied under the Erasmian humanist, López de Hoyos. Family: Married Catalina de Salazar y Palacios in 1584; had one daughter by Ana Franca de Rojas. Career: Went to Rome in 1569, possibly after a brawl in Madrid; chamberlain to Cardinal Giulio Acquaviva, 1570; enlisted as soldier by 1571; fought with the Spanish fleet at the battle of Lepanto, 1571, sustaining an injury; later, expeditions to Corfu and Navarino, 1572, and to Tunis, 1573, then in garrisons at Palermo, Sardinia, and Naples; was captured by pirates and imprisoned by Turks in Algiers, 1575–80; ransomed, 1580; went on diplomatic mission to Oran, North Africa, 1581; returned to Spain, tax inspector and purchasing agent (excommunicated briefly in 1587 for financial zeal); suffered bankruptcy and two short prison terms (1597 and 1602) for financial irregularities; application for administrative post in America denied; lived mainly in Seville, 1596–1600, and Madrid after c. 1606. Died: 23 April 1616.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Obras, edited by B.C. Aribau and Francisco Ynduráin. 2 vols., 1846.
Obras completas, edited by J.E. Hartzenbusch and C. Rosell. 1863.
Complete Works, edited by James Fitzmaurice-Kelly. 1901–03.
Obras completas, edited by R. Schevill and A. Benilla y San Martín. 16 vols., 1914–41.
The Portable Cervantes, edited and translated by Samuel Putnam. 1947.
Obras completas, edited by Ángel Valbuena Prat. 10th edition, 1956.
Obras completas, edited by Germán de Argumosa. 2 vols., 1964–65.

Fiction

La Galatea. 1585; edited by Juan Bautista Avallé-Arce, 1987; as La Galatea, translated by Gordon W.J. Gyll, 1867.
El ingenioso hidalgo Don Quijote de la Mancha. 2 vols., 1605–15; edited by Francisco Rodríguez Marín, 8 vols., 1911, and by Vicente Gaos, 3 vols., 1987; as The History of Don Quixote of the Mancha, translated by Thomas Shelton, 1612; numerous subsequent translations including by Tobias Smollett, 1755, Charles Jarvis, 1883, Samuel Putnam, 1949, J.M. Cohen, 1950, Walter Starkie, 1957, and P.A. Motteux, 1991, Burton Raffel, 1995.
Novelas ejemplares. 1613; edited by F. Rodríguez Marín, 2 vols., 1969, also edited by Juan Bautista Avallé-Arce, 3 vols., 1987; as Exemplary Novels, translated in part by James Mabbe, 1640; B.W. Iffe and others, 4 vols., 1992; as Six Exemplary Novels, translated by Harriet de Onís, 1961; as Exemplary Stories, translated by C.A. Jones, 1972, translated by Lesley Lipson, 1998.
Los trabajos de Persiles y Sigismunda. 1617; as The Travels of Persiles and Sigismunda, translated by “M.L.,” 1619; also translated by Louisa Dorothea Stanley, 1854; as The Trials of Persiles and Sigismunda, translated by Celia Richmond Weller and Clark A. Colahan, 1989.
A Dialogue Between Scipio and Bergansa; The Comical History of Rincon and Corlado (in English). 1767.
The Captive’s Tale, translated with introduction by Donald P. McCrory, 1994.

Plays

Ocho comedias y ocho entremeses nuevos. 1615; as Eight Interludes, translated and edited by Dawn L. Smith, 1996.
La Numancia, El trato de Argel (with Viage del Parnaso). 1784; as El cerco de Numancia, edited by Robert Marrast, 1984; as Numantia; The Commerce of Algiers, translated by Gordon W.J. Gyll, 1870.
Entremeses, edited by Miguel Herrero García. 1945; also edited by Alonso Zamora Vicente, 1979, and by Nicholas Spadaccini, 1985; as The Interludes, translated by S. Griswold Morley, 1948, also translated by Edwin Honig, 1964; as Interludes/Entremeses, translated by Randall W. Listerman, 1991.
El viejo celoso and El Celoso extremeño, edited by Paul Lewis-Smith, 2001.

Verse

Viage del Parnaso. 1614; edited by Miguel Herrero García, 1983; as Journey to Parnassus, translated by J.Y. Gibson, 1883.
Viage del Parnaso y poesías varias, edited by Elias L. Rivers. 1991.

*

Bibliography: Cervantes: A Bibliography by R.L. Grismer, 1946; An Analytical and Bibliographical Guide to Criticism on Don Quixote (1790–1893) by Dana B. Drake and Dominick L. Finello, 1987.

Critical Studies: Cervantes by Aubrey F.G. Bell, 1947; Cervantes in Arcadia by J.B. Trend, 1954; Don Quixote’s Profession by Mark Van Doren, 1958; Don Quixote: An Introductory Essay in Psychology by Salvador de Madariaga, 1961; Cervantes’s Theory of the Novel by Edward C. Riley, 1962; Cervantes and the Art of Fiction by George D. Trotter, 1965; Cervantes: A Collection of Critical Essays edited by

L. Nelson, Jr., 1969; Cervantes: His Life, His Times, His Works edited by Arnaldo Mondadori, 1970; Cervantes, The Man and the Genius by Francisco Navarro y Ledesma, 1973; Cervantes by Manuel Durán, 1974; The Golden Dial: Temporal Configuration in Don Quixote, 1975, and A Critical Introduction to Don Quixote, 1988, both by L.A. Murillo; Cervantes: A Biography by William Byron, 1978; The Romantic Approach to "Don Quixote": A Critical History of the Romantic Tradition in "Quixote" Criticism, 1978, and Miguel de Cervantes: Don Quixote, 1990 both by Anthony Close; The Individuated Self: Cervantes and the Emergence of the Individual, 1979, The Substance of Cervantes, 1985, and In the Margins of Cervantes, 1988, all by John G. Weiger; Don Quixote in World Literature by Dana B. Drake, 1980; Cervantes by Merveena McKendrick, 1980; The Unifying Concept: Approaches to the Structure of Cervantes's Comedias by Edward H. Friedman, 1981; Cervantes: Pioneer and Plagiarist by E.T. Aylward, 1982; Cervantes and the Humanist Vision: A Study of Four Exemplary Novels, 1982, and Cervantes and the Mystery of Lawlessness: A Study of El casamiento engañoso y El coloquio de los perros, 1984, both by Alban K. Forcione; Don Quixote and the Shelton Translation: A Stylistic Analysis by Sandra Forbes Gerhard, 1982; Skepticism in Cervantes by Maureen Ihrle, 1982; The Chivalric World of Don Quixote: Style, Structure and Narrative Technique by Howard Mancing, 1982; Madness and Lust: A Psychoanalytical Approach to Don Quixote by Carroll B. Johnson, 1983; Beyond Fiction: The Recovery of the Feminine in the Novels of Cervantes by Ruth El Saffar, 1984; The Half-Way House of Fiction: Don Quixote and Arthurian Romance by Edwin Williamson, 1984; Cervantes by P.E. Russell, 1985; Don Quixote by E.C. Riley, 1986; Cervantes: Modern Critical Views edited by Harold Bloom, 1987; Don Quixote: An Anatomy of Subversive Discourse by James A. Parr, 1988; Cervantes the Writer and Painter of Don Quixote by Helena Percas de Ponseti, 1988; The Novel According to Cervantes by Stephen Gilman, 1989; Cervantes and Ariosto by Thomas R. Hart, 1989; Cervantes by Jean Canavaggio, translated by J.R. Jones, 1990; The Solitary Journey: Cervantes' Voyage to Parnassus by Ellen D. Lokos, 1991; Cervantes and the Bурlesque Sonnet by Adrienne Laskier Martin, 1991; Allegories of Love: Cervantes's Persiles and Sigismunda by Diana de Armas Wilson, 1991, and Quixotic Desire: Psychoanalytic Perspectives on Cervantes, edited by de Armas Wilson and Ruth Anthony El Soffar, 1993; Through the Shattering Glass: Cervantes and the Self-Made World by Nicholas Spadaccini and Jenaro Talens, 1992; Pastoral Themes and Forms in Cervantes's Fiction by Dominic Finello, 1994; Cervantes and the Modernists: The Question of Influence, edited by Edwin Williamson, 1994; Refiguring Authority: Reading, Writing, and Rewriting in Cervantes by E. Michael Gerli, 1995; Eros and Empire: Politics and Christianity in Don Quixote by Henry Higuera, 1995; Grotesque Purgatory: A Study of Cervantes's Don Quixote, Part II by Henry W. Sullivan, 1996; Cervantes: Essays on Social and Literary Polemics by Dominick Finello, 1998; Don Quixote in England: The Aesthetics of Laughter by Ronald Paulson, 1998; Don Quijote Dictionary, compiled by Tom Lathrop, 1999; Critical Images: The Canonization of Don Quixote Through Illustrated Editions of the Eighteenth Century by Rachel Schmidt, 1999; Cervantes and His Postmodern Constituencies, edited by Anne J. Cruz and Carroll B. Johnson, 1999; Meditations on Quixote by José Ortega y Gasset, translated by Evelyn Rugg and Diego Martín, 2000; Cervantes and the Comic Mind of His Age by Anthony Close, 2000; Adventures in Paradox: Don Quixote and the Western Tradition by Charles D. Presberg, 2001; Cervantes' Los trabajos de Persiles y Sigismunda: A Study of Genre by Maria Alberta Sacchetti, 2001.

* * *

Biographers and critics of Miguel de Cervantes have been no less fascinated by his remarkable life and personality than by the quality of his literary work. Few of our great geniuses have been more stringently treated by luck or fortune, and fewer still have borne life's ill will with greater magnanimity and creative resignation. Cervantes suffered, precisely in the period which for most men offers the opportunity to build a foundation for their future lives, the most arduous fate that might befall a Spaniard of his times: five years of imprisonment and slavery under the Moors in Algeria, from the age of 28 to 33. His heroism as a soldier in the battle of Lepanto and other encounters with the Turks had been rewarded with highly laudatory letters of recommendation. On the basis of these commendations, his captors set a correspondingly high price for his ransom.

When this was finally achieved, and he returned to Spain, he found that his exploits were not to be rewarded with favouritism in the court. He was a valiant but minor hero of battles now forgotten. The wounded veteran, now well into the fourth decade of his life, decided to pursue a literary career and very consciously modelled his early works on currently popular genres. The pastoral novel was enjoying vogue, and his first novel, La Galatea, was cast in that mode. Few read the work today, but it was certainly among the best of the Spanish mannerist style and represented fertile possibilities to this new author, who prided himself on his elegant prose style, his gift for dialogue and plot, and his ability as a poet. La Galatea was an ample showcase for these talents, and to the end of his life the author promised a continuation of the novel, but it was never written.

Cervantes proved to be an untalented literary businessman. He was never able to make his living by the pen, although most of his works had moderate success for the period, and translations and pirated editions, while they brought him no income, established his name quite firmly in the literary world. He was forced to seek his livelihood with commissions as a tax collector and purchasing agent for the Spanish government. Through bad management or actual misappropriation, he was twice imprisoned—a popular conjecture is that he wrote the early chapters of El ingenioso hidalgo Don Quijote de la Mancha (Don Quixote) in the infamous dungeons of Seville—and he was briefly excommunicated for expropriating grain from Church stores.

While pursuing such minor bureaucratic and commercial occupations, Cervantes seems never to have stopped writing—poetry, plays, short comedies, some works of prose. Much of his early work is lost, but it is doubtful that it would have added much of value to the Cervantine corpus we have. The writer did not prize very highly the forgotten plays and poetry to which he refers in passing, and he had little success even with those works that were produced. Better dramatic writers than he—especially Lope de Vega—had “run off with the monarchy of the theatre,” and his poetry, he admitted ruefully, was never of the highest quality.

Cervantes's talent lay above all in narration, in the novel, a genre which was just achieving solidity and definition at the beginning of the 17th century. He claims in the prologue to his Novelas ejemplares (Exemplary Novels) that he is the first to “novelize” in Castilian, a boast that is only partly true. The novella was well established in Italy and had been introduced to Spain at least half a century earlier in the form of very short narrative pieces taken from a variety of sources, and Mateo Alemán, his contemporary, had intercalated novelas in his picaresque work Guzmán de Alfarache (1599). But it is true that Cervantes brought wholly new dimensions to the form in terms of giving each of the 12 tales autonomy and a much broader development of plot and character.

Don Quixote, which began as a parody of the popular books of chivalry, was his superb creation. The immense body of critical examination and eulogy stresses his perspectivism, his ability to create character, contrast, and believable dialogue; his comprehensive knowledge of his own time and of the currents of the age, and the tone of optimistic good humour and moral clarity that characterizes his treatment of the society of his time. Don Quixote is referred to frequently as the first modern novel, and very rightly so. It is the first extensive work of narrative fiction conceived on a grand scale which engages the reader with basic human questions of integrity, folly, social honesty, moralistic delusion, idealism, practical interest, basic concepts of justice, and the strengths and weaknesses of our best resolve. It is certainly the first work of western literature to offer the reader a world view and, as well as telling him an involved and entertaining story, it invites him to think about life and experience in very broad terms.

The first part of Don Quixote (1605) had very wide success, but Cervantes had sold his rights to the book for a ridiculously small sum of money. He had begun the promised second part of the novel when a plagiarist published a spurious continuation (1614), probably based on an incomplete manuscript which Cervantes had allowed to circulate in the literary court of Madrid. The real identity of the plagiarist is still unknown, but the apocryphal work, not entirely without merit, is decidedly inferior to the first part of Don Quixote or to Cervantes's own continuation (1615). The authentic second part abandons much of the parodic quality with which the novel had begun, to enquire more deeply into the nature of human consciousness, faith in ourselves and beyond ourselves, and the moral perspectives by which we live. Most critics have seen more conceptual depth in the second part, but it is the first which continues to be more widely read and which forms the basis for our English adaptation of the word "quixotic."

Cervantes was a writer totally, perhaps obsessively, committed to his craft, and it is with the urgency of impending death that he completed his last novel, Los trabajos de Persiles y Sigismunda (The Trials of Persiles and Sigismunda), a rambling account of adventures, separations, reunions, and recognitions, a form rare in Spanish Golden Age literature: the Byzantine novel. He had long planned the work, and had extravagant hopes for its success. Aware that his time was mercifully short, Cervantes was forced to write the last chapters hurriedly. Perhaps the last strokes of his pen were the lines of the dedicatory prologue to the Count of Lemos, which quotes an ancient poem that begins, "puesto ya el pie en el estribo"—"with one foot already placed in death's stirrup." This last book was not a success either in popular or critical terms, although many later Cervantists have sought to find value in the work.

Cervantes must be read and re-read in his masterpieces, not sought in his minor works, where so many flaws are overwhelmingly evident to the most ingenuous and tolerant eye. These great works are half a dozen of the Exemplary Novels and, above all in western literature of the 17th century, the two parts of Don Quixote, where the incredible mind of Cervantes lays bare the human soul in all of its possibilities for good, for hope, and for imaginative moral creation.

—James Russell Stamm

See the essay on Don Quixote.

CHAMISSO, Adelbert von

Born: Louis Charles Adelaide de Chamisso de Boncourt in Champagne region, France, 3 January 1781. Emigrated with his parents to Prussia to escape the French Revolution in 1790. Education: Educated at Berlin University, studied medicine, 1812–13. Military Service: Commissioned as ensign in the Prussian army, 1798, lieutenant, 1801, engaged in active service in Hameln 1806; discharged 1808. Family: Married Antonie Piaste in 1819 (died 1837); several children. Career: Lived in the Hague, Düsseldorf, Würzburg, and Bayreuth, settled in Berlin from 1796; attendant to Queen Friederike Luise, 1796; co-founding member of the liberal literary club Nordsternbund [North Star Alliance], 1803; travelled throughout France and Switzerland, 1806–12; naturalist on Otto von Kotzebue's expedition to the South Seas and to the Northern Pacific, 1815–18; curator, Berlin Museum Botanical Gardens, Berlin 1819; co-editor, with Gustav Schwab, Deutscher Musenalmanach, Berlin, 1833–38. Awards: Honorary doctorate: University of Berlin, 1819. Member: Berlin Academy of Sciences, 1835. Died: 21 August 1838.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Poetische Werke. 1868.

Aus Chamissos Frühzeit: Ungedruckte Briefe nebst Studien, edited by Ludwig Geiger. 1905.

Sämtliche Werke, edited by Ludwig Geiger. 4 vols., 1907.

Werke, edited by Hermann Tardel. 8 vols., 1907–08.

Werke, edited by Peter Wersig. 1967.

Sämtliche Werke, edited by Jost Perfaehl. 2 vols., 1975.

Fiction

Peter Schlemihls wundersame Geschichte, edited by Friedrich de la Motte Fouqué. 1814; revised edition 1827; as "Zauberposse," 1817; as Peter Schlemihl, translated by John Bowring, 1823; also translated by Leopold von Löwenstein-Wertheim, 1957; as The Wonderful History of Peter Schlemihl, translated by William Howitt, 1843; also translated by Frederic Henry Hedge, 1899, Theodore Bolton, 1923, and Peter Rudland, 1954; as The Shadowless Man; or, the Wonderful History of Peter Schlemihl, 1845; as Peter Schlemiel: The Man Who Sold His Shadow, translated by Peter Wortsman, 1993.

Erzählungen. 1947.

Verse

Gedichte. 1831.

Zwei Gedichte (ein altes und ein neues): Zum Besten der alten Waschfrau. 1838.

Frauen-Liebe und Leben: Ein Lieder-Cyklus. 1879; as Women's Love and Life: A Cycle of Song, translated by Frank V. Macdonald, 1881.

The Castle of Boncourt and Other Poems, translated by Alfred Baskerville, in German Classics of the Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries, vol. 5, 1913.

Plays

- Faust*. 1803; in Musenalmanach auf das Jahr 1804, edited by Chamisso and Karl August Varnhagen von Ense, 1804; as Faust: A Dramatic Sketch, translated by Henry Phillips, Jr., 1881.
- Die Wunderkur* (produced 1825).
- Der Wunder-Doktor*, from a play by Molière. 1828.
- Fortunati Glückseckel und Wunschhütlein*, edited by E.F. Kossmann. 1895.

Other

- De animalibus quibusdam e classe Vermium Linnaeana in circumnavigatione terræ auspicate comite N. Romanzoff, duce Ottone de Kotzebue annis 1815. ad 1818*. 1819.
- Bemerkungen und Ansichten auf einer Entdeckungs-Reise, unternommen in den Jahren 1815–1818. . . , in Entdeckungsreise in die Südsee und nach der Berrings-Strasse zur Erforschung einer nordöstlichen Durchfahrt unternommen in den Jahren 1815–1818*, by Otto von Kotzebue, vol. 3, 1821; as Remarks and Opinions of the Naturalist of the Expedition, translated by H.E. Lloyd, in A Voyage of Discovery into the South Sea and Beering's Straits, for the Purpose of Exploring a North-east Passage, Undertaken under the Command of the Lieutenant in the Russian Imperial Navy, Otto von Kotzebue, 1821.
- Cetaceorum maris Kamtschatici imagines, ab Aleutis e ligno fictas*. 1825.
- Übersicht der nutzbarsten und der schädlichsten Gewächse, welche wild oder angebaut in Norddeutschland vorkommen: Nebst Ansichten von der Pflanzenkunde und dem Pflanzenreiche*. 1827.
- Plantae Ecklonianæ Gentianearum et rosacearum novearum descriptiones fusiorea*. 1833.
- Werke*. 6 vols., 1836–39; vols. 5–6 edited by Julius Eduard Hitzig.
- Reise um die Welt mit der Romanzoffischen Entdeckungs Expedition in den Jahren 1815–1818*. 1836; as A Voyage Around the World with the Romanzov Exploring Expedition in the Years 1815–1818 in the Brig Rurik, edited and translated by Henry Katz, 1986; translated in part by Robert Fortuine as The Alaska Diary of Adelbert von Chamisso Naturalist on the Kotzebue Voyage 1815–1818, 1986.
- Über die Hawaiische Sprache: Versuch einer Grammatik der Sprache der Sanwich-Inseln*. 1837.
- Leben und Briefe*, edited by Julius Eduard Hitzig. 1839; revised edition, 1842.
- Adelbert von Chamisso und Helmina von Chézy: Bruchstücke ihres Briefwechsels*, edited by Julius Petersen and Helmuth Rogge. 1923.
- Editor, with Karl August Varnhagen von Ense, Musenalmanach auf das Jahr 1804 [1805, 1806]. 3 vols., 1804–06.
- Editor, with Gustav Schwab, Deutscher Musenalmanach für das Jahr 1833 [1834, 1835, 1836, 1837, 1838]. 6 vols, 1833–38.
- Editor, with Franz Gaudy, Deutscher Musenalmanach für das Jahr 1839. 1839.
- Editor and translator, with Franz Gaudy, Bérangers Lieder, by Pierre Jean de Béranger. 1838.

*

Bibliography: Bibliotheca Schlemihliana: Ein Verzeichnis der Ausgaben und Übersetzungen des Peter Schlemihl by Philipp Rath, 1919; Chamisso als Naturforscher: Eine Bibliographie by Günther Schmid, 1942.

Critical Studies: Chamisso: A Sketch of His Life and Work by Karl August Lentzner, 1893; A Poet Among Explorers: Chamisso in the South Seas by Niklaus R. Schweizer, 1973; Adelbert von Chamisso vu de France, 1905–1840: Genèse et réception d'une image by René-Marc Pille, 1993; Die Poesie des Fremden: Neue Einblicke in Adelbert von Chamissos "Peter Schlemihls wundersame Geschichte" by Alexandra Hildebrandt, 1998.

* * *

Forced into exile from France by the Revolution, Adelbert von Chamisso learned German in his teenage years, and fell under the spell of German Romanticism when he settled in Berlin in the early years of the 19th century. His verse reflects in various ways the burden of his cosmopolitan inheritance. Poems set in France include the "Das Schloss Boncourt" [Boncourt Castle], in which Chamisso accepts the ruin of his ancestral home and blesses the farmer who now tills the soil where the family residence once stood; its calm, conciliatory tone is in marked contrast to the impassioned idealism of earlier Romantics. Many of his poems retell legends that had recently been collected and anthologized by the Grimm brothers; in these "German sagas," Chamisso seems more intent on evoking situations with precision than on creating a nostalgic atmosphere. The emphasis is often on the pragmatic need to deal honestly and tolerantly with one's subordinates. Thus the giant's daughter in "Das Riesenspielzeug" [The Giant's Plaything] is rebuked by her father for treating the farmer she comes across as a mere toy; here the poet reinterprets the ancient saga in order to comment on some of the factors that brought down the aristocracy in France. In "Die Weiber von Winsperg" [The Wives of Winsperg], Emperor Conrad's advisers try in vain to make their master retract his generous promise to the women of Winsperg, and the poem ends with a dark hint that future rulers may turn out to be less honourable in dealing with their subjects. Sympathy with the poor and sick is vividly documented in many other works, such as "Die alte Waschfrau" [The Old Washerwoman] and "Der Invalid im Irrenhaus" [The Invalid Soldier in the Madhouse].

It was partly Chamisso's lightness of touch that made him more popular with the reading public of his time than many of his more literary contemporaries. A wry sense of humour comes through in many sketches of odd individuals and curious scenes from modern life. His poem "Das Dampfross" [The Steam Horse] is one of the earliest to deal with the potential of the railway. But he was especially interested in psychology, as is evidenced by his sensitive exploration of feminine aspirations in the cycle Frauen-Liebe und Leben (Women's Love and Life). His most harrowing investigation of the inner recesses of the human mind is found in the narrative poem "Salas y Gomez." Comparable in some ways to Coleridge's "Rime of the Ancient Mariner," it relates the experiences, visions, and hallucinations of a shipwrecked sailor who survives in complete solitude for nearly a century on a small island in the Pacific. This poem is again no ideal Romantic vision, but is firmly based on experiences which Chamisso gained on his journey around the world and constitutes a far from idyllic counterblast to the myth of Robinson Crusoe.

Chamisso's most celebrated prose narrative is the story Peter Schlemihls wundersame Geschichte (Peter Schlemihl), an account of a man who is persuaded to sell his shadow to a diabolical stranger. In some ways reminiscent of the Faust tradition, this story has been read both as an allegory of the artist as a social outcast and as an autobiographical statement by the deracinated poet. Eventually, the hero finds solace in travel and in the contemplation of Nature. Like Schlemihl, but unlike many Romantics whose tormented fantasies expressed frustrated longings for freedom, Chamisso was able to live out a vision of himself as a restless wanderer during his voyage around the world between 1815 and 1818. He showed a particular interest in the negative consequences of European colonization and was fascinated by the uncontacted tribes of the remote Marshall Islands. This journey provided Chamisso with unique insights into the biology, botany, and culture of the Pacific, many of which are recorded in the autobiographical Reise um die Welt (A Voyage Around the World). Back in Germany, he became increasingly active as a botanist, collecting and classifying more than 2,500 plant species, and eventually obtaining a research post in the Berlin botanical gardens.

Chamisso stands at the threshold between the dreamy world of Romanticism and the empirically determined attitudes that were to gain ground during the 19th century. All poetry, he once remarked, should be based on events that can be retold in the manner of a short story, and his own neatly constructed and clearly focused poems have little in common with the often formless outpourings of his predecessors. He was undoubtedly a victim of prejudice in a society where Germans saw him as French while the French treated him as a German. Protestants and Catholics, democrats and aristocrats viewed him with misgivings, but he survived the petty antagonisms of his contemporaries and gave his name to the Chamisso prize, which is reserved for distinguished non-German authors writing in German.

—Osman Durrani

See the essay on Peter Schlemihl.

CHAMOISEAU, Patrick

Born: Fort-de-France, Martinique, 3 December 1953. Education: Attended school in Fort-de-France; Attended university in Paris, where he studied sociology and law. Career: Trained as an educator, returned to Martinique after completing his studies in Paris, and worked as a journalist and political activist before achieving success as a writer. Awards: Prix Kléber Haedens for Chronique des sept misères, 1986; Prix de l'île Maurice for Chronique des sept misères, 1986; Grand Prix de la littérature de jeunesse for Au temps de l'antan, 1988; Prix Goncourt for Texaco, 1992; Grand Prix Carbet de la Caraïbe for Antan d'enfance, 1993.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

Manman Dio contre la Fée Carabosse. 1981.

Chronique des sept misères. 1986; as Chronicle of the Seven Sorrows, by Linda Coverdale, 1999.

Au temps de l'antan. 1988; as Creole Folktales [also known as Strange Words] translated by Linda Coverdale, 1997.

Solibo Magnifique. 1988; as Solibo Magnificent, translated by Rose-Myriam Réjouis and Val Vinokurov, 1998.

Une enfance créole I: Antan d'enfance. 1990; as Childhood, translated by Carol Volk, 1999.

Texaco. 1992; as Texaco, translated by Linda Coverdale, 1998.

Une enfance créole II: Chemin d'école. 1994; as School Days, translated by Linda Coverdale, 1998.

L'esclave vieil homme et le molosse. 1997.

Elmire des sept bonheurs. 1998; as Seven Dreams of Elmira, translated by Mark Polzotti, 1999.

Emerveilles. 1998.

Biblique des dernier gestes. 2001.

Other

Delgres: les Antilles sous Bonaparte. 1981.

Éloge de la créolité. 1989; with Jean Bernabé and Raphaël Confiant; as In Praise of Creoleness, translated by M.B. Taleb-Khyar, 1993.

Lettres Créoles, with Raphaël Confiant. 1991.

Martinique. 1991.

Écrire la parole de nuit: la nouvelle littérature antillaise. 1994.

Guyane, traces-mémoires du baigne. 1994.

Écrire en pays dominé. 1997.

Cases des îles Pays-mêlés. 2000.

Métiers créoles: tracées de mélancolie. 2001.

Livret des villes du deuxième monde. 2002.

*

Critical Studies: Decolonizing the Text: Glissantian Readings in Caribbean and African Literatures by Debra L. Anderson, 1995; French and West Indian by Richard D. Burton and Fred Reno, 1995; Afro Creole: Power, Opposition and Play in the Caribbean by Richard D. Burton, 1997; Islands and Exiles: The Creole Identities of Post/colonial Literature by Chris Bongie, 1998; Vers un concept de littérature nationale martiniquaise by Luciano C. Picanco, 2000; La créolité: espace de création by Delphine Perret, 2001.

* * *

Patrick Chamoiseau's work is most closely identified with the créolité movement that had its origins in his native island of Martinique. Proclaimed in the 1989 manifesto Éloge de la créolité (In Praise of Creoleness), which Chamoiseau co-authored with fellow Martinicans Jean Barnabé and Raphaël Confiant, créolité proclaimed the existence and specificity of Caribbean cultures, languages, and experience, and affirmed the need for a literature that both embraced and embodied this specificity. Highly influenced by the writings of Edouard Glissant, créolité in general and Chamoiseau's work, in particular, are predicated on the assumption that while Western, and particularly French, culture have contributed to the evolution of Caribbean/Martinican culture, the two are now distinct and quite often at odds. Moreover, Chamoiseau's texts, in particular, call, sometimes quite openly, for the separation of Martinique from France in order to preserve such specificity.

In many ways, In Praise of Creoleness functions as a guide to the rest of Chamoiseau's project. His novels, for example, take up the call by the manifesto to attempt to produce a literature that is truly Creole, that incorporates Creole oral forms, the specific oral history of Martinique, while at the same time reflecting the diverse influences that have formed Martinican culture. To that end, for example, Chamoiseau carefully inscribes the oral storyteller in all of his texts, as well as his own presence as writer, in an effort to consciously point to his own work as a hybrid form that embodies both the written and the oral.

Moreover, there is, in all of Chamoiseau's literary texts, a historical consciousness at work, that seeks quite consciously to create in literature the myths and histories of origin that Martinique lacks, but which are requisite to the formation of any national consciousness. Nowhere is this more apparent than in his third novel, Texaco, for which he won the prestigious Prix Goncourt. Texaco is the story of Marie-Sophie Laborieux, the founding mother of the township of Texaco, located on the outskirts of Fort-de-France. It is also, however, a sort of creation myth, or what Chamoiseau has elsewhere called a myth fondateur (founding myth) of Martinique itself. This myth is carefully woven through the oral narrative of Marie-Sophie's own life, and that of her father Esternome, whose combined experiences approximate the entire history of Martinique from slavery to departmentalization.

Beyond its mythical function, Texaco also embodies all of the other central aspects of Chamoiseau's literary work, such as the interweaving of Creole speech into the narrative, a play with written and oral forms, an exploration of the role of the oral and of storytelling in Martinican culture, a presentation of the various aspects of Martinican society, and an insistence on the need for Martinique to separate itself from the French mainland. All of these aspects can be found, in one form or another, in all of Chamoiseau's novels, including those that are formally autobiographical, such as Antan d'enfance (Childhood) and Chemin d'école (School Days).

Chamoiseau's simultaneous affirmation of the specificity of Martinique and of the need for political separation can also be found, sometimes implicitly, sometimes explicitly, in his works of non-fiction. In Écrire en pays dominé, for example, there is a fairly clear call for political and cultural separation that is evident even in the title. In Martinique, however, a sort of tour guide/introduction to the island that Chamoiseau wrote in 1991, such over political positioning is replaced by a more subtle insistence on Martinique as a pays (country) with a unique history, language, and culture.

It must be noted that although Chamoiseau is widely acclaimed, widely translated, and widely read in both French and English, his work is not without controversy. Edouard Glissant, for example, whom Chamoiseau claims as a sort of literary father, has, on occasion, openly distanced himself from the créolité movement, criticizing it for essentializing Martinican identity, and thereby replicating the closed logic of Western thought that Glissant himself rejects. Moreover, some literary scholars in both France and the United States have accused Chamoiseau of exoticizing his native Martinique and of creating a stereotyped, commercialized literary product that caters to that very French culture he criticizes in his work. Despite such critiques, however, Chamoiseau's literary reputation continues to grow, and to those who have read him widely, it is clear that he wrestles with these issues quite openly in his writing, and that he remains true to the project he has set himself, however controversial that project might be.

—Dayna Oscherwitz

CHAR, René (-Émile)

Born: L'Isle-sur-Sorgue, Vaucluse, France, 14 June 1907. Education: Educated at Lycée d'Avignon, baccalauréat; École-de-Commerce, Marseilles, 1925. Military Service: Served in the French artillery, Nîmes, 1927–28, and Alsace, 1939–40; served during the Resistance in France and North Africa: Médaille de la Résistance; Croix de Guerre. Family: Married 1) Georgette Goldstein in 1933 (divorced 1949); 2) Marie-Claude de Saint-Seine in 1987. Career: Moved to Paris in 1929 and met Aragon, Éluard, and Breton: associated with the Surrealists during the second period of the movement, 1930–34. Contributor to Le Surréalisme au service de la Révolution, 1930. Awards: Critics prize (France), 1966. Chevalier, Légion d'honneur. Member: Bavarian Academy; honorary member, Modern Language Association (United States). Died: 19 February 1988.

PUBLICATIONS

Collection

Selected Poems, edited and translated by Mary Ann Caws and Tina Jolas. 1992.

Verse

Les Cloches sur le coeur, illustrated by Louis Serrière-Renoux. 1928. Arsenal. 1929; as De la main à la main, 1930.

Artine. 1930; enlarged edition, as Artine et autres poèmes, 1967.

Ralentir travaux, with André Breton and Paul Éluard. 1930; revised edition, 1989.

Le Tombeau des secrets. 1930.

L'Action de la justice est éteinte. 1931.

Le Marteau sans maître, etchings by Miró. 1934; revised edition with Moulin premier, 1945.

Dépendance de l'adieu. 1936.

Placard pour un chemin des écoliers. 1937.

Dehors la nuit est gouvernée. 1938.

Seuls demeurent. 1945.

Premières alluvions. 1946.

Le Poème pulvérisé, illustrated by Braque. 1947.

Fureur et mystère. 1948; revised edition, 1962.

Fête des arbres et du chasseur. 1948.

- Les Matinaux*. 1950; revised edition, 1964; as The Dawn Breakers, edited and translated by Michael Worton, 1990.
- Art bref, suivi de Premières alluvions*. 1950.
- Amitié cachetée*. 1951.
- La Lettre I du dictionnaire*. 1951.
- Pourquoi le ciel se voûte-t-il?*. 1951.
- Quatre fascinants: La Minutieuse*. 1951.
- D'une sérénité crispée*. 1951.
- Poèmes*. 1951.
- La Paroi et la prairie*. 1952.
- Le Rempart de brindilles*. 1952.
- Homo poeticus*. 1953.
- Lettera amorosa*. 1953.
- Choix de poèmes*. 1953.
- A la santé du serpent*. 1954.
- Le Deuil des Nevons*. 1954.
- Poèmes des deux années 1953–1954*, illustrated by Giacometti. 1955.
- Chanson des étages*. 1955.
- La Bibliothèque est en feu*, etchings by Braque. 1956.
- Les Compagnons dans le jardin*. 1956.
- Hypnos Waking: Poems and Prose*, edited by Jackson Mathews, translated by Mathews, William Carlos Williams, and others. 1956.
- Jeanne qu'on brûla verte*. 1956.
- Pour nous, Rimbaud*. 1956.
- En trente-trois morceaux*. 1956.
- L'Abominable Homme des neiges*. 1957.
- La Bibliothèque est en feu et autres poèmes*. 1957.
- L'Une et l'autre*. 1957.
- Épitaphe*. 1957.
- De moment en moment*, engravings by Miró. 1957.
- Poèmes et prose choisis*. 1957.
- Le Poète au sortir des demeures*. 1957.
- Rengain d'Odin le Roc*. 1957.
- Élizabeth, petite fille*. 1958.
- Cinq poésies en hommage à Georges Braque*. 1958.
- L'Escalier de Flore*, illustrated by Braque. 1958.
- La Faux relevée*. 1959.
- Nous avons* (prose poem), illustrated by Miró. 1959.
- L'Allégresse*. 1960.
- Anthologie*. 1960; revised edition as Anthologie 1934–1969, 1970.
- Les Dentelles de Montmirail*. 1960.
- Deux poèmes*, with Paul Éluard. 1960.
- Éros suspendu*. 1960.
- Pourquoi la journée vole*. 1960.
- Le Rebanque*. 1960.
- L'Inclémence lointaine* (selection). 1961.
- L'Issue*. 1961.
- La Montée de la nuit*. 1961.
- La Parole en archipel*. 1962.
- Deux poèmes*. 1963.
- Impressions anciennes*. 1964.
- Commune présence* (anthology). 1964; revised edition, 1978.
- L'An 1964*. 1964.
- L'Âge cassant*. 1965.
- La Provence, point Oméga*. 1965.
- Retour amont*, illustrated by Giacometti. 1966.
- Le Terme épars*. 1966.
- Les Transparents*. 1967.
- Dans la pluie giboyeuse*. 1968.
- Le Chien de coeur*. 1969; as The Dog of Hearts, translated by Paul Mann, 1973.
- Dent prompte*, illustrated by Max Ernst. 1969.
- L'Effroi la joie*. 1971.
- Le Nu perdu*. 1971.
- La Nuit talismanique*. 1972; revised edition, 1983.
- Le Monde de l'art n'est pas le monde du pardon*. 1974.
- Contre une maison sèche*. 1975.
- Aromates chasseurs*. 1975.
- Faire du chemin avec. . .* 1976.
- Poems*, edited and translated by Mary Ann Caws and Jonathan Griffin. 1976.
- Chants de la Balandrame 1975–1977*. 1977.
- Tous partis!*. 1978.
- Fenêtres dormantes et porte sur le toit*. 1979.
- D'Ailleurs*. 1981.
- Joyeuse*. 1981.
- La Condamnée*. 1982.
- Loin de nos cendres*. 1982.
- Los Voisinages de Van Gogh*. 1985.
- Le Gisant mis en lumière*. 1987.
- Éloge d'une soupçonnée*. 1988.

Plays

- La Conjuración* (ballet). 1947.
- Claire*. 1949.
- Le Soleil des eaux*. 1951.
- Trois coups sous les arbres: Théâtre saisonnier* (includes Sur les hauteurs, L'Abominable Homme des neiges; Claire; Le Soleil des eaux; L'Homme qui marchait dans un rayon de soleil; La Conjuración). 1967.

Other

- Moulin premier*. 1936.
- Feuillets d'Hypnos* (war journal). 1946; as Leaves of Hypnos, translated by Cid Corman, 1973.
- Arrière-histoire de "Poème pulvérisé."* 1953.
- Recherche de la base et du sommet; Pauvreté et privilège* (essays). 1955; revised edition, 1965.
- Arthur Rimbaud*. 1957.
- Le Dernier Couac*. 1958.
- Sur la poésie*. 1958.
- Aux riverains de la Sorgue*. 1959.
- Flux de l'aimant*. 1964.
- La Postérité du soleil*, with Camus. 1965.
- L'Endurance de la pensée*, with Martin Heidegger. 1968.
- L'Égalité des jours heureux*. 1970.
- Boyan sculpteur*. 1971.
- Picasso sous les vents étésiens*. 1973.
- Le Monde de l'art n'est pas le monde du pardon*. 1974.
- Sur la poésie 1936–1974*. 1974.
- Oeuvres complètes*. 1983.
- Correspondance 1935–1970*, edited by Jeannine Baude. 1993.
- Translator, Le Bleu de l'aile, by Tiggie Ghika. 1948.
- Translator (into English), Le Réveil et les orchidées, by Théodore Roethke. In Preuves, 1959.
- Translator, with Tina Jolas, La Planche de vivre: Poésies. 1981.

*

Bibliography: Bibliographie des oeuvres de Char de 1928 à 1963 by Pierre André Benoit, 1964.

Critical Studies: René Char by Pierre Guerre, 1961; René Char issue of L'Arc, 1963; The Poetry and Poetics of René Char by Virginia La Charité, 1968; René Char issue of Liberté, 1968; René Char issue of L'Herne, 1971; The Presence of René Char, 1976, and Char, 1977, both by Mary Ann Caws; Worlds Apart: Structural Parallels in the Poetry of Paul Valéry, Saint-John Perse, Benjamin Péret, and René Char by Elizabeth Jackson, 1976; René Char issue of World Literature Today, 1977; Char: The Myth and the Poem by James R. Lawler, 1978; Orien Resurgent. René Char: Poet of Presence by Mechthild Cranston, 1979; Lightning: The Poetry of Char by Nancy Kline Piore, 1981; René Char issue of Sud, 1984; La Poésie de René Char by Jean-Claude Mathieu, 2 vols., 1984–85; René Char (includes bibliography) by Christine Dupouy, 1987; René Char issue of Europe, 1988; René Char: Traces by Philippe Castellin, 1989; René Char: faire du chemin avec by Marie-Claude Billet, 1990; René Char: Lea Dernières Années by Michael Bishop, 1990; René Char by Eric Marty, 1990; Lectures de René Char edited by Paul Smith and Tineke Kingma, 1990; René Char et ses poèmes by Paul Veyne, 1991; Figuring Things: Char, Ponge, and Poetry in the Twentieth Century edited by Charles D. Minahen, 1994.

* * *

If being is indeed a storehouse of insurgent impulse, as the title of one of René Char's earliest works, Arsenal, would seem to imply, the poet's ceaseless task is to stir, channel, and articulate such impulse as unflinching and passionate response to the surrounding world and to one's condition in it. Char's is, from the beginning, a metaphysical vision of "man massacred and yet victorious," of defeat breeding new aspiration, of suffering mysteriously shaping unexpected affirmation. So Char remains the protector of being's "infinite faces," of being at once exultant and weak, ferocious and muted, emphatic and evasive, and the poem, set against the abundant forces of nature, becomes the very birthplace of an ungleamed and myriad truth by which, once again, we may begin to know ourselves and, consequently, gather strength.

The Surrealist movement provided Char with initial models of expression and disclosure, but it was his experience of war, accompanied by a purposeful self-distancing from Surrealism, that determined the more evaluative and succinct nature of his writing. From a self-willed event, the poet is forced to turn to the immediate import of external event. From the teeming images upheld in Le Marteau sans maître [The Hammer Without a Master] that bespeak a linguistic unfettering of the unconscious, he progresses, through Dehors la nuit est gouvernée [Outside the Night Is Governed], to a broader, more universal summoning that embraces the real as a source not only of present oppression and limitation, but also of undying breadth and possibility. "We oppose consciousness of the event to the gratuitous," he declares in his wartime journal included in Fureur et mystère [Fury and Mystery], a stunning volume containing some of Char's most powerful and poignant writings. Playful outpouring yields to urgent response; oneiric indulgence is indeed obliterated by the impact of many brutish and unpardonable acts. The expansive majesty of the poem is replaced by dense aphorisms, clustered shards of reflection that express, in the very face of death and destruction, the enduring desire for a dignified and resistant whole. Through brevity, the poet avoids useless obsession. Through and with his other, wedded at the same time to an earthy locality of place in his native Provence, he comes to a true knowledge of his condition as man and his function as poet.

It is his tremendous regard for the other that allows Char a writing ever practised and diversified beyond the narrow constraints of self. While such figures as Heraclitus and Georges de La Tour, Nietzsche and Heidegger, remain central to his development as a poet and thinker, many are those who touch him and spawn in his work an arterial complexity of connection shunning all boundaries. "Moving, horrible, exquisite earth and heterogeneous human condition seize upon each other and qualify each other mutually," he declares. The poem is the attempted sum of these (inter)relations mingling being and nature, for though the latter, divided within, also prove infinitely warring in their differences without, they remain wondrously bound together as an inexhaustible whole. Thus Char draws, from a language at once shared and intensely private, the revelation of a unity fraught with contradiction, but a unity nevertheless—endlessly emergent, furiously willed. Enlightened by the will of others, dependent in many ways on past and present models of ardent literary and artistic endeavour, he shapes his writing as a coercive act that seeks, not least through violence, ever increased measures of inclusion. So, onwards, from Les Matinaux (The Dawn Breakers) through, for example, Le Nu perdu [The Lost Nude] and Aromates chasseurs [Hunting Aromatics] to Les Voisinages de Van Gogh [The Vicinities of Van Gogh] and Éloge d'une soupçonnée [Praise for a Suspected One], Char imperatively restakes and redefines the shifting ground of our existence, as others have previously viewed it and as many to come, through furious toil, will continue to transform and secure it.

There can be no end to such an effort, no final (re)solution, for living, as Char teaches us, is a constant becoming. From the prehistoric visions of the Lascaux paintings to the fierce fragility of Vincent Van Gogh, from the timeless myth of Orion resurgent to the particular predicament of those caught in war, a vast array of references bear witness to a shared condition that escapes single definition but lies ever-changing around and within us, demanding constant reacquaintance. Thus Char's work encourages less familiarization than pursuit; it does not flatter immediate comprehension but, rather, a searching poised on the threshold of things dawning and passing; it rejects mastery in the hope of ample and passionate exchange. The hunter, a recurrent figure in this poetry, does not seek a mere victim in the hunted but a joining that will fuel new desire. His embrace of the other, as apparent to Char in a Lascaux painting, is also the accepted dissolution of an old self. Each meeting is never one of simple possession but enacts simultaneous degrees of communion and erosion, of tolerance and severance, of triumph and Less. Indeed, from and beyond such an active and indisputable erotic grappling, new appetite and vigour are born.

Chaos and dislocation, though ineradicable, are countered for Char by the promise of an eternal remaking that is ever the gift of being and nature, of being with nature, and it is the exploration of this gift that he obstinately and durably charts for us. His poetry thus remains an opening for desire and hope, its message never simple since it pleads not only for what we have lost and forgotten but for what, through combined and renewed effort, we must yet come to welcome, celebrate, and magnanimously release.

—Michael Brophy

CHATEAUBRIAND, (François-René August), Vicomte de

Born: Saint-Malo, France, 4 September 1768. Education: Educated at schools in Saint-Malo and Dol, 1777–81; Collège de Rennes, 1781–83; Collège de Dinan, 1783–84. Family: Married Céleste Buisson de la Vigne in 1792. Career: Entered the army, 1786; visited America, 1791; served in the Prussian army briefly, 1792; taught French in Beccles and Bungay, Suffolk, 1792–1800; returned to France and joined state service: secretary to Embassy in Rome, 1803; appointed Chargé d’Affaires to Swiss canton of Valais, 1804, but resigned, 1804; appointed Minister of Interior of Government in exile, 1815, and Ambassador to Sweden (not taken up); honorary Minister of State, 1815–16; made Peer of France, 1815, and President of Electoral College of Orleans, 1815; envoy extraordinary to Berlin, 1821; ambassador to London, 1822; attended Congress of Verona, 1822; minister of Foreign Affairs, 1823; ambassador to Rome, 1828. Editor, Le Mercure, 1800s. Many women friends, especially Mme Récamier. Member: Academie française, 1815. Died: 4 July 1848.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Oeuvres complètes. 31 vols., 1826–31, and later revised editions.
Oeuvres romanesques et voyages, edited by Maurice Regard. 2 vols., 1969.

Fiction

Atala; ou, Les Amours de deux sauvages dans le désert. 1801; edited by J.M. Gautier, 1973; as Atala, translated anonymously, 1825; also translated by James Spence Harry, 1867; Irving Putter, 1952; Walter J. Cobb, 1962; Rayner Heppenstall, 1965.
René; ou, Les Effets des passions. 1802; edited by Armand Weil, 1947, also edited by J.M. Gautier, 1970; as René: A Tale, translated anonymously, 1813; also translated by Irving Putter, 1952; Rayner Heppenstall, 1965.
Les Martyrs; ou, Le Triomphe de la religion chrétienne. 1809; original version edited by B. d’Andlau, 1951; as The Martyrs, translated by W. Joseph Walter, 1812, revised translation by O.W. Wight, 1859; The Two Martyrs, translated by Walter, 1819.
Les Aventures du dernier Abencérage, in Oeuvres complètes. 1826; as Aben-Hamet, the Last of the Abencérages, translated, 1826; as The Adventures of the Last of the Abencérages, translated by H.W. Carter, 1870; as The Last Abencerage, translated by Edith M. Nuttall, 1922.
Les Natchez. 1827; edited by G. Chinard, 1932; as The Natchez, translated anonymously, 1827.

Other

Essai historique, politique, et moral sur les révolutions anciennes et modernes. 1797; edited by Maurice Regard, 1978.
Le Génie du christianisme; ou, Beautés de la religion chrétienne. 5 vols., 1802; edited by Maurice Regard, 1978; as The Genius of Christianity, translated by Charles I. White, 1802; also translated by Rev. E. O’Donnell, 1854; as The Beauties of Christianity, 3 vols., translated by Frederic Shoberl, 1813.

Itinéraire de Paris à Jérusalem et de Jérusalem à Paris. 3 vols., 1811; as Travels in Greece, Palestine, Egypt, and Barbary, translated by Frederic Shoberl, 2 vols., 1812.
De Buonaparte et des Bourbons. 1814.
Réflexions politiques. 1814; as Political Reflections, translated anonymously, 1814.
Mélanges de politique. 2 vols., 1816.
De la monarchie selon la charte. 1816; as The Monarchy According to the Charter, translated anonymously, 1816.
Mémoires, lettres, et pièces authentiques touchant la vie et la mort du duc de Berry. 1820.
Maison de France; ou, Recueil de pièces relatives à la légitimité et à la famille royale. 2 vols., 1825.
Voyage en Amérique, Voyage en Italie. 2 vols., 1827; as Travels in America and Italy, translated anonymously, 2 vols., 1828.
Mélanges et poésies. 1828.
Études ou discours historiques sur la chute de l’empire romain, la naissance et les progrès du christianisme, et l’invasion des barbares. 4 vols., 1831.
Mémoires sur la captivité de Mme la duchesse de Berry. 1833.
La Vie de Rancé. 1844; edited by Fernand Letessier, 1955.
Les Mémoires d’outre-tombe. 12 vols., 1849–50; edited by Maurice Levaillant and Georges Moulinier, 2 vols., 1951; as Memoirs, translated anonymously, 3 vols., 1848; complete version, 1902; selections edited and translated by Robert Baldick, 1961.
Souvenirs d’enfance et de jeunesse. 1874.
Correspondance générale, edited by Louis Thomas. 5 vols., 1912–24.
Le Roman de l’occitanienne et de Chateaubriand (letters). 1925.
Lettres à la comtesse de Castellane. 1927.
Lettres à Mme. Récamier pendant son ambassade à Rome, edited by Emmanuel Beau de Loménie. 1929.
Lettres à Mine Récamier, edited by Maurice Levaillant. 1951.
Mémoires de ma vie: Manuscrit de 1826, edited by J.M. Gautier. 1976.
Correspondance générale, edited by Pierre Riberette. 1977–.
Translator, Le Paradis perdu, by Milton. 2 vols., 1836.

*

Bibliography: Bibliographie de la critique sur François-René de Chateaubriand: 1801–1986 by Pierre H. and Ann Dubé, 1988.

Critical Studies: Société Chateaubriand Bulletin, 1930–; Chateaubriand, Poet, Statesman, and Lover by André Maurois, 1938; Chateaubriand: A Biography by Joan Evans, 1939; Chateaubriand by Friedrich Sieburg, translated by Violet M. Macdonald, 1961; Chateaubriand by Richard Switzer, 1971; Chateaubriand: A Biography by George D. Painter, vol. 1, 1977; Chateaubriand: Composition, Imagination, and Poetry by Charles A. Porter, 1978; Back to the Garden: Chateaubriand, Senancour and Constant by Michael J. Call, 1988; Chateaubriand, Atala and René by Colin Smethurst, 1995; One Hundred Years of Melancholy by Naomi Schor, 1996; Les vanités de Chateaubriand by Agnès Verlet, 2001.

* * *

Chateaubriand’s dozen and a half major works and copious tracts, discourses, and parliamentary opinions appeared during that most political half century beginning with the Revolution and ending with the fall of the July Monarchy. His most original narratives portray the emotions and yearnings of the Romantic self amid historical European landscapes or against the background of the North American wilderness. In his vigorous and wide-ranging polemical writings he argues the Christian and royalist cause with sarcasm and an idealistic vision. His major literary distinction has been as a stylist.

Not all Chateaubriand's narrative writings are frankly autobiographical. The figure of the brooding, proud, aristocratic European in the post-Revolutionary world, partially discernable in the Native American, Chactas of Atala and Les Natchez (The Natchez), appears more clearly as the protagonist of Chateaubriand's best-known story, René, confession of a self-exiled Frenchman in the American forest in the early 18th century. The life of the 17th-century Trappist serves in the late La Vie de Rancé as the locus of curious digressions about both Chateaubriand and 17th-century France. Itinéraire de Paris à Jérusalem et de Jérusalem à Paris (Travels in Greece, Palestine, Egypt, and Barbary) is Chateaubriand's first autobiographical book. His most important work, composed and often refashioned over 30 years into the 1840s, is his autobiography, Les Mémoires d'outre-tombe (Memoirs).

Much of the charm of Chateaubriand's narratives comes from evocative descriptions and the metaphors and complex rhythms of his prose. His descriptions of America in the "Indian" works, and of his childhood Brittany, Rome, the Near East in the autobiographical writings, present a nearly seamless web of memories of earlier travel accounts, his own personal observation, and, no doubt, brilliant invention: scholars will continue to differ over how much of the America he described he ever actually saw. His descriptive prose, characterized by visual detail and suggestive, often exotic names, is arranged in rhythmically ordered sentences and chapters. His polemical writings scan more like oratory; there too nouns and figures of speech focus the meaning. The Château de Chambord, with all its chimneys, is personified in the La Vie de Rancé as "une femme dont le vent aurait soufflé en l'air la chevelure" ("a woman with wind-blown hair"); in 1815 in Louis XVIII's antechamber he sees a "vision infernale": Talleyrand supported by Fouché, "le vice appuyé sur le bras du crime" ("vice leaning on the arm of crime").

The force of his narratives stems from their subtle analysis of the difficulties of modern life: how to be both an aristocrat and a leader in the new democratic world, appreciate the beauties of religion in the age of science, live true to one's own sensibilities without shirking one's duties toward others. Unfortunately the autobiography—though not the autobiographical fictions—is weakened by Chateaubriand's determination to hide almost everything intimate, including his many passionate liaisons. The strength of the polemical writings lies in their juxtaposition of noble themes—fidelity, honor, national pride—with a quick, savage denunciation of posturing and opportunism.

Abundance characterizes his rhetoric; his writing displays ease and vigour in invention, high colour, passion and sentiment. Admiration, anger, scorn, enthusiasm animate sometimes flowing, sometimes cadenced and elaborate prose. The criticism though often harsh is never mean, the praise though sentimental is grand, and the ever-present portrait of the self is pompous, often insincere, indiscreetly long—and lucid, probing, subtle, and finally very moving.

—Charles A. Porter

See the essays on Memoirs and René.

CHEKHOV, Anton (Pavlovich)

Born: Taganrog, Russia, 17 January 1860. Education: Educated at a school for Greek boys, Taganrog, 1867–68; Taganrog grammar school, 1868–79; Moscow University Medical School, 1879–84, graduated as doctor, 1884. Family: Married the actress Olga Knipper in 1901. Career: Practising doctor in Moscow, 1884–92, Melikhovo, 1892–99, and in Yalta after 1899. Freelance writer while still in medical school, especially for humorous magazines, and later for serious ones; travelled to Sakhalin Island, 1890; suffered severe haemorrhage of the lungs, 1897. Awards: Pushkin prize, 1888. Member: Imperial Academy of Sciences, 1900 (resigned 1902). Died: 2 July 1904.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Plays, translated by Marian Fell. 1912.

Plays, translated by Julius West. 1916.

The Cherry Orchard and Other Plays, translated by Constance Garnett. 1923.

Plays, translated by Constance Garnett. 1929; retitled Nine Plays, 1946.

Polnoe sobranie sochinenii i pisem [Complete Works and Letters], edited by S.D. Balukhatyi and others. 20 vols., 1944–51; new edition in 30 vols., 1974–83.

The Brute and Other Farces, translated by Eric Bentley and Theodore Hoffman. 1958.

Plays, translated by Elisaveta Fen. 1959.

Six Plays, translated by Robert Corrigan. 1962.

The Oxford Chekhov, edited and translated by Ronald Hingley. 9 vols., 1964–80; excerpts as Seven Stories, 1974; Eleven Stories, 1975; Five Major Plays, 1977; The Russian Master and Other Stories, 1984; Ward Number Six and Other Stories, 1988; A Woman's Kingdom and Other Stories, 1989; The Princess and Other Stories, 1990; The Steppe and Other Stories, 1991.

The Major Plays, translated by Ann Dunnigan. 1964.

Ten Early Plays, translated by Alex Szogyi. 1965.

Four Plays, translated by David Magarshack. 1969.

Plays, edited and translated by Eugene K. Bristow. 1977.

The Early Stories 1883–1888, edited and translated by Patrick Miles and Harvey Pitcher. 1982.

Plays, translated by Michael Frayn. 1988.

The Sneeze: Plays and Stories, translated by Michael Frayn. 1989.

Chekhov: The Major Plays, translated by Jean-Claude van Itallie. 1994.

Chekhov's Major Plays: Ivanov, The Seagull, Uncle Vanya, and The Three Sisters, translated by Karl Kramer and Margaret Booker. 1996.

Plays

O vrede tabaka, in Peterburgskaia gazeta [Petersburg Gazette]. 1886; several revisions: final version in Sobranie sochinenii, 1903; as On the Harmfulness of Tobacco, translated by Constance Garnett, in Plays, 1935; as The Harmfulness of Tobacco, translated by Eric Bentley and Theodore Hoffman, in The Brute and Other Farces, 1958; as Smoking Is Bad for You, translated by Ronald Hingley, in

- The Oxford Chekhov*, 1968; as On the Injurious Effects of Tobacco, translated by Eugene K. Bristow, in Plays, 1977.
- Ivanov* (produced 1887; revised version, produced 1889). In P'esy, 1897; as Ivanov, translated by Marian Fell, in Plays, 1912; numerous subsequent translations including by Elisaveta Fen, in Three Plays, 1951; Robert Corrigan, in Six Plays of Chekhov, 1962; Alex Szogyi, in Ten Early Plays, 1965; David Magarshack, 1966; Ariadne Nicolaeff, 1966; Ronald Hingley, in The Oxford Chekhov, 1967; as Ivanov: A Play in Four Acts by David Hare, 1997.
- Lebedinaia pesnia* (produced 1888). In P'esy, 1897; as Swan Song, translated by Marian Fell, in Plays, 1912; also translated by Theodore Hoffman, in The Brute and Other Farces, 1958; Ronald Hingley, in The Oxford Chekhov, 1968; Alex Szogyi, in Ten Early Plays, 1965.
- Medved'* (produced 1888). In Novoe vremia [New Time], 1888; as The Bear, translated by Julius West, in Plays, 1916; also translated by Constance Garnett, in The Cherry Orchard and Other Plays, 1923; Elisaveta Fen, in Plays, 1959; Ronald Hingley, in The Oxford Chekhov, 1968; as The Boor, 1915; as The Brute, translated by Theodore Hoffman, in The Brute and Other Farces, 1958.
- Leshii* (produced 1889). 1890; as The Wood Demon, in Calender of Modern Letters, 2, 1925–26; also translated by Robert Corrigan, in Six Plays of Chekhov, 1962; Ronald Hingley, in The Oxford Chekhov, 1964; Alex Szogyi, in Ten Early Plays, 1965.
- Predlozhenie* (produced 1889). 1889; as A Marriage Proposal, 1914; also translated by Theodore Hoffman, in The Brute and Other Farces, 1958; as The Proposal, translated by Julius West, in Plays, 1916; also translated by Constance Garnett, in The Cherry Orchard and Other Plays, 1923; Elisaveta Fen, in Plays, 1959; Ronald Hingley, in The Oxford Chekhov, 1968; Alex Szogyi, in Ten Early Plays, 1965.
- Tragik ponevole* (produced 1889). 1890; as A Tragedian in Spite of Himself, translated by Julius West, in Plays, 1916; as The Reluctant Tragedian, translated by Alex Szogyi, in Ten Early Plays, 1965; as A Tragic Role, translated by Ronald Hingley, in The Oxford Chekhov, 1968.
- Svad'ba* (produced 1900). 1889; as The Wedding, translated by Julius West, in Plays, 1916; also translated by Constance Garnett, in Plays, 1929; Ronald Hingley, in The Oxford Chekhov, 1968; Alex Szogyi, in Ten Early Plays, 1965; as A Wedding, translated by Theodore Hoffman, in The Brute and Other Farces, 1958.
- Iubilei* (produced 1900). 1892; as The Anniversary, translated by Julius West, in Plays, 1916; also translated by Constance Garnett, in Plays, 1929; Ronald Hingley, in The Oxford Chekhov, 1968; Alex Szogyi, in Ten Early Plays, 1965; as A Jubilee, translated by Elisaveta Fen, in The Seagull and Other Plays, 1953; as The Celebration, translated by Theodore Hoffman, in The Brute and Other Farces, 1958.
- Chaika* (produced 1896). In P'esy, 1897; revised version (produced 1898), 1901; as The Sea Gull, translated by Marian Fell, in Plays, 1912; numerous subsequent translations including by Constance Garnett, in The Cherry Orchard and Other Plays, 1923; Stark Young, 1939; Robert Corrigan, in Six Plays of Chekhov, 1962; Fred Eisemann, 1965; David Magarshack, in Four Plays, 1969; Lawrence Senelick, 1977; Milton Ehre, in Chekhov for the Stage, 1992; as The Seagull, translated by Elisaveta Fen, in Plays, 1959; also translated by Ronald Hingley, in The Oxford Chekhov, 1967; Eugene K. Bristow, in Plays, 1977; John-Claude von Italie, 1977; David French, 1978; Tania Alexander and Charles Sturridge, 1986; Michael Frayn, 1986; Pam Gems 1994; Tom Stoppard, 1997.
- Diadia Vania* (produced 1897). In P'esy, 1897; as Uncle Vanya, translated by Marian Fell, in Plays, 1912; numerous subsequent translations including by Jennie Covan, 1922; Constance Garnett, in The Cherry Orchard and Other Plays, 1923; Rose Caylor, 1930; Elisaveta Fen, in The Seagull and Other Plays, 1953; Stark Young, 1956; David Magarshack, in The Storm and Other Russian Plays, 1960; Robert Corrigan, in Six Plays of Chekhov, 1962; Ronald Hingley, in The Oxford Chekhov, 1964; Eugene K. Bristow, in Plays, 1977; Michael Frayn, 1987; Milton Ehre, in Chekhov for the Stage, 1992; as August: An Adaptation of Chekhov's Uncle Vanya by Julian Mitchell, 1994; as Uncle Vanya: A Version of the Play by Anton Chekhov by Brian Friel, 1998.
- Tri sestry* (produced 1901). 1901; as The Three Sisters, translated by Julius West, in Plays, 1916; numerous subsequent translations including by Robert Corrigan, in Six Plays of Chekhov, 1962; David Magarshack, in Four Plays, 1969; Eugene K. Bristow, in Plays, 1977; Milton Ehre, in Chekhov for the Stage, 1992; as Three Sisters, translated by Constance Garnett, in Plays, 1929; Elisaveta Fen, in Three Plays, 1951; Ronald Hingley, in The Oxford Chekhov, 1964; Randall Jarrell, 1969; Michael Frayn, 1983; Stephen Mulrine, 1994.
- Vishnevyyi sad* (produced 1904). 1904; as The Cherry Orchard, translated by M. Mandell, 1908; numerous subsequent translations including by Julius West, in Plays, 1916; Constance Garnett, 1923; Jenny Covan, 1923; C.C. Daniels, and G.R. Noyes, in Masterpieces of the Russian Drama, edited by Noyes, 1933; Hubert Butler, 1934; S.S. Kotelianskii, 1940; Stark Young, 1947; Elisaveta Fen, in Three Plays, 1951; Ronald Hingley, in The Oxford Chekhov, 1964; Tyrone Guthrie and Leonis Kipnis, 1965; David Magarshack, in Four Plays, 1969; Eugene K. Bristow, in Plays, 1977; Laurence Senelick, 1977; Michael Frayn, 1978; Jean-Claude von Italie, 1979; Milton Ehre, in Chekhov for the Stage, 1992; adapted by Robert Brustein, translated by George Calderon, 1996; version by Pam Gems, translated by Tania Alexander, 1996; as The Cherry Orchard: A Comedy, version by Peter Gill, translated by Ted Braun, 1995.
- Neizdannaiia p'esa*, edited by N.F. Belchikov. 1923; as That Worthless Fellow Platonov, 1930; as Don Juan (in the Russian Manner), translated by Basil Ashmore, 1952; as Platonov, translated by David Magarshack, 1964, translated by Ronald Hingley, in The Oxford Chekhov, 1967; as Wild Honey, translated by Michael Frayn, 1984; also translated by Susan Coyne and Laszlo Marton, 2001.
- Tatiana Repina*, in Polnoe sobranie sochinenii i pisem. 1944–51; as Tatyana Repin, translated by S.S. Kotelianskii, in Literary and Theatrical Reminiscences, 1927; also translated by Ronald Hingley, in The Oxford Chekhov, 1968.
- Na bolshoi doroge*, in Polnoe sobranie sochinenii i pisem. 1944–51; as On the Highway, in Drama, 22, 1916; as On the High Road, translated by Julius West, in Plays, 1916; also translated by Constance Garnett, in Plays, 1929; Ronald Hingley, in The Oxford Chekhov, 1968; Alex Szogyi, in Ten Early Plays, 1965.

Fiction

- Pestrye rasskazy* [Motley Tales]. 1886; revised edition, 1891; in Motley Tales and a Play, translated by Constance Garnett and Vlada Chernomordik, 1998.
- Vsumerkakh* [In the Twilight]. 1887.
- Nevinnye rechi* [Innocent Tales]. 1887.
- Rasskazy* [Tales]. 1889.
- Khmurye liudi* [Gloomy People]. 1890.
- Duel* [The Duel]. 1892.
- Palata No. 6* [Ward No. 6]. 1893.
- Tales*, translated by Constance Garnett. 13 vols., 1916–22.
- The Unknown Chekhov: Stories and Other Writings Hitherto Untranslated*, edited by Avrahm Yarmolinsky. 1954.
- Early Stories*, translated by Nora Gottlieb. 1960.
- The Image of Chekhov* (selected stories), translated by Robert Payne. 1963.
- The Lady with Lapdog and Other Stories*, translated by David Magarshack. 1964.
- Chuckle with Chekhov: A Selection of Comic Stories*, translated by Harvey Pitcher. 1975.
- The Kiss and Other Stories*, translated by Ronald Wilks. 1982.
- The Duel and Other Stories*, translated by Ronald Wilks. 1984.
- The Party and Other Stories*, translated by Ronald Wilks. 1985.
- The Black Monk and Other Stories*, translated by Alan Sutton. 1985.
- The Fiancée and Other Stories*, translated by Ronald Wilks. 1986.
- Longer Stories from the Last Decade*, translated by Constance Garnett. 1994.
- Kashtanka*, adapted by Ronald Meyer. 1995.
- Intrigues: Nine Stories*, translated by Peter Constantine. 1997.
- The Undiscovered Chekhov: Thirty-eight New Stories*, translated by Peter Constantine, 1998.

Other

- Ostrov Sakhalin* [Sakhalin Island]. 1895; as The Island: A Journey to Sakhalin, translated by Luba and Michael Terpak, 1967; as A Journey to Sakhalin, translated by Brian Reeve, 1993.
- Sobranie sochinenii* [Collected Works]. 11 vols., 1899–1906.
- Pis'ma* [Letters]. 1909; Sobranie pis'ma, 1910; Pis'ma, 1912–16, and later editions.
- Zapisnye knizhki*. 1914; as The Note-Books, translated by S.S. Kotelianskii and Leonard Woolf, 1921.
- Letters to Olga Knipper*. 1925.
- Literary and Theatrical Reminiscences*, edited by S.S. Kotelianskii. 1927.
- Personal Papers*. 1948.
- Selected Letters*, edited by Lillian Hellman. 1955.
- Anton Chekhov's Life and Thought: Selected Letters and Commentary*, edited by Simon Karlinsky, translated by Michael Henry Heim. 1973.
- A Life in Letters*, edited and translated by Gordon McVay. 1994.
- Dear Writer—Dear Actress—: The Love Letters of Olga Knipper and Anton Chekhov*, translated and edited by Jean Benedetti, 1996.

*

by and about Him 1949–60 by Rissa Yachnin, 1960; Anton Chekhov: A Reference Guide to Literature by K.A. Lantz, 1985; Chekhov Bibliography: Works in English by and about Anton Chekhov, 1985, and Chekhov Criticism: 1880 Through 1986, 1989, both by Charles W. Meister; Anton Chekhov Rediscovered: A Collection of New Studies with a Comprehensive Bibliography edited by Savely Senderovich and Munir Sendich, 1987.

Critical Studies: Anton Chekhov: A Critical Study by William Gerhardie, 1923, revised edition, 1972; Chekhov: A Biographical and Critical Study, 1950, revised edition, 1966, and A New Life of Anton Chekhov, 1976, both by Ronald Hingley; Chekhov: A Life, 1953, Chekhov the Dramatist, 1960, and The Real Chekhov: An Introduction to Chekhov's Last Plays, 1972, all by David Magarshack; Anton Chekhov by Walter Horace Bruford, 1957; Tchekov, the Man by Beatrice Saunders, 1960; Chekhov: A Biography by Ernest J. Simmons, 1962; The Breaking String: The Plays of Anton Chekhov by Maurice Valency, 1966; Chekhov and His Prose by Thomas Winner, 1966; Chekhov: A Collection of Critical Essays edited by Robert Louis Jackson, 1967; Anton Chekhov by J.B. Priestley, 1970; Chekhov in Performance: A Commentary on the Major Plays by J.L. Styán, 1971; The Chekhov Play: A New Interpretation by Harvey Pitcher, 1973; Chekhov: The Evolution of His Art by Donald Rayfield, 1975; Chekhov: A Study of the Major Stories and Plays by Beverly Hahn, 1977; On the Theory of Descriptive Poetics: Anton Chekhov as Storyteller and Playwright by Jan van der Eng, 1978; Chekhov as Viewed by His Russian Literary Contemporaries by Henry Urbanski, 1979; Chekhov: A Structuralist Study by John Tulloch, 1980; Chekhov's Great Plays: A Critical Anthology edited by Jean P. Barricelli, 1981; Chekhov: The Critical Heritage edited by Victor Emeljanow, 1981; Anton Chekhov by Irina Kirk, 1981; Chekhov and the Vaudeville: A Study of Chekhov's One-Act Plays, 1982, and Chekhov in Performance in Russia and Soviet Russia, 1984, both by Vera Gottlieb; Chekhov's Art: A Stylistic Analysis by Peter M. Bitsilli, 1983; Chekhov's Poetics by Aleksandr Pavlovich Chudakov, 1983; Chekhov: A Study of the Four Major Plays by Richard Peace, 1983; Chekhov: New Perspectives edited by René and Nonna D. Wellek, 1984; A Chekhov Companion edited by Toby W. Clyman, 1985; Anton Chekhov by Laurence Senelick, 1985; Chekhov (biography) by Henri Troyat, translated by Michael Henry Heim, 1986; File on Chekhov by Nick Worrall, 1986; Chekhov and Women: Women in the Life and Work of Chekhov by Carolina de Maegd-Soëp, 1987; Chekhov on the British Stage, 1909–1987: An Essay in Cultural Exchange by Patrick Miles, 1987; Chekhov: The Silent Voice of Freedom by Valentine Tschebotarioff Bill, 1987; Chekhov: A Spirit Set Free by V.S. Pritchett, 1988; Critical Essays on Anton Chekhov edited by Thomas A. Eekman, 1989; Chekhov on the British Stage edited by Patrick Miles, 1993; The Cherry Orchard: Catastrophe and Comedy by Donald Rayfield, 1994; Time and Temporal Structure in Chekhov by C.J.G. Turner, 1994; Chekhov's Plays: An Opening into Eternity by Richard Gilman, 1995; Chekhov by Edward Sanders, 1995; Chekhov's Uncle Vanya and The Wood Demon by Donald Rayfield, 1995; Chekhov's Three Sisters by Gordon McVay, 1995; Chekhov and Russian Religious Culture: The Poetics of the Marian Paradigm by Julie W. de Sherbinin, 1997; Anton Chekhov: A Life by Donald Rayfield, 1997; Chekhov Then and Now: The Reception of Chekhov in World Culture, edited by J. Douglas Clayton, 1997; A Systems Approach to Literature: Mythopoetics of Chekhov's Four Major Plays by Vera Zubarev, 1997; Chekhov, The Hidden Ground: A Biography by Philip Callow, 1998; Understanding Chekhov: A Critical Study of Chekhov's Prose and Drama by Donald Rayfield,

Bibliography: Chekhov in English: A List of Works by and about Him edited by Anna Heifetz and Avrahm Yarmolinsky, 1949; The Chekhov Centennial: Chekhov in English: A Selective List of Works

1999; Stella Adler on Ibsen, Strindberg, and Chekhov by Stella Adler, 1999; Performing Chekhov by David Allen, 2000.

* * *

The leading exponent of the short story and the drama in modern Russian literature, which is otherwise dominated by poetry and the novel, Anton Chekhov began to write for money while he was a medical student. The majority of his early comic stories are characterized by the muddles and confusions of life. They portray overweening Russian respect for authority and hilarious conflicts between the sexes and the generations, in which the expected “triggers” of social occasions, chance meetings, love entanglements and relatives, children and animals rarely fail to appear. Nevertheless, the best of these stories already illustrate the serious aspects of Chekhov’s vision. “The Death of a Clerk” is a reworking of Gogolian menace. “Daughter of Albion,” “The Upheaval,” and “Spat khochetsia” (“Sleepy”) all explore the relationship between master and servant. None of these is actually funny: the first two reveal the humiliation of servants, while the third is an early demonstration of Chekhov’s ability to conjure horror out of commonplace situations, as the exhausted girl servant unemotionally smothers her masters’ crying baby. Chekhov’s medical training, to be evident later in the illnesses that afflict many of his characters, influences his study of adolescence, “Volodia,” with its themes of corruption, sexuality, and suicide. In stories such as “The Huntsman,” “Happiness,” and “The Steppe,” Chekhov showed his ability to describe the natural settings and atmosphere of rural Russia, featuring within them episodic moments of communication between man and his world or between men themselves against a background of silence, emptiness, and timelessness.

Later, the comic element in Chekhov ceases to be the framework of an attitude to life and becomes instead the sometimes relieving, always revealing observation, a perception of the continuity of life and of man’s remarkable ability to endure it. In the stories of 1888–96 the still young Chekhov captures the loss of momentum in middle age (“A Dreary Story”). The grim Palata No. 6 (Ward No. 6) and “The Black Monk” study psychological alienation, while other stories explore sexual relations. A wife’s abuse of a weak, loving husband in “The Butterfly” is counterbalanced by the wife’s triumph over her husband in “The Order of St. Anne.” In “The Artist’s Story” romance itself is shown to be imbued with misunderstanding, potential disaster, and the loss of opportunity. The most positive story of this period is undoubtedly “The Student,” in which myth and beauty inspire a moment of communication against the background of an atmospherically evoked rural evening and the passage of centuries.

In Chekhov’s last years stories of loneliness and isolation reveal fear of life (“A Hard Case”), the sadness of missed opportunities for happiness (“Concerning Love”), and estrangement (“The Bishop”). Chekhov also exposes the suffocating power of bourgeois self-satisfaction, materialism, and philistinism that is contained in the one Russian word poshlost: this is what overcomes the vitality of Startsev in “Ionych” and what permeates the life of Olga Semenovna in “The Darling.” In “A Case History” the gentry shelter helplessly from the world of peasant-workers and alien factories, while “The Peasants” and “In the Hollow” take us to the primitive world of the peasant and the kulak. Here materialism and greed emerge as violent weapons by which the strong abuse the weak. One of Chekhov’s last stories is perhaps his best creation, “Dama s sobachkoi” (“The Lady with a Dog”): for once, a story of mature love, of genuine communication and self-sacrifice, in which the characters respect each other enough to face their uncertain future consciously and courageously.

Chekhov’s “vaudevilles,” his comic one-act plays—such as Medved (The Bear) and Predlozhenie (A Marriage Proposal)—are mainly dramatized encounters, in which human feelings and follies undermine the solemnity of social occasions and rituals. Here, as in the major plays, dialogue and the revelation of character and atmosphere predominate over event. The major plays themselves, the foundation of Chekhov’s reputation in the West, give dramatic form to the themes of the later stories. The way in which history overtakes the gentry is illustrated in Chekhov’s bewildered central characters as they confront their own failure, the success of others, and the new strangeness of the world beyond their estates. Characters “in mourning for their lives” immerse themselves in nostalgia, petty rivalries, games, and hopeless dreaming or planning, while the forces of poshlost and social change threaten their way of life and their future. The paths and baths of the unloved pervade Chaika (The Seagull), while Diadia Vania (Uncle Vanya) traces the erosion of hopes and dreams by age and failure. The despair of provincial life is all too evident in Tri sestry (The Three Sisters), but this play also shows how the characters’ own self-indulgences and self-delusions frustrate their yearning for “Moscow.” Finally, in Vishnevyy sad (The Cherry Orchard), the axes are being sharpened not just for trees, but for the softer material of a self-obsessed gentry that has lost the will to resist.

Chekhov does not abandon plot altogether, but he creates a startling division between the extreme events of his plays, whether on or off stage (suicide, duel, attempted murder, fire, and death), and the spelling-out through stage direction, dialogue, and sub-text of the ironies of man’s hopes and fears. The atmosphere created by the characters’ inertia, the sounds of their surroundings, and their own silences resonates at one moment with amusement, affectation, and confusion and at the next with bitterness, recrimination, and loss. Chekhov’s integration of these resonances into frameworks of “everyday life” was a major dramatic innovation, one which was not accomplished without difficulty or with complete success. The balance between laughter and tears is sometimes too precarious in these plays, the relationship between exposition and natural discourse too artificial. Nevertheless, they are dramatic masterpieces, which have had the most significant influence on 20th-century Western drama.

Throughout, Chekhov preserved his humanity and his practical activity. Continuing to practise frequently as a doctor, he made a remarkable journey in 1890 across Siberia to visit the penal colony on Sakhalin Island, later producing an extensive account of conditions there, and in 1892 he helped in famine relief (as did Tolstoi). Although he was not devoid of the prejudices and shortcomings of his age, the simplicity, modesty, and gentle but firm truthfulness of Chekhov’s vision mark him out among modern Russian writers.

—Christopher R. Pike

See the essays on The Cherry Orchard, “The Lady with a Dog,” The Seagull, The Three Sisters, and Uncle Vanya.

CHIKAMATSU Monzaemon

Born: Suigimori Jirokichi (adult name Nobumori) into a samurai family, in Echizen Province (now in Fukui district), Japan, in 1653.

Family moved to Kyoto, c. 1667. Family: Married (wife died 1734); two sons. Career: In the service of the nobleman Ichijo Zenkakuekan until c. 1671–72; began writing plays, at first for Uji Kadayū [Kagano-jō] and other chanters of the jōruri (puppet) theatre; wrote for the chanter Takemoto Gidayū's theatre, Takemoto-za, Osaka, from 1686; also wrote kabuki plays, from 1684; house writer for Sakata Tōjūrō I's theatre, Miyako-za, Kyoto, 1695–1703; following Tōjūrō's retirement, c. 1703, resumed collaboration with Gidayū in Osaka; wrote solely for the puppet theatre, chiefly in the genres of the domestic drama (sewamono) and historical play (jidaimono), after c. 1705; moved back to Osaka, and became staff writer for the Takemoto-za, 1706. Died: 1725.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

[Works], edited by Takam Tatsuyuki and Kuroki Kanzo. 10 vols., 1924.

[Works], edited by Kitano Hogi. 16 vols., 1925.

Masterpieces of Chikamatsu (includes The Courier for Hades; The Love Suicide at Amijima; The Adventures of the Hakata Damsel; The Tethered Steed; Fair Ladies at a Game of Poem-Cards; The Almanac of Love), translated by Asatoro Miyamori. 1926.

Chikamatsu zenshū [Complete Works], edited by Fujii Otoo. 12 vols., 1927.

Major Plays of Chikamatsu (includes The Love Suicides at Sonezaki; The Drum of the Waves of Horikawa; Yosaku from Tamba; The Love Suicides in the Women's Temple; The Courier for Hell; The Battles of Coxinga; Gonza the Lancer; The Uprooted Pine; The Girl from Hakata; The Love Suicides at Amijima; The Woman-Killer and the Hell of Oil), translated by Donald Keene. 1961.

Plays (selected jōruri plays)

Yotsugi Soga [The Soga Heir] (produced 1683).

Shusse Kagekiyo [Kagekiyo Victorious] (produced 1686).

Semimaru (produced 1686). As Semimaru, in The Legend of Semimaru, translated by S. Matisoff, 1978.

Sonezaki shinjū (produced 1703). As The Love Suicides at Sonezaki, translated by Donald Keene, in Major Plays of Chikamatsu, 1961.

Yomei tenno shokunin kagami (produced 1705).

Horikawa Nami no tsuzami (produced 1706). As The Drum of the Waves of Horikawa, translated by Donald Keene, in Major Plays of Chikamatsu, 1961.

Shinjū nimai ezōshi [Love Suicide and the Double-Folded Picture Books] (produced 1706).

Shinjū kasaneizutsu [Love Suicide at the Sunken Well] (produced 1707).

Tamba Yosaku (produced 1708). As Yosaku from Tamba, translated by Donald Keene, in Major Plays of Chikamatsu, 1961.

Shinjū mannenso (produced 1708). As The Love Suicides in the Women's Temple, translated by Donald Keene, in Major Plays of Chikamatsu, 1961.

Keisei hangoko (produced 1708).

Imamiya shinjū [Love Suicide at Imamiya] (produced 1711).

Meido no Hikyaku (produced 1711). As The Courier for Hades, translated by Asatoro Miyamori, in Masterpieces of Chikamatsu, 1926; as The Courier for Hell, translated by Donald Keene, in Major Plays of Chikamatsu, 1961.

Yugiri awa no naruto (produced 1712). Part translated as Love Letter from the Licensed Quarter, in Kabuki, by James R. Brandon, 1975.

Kokusenyā Kassen (produced 1715). As The Battles of Coxinga, edited and translated by Donald Keene, 1951, and in Major Plays of Chikamatsu, 1961.

Ikudama shinjū [Love Suicide at Ikudama] (produced 1715).

Yari no Gonza (produced 1717). As Gonza the Lancer, translated by Donald Keene, in Major Plays of Chikamatsu, 1961.

Nebiki no kadomatsu (produced 1718). As The Uprooted Pine, translated by Donald Keene, in Major Plays of Chikamatsu, 1961.

Soga kaikeizan (produced 1718). As The Soga Revenge, translated by Frank A. Lombard, in Outline History of the Japanese Drama, 1928.

Heike Nyogo no shima (produced 1719). Part translated by Samuel L. Leiter, in The Art of Kabuki: Famous Plays in Performance, 1979.

Hakata kojorō namimakura (produced 1719). As The Adventures of the Hakata Damsel, translated by Asatoro Miyamori, in Masterpieces of Chikamatsu, 1926; as The Girl from Hakata, translated by Donald Keene, in Major Plays of Chikamatsu, 1961.

Shinjū ten no Amijima (produced 1721). As The Love Suicide at Amijima, translated by Asatoro Miyamori, in Masterpieces of Chikamatsu, 1926; as The Love Suicides at Amijima, translated by Donald Keene, in Major Plays of Chikamatsu, 1961.

Onnagoroshi abura jigoku (produced 1721). As The Woman Killer and the Hell of Oil, translated by Donald Keene, in Major Plays of Chikamatsu, 1961.

Kwan-hasshu tsunagi, as The Tethered Steed, translated by Asatoro Miyamori, in Masterpieces of Chikamatsu. 1926.

Kaoyo utragaruta, as Fair Ladies at a Game of Poem-Cards, translated by Asatoro Miyamori, in Masterpieces of Chikamatsu. 1926; as Fair Ladies at a Game of Poem Cards: A Verse Play by Peter Oswald, 1996.

Koi hakkē hashiragoyomi, as The Almanac of Love, translated by Asatoro Miyamori, in Masterpieces of Chikamatsu. 1926.

*

Critical Studies: Studien zu Chikamatsu Monzaemon by Detlef Schauwacker, 1975; World Within Walls by Donald Keene, 1976; Circles of Fantasy: Convention in the Plays of Chikamatsu by Andrew C. Gerstle, 1986; Hero as Murderer in the Plays of Chikamatsu: An Inaugural Lecture Delivered on 9 March 1994 by C.A. Gerstle, 1994.

* * *

Chikamatsu, sometimes referred to as the “Japanese Shakespeare,” is widely considered Japan’s most notable dramatist. Born in 1653, he became a major writer of the end of the 17th century and beginning of the 18th, producing plays for the puppet theatre (ningyō jōruri) and, in the middle period of his career, for the kabuki stage.

In Chikamatsu’s day, the puppet theatre consisted of relatively simple puppets, operated from beneath the stage, with music provided by a shamisen player, and the dialogue, scenic evocations, and commentary delivered by a chanter. The plots drew largely on traditional forms and subject matter, including semi-historical stories of war and scenes of allegorical journeys (michiyuki scenes), but, as with any great dramatist, Chikamatsu is notable for his distinctive use of, and modifications to, existing conventions. Thus, the first play to which Chikamatsu's name is attached, Yotsugi Soga [The Soga Heir], based its plot on a traditional revenge tale concerning the Soga brothers, but introduces two courtesans who imbue the play with a level of pathos through their discussions of the pitfalls of love with the mother of the dead Soga brothers. Though this play is often considered crude and clumsy in many respects, already evident in it is the increased sophistication of emotional content brought about through the use of the mistress/courtesan figure—a figure that was to become characteristic of Chikamatsu. In his next important play, Shusse Kagekiyo [Kagekiyo Victorious], the mistress of Kagekiyo is, according to one critic, “a believable woman with the contradictions and complexities that distinguish human beings from puppets,” and possesses a “genuine tragic intensity.”

Shusse Kagekiyo was written for the famous chanter Takemoto Gidayū, with whom Chikamatsu was collaborating from 1686. But (and perhaps logically, considering his increasing “humanization” of character-types) Chikamatsu turned increasingly towards the kabuki theatre of live actors, and wrote almost exclusively for the kabuki stage from 1693 to 1703, becoming a contracted writer for the actor Sakata Tōjūrō I in Kyoto. He probably wrote about 30 kabuki plays, but those that have survived (rarely in complete form) are not regarded as highly as the puppet plays by most commentators. Above all, and perhaps to Chikamatsu's disappointment, kabuki theatre was one in which the actor was preeminent, and the writer's scripts, often produced in collaboration, were more bases for histrionic improvisation than structured, literary products.

Whether because of artistic limitations of the kabuki stage, the retirement of Tōjūrō, the resurgence in popularity of Gidayū's puppet theatre, or other reasons (an open biographical question which has intrigued scholars and theatre historians), Chikamatsu returned to writing puppet plays in the early 1790s, and wrote almost wholly in this form after 1795. It is from this period that those works generally considered his masterpieces derive. The later puppet plays fall into two categories—the sewamono form (domestic tragedies, also described as “dramas of contemporary life”) and the jidaimono form (historical plays).

In the sewamono category are the “love suicide” plays, notably Sonezaki Shinjū (The Love Suicides at Sonezaki) and Shinjū Ten no Amijima (The Love Suicides at Amijima). The former of these drew on actual reports of the suicide of a pair of lovers, a shop assistant and a prostitute, and formed the basis for this entire genre of puppet plays. Chikamatsu wrote more than 11 “love suicide” plays, whose plots were usually based on the efforts of the male lover to buy his beloved from the brothel where she has been sent by her father, with the tragic element often involving the destitution brought about thereby. The characters' heroism does not derive from any innate “superhuman” qualities or attributes, but emerges through their struggles, sacrifices, and the depth of their love—elements brought out particularly in the michi-yuki scenes. Chikamatsu was able to make extensive use of irony, tragic pathos, and social and economic realism to produce an extremely popular dramatic concoction—indeed one so popular that the plays increased the rate of such suicides in real life, causing consternation for the authorities and new legislation criminalizing such suicide attempts.

Most of the plays of the jidaimono category, the historical plays, have faded into relative obscurity, although Chikamatsu composed around 50 of them, and they were given higher priority in the theatre of his time. Nevertheless, the category does contain the play sometimes cited as his greatest achievement—Kokusenyā Kassen (The Battles of Coxinga). It was certainly his greatest popular success, achieving an extraordinary run of around 17 months. Its treatment of history is highly fantastic—it presents the story of the almost single-handed rescue of the Ming dynasty in China from the Tartar tyranny by a half-Chinese, half-Japanese fisherman—and its contrasts are stark in tone, including broad humour, heroic and sensational feats, vivid exploitation of the audience's unfamiliarity with a foreign setting, and, by virtue of the hero's semi-Japanese lineage, patriotic appeal. Such a play as The Battles of Coxinga is a world away from the concerns of the sewamono works, and it is the latter which tend to be the better known today, particularly in the West.

—Noel Stanley

CHRÉTIEN DE TROYES

Career: Almost nothing is known of his life; because of dedications of his works, it is commonly assumed that he knew or served Countess Marie de Champagne at her court in Troyes and Philip of Alsace, Count of Flanders; works were probably written in the 1170s and 1180s.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Sämtliche Werke, edited by Wendelin Foerster. 4 vols., 1884–99; reprinted 1965.

Arthurian Romances (includes translations of Erec and Énide; Cligès; Yvain; Lancelot), edited by D.D.R. Owen, translated by W.W. Comfort. 1914; reprinted 1975.

Arthurian Romances (includes translations of Erec and Énide; Cligès; Lancelot; Yvain; Perceval), translated by D.D.R. Owen. 1987.

The Complete Romances, translated by Donald Staines. 1990.

Arthurian Romances (includes translations of Eric and Énide; Cligès; The Knight of the Cart [Lancelot]; The Knight with the Lion [Yvain]; The Story of the Grail [Perceval]), translated by William W. Kilber and Carleton W. Carroll. 1991.

Verse

Philomena, edited by C. de Boer. 1909.

Erec et Énide, edited by Mario Roques. 1952; as Erec and Enid, edited and translated by Carleton W. Carroll, 1987; also translated by Dorothy Gilbert, 1992; as Erec and Enide, translated by Ruth Harwood Cline, 2000.

Cligès, edited by Alexandre Micha, 1957; also edited by Claude Luttrell and Stewart Gregory, 1993.

Yvain (Le Chevalier au Lion), edited by Mario Roques. 1960; also edited by T.B.W. Reid, 1967; as Yvain, translated by Robert W. Ackerman and Frederick W. Locke, 1957; also translated by Ruth Harwood Cline, 1975; edited and translated by William W. Kibler, 1985; Burton Raffel, 1987.

Lancelot (Le Chevalier de la charrette), edited by Mario Roques. 1958; as Lancelot; or, The Knight of the Cart, edited and translated by William W. Kibler, 1981; also translated by Deborah Webster Rogers, 1984; Ruth Harwood Cline, 1990; as Lancelot: The Knight of the Cart, translated by Burton Raffel, 1997.

Le Conte du Graal (Perceval), edited by William Roach. 1959; also edited by Félix Lecoy, 2 vols., 1972–75; as Perceval: The Story of the Grail, translated by Nigel Bryant, 1982; also translated by Ruth Harwood Cline, 1985; translated by William W. Kibler, edited by Rupert T. Pickens, 1990; as The Story of the Grail, translated by Robert White Linker, 1952.

*

Bibliography: Chrétien de Troyes: An Analytic Bibliography by Douglas Kelly, 1976.

Critical Studies: Arthurian Tradition and Chrétien de Troyes by Roger Sherman Loomis, 1949; Romance in the Making: Chrétien de Troyes and the Earliest French Romance, 1954, and Chrétien de Troyes: Inventor of the Modern Novel, 1957, both by Foster E. Guyer; The Portrait in Twelfth-Century French Literature: An Example of the Stylistic Originality of Chrétien de Troyes by Alice M. Colby, 1965; Aesthetic Distance in Chrétien de Troyes: Irony and Comedy in Cligès and Perceval by Peter Haidu, 1968; Chrétien de Troyes by Urban T. Holmes, 1970; Chrétien Studies by Z.P. Zaddy, 1972; The Allegory of Adventure: Reading Chrétien's Erec and Yvain by Tom Artin, 1974; The Creation of the First Arthurian Romance: A Quest by Claude A. Luttrell, 1974; Chrétien's Jewish Grail: A New Investigation of the Imagery and Significance of Chrétien de Troyes's Grail Episode Based Upon Medieval Hebraic Sources by Eugene J. Weinraub, 1976; Structure and Sacring: The Systematic Kingdom in Chrétien's Erec et Énide, 1978, and The Arthurian Romances of Chrétien de Troyes: Once and Future Fictions, 1991, both by Donald Maddox; The Craft of Chrétien de Troyes: An Essay on Narrative Art by Norris J. Lacy, 1980, and The Legacy of Chrétien de Troyes edited by Lacy, Douglas Kelly, and Keith Busby, 2 vols., 1987–88; Chrétien de Troyes: A Study of the Arthurian Romances by Leslie T. Topsfield, 1981; Chrétien de Troyes: The Man and His Work by Jean Frappier, translated by Raymond J. Cormier, 1982; The Dream of Chivalry: A Study of Chrétien de Troyes's Yvain and Hartmann von Aue's Iwein by Ojars Kratins, 1982; Love and Marriage in Chrétien de Troyes by Peter S. Noble, 1982, and Chrétien de Troyes and the Troubadours edited by Noble and Linda M. Paterson, 1984; Chrétien de Troyes by Lucie Polak, 1982; The Sower and His Seed: Essays on Chrétien de Troyes edited by Rupert T. Pickens, 1983; The Portrayal of the Heroine in Chrétien de Troyes's Erec et Énide; Gottfried von Strassburg's Tristan and Flamenca by Nancy C. Zak, 1983; Chrétien de Troyes: Erec et Énide by Glynn S. Burgess, 1984; The Romances of Chrétien de Troyes: A Symposium edited by Douglas Kelly, 1985; Chrétien de Troyes: Yvain (Le Chevalier au Lion) by Tony Hunt, 1986; From Topic to Tale: Logic and Narrativity in the Middle Ages by Eugene Vance, 1987; Chrétien de Troyes: Perceval (Le conte du Graal) by Keith Busby, 1993; Chrétien de Troyes and the German Middle Ages: Papers from an International Symposium, edited with introduction by Martin H. Jones and Roy Wisbey, 1993; Sealed in Parchment: Rereadings of Knighthood in the Illuminated Manuscripts of Chrétien de Troyes by Sandra Hindman, 1994; Chrétien de Troyes Revisited by Karl D. Uitti with Michelle A. Freeman, 1995;

The Unholy Grail: A Social Reading of Chrétien de Troyes's Conte du Graal by Brigitte Cazelles, 1996; The Romances of Chrétien de Troyes by Joseph J. Duggan, 2001.

* * *

Chrétien de Troyes brought the nascent romance form to one of its highest points and gave Arthurian characters and situations their courtly cast. Some of his early works—adaptations of Ovid and a version of the Tristan story—have not survived; others are of doubtful attribution or of marginal interest (the Philomena, the Guillaume d'Angleterre, and two short lyrical poems); on the other hand, his five major romances have earned him great critical acclaim. A product of the revival of interest in the classics, notably Ovid, and of the vogue of Celtic tales and of courtly love, these compositions written in octosyllabic rhymed couplets are among the most sophisticated literary creations of the 12th-century Renaissance. Chrétien was encouraged and probably supported for a while by Countess Marie of Champagne, daughter of King Louis VII of France and Eleanor of Aquitaine.

Erec et Énide (Erec and Énide) is the first full-blown account of King Arthur and the knights of the Round Table. After Erec weds the fair Énide, he becomes so enamoured of her that he loses interest in chivalry. Prodded into taking up arms again by his bride's hasty words, the hero forces her to accompany him on a series of perilous adventures in the course of which he proves his valour and Énide her loyalty and devotion to him.

Cligès (written c. 1176) appears to have been modelled in part on Thomas's Tristan whose heroine Chrétien criticized. Unlike Isolt, Fenice refuses to become involved with two lovers simultaneously. With the aid of magic potions, she prevents her husband from consummating their marriage, then, after feigning death, flees with Cligès to an idyllic hideaway. When the husband succumbs, the lovers are finally free to marry. In this romance, Chrétien developed the soliloquy as a means of analysing love's torments.

There is some evidence that Chrétien worked alternately on his next two romances in the late 1170s. Lancelot (Le Chevalier de la charrette) (Lancelot; or, The Knight of the Cart) is perhaps the author's best-known story. Held hostage by the evil Meleagant, Queen Guinevere is rescued by her secret lover Lancelot who must first overcome several obstacles and, above all, suffer the humiliation of mounting a cart driven by a dwarf. Guinevere is a haughty and demanding mistress who makes her lover give in to all her caprices; Lancelot is a model of chivalry and courtesy for whom love-service has many of the characteristics of religious devotion and even mysticism.

Yvain (Le Chevalier au Lion) (Yvain; or, The Knight of the Lion) recounts the adventures of a hero who weds the widow of a man he has slain. Though passionately in love with his bride, Yvain becomes so preoccupied with tourneying that she is soon out of his mind. The two are eventually reconciled after Yvain expiates his fault.

Le Conte du Graal (Perceval) (Perceval: The Story of the Grail), of 1181 or later, is about a naive young man who, after receiving training in chivalry and courtesy at King Arthur's court, happens upon a mysterious castle whose host is the Fisher King. There he witnesses a curious procession that includes a bleeding lance and a grail. Perceval fails to inquire about the significance of these objects and must then face the consequences. Medieval continuators gave a Christian interpretation to this story and some scholars believe Chrétien intended to provide this kind of explanation. However, the poem was left unfinished and constitutes one of the most fascinating literary conundrums of all time.

—Gerard J. Brault

See the essays on Erec and Énide and Lancelot.

CHRISTINE DE PIZAN (OR PISAN)

Born: Venice, Italy, c. 1365. Moved to Paris at an early age. Family: Father was medical adviser and astrologer to Charles V. Married Étienne de Castel in 1380 (died 1390); two sons (one died in infancy) and one daughter. Career: Started writing career shortly after the death of her husband; attracted the attention of members of the French Royal Court and became society poet; worked as a copyist in the book trade; fled to a Dominican Abbey in Poissy to escape the civil war. Died: c. 1430.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Oeuvres poétiques, edited by Maurice Roy. 3 vols., 1886–96; reprinted 1965.

Ballades, Rondeaux and Virelais, edited by Kenneth Varty. 1965.

The Writings of Christine de Pizan, edited by Charity Cannon Willard, 1994.

The Selected Writings of Christine de Pizan: New Translations, Criticism, translated by Renate Blumenfeld-Kosinski and Kevin Brownlee, 1997.

Works

L'Avision-Christine, edited by Sister Mary Louise Towner. 1932.

Les Cent Ballades d'amant et de dame, edited by Jacqueline Cerquiglini. 1982.

Le Débat sur le Roman de la Rose, edited by Eric Hicks. 1977.

Le Ditié de Jehanne d'Arc, edited and translated by Angus J. Kennedy and Kenneth Varty. 1977.

L'Epistre de la prison de vie humaine, edited by Angus J. Kennedy. 1984.

L'Epitre d'Othéa, as The Epistle of Othea to Hector, edited by George F. Warner, 1904; also edited by James D. Gordon and translated by Anthony Babington, 1942; as The Epistle of Othéa, edited by C.F. Bühler and translated by Stephen Scrope, 1970.

Le Livre de la cité des dames, edited by M.C. Curnow. 2 vols., 1975; as The Book of the City of Ladies, translated by Earl J. Richards, 1982; also translated by Thérèse Moreau and Eric Hicks, 1986.

Le Livre de la mutacion de Fortune, edited by Suzanne Solente. 4 vols., 1959–66.

Le Livre de la paix, edited by Charity Cannon Willard. 1958.

Le Livre des faits et bonnes meurs du sage roy Charles V, edited by Suzanne Solente. 2 vols., 1936–40.

Le Livre des faits d'armes et de la chevalerie, as The Book of Feats of Arms and of Chivalry, translated by William Caxton, 1498, reprinted and edited by A.T.P. Byles, 1932; revised edition, 1937; as The Book of Deeds of Arms and of Chivalry, translated by Sumner Willard, 1999.

Le Livre des trois vertus; ou, le Trésor de la cité des dames, edited by Eric Hicks. 1989; as Le Livre des III vertus a l'enseignement des dames, edited by Charity Cannon Willard, 1989; as The Treasures of the City of Ladies; or, The Book of the Three Virtues, translated by Sarah Lawson, 1985; A Medieval Woman's Mirror of Honor, translated by Willard, 1989.

Le Livre du chemin de long estude, edited by Robert Püschell. 1881; revised edition, 1887, reprinted 1974.

Le Livre du corps de policie, edited by Robert H. Lucas. 1967; edited and translated by Kate Langdon Forhan, 1994.

L'Oroyson nostre dame: Prayer to Our Lady (bilingual edition), translated by Jean Misrahi and Margaret Marks. 1953.

Les Sept Psaumes allégorisés, edited by Ruth Ringland Rains. 1965.

The Book of the Duke of True Lovers, translated by Alice Kemp-Welch. 1966.

The Epistle of the Prison of Human Life with An Epistle to the Queen of France and Lament of the Evils of the Civil War, edited by Josette A. Wisman. 1984.

Poems of Cupid, God of Love (includes Epistre au dieu d'amours and Le Dit de la rose), edited and translated by Thelma S. Fenster and Mary Carpenter Erler. 1990.

*

Bibliography: Christine de Pisan: A Bibliography of Writings by Her and About Her, 1982, and Christine de Pisan: A Bibliography, 2nd edition, 1989, both by Edith Yenal; Christine de Pisan: A Bibliographical Guide by Angus J. Kennedy, 1984.

Critical Studies: Christine de Pizan: Ballades, Rondeaux and Virelais, 1965, and Epistre de la prison de vie humaine, 1984, both by Angus J. Kennedy; The Order of the Rose: The Life and Ideas of Christine de Pizan by Enid McLeod, 1976; Ideals for Women in the Works of Christine de Pizan edited by Diane Bornstein, 1981; Christine de Pizan by Régine Pernoud, 1982; Christine de Pizan: Her Life and Works by Charity Cannon Willard, 1984; Politics, Gender and Genre: The Political Thought of Christine de Pizan edited by Margaret Brabant, 1992; Reinterpreting Christine de Pizan edited by Earl Jeffrey Richards, 1992; The City of Scholars: New Approaches to Christine de Pizan, edited by Margarete Zimmermann and Dina De Rentis, 1994; Le livre du duc des vrais amans, a critical edition by Thelma S. Fenster, 1995; The Love Debate Poems of Christine de Pizan by Barbara K. Altmann, 1998; Christine de Pizan and Medieval French Lyric, edited by Earl Jeffrey Richards, 1998; Christine de Pizan and the Categories of Difference, edited by Marilyn Desmond, 1998.

* * *

Christine de Pizan, the early 14th-century writer, composed a voluminous body of works. Writing both poetry and prose, she produced autobiographical texts, love lyrics, religious works, and treatises on education, warfare, peacemaking, and proper behaviour, as well as polemics on the “woman question.” She was also the official biographer of Charles V of France.

Christine began her literary career from necessity, after her husband died leaving her virtually impoverished with three small children and considerable debts. Since she earned her living solely by her pen, she is often referred to as the first professional writer. Her first endeavours were poems lamenting her husband's death and depicting her grief. She wrote about 20 such ballads. Soon she began to produce more traditional love lyrics and to experiment with both themes and lyrical forms.

Two of her longer poems, Epistre au dieu d'amours [Epistle to the God of Love], written in 1399, and Le Dit de la rose [The Story of the Rose], written in 1402, were composed as part of Christine's challenge to Jean de Meung's slanderous depiction of women in the second half of the Roman de la rose (The Romance of the Rose). Christine was in fact the main correspondent in the Quarrel of the Rose in which she and others such as Jean de Gerson, chancellor of the University of Paris, attacked the immorality and misogyny of Jean de Meung's poem.

The Epistre au dieu d'amours presents ladies from all social classes who complain to Cupid about those who slander them, Ovid and Jean de Meung in particular. It concludes with the banishment of all defamers of women from the court. In Le Dit de la rose she founds the Order of the Rose which rewards those knights who defend the honour of woman. The Quarrel of the Rose extended Christine's fame throughout Europe.

With the exception of two poems treating common courtly love themes, "Le Dit de deux amans" [The Story of Two Lovers] and "Le Livre des trois jugements" [Story of the Three Judgements], dedicated to the Seneschal de Hainaut, the only other major poem not connected to Christine's personal life is Le Ditié de Jehanne D'Arc [Joan of Arc's Story]. Christine had been in retirement at Poissy and had not written for years, when she heard about Joan of Arc and wrote this poem celebrating Joan as the saviour of France. For Christine, she was proof of the value of women and of their worth in God. The poem was the only work written in Joan of Arc's honour during her lifetime.

Among the personal or autobiographical poems, we find a poem written for Christine de Pizan's son, Jean de Castel. This work, "Enseignements et proverbes moraux" [Moral Proverbs], became very popular in England. "Le Livre du dit de Poissy" describes an elaborate party given for guests at the convent where her daughter lived. Le Livre de la Mutacion de Fortune [Mutation of Fortune] composed between 1400 and 1403, is the longest of her works in verse. It includes an allegorical sea voyage in which Christine depicts her transformation from wife to writer. She is adrift and helpless; Fortune takes pity upon her and by touching her renders her stronger in every sense. Her wedding band falls symbolically from her finger, for, as Christine tells us, she has become a man (lines 1,359–61). She is no longer a wife, but a person alone. The second part contains a description of Fortune's castle. In the Le Livre du chemin de long estude [The Long Study], Christine, in a dream vision, visits the Court of Reason and then returns to earth with the knowledge necessary to correct the Earth's faults by founding a world empire.

Christine's prose works explore the same topics as her poems. There are a number of letters that she wrote as part of her polemic against Jean de Meung. She addresses the subject of world reform in L'Avision-Christine and the problem of strife and the necessity for peace in Le Livre du corps de policie [Book of the Body Politic], written 1406–07 and based on John of Salisbury's Policraticus, and in Le Livre de la paix [Book of Peace], 1412–14, which was actually a book of instruction written for the dauphin. Her interest in politics, society, and history is also evidenced in her manual on military ethics, Le Livre des faits d'armes et de chevalerie (The Book of Feats of Arms and of Chivalry) and in her commissioned work on the reign of Charles V, Le Livre des faits et bonnes meurs du sage roy Charles V [Deeds and Manners of Charles V], which was intended as a manual of good government for the dauphin. In addition, Christine wrote two religious works: Les Sept Psaumes allégorisés [Seven Allegorical Psalms] with a prose meditation for Charles le Noble, and the consolation, L'Epistre de la prison de vie humaine [Prison of Human Life], dedicated to Mary of Berry, who had lost so many of her family in the civil strife.

Her two major prose works, Le Livre de la cité des dames (The Book of the City of Ladies) and Le Livre des trois vertus; ou, le Trésor de la citié des dames (The Treasures of the City of Ladies; or, The Book of the Three Virtues), develop further the subject of greatest concern to her, the rehabilitation of the image of women. In these two works, we find a detailed presentation of her basic beliefs and her own view of woman's place in society. In the City of Ladies, using once again an allegorical setting and a subtle method of attack, she refutes the many accusations against women. Drawing examples from various sources, Christine compiles a gallery of heroic, intelligent, virtuous women. Using an allegory of three ladies sent by God to help her build in the City, she enhances her work with divine approval and strengthens her refutation of the then popular belief that women were less holy, less valuable. This motif of Christine as an intermediary between the misguided world and the elements of right-thinking, justice, and holiness appears in several of her works (L'Avision-Christine, Le Livre du chemin de long estude).

Having established the value and talents of women, she continued her work on women by writing a manual of proper conduct in the companion text, The Treasures of the City of Ladies. In spite of her own unorthodox life as a professional writer and her decision to remain a widow, Christine saw woman's role as primarily that of a wife. Some feminists have tended to shy away from her because of this aspect of her work; however, given the world in which she was living, her stand against the accepted devaluation of women, supported by the Church as well as the majority of male intellectuals was a bold move. To have believed that women's situation could have been totally transformed would have been impractical, even foolish. Moreover, Christine had enjoyed a happy marriage. Her goal was to gain respect for women in their established role in society, not to revolutionize her world. Nevertheless, for her period, Christine was a strong advocate of women and deserves to be considered one of the first feminists. During her time, she was recognized as both an accomplished lyric poet and a respected authority on the status of women.

—Shawncey J. Webb

See the essay on The Book of the City of Ladies.

CICERO

Born: Marcus Tullius Cicero in Arpinum (now Arpino), central Italy, 3 January 106 bc. Education: Educated in Rome, and studied rhetoric and oratory in Athens and Rhodes, 79–77 bc. Military Service: Served in the army of Pompeius Strabo, 89 bc. Family: Married 1) Terentia in 80 bc (divorced 47 bc), one daughter and one son; 2) Publilia (divorced 45 bc). Career: Lawyer: first appearance in courts, 81 bc; usually appeared for the defence, but his prosecution of Verres (70 bc) is his most famous case. Financial administrator (quaestor), western Sicily, 75 bc; judicial officer (praetor), 66 bc; consul, 63 bc:

exposed Catiline's conspiracy to carry out uprisings in Italy and arson in Rome; declared an exile by Clodius in 58 BC, and lived in Thessalonica and Illyricum, but recalled with help of Pompey, 57 BC; reluctantly allied himself with triumvirate of Pompey, Caesar, and Crassus, 56 BC, and retired from public life until 51 BC; elected augur of the college of diviners, 53 BC; governor of Cilicia, Asia Minor, 51–50 BC; allied with Pompey in civil war, 49–48 BC; after Pompey's defeat Cicero's safety was guaranteed by Caesar; after Caesar's assassination, 44 BC, supported general amnesty (delivered 14 Philippic orations against Antony, 44–43 BC); the triumvirate of Octavian, Antony, and Lepidus put Cicero on the execution list, 43 BC, and he was captured and killed. Died: 7 December 43 BC.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

- [Works], edited by C.F.W. Mueller. 1884–1917; also edited by K. Simbeck and others, 1923–; translated by various hands [Loeb Edition], 28 vols., 1912–58.
- [Letters], edited by R.Y. Tyrrell and L.C. Purser. 7 vols., 1899–1918; selections as Letters, translated by L.P. Wilkinson, 1949; Selected Letters, translated by D.R. Shackleton Bailey, 1980.
- [Poems], edited by W.W. Ewbank. 1933; translated by A.E. Douglas, 1985.
- Selected Works*, translated by Michael Grant. 1960.
- Selected Political Speeches*, translated by Michael Grant. 1969, revised edition, 1973.

Works

- Academica*, edited by J.S. Reid. 1885.
- De amicitia*, with De senectute and De divinatione, translated by William Armistead Falconer. 1922.
- Brutus*, edited by H. Malcovati. 1963; also edited by A.E. Douglas, 1966; translated by H.M. Poteat, 1950.
- The Caesarian Orations*, translated by G.J. Acheson. 1965.
- De divinatione*, edited by Arthur S. Pease. 4 vols., 1920–23; as De divinatione, with De senectute and De amicitia, translated by William Arthur Falconer, 1922; as On Divination, translated by H.M. Poteat, 1950.
- De domo sua*, edited by R.G. Nisbet. 1939.
- Epistulae ad Atticum: Letters to Atticus*, edited by W.S. Watt. 2 vols., 1961–65; edited and translated by D.R. Shackleton Bailey, 7 vols., 1965–70.
- Epistulae ad familiares* [Letters to His Friends], edited by D.R. Shackleton Bailey. 2 vols., 1977; also edited by W.S. Watt, 1982; translated by D.R. Shackleton Bailey, 1978.
- Epistulae ad Quintum frateum et M. Brutum*, edited by D.R. Shackleton Bailey. 1980; also edited by W.S. Watt, 1958; translated by D.R. Shackleton Bailey, 1978.
- De finibus*, edited by J.N. Madrid. 3rd edition, 1876; Books I–II edited by J.S. Reid, 1925.
- In Pisonem*, edited by R.G. Nisbet. 1961.
- In Vatinius*, edited by L.F. Pocock. 1926.
- Kerrines II*, translated by T.N. Mitchell. 1986.
- Laelius*, edited by Frank Stock, revised edition. 1930; as On Friendship, translated by Frank Copley, 1967; also translated by J.G.F. Powell, 1990.
- Murder Trials* (selected orations), translated by Michael Grant. 1975.

- De natura deorum*, edited by A.S. Pease. 2 vols., 1955–58; as On the Nature of the Gods, translated by H.M. Poteat, 1950; also translated by H.C.P. McGregor, 1972.
- Nine Orations and the Dream of Scipio*, translated by Smith P. Bovie. 1967.
- De officiis*, edited by P. Fedeli. 1965; as On Duties, translated by H.M. Poteat, 1950; also translated by John Higginbotham, 1967; Harry G. Edinger, 1974; M.T. Griffin and E.M. Atkins, 1991.
- On Fate*, edited and translated by R.W. Sharples. 1992.
- On the Good Life* (selections), translated by Michael Grant. 1971.
- De oratore*, edited by A.S. Wilkins. 1892.
- Philippics I–II*, edited by J.D. Denniston. 1939; also edited by D.R. Shackleton Bailey, 1986.
- Pro M. Caelio*, edited by R.G. Austin. 1960.
- De republica*, as On the Commonwealth, translated by G.H. Sabine and S.B. Smith. 1929; selections as Res Publica, translated by W.K. Lacey and Harry G. Edinger, 1974.
- De senectute*, edited by Leonard Huxley, revised edition. 1923; also edited by J.G.F. Powell, 1988; translated (from the French) as De senectute, 1481; with De amicitia and De divinatione, translated by William Armistead Falconer, 1922; as Cato Major, or His Discourse of Old-Age, translated by James Logan, 1744; as On Old Age, translated by Frank Copley, 1967.
- Somnium Scipionis*, as The Dream of Scipio, with Nine Orations, translated by Smith P. Bovie. 1967; also translated by Percy Bullock, 1983; J.G.F. Powell, 1990.
- Tusculanae disputationes*, edited by Thomas W. Dougan and Robert M. Henry. 2 vols., 1905; as Tusculan Disputations [Loeb Edition], translated by J.E. King, 1927; 2 and 5 translated by A.E. Douglas, 1990.

*

Critical Studies: Cicero and the Roman Republic by Frank R. Crowell, 1948; The Humanism of Cicero by H.A.K. Hunt, 1954; Cicero on the Art of Growing Old by H.W. Couch, 1959; Cicero by T.A. Dorey, 1965; Cicero on Old Age by E.M. Blaiklock, 1966; Cicero the Statesman by Richard E. Smith, 1966; Cicero by D.R. Shackleton Bailey, 1971; Cicero: A Political Biography by David Stockton, 1971; Cicero and the State Religion by R.J. Goar, 1972; Cicero and Rome by David Taylor, 1973; Cicero: A Portrait by Elizabeth Rawson, 1975; Cicero and the End of the Roman Republic edited by W.K. Lacey, 1978; Cicero's Elegant Style: An Analysis of the "Pro Archia" by Harold C. Gotoff, 1979; Cicero: The Ascending Years, 1979, and Cicero the Senior Statesman, 1991, both by Thomas N. Mitchell; The Style and the Composition of Cicero's Speech "Pro Q. Rescio Comoedo": Origin and Function by Jerzy Axer, 1980; Cicero's Philippics and their Demosthenic Model: The Rhetoric of Crisis by Cecil W. Wooten, 1983; Trials of Character: The Eloquence of Ciceronian Ethos by James M. May, 1988; Cicero's Social and Political Thought by Neal Wood, 1988; The Philosophical Books of Cicero by Paul MacKendrick, 1989; Cicero the Politician by Christian Habicht, 1990; Cicero and the Roman Republic by Manfred Fuhrmann, 1992; Representations: Images of the World in Ciceronian Oratory by Ann Vasaly, 1993; Form as Argument in Cicero's Speeches: A Study of Dilemma by Christopher P. Craig, 1993; Cicero's Caesarian Speeches: A Stylistic Commentary, edited by Harold C. Gotoff, 1993; The Letters of January to April 43 BC, translated with commentary by M.M. Willcock, 1995; Onomasticon to Cicero's Letters by D.R. Shackleton Bailey, 1995; Cicero the Philosopher: Twelve Papers, edited with introduction by J.G.F. Powell, 1995; The Speeches of Cicero: Context, Law, Rhetoric by Paul MacKendrick, 1995; Cicero's Cilician Letters, translated with notes by Susan Treggiari, 1996; Cicero's Accretive Style: Rhetorical Strategies in the Exordia of the Judicial Speeches by Stephen M. Cerutti, 1996; Cicero's Correspondence: A Literary Study by G.O. Hutchinson, 1997; Master Tully: Cicero in Tudor England by Howard Jones, 1998; Crime and Community in Ciceronian Rome by Andrew M. Riggsby, 1999; Cicero's Republic, edited by J.G.F. Powell and J.A. North, 2001; Cicero, Catullus, and the Language of Social Performance by Brian A. Krostenko, 2001.

* * *

Cicero was one of the most prolific and versatile of Latin authors, but his literary reputation has varied more than most. In antiquity he was generally accepted as the prince of Roman orators, though sometimes with reservations. In the Middle Ages, when his speeches and letters were almost forgotten, the less technical of his philosophical works became vastly popular and influential. Petrarch was his devout admirer, and among the humanists of the Renaissance his Latin style was a fetish. The 18th century found him congenial, the 19th less so.

In the 20th the most valuable part of Cicero's literary legacy seems to be the part he never intended to leave: his private correspondence. It was published at intervals after his death, apparently with scarcely any editing. The first extant letter was written when Cicero was 38 and they continue in uneven flow down to within a few months of his death. Many were to his closest intimates, his brother and his lifelong friend, Pomponius Atticus. They take us behind the political and domestic scenes, and thanks to them the colourful history of the last two decades of the Roman Republic is more than a bare chronicle of events. The famous names—Pompey, Cato, Crassus, Julius Caesar—come to life, and Cicero's own complex personality gets ample exposure. Incidentally, they show him to be a master of vivid narrative and description in a colloquial style very different from that of his publications. Nothing in the remains of Greco-Roman literature takes us so close to an individual and a society.

The speeches, too, offer much of this kind of interest and some of them, like the letters, are an important source of information about the speaker and his times. Covering a period of nearly 40 years, almost the whole of Cicero's public career, they range from legalistic pleas on behalf of obscure clients to grand occasions when Cicero held forth to the Senate or the People in its assemblies on great political issues. To a modern eye the faults of his eloquence are often all too plain: inflation, false pathos, egotism, verbosity, and what Theodor Mommsen called a dreadful barrenness of thought. Even so, a receptive reader may let himself be swept along with the tide of impeccably constructed periods, especially if he can read the Latin aloud. And sometimes there is more, as in the rhetorical drive of the Catilines, the genuine pathos of the 14th Philippic, or the brilliant badinage in the defence of Murena. As for Cicero's prose style, even Mommsen admired it. It was his most creative achievement.

Cicero was not an original thinker, but like many educated Romans of his time he was much interested in Greek philosophy. Late in life he conceived the plan to present it, at least its more recent developments, in Latin form. The result was a rapidly produced series of metaphysical and moral treatises based on Greek sources. As literature, the gem of the collection is the little tract on old age (De senectute), perhaps Cicero's one unqualified artistic success. Another attractive piece, on friendship, characteristically tells us nothing about the actualities of Roman amicitia, as Cicero knew them from his own experience. Even the works on rhetoric have this second-hand quality, except the Brutus, a survey of Roman orators which often reads like a catalogue but contains some highly interesting sketches of speakers whom Cicero had heard and personally known.

Cicero also wrote poetry, mostly in his youth. It had a considerable vogue, until Catullus and the "New Poets" brought their fresh inspiration. Posterity would have none of it, and enough survives to show that posterity was right. Even the advance in verse technique as compared with the remnants of earlier writing need not have been due to Cicero.

—D.R. Shackleton Bailey

See the essays on In Defence of Marcus Caelius Rufus, On Old Age, and On the Commonwealth.

CLAUDEL, Paul (Louis Charles Marie)

Born: Villeneuve-sur-Fère, France, 6 August 1868. Education: Educated at schools in Bar-le-Duc, 1870–75, Nogent-sur-Seine, 1876–79, and Wassy-sur-Blaise, 1879–81; Lycée Louis-le-Grand, Paris, 1882–85; law school, and École des Sciences Politiques. Family: Married Reine Sainte-Marie-Perrin in 1906; five children. Career: In the French diplomatic service from 1890: commercial department, Paris, 1890–92, New York, 1893, Boston, 1894, China, 1894–1909, Prague, 1909–11, Frankfurt, 1911–14, Berlin, 1914, Rome and Brazil during World War I; ambassador to Japan, 1921–25, to the United States, 1926–33, and to Belgium, 1933–35; retired 1935; served in the Ministry of Propaganda during World War II. Member: Académie française, 1946. Died: 23 February 1955.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Théâtre. 4 vols., 1911–12; revised edition, 2 vols., 1947–48.
Oeuvres complètes. 26 vols., 1950–67; supplement, 1990.
Théâtre, edited by Jacques Madaule and Jacques Petit. 2 vols., 1956; revised edition, 1965–67.
Oeuvres poétiques, edited by Stanislas Fumet. 1957.
Oeuvres en prose, edited by Jacques Petit and Charles Galperine. 1965.

Plays

Tête d'or. 1890; revised version (produced 1924), in L'Arbre, 1901; as Tete-d'or, translated by John S. Newberry, 1919.
La Ville. 1893; revised version (produced 1931), in L'Arbre, 1901; edited by Jacques Petit, 1967; as The City, translated by John S. Newberry, 1920.
L'Agamemnon, from the play by Aeschylus (produced 1963). 1896.
L'Échange (produced 1914). In L'Arbre, 1901; revised version (produced 1951), 1954; as The Trade, translated by Donald L. Holley and Jean-Pierre Krémer, 1995.

La Jeune Fille Violaine, in L'Arbre. 1901; revised version, as L'Annonce faite à Marie (produced 1912), 1912; revised version (produced 1948), 1948; as The Tidings Brought to Mary, translated by Louise Morgan Sill, 1916; also translated by Wallace Fowlie, in Two Dramas, 1960.

Le Repos du septième jour (produced 1928). In L'Arbre, 1901.

Partage de midi (produced 1921). 1906; revised version (produced 1948), 1914, 1949; as Break of Noon, translated by Wallace Fowlie, in Two Dramas, 1960; also translated by Jonathon Griffin, 1990.

L'Otage (produced 1913). 1911; edited by Jean-Pierre Kempf, 1977; as The Hostage, translated by Pierre Chavannes, 1917; also translated by John Heard, in Three Plays, 1945.

Protée, in Deux poèmes d'été. 1914; revised version (produced 1929), in Deux farces lyriques, 1927.

La Nuit de Noël 1914. 1915.

La Pain dur (produced in German, 1926; in French, 1949). 1918; edited by Jacques Petit, 1975, as Crusts, translated by John Heard, in Three Plays, 1945.

L'Ours et la lune (produced 1948). 1919.

Le Père humilié (produced in German 1928). 1920; as The Humiliation of the Father, translated by John Heard, in Three Plays, 1945.

Les Choéphores, music by Darius Milhaud, from the play by Aeschylus (produced 1935). 1920.

Les Euménides, music by Darius Milhaud, from the play by Aeschylus (produced 1949). 1920.

L'Homme et son désir, music by Darius Milhaud (ballet; produced 1921). In Le Livre de Christophe Colomb, 1929.

La Femme et son ombre (produced 1923). In Le Livre de Christophe Colomb, 1929.

Sous le rempart d'Athènes, music by Germaine Taillefer (produced 1929). 1928.

Le Soulier de satin. 1928–29; revised version (produced 1943), 1944; as The Satin Slipper, translated by John O'Connor, 1931.

Le Livre de Christophe Colomb, music by Darius Milhaud (produced 1930). 1929; as The Book of Christopher Columbus, translated anonymously, 1930.

Jeanne d'Arc au bûcher, music by Arthur Honegger (produced 1939). 1939.

La Sagesse; ou, La Parole du Festin, music by Darius Milhaud (broadcast, 1945; produced 1949). 1939.

L'Histoire de Tobie et de Sara (produced 1947). 1947; as Tobias and Sara, translated by Adele Fiske, in Port-Royal and Other Plays, edited by Richard Hayes, 1962.

L'Endormie. 1947.

Three Plays, translated by John Heard. 1945.

Two Dramas, translated by Wallace Fowlie. 1960.

Radio Play:: La Sagesse; ou, La Parole du Festin, 1945.

Verse

Vers d'exile. 1895.

Connaissance du temps. 1904.

Cinq grandes odes suivies d'un processional pour saluer le siècle nouveau. 1910; as Five Great Odes, translated by Edward Lucie Smith, 1967.

Cette heure qui est entre le printemps et l'été. 1913; as La Cantate à trois voix, 1931.

Corona benignitatis anni dei. 1915; as Coronal, translated by Sister Mary David, 1943.

Trois poèmes de guerre. 1915; as Three Poems of the War, translated by Edward J. O'Brien, 1919.

Autres poèmes durant la guerre. 1916.

Poèmes et paroles durant la guerre. 1916.

La Messe là-bas. 1919.

Poèmes de guerre. 1922.

Feuilles de saints. 1925.

Écoute, ma fille. 1934.

La Légende de Prakriti. 1934.

Poèmes et paroles durant la guerre de trente ans. 1945.

Visages radieux. 1946.

Paul Claudel répond les psaumes. 1948; as Psaumes: Traductions 1918–1959, edited by Renée Nantet and Jacques Petit, 1966.

Sainte Agnès et poèmes inédits. 1963.

A Hundred Movements for a Fan (haiku), translated by Andrew Harvey and Iain Watson. 1992

Other

Connaissance de l'est. 1900; enlarged edition, 1907; edited by Gilbert Gadoffre, 1973; as The East I Know, translated by Teresa Frances and William Rose Benét, 1914.

Art poétique. 1907; as Poetic Art, translated by Renée Spodheim, 1948.

Correspondance 1907–1914, with Jacques Rivière. 1926; as Letters to a Doubter, translated by Henry Longan Stuart, 1929.

Positions et propositions. 2 vols., 1928–34; vol. 1 as Ways and Crossways, translated by John O'Connor, 1933.

L'Oiseau noir dans le soleil levant. 1929.

Introduction à la peinture hollandaise. 1935.

Conversations dans le Loir-et-Cher. 1935.

Toi, qui es-tu? Tu quis es? 1936.

Figures et paraboles. 1936; edited by Andrée Hirschi, 1974.

Vitraux des cathédrales de France. 1937.

L'Aventure de Sophie. 1937.

Un poète regarde la croix. 1938; as A Poet Before the Cross, translated by Wallace Fowlie, 1958.

L'Épée et le miroir. 1939.

Contacts et circonstances. 1940.

La Rose et le rosaire. 1946.

L'Oeil écoute (essays). 1946; as The Eye Listens, translated by Elsie Pell, 1950.

Chine, photographs by Hélène Hoppenot. 1946.

Présence et prophétie. 1947.

Lord, Teach Us to Pray, translated by Ruth Bethell. 1947.

Sous le signe du dragon. 1948.

Paul Claudel interroge le Cantique des Cantiques. 1948.

Accompagnements. 1949.

Correspondance 1899–1926, with André Gide, edited by Robert Mallet. 1949; as Correspondence, translated by John Russell, 1952.

Emmaüs. 1950.

L'Évangile d'Isaïe. 1951.

Correspondance 1904–1938, with André Saurés. 1951.

Paul Claudel interroge l'Apocalypse. 1952.

Mémoires improvisés, edited by Jean Amrouche. 1954.

J'aime la Bible. 1955; as The Essence of the Bible, translated by Wade Baskin, 1957.

Correspondance 1918–1953, with Darius Milhaud, edited by Jacques Petit. 1961.

- I Believe in God: A Commentary on the Apostles Creed*, edited by Agnes du Sarment, translated by Helen Weaver. 1963.
- Au milieu des vitraux de l'Apocalypse*, edited by Pierre Claudel and Jacques Petit. 1966.
- Mes idées sur le théâtre*, edited by Jacques Petit and Jean-Pierre Kempf. 1966; as Claudel on the Theatre, translated by Christine Trollope, 1972.
- Journal*, edited by Jacques Petit and François Varillon. 2 vols., 1968–69.
- Correspondance 1908–1914*, with Louis Massignon, edited by Michel Malicet. 1973.
- Correspondance*, with Jean-Louis Barrault, edited by Michel Lioure. 1974.
- Chroniques du Journal de Clichy*, with François Mauriac (includes Claudel-Fontaine correspondence), edited by François Norlot and Jean Touzot. 1978.
- La Vague et le rocher: Paul Claudel, François Mauriac correspondance 1911–1954*, edited by Michel Malicet and Marie-Chantal Praicheux, 1989.
- Lettre à son fils Henri et sa famille*, edited by Marianne and Michel Malicet. 1990.
- Henri Pourrat-Paul Claudel: Correspondance*, edited by Michel Lioure. 1990.
- Translator, Poèmes, by Coventry Patmore. 1912.

*

Bibliography: Bibliographie des oeuvres de Claudel by Jacques Petit, 1973; Claudel and the English-Speaking World: A Critical Bibliography, 1973.

Critical Studies: The Double Image: Mutations of Christian Mythology in the Work of Four French Catholic Writers by Rayner Heppenstall, 1947; The Theme of Beatrice in the Plays of Claudel by Ernest Beaumont, 1954; The Poetic Drama of Claudel by Joseph Chiari, 1954; Paul Claudel by Wallace Fowlie, 1957; Paul Claudel: The Man and the Mystic by Louis Chaigne, 1961; Claudel and Aeschylus by William H. Matheson, 1965; The Inner Stage: An Essay on the Conflict of Vocations in the Early Works of Claudel by Richard Berchan, 1966; Claudel et l'univers chinois by Gilbert Gadoffre, 1968; Claudel: A Reappraisal by Richard M. Griffiths, 1968; Paul Claudel by Harold A. Waters, 1970; Claudel and Saint-John Perse by Ruth N. Horry, 1971; Claudel's Immortal Heroes: A Choice of Deaths by Harold Watson, 1971; The Prince and the Genie: A Study of Rimbaud's Influence on Claudel by John A. MacCombie, 1972; Paul Claudel's Le Soulier de satin: A Stylistic, Structuralist, and Psychoanalytic Interpretation by Joan S. Freilich, 1973; Two Against Time: A Study of the Very Present Worlds of Claudel and Charles Péguy by Joy Nachod Humes, 1978; In/stability: The Shape and Space of Claudel's Art by Lynne L. Gelber, 1980; Paul Claudel by Bettina L. Knapp, 1982; Paul Claudel: Biographie by Marie-Josèphe Guers, 1987; Claudel: Beauty and Grace by Angelo Caranfa, 1989; Mis-reading the Creative Impulse: The Poetic Subject in Rimbaud and Claudel, Restaged by Adrianna M. Paliyenko, 1997; The Instruction of Philosophy and Psychoanalysis by Tragedy: Jacques Lacan and Gabriel Marcel Read Paul Claudel by Ann Bugliani, 1999.

* * *

Despite the high praise of Charles Du Bos, who called him the greatest genius of the west, and despite the judgment of Jacques

Madaule, who compared him to Dante, Paul Claudel's place in literature and in Catholic thought is still vigorously disputed. At the time of his death, in his mid-eighties, he appeared as belligerent as ever, having maintained to the end not only his full powers as a writer but also his violent temper and his animosities. His detractors are still legion and his admirers come from many varying quarters differing widely in their religious, political, and aesthetic beliefs.

During his last year at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand, he read Baudelaire and Verlaine, but the first major revelation to Claudel of both a literary and spiritual order was to be Rimbaud. He has described in a passage justly celebrated and justly disputed the profound effect which the reading of the Illuminations had on him. He first came upon some of the prose poems in the July issue of La Vogue of 1886. To him it meant release from what he called the hideous world of Taine, Renan, and other Molochs of the 19th century. "J'avais la révélation du surnaturel," he wrote to Jacques Rivière.

After a spiritual experience at Christmas 1886, in Notre Dame, Claudel began to study the Bible, the history of the Church and its liturgy, and discovered that what he had once valued as poetry was indissolubly associated with religion. He attended Mallarmé's Tuesday evening gatherings and learned from the master of symbolism to look at the universe as if it were a text to be deciphered. To Rimbaud's doctrine on the power of poetic language and to Mallarmé's doctrine on the symbolism of the universe Claudel added the gigantic synthesis of Aquinas and the religious interpretation of metaphorical language.

Taken as a whole, Claudel's work is praise to God and praise to His creation. It does not reflect the exaltation of a mystic but is rather the expression of the natural joy of a man who has found an order in the universe and believes in a certain relationship between this world and the next. In whatever he wrote—poems, letters, plays, essays, Biblical exegesis—he steadfastly explored the central drama of the human soul engaged in its adventure with eternity. His dramas are not a combination of the comic and the tragic; they are works of one piece and one texture—simultaneously dramatic speech and poetry.

The French literary mind has been predominantly analytical in each century. Claudel's mind was more inclined toward the creation of a synthesis. His fundamental preoccupations are more metaphysical than is usual in French writers who tend to psychological and moralistic preoccupations. Moreover, the seeming bluntness of his style, its vehemence, its violence, separates his work from the central tradition of the French literary style. Claudel believed that at our birth we enter into a secret pact with all beings and all objects. The poet's mission is that of pointing out our relationship with all the realities of the world.

—Wallace Fowlie

See the essay on The Satin Slipper.

CLAUDIAN

Born: Claudius Claudianus in Alexandria, Egypt, c. AD 370. Family: Married in c. AD 404. Career: Went to Rome before 395, then lived in Milan for five years, from c. AD 395; became a successful court poet under the western emperor Honorius. He was a favourite of and spokesman for General Stilicho, defender of the Roman empire against the Goths and the Vandals. Died: Rome c. AD 404.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

[Works], edited by Ludwig Jeep. 2 vols., 1876–79; also edited by Theodor Birt, in Monumenta Germaniae historica, vol. 10, 1892, Julius Koch, 1893, and J.B. Hall, 1985; edited and translated (prose) by Maurice Platnauer [Loeb Edition], 2 vols., 1922; translated by A. Hawkins, 2 vols., 1817.

Works

De raptu Proserpine, edited by Ludwig Jeep. 1874; also edited by J.B. Hall, 1969; edited and translated by Claire Gruzelier (with commentary), 1993; as The Rape of Proserpine, translated by Leonard Digges, 1628, reprinted 1959; also translated by Jabez Hughes, 1714; Jacob G. Strutt, 1814; Henry E.J. Howard, 1854; Martin Pope, 1934.

Eidyllia, as The Phoenix of Claudian, translated by Arthur Smith(?). 1714.

Epigrammata, as De Sene Veronensi, translated by Andrew Symon. 1708.

Epithalamium for the Marriage of Honorius, translated by H. Isbell, in The Last Poets of Imperial Rome. 1971.

In Eutropium, edited by P. Fargues. 1933.

In Rufinum, edited by Harry L. Levy. 1935; translated as Rufinus; or, the Favourite, 1712; as Elegant History of Rufinus, translated by Jabez Hughes, in Miscellanies in Verse and Prose, 1737; commentary by Harry L. Levy, 1971.

Panegyric on the Third Consulate of Honorius, translated by William Warburton. 1724.

Panegyric on the Fourth Consulate of Honorius, edited and translated by William Barr. 1981.

Panegyricus de sexto consulatu Honorii Augusti, edited and translated by Michael Dewar, 1996.

*

Critical Studies: Claudian as an Historical Authority by James Crees, 1906; The Influence of Ovid on Claudian by Annette Hawkins Eaton, 1943; Secular Latin Poetry by F.J.E. Raby, 1957; The Use of Images by Claudius Claudianus by Peder G. Christiansen, 1969; Claudian, Poet of Declining Empire and Morals by Oswald A.W. Dilke, 1969; Claudian: Poetry and Propaganda at the Court of Honorius by Alan D.E. Cameron, 1970; Prolegomena to Claudian by J.B. Hall, 1986; A Concordance to Claudianus edited by Peder G. Christiansen, 1988; Claudian's In Eutropium, or, How, When, and Why to Slander a Eunuch by Jacqueline Long, 1996.

* * *

Claudian most deserves fame for resuscitating the secular traditions of Latin hexameter poetry. Roman historical and mythological epic, having thrived during the era of Virgil and Ovid, lapsed after that of Silius Italicus and Valerius Flaccus at the close of the 1st century AD. Claudian was not the first poet of the 4th century to revive these forms, but he was the most popular and influential.

Claudian was not born into Latin traditions, but in the Greek-speaking Egyptian metropolis of Alexandria. Like others of the same background, he became an itinerant hired poet (see Alan Cameron, "Wandering Poets: a Literary Movement in Byzantine Egypt" in Historia, 14, 1965); but Claudian, uniquely, travelled West. He first published in Rome on the New Year of 395, panegyricizing two young nobles of the ancient capital who had been named consuls for that year. To have a panegyric in verse revolutionized western fashion. Claudian also ingeniously turned the traditional structure to focus neither on the consuls themselves nor on the emperor who appointed them, but on their famous and recently deceased father Probus. He not only earned his commission for the immediate occasion, but also bid for patronage among Roman aristocrats who honoured Probus' memory.

The imperial court at Milan took up the bait. Claudian next celebrated the third consulate of the Western emperor Honorius in 396. Not only did he praise Honorius and forecast favourably for the year, as the occasion required, but he also introduced a hero behind the throne. Between the resplendent scene of Honorius' triumphal arrival at the Western court and the concluding prayers for world-wide triumphs of the Roman empire under Honorius' joint rule with his brother Arcadius, he inserted a scene in which Honorius' and Arcadius' father Theodosius entrusts the care of both sons to his son-in-law, the general Stilicho. This historically dubious claim, superfluous to the panegyric structure, launched a theme which Claudian continued to pursue in political poems for the next eight years: exaltation of Stilicho as the true preserver of Roman values and glory. Alan Cameron has argued that Claudian did not simply admire Stilicho but was actually commissioned to portray him flatteringly before Western aristocrats (Claudian: Poetry and Propaganda at the Court of Honorius). Cameron's interpretation has been accepted widely if not universally (see the reviews of Diegmar Dopp, Anzeiger für die Altertumswissenschaft, 28, 1975, and Christian Gnllka, Gnomon, 49, 1977); but certainly Stilicho did receive favourable press from Claudian, and manuscript evidence suggests that Stilicho sponsored collection and republication of Claudian's poems after he died (see J.B. Hall, Prolegomena to Claudian). Claudian's long tenure as court poet also guaranteed his works illustrious audiences.

The political relevance of many of Claudian's poems and his own social prominence, however, only made his work conspicuous. His artistry secured them long-lived popularity, just as it had secured his prominence. His major poems divide between three books of an unfinished mythological epic, De raptu Proserpine (The Rape of Proserpine), and historical or political poems; they include panegyrics of Honorius and other Western consuls including Stilicho; invectives against ministers of Arcadius who were hostile to Stilicho; poems celebrating Honorius' marriage to Stilicho's daughter, and epics that display Stilicho's triumphant generalship. All are dominated structurally by visual tableaux, reported speeches, and expostulations in the poet's own voice; this emphasis exceeds the norms of classical epic but resembles contemporary Greek epic and encomiastic poetry.

Claudian stirred emotions with full rhetorical verve. He drew out his central themes, finding ever newer points of view. His invective against the eunuch Eutropius, for example, calls attention to his emasculation in more than 60 separate passages. They range from explicit references, to meditations on effeminacy, to extended portraits casting Eutropius in the female roles of an abandoned heroine (burlesqued), a decaying bawd, and a bibulous old nursemaid. Modern critics sometimes deplore the endlessness of Claudian's fluency, but contemporary audiences clearly delighted in the panoplies of ideas and images that it spread. Michael Roberts has illuminated a late antique aesthetic preference for brilliance in poetic descriptions and construction as well as in visual arts (The Jewelled Style: Poetry and Poetics in Late Antiquity, 1989). The triumphal processions of Honorius in the panegyrics for his third, fourth, and sixth consulates provide lush examples with gleaming robes, glittering armour, and dragon-banners that rustle and hiss in the wind like real snakes.

The majority of Claudian's minor poems, elegant and fashionable epigrams, describe marvels of both nature and art. In "The Gothic War," a flash of light from Stilicho's white hair first tells the anxious Romans that they will soon be rescued, and shows how excitingly such details can figure in epic narrative. Curiously, this latter item almost alone in Claudian's poetry reveals what anyone looked like. Eutropius' ghastly decrepitude, insect-ridden scalp and flapping wrinkles, which contrasted with his gorgeous consular robes, demonstrate Claudian's use of description not for its own sake, but for its emotional impact. His dense allusions to earlier Roman poets display a poetic consciousness of the past that would also have stirred the emotions of listeners equally imbued with poetical traditions. They reinforce Claudian's explicit emphasis on Roman themes in his political poems and operate no less in the mythological The Rape of Proserpine (Gualandri, 1969, and Moroni, 1982).

Claudian's poems perfectly fulfilled the sensibilities of his age. They consequently reinforced them and set a trend for subsequent Latin epic. He can be particularly credited with reviving the epic form in Latin; in his political poems he fused it so successfully with encomium as to have invented a new genre, which later generations of poets perpetuated (Heinz Hofmann, "Überlegungen zu einer Theorie der nichtchristlichen Epik der lateinischen Spätantike," Philologus, 132, 1988). His political poems are thus seminal as well as vivid aesthetic documents, and, incidentally, major historical sources.

—Jacqueline Long

See the essay on The Rape of Proserpine.

CLAUS, Hugo

Born: Bruges, Belgium, 5 April 1929. Education: Primary education at various boarding schools; abandoned school before completing secondary education. Military service: 1949. Family: Married 1) Elly Overzier 1955, one son; relationship with Kitty Courbois and subsequently with Sylvia Kristel, who bore him a son; 2) Veerle de Wit, 1993. Career: Left home in 1946 to begin life as an independent artist and writer; lived in Paris, 1950–53, and Rome, 1953–55, and participated in the COBRA movement of avant-garde painters; moved to Ghent, 1955–66, and Nukerke, 1966–70, to build a career as a novelist, poet, playwright, painter, film and stage director, and author of film scenarios and opera libretti; incurred a four-month prison sentence (suspended) in 1968 for staging one of his plays featuring three nude men; moved to Amsterdam, 1970, back to Paris and then back to Ghent in 1978. Lives in Antwerp. Awards: In Belgium: Triennial prize for drama, 1955, 1967, 1973 and 1979; Triennial State prize for poetry, 1971; Triennial State prize for fiction, 1984; Triennial Culture prize of the Flemish Community, 1999. Dutch-Flemish awards: Constantijn Huygens prize, 1979; prize of Dutch Letters, 1986; prize of the Society of Dutch Letters, 1995. International awards: Prix Lugné-Poe (France), 1955; Ford Foundation grant (United States), 1959; Grand Prix de l'Humour Noir (France), 1989; Prix International Pier Paolo Pasolini (Italy), 1997; Aristeion prize (European Union), 1998; Premio Nonino (Italy), 2000; Preis für Europäische Poesie (City of Münster, Germany), 2001.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

- Gedichten*. 1965, 1979.
Acht toneelstukken. 1966.
Gedichten 1969–1978. 1979.
Gedichten 1948–1993. 1994.
Toneel I–IV. 1988–93.
Toneel. 1999.
Verhalen. 1999.
Een andere keer: de andere verhalen. 1999.
Selected Poems 1953–1973, edited by Theo Hermans, translated by Theo Hermans, Paul Brown and Peter Nijmeijer. 1986.
Four Works for the Theatre by Hugo Claus, edited by David Willinger, translated by David Willinger, Lucas Truys and Luc Deneulin. 1990.

Fiction

- De Metsiers*. 1950; as The Duck Hunt, translated by George Libaire, 1955; as Sister of Earth, translated by George Libaire. 1966.
De hondsdagen. 1952.
Natuurgetrouw. 1954.
De koele minnaar. 1956.
De zwarte keizer. 1958.
Het mes. 1961.
De verwondering. 1962.
Omtrent Deedee. 1963.
Natuurgetrouwer. 1969.
Schaamte. 1972.
Het jaar van de kreeft. 1972.
Jessica!. 1977.
Het verlangen. 1978; as Desire, translated by Stacey Knecht. 1997.
De verzoeking. 1981; as The Temptation, translated by David Willinger and Luc Deneulin, 1984, 1990.
Het verdriet van België. 1983; as The Sorrow of Belgium, translated by Arnold Pomerans, 1990.
De mensen hiernaast. 1985.
Een zachte vernieling. 1988.
Gilles en de nacht. 1989.
De zwaardvis. 1989; as The Swordfish, translated by Ruth Levitt, 1996.
Belladonna. 1994.
De geruchten. 1996.
Onvoltooid verleden. 1998.
Het laatste bed. 1998.
Een slaapwandeling. 2000.

Plays

- Een bruid in de morgen*. 1955.
Het lied van de moordenaar. 1957.
Suiker. 1958.
Mama, kijk, zonder handen!. 1959.
De dans van de reiger. 1962.

Vrijdag. 1969; as Friday, translated by Christopher Logue and the author, 1972; by David Willinger and Lucas Truys, 1986, 1990.
Tand om tand. 1970.
Het leven en de werken van Leopold II. 1970; as The Life and Works of Leopold II, translated by David Willinger and Lucas Truys, in An Anthology of Contemporary Belgian Plays, 1984.
Interieur. 1971.
Pas de deux. 1973.
Thuis. 1975; as Back Home, translated by David Willinger and Lucas Truys, in An Anthology of Contemporary Belgian Plays, 1984.
Het huis van Labdakos. 1977.
Jessica!. 1977.
De verzoeking. 1981.
Het haar van de hond. 1982; as The Hair of the Dog, translated by David Willinger and Lucas Truys, 1988, 1990.
Serenade. 1984; as Serenade, translated by David Willinger and Lucas Truys, 1985, 1990.
Gilles!. 1988.
Het schommelpaard. 1988.
Onder de torens. 1993.
De eieren van de kaaiman. 1996.
De verlossing. 1996.
Visite. 1996.
Winteravond. 1996; as Winter Evening, translated by Paul Charters, Kathryn Ronnau Bradbeer and Paul Vincent, in Modern Poetry in Translation (n.s.) 12, 1998.
De komedianten. 1997.

Poetry

Kleine reeks. 1947.
Registreren. 1948.
Zonder vorm van process. 1950.
Tancredo infrasonic. 1952.
Een huis dat tussen nacht en morgen staat. 1953.
Paal en perk. 1955.
De Oostakkerse gedichten. 1955.
Een gevefde ruiter. 1961.
Het teken van de hamster. 1963; as The Sign of the Hamster, translated by Paul Claes, Christine D'haen, Theo Hermans and Yann Lovelock, 1986.
Heer Everzwijn. 1970.
Van horen zeggen. 1970.
Dag, jij. 1971.
Figuratief. 1973.
De wangebeden. 1978.
Claustrum. 1980.
Almanak. 1982.
Alibi. 1985.
Sonnetten. 1988.
De sporen. 1993.
Wreed geluk. 1999.
De groeten. 2002.

*

Bibliography: Studie- en Documentatiecentrum Hugo Claus. [Online] <http://pcger46.uia.ac.be/homepage.htm>. Accessed June 2002.

Critical Studies: Het geclausuleerde beest by Theo Goovaert, 1962; Hugo Claus, traditie en experiment by Jean Weisgerber, 1970; Over

Claus' tonee by Jacques de Decker, 1971; Hugo Claus of Oedipus in het paradijs by Georges Wildemeersch, 1973; Claus Quadrifrons by Paul Claes, 1978; Over De Verwondering van Hugo Claus by Joris Duytschaever, 1979; Over De hondsdagen van Hugo Claus by G.F.H. Raat, 1980; De pen gaat waar het hart niet kan edited by Gerd de Ley, 1980; De mot zit in de mythe by Paul Claes, 1984; Claus-reading by Paul Claes, 1984; Hugo Claus by Freddy de Vree, 1984; Hugo Claus by Bert Kooijman, 1984; Over Hugo Claus via bestaande modellen, edited by H. Dütting, 1984; Onbewoonbare huizen zijn de woorden by Dirk de Geest, 1989; Het spiegelpaleis van Hugo Claus edited by Daan Cartens and Freddy de Vree, 1991; Dodelijke dikke wolken by Rudi van der Paardt and Freddy Decreus, 1992; Het paard begeerte by Johan Thielemans, 1994; Claus geheimschrift by Dina and Jean Weisgerber, 1995; Het teken van de ram. Jaarboek van de Claus-studie, yearbook from 1995; Hugo Claus—wat bekommert zich de leeuw om de vlooiën in zijn vacht? edited by Georges Wildemeersch, 1999; 'Claus the Chameleon' by Paul Claes in The Low Countries 1, 1993–94.

* * *

Hugo Claus' literary output, which runs to around 150 titles to date, is daunting for its complexity and diversity as well as for its size. At once the enfant terrible of contemporary Dutch-language writing and its most prized and celebrated author, his work ranges across genres and styles. He varies literary modes and linguistic registers with astonishing ease and alternates between elemental passion and political satire, unabashed naturalism and allusive erudition, Oedipal imagery and grotesque humour. A restless experimental streak runs through his entire oeuvre. His original output is supplemented with a large number of translations and adaptations, especially for the stage—including work by Shakespeare, Cyril Tourneur, Ben Jonson, Christopher Marlowe, Dylan Thomas, Noel Coward, Georg Büchner, Federico García Lorca, Seneca, Sophocles, Euripides, Aristophanes and others. He has also rewritten his own prose for the stage and vice versa.

An uncompromising, anarchic zest for life informs much of Claus' work, but he is not a writer given to pursuing a single theme or form. Indeed the other side of the insistence on the libidinal is Claus' expert use of allusion and wordplay, often deployed together in dense intertextual webs. His most important work of fiction, the epic novel Het verdriet van België (The Sorrow of Belgium), may be read autobiographically as an account of his own development as a writer. Set in the years before, during, and just after World War II, the book tells the story of a young Flemish boy who observes the chaotic world around him with wilful incomprehension and ironic detachment. Fragmented and kaleidoscopic, tender and carnivalesque, the novel presents a portrait of the artist as a recalcitrant young man but also offers biting social criticism and an engaging period evocation. In the end, however, the protagonist's decision to go his own stubbornly independent way is existential rather than political.

Although Claus' work is much too varied to allow the application of a single label to characterize it, it is, on the whole, more concerned with a violent distaste for the constraints imposed by social conventions, family ties, church and state than with any positive ideals. In that sense its hankering after freedom is overshadowed by a pervasive, illusionless pessimism. The dark, brooding secrets of the past which cloud personal and social relationships in many of his novels, stories, and plays appear both as Oedipal drives and as the signs of political and moral corruption. The only redeeming force is a strongly physical, blind love that does not ask questions but takes the here and now for what it is worth.

In all the genres that he practises Claus pushes his portrayal of human nature beyond the limits of conventional realism. As a result, some characters are larger than life and assume mythical proportions, while others turn into grimacing caricatures, primitive brutes or tormented victims. Like Francis Bacon's—and indeed his own—paintings, Claus' literary works intrigue and shock because they intensify the human condition to the point where its raw nerves are rendered visible through the distortion.

—Theo Hermans

COCTEAU, Jean (Maurice Eugène Clément)

Born: Maisons-Laffitte, France, 5 July 1889. Education: Educated at the Lycée Condorcet, Paris, and privately. Career: Entered Parisian literary and theatrical circles, giving readings and attending functions; cofounder, Shéhérazade magazine, 1909; collaborated with Diaghilev's Ballets Russes as librettist, designer and painter, from c. 1911; joined the Red Cross, 1914; co-editor, le Mot, 1914–15; contributor, Paris-Midi, 1919; travelled around the world, under commission to write articles for Paris-Soir, 1936–37; travelled to the United States, 1949. President, Jazz Academy; Honorary President, Cannes Film Festival. Awards: Louisons-Delluc prize, 1946; Avant-garde Film Grand prize, 1950. D.Litt.: Oxford University, 1956. Commander, Légion d'honneur, 1961. Member: Académie française, 1955; Royal Academy of Belgium; honorary member, American Academy and German Academy. Died: 11 October 1963.

PUBLICATIONS

Plays

Les Mariés de la Tour Eiffel (produced 1921). 1924; as The Eiffel Tower Wedding Party, translated by Dudley Fitts, in The Infernal Machine and Other Plays, 1963; as The Wedding on the Eiffel Tower, translated by Michael Benedikt, in Modern French Plays, edited by Benedikt and George Wellwarth, 1965.

Antigone (produced 1922; revised version, music by Arthur Honegger, produced 1927). 1927; as Antigone, translated by Carl Wildman, in Five Plays, 1961.

Roméo et Juliette, from the play by Shakespeare (produced 1924). 1926.

Orphée (produced 1926). 1927; as Orpheus, translated by Carl Wildman, 1933; also translated by John Savacool, in The Infernal Machine and Other Plays, 1963; Carol Martin-Sperry, 1972.

Le Pauvre Matelot, music by Darius Milhaud (produced 1927). 1927.

Oedipus Rex, music by Stravinsky (produced 1927). 1949.

Oedipe-Roi (produced 1937). 1928.

La Voix humaine (produced 1930). 1930; as The Human Voice, translated by Carl Wildman, 1951.

La Machine infernale (produced 1934). 1934; as The Infernal Machine, translated by Carl Wildman, 1936, revised version, in International Modern Plays, edited by Anthony Bent, 1950; also translated by Albert Bermel, in The Infernal Machine and Other Plays, 1963.

Les Chevaliers de la table ronde (produced 1937). 1937; as The Knights of the Round Table, translated by W.H. Auden, in The Infernal Machine and Other Plays, 1963.

Les Parents terribles (produced 1938). 1938; edited by R.K. Totton, 1972; translated by Jeremy Sans, 1994; as Intimate Relations, translated by Charles Franck, in Five Plays, 1962.

Les Monstres sacrés (produced 1940). 1940; as The Holy Terrors, translated by E.O. Marsh, in Five Plays, 1962.

La Machine à écrire (produced 1941). 1941; as The Typewriter, translated by Ronald Duncan, 1947.

Renaud et Armide (produced 1943). 1943.

L'Aigle à deux têtes (produced 1946). 1946; as The Eagle Has Two Heads, translated by Ronald Duncan, 1948; as The Eagle with Two Heads, translated by Carl Wildman, 1961.

Ruy Blas (screenplay). 1947.

Le Sang d'un poète (screenplay). 1948; as The Blood of a Poet, translated by Lily Pons, 1949; also translated by Carol Martin-Sperry, in Two Screenplays, 1968.

Un tramway nommé désir, from the play by Tennessee Williams (produced 1949). 1949.

Théâtre de poche (includes scenarios, sketches, and radio works). 1949.

Orphée (screenplay). 1951; as Orphée, in Three Screenplays, 1972.

Bacchus (produced 1951). 1952; as Bacchus, translated by Mary Hoeck, in The Infernal Machine and Other Plays, 1963.

La Belle et la bête (screenplay). 1958; as La Belle et la bête, translated by Carol Martin-Sperry, in Three Screenplays, 1972.

Cher menteur, from the play by Jerome Kilty (produced 1960). 1960.

Le Testament d'Orphée (screenplay). 1961; as The Testament of Orpheus, translated by Carol Martin-Sperry, in Two Screenplays, 1968.

L'Impromptu du Palais-Royal (produced 1962). 1962.

L'Éternel Retour (screenplay), as L'éternel retour, translated by Carol Martin Sperry, in Three Screenplays. 1972.

Screenplays: Le Sang d'un poète, 1930; La Comédie du bonheur, 1940; Le Baron fantôme, with Serge de Poligny, 1943; L'Éternel Retour, 1943; Les Dames du Bois du Boulogne, with Robert Bresson, 1945; La Belle et la bête, 1946; Ruy Blas, 1947; L'Aigle à deux têtes, 1948; Les Parents terribles, 1948; Noces de sable, 1949; Les Enfants terribles, 1950; Orphée, 1950; La Villa Santo-Sospino, 1952; La Corona Negra, 1952; Le Testament d'Orphée, 1960; La Princesse de Clèves, 1961; Thomas l'imposteur, 1965.

Ballet scenarios: Le Dieu bleu, 1912; Parade, 1917; Le Boeuf sur le toit, 1920; Le Train bleu, 1924; Le Jeune Homme et la mort, 1946; La Dame à la licorne, 1953; Le Poète et sa muse, 1959.

Fiction

Le Potomak. 1919; revised edition, 1934.

Le Grand Écart. 1923; as The Grand Écart, translated by Lewis Galantière, 1925; as The Miscreant, translated by Dorothy Williams, 1958.

Thomas l'imposteur. 1923; as Thomas the Imposter, translated by Lewis Galantière, 1925; as The Imposter, translated by Dorothy Williams, 1957.
Le Livre blanc. 1928; as The White Paper, 1957; as The White Book, translated by Margaret Crosland, 1989.
Les Enfants terribles. 1929; as Enfants Terribles, translated by Samuel Putnam, 1930; as Children of the Game, translated by Rosamond Lehmann, 1955; as The Holy Terrors, translated by Lehmann, 1957.
Le Fantôme de Marseille. 1936.
Le Fin du Potomak. 1940.
Deux travestis. 1947.

Verse

La Lampe d'Aladin. 1909.
Le Prince frivole. 1910.
La Danse de Sophocle. 1912.
Le Cap de Bonne-espérance. 1919.
Ode à Picasso. 1919.
Discours du grand sommeil. 1920.
Escales, with André Lhote. 1920.
Poésies 1917–20. 1920.
Vocabulaire. 1922.
Plain-chant. 1923.
La Rose de François. 1923.
Poésie 1916–23. 1924.
Cri écrit. 1925.
Prière mutilée. 1925.
L'Ange Heurtebise. 1926.
Opéra: Oeuvres poétiques 1925–27. 1927.
Morceaux choisis. 1932.
Mythologie. 1934.
Allégories. 1941.
Les Poèmes allemands. 1944.
Léone. 1945; translated as Leoun, 1960.
La Crucifixion. 1946.
Poèmes. 1948.
Le Chiffre. 1952.
Appogiatures. 1953.
Denelle d'éternité. 1953.
Clair-obscur. 1954.
Poèmes 1916–1955. 1956.
Gondole des morts. 1959.
Cérémonial espagnol du phénix; La Partie d'échecs. 1961.
Le Requiem. 1961.
Faire-part. 1969.
Tempest of Stars: Selected Poems (bilingual edition), translated by Jeremy Reed. 1992.

Other

Le Coq et l'arlequin: Notes autour de la musique. 1918; as Cock and Harlequin, translated by Rollo H. Myers, 1921.
Dans le ciel de la patrie. 1918.
Carte blanche. 1920.
La Noce massacrée. 1921.

Le Secret professionnel. 1922; Professional Secrets: An Autobiography, edited by Robert Phelps, translated by Richard Howard, 1970.
Dessins. 1923.
Picasso. 1923.
Ferat. 1924.
Le Mystère de l'oiseleur. 1925.
Lettre à Jacques Maritain. 1926.
Le Rappel à l'ordre (essays). 1926; as A Call to Order, translated by Rollo H. Myers, 1926.
Maison de santé: dessins. 1926.
Le Mystère laïc. 1928.
Une entrevue sur la critique avec Maurice Rouzaud. 1929.
25 Dessins d'un dormeur. 1929.
Essai de critique indirecte. 1932; as An Essay in Indirect Criticism, translated by Olga Rudge, 1936.
Opium. 1932; as Opium: Diary of an Addict, translated by Ernest Boyd, 1932; also translated by Margaret Crosland and Sinclair Rood, 1957.
Portraits-souvenir 1900–1914. 1935; as Paris Album 1900–1914, translated by Margaret Crosland, 1956; as Souvenir Portraits: Paris in the Belle Epoch, translated by Jesse Browner, 1991.
60 Dessins pour "Les Enfants terribles." 1935.
Mon Premier Voyage: Tour du monde en 80 jours. 1936; as Round the World Again in Eighty Days, translated by Stuart Gilbert, 1937; as My Journey Round the World, translated by Walter J. Strachan, 1958.
Énigme. 1939.
Dessins en marge du texte des "Chevaliers de la table ronde." 1941.
Le Greco. 1943.
Serge Lifar à l'opéra. 1944.
Portrait de Mounet-Sully. 1945.
La Belle et la bête: Journal d'un film. 1946; as The Diary of a Film, translated by Ronald Duncan, 1950.
Poésie critique. 1946.
Oeuvres complètes. 11 vols., 1946–51.
La Difficulté d'être. 1947; as The Difficulty of Being, translated by Elizabeth Sprigge, 1966.
Le Foyer des artistes. 1947.
Art and Faith: Letters Between Jacques Maritain and Jean Cocteau, translated by John Coleman. 1948.
Drôle de ménage. 1948.
Reines de France. 1948.
Lettre aux américains. 1949.
Maalesh: Journal d'une tournée de théâtre. 1949; as Maalesh: A Theatrical Tour in the Middle-East, translated by Mary C. Hoeck, 1956.
Dufy. 1949.
Orson Welles, with André Bazin. 1950.
Modigliani. 1950.
Jean Marais. 1951.
Entretiens autour du cinématographe, edited by André Fraigneau. 1951; revised edition, edited by André Bernard and Claude Gautéur, 1973; as Cocteau on Film, translated by Vera Traill, 1954; as The Art of Cinema, translated by Robin Buss, 1992.
Gide vivant, with Julien Green. 1952.
La Nappe du Catalan. 1952.

Journal d'un inconnu. 1953; as The Hand of a Stranger, translated by Alec Brown, 1956; as Diary of an Unknown, translated by Jesse Browner, 1988.

Aux confins de la Chine. 1955.

Lettre sur la poésie. 1955.

Le Dragon des mets. 1955.

Journals, edited and translated by Wallace Fowlie. 1956.

Adieu à Mistinguett. 1956.

L'Art est un sport. 1956.

Impression: Arts de la rue. 1956.

Cocteau chez les sirènes, edited by Jean Dauven. 1956.

Témoignage. 1956.

Entretiens sur la musée de Dresde, with Louis Aragon. 1957; as Conversations in the Dresden Gallery, 1983.

Erik Satie. 1957.

La Chapelle Saint-Pierre, Villefranche-sur-Mer. 1957.

La Corrida du premier mai. 1957.

Comme un miel noir (in French and English). 1958.

Paraprosodies, précédées de 7 dialogues. 1958.

La Salle des mariages, Hôtel de Ville de Menton. 1958.

La Canne blanche. 1959.

Poésie critique: Monologues. 1960.

Notes sur "Le Testament d'Orphée". 1960.

Le Cordon ombilical: Souvenirs. 1962.

Hommage. 1962.

Anna de Noailles oui et non. 1963.

Adieux d'Antonio Ordonez. 1963.

La Mésangère. 1963.

Entretien avec Roger Stéphane. 1964.

Entretien avec André Fraigneau. 1965.

Pégase. 1965.

My Contemporaries, edited and translated by Margaret Crosland. 1967.

Entre Radiguet et Picasso. 1967.

Lettres à André Gide, edited by Jean-Jacques Kihm. 1970.

Cocteau's World (selections), edited and translated by Margaret Crosland. 1972.

Cocteau, poète graphique, edited by Pierre Chanel. 1975.

Lettres à Milorad, edited by Milorad. 1975.

Le Passé défini (journals), edited by Pierre Chanel. 2 vols., 1986; as Past Tense: The Cocteau Diaries, translated by Richard Howard, 2 vols., 1987–90.

Lettres à Jean Marais. 1987.

Journal 1942–1945, edited by Jean Touzot. 1989.

Correspondance, 1911–1931, with Anna de Noailles, edited by Claude Mignot-Ogliastri. 1989.

Lettres à sa mère I: 1898–1918, edited by Pierre Caizergues. 1989.

Correspondance, with Lucien Clerque. 1989.

Correspondance, with Guillaume Apollinaire, edited by Pierre Caizergues and Michel Décaudin. 1991.

The Passionate Penis: Drawings, with introduction by Margaret Crosland. 1993.

A Day With Picasso: Twenty-four Photographs by Jean Cocteau by Billy Klüver

Editor, Almanach du théâtre et du cinéma. 1949.

Editor, Choix de lettres de Max Jacob à Jean Cocteau 1919–1944. 1949.

Editor, Amadeo Modigliani: Quinze dessins. 1960.

*

Critical Studies: Cocteau by Margaret Crosland, 1956; Scandal and Parade: The Theatre of Jean Cocteau by Neal Oxenhandler, 1957; Jean Cocteau: The History of a Poet's Age by Wallace Fowlie, 1966; Cocteau: The Man and the Mirror by Elizabeth Sprigge and Jean-Jacques Kihm, 1968; An Impersonation of Angels: A Biography of Jean Cocteau by Frederick Brown, 1968; Cocteau: A Biography by Francis Steegmuller, 1970; Jean Cocteau by Bettina L. Knapp, 1970, revised edition, 1989; Jean Cocteau and André Gide: An Abrasive Friendship by Arthur King Peters, 1973; Jean Cocteau by William Fifield, 1974; Jean Cocteau and His Films of Orphic Identity by Arthur B. Evans, 1977; The Esthetic of Cocteau by Lydia Crowson, 1978; Jean Cocteau and the French Scene edited by Arthur Peters, 1984; The Dance Theatre of Jean Cocteau by Frank W.D. Ries, 1985; Les Enfants terribles by Robin Buss, 1986; Jean Cocteau and the Dance by Erik Aschengreen, 1986; Jean Cocteau and His World by Arthur K. Peter, 1987; Reviewing Orpheus: Essays on the Cinema and Art of Jean Cocteau, edited by Cornelia A. Tsakiridou, 1997; Jean Cocteau by Patrick Mauriès, 1998.

* * *

Precociously Jean Cocteau published his first volume of verse at the age of 19. A small public flattered him and applauded the facile brilliance of the poems. Between 1917 and 1919, with three very different works, Cocteau became a public figure. Parade, of 1917, a ballet performed in Rome, was an early experiment with the theatre. Le Coq et l'arlequin (Cock and Harlequin), a manifesto against the disciples of Debussy and Wagner, revealed his interest in aesthetics and his powers as a critic. Le Cap de Bonne-espérance [The Cape of Good Hope], a volume of war poems, placed him in the ranks of the best young poets. Poetry was the mark of all three works, and the principle which was thereafter to direct Cocteau's varied activities.

His sentence is swift and seemingly lucid, but the content is mysterious and enigmatical. Cocteau's style became a manner of expressing complicated matters with discerning simplicity. The poems of Vocabulaire contained the key words of his poetic experience, symbols and characters projected out of his imagination that were to form in time his mythology—episodes, myths, and characters charged with the duty of narrating the poet's drama. Kidnappers, sailors, angels, and cyclists appear and disappear as if searching for their poet.

The play Orphée (Orpheus), performed in Paris in 1926 by Georges and Ludmilla Pitoëff, was his first work to reach a fairly wide public. In Orpheus, the poet appears to be the combined characters of Orpheus and Angel Heurtebise. The action of the play is both familiar and esoteric; in it Orpheus is both poet and hierophant, both husband and priest.

Les Enfants terribles (The Holy Terrors) was written in three weeks and published in 1929. This book has now become a classic, both as a novel belonging to the central tradition of the short French novel, and as a document of historical-psychological significance in the study it offers of the type of adolescent referred to in the title. The intertwined destinies of brother and sister, Paul and Elisabeth, with the dark forbidding figure of Dargelos behind them, provide an unusual picture of adolescence in its actions and speech and games.

The theme of Cocteau's first film, Le Sang d'un poète (The Blood of a Poet), was an idea close to the romantics a century earlier, in which the poet writes with his own blood. Much later, in the film Orphée Cocteau developed this lesson of the poet and borrowed from

The Blood of a Poet and his play Orpheus. These films are two esoteric poems for the screen.

In his plays, as in La Machine infernale (The Infernal Machine), on the Oedipus theme, Cocteau presented experimentations on the stage with the enthusiasm of a dramatist enamoured of the theatre and of the idea of a spectacle. Between the death of Apollinaire in 1918 and his own death in 1963, Cocteau occupied an active position in all the domains of French art.

—Wallace Fowlie

See the essays on The Holy Terrors and The Infernal Machine.

COLETTE, (Sidonie-Gabrielle)

Born: Saint-Saveur en Puisaye, France, 28 January 1873. Education: Educated at local school to age 16. Family: Married 1) the writer Henry Gauthier-Villars (“Willy”) in 1893 (divorced 1910); 2) Henry de Jouvenal in 1912 (divorced 1925), one daughter; 3) Maurice Goudekot in 1935. Career: Actress and revue performer, 1906–27; columnist, 1910–19, and literary editor, 1919–24, Le Matin; drama critic, La Revue de Paris, 1929, Le Journal, 1934–39, L’Éclair, and Le Petit Parisien; operated a beauty clinic, Paris, 1932–33. Awards: Chevalier, 1920, officer, 1928, commander, 1936, and grand officer, 1953, Légion d’honneur; City of Paris Grande Médaille, 1953. Member: Belgian Royal Academy, 1936; member, 1945, and president, 1949, Académie Goncourt; honorary member, American Academy, 1953. Died: 3 August 1954.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Works. 17 vols., 1951–64.

Oeuvres complètes. 16 vols., 1973.

Collected Stories, edited by Robert Phelps. 1983.

Oeuvres, edited by Claude Pichois. 1984–.

Fiction

Claudine à l’école, with Willy. 1900; as Claudine at School, translated by Janet Flanner, 1930; also translated by H. Mirande, 1930; Antonia White, 1956.

Claudine à Paris, with Willy. 1901; as Claudine in Paris, 1931; as Young Lady of Paris, translated by James Whitall, 1931; also translated by Antonia White, 1958.

Claudine amoureuse, with Willy. 1902; as Claudine en ménage, 1902; as The Indulgent Husband, translated by Frederick A. Blossom, 1935; as Claudine Married, translated by Antonia White, 1960.

Claudine s’en va, with Willy. 1903; as The Innocent Wife, translated by Frederick A. Blossom, 1934; as Claudine and Annie, translated by Antonia White, 1962.

Minne; Les Égarements de Minne. 2 vols., 1903–05; revised version, as L’Ingénue libertine, 1909; as The Gentle Libertine, translated by Rosemary Carr Benét, 1931; as The Innocent Libertine, translated by Antonia White, 1968.

La Retraite sentimentale. 1907; as Retreat from Love, translated by Margaret Crosland, 1974.

Les Vrilles de la vigne. 1908.

La Vagabonde. 1911; as The Vagrant, 1912; as Renée la vagabonde, translated by Charlotte Remfry-Kidd, 1931; as The Vagabond, translated by Enid McLeod, 1954.

L’Entrave. 1913; as Recaptured, translated by Viola Gerard Garvin, 1931; as The Shackle, translated by Antonia White, 1963.

Les Enfants dans les ruines. 1917.

Dans la foule. 1918.

Mitsou; ou, Comment l’esprit vient aux filles. 1919; as Mitsou; or, How Girls Grow Wise, translated by Jane Terry, 1930.

La Chambre éclairée. 1920.

Chéri. 1920; as Chéri, translated by Janet Flanner, 1929; also translated by Roger Senhouse, 1974.

Le Blé en herbe. 1923; as The Ripening Corn, translated by Phyllis Mégroz, 1921; as The Ripening, translated by Ida Zeitlin, 1932; as The Ripening Seed, translated by Roger Senhouse, 1956.

La Femme cachée. 1924; as The Other Woman, translated by Margaret Crosland, 1971.

Quatre saisons. 1925.

La Fin de Chéri. 1926; as The Last of Chéri, translated anonymously, 1932; also translated by Viola Gerard Garvin, 1933; Roger Senhouse, 1951.

La Naissance du jour. 1928; as A Lesson in Love, translated by Rosemary Carr Benét, 1932; as Morning Glory, 1932; as The Break of Day, translated by Enid McLeod, 1961.

La Seconde. 1929; as The Other One, translated by Elizabeth Tait and Roger Senhouse, 1931; as Fanny and Jane, translated by Viola Gerard Garvin, 1931.

Paradis terrestres. 1932.

La Chatte. 1933; as The Cat, translated by Morris Bentinck, 1936, also translated by Antonia White, 1955; as Saha the Cat, 1936.

Duo. 1934; as Duo, translated by Frederick A. Blossom, 1935; also translated by Margaret Crosland, with The Toutounier, 1974; as The Married Lover, translated by Marjorie Laurie, 1935.

Bella-Vista. 1937.

Le Toutounier. 1939; as The Toutounier, translated by Margaret Crosland, with Duo, 1974.

Chambre d’hôtel. 1940; in Julie de Carneilhan and Chance Acquaintances, translated by Patrick Leigh Fermor, 1952.

Julie de Carneilhan. 1941; as Julie de Carneilhan, in Julie de Carneilhan and Chance Acquaintances translated by Patrick Leigh Fermor, 1952.

Le Képi. 1943.

Gigi et autres nouvelles. 1944; as Gigi, translated by Roger Senhouse, 1952.

Stories, translated by Antonia White. 1958; as The Tender Shoot and Other Stories, 1959.

Plays

En camarades (produced 1909). In Oeuvres complètes, 15, 1950.

Claudine, music by Rodolphe Berger, from the novel by Colette (produced 1910). 1910.

Chéri, with Léopold Marchand, from the novel by Colette (produced 1921). 1922; translated as Cheri, 1959.

La Vagabonde, with Léopold Marchand, from the novel by Colette (produced 1923). 1923.

L'Enfant et les sortilèges, music by Maurice Ravel (produced 1925). 1925; as The Boy and the Magic, translated by Christopher Fry, 1964.

La Décapitée (ballet scenario), in Mes Cahiers. 1941.

Gigi, with Anita Loos, from the story by Colette (produced 1951). 1952; in French, 1954.

Jeune filles en uniform, Lac aux dames, Divine (screenplays), in Au Cinéma. 1975.

Screenplays: La Vagabonde, 1917, remake, 1931; La Femme cachée, 1919; Jeunes filles en uniform (French dialogue for German film Mädchen in Uniform), 1932; Lac aux dames, 1934; Divine, 1935.

Other

Dialogues de bêtes. 1904; enlarged edition, as Sept dialogues de bêtes, 1905; as Douze dialogues de bêtes, 1930; as Barks and Purrs, translated by Marie Kelly, 1913; as Creatures Great and Small, translated by Enid McLeod, 1951.

L'Envers du music-hall. 1913; as Music-Hall Sidelights, translated by Anne-Marie Callimachi, 1957.

Prrou, Poucette, et quelques autres. 1913; revised edition, as La Paix chez les bêtes, 1916; as Cats, Dogs, and I, translated by Alexandre Gagarine, 1924; also translated by Enid McLeod, in Creatures Great and Small, 1951.

Les Heures longues 1914–1917. 1917.

La Maison de Claudine. 1922; as The Mother of Claudine, translated by Charles King, 1937; as My Mother's House, translated by Enid McLeod and Una Vicenzo Troubridge, with Sido, 1953.

Le Voyage égoïste. 1922; translated in part by David Le Vay as Journey for Myself: Selfish Memoirs, 1971.

Rêverie du nouvel an. 1923.

Aventures quotidiennes. 1924; translated by David Le Vay, in Journey for Myself: Selfish Memoirs, 1971.

Renée Vivien. 1928.

Sido. 1929; as Sido, translated by Enid McLeod, with My Mother's House, 1953.

Histoires pour Bel-Gazou. 1930.

La Treille Muscate. 1932.

Prisons et paradis. 1932; translated in part by David Le Vay, in Places, 1970.

Ces plaisirs. 1932; as Le Pur et l'impur, 1941; as The Pure and the Impure, translated by Edith Dally, 1933, and by Herma Briffault, 1968; as These Pleasures, translated anonymously, 1934.

La Jumelle noire (theatre criticism). 4 vols., 1934–38.

Mes apprentissages. 1936; as My Apprenticeships, translated by Helen Beauclerk, 1957.

Chats. 1936.

Splendeur des papillons. 1937.

Mes cahiers. 1941.

Journal à rebours. 1941; as Looking Backwards, translated by David Le Vay 1975.

De ma fenêtre. 1942; enlarged edition, as Paris de ma fenêtre, 1944; translated by David Le Vay, in Looking Backwards, 1975.

De la patte à l'aile. 1943.

Flore et Pomone. 1943; as Flowers and Fruit, edited by Robert Phelps, translated by Matthew Ward, 1986.

Nudités. 1943.

Broderie ancienne. 1944.

Trois . . . six . . . neuf. 1944.

Belles Saisons. 1945; as Belles Saisons: A Colette Scrapbook, edited by Robert Phelps, 1978.

Une amitié inattendue (correspondence with Francis Jammes), edited by Robert Mallet. 1945.

L'Étoile vespérale. 1946; as The Evening Star: Recollections, translated by David Le Vay, 1973.

Pour un herbier. 1948; as For a Flower Album, translated by Roger Senhouse, 1959.

Oeuvres complètes. 15 vols., 1948–50.

Trait pour trait. 1949.

Journal intermittent. 1949.

Le Fanal bleu. 1949; as The Blue Lantern, translated by Roger Senhouse, 1963.

La Fleur de l'âge. 1949.

En pays connu. 1949.

Chats de Colette. 1949.

Paysages et portraits. 1958.

Lettres à Hélène Picard, edited by Claude Pichois. 1958.

Lettres à Marguerite Moréno, edited by Claude Pichois. 1959.

Lettres de la vagabonde, edited by Claude Pichois and Roberte Forbin. 1961.

Lettres au petit corsaire, edited by Claude Pichois and Roberte Forbin. 1963.

Earthly Paradise: An Autobiography Drawn from Her Lifetime of Writing, edited by Robert Phelps, translated by Helen Beauclerk and others. 1966.

Places (miscellany; in English), translated by David Le Vay, 1970.

Contes de mille et un matins. 1970; as The Thousand and One Mornings, translated by Margaret Crosland and David Le Vay. 1973.

Journey for Myself: Selfish Memoirs (selection), translated by David Le Vay. 1971.

Lettres à ses pairs, edited by Claude Pichois and Roberte Forbin. 1973.

Au cinéma, edited by Alain and Odette Virmaux. 1975.

Letters from Colette, edited and translated by Robert Phelps. 1980.

*

Bibliography: Colette: An Annotated Primary and Secondary Bibliography, compiled and annotated by Donna M. Norell, 1993.

Critical Studies: Madame Colette: A Provincial in Paris, 1952, and Colette: The Difficulty of Loving, 1973, both by Margaret Crosland; Colette by Elaine Marks, 1960; Colette by Margaret Davies, 1961; Colette by Robert D. Cottrell, 1974; Colette: A Taste for Life by Yvonne Mitchell, 1975; Colette: Free and Fettered by Michèle Sarde, translated by Richard Miller, 1980; Colette: The Woman, The Writer edited by Erica M. Eisinger and Mari McCarty, 1981; Colette by Joan Hinde Stewart, 1983; Colette by Joanna Richardson, 1983; Colette: A Passion for Life by Genevieve Dormann, translated by David Macey, 1985; Colette by Allan Massie, 1986; Colette by Nicola Ward Jouve, 1987; Colette: A Life by Herbert Lottman, 1991; Colette by Diana Holmes, 1991; Colette and the Fantom Subject of Autobiography by Jerry Aline Flieger, 1992; Colette: A Study of the Short Fiction by Dana Strand, 1995; Creating Colette by Claude Francis and Fernande Gontier, 1998; Secrets of the Flesh: A Life of Colette by Judith Thurman, 1999; Colette, Beauvoir, and Duras: Age and Women Writers by Bethany Ladimer, 1999.

* * *

Colette began her literary career under the tutelage of a man, her husband Willy; her first novels were written in collaboration with him and were published under his name. But the partnership was not a happy one, and after their divorce she branched out on her own. She wrote many more books, and survived into the second half of the 20th century, but she is essentially a fin de siècle writer who captures with great finesse and depth of perception the particular world which we call the belle époque: middle-class society in France (especially Paris) before 1914. She is particularly adept at exploring human relationships, such as the tragic love of a young man for a woman of 50 in Chéri and La Fin de Chéri (The Last of Chéri), or a husband's destructive jealousy of his wife in Duo, but she also writes with great sensitivity about children—in, for instance, Claudine à l'école (Claudine at School), her first book—and about nature, especially animals. This is not to imply, however, that she is a sentimental writer, quite the reverse: there is a toughness and a sharpness in her analysis of her characters' moods and whims which is firmly in the great French tradition of psychological precision inaugurated by Madame de Lafayette and continued by Constant and Stendhal. At her best she sustains comparison with these illustrious forebears in her unclouded perception of the ravages of love.

But her books, fine as some of them are, constitute only a part of her legacy. Like George Sand nearly a century earlier she worked hard as a professional woman of letters, and even, after her divorce from Willy, plunged for a time into the gruelling life of a professional actress and performer. This was a brave and original thing to do then, but it is characteristic of the lack of pretentiousness and of the non-sense attitude manifested in her fiction. Since she had to earn her own living after the break with Willy, she put her talents to good use. Unsentimental in her attitudes as in her art, she accepted that if she was to be free and independent she had to raise income by her own unaided efforts. Like Simone de Beauvoir, who is perhaps more of an intellectual though not necessarily more intelligent, she may in the last analysis be a minor writer only, but there is no doubt that she is a great woman, a figure of whom women of today can be proud. In spite of knowing great personal unhappiness in her younger days, she lived to become one of most famous and honoured writers of her generation, and this, in a male-dominated society, is no small achievement.

—John Fletcher

See the essay on Chéri.

COLONNA, Vittoria

Born: Colonna Castle, Marino (near Rome), Papal States, 25 February 1492. Family: Married Ferrante Francesco D'Avalos, Marquis of Pescara, in 1509 (died in battle, 1525). Career: Lived in the convents of Santa Caterina, Viterbo, and San Silvestro, Rome, after her husband's death (although she did not become a nun), and began to write poetry; became a leading literary figure to whom many significant humanist writers dedicated their works: had notable friendships with Pietro Bembo, q.v., Baldassarre Castiglione, q.v., and, particularly, Michelangelo (who painted her, and to whom she dedicated poetry). Died: 1547.

PUBLICATIONS

Collection

Rime e lettere, edited by E. Saltini. 1860.

Verse

Rime. 1538; revised edition, 1539; edited by Pietro Ercole Visconti, 1840, and by Alan Bullock, 1982; selections translated by Alethea J. Lawley, in Vittoria Colonna, 1888, anonymously, in The "In Memoriam" of Italy: A Century of Sonnets from the Poems of Vittoria Colonna, 1894, and by Joseph Tusiani, in Italian Poets of the Renaissance, 1971.

Other

Lettere inedite, edited by Giuseppe Piccioni. 1875.

Carteggio (correspondence), edited by Ermanno Ferrero and Giuseppe Müller. 1889; annotated by Domenico Tordi, 1892.

*

Critical Studies: Vittoria Colonna: Her Life and Poems by Maria Roscoe, 1868; Vittoria Colonna by Alethea J. Lawley, 1888; The Romance of Woman's Influence by Alice Corkran, 1906; Vittoria Colonna and Some Account of Her Friends and Her Times by Maud F. Jerrold, 1906; La vita e l'opera di Vittoria Colonna by A.A. Bernardy, 1927; Vittoria Colonna by Thomas Pawsey, 1953; "A Hitherto Unexplored Manuscript of One Hundred Poems by Vittoria Colonna in the Biblioteca Nazionale Centrale" by Alan Bullock, in Italian Studies, 21, 1966; Un cénacle humaniste de la Renaissance autour de Vittoria Colonna châtelaine d'Ischia by Suzanne Therault, 1968; "Vittoria Colonna" by Roland Bainton, in Women of the Reformation in Germany and Italy, 1971; "Vittoria Colonna's Friendship with the English Cardinal Reginald Pole" by Diane Dyer, in Riscontri, 7(1–2), 1985; "Neoplatonism in Vittoria Colonna's Poetry: From the Secular to the Divine" by Dennis J. McAuliffe, in Ficino and Renaissance Neoplatonism edited by Olga Zorzi Pugliese, 1986; "Vittoria Colonna: Child, Woman and Poet" by Joseph Gibaldi, in Women Writers of the Renaissance and Reformation edited by Katharina M. Wilson, 1987.

* * *

Renaissance Italy produced an extraordinary number of talented women writers, most of whom remain forgotten. Despite the advances in feminist scholarship that have brought the work of many earlier women writers back into focus, the Italian poets of the 15th and 16th centuries remain, for the most part, in obscurity. Vittoria Colonna is probably the best known of these poets, and was described by Buckhardt as the "most famous woman in Italy." Born into a noble family and married young, she was widowed at the age of 35 and never remarried. She moved to the Convent of San Silvestro in Rome, though did not actually join a religious order, using it as a base from which to travel extensively throughout Italy. She enjoyed close friendships with a number of leading contemporary intellectuals and artists, including Pietro Bembo, the cardinal-poet who encouraged her to write her own poetry, Castiglione, and Michelangelo. Her friendship with Michelangelo, in particular, led to an exchange of poems and letters that continued until her death in 1547, when Michelangelo wrote a series of moving poems about his loss, describing her as his “sun of suns,” the woman whose strength in life lifted him closer to God.

Though Colonna was a Beatrice figure to Michelangelo, her own poetry was not written for any single person. Unlike Gaspara Stampa or Veronica Franco, two other important women poets of her day, her poetry does not deal with the delights of physical passion or with disappointment and unrequited love. Her love poems, written after her husband’s death on the battlefield, are full of sadness, and although she uses the conventions of the Petrarchan tradition, her imagery is particularly powerful, and she writes of the illuminating force of her memories with great energy and power. Curiously, however, her first known poem, written when her husband was still alive, is completely different in tone. Her “Epistle to Ferrante Francesco d’Avalos, Her Husband, After the Battle of Ravenna” (written 1512) is an angry poem protesting about his preference for war over staying at home with his young wife:

You live happily and have no cares:
 thinking only of your new won fame,
 you care not if I go hungry for your love;
 but I, with anger and sadness in my face, lie in your bed, abandoned and alone.

Reluctant to publish her poems, Colonna finally allowed a collection to appear in 1538, and it is clear that she saw poetry as an essentially private activity, even after the poems had come out and she had begun to be acclaimed as a major poet. (Some 20 editions appeared in the 16th century). Her “love poems” were written in the years immediately after her husband’s death, and she then began to write what came to be called her “spiritual poems.” Her long poem, “Poi ch’il mio sol, d’eterni raggi cinto” (“The Triumph of Christ’s Cross”) praises the glories of divine love over worldly passions:

Blessed is she who scorned worldly fruit, root and all, for now from her Lord
 she receives other, everlasting sweetness.

Divine love for Colonna is not a source of anguish or torment, it is a fount of perfection, a healing, consoling beauty. She appeals to Christ to tear off the veils, to unfasten the chains that have bound her in darkness. The imagery of her “spiritual poems” depicts a gentle Christ, bringing nourishment and consolation, a figure of healing, redemption, and liberation. Significantly, she writes movingly of Mary, whose suffering as Christ’s mother provides a model for women, and of Mary Magdalene. In a sonnet on Mary Magdalene, “La bella donna, a cui dolente preme” [The Beautiful Woman Oppressed by Sorrows], she depicts Mary’s loneliness and desperation at being abandoned by man and God, and contrasts that anguish with the security offered by the vision of the risen Christ in the garden:

And those strong men, privileged by grace, huddled together in fear;
 the true Light seemed to them merely a shadow.

So that, if truth is not overwhelmed by falsehood we must grant to women all the prize of having more loving and more constant hearts.

In Colonna’s exquisitely crafted Petrarchan sonnets, through her Neoplatonic idealism, there is a clear portrait of a world of binary oppositions, a world in which women are forced to submit passively to whatever society decreed, while men go out into that world to try and change it through their actions. Yet, while she recognizes the inevitability of this pattern of behaviour, Colonna also protests against the injustice of it. From her early poem angrily chiding her military husband for leaving her at home uncared-for, to her later poetry extolling the joys that illuminate the heart of Mary Magdalene, she seems to be consistently demanding to be heard and speaking out for other women in similar positions. Her poetry is full of references to other women’s pain; “Mentre la nave mia, lungi dal porto,” one of her longer “love poems,” compares her own suffering and wifely resignation to that of women from classical mythology—to Penelope and Laodamia, Ariadne and Medea, or Portia, wife of Brutus, the noblest Roman of them all—while “Poi ch’il mio sol, d’eterni raggi cinto” depicts the Virgin Mary and Mary Magdalene as examples of supreme womanhood.

Colonna’s language has a clarity and precision that testify to her great poetic talent. In an age of many superbly gifted poets (and even more derivative, second-rate ones) her voice comes through powerfully and directly. She deserves to be more widely read and translated, because her poetry speaks to women (and men) of all times.

—Susan Bassnett

CORNEILLE, Pierre

Born: Rouen, France, June 1606; elder brother of the writer Thomas Corneille. Education: Educated in Jesuit college, Rouen, 1615–22; studied law, 1622–24, licensed lawyer, 1624. Family: Married Marie de Lampérière in 1641; seven children. Career: Member of the Rouen Parlement, 1629–50; held offices as King’s advocate in water and forests court and in Rouen port Admiralty court. Lived in Paris after 1662. Elected to the Académie française, 1647. Died: 1 October 1684.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Oeuvres, edited by Charles Marty-Leaveaux. 12 vols., 1862–68.
Oeuvres complètes, edited by A. Stegman. 1963.
Oeuvres complètes, edited by Georges Couton. 3 vols., 1980–87.
Théâtre complet, edited by Alain Niderst. 1984–.
Le Cid; Cinna; Polyuct: Three Plays, translated by Noel Clark. 1993.
Three Masterpieces: The Liar, The Illusion, Le Cid, translated and adapted by Ranjit Bolt. 2000.

Plays

- Mélite; ou, Les Fausses Lettres* (produced 1629–30). 1633; translated as Mélite, 1776.
- Clitandre; ou, L'Innocence délivrée* (produced 1630–31). 1632.
- La Veuve; ou, Le Traître trahi* (produced 1631–32). 1634.
- La Galerie du Palais; ou, L'Amie rivale* (produced 1632–33). 1637; edited by Milorad R. Margitic, 1981.
- La Suivante* (produced c. 1633–34). 1637; edited by Milorad R. Margitic, 1978.
- La Place Royale; ou, L'Amoureux extravagant* (produced c. 1633–34). 1637.
- Médée* (produced c. 1634–35). 1639; edited by André de Leysac, 1978.
- La Comédie des Tuileries*, with others (produced 1635). 1638.
- L'Illusion comique* (produced 1635–36). 1639; as The Theatrical Illusion, with The Cid and Cinna, 1975; as The Illusion, with The Liar, 1989; as The Comedy of Illusion, translated with introduction by Lynette R. Muir, 2000.
- Le Cid* (produced 1637). 1637; revised version, 1682; translated as The Cid, 1637; several subsequent translations.
- L'Aveugle de Smyrne*, with Rotrou and others (produced 1637). 1638.
- Horace* (produced 1640). 1641; translated as Horatius, 1656; as Horace, in The Chief Plays of Corneille, 1952; translated by Albert Bernell, 1962; also translated by Alan Brownjohn, 1996.
- Cinna; ou, La Clémence d'Auguste* (produced 1642). 1643; as Cinna's Conspiracy, 1713; also translated as Cinna.
- Polyeucte, Martyr* (produced 1642–43). 1643; translated as Polyeuctes, 1655; as Polyeucte, in The Chief Plays of Corneille, 1952; as Polyeuctus, with The Liar and Nicomèdes, 1980.
- La Mort de Pompée* (produced 1643–44). 1644; as Pompey the Great, 1664; as La Mort de Pompée, translated by Lacey Lockert, in Moot Plays of Corneille, 1959.
- Le menteur* (produced 1643–44). 1644; as The Mistaken Beauty; or, The Liar, 1685; as The Lying Lover, 1717; as The Liar, with Polyeuctus and Nicomèdes, 1980.
- Oeuvres* (plays). 1644; and later editions.
- La Suite du menteur* (produced 1644–45). 1645.
- Rodogune, Princesse des Parthes* (produced 1644–45). 1645; translated as Rodogune, 1765.
- Théodore, vierge et martyre* (produced 1645–46). 1646 or 1647.
- Héraclius, Empereur d'Orient* (produced 1646–47). 1647; as Heraclius, Emperor of the East, 1664.
- Andromède* (produced 1650). 1650.
- Don Sanche d'Aragon* (produced 1649–50). 1650; as The Conflict, in Plays and Poems, 1798; as Don Sanche d'Aragon, translated by Lacey Lockert, in Moot Plays of Corneille, 1959.
- Nicomède* (produced 1651). 1651; translated as Nicomede, 1671.
- Pertharite, Roi des Lombards* (produced 1651–52). 1653.
- Oedipe* (produced 1659). 1659.
- La Conquête de la toison d'or* (produced 1660). 1661.
- Sertorius* (produced 1662). 1662; as Sertorius, translated by Lacey Lockert, in Moot Plays of Corneille, 1959.
- Sophonisbe* (produced 1663). 1663.
- Othon* (produced 1664). 1665; as Othon, translated by Lacey Lockert, in Moot Plays of Corneille, 1959.
- Agésilas* (produced 1666). 1666.
- Attila, Roi des Huns* (produced 1667). 1667; as Attila, translated by Lacey Lockert, in Moot Plays of Corneille, 1959.
- Tite et Bérénice* (produced 1670). 1671.

- Psyché*, with Molière and Quinault, music by Lully (produced 1671). 1671.
- Pulchérie* (produced 1672). 1673.
- Suréna, Général des Parthes* (produced 1674). 1675; translated as Surenas, 1969.

Other

- Oeuvres diverses*. 1738.
- Writings on the Theatre*, edited by H.T. Barnwell. 1965.
- Translator, L'Imitation de Jésus-Christ, by Thomas à Kempis. 1651–56.
- Translator, Louanges de la Sainte Vierge, by St. Bonaventure. 1665.
- Translator, L'Office de la Sainte Vierge, by St. Bonaventure. 1670.

*

Critical Studies: The Classical Moment: Studies of Corneille, Molière, and Racine by Martin Turnell, 1947; Corneille: His Heroes and Their Worlds by Robert J. Nelson, 1963, and Corneille and Racine: Parallels and Contrasts edited by Nelson, 1966; Corneille by P.J. Yarrow, 1963; The Cornelian Hero by Albert West, 1963; The Criticism of Cornelian Tragedy by Herbert Fogel, 1967; Corneille by Claude K. Abraham, 1972; Corneille and Racine: Problems of Tragic Form by Gordon Pocock, 1973; Corneille: Horace by R.C. Knight, 1981; The Tragic Drama of Corneille and Racine: An Old Parallel Revisited by H.T. Barnwell, 1982; The Comedies of Corneille by G.J. Mallinson, 1984; The Liar and the Lieutenant in the Plays of Pierre Corneille by I.D. McFarlane, 1984; Corneille, Classicism and the Ruses of Symmetry by Mitchell Greenberg, 1986; If There Are No More Heroes, There Are Heroines: A Feminist Critique of Corneille's Heroines 1637–1644 by Josephine A. Schmidt, 1987; Le Cid: Corneille by W.D. Howarth, 1988; The Poetic Style of Corneille's Tragedies: An Aesthetic Interpretation by Sharon Harwood Gordon, 1989; Dissonant Harmonies: Drama and Ideology in Five Neglected Plays of Pierre Corneille by Susan Read Baker, 1990; Corneillian Theater: The Metadramatic Dimension by M.J. Muratore, 1990; Corneille's Tragedies: The Role of the Unexpected by R.C. Knight, 1991; Pierre Corneille: The Poetics and Political Drama under Louis XII by David Clarke, 1992; In the Grip of Minos: Confessional Discourse in Dante, Corneille, and Racine by Matthew Senior, 1994; La Gloire: The Roman Empire of Corneille and Racine by Louis Auchincloss, 1996; The Tragedy of Origins: Pierre Corneille and Historical Perspective by John D. Lyons, 1996; Corneille: Cinna by C.J. Gossip, 1998; Pierre Corneille Revisited by Claire L. Carlin, 1998.

* * *

Pierre Corneille is the earliest of the great French Classical playwrights. “Cornelian” has become an adjective to describe qualities of grandeur, heroism, and the subordination of passion to duty which are apparent in many of his plays.

His production was in fact very various. He showed a constant desire to astound—by extreme gestures and situations, by complication, surprise, verbal display, variety. As a poet, his great gift is for emphatic and weighty eloquence, admirably suited to his “Cornelian” moments. But his range is wide—tenderness, lyricism, irony, with a talent (not only in his comedies) for realistic dialogue and repartee. His changes of tone and delight in verbal ingenuity have often led to complaints of bathos and bad taste, but can be seen as indications of his breadth and daring. He shows a fascination with human behaviour in bizarre and confused situations, and especially with the complexity of moral decisions, sometimes reflecting contemporary events and controversies. This fascination is most memorably focused on the hero's struggle to fulfil the demands of his "gloire" (literally "honour" or "reputation," but in Corneille's best work a subtle concept involving self-realization at a high moral level). There is also a sense of the complexity of life in a more obvious way. Even in his loftiest plays there is an awareness of the self-seeking, even comical, elements which accompany and oppose or corrupt the heroic impulse. In many of his works, this shades into irony and a disabused realism.

Corneille's early plays are mainly comedies on the intrigues of young lovers. They are best read in the original versions, before Corneille toned them down. Free in form, with a mixture of realism and fantasy, they show a Baroque concern with illusion and the falsity of appearances, especially in the play-within-a-play-within-a-play of L'illusion comique (The Theatrical Illusion). Despite their often frank realism and comedy, deeper themes emerge: real or assumed madness and real grief at a supposed death (Mélite); misery caused by a young man's rejection of love in order to preserve his freedom (La Place Royale); the bitterness of a woman at her social status (La Suivante). Clitandre, though labelled a tragedy, is a romantic comedy. Médée signals Corneille's approach to tragedy. It sets the selfish triviality of Jason and the Court against the lonely figure of Medea, who asserts her identity by a terrible revenge.

Le Cid (The Cid) shows the crisis in the hero's life when he has to kill the father of his beloved Chimène in order to fulfil his heroic destiny, and she, to match his integrity, has to seek his death. Although Corneille blurs the ending, the poignancy and dramatic boldness of the situations, together with the lyricism and energy of the verse, make this his most accessible play. Horace, the first play within the strict unities (though Corneille, as often, has difficulty in unifying his action), shows the hero isolating himself in his destiny, which leads him both to save his country and to murder his sister. Corneille resolves the crisis ambiguously, showing the hero both glorious and flawed. Cinna is perhaps his most unified achievement. In a shifting drama of love and political intrigue, it focuses on the effort of the Emperor Augustus to transcend his past and convert by forgiveness those who have conspired against him. Polyeucte (Polyeuctus) deals with a clash between Christianity and Paganism in the Roman Empire, and shows how the heroic Polyeucte, in seeking martyrdom, brings to Christianity not only his passionate wife but also his cynical father-in-law. Powerful in structure, characterization, and verse, it is often regarded as his masterpiece though some have found the ending unconvincing.

Corneille's later plays only achieve this level intermittently. Until the failure of Pertharite, he produced a series of very varied plays—tragedies, plays with music and spectacular effects, and comédies héroïques (plays with noble characters, but less serious than tragedies). The best are the comedy Le menteur (The Liar) and the tragedy Nicomède (Nicomede), a play of complex ironies showing the hero triumphing (largely through the efforts of others) over the hostility of Rome and the intrigues of his stepmother, who dominates his realistic and weak father. Rodogune and Héraclius (Heraclius), both tragedies, are more typical, in their schematic characterization, exciting plots, and melodramatic verve.

The plays after Corneille's return to the theatre in 1659 are uneven, but in some ways his most interesting. The heroic mode of his masterpieces and the melodrama of his middle plays give way to a subtle blend of political and psychological intrigue, with flashes of both grandeur and comedy. The finest are Sertorius, dramatizing the clash of personal and political ambitions in the civil wars of the Roman Republic, and Suréna (Surenas), his last play. Surenas, with its atmosphere of ambiguity and menace, has an emotional and tragic resonance rare in Corneille.

As well as various prefatory pieces, Corneille wrote the substantial critical Discourses and critiques (Examens) of individual plays prefixed to each volume of his 1660 Works. Although not very illuminating on individual plays, they show his difficulties with the contemporary critical concern for verisimilitude and moral utility in poetry. He stresses pleasure as the aim of drama, and historical truth as an aid to credibility.

Apart from some lively personal pieces, his non-dramatic poetry is of little interest.

—Gordon Pockock

See the essays on The Cid and The Theatrical Illusion.

CORREIA DA ROCHA, Adolfo

See TORGA, Miguel

CORTÁZAR, Julio

Born: Brussels, Belgium, 26 August 1914. Family returned to Argentina, 1918. Education: Educated at the Escuela Normal de Profesores Mariano Acosta (teachers college), Buenos Aires, degree as primary-level teacher, 1932, degree as secondary-level teacher, 1935; University of Buenos Aires, 1936–37. Family: Married Aurora Bernárdez in 1953 (separated); lived with Carol Dunlop in later years. Career: Taught in secondary schools in Bolívar, Chivilcoy, and Mendoza, 1937–44; professor of French literature, University of Cuyo, Mendoza, 1944–45, and imprisoned briefly for involvement in anti-Peronist demonstrations at the university, 1945; manager, Cámara Argentina del Libro [Publishing Association of Argentina], 1946–48; passed examinations in law and languages, and worked as translator, Buenos Aires, 1948–51; travelled to Paris on a scholarship, 1951, and settled there; writer and freelance translator for UNESCO, from 1952; visited Cuba, 1961, Argentina, Peru, Ecuador, and Chile, all 1973, Nicaragua and (after the lifting of a seven-year ban on his entry into the country) Argentina, 1983; visiting lecturer, University of Oklahoma, Norman, 1975, and Gildersleeve lecturer, Barnard College, New York, 1980; acquired French citizenship (in addition to existing Argentinian citizenship), 1981. Awards: Médicis prize (France), 1974; Great Golden Eagle (Nice), 1976; Rubén Darío Order of Cultural Independence (Nicaragua), 1983. Member: Second Russell Tribunal for investigation of human rights abuses in Latin America, 1975. Died: 12 February 1984.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

Bestiario (stories). 1951; title story as "Bestiary," translated by J.M. Cohen, in Latin American Writing Today, edited by Cohen, 1967; as Bestiary: Selected Stories, translated by Alberto Manguel, Paul Blackburn, Gregory and Clementine Rabassa, and Suzanne Jill Levine, 1998.

Final del juego (stories), 1956; enlarged edition, 1964.

Las armas secretas (stories). 1959.

Los premios. 1960; as The Winners, translated by Elaine Kerrigan, 1965.

Historias de cronopios y de famas (stories). 1962; as Cronopios and Famas, translated by Paul Blackburn, 1969.

Rayuela. 1963; edited by Julio Ortega and Saúl Yurkievich, 1991; as Hopscotch, translated by Gregory Rabassa, 1966.

Cuentos, edited by Anton Arrufat. 1964.

Todos los fuegos el fuego (stories). 1966; as All Fires the Fire and Other Stories, translated by Suzanne Jill Levine, 1973.

End of the Game and Other Stories, translated by Paul Blackburn. 1967; as Blow-Up and Other Stories, translated by Blackburn, 1968.

El perseguidor y otros cuentos. 1967; edited by Alberto Couste, 1979.

62: Modelo para armar. 1968; as 62: A Model Kit, translated by Gregory Rabassa, 1972.

Ceremonias (includes Final del juego and Las armas secretas). 1968.

Casa tomada. 1969.

Relatos (selection). 1970.

La isla a mediodía y otros relatos. 1971.

Libro de Manuel. 1973; as A Manual for Manuel, translated by Gregory Rabassa, 1978.

Octaedro (stories). 1974; parts translated in A Change of Light and Other Stories, 1980.

Los relatos. 3 vols., 1976.

Alguien que anda por ahí y otros relatos. 1977; parts translated in A Change of Light and Other Stories, 1980.

Un tal Lucas. 1979; as A Certain Lucas, translated by Gregory Rabassa, 1984.

A Change of Light and Other Stories, translated by Gregory Rabassa. 1980.

Queremos tanto a Glenda. 1981; as We Love Glenda So Much and Other Tales, translated by Gregory Rabassa, 1983.

Deshoras (stories). 1983; as Unreasonable Hours, translated by Alberto Manguel, 1995.

El examen. 1986.

Divertimento. 1986.

Siete Cuentos by Julio Cortázar, edited with introduction by Peter Beardsell. 1994.

Verse

Presencia (as Julio Denis). 1938.

Pameos y meopas. 1971.

Poemas, meopas y prosemas. 1984.

Salvo el crepúsculo. 1984; as Save Twilight: Selected Poems of Julio Cortázar, translated by Stephen Kessler, 1997.

Plays

Los reyes. 1949.

Nada a Pehuajó, y Adiós, Robinson. 1984.

Other

Fantomas contra los vampiros internacionales. 1965.

La vuelta al día en ochenta mundos (essays). 1967; as Around the Day in Eighty Worlds, translated by Thomas Christensen, 1986.

Buenos Aires, Buenos Aires, photographs by Alicia d' Amico and Sara Facio (includes English translation). 1968.

Último round. 1969.

La literatura en la revolución y revolución en la literatura, with Oscar Collazos and Mario Vargas Llosa. 1970.

Viaje alrededor de una mesa. 1970.

Prosa del observatorio, photographs by Cortázar, with Antonio Galvez. 1972.

La casilla de los Morelli y otros textos (miscellany), edited by Julio Ortega. 1973.

Antología, edited by Nicolás Bratosevich. 1975.

Silvalandia (on the paintings of Julio Silva). 1975.

Estrictamente no profesional: Humanario (on the photographs of Aticia D' Amico and Sara Facio). 1976.

Territorios (miscellany). 1978.

Conversaciones con Cortázar, with Ernesto González Bermejo. 1978; as Revelaciones de un cronopio: Conversaciones con Cortázar, 1986.

Monsieur Lautrec, with Hermenegildo Sabat. 1980.

Un elogio del tres (on the paintings of Luis Tomasello). 1980.

París: Ritmos de una ciudad, photographs by Alecio de Andrade. 1981; as París: The Essence of an Image, translated by Gregory Rabassa, 1981.

Los astronautas de la cosmopista; o, Un viaje atemporal París—Marsella, with Carol Dunlop. 1983.

Cuaderno de bitácora de Rayuela, with Ana María Barrenechea. 1983.

El edad presente es de lucha/The Present Age Is One of Struggle, with Sergio Ramírez Mercado. 1983.

Nicaragua, tan violentamente dulce. 1983; as Nicaraguan Sketches, translated by K. Weaver, 1989.

Negro el diez (on the lithographs of Luis Tomasello). 1983.

Argentina: Años de alambradas culturales, edited by Saúl Yurkievich. 1984.

Alto el Perú (on the photographs of Manja Offerhaus). 1984.

La fascinación de las palabras: Conversaciones con Julio Cortázar, with Omar Prego. 1985.

Cortázar: Iconografía, edited by Alba C. de Rojo and Felipe Garrido. 1985.

Policrítica en la hora de los chacales. 1987.

Voicing, with others, edited by Don Wellman, translated by Cola Franzen and others. 1989.

Cartas a una pelirroja, edited by Evelyn Picon Garfield. 1990.

Translator, Robinson Crusoe, by Daniel Defoe. 1945.

Translator, El hombre que sabía demasiado, by G.K. Chesterton. 1946.

Translator, Nacimiento de la Odisea, by Jean Giono. 1946.

Translator, La poesía pura by Henri Brémond. 1947.

Translator, El inmoralista, by André Gide. 1947.

Translator, Filosofía de la risa y el llanto, by Alfred Stern. 1950.

Translator, Mujercitas, by Louisa May Alcott. 1951.

Translator, Tom Brown en la escuela, by Thomas Hughes. 1951.

Translator, La filosofía existencial de Jean-Paul Sartre, by Alfred Stern. 1951.

Translator, La víbora, by Marcel Aymé. 1952.

Translator, La vida de los otros, by Ladislav Dormandi. 1952.

Translator, Así sea; o, La suerte está echada, by André Gide. 1953.

Translator, Vida y cartas de John Keats, by Lord Houghton. 1955.

Translator, Memorias de Adriano, by Marguerite Yourcenar. 1955.

Translator, Obras en prosa, by Edgar Allan Poe. 1956.

Translator, Cuentos, by Edgar Allan Poe. 1963.

Translator, Eureka, by Edgar Allan Poe. 1972.

Translator, Ensayos y críticos, by Edgar Allan Poe. 1973.

Translator, Memorias de una enana, by Walter de la Mare. N.d.

*

Bibliography: “Bibliografía de y sobre Julio Cortázar” by Marta Paley de Francescato, in Revista Iberoamericana de Literatura, 59(84–85), 1973; Julio Cortázar: His Works and His Critics: A Bibliography by Sara de Mundo Lo, 1985.

Critical Studies: Moyano, Benedetto, Cortázar by Eugenio Castelli, 1968; Cortázar: Una antropología poética by Néstor García Canclini, 1968; Cinco miradas sobre Cortázar edited by Ana María Simo, 1968; Julio Cortázar y el hombre nuevo by Graciela de Sola, 1968; La vuelta a Cortázar en nueve ensayos, various authors, 1968; Sobre Cortázar by José Amícola, 1969; Julio Cortázar: El escritor y sus máscaras by Mercedes Rein, 1969; Julio Cortázar: Visión de conjunto by Roberto Escamilla Molina, 1970; De Sarmiento a Cortázar by David Viñas, 1970; El individuo y el otro: Crítica a los cuentos de Julio Cortázar by Alfred J. MacAdam, 1971; Cortázar: La novela moderna by Lida Aronne Amestoy, 1972; Julio Cortázar; o, La crítica de la razón pragmática by Juan Carlos Curutchet, 1972; Homenaje a Julio Cortázar edited by Helmy F. Giacomán, 1972; Seven Voices by Rita Guibert, 1973; Julio Cortázar: Una búsqueda mítica by Saúl Sosnowski, 1973; Julio Cortázar ante su sociedad by Joaquín Roy, 1974; ¿Es Julio Cortázar un surrealista?, 1975, Julia Cortázar (in English), 1975, and Cortázar por Cortázar, 1978, all by Evelyn Picon Garfield; Estudios sobre los cuentos de Julio Cortázar edited by David Lagmanovich, 1975; Currents in the Contemporary Argentine Novel: Arlt, Mallea, Sábato and Cortázar by William David Foster, 1975; Cortázar issue of Books Abroad, 50(3), 1976; Julio Cortázar: Rayuela by Robert Brady, 1976; The Final Island: The Fiction of Cortázar (includes bibliography) edited by Ivar Ivask and Jaime Alazraki, 1978, and En busca del unicornio: Los cuentos de Julio Cortázar by Alazraki, 1983; The Novels of Cortázar by Steven Boldy, 1980; Keats, Poe, and the Shaping of Cortázar's Mythopoesis by Ana Hernández del Castillo, 1981; Julio Cortázar edited by Pedro Lastra, 1981; Cortázar issue of Casa de las Américas, 25(145–146), 1984; Julio Cortázar: Life, Work, and Criticism by E.D. Carter, Jr., 1986; Lo lúdico y lo fantástico: Coloquio, edited by Keith Cohen, 2 vols., 1986; Los ochenta mundos de Cortázar: Ensayos edited by Fernando Burgos, 1987; Otro Round: Ensayos sobre la obra de Julio Cortázar edited by E. Dale Carter, 1988; The Politics of Style in the Fiction of Balzac, Beckett, and Cortázar by M.R. Axelrod, 1991; Julio Cortázar: A Study of the Short Fiction by Ilan Stavans, 1996; Julio Cortázar: New Readings, edited by Carlos J. Alonso, 1998; Critical Essays on Julio Cortázar, edited by Jaime Alazraki, 1999; Questions of the Liminal in the Fiction of Julio Cortázar by Dominic Moran, 2000; Understanding Julio Cortázar by Peter Standish, 2001.

* * *

Julio Cortázar is one of the most widely recognized Spanish American writers outside the Spanish-speaking world, due particularly to the critical acclaim of Rayuela (Hopscotch), a novel where the most experimental narrative innovations find an original form, and to the filming by Michelangelo Antonioni of one of his best short stories, “Blow-Up.”

Cortázar’s narrative is unclassifiable. His fiction breaks away from the habitual categories of narrative and all conventional forms, and blurs the uncertain boundaries between reality and the fantastic. The realistic and social milieu of his stories (be it Buenos Aires or Paris) is continuously compromised by elements of the absurd, the mythic, and the oneiric, by surrealist undercurrents where artistic freedom and imaginative possibilities disturb all routine representations of reality. Cortázar searches for an opening toward the other side of reality, toward—in his own words—“a more secret and less communicable order.”

Cortázar’s experimentation with the techniques of narrative can best be exemplified with Hopscotch, his masterpiece. The novel is written in loose fragments—the collage is the basic associative procedure—sequences of a totality that the reader is forced to recompose. The search for harmony and authenticity is the guiding motif of the novel; the search for the “key,” “the other side,” “the centre,” “the heaven of the hopscotch,” “the love-passport,” “the wishful kibbutz,” illustrate Cortázar’s attempts to apprehend an absolute order, a “sacred space” or mandala (a mystical labyrinth used by the Buddhists as a spiritual exercise), where integration and ultimate harmony can be attained. This ontological search for unity is one of the distinctive aspects of Cortázar’s narrative. In his fiction it is common to find a character embarked on the search for a secret order, pursuing something undefinable to bring him inner harmony. Some characters intuitively explore the mysteries of the self (Johnny Carter, the jazz musician of “The Pursuer”), others chase truth and self-knowledge—Medrano in Los premios (The Winners)—but most attempt failed intellectual projections into a world of their dreams: Oliveira in Hopscotch, Juan in 62: Modelo para armar (62: A Model Kit), Andrés in Libro de Manuel (A Manual for Manuel). Fascinated by the unreachable absolute, all of Cortázar’s major characters seek to jump into authenticity, rebel against a civilization governed by reason.

Hopscotch is a questioning of the art of storytelling, as well as a questioning of reality and all rational knowledge, an attempt to break away from all routine narrative formulas. The disintegration of the traditional novel begins with “The Table of Instructions,” where Cortázar suggests at least two ways of reading the novel and the reader is invited to select between expendable and unexpendable chapters. The complex point of view, movable chapters, montage, dédoublement, dissociation of personality, simultaneity of creation and theoretical reflection within the novel, and, above all, the destruction of inherited language and syntax, the search for a new syntax to reunite unreconcilable languages, are the predominant features of Cortázar’s writing. The constant questioning of the capability of language to represent reality can best be seen by quoting the opening paragraph of “Blow-Up”:

It’ll never be known how this has to be told, in the first person or in the second, using the first person plural or continually inventing modes that will serve for nothing. If one might say: I will see the moon rise, or: we hurt me at the back of my eyes, and especially: you the blond woman was the clouds that race before my your his our yours their faces. What the hell.

These two aspects of Cortázar's narrative—innovation of language and form, and the metaphysical search—reveal his talent as a storyteller of universal appeal.

—Hugo J. Verani

COUPERUS, Louis Marie Anne

Born: The Hague, The Netherlands, 10 June 1863. Spent part of his youth on Java. Education: Failed his school exams, 1886. Family: Married his niece Elizabeth Baud in 1891. Career: After 1891 spent most of his life in the south of France and in Italy; travelled to Indonesia, 1899. Worked for the magazine Nederlandsch Spectator; also wrote for The Hague newspaper Het Vaderland. Died: 16 July 1923.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Verzamelde werken [Collected Works]. 12 vols., 1952–57.
Nagelaten werk. 1976.

Fiction

Eline Vere. 1889; as Eline Vere, translated by J.T. Grein, 1892.
Noodlot. 1890; as Footsteps of Fate, translated by Clara Bell, 1891.
Extase. 1892; as Ecstasy, translated by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos and John Gray, 1892.
Eene illuzie [An Illusion]. 1892.
Majesteit. 1893; as Majesty, translated by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos and Ernest Dowson, 1894.
Wereldvrede [World Peace]. 1895, reprinted 1991.
Willeswinde [Wind of Will]. 1895.
Hooge troeven [High Stakes]. 1896.
Metamorfoze. 1897.
Psyche. 1897; as Psyche, translated by B.S. Berrington, 1908.
Fidessa. 1899.
Langs lijnen van geleidelijkheid. 1900; as The Law Inevitable, translated by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos, 1921.
De stille kracht. 1900; as The Hidden Force, translated by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos, 1922, revised and edited by E.M. Beekman, 1985.
Babel. 1901; as Babel, translated by A.A. Betham, n.d.
De boeken der kleine zielen. 4 vols., 1901–04; as The Book of the Small Souls, translated by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos, 4 vols., 1914–18.
Over lichtende drempels. 1902.
Van oude mensen, de dingen die voorbijgaan. 2 vols., 1902; as Old People and the Things That Pass, translated by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos, 1918.
God en goden [God and Gods]. 1903.
Dionyzos. 1904.
De berg van licht [The Mountain of Light]. 3 vols., 1905–06.
Aan den weg der vreugde [Along the Road of Joy]. 1908.

Van en over mijzelf en anderen [Of and About Myself and Others]. 4 vols., 1910–17.
Korte arabesken (stories). 1911; selection as Eighteen Tales, translated by J. Kooistra, 1924.
Antiek toerisme. 1911; as The Tour, translated by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos, 1920.
Antieke verhalen [Antique Stories]. 1911.
Herakles. 2 vols., 1913.
Van en over alles en iedereen [Of and About Everything and Everyone]. 5 vols., 1915.
De ongelukkige [The Unfortunate One]. 1915.
De komedianten. 1917; as The Comedians, a Story of Ancient Rome, translated by J. Menzies-Wilson, 1926.
De ode. 1918.
Legende, mythe en fantazie. 1918.
De verliefde ezel [The Enamoured Ass]. 1918.
Xerxes of de hoogmoed. 1919; as Arrogance, the Conquests of Xerxes, translated by Frederick H. Martens, 1930.
Lucrezia. 1920.
Iskander. 1920.
Het zwevend schaakbord [The Hovering Chessboard]. 1922.
Het snoer der ontferming en Japansche legenden [The String of Mercy and Japanese Legends]. 1924.
Via appia. 1972.
De zwaluwen neer gestreken [The Alighted Swallows]. 1974.
Endymion. 1976.

Verse

Een Lent van vaerzen [A Lent of Verses]. 1884.
Orchideën. 1886; selection in Flowers from a Foreign Garden, translated by A.L. Snell, 1902.

Other

Schimmen van schoonheid [Phantoms of Beauty] (sketches). 1912.
Uit blanke steden onder blauwe lucht [From White Cities under Blue Skies] (sketches and impressions). 2 vols., 1912–13.
Brieven van een nutteloozen toeschouwer [Letters of a Useless Spectator] (anti-war polemic). 1918.
Met L. Couperus in Afrika (journalism). 1921.
Oostwaarts. 1924; as Eastward, translated by J. Menzies-Wilson and C.C. Crispin, 1924.
Nippon. 1925; as Nippon, translated by J. de la Vallette, 1926.
Kindersouvenirs [Childhood Memories]. 1978.
Epigrammen. 1982.
Translator, Verzoeking van den Heiligen Antonius, by Flaubert. 1896, reprinted 1992.

*

Critical Studies: Leven en werken van Louis Couperus by Henri van Booven, 1933; Verhaal en lezer by W. Block, 1960; Couperus in de kritiek by M. Galle, 1963; Louis Couperus: Een verkenning by H.W. van Tricht, 1965; Beschouwingen over het werk van Louis Couperus by K.J. Popma, 1968; De antieke wereld van Louis Couperus by T. Bogaerts, 1969; Couperus, grieken en barbaren by E. Visser, 1969; De man met de orchideë. Het levensverhaal van Louis Couperus by Albert Vogel, 1973, 2nd revised edition, 1980; Een zuil in de mist. Van en over Louis Couperus by F.L. Bastet, 1980; Eenheid in verscheidenheid: over de werkwijze van Louis Couperus by H.T.N. van Vliet, 1996.

* * *

A novelist of international stature, Louis Couperus belonged to two late 19th-century literary traditions of naturalist and decadent prose. He was born in The Hague in 1863 into a formal, conventional, and aristocratic milieu where colonial administration was one of the traditional professions. Consequently, the family of the young Couperus spent six years in the Dutch colony of Indonesia, returning to the Netherlands in 1877.

As an aspiring literary figure, he did not immediately find his natural form. In 1884 he published a none-too-successful collection of poems, Een Lent van vaerzen [A Lent of Verses], and in 1886 a second collection, Orchidëen [Orchids]. The tepid reaction to these poetry collections encouraged him to concentrate on prose. Nevertheless, in the eyes of many critics, his persistent love for poetic, “beautiful” language and extended ornate description was to mar a number of his novels.

However, when Eline Vere, his first novel, appeared in 1889, Couperus was an immediate success. In 1888, when the novel was serialized in the newspaper Het Vaderland, it coincided with the appearance of two other naturalist novels: Een liefde by Lodewijk van Deyssel and Juffrouw Lina by Marcellus Emants. Dutch naturalism differed from the scientific-minded French naturalism in several respects. The works tend to focus on middle-class milieus, and the main characters are anti-heroes, frequently over-sensitive, over-civilized men and women reacting against the smug calm of the surrounding prosaic, bourgeois society. There is frequently an investigation of taboo subjects like homosexuality or self-gratification. The text aims at objective representation of the characters, and combines colloquial dialogue with woordkunst (“artistic writing”), highly descriptive, evocative passages full of adjectives and neologisms.

In the novel Eline Vere, a victim of her class and her gender, can find no escape for her pent-up energy. Too finely tuned for her own good and consequently misunderstood, she takes an overdose as the result of an unhappy love affair. Unlike other Dutch naturalists, Couperus stressed the laws of deterministic inheritance: Eline Vere has inherited her character from her father, while her cousin Vincent suffers from a similar clash between his personality and his environment.

In a logical step, Couperus’s next novel was entitled Noodlot (Footsteps of Fate), associating family hereditary factors with a fate the three main characters cannot escape. Meijers suggests that Footsteps of Fate and the next novel Extase (Ecstasy) partially attempt to work through Couperus’s homosexuality by transferring it onto a sublimated desire for heterosexual love.

Couperus’s generally recognized masterpiece is a novel written during a year-long return to the Dutch East Indies, and once again deals with the disintegration of character and the notion of fate. In De stille kracht (The Hidden Force), the senior colonial administrator Van Oudijck is undermined by his wife’s infidelities, which weakens his resistance to the pervasive atmosphere of Indonesian magic, “goena goena.” The rational Dutch colonials one by one become completely submerged in the alien culture they are trying to control and suppress. As Dutch pianos and furniture disintegrate because of the heat, humidity, and termites, their mental and physical health is drained by the atmosphere. In fact there is a suggestion that it is their own moral corruption that allows the silent forces of magic to take hold of their minds.

Back in the bourgeois atmosphere of The Hague, the four novels that make up De boeken der kleine zielen (The Book of the Small Souls) present another Dutch family slowly falling apart under outside strain, with the addition of typically fin-de-siècle mystical elements.

Van oude mensen, de dingen die voorbijgaan (Old People and the Things That Pass) is sometimes likened to a psychological detective novel, as the reader slowly learns how the old people, a 94-year-old man and a 97-year-old woman, murdered the woman’s husband 60 years earlier, with the guilty knowledge of the family doctor. In what is generally regarded as one of his best novels, Couperus slowly peels away this family secret that is affecting the younger generations.

Less well-liked are the novels where Couperus shows a clearer connection with European decadent writers like Baudelaire, de Maupassant, and Wilde. A number of long novels are situated in antiquity or Eastern history, like De berg van licht [The Mountain of Light], about the Roman child-emperor Heliogabalus, Herakles [Hercules], and Xerxes. Above all, Iskander depicts Alexander the Great’s conquest of the Persian empire, with prolonged evocations of the exotic Persian court. These novels are frequently faulted by critics for an overindulgence in long descriptions of luxurious, decadent palaces, sounds, smells, and wines. Frequently, a certain shying away from the homoerotic subtext is also partly the cause for the unpopularity of these novels. However, while these novels are hard-going at times, their opulence and excess can be regarded more positively. By means of their very textual excesses Couperus was in fact able to evoke the exotic, alien quality of long-gone cultures and lifestyles, thus along with his other works, contributing to his highly original and enduring position in Dutch literature.

—Sabine Vanacker

CRAVEIRINHA, José

Born: Lourenco Marques (now Maputo), 28 May 1922. Education: Attended primary school only, thereafter an autodidact. Family: Married Maria de Lurdes (died in 1979). Career: Began to write very early and established himself as a journalist in local media publications such as O Brado Africano, Noticias da Beira, Tribuna, O Tempo, and O Noticias, where for many years he wrote a weekly piece; after Mozambique gained its independence, Craveirinha became the first President of the Associação dos Escritores Moçambicanos (AEMO; Mozambican Writers’ Guild), a position he held between 1982 and 1987; also the President of the Associação Moçambicana da Língua Portuguesa (AMOLP; Mozambican Association of the Portuguese Language), and Vice-President of Maputo’s chapter of the Fundo Bibliográfico da Língua Portuguesa (Bibliographic Fund for the Portuguese Language); librarian of the Faculty of Economy at Mondlane University in Maputo; continues to live in Maputo, a place frequently referred to in his writing. Awards: Lourenço Marques Prix, 1959; Reinaldo Ferreira prize, 1961; National poetry prize, Italy, 1975; gold medal of the commune of Concesio, Italy, 1975; Lotus prize, awarded by the Afro-Asiatic Writers’ Association, 1983; Prémio Camões, 1990, the most prestigious literary prize for work in the Portuguese language.

PUBLICATIONS

Verse

Chigubo. 1964.

Xigubo. 1980; reprinted in 1995.

Karingana ua karingana. 1974; reprinted in 1982 and 1995.

Cela 1. 1980.

Maria. 1988; reprinted in 1998.

Babalaze das hienas. 1997.

Haminas. 1997.

*

Critical Studies: Sobre a Poesia de José Craveirinha by Rui Baltazar, 1988; Echoes of the Sunbird: An Anthology of Contemporary African Poetry by Donald Burness, 1993; The Postcolonial Literature of Lusophone Africa by Patrick Chabal et al, 1996; Vozes Moçambicanas: Literatura and Nacionalidade, 1994; "The Edge of Discourse: Bodies and Rhythms in the Poetry of Craveirinha" by M. L. de Cortez, in Portuguese Studies, 9, 1993; Voices of an Empire by Russell Hamilton, 1975; A Poética de José Craveirinha by Ana Mafalda Leite, 1991; A construção da imagem de Moçambicanidade em José Craveirinha, Mia Couto e Ungulani ba ka Khosa by Gilberto Matusse, 1998; Literatura Moçambicana: A história e as escritas by Fátima Mendonça, 1988; Do alheio ao próprio: a poesia em Moçambique by Manoel Souza e Silva, 1996.

* * *

Now over 80 years old, José Craveirinha is the foremost Mozambican poet and one of the most innovative African poets working in the Portuguese language. A quiet and unassuming man, his work in contrast is characterised by a vibrant and subversive political edge. Although he writes in a simple and common language, there is little in his work that is not cleverly crafted to get the most out of language's inherent potential for ambiguity and wilful misconstruction. His diction veers between the poetic and the bombastic, the sophisticated and the vulgar. He often incorporates a tone of mimicry in his writing that is intrinsic to a colonial view of the native as potentially civilisable, which signifies a profoundly self-conscious challenge to colonial inscription. Indeed, in his subversive use of irony, but one often of a quasi-idiotic nature, resides much of his writing's anti-colonialist message. Craveirinha chooses to play the role of "the dumb black bastard," the mamparra in the discourses of Portuguese colonial domination. In what is a common characteristic of his work, in poems such as "Aforismo" [Aphorism] and "Poemeto" [Little Poem] for instance, Craveirinha deploys to great effect the role of rumour in the destabilization of colonial structures of control. Ironically, there is in his wily and resourceful native persona, which is capable of a challenge to the system as outspoken as is found in "Quero ser tambor" [I Want to Be a Drum] and "Grito Negro" [African Cry], an uncanny vulnerability that speaks of that "poisoning of the blood" that Derek Walcott underlines in "A Far Cry to Africa" ("I who am poisoned with the blood of both, / where shall I turn, divided to the vein?"). But unlike Walcott, who was born and raised in the Caribbean, Craveirinha's poetry has added meaning since he has both African and European roots.

Craveirinha is of mixed race, born of Portuguese and Ronga parents, and his work is dominated by an engagement with racial issues and creolised cultural identities. His poetic oeuvre draws simultaneously on African and European influences, and in this way it exists in the space that Walcott identifies as one of tortured angst and infinite creative plenitude. In poems such as "Miserere em Lhanguene" [Miserere In Lhanguene], "A Morte de Camoos" [Camoens' Death], and "O Bule e o Blue" [The Teapot and the Blues], Craveirinha underlines this uniquely delicate double-bind. In "O Bule e o Blue," the alliteration allowed for in Portuguese evokes at once a local and a diasporic mood; the musical reference to Afro-American identity is a clear identification with the pan-African tendencies of so much writing of the African diaspora.

Identity is thus one of the central themes in Craveirinha's writing. It is something he returns to time and again and often articulates through a focus on the body, specifically the black body. In poems such as "Grito Negro," "Quero Ser Tambor," and "Africa," among others, there is a direct connection between the black body—an African body—and an African identity. Clearly anchored on the Négritude models imagined by Césaire and Senghor, this appeal to an identity that is at once personal, racial, and cultural is central to Craveirinha's work. In "Hino à minha terra" [Hymn to my Country], and "Sangue de Minha Mãe" [Blood of my Mother], Craveirinha explores the poet's own personal being in existential terms but, crucially, in the context of the racialised hierarchies of Portuguese Africa.

Thus even in the poems found in Maria, a collection named after his wife and a declaration of his undying love for her, Craveirinha brings together the discourse of the intimate self and that of a public intellectual. The poet is alone following the death of his wife, but his poetry articulates a care for someone with whom he had looked forward to living with in the newly independent Mozambique. When the speaker of his poem addresses his wife's experience during his imprisonment, having been ostracised by her so-called friends, his own suffering at the hands of the Portuguese political police from 1965–69 is framed by a concern for another. Much as the poet often will speak of his writing as innocuous and incidental, few of his poems are about anything other than the politics of self in a colonial society. In his verse he speaks of and to a dispossessed but proud people who refuse to submit to the brutality their colonial oppressor. He speaks, in sum, of Moçambicanidade, a way of being in the world that is both inextricable from a Portuguese sensibility and lived in defiance of it.

In the post-independence climate, and despite a pressing need reassert one's political credentials, Craveirinha has continued to refrain from adopting an overtly political style. As a person of mixed ethnicity, he knows that he is often considered to be as much of an alien in the post-independence society based on rigid racial structures as he was in colonised society, since his racial duality does not always fall within the hegemonic demands of the new nation's search for a common point of reference. He continues to write in the simple, elegant, casually ironic tone he had made his trademark. In turn joyous and morbid, genial and sarcastic, his is a stance that has always gained its subversive power from a refusal to be easily classifiable. However, in O Babalaze das Hienas [Babalaze of the Hyenas, 1997], a collection of his new poetry, a new direction seems to be emerging. His verse dealing with the ongoing Mozambican civil war now suggests a more self-conscious repositioning within Mozambique's political and cultural paradigms. In poems such as "Carreira de Gaza" [Gaza's Shooting Range], "Outra Beleza" [Another Beauty], or in "Eles foram lá" [They Went There], "Barbearia" [Barber Shop], and "A Boca" [The Mouth], Craveirinha's old detachment has given rise to a new tone, one of anger and bitterness that demonstrates the disillusionment of a postcolonial intellectual who is capable of using the power of language to bring about real political change. His legendary verbal dexterity, which critics like Gerald Moser, Patrick Chabal, Ana Mafalda Leite, and others have identified as the crucial sign of his unique poetic voice, has now been replaced by a clumsiness of expression in which a brutal irony does as much to shock as it does to confirm the utter hopelessness of the political situation in the new Mozambique. The shifting persona, once playful and wilful in works such as Xigubo, Karingana ua Karingana, and even Cela 1 [Cell 1], now bears witness to what seems like a never-ending postcolonial war, pointing accusingly at the cavernous face of death, at the limbs hanging from trees, or at the heads impaled on stakes. The mimicry of much of the earlier poems, which were considered to be subversive, resourceful, and challenging, has been replaced by a fatalistic attitude exemplified by works such as Machimbombo queimado [Burned-bus Barbecued Human Bits]. In this new phase of Craveirinha's work, physical mutilation stands as a metonym for the futile role of poetry in the new nation. In "A Boca," Craveirinha speaks of one of the more horrific practices in which RENAMO, one of the two political groups fighting for control of Mozambique, is said to have engaged: the slicing of the lips of their victims who would then often be left to die. Ultimately, Craveirinha remains, now as during the colonial period, a voice narrating the history of the Mozambican nation.

—Tony Simoes da Silva

CRUZ, Sor Juana Inés de la

See JUANA INÉS DE LA CRUZ

CYRANO DE BERGERAC, Savinien

Born: Paris, France, 1619. Education: Educated at Collège de Beauvais, Paris, 1632–37; Collège de Lisieux, Paris, 1641. Military Service: Enlisted with M. de Carbon de Casteljoux's Company of Guards; soldier and duellist; retired from military career, wounded, 1640. Career: Renowned for his grotesque appearance and long nose and as the subject of Edmond Rostand's play. Died: July 1655.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Les Oeuvres libertines de Cyrano de Bergerac parisien, edited by Frédéric Lachèvre. 2 vols., 1921.

Oeuvres, edited by Georges Ribermont-Dessaignes. 1957.

Oeuvres complètes, edited by Jacques Prévot. 1977.

Oeuvres complètes, edited by Madeleine Alcover, 2000.

Fiction

Voyage dans la lune (part one), edited by Le Bret. 1657; L'Histoire des états et empires du soleil (part two; unfinished), 1662; complete version as L'Autre Monde; ou, Les États et empires de la lune, 1920; edited by H. Weber, 1959; also edited by Jacques

Prévot, 1977; Madeleine Alcover, 1977; as Voyages to the Moon and the Sun, translated by Richard Aldington, 1923; as Other Worlds: The Comical History of the States and the Empires of the Moon and the Sun, translated by Geoffrey Strachan, 1965.

Plays

La Mort d'Agrippine. 1654.

Le Pédant joué. 1654.

Other

Lettres. 1654; as Satirical Characters and Handsome Descriptions in Letters, translated anonymously, 1658, reprinted 1914.

*

Critical Studies: Cyrano de Bergerac by G. Mongrédien, 1964; Cyrano de Bergerac and the Universe of the Imagination by Edward W. Lanius, 1967; La Pensée philosophique et scientifique de Cyrano de Bergerac, 1970, and Cyrano relu et corrigé: Lettres, Etats du soleil, Fragment de physique, 1990, both by Madeleine Alcover; Cyrano de Bergerac and the Polemics of Modernity by E. Harth, 1970; Cyrano de Bergerac romancier, 1977, and Cyrano de Bergerac: Poète et dramaturge, 1978, both by Jacques Prévot; Cyrano de Bergerac, L'Autre Monde by Haydn Mason, 1984; Cyrano de Bergerac: L'Esprit de révolte by Willy de Spens, 1989.

* * *

The name Savinien Cyrano de Bergerac seems, with its "de," to suggest aristocratic rank, while "Bergerac" might point to Gascon origins which would be some warrant for military swagger and a tendency towards boastful vanity. The sober truth is that Cyrano's origins were Parisian and bourgeois. Born in 1619, he was in fact the son of a successful lawyer, practising at the parlement de Paris, whose program for social aggrandizement took the orthodox form of purchasing a modest estate not far from the capital. Even though the property at Bergerac was to be sold after a few years, Cyrano had no scruples about flaunting its name for the rest of his life. He received, most probably at the Collège de Beauvais in Paris, an education that was largely classical in orientation, and then, inspired perhaps in part by a desire to enhance his social status, he joined Carbon de Casteljoux's Company of Guards. Its members were all supposed to be of noble birth and to come from Gascony, so there must have been either some flexibility or some hiding of the truth when it came to Cyrano's entry. What he may have lacked in hereditary qualifications, however, he made up for by his conduct. He participated in many duels, fighting, it is said, not as a principal but as a "second," for at the time it was customary for them to join in to defend their friend's honour and not just stand by and ensure fair play. He was also wounded twice, at the siege of Mouzon in 1639 and the siege of Arras a year later. With his health undermined, he decided to return to civilian life.

The basis of the often repeated story that Cyrano then went back to college, and possibly even became a junior teacher at the Collège de Lisieux in Paris, is dubious, as is that for the statement that he was taught by the Epicurean philosopher Pierre Gassendi (1592–1655). What is clear, however, is that Cyrano had a wild life and became associated with a number of notorious free thinkers, among them Tristan l'Hermite. It was not long before he began to write, but without the regular support of a patron he had difficulty making a living, and after his father's death he soon squandered his inheritance. He was seriously injured by a falling beam in 1654 and died, reconciled to the Catholic church, a year later. Contemporary portraits show that he indeed had a very prominent, remarkably shaped nose.

Like many other writers in France in the 17th century, Cyrano tried his hand at a number of genres, and it could well be that at least some of his writing was influenced by a desire to win the favour of a patron. This is particularly true of his contributions to political controversy at the time of the Fronde rebellions, unless we accept the more implausible hypothesis that his attitudes towards Cardinal Mazarin's policies underwent a rapid and radical change. Cyrano's Lettres are not letters in the everyday sense, but rather what the humanists called "themes," that is to say, exercises in the literary development of a variety of topics. In 1645 Cyrano tried his hand at comedy. Le Pédant joué, in prose, makes fun of Jean Grangier, principal of the Collège de Beauvais when Cyrano was there. Though not without merit, the play was apparently never performed, and it is best known in literary history because Molière, never over-fussy about borrowing other people's good ideas, turned to it for a key scene in Les Fourberies de Scapin (The Rogueries of Scapin) a quarter of a century later. La Mort d'Agrippine [Agrippina's Death] is a classical verse tragedy about a conspiracy against Tiberius; it was published in 1654, after causing a sensation when performed in Paris at the Hôtel de Bourgogne because of the outrageous sentiments it expressed.

Cyrano's most famous works are, however, his two fantastic satires, Voyage dans la lune and L'Histoire des états et empires du soleil (translated together as Voyages to the Moon and the Sun). With their blend of apparently realistic detail and free speculation about controversial issues, these stand in the tradition of Renaissance utopian writing, as exemplified by Thomas More, Tommaso Campanella, and Francis Godwin, whose Man in the Moon was published posthumously in England in 1638 and translated into French within a decade. Cyrano's astronomical romances show eclectic erudition, general irreverence, and great verve in burlesque.

—Christopher Smith

See the essay on Voyages to the Moon and the Sun.

D

D'ANNUNZIO, Gabriele

---

Born: Pescara, Italy, 12 March 1863. Education: Educated at a secondary school, Prato, 1874–81; University of Rome, 1881. Military Service: Served in the Italian infantry, navy, and air force during World War I; injury led to loss of sight in one eye. Family: Married Duchess Maria Hardouin di Gallese in 1883, three children; had romance with the actress Eleonora Duse, 1894–1904. Career: Staff member, Tribuna, Rome, in the 1880s; elected to Chamber of Deputies, 1897–1900 (defeated 1900); lived in Tuscany, 1899–1910; forced by debts to live in France, 1910–15; after the Treaty of Versailles, seized Fiume with other patriots and held the city, 1919–20; supported the Fascists; granted a title by Mussolini; spent last years at his home, the Vittoriale, on Lake Garda. Died: 1 March 1938.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Tutte le opere, edited by Egidio Bianchetti. 10 vols., 1939–50.
Poesie; Teatro; Prose, edited by Mario Praz. 1966.
Poesie, edited by Federico Roncoroni. 1978.
Carteggio D'Annunzio—Ojetti (1894–1937), edited by Cosimo Ceccuti. 1979.
Prose, edited by Federico Roncoroni. 1983.

Verse

Primo vere. 1879; revised edition, 1880.
Canto novo. 1882.
Intermezzo di rime. 1883.
San Pantaleone. 1886.
Isaotta Guttadauro ed altre poesie. 1886; revised edition, as L'Isottò,
La Chimera, 1890.
Elegie romane 1887–1891. 1892.
Odi navali. 1893.
L'allegoria dell' autunno. 1895.
La canzone di Garibaldi. 1901.
Laudi del cielo, del mare, della terra, e degli eroi: Anno 1903—Maia;
Anno 1904—Elettra, Alcyone; Libro IV—Merope, 3 vols., 1903–12;
Alcyone as Halcyon, translated by J.G. Nichols, 1988.
L'orazione e la canzone in morte di Giosuè Carducci. 1907.
Canto novo. 1907.
Le città del silenzio. 1926.
Versi d'amore e di gloria, edited by Annamaria Andreoli and Niva Lorenzini. 2 vols., 1982–84.

Plays

Sogno d'un mattino di primavera (produced 1897). 1897; as The Dream of a Spring Morning, translated by Anna Colby Schenck, 1911.

La città morta (as La Ville morte, produced 1898). 1898; as The Dead City, translated by Arthur Symons, 1900; also translated by Gaetano Mantellani, 1902.

La Gioconda (produced 1899). 1898; as Gioconda, translated by Arthur Symons, 1902.

Sogno di un tramonto d'autunno (produced 1905). 1898; as The Dream of an Autumn Sunset, translated by Anna Colby Schenck, 1903.

La gloria (produced 1899). 1899.

Francesca da Rimini (produced 1901). 1901; revised version, music by Riccardo Zandonai (produced 1914), 1914; as Francesca da Rimini, translated by Arthur Symons, 1902.

La figlia di Iorio (produced 1904). 1904; revised version, music by Alberto Franchetti (produced 1906), 1906; as The Daughter of Iorio, translated by C. Porter, and others. 1907.

La fiaccola sotto il moggio (produced 1905). 1905.

Più che l'amore (produced 1906). 1907.

La nave (produced 1908). 1908; as La Nave, translated and adapted by R.H. Elkin, 1919.

Fedra (produced 1909). 1909.

Le Martyre de Saint Sébastien, music by Debussy (produced 1911). 1911.

Il ferro (produced as Le Chèvrefeuille, 1913; revised version, as Il ferro, produced 1914). 1914; as The Honeysuckle, translated by Cecile Sartoris and G. Enthoven, 1911.

La Pisanella (produced 1913). In Tutte le opere, 1935.

La Parisina, music by Mascagni (produced 1913). 1913.

Cabiria. 1914.

Screenplays: La crociata degli innocenti, 1911.

Fiction

Terra vergine (stories). 1882.

Il libro delle vergine. 1884.

Il piacere. 1889; as The Child of Pleasure, translated by Georgina Harding, 1898.

L'innocente. 1892; as The Intruder, translated by Arthur Hornblow, 1898; as The Victim, translated by Georgina Harding, 1899, reprinted 1991.

Giovanni Episcopo. 1892; as Episcopo and Company, translated by Myrta Leonora Jones, 1896.

Il trionfo della morte, 1894; as The Triumph of Death, translated by Georgina Harding, 1896.

Le vergini delle rocce. 1896; as The Maidens of the Rocks, translated by Annette Halliday-Antona and Giuseppe Antona, 1898; as The Virgins of the Rocks, translated by A. Hughes, 1899.

Il fuoco. 1900; as The Flame of Life, translated by K. Vivaria, 1900; as The Flame, translated by Dora Knowlton Ranous, 1906; also translated by Susan Bassnett, 1991.

Le novelle della Pescara. 1902; as Tales of My Native Town (12 of 18 tales), translated by Gaetano Mantellini, 1920.

Forse che sì, forse che no. 1910.

La leda senza cigno. 1916.

Other

- Notturmo* (autobiographical prose). 1921.
Tutte le opere, edited by Angelo Sodini. 49 vols., 1927–36.
Carteggio D'Annunzio—Duse: Superstiti missive: Lettere, cartoline, telegrammi, dediche 1898–1923, edited by Piero Nardi. 1975.
Lettere a una donna. 1975.
Lettere inedite. In Quaderni del Vittoriale, July–August, 1980.
Scritti politici, edited by Paolo Alatri. 1980.
Nocturne and Five Tales of Love and Death, translated by R. Rosenthal. 1991.

*

Bibliography: D'Annunzio Abroad: A Bibliographical Essay by Joseph G. Fucilla and Joseph M. Carrière, 2 vols., 1935–37; Bibliografia critica di Gabriele D'Annunzio by Mario Vecchioni, 1970; Bibliografia della critica dannunziana nei periodici italiani dal 1880 al 1938 by Anna Baldazzi, 1977; “Bibliografia dannunziana,” in issues of Quaderni vittoriale.

Critical Studies: D'Annunzio by Tom Antongini, 1938; Age Cannot Wither: The Story of Duse and D'Annunzio by Bertita L. de Harding, 1947; Wings of Fire: A Biography of Gabriele D'Annunzio and Eleonora Duse by Frances Winwar, 1957; D'Annunzio: The Poet as Superman by Anthony Rhodes, 1959; D'Annunzio in France: A Study in Cultural Relations by Giovanni Gullace, 1966; D'Annunzio by Philippe Julian, 1973; The First Duce: D'Annunzio at Fiume by Michael A. Ledeen, 1977; Gabriele D'Annunzio by Charles Klopp, 1988; Gabriele D'Annunzio: The Dark Flame by Paolo Valesio, 1992; D'Annunzio and the Great War by Alfredo Bonadeo, 1995; Gabriele D'Annunzio: Defiant Archangel by John Woodhouse, 1997.

* * *

The grounds for regarding Gabriele D'Annunzio as a major 20th-century Italian poet are aptly summed up by Eugenio Montale: “D'Annunzio experimented or touched upon all the linguistic and prosodic possibilities of our time . . . Not to have learned anything from him would be a very bad sign.” Yet Montale as well as Giuseppe Ungaretti and Umberto Saba reacted against him, just as D'Annunzio himself had reacted against the poetic tradition represented by Giosuè Carducci and Giovanni Pascoli. D'Annunzio's metrical and linguistic innovations altered expression and reflected a new sensibility. He was a prolific writer (in French and in Italian): his first book of poems, Primo vere, came out in 1879 and his last, Teneo te, Africa (in Tutte le opere), in 1936. In between he published several important books of lyrics; Alcyone (Halcyon)—the third of four books (Maia, Elettra, and Merope are the others) in the cycle of poems called Laudi del cielo, del mare, della terra, e degli eroi [Praises of the Skies, the Sea, the Earth, and the Heroes]—is an impressive synthesis of his naturalistic creed and rhythmic mastery and control, and is deservedly regarded as his most inspired and most successful book of lyrics.

The characteristic qualities of D'Annunzio's best work are exuberant naturalism, plastic and pictorial talent, rhythmic, metric, and imagistic skill, mastery over landscape, in depicting which D'Annunzio achieves a creative fusion between “physicality” and “sensuousness” and between profound inwardness and spirituality.

But such qualities in D'Annunzio's work went hand in hand with certain defects and weaknesses, such as a self-indulgent dilettantism in dealing with things that are not rooted in his life and experience; a kind of amoral impressionistic exhibitionism unredeemed by the vitality and concreteness of a fully realized experience; and a rhetorical, musical, and aesthetic artifice which aims at and at times achieves a kind of perfection which is essentially hollow and therefore unconvincing.

D'Annunzio also wrote novels and plays. Of the former those most indicative of his powers as a decadent aesthete are Il piacere (The Child of Pleasure), Le vergini delle rocce (The Virgins of the Rocks), Il fuoco (The Flame), and Forse che sì forse che no [Maybe Yes, Maybe No]; and of the latter La città morta (The Dead City), La Gioconda, Francesca da Rimini, and the best-known of all, La figlia di Iorio (The Daughter of Iorio), are the most characteristic. Both in the plays and the novels one underlying theme is the Nietzschean myth of the superman; another is the cult of sensuality.

—G. Singh

See the essays on The Flame, Francesca da Rimini, and “Rain in the Pine Forest.”

DANTE Alighieri

See ALIGHIERI, Dante

DARÍO, Rubén

Born: Félix Rubén García Sarmiento in Metapa, Nicaragua, 18 January, 1867. Education: Educated at various schools; then a Jesuit school, 1878–80; Instituto de Occidente, León, 1881. Family: Married 1) Rafaela Contreras in 1890 (died 1892), one son; 2) Rosario Emelina Murillo in 1893, one son; also one daughter and two sons by Francisca Sánchez. Career: Journalist from age 14: worked on papers in Nicaragua, Valparaíso, Santiago and Buenos Aires; then correspondent for Latin American papers in various parts of Latin America as well as in Paris and Madrid; also served Guatemala in various diplomatic and representative functions; consul of Cambodia to Argentina, 1893–94; suffered from alcoholic depression, 1895. Died: 6 February 1916.

PUBLICATIONS*Collections

- Obras completas*. 22 vols., 1917–20.
Obras completas, edited by Alberto Ghirardo and Andrés González-Blanco. 21 vols., 1923–29.
Obras completas, edited by Sanmiguel Raimúndez and Emilio Gascó Contell. 5 vols., 1950–55.
Poesías completas, edited by Alfonso Méndez Plancarte. 1952; revised edition, edited by Antonio Oliver Belmás, 2 vols., 1967.
Selected Poems, translated by Lysander Kemp. 1965.
Poesía, edited by Ernesto Mejía Sánchez. 1977.
Poesías inéditas, edited by Ricardo Llopesa. 1988.

Selected Poems of Rubén Darío: A Bilingual Anthology, translated, edited with introduction by Alberto Acereda and Will Derusha. 2001.

Verse

Epístolas y poemas. 1885.
Abrojos. 1887.
Las rosas andinas: Rimas y contra-rimas, with Rubén Rubí 1888.
Azul. 1888; revised edition, 1890; also edited by Andrew P. Debicki and Michael J. Doudoroff, 1985.
Rimas, 1889.
Prosas profanas y otros poemas. 1896; revised edition, 1901; as Prosas Profanas and Other Poems, translated by Charles B. McMichael. 1922.
Cantos de vida y esperanza, Los cisnes, y otros poemas. 1905.
El canto errante. 1907.
Poema del otoño y otros poemas. 1910.
Canto a la Argentina y otros poemas. 1914.
Obra poética. 4 vols., 1914–16.
Eleven Poems, translated by Thomas Walsh and Salomón de la Selva. 1916.
Sol del domingo: Poesías inéditas. 1917.

Fiction

Emelina, with Eduardo Poirier. 1887.
Edelmira, edited by Francisco Contreras. 1926(?).
Cuentos fantásticos, edited by José Olivio Jiménez. 1979.
Cuentos, edited by José Emilio Balladares. 1986.

Other

La canción del oro; La isla del oro; El oro de Mallorca. 1886.
A. de Gilbert. 1890.
Los raros. 1893.
Castelar, 1899.
Peregrinaciones. 1901.
España contemporánea. 1901.
La caravana pasa. 1902.
Tierras solares. 1904.
Opiniones. 1906.
Parisiense. 1907.
El viaje a Nicaragua. 1909.
Blanco. 1911.
Letras. 1911.
Todo al vuelo. 1912.
Autobiografía. 1912.
La casa de las ideas. 1916.
La vida de Rubén Darío, escrita por el mismo. 1916.
El mundo de los sueños: Prosas póstumas. 1917; edited by Angel Rama, 1973.
Impresiones y sensaciones, edited by Alberto Ghirardo. 1925.
Escritos inéditos, edited by E.K. Mapes. 1938.
Cartas: Epistolario inédito, edited by Dictino Álvarez Hernández. 1963.
Escritos dispersos, edited by Pedro Luis Barcia. 2 vols., 1968–73.
Páginas desconocidas, edited by Roberta Ibáñez. 1970.
La isla del oro/El oro de Mallorca, edited by Luis Maristany. 1978.
Textos socio-políticos, edited by Jorge Eduardo Arellano and Francisco Valle, 1980.

*

Bibliography: A Bibliography of Darío by Henry Grattan Doyle, 1935; Rubén Darío: A Selective Classified and Annotated Bibliography by Hensley C. Woodbridge, 1975; Bibliografía de Rubén Darío by Jorge Eduardo Arellano, 1981.

Critical Studies: Poet-Errant: A Biography of Darío by Charles D. Watland, 1965; Cuadrivio (on Darío, López Velarde, Pessoa, Cernuda) by Octavio Paz, 1965; Critical Approaches to Rubén Darío by Keith Ellis, 1974; Rubén Darío and the Pythagorean Tradition by Raymond Skyrme, 1975; Rubén Darío and the Romantic Search for Unity: The Modernist Recourse to Esoteric Tradition by Cathy Logan Jrade, 1983; Light and Longing: Silva and Darío: Modernism and Religious Heterodoxy by Sonya A. Ingwersen, 1986; Los espacios poéticos de Rubén Darío by José María Martínez Domingo, 1995; Poesía Mallorquina de Rubén Darío by Carlos Menese, 1997; Beyond the Glitter: The Language of Gems in Modernista Writers Rubén Darío, Ramón del Valle-Inclán, and José Asunción Silva by Rosemary C. LoDato, 1999.

* * *

Throughout the Spanish-speaking literary world Rubén Darío is known as the great innovator, the poet who transformed the prosody of that language. At the turn of the century he emerged as the leader of the movement known as “Modernismo,” and as the first American writer seriously to influence the literary conventions of metropolitan Spain.

His first important collection, Azul [Blue], shows an obvious allegiance to 19th-century French poetry, from Hugo through the Parnassians to the symbolists and Verlaine, otherwise evident in the sketches collected in Los raros [The Rare Ones]; in fact the coda of Azul, “Échos,” is actually written in French. The core of the book is a “lyrical year,” in which the four seasons are experienced in terms less appropriate to the poet’s native Nicaragua than to a Europe whose culture dazzled Darío from the start of his career. None the less there are characteristic American notes in the sonnets to Caupolicán, the Mapuche hero of Chile, and to the poet Salvador Díaz Mirón, a fellow modernist whom Darío had known in Mexico and whose “unfettered” verses are said to resound like a herd of American buffalo.

Usually thought of as his most decadent and precious collection, Prosas profanas [Profane Prose] is by any account his least American in terms of overt theme and subject matter, despite, that is, his famous invocation of Palenque and Utatlán, Montezuma and the Inca, in the introduction. For example, the past evoked in the section “creaciones arqueológicas” definitely belongs to the classic Mediterranean, also the backdrop for the extensive “Coloquio de los centauros,” with its Pythagoreanism. Elsewhere in this collection Darío turns to the Cid and medieval Spain, much as Ezra Pound (triumphant in London not long after Darío was in Madrid) turned to medieval England. Indeed, this parallel helps us to focus on what is a new cosmopolitanism in the poetry of Darío and the Spanish language in general. Associated repeatedly with Buenos Aires, where Darío began the collection, this cosmopolitanism is most fully expressed in the poem “Divagación,” a spiralling journey through cultures and time.

From a technical point of view, Prosas profanas announces spectacular innovations in prosody, notably in the syncopation of the alexandrine, which continue to be used to great effect in Darío’s three subsequent collections Cantos de vida y esperanza [Songs of Love and Hope] El canto errante [Wandering Song], and Poema del otoño [Poem of Autumn], though less so in the somewhat stentorian Canto a la Argentina, the last collection published in his lifetime. (In his nomadic career, he left a good deal of work uncollected.) Typical of the more sombre agility of his later period are the Nocturnes in Cantos de vida, notably the arresting alexandrine that opens the second: “Los que auscultasteis el corazón de la noche.” The alexandrine is also the verse form chosen by Darío in El canto errante for his “Epístola a Madame Lugones,” she being the wife of another fellow modernist, the Argentinian Leopoldo Lugones. Remarkable for its colloquialism, its shifts of mood and tone, as well as its technical virtuosity, this poem has received brilliant elucidation in “El caracol y la sirena,” Octavio Paz’s indispensable vindication of Darío as the father not just of modernist but of modern poetry in Spanish.

—Gordon Brotherston

See the essay on “Mía.”

DAZAI Osamu

Born: Tsushima Shuji in Kanagi, Japan, 19 June 1909. Education: Educated in Kanagi grade school; middle school in Aomori City; higher school in Hirosaki, 1927–30; Tokyo Imperial University, from 1930. Family: Married 1) Oyama Hatsuyo in 1931; 2) Ishihara Michiko in 1939. Career: Journalist and writer; illness, alcohol, and drugs led to several suicide attempts. Awards: Kitamura Tōkoku award, 1939. Died: 13 June 1948.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Zenshū [Works]. 12 vols., 1955–57; revised editions, 1967–68, 1979.

Fiction

Bannen [The Declining Years]. 1936.
Doke No hana [The Flower of Buffoonery]. 1937.
Dasu gemaine [Das Gemeine]. 1940.
Hashire Merosu [Run Melos]. 1940.
Shin Hamuretto [The New Hamlet]. 1941.
Kojiki gakusei [Beggar-Student]. 1941.
Kakekomi uttae [The Indictment]. 1941.
Seigi to bisho [Justice and Smile]. 1942.
Udaijin Sanetomo [Lord Sanetomo]. 1943.
Tsugaru. 1944; as Return to Tsugaru: Travels of a Purple Tramp, translated by James Westerhoven, 1985.
Shinshaku shokoku banashi [A Retelling of the Tales from the Province]. 1945.
Otogi zoshi [A Collection of Fairy-Tales]. 1945.
Pandora no hako [Pandora’s Box]. 1946.
Shayō. 1947; as The Declining Sun, translated by Takehide Kikuchi, 1950; as The Setting Sun, translated Donald Keene, 1956.
Biyon no tsuma [Villon’s Wife]. 1947.
Ningen shikkaku. 1948; as No Longer Human, translated by Donald Keene, 1953.
Selected Stories and Sketches, translated by James O’Brien. 1982.

Crackling Mountain and Other Stories, translated by James O’Brien. 1989.

Self Portraits (stories), translated by Ralph F. McCarthy. 1991.

Blue Bamboo: Tales of Fantasy and Romance, translated by Ralph F. McCarthy. 1993.

Other

Human Lost (diary; in Japanese). 1937.

Fugaku Hyakkei [One Hundred Views of Mt. Fuji]. 1940.

Tokyo Hakkei [Eight Views of Tokyo]. 1941.

*

Critical Studies: Landscapes and Portraits by Donald Keene, 1971; Accomplices of Silence: The Modern Japanese Novel by Masao Miyoshi, 1974; Dazai Osamu by James A. O’Brien, 1975; Modern Japanese Writers and the Nature of Literature by Makoto Ueda, 1976; “Art Is Me”: Dazai Osamu’s Narrative Voice as a Permeable Self,’ in Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, 41, 1981, and The Saga of Dazai Osamu: A Critical Study with Translations, 1985, both by Phyllis I. Lyons; Suicidal Narrative in Modern Japan: The Case of Dazai Osamu, by Alan Wolfe, 1990; Studies in the Cosmic Spirit in Modern Japanese Fiction by Joel R. Cohn, 1998.

* * *

Dazai Osamu is regarded as one of the greatest stylists of modern Japanese literature, though his own life may be considered his masterpiece. Virtually all of his works were reflections of that life. For Dazai, fiction was ultimately a lie, and in his often nostalgic quest for sincerity he strove to strip bare the authorial self and let it speak directly to the reader. In this respect, Dazai can be associated with the autobiographical strain in modern Japanese fiction, the watakushi-shosetsu or “I-novel.” The practitioners of this form felt that reality could only be portrayed through the unmediated perspective of the author, presented as the first-person narrator in the text. This mode coincided with traditional tendencies to view literature as a mode of self-expression and to hold a somewhat skeptical attitude towards “objective” reality.

Dazai consciously conceived of his life as art, as the subject matter of his writings. Dazai the man became “Dazai” the text, and his works represented various readings of that text. The Dazai persona was that of the sensitive but cynical dissolute, the sloppy drunk who arouses more pity than disgust. It was characterized by an all-too-human weakness that was designed to elicit compassion, the highest virtue. Born to a wealthy landholding family, Dazai developed a rebellious streak that he briefly tried to channel into political activism, but it seems that he could not even believe in communism. Distrusting virtually all social institutions, he lived a scandalous life. Hypocrisy, arrogance, and pretension are denounced everywhere in his works, while simplicity, sincerity, and honesty are praised. In Dazai’s literary world, consciousness is the curse that keeps one from living a true life. While idealizing simple people who live day-to-day in an unselfconscious manner, Dazai found himself irresistibly drawn to despair and death.

Many of Dazai’s writings are in the “I-novel” vein. Such works as Tokyo Hakkei [Eight Views of Tokyo], Fugaku Hyakkei [One Hundred Views of Mt. Fuji], and Tsugaru (Return to Tsugaru) are first-person narratives by the archetypal “Dazai” character. In Shin Hamuretto [The New Hamlet], Otogi Zoshi [A Collection of Fairy-Tales], and similar works, old literary works are retold in a uniquely Dazaiesque manner, irreverent yet profoundly human. Dazai’s most accomplished works of fiction—the short story Biyon no tsuma [Villon’s Wife] and the novels Shayō (The Setting Sun) and Ningen Shikkaku (No Longer Human)—appeared shortly after the end of World War II. Taken together, the works present a deep and multifaceted composite image of the “Dazai” persona. The Setting Sun, Dazai’s most famous work, has been praised for its portrayal of the desolation and hope of post-war Japan. Yet although one of the central characters, Kazuko, appears to have made an existentialist decision at the end, even her resolve is cloaked in ambiguity.

If Dazai’s oeuvre suffers from its narrowly drawn subject, it nevertheless contains some of the most beautiful prose in 20th-century Japanese literature. Because of his basic love of humanity, Dazai possessed an extraordinary sensitivity to the rhythm and flow of speech, revealed in a limpid, entertaining, and often humorous literary style that makes his works a joy to read, and must account for some of the popularity he maintains among Japanese readers to this day.

—Matthew Mizenko

DE FILIPPO, Eduardo

Born: Naples, Italy, 24 May 1900. Illegitimate son of playwright and actor-manager Eduardo Scarpetta. Education: Educated at Istituto Chierchia, Naples, 1911. Military Service: Served in the Italian army, 1920–22. Family: Married 1) the actress Dorothy Pennington in 1928 (marriage annulled in San Marino, 1952, recognized in Italy, 1956); 2) Thea Prandi in 1956 (separated 1959; died 1961), one son and one daughter before marriage; 3) Isabella Quarantotti in 1977. Career: Child actor with family troupe: debut, 1904; actor with Vincenzo Scarpetta’s company, 1914–20, Francesco Corbindi’s troupe, 1922, Peppino Villani’s troupe, 1928, and the Riviste Molinari company, 1930–31; co-founder, with his brother Peppino and sister Titina, Il Teatro Umoristico, 1929, and toured with it until Peppino’s departure in 1945; co-founder, with Titina, Il Teatro di Eduardo, 1945–54; director and owner, Teatro San Ferdinando, Naples, from 1954; toured Austria, Belgium, Hungary, Poland, and Russia, 1962. Also film actor, and director of films and operas. Awards: Institute of Italian Drama prize, 1951, 1968; Simoni prize, 1969; Feltrinelli prize, 1972; Pirandello prize, 1975. D.Litt.: University of Birmingham, England, 1977; University of Rome, 1980. Named Senator for Life of the Italian Republic, 1981. Died: 31 October 1984.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Three Plays (includes The Local Authority; Grand Magic; The Best House in Naples—Filumena Marturano), translated by Carlo Ardito. 1976.

Four Plays, with introduction by Carlo Ardito. 1992.

Eduardo de Filippo: Four Plays, translated by Maria Tucci. 2001.

Plays

Sik-Sik, L’artefice magico (produced 1929). 1932; as Sik-Sik, The Masterful Magician, translated by Robert G. Bender, in Italian Quarterly, 11, 1967.

Natale in casa Cupiello (produced 1931; revised version produced 1942). In Cantata dei giorni pari, 1959.

Farmacia di turno (produced 1931). In Cantata dei giorni pari, 1959. Ogni anno punto e da capo (produced 1931). 1971.

Quei figuri di trent’anni fa (produced 1932). In Cantata dei giorni pari, 1959.

Chi è cchiù felice ‘e me! . . . (produced 1932). In Cantata dei giorni pari, 1959.

Gennariniello (produced 1932). In Cantata dei giorni pari, 1959.

Ditegli sempre di sì (produced 1932). In Cantata dei giorni pari, 1959.

I morti non fanno paura (as Requie all’anima soia, produced 1932; revised version, as I morti non fanno paura, produced 1952). In Cantata dei giorni dispari 2, 1958.

L’ultimo bottone (produced 1932).

Cuoco della mala cucina, with Maria Scarpetta (produced 1932).

Uomo e galantuomo (produced 1933). In Cantata dei giorni pari, 1959.

Parlate al portiere, with Maria Scarpetta (produced 1933).

Scorzetta di limone, from a play by Gino Rocca (produced 1933).

Il dono di Natale (produced 1934). In Cantata dei giorni pari, 1959.

Tre mesi dopo (produced 1934).

Sintetici a qualunque costo (produced 1934).

Il berretto a sonagli, from a play by Pirandello (produced 1936).

Quinto piano, ti saluto! (produced 1936). In Cantata dei giorni pari, 1959.

L’abito nuovo, from a story by Pirandello (produced 1937). In Cantata dei giorni pari, 1959.

Uno coi capelli bianchi (produced 1938). In Cantata dei giorni pari, 1959.

Si salvi chi può, from a work by Gino Rocca (produced 1940).

Non ti pago! (produced 1940). 1943.

La parte di Amelto (produced 1940). In Cantata dei giorni pari, 1959.

In licenza, from a work by Eduardo Scarpetta (produced 1941).

La fortuna con l’effe maiuscola, with Armando Curcio and R. De Angelis (produced 1942).

Io, l’erede (produced 1942). In Cantata dei giorni pari, 1959.

Il diluvio, from the play by Ugo Betti (produced 1943).

Napoli milionaria! (produced 1945). 1946; as Eduardo de Filippo’s Napoli milionaria, translated and adapted by Tori Haring-Smith, 1996.

Occhiali neri (produced 1945). In Cantata dei giorni dispari 2, 1958.

Questi fantasmi! (produced 1946). In Cantata dei giorni dispari 1, 1951; as Oh, These Ghosts, translated by Marguerite Carra and Louise H. Warner, in Tulane Drama Review, 8, 1963.

Filumena Marturano (produced 1946). In Cantata dei giorni dipari 1, 1951; as The Best House in Naples, translated by Carlo Ardito, in Three Plays, 1976; as Filumena, translated by Keith Waterhouse and Willis Hall, 1978; also translated by Timberlake Wertenbaker, 1998.

Pericolosamente (produced 1947). In Cantata dei giorni pari, 1959.

Le bugie con le gambe lunghe (produced 1948). In Cantata dei giorni dispari 1, 1951.

Le voci di dentro (produced 1948). In Cantata dei giorni dispari 1, 1951; as Inner Voices, translated by N.F. Simpson, 1983.

La grande magia (produced 1949). In Cantata dei giorni dispari 1, 1951; as Grand Magic, translated by Carlo Ardito, in Three Plays, 1976.

La paura numero uno (produced 1950). In Cantata dei giorni dispari 2, 1958.

Cantata dei giorni dispari. 3 vols., 1951–66; revised edition, 1971.

Amicizia (produced 1952). In Cantata dei giorni dispari 2, 1958.

Miseria e nobiltà from a play by Eduardo Scarpetta (produced 1953).

Bene mio e core mio (produced 1955). 1956.

Mia famiglia (produced 1955). 1955.

Il medico dei pazzi, from a work by Eduardo Scarpetta (produced 1957).

De Pretore Vincenzo (produced 1957). 1957.

Tre cazune fortunate, from a play by Eduardo Scarpetta (produced 1958).

Sabato, domenica e lunedì (produced 1959). 1960; as Saturday, Sunday, Monday, translated by Keith Waterhouse and Willis Hall, 1974.

Cantata dei giorni pari. 1959.

Il sindaco del Rione Sanità (produced 1960). 1961; as The Local Authority, translated by Carlo Ardito, in Three Plays, 1976.

Il figlio di Pulcinella (produced 1962). In Cantata dei giorni dispari 3, 1966.

Peppino Girella, with Isabella Quarantotti (televised 1963). 1964.

Farse e commedie. 2 vols., 1964.

Dolore sotto chiave (produced 1964). With L'arte della commedia, 1965.

L'arte della commedia (produced 1965). With Dolore sotto chiave, 1965.

Tommaso D'Amalfi. In Cantata dei giorni dispari 3, 1966.

Il cilindro (produced 1966). In Cantata dei giorni dispari 3, 1966.

Il contratto (produced 1967). 1967.

Cani e gatti, from a work by Eduardo Scarpetta (produced 1970).

Il monumento (produced 1970). 1971.

'Na santarella, from a work by Eduardo Scarpetta (produced 1972).

I capolavori. 2 vols., 1973.

Gli esami non finiscono mai (produced 1973). 1973.

Lu curaggio de nu pumpiere napulitano, from a work by Eduardo Scarpetta (produced 1974).

L'eredità di Shylock, from the play by Shakespeare. 1984.

La Tempesta, from the play by Shakespeare. 1984.

Nativity Scene: A Play, translated by Anthony Molino and Paul Feinberg, 1997.

Screenplays: "Adelina" episode, with Isabella Quarantotti, of Ieri, oggi e domani (Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow), 1963; Matrimonio all'italiana (Marriage Italian Style), 1964; Spara forte, più forte . . . non capisco (Shoot Loud, Louder . . . I Don't Understand), with Suso Cecchi D'Amico, 1966.

Television Plays: Peppino Girella, with Isabella Quarantotti, 1963; Li nepute de lu sinecco, 1975; 'O Tuono 'e marzo, 1975; and adaptations of about 20 of his own plays.

Verse

Il paese di Pulcinella. 1951.

'O canisto. 1971.

Le poesie. 1975.

Other

Editor, Manzù: Album inedito. 1977.

Teatro, edited by Nicola Di Blasi and Paola Quarenghi. 2000.

Tre adattamenti teatrali. 1999.

*

Critical Studies: In Search of Theatre by Eric Bentley, 1953; L'esperienza comica di Eduardo De Filippo by Laura Pizer, 1972; Eduardo by Federico Frascani, 1974; Il teatro di Eduardo, 1975, and Eduardo De Filippo, 1978, by Fiorenza Di Franco; Eduardo nel mondo edited by Isabella De Filippo, 1978, and Eduardo De Filippo: Vita e opere 1900–1984 edited by De Filippo and Sergio Martin, 1986; Eduardo De Filippo: Poeta comico del tragico quotidiano by Carla Filosa, 1978; Eduardo De Filippo: Introduzione e guida al studio dell'opera eduardiana, storia e antologia della critica by Giovanni Antonucci, 1980; Eduardo segreto by Federico Frascani, 1982; De Filippo (in English) by Mario Mignone, 1984; Eduardo drammaturgo by Anna Barsotti, 1988; The Theatre of Eduardo De Filippo: An Introductory Study by Marco Ciolli, 1993; Vita di Eduardo by Maurizio Giammusso, 1993.

* * *

Eduardo De Filippo's entire life was spent in the theatre. At the age of four he first appeared on stage; at 14 he joined the company in which his father, Eduardo Scarpetta, the prominent Neapolitan actor, director, and author, was a member. De Filippo was born into a thespian family but he was also educated in the still lively, century-old tradition of the Neapolitan theatre, the popular and dialectal heir to the commedia dell'arte. He became an author, actor, and later director and manager of his own company. It is not surprising that even in his least inspired works one cannot fail to notice his consummate stage craftsmanship.

His plays are either a continuous crescendo or a combination of crescendo and diminuendo. An example of the latter is La paura numero uno [Fear Number One]: Matteo, fearing World War II, tries to postpone indefinitely his daughter's wedding; Luisa, the other protagonist and the fiancé's mother, who has lost her husband in World War I and one son in World War II, does not want her only remaining son to risk the danger of war, and walls him up in a room. Matteo first appears comical, then ridiculous, then morally acceptable; Luisa is first seemingly mad, then pathetic, then irreproachable.

Filumena Marturano, on the other hand, is an example of the plays of crescendo. By the end of each of its three acts we are surprised: in Act I, characters and audience discover that the main character is the mother of three grown sons; in Act II, one of the three proves to be that of Domenico, her lover; in Act III, the lovers reveal to each other their inner feelings. These revelations disclose, to odd effect, the real meaning of what went on before: some of the comic elements become serious, and the serious, comic: the sentimental becomes real, while the insane becomes normal.

Although De Filippo was a product of Neapolitan popular theatre in his craft and often in his language, the theatricality of that tradition did not compromise his originality. The farce of Eduardo Scarpetta and the grotesquerie of Raffaele Viviani, another famous Neapolitan playwright, become, in De Filippo, humorous, bittersweet, or pathetic. In the first poem of his collection Il paese di Pulcinella [Pulcinella's Land], the question "Is it a laughing matter when I portray comical situations arising from everyday life?" is answered with "I don't think so." Of course, we may still laugh, but we must also perceive that his comedy carries a streak of melancholy.

The locus of De Filippo's drama is Naples, and its subject the Neapolitan in his daily struggle for physical, social, or emotional survival. The solidity of De Filippo's plots and the characterization of his Neapolitan personae generate irresistible laughter, but also reveal man's existential finitude: a hint of the tragic is evoked. These dramas pitch the individual against society, which is generally represented by the family. In fact, some of De Filippo's most famous and successful plays, such as Napoli milionaria!, Filumena Marturano, and Sabato, domenica e lunedì (Saturday, Sunday, Monday), present in tones of bittersweet realism conflicts among family members with different desires, morals, or beliefs. However, it is when De Filippo shatters the realistic mould that his plays achieve their greatest originality.

In his first major play, and one of his own favourites, Natale in casa Cupiello [Christmas at the Cupiellos], the protagonist, Luca, detaches himself completely from the reality surrounding him by clinging stubbornly to his ideals, his world of illusions. A human being unable to see the obvious may evoke in the audience a smile of compassion and pity. But the audience is also made aware that Luca is unconsciously rejecting the obvious in order to preserve his ego, in order to prevent existence from drowning essence. Our smile of compassion becomes self-conscious, for we all share in Luca's hopeless effort. To pity is added a tinge of terror.

While Luca defends his illusions with the myth of universal brotherhood, symbolized by his construction of the Nativity scene, and remains within realistic coordinates, the protagonists of two of the most important of De Filippo's plays break through the frame of realism and enter the world of fantasy and the surreal.

In Questi fantasmi! (Oh, These Ghosts), Pasquale convinces himself that there are ghosts: he manufactures them instead of accepting the fact that his wife has a lover. He abandons the reality of pain by living in a world of fantasy. In La grande magia (Grand Magic), Calogero, who does not want to admit that his wife has run away with her lover, believes what he is told by Otto, a magician: that his wife is being kept in a small box. By opening it, says Otto, he can make her reappear, but only if he has faith in her. Calogero refuses to open the box; he does not want to face the reality of his adulterous wife. Four years later Maria comes back, but Calogero refuses to accept her because she appeared the moment before he was about to open the box; he concludes that the woman before him is not Maria. He will keep the box closed forever so that he can always believe his wife has been faithful.

De Filippo's two kinds of "reality"—fact and fantasy—do not imply a kind of Pirandellian relativism or an ontological questioning of the real. But his characters, like some of Pirandello's, do use fantasy to avoid being thrown into the abyss of despair or emptiness. Their defences against the abyss are what makes De Filippo's comedies serious.

—Emanuele Licastrò

See the essay on Filumena Marturano.

DE QUEIRÓS, José Maria de Eça

See EÇA DE QUEIRÓS, José Maria de

DE QUEIROZ, Rachel

See QUEIROZ, Rachel de

DELEDDA, Grazia

Born: Nuoro, Sardinia, Italy, 27 September 1871. Education: Educated to age 11. Family: Married Palmiro Modesani in 1900; two sons. Career: Regular contributor to the periodicals L'Ultima Moda and Il Paradiso dei Bambini, from 1888, and Rivista di Letteratura popolare, 1893–95; moved to Cagliari, 1899; settled in Rome, 1900. Awards: Nobel prize for literature, 1926. Died: 15 August 1936.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Romanzi e novelle, edited by Emilio Cecchi. 5 vols., 1941–61.

Opere scelte, edited by Euralio De Michelis. 2 vols., 1964.

Fiction

Sangue sarde (for children). 1888.

Nell'azzurro. 1890.

Amore regale (stories). 1891.

Fior di Sardegna. 1892.

Amori fatali; La leggenda nera; Il ritratto (stories). 1892.

Racconti sardi. 1894.

Anime oneste. 1895.

La via del male. 1896.

L'ospite (stories). 1897.

Il tesoro. 1897.

Le tentazioni (stories). 1899.

Giaffah (stories; for children). 1899.

Il vecchio della montagna. 1900; edited by Joseph G. Fucilla, 1932.

La regina delle tenebre (stories). 1902.

Dopo il divorzio. 1902; as Naufraghi in porto, 1920; as After the Divorce, translated by Maria Hornor Landsdale, 1905; also translated by Susan Ashe, 1985.

Elias Portolu. 1903; translated by Martha King, 1992.

Cenere. 1904; as Ashes, translated by Helen Hester Colvill, 1908.

Nostalgie. 1905; as Nostalgia, translated by Helen Hester Colvill, 1905.

I giuochi della vita (stories). 1905.

L'edera. 1906.

L'ombra del passato. In Nuova antologia, 13, 1907.

Amori moderni (stories). 1907.

Il nonno. 1909; as Cattive compagne, 1921.

Il nostro padrone. 1910.

Sino al confine. 1910.

Nel deserto. 1911.

Chiaroscuro (stories). 1912; as Chiaroscuro and Other Stories, translated with introduction by Martha King, 1994.

Colombi e sparvieri. 1912.

Canne al vento. 1913; as Reeds in the Wind, translated by Martha King, 1999.
Le colpe altrui. 1914.
Il fanciullo nascosto (stories). 1915.
Marianna Sirca. 1915; edited by Maro Beath Jones and Armando T. Bissiri, 1940.
L'incendio nell'oliveto. 1918.
Il ritorno del figlio; La bambina rubata. 1919.
La madre. 1920; as The Woman and the Priest, translated by Mary G. Steegman, 1923; as The Mother, translated by Steegman, 1928.
Il segreto dell'uomo solitario. 1921.
Il Dio dei viventi. 1921.
Il flauto del bosco (stories). 1923.
La danza della collana. With A sinistra, 1924.
La fuga in Egitto. 1925.
Il sigillo d'amore (stories). 1926.
Annalena Bilsini. 1927.
Il vecchio e i fanciulli. 1928.
Il dono di Natale (stories). 1930.
La casa del poeta (stories). 1930.
Il paese del vento. 1932.
La vigna sul mare (stories). 1932.
Sole d'estate (stories). 1933.
L'argine. 1934.
La chiesa della solitudine. 1936; as The Church of Solitude, translated by E. Ann Matter, 2002.
Cosima, edited by Antonio Baldini. 1937; translated by Martha King, 1991.
Il cedro del Libano. 1939.
Romanzi e novelle, edited by Natalino Sapegno. 1972.
La Feste del Cristo, e altre novelle, edited by L. Nicastro. 1972.
Romanzi Sardi, edited by Vittorio Spinazzola. 1981.

Verse

Paesaggi sardi. 1897.

Plays

Odio vince. With Il vecchio della montagna, 1912.
L'edera (produced 1909), from her novel, with Camillo Antona Traversi. 1912.
La grazia (libretto), with C. Guastella and V. Michetti, music by Vincenzo Michetti (produced 1923). 1922.
A sinistra. With La danza della collana, 1924.
 Screenplays: Cenere, 1916.

Other

Tradizioni popolari di Nuoro in Sardegna. 1894.
Versi e prose giovanili, edited by Antonio Scano. 1938.
Lettera di Grazia Deledda a Marino Moretti (1913–1923). 1959.
 Editor, Le più belle pagine di Silvio Pellico. 1923.
 Translator, Eugenia Grandet, by Balzac. 1930.

*

Bibliography: Bibliografia deleddiana by Remo Branca, 1938.

Critical Studies: Grazia Deledda by Mercedes Mundula, 1929; Grazia Deledda by Francesco Bruno, 1935; L'opera di Grazia Deledda by Luigi Falchi, 1937; Grazia Deledda e il Decadentismo by Euralio De Michelis, 1938; L'arte di Grazia Deledda by Licia Roncarati, 1949; Grazia Deledda by E. Buono, 1951; Deledda by Giancarlo Buzzi, 1952; Vocazione narrativa di Grazia Deledda by Floro Di Zeno, 1967; Grazia Deledda by Antonio Piromalli, 1968; Deledda by Maria Tettamanzi, 1969; Il segreto di Grazia Deledda by Remo Branca, 1971; Grazia Deledda: Ricordi e testimonianze by Lina Sacchetti, 1971; Grazia Deledda by Antonio Tobia, 1971; Grazia Deledda by Nicola Valle, 1971; Atti del convegno nazionale di studi deleddiani, 1974; A Self-Made Woman by Carolyn Balducci, 1975; Deledda by Mario Miccinesi, 1975; Invito alla lettura di Grazia Deledda by Olga Lombardi, 1979; Grazia Deledda: Ethnic Novelist (includes bibliographies) by Mario Aste, 1990; Women in Modern Italian Literature: Four Studies by Bruce Merry, 1990.

* * *

Grazia Deledda, Italian novelist and short story writer, was born in Sardinia and always remained a passionately committed Sardinian. She was awarded the Nobel prize for literature in 1926. Her journey to Stockholm to receive it was the only occasion in her life when she travelled abroad. A prolific writer, she started writing early in life, and at the age of 17 published her first novel, Sangue sardo [Sardinian Blood]. In 1896 she published La via del male [The Path of Evil], which was reviewed by the Sicilian novelist Luigi Capuana, in a review that made her well-known in the world of Italian letters. Among the writers she studied in her childhood and early youth, she was most influenced by De Amicis, Hugo, Dumas père, and Paul Bourget. After her marriage, Deledda moved to Rome where she lived for the rest of her life.

Although Deledda wrote more than 30 novels and about 15 collections of short stories, it is difficult to pinpoint any particular novel as her masterpiece. Among the more famous and successful are Elias Portolu, Cenere (Ashes), Colombi e sparvieri [Pigeons and Sparrows], Canne al vento [Reeds in the Wind], L'incendio nell'oliveto [The Fire in the Olive-Grove], and La madre (The Mother). Among her later novels, the more important are Il segreto dell'uomo solitario [The Secret of a Lonely Man], Il Dio dei viventi [The God of the Living], Il paese del vento [The Country of the Wind], and her last novel, which is largely autobiographical, Cosima.

Both the novels she wrote while still living in Sardinia, and those produced after she had moved to Rome, have a strongly ethnic and regional vein running through them. Sardinia, its history and geography, its folklore and landscape, its people, customs, and superstitions, its religion and morality, are not only vividly described and passionately celebrated in Deledda's writings, but also constitute the very fabric of her narrative art. Her characters, with their passions and sentiments, fears and feelings of guilt, their primitive as well as romantic impulses, are portrayed convincingly. In this respect, as well as in her adoption of the technique and ethos of "verism" in her writings, Deledda may be compared to Giovanni Verga. But the kind of self-discipline found in Verga, which accounts for his more austere, compact and, on the whole, more accomplished kind of narrative art and realism, is not to be found in Deledda, even in her most mature novels. Little wonder, therefore, that Verga made a point of detaching himself from Deledda, considering his own view of life and truth to be more bitter and tragic than that of Deledda.

It is only in her later and more mature novels that Deledda manages to drop description for its own sake and do away with mechanical repetition of theme, character, and landscape. To some extent this development was brought about by her contact with the French and Russian naturalists as well as with Tolstoi, Dostoevskii, and Thomas Hardy. However, neither her naturalism or “verism,” nor her contact with such foreign writers, went far enough to free her from both her instinctive tendency to idealize or lyricize her subject matter and from her own self-absorption, which accounts for the essentially autobiographical nature of her art. Thus, her native land, with its savage and primitive landscape, and her own emotionally rich childhood and memories may be regarded as the main protagonists of her work, so that such characters as servants and landlords, or priests and bandits, seem to be secondary. And it is in the context of such a landscape and such protagonists that Deledda manages to depict, like Verga and Hardy, but not with the same degree of moral depth and stoic richness, the workings of the human fate, the nature of the Montalian “evil of living,” the drama and turmoil of human passions.

But while Deledda was deeply involved in portraying the life and passions of the land and the people of Sardinia, her involvement was more emotional than moral or psychological in nature. She could not detach herself from her subject matter, because she lacked what D.H. Lawrence called the psychological technique. But then this is both her weakness and her strength; it is her strength in the sense that what she did achieve (which prompted Lawrence, in his introduction to the translation of La madre, to locate some parallels between Deledda and Emily Brontë) would not have been possible had she been able to contemplate objectively that with which she was so emotionally involved.

—Gabrielle Barfoot

DEMOSTHENES

Born: Athens, c. 384 BC. Education: Studied rhetoric and law, overcoming speech impediments. Career: Speech writer and teacher, then practised constitutional law; also active in politics from age 30, rousing the Athenians to resist the growing threat from Philip II of Macedon; formed an anti-Macedonian party, 346–340 BC, and an alliance with Thebes, 339 BC, and made his great speeches against Philip: Olynthiacae in 349 BC; Philippicae in 352, 344, and 341 BC; was present when the Greeks were defeated at the battle of Chaeronea in 338 BC. Accused of theft, 324 BC, condemned, fined, and exiled; recalled after the death of Alexander in 323 BC to direct the Greek rebellion against Macedon; sentenced to death by Demades, a supporter of the Macedonian rule; fled to the island of Calauria, where he took poison. Died: 322 BC.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

[Works], edited by F. Blass. 4th revised edition, 3 vols., 1885–89; translated by J.H. and C. Vince, A.T. Murray, N.W. and N.J. de Witt [Loeb Edition], 7 vols., 1926–49.

Orations, edited by S.H. Butcher. 3 vols., 1938; as All the Orations of Demosthenes, translated by Thomas Leland, 3 vols., 1770; also translated by Charles R. Kennedy, 5 vols., 1852–63; as Public Orations, translated by A.W. Pickard-Cambridge, 1912; selection as Olynthiacs, Philippics, Minor Public Speeches (bilingual edition), translated by J.H. Vince, 1930; as On the False Embassy (Oration 19), translated and edited by Douglas M. MacDowell, 2000.

Works

Adversus Leptinem, translated by F.E.A. Trayer. 1893; translated as The Oration Against the Law of Leptines, 1879; also translated by J. Harold Boardman, 1892.

De corona, edited by Arthur Holmes. 1871; also edited by George and William Simcox, 1871, Martin L. D'Ooge, 1875, B. Drake, revised by Thomas Gwatkin, 1880, William W. Goodwin, 1901, Milton W. Humphreys, 1913, and Evelyn Abbott and P.E. Matheson, 2 vols., 1926; as The Crown, translated by William Brandt, 1870; also translated by Robert Collier, 1875; Francis P. Simpson, 1882; Charles R. Kennedy, 1888; Henry, Lord Brougham, 1893; T. Jeffrey, 1896; Otho Lloyd Holland, 1926; A.N.W. Saunders, in Demosthenes and Aeschines, 1975; as The Oration of Demosthenes upon the Crown, translated by Charles Rann Kennedy, 1988; as On the Crown (De Corona), translated with introduction and commentary by S. Usher, 1993.

De falsa legatione, edited by Richard Shilleto. 9th edition, 1901; translated by A.N.W. Saunders, in Demosthenes and Aeschines, 1975.

In Androtonem, translated as Androtonem. 1888.

In Midiam, as Against Meidias, edited by John R. King. 1901; also edited by William W. Goodwin, 1906, S.H. Butcher, 1907, J.H. Vince [Loeb Edition], 1935, Ioannes Sykutris, 1937, and Jean Humbert, 1959; translated by J.H. Vince (bilingual edition), 1930; also translated by Douglas M. MacDowell, 1990.

Olynthiacae, edited by T.R. Glover. 1897; also edited by H. Sharpley, 1900, J.M. Macgregor, 1915, and E.I. McQueen (with commentary), 1986; as The Olynthiacs, translated by E.L. Hawkins, 1905.

Philippicae, edited by Gilbert A. Davies. 1907; translated by The Philippic Orations, 1885.

Selected Private Speeches (with commentary.), edited by C. Carey and R.A. Reid. 1985.

*

Critical Studies: Demosthenes and the Last Days of Greek Freedom by A.W. Pickard-Cambridge, 1914; Demosthenes: The Original and Growth of His Policy by Werner W. Jaeger, translated by Edward S. Robinson, 1938; Demosthenes' On the Crown: A Critical Case Study by George Kennedy, 1967; The General Demosthenes and His Use of Military Surprise by Joseph Roisman, 1993; Demosthenes and His Time: A Study in Defeat by Raphael Sealey, 1993; Demosthenes: Statesman and Orator, edited by Ian Worthington, 2000.

* * *

The legacy of the great orator Demosthenes, as handed down to us in the manuscripts, consists of 61 speeches, 56 exordia, or opening paragraphs of speeches, and six letters. The speeches, which naturally form the centrepiece of his oeuvre, are distributed among the three major forms of ancient oratory. The first 17 are deliberative, composed as contributions to debate in the Assembly, the sovereign body of democratic Athens. Two of the remainder, the Funeral Speech and the Erotic Essay, are epideictic display pieces. The rest, forming by far the largest portion, are forensic pieces, written to impress jurors in the law courts. The fact that not all the works handed down to us in the corpus Demosthenicum are by Demosthenes himself was recognized already in antiquity. Some are the works of contemporaries, like Apollodorus, for instance, to whom several, including the famous 59th speech, Against Neaera, are ascribed. They were probably collected with the great orator's works by accident. Others, especially some of the letters, are probably exercises composed in the rhetorical schools of the Hellenistic and Roman periods, although one or two may be deliberate forgeries, designed for the ancient trade in rare and obscure works by famous figures of the classical golden age. In acknowledgement of these false attributions, several works in the corpus are generally and universally ascribed to a pseudo-Demosthenes, although the authenticity of some others continues to attract controversy.

Demosthenes was a rhetor, which means in Greek simply "speaker," an unassuming label that designates an unofficial role, which was the closest the Athenians came to "politician" or "statesman." Demosthenes wrote speeches for himself and his friends, and at the beginning of his career he was a logographos, a professional speech-writer, who would listen to the facts of his client's case and then write a speech for him to deliver, since the Athenian system tried to preserve an equal and amateur democracy by insisting that each man should conduct his own prosecution or defence. Accordingly, this profession was rather looked down upon by the Athenians and Demosthenes probably abandoned it as soon as he could, to concentrate on his own political and forensic battles, which carried their own considerable financial rewards both of a legitimate and an illegitimate kind. However, the particular skill of the logographos, the creation of convincing characterizations (ethopoeia), was important for the development of Demosthenes' oratorical skills. There were three sets of characterizations to be worked on: that of the speaker, that of his audience, and that of the other participants in the narrative, including the opposing side. Obviously, the depiction of one's enemies, and of any other figures in the narrative of events (katastasis), had to be convincing enough to make the speaker's own version of what happened plausible, as well as painting his opponents as darkly as possible. In his speech "Against Conon," the hubristic nature of the defendant and his associates is carefully constructed by the use of vivid accounts of brawls and boorish behaviour, including one scene in which Conon is described flapping his arms and crowing like a game-cock that has just won a fight. The second layer of characterization, concerning the way the audience could be depicted, was rather more awkward. This kind of ethopoeia was especially important in the deliberative speeches, when the Athenians were being urged into a certain mode of action. They had to be cajoled without feeling insulted and alienated by the speaker: frightened into action, but not terrified into inertia by too strong a sense of their own inadequacies. This kind of construction of "the Athenians" could be effected with rather subtle means, by getting past the audience controversial statements disguised as opinionones communes, making quiet assumptions about the class of the spectators and thereby attempting to co-opt them into a ready-made set of values, or by rather more brutal tactics: heavy-handed contrasts between the sharp and decisive monarch Philip and the shiftless, feckless, and fickle populace of the democratic city, or comparisons between the decadent and lazy citizens of the present and their energetic, more moral, and more successful ancestors of the 5th century.

The final type of ethopoeia was perhaps the trickiest of all, the characterization of the speaker himself. Demosthenes perhaps never quite reached the heights attained by the acknowledged master of this technique, the logographos Lysias, in the very early 4th century, but one or two speeches show that he could pull it off if he tried. The clearest example is perhaps the speech "Against Callicles," in which the master of Greek prose style writes words for the mouth of someone purporting to be a simple farmer, defending himself against claims for flood damage, but the general principle that "ars est celare artem" would apply even to the major public speeches in which Demosthenes was speaking his own words in the position of a great statesman. Too much awareness by the audience of the speaker's skills as an orator would detract from the honesty of his case and distract attention from the policies he was championing. A great speaker had to seduce without the slightest hint or suspicion that he was a seducer. Demosthenes' original solution to this paradox in his public speeches is to describe a dialogue with himself, so that he seems to be exposing his own thought-patterns in the form of an agonizing struggle, inviting the audience to sympathize and empathize directly.

This problem of disguising cleverness brings us to the question of Demosthenes' own art, his style, the foundation of his reputation as "the orator," and the reason why his works were preserved as models for students of rhetoric. Since antiquity, readers have observed two closely related characteristics in particular: the rich variety of effects he could command, and his bia or forcefulness. While his predecessors cultivated a highly finished, intellectual conciseness, the texture of Demosthenes' speeches is terribly uneven. Long periods, carefully constructed with a precisely chosen vocabulary, can suddenly give way to extreme abruptness. Lofty abstractions are succeeded by concrete metaphors and metonymies. High-falutin' poetic language yields to colloquialisms and oaths. Narrative passages are suddenly brought to life with direct speech. The overall effect is of spontaneity, of a carefully composed piece of prose disrupted by true feeling and uncontrollable passions, usually but not always of violent anger.

This at any rate is the Demosthenes who survives in the manuscripts, and whose reputation as the great master of Greek prose is disputed only by Plato. It could be, however, that what the orator himself considered his greatest achievement has been lost to us, for the story was told among later generations that when he was asked what the three most important elements of rhetoric were, he replied, "Delivery, delivery and delivery."

—James N. Davidson

See the essay on On the Crown.

DEPESTRE, René

Born: Jacmel, Haiti, 29 August 1926. Education: High School in Port-au-Prince, Haiti; attended Institut d'Etudes Politiques de Paris and Sorbonne University. Received a degree in History and Art from Musée de l'Homme, Paris. Career: Lived and studied in France, 1946–58; lived and taught in Cuba, where he published extensively and translated Spanish American poetry into French, 1958–78; returned to Paris, where he worked for Unesco, 1978. Awards: Bourse Goncourt de la nouvelle prize, for Alléluia pour une femme-jardin, 1982; John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation award, 1995; Grand Prix de Poésie de l'Académie Française, 1998.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Anthologie personnelle. 1993.

Poetry

Étincelles [Sparks]. 1945.

Gerbe du sang. 1946.

Végétations de clartés [Vegetations of Splendor]. 1951.

Traduit du grand large, poème de ma patrie enchanée. 1952.

Minerai Noir. 1957.

Journal d'un animal marine. 1964.

Un arc-en-ciel pour l'occident chrétien. 1967; as A Rainbow for the Christian West, translated by Joan Dayan, 1977.

Cantate d'octobre. 1968.

Poète à Cuba. 1976.

En état de poésie. 1980.

Au matin de la négritude. 1990.

Fiction

Le Mât Cocagne, 1979, as The Festival of the Greasy Pole, translated by Carrol F. Coates, 1990.

Alléluia pour une femme-jardin. 1981.

Hadriana dans tous mes rêves. 1988.

Éros dans un train chinois. 1990.

Essays

Bonjour et Adieu à la négritude. 1980.

*

Critical Studies: René Depestre by Claude Couffon, 1986; "France Reads Haiti: René Depestre's Hadriana dans tous mes rêves" by Joan Dayan, in Yale French Studies, vol. 83, 1993; Shaping and Reshaping the Caribbean: The Work of Aimé Césaire and René Depestre by Martin Munro, 2000.

* * *

René Depestre published his first book of poetry, Étincelles [Sparks] very young, at the age of 19. He actively engaged in political activities and founded and directed the journal "La Ruche," the official publication of the Haitian revolutionary youth. In 1945 he met the French poet André Breton, a figure that deeply influenced him. In January 1946, after "La Ruche" was prohibited, a revolutionary movement overthrew and sent to exile President Elie Lescot. But the new regime didn't satisfy his political expectations and Depestre went to exile in France. He spent twelve years in France taking courses at Sorbonne University and other institutions of higher education in Paris and obtained a degree in History and Arts at Musée de l'Homme. Depestre returned to Haiti in 1958, but displeased with the dictatorship of "Papa Doc" Duvalier, he abandoned his country again to settle in Cuba, where he lived for the next twenty years. In Cuba he published Un arc-en-ciel pour l'occident chrétien (A Rainbow For the Christian West), an extensive poem where he depicts the dramatic position of black people in the context of modern white capitalism. This book puts him close to the Négritude movement that was founded by the Martinican poet Aimé Césaire with whom Depestre had a political and literary relationship. Césaire wrote the prologue for his book Végétations de clartés [Vegetations of Splendor].

During his stay in Cuba Depestre taught at University of La Habana and also at University of West Indies at Mona, Jamaica. He translated Cuban poets into French such as Nicolás Guillén, Heberto Padilla and Roberto Fernández Retamar; and was a founder of the Casa de las Americas publishing house. He also published frequently in the literary magazine of the same name. In 1978 he left Cuba and returned to Paris, where he worked for Unesco until his retirement in 1988.

René Depestre's poetry expresses a profound desire for representing the richness of the Haitian and the Caribbean world and makes reference not exclusively to his natal country but to the global condition of the Afro-Caribbean people. His first poems talk of a pure and innocent world but they soon become an expression of his political views, a medium by which he denounces the mechanisms of capitalist exploitation. His body of engagé works, with books like Végétations de clartés and Traduit du grand large [Translated from the High Seas] not only address Haiti's social and political problems, but also the plight of oppressed black people in Africa, the Caribbean and in other parts of the world. All his work is influenced by the problem of cultural identity linked to ethnicity and the historical experience of slavery. His esthetical and political contributions made his work comparable to other Afro-Caribbean poets related to the Négritude movement.

Nevertheless, his essay Bonjour et Adieu à la négritude [Hello and Goodbye to Négritude] marks a turning point from certain ideas of racial identity present in the Négritude movement. In this book Depestre asks himself whether the self-assurance reached by the black man through his historical quest is enough to abandon the prejudices and racial hatreds that weighed upon him. After a critical balance of the values and deficiencies of Négritude, he proclaims the necessity of a "panhuman" identity that would allow the Caribbean man to project himself beyond the barrier of the color of his skin.

Both in his poems and in his prose, the latter developed during the mature phase of his literary production, there exists a strong presence of popular culture, in particular of the African-Haiti religion, the "voodoo." The presence of the inexplicable in his work has been compared with the Latin American magic realism. In his novels he also treats political issues such as the dictatorship in Haiti as in The Festival of the Greasy Pole, published in 1979. This book is not so much a novel as a political fable that explains the crushing conditions of his country during the Duvalier regime. As a political exile for most of his life, Depestre must have harbored deep despair for the fate of his country, forever wrapped in oppression, poverty, and ecological degradation. His literature is full of erotic references (Hadriana dans tous mes rêves [Hadrianna In All My Dreams]). His poetry has appeared in many French and Spanish anthologies and collections and has been translated into French, English, Spanish, and Russian.

—Alvaro Fernández Bravo

DESTOUCHES, Louis-Ferdinand

See CÉLINE, Louis-Ferdinand

DIDEROT, Denis

Born: Langres, France, 5 October 1713. Education: Educated at Jesuit school in Langres, 1723–28, became an abbé in 1726; in Paris from 1728: University of Paris, master of arts 1732; studied theology at the university and read law for a short time, 1732–35. Family: Married Antoinette Champion in 1743; two daughters and two sons. Career: Tutor, and freelance writer and translator from 1734; imprisoned briefly in 1749 for Lettre sur les aveugles; commissioned by the publisher Le Breton to edit the Encyclopédie, which appeared from 1751 to 1772: also a major contributor; writer for F.M. Grimm's private periodical Correspondance Littéraire from 1759; patronized by Catherine the Great from 1765, and visited Russia, 1773–74. Member: Prussian Royal Academy, 1751; Foreign Member, Russian Academy of Sciences, 1773. Died: 31 July 1784.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

- Oeuvres*. 15 vols., 1798.
Oeuvres complètes, edited by Jean Assézat and Maurice Tourneux. 20 vols., 1875–77, reprinted 1966.
Oeuvres, edited by A. Billy. 1951.
Oeuvres philosophiques, edited by Paul Vernière. 1956.
Oeuvres esthétiques, edited by Paul Vernière. 1959.
Oeuvres romanesques, edited by Henri Bénac. 1962.
Oeuvres politiques, edited by Paul Vernière. 1963.
Oeuvres complètes [Chronological Edition], edited by Roger Lewinter. 15 vols., 1969–73.
Oeuvres complètes, edited by H. Dieckmann, Jean Varloot, and Jacques Proust. 1975–.
Oeuvres complètes, edited by Arthur M. Wilson and others. 1975–.
Oeuvres romanesques, edited by Lucette Perol. 1981.
The Irresistible Diderot (selections), edited by John Hope Mason. 1982.

Fiction

- Les Bijoux indiscrets*. 1748; as The Indiscreet Toys, 2 vols., 1749.
Contes moraux et nouvelles idylles, with Salomon Gessner, edited by J.-H. Meister. 1773.

Jacques le fataliste et son maître. 1796; edited by Simone Lecointre and Jean Le Galliot, 1976; as Jacques the Fataliste, edited by Martin Hall and translated by M. Henry, 1986; as James the Fatalist and His Master, translated anonymously, 3 vols., 1797; as Jacques the Fatalist, translated by J. Robert Loy, 1962; as Jacques the Fatalist and His Master, translated with introduction by David Coward, 1999.

La Religieuse. 1796; edited by Robert Mauzi, 1972; as The Nun, translated by Brett Smith, 1797; also translated by Marianne Sinclair, 1966; and Leonard Tancock, 1972; as Memoirs of a Nun, translated by Francis Birreil, 1928.

Le Neveu de Rameau. 1821; edited by Jean Fabre, 1950; as Rameau's Nephew, translated by Sylvia M. Hill, 1897; also translated by Mrs. Wilfrid Jackson, 1926; Jacques Barzun and Ralph H. Bowen, 1956; and Leonard Tancock, 1966.

Récits, edited by Ph. Van Tieghem. 1959.

Plays

Le Père de famille (produced 1759). 1758; as The Father, translated 1770; as The Family Picture, translated 1781.

Le Fils naturel; ou, Les Épreuves de la vertu (produced 1771). 1757; as Dorval; or, The Test of Virtue, translated anonymously, 1767.

Est-il bon est-il méchant? (produced 1913). 1784; as Wicked Philanthropy, translated by Gabriel John Brogyanyi, 1986.

Le Joueur, from the play The Gamester by Edward Moore. 1819.

Comédie Française (previously unpublished plays). 1984.

Other

Essai sur le mérite et la vertu. 1745.

Pensées philosophiques. 1746; as Philosophical Thoughts, translated by Margaret Jourdain, in Early Philosophical Works, 1916.

Mémoires sur différents sujets de mathématiques. 1748.

Lettre sur les aveugles. 1749; as An Essay on Blindness, translated 1750; as A Letter Upon the Blind, translated by S.C. Howe, 1857.

Lettre sur les sourds et muets. 1751; edited by Paul Hugo Meyer, 1965; as Letter on the Deaf and Dumb, translated by Margaret Jourdain, in Early Philosophical Works, 1916.

Pensées sur l'interprétation de la nature. 1753.

Leçons de clavecin et principes d'harmonie. 1771.

Oeuvres philosophiques. 6 vols., 1772.

Select Essays from the Encyclopedia, translated anonymously. 1772.

Essai sur Sénèque. 1778; revised edition, as Essai sur les règnes de Claude et de Néron, 1782.

Supplément au voyage de Bougainville. In Opuscules Philosophiques et Littéraires, edited by S.J. Bourlet de Vauxcelles, 1786; published separately in 1796; also edited by Herbert Dieckmann, 1955.

Essai sur la peinture. 1795; edited by Gita May, 1984.

Correspondance Littéraire 1753–90. 1813.

Mémoires, correspondances, et ouvrages inédits. 4 vols., 1830–31.

The Paradox of Acting, translated by Walter H. Pollock. 1883.

Mémoires pour Cathérine II. In Diderot et Catherine, edited by Maurice Tourneux, 1899; also edited by Paul Vernière, 1966.

Diderot's Thoughts on Art and Style, With Some of His Shorter Essays, translated by Beatrix L. Tollemache. 1904.

Early Philosophical Works, edited and translated by Margaret Jourdain. 1916, reprinted 1973.

Observations sur la Nakaz. 1920.

Dialogues, translated by Francis Birrell. 1927.

Lettres à Sophie Volland, edited by André Babelon. 3 vols., 1938; as Letters to Sophie Volland, translated by Peter France, 1972.

Diderot, Interpreter of Nature: Selected Writings, edited by Jonathan Kemp and translated by Kemp and Jean Stewart. 1937.

Correspondance, edited by Georges Roth. 16 vols., 1955–70.

Salons, edited by Jean Sézec and Jean Adhémar. 4 vols., 1957–67.

Le Rêve de d'Alembert, edited by Jean Varloot. 1962; as D'Alembert's Dream, translated by Leonard Tancock, 1966.

Rameau's Nephew and Other Works, edited by R.H. Bowen. 1964.

Éléments de physiologie, edited by Jean Mayer. 1964.

Encyclopedia: Selections, edited and translated by Nelly S. Hoyt and Thomas Cassirer. 1965; another selection edited by Stephen Gendzier, 1967.

Selected Writings, edited by Lester G. Crocker, translated by Derek Coltman. 1966.

Voyage en Hollande. 1982.

Écrits sur la musique, edited by Béatrice Durand-Sendrail. 1987.

Selected Philosophical Writings, edited by John Lough. 1987.

Voyages à Bourbonne, à Langres, et autres récits, edited by Anne-Marie Chouillet. 1989.

Political Writings, edited by R. Wokler and J.H. Mason. 1992.

Architecture in the Encyclopédie of Diderot and d'Alembert: The Letterpress Articles and Selected Engravings by Terence M. Russell. 1993.

Diderot on Art, edited and translated by John Goodman. 1995.

The Architectural Plates from the "Encyclopédie," edited by Denis Diderot. 1995.

Editor, and contributor, Encyclopédie; ou, Dictionnaire raisonné des sciences, des arts, et des métiers, par une société de gens de lettres. 17 vols., 1751–65; as Pictorial Encyclopaedia of Trades and Industry, 2 vols., 1959; Recueil de planches, 11 vols., 1762–72.

Translator, Histoire de Grèce, by Temple Stanyan. 3 vols., 1743.

Translator, Principes de la philosophie morale, by Shaftesbury. 1745; revised edition, as Philosophie morale réduite à ses principes, 1751.

Translator, with Marc-Antoine Eidous and François-Vincent Toussaint, Dictionnaire universel de médecine, by Robert James. 6 vols., 1746–48.

Translator, Les Oeuvres de Shaftesbury. 3 vols., 1769.

*

Bibliography: Bibliographie de Diderot by Frederick A. Spear, 1980.

Critical Studies: Diderot Studies, 1949–; Diderot's Determined Fatalist: A Critical Appreciation of Jacques le Fataliste by J. Robert Loy, 1950; Two Diderot Studies: Ethics and Esthetics, 1952, The Embattled Philosopher: A Biography of Denis Diderot, 1954, revised edition, 1966, and Diderot's Chaotic Order, 1974, all by Lester G. Crocker; Diderot, The Testing Years 1713–1739, 1957, and Diderot, 1772, both by Arthur M. Wilson; Essays on the Encyclopédie of Diderot and d'Alembert by John Lough, 1968; Diderot the Satirist: Le Neveu de Rameau and Related Works by Donal O'Gorman, 1971; Inventory of Diderot's Encyclopédie, 6 vols., 1971, and vol. 7, Inventory of the Plates, With a Study of the Contributors to the Encyclopédie, 1984, both by Richard N. Schwab and Walter E. Rex; Vacant Mirror: A Study of Diderot by Thomas M. Kavanagh, 1973; Diderot and the Eighteenth-Century French Press by Gary B. Rodgers, 1973; Diderot's Politics by Anthony Strugnelli, 1973; Diderot: The Virtue of a Philosopher by Carol Blum, 1974; Diderot's Essai sur

Senèque by William Thomas Conroy, 1975; Diderot's Great Scroll: Narrative Art in Jacques le Fataliste, 1975, and Socratic Satire: An Essay on Diderot and Le Neveu de Rameau, 1987, both by Stephen Werner; Diderot and the Art of Dialogue by Carol Sherman, 1976; Diderot's "femme savante" by Lawrence Louis Bongie, 1977; Diderot by Otis Fellows, 1977; revised edition, 1989; Diderot and Goethe: A Study in Science and Humanism by Gerhard M. Vasco, 1978; The Business of Enlightenment: A Publishing History of the Encyclopédie, 1775–1800 by Robert Darnton, 1979; Cataract: A Study in Diderot by Jeffrey Mehlman, 1979; Le Neveu de Rameau and The Praise of Folly: Literary Cognates by Apostolos P. Kouidis, 1981; Diderot: La Religieuse by Vivienne Mylne, 1981; Diderot and the Jews by Leon Schwartz, 1981; Diderot: Reason and Resonance by E. de Fontenay, 1982; Diderot and the Space-Time Continuum: His Philosophy, Aesthetics and Politics by Merle L. Perkins, 1982; Diderot's Imagery by Eric M. Steel, 1982; Order and Chance: The Pattern of Diderot's Thought, 1983, and Diderot: Jacques le Fataliste, 1985, both by Geoffrey Bremner; Diderot by Peter France, 1983; The Irresistible Diderot by John Hope Mason, 1983; Sex and Enlightenment: Women in Richardson and Diderot by Rita Goldberg, 1984; Diderot: Digression and Dispersion edited by J. Undank and H. Josephs, 1984; Diderot, Jacques le Fataliste by Geoffrey Bremner, 1985; Diderot and the Family: A Conflict of Nature and Law by William F. Edmiston, 1985; Diderot: Le Neveu de Rameau by John Falvey, 1985; Diderot, Dialogue and Debate by D.J. Adams, 1986; Framed Narratives: Diderot's Genealogy of the Beholder by Jay Caplan, 1986; Diderot: Thresholds of Representation by James Creech, 1986; Diderot and a Poetics of Science by Suzanne L. Pucci, 1986; Denis Diderot by Tamara Dlugach, 1988; The Encyclopedists as Individuals: A Biographical Dictionary of the Authors of the Encyclopédie by Frank A. and Serena L. Kafkaer, 1988; Diderot's Vie de Senèque: A Swan Song Revised by Douglas Bonneville, 1989; Innovation and Renewal: A Study of the Theatrical Works of Diderot by Derek F. Connon, 1989; Diderot: Supplément au Voyage de Bougainville by Peter Jimack, 1989; Diderot's Dream by Wilda C. Anderson, 1990; Satirizing the Satirist: Critical Dynamics in Swift, Diderot and Jean Paul by Stephanie B. Hammer, 1990; Success in Circuit Lies: Diderot's Communicational Practice by Rosalind de la Carrera, 1991; Diderot: A Critical Biography by P.N. Furbank, 1992; The Discourse of Enlightenment in Eighteenth-century France: Diderot and the Art of Philosophizing by Daniel Brewer, 1993; Art Criticism as Narrative: Diderot's Salon de 1767 by Julie Wegner Arnold, 1995; Mass Enlightenment: Critical Studies in Rousseau and Diderot by Julia Simon, 1995; Diderot's Counterpoints: The Dynamics of Contrariety in His Major Works by Walter E. Rex, 1998; Voicing Desire: Family and Sexuality in Diderot's Narrative by J.E. Fowler, 2000; Diderot and the Body by Angelica Goodden, 2001; Sublime Disorder: Physical Monstrosity in Diderot's Universe by Andrew Curran, 2001.

* * *

Denis Diderot is best remembered as the general editor of the Encyclopédie (Encyclopedia) and as one of its main contributors. The project absorbed most of his energies from 1750 to 1772. Conceived initially as a translation of the Chambers Cyclopaedia, the Encyclopaedia developed into an overview of world knowledge and was intended to illustrate its inherent harmony and order. In Diderot's hands the work became an organ of radical and anti-reactionary propaganda; hence publication was from time to time impeded by the French authorities. Technology figures largely in the text and in the accompanying plates, and the work also contains numerous articles on ethical, philosophical, and aesthetic topics. Though produced in a society still dominated by the Roman Catholic Church, the Encyclopedia reflects its editor's hostility to religious authority, and, while many of the contributors were priests, Diderot contrived to incorporate heterodox or "dangerous" views in seemingly minor articles to which the reader is directed by cross-references given in the more prominent, orthodox ones. The Encyclopedia encapsulates the spirit of the French Enlightenment and is its most noteworthy product.

From early adherence to a deism derived from the English deists (principally Shaftesbury), Diderot moved to an openly atheistic viewpoint in the Lettre sur les aveugles (An Essay on Blindness) of 1749, which earned him a brief spell in the Vincennes prison. In his novel La Religieuse (The Nun), which was not in general circulation in his lifetime, Diderot uses a protagonist forced to take the veil against her will in order to explore the pernicious effects on nuns of life in the convent, separated as it is from normal society. A film based on the novel, directed by Jacques Rivette, was banned in France in 1966 and released in the UK in the following year. Among his other novels, the best known is the picaresque Jacques le fataliste et son maître (Jacques the Fatalist), partially inspired by Laurence Sterne's Tristram Shandy. As well as being a rather ambivalent examination of philosophical determinism, this novel is notable for the strikingly modern way in which Diderot engages the active participation of the reader in the unfolding of the episodes, through authorial harangues, questions, puzzles, alternative versions, and ascribed reactions. Both Jacques the Fatalist and The Nun are perfectly accessible to the modern reader.

Diderot was a polymath very familiar with the scientific trends of his day. He was especially fascinated by discoveries in the biological sciences of the 1740s and 1750s onwards and, in works which include Pensées sur l'interprétation de la nature [On the Interpretation of Nature], the Dialogue between D'Alembert and Diderot, Le Rêve de d'Alembert (D'Alembert's Dream) and the Éléments de physiologie [Elements of Physiology], developed theories of the cellular structure of matter and of animal adaptation which prefigured the work of Lamarck and Darwin.

While intellectually a philosophical materialist and a determinist, believing that individual character was principally the product of heredity, Diderot thought man was generally susceptible to modification by environmental influences. He ascribed most of the evil he saw around him to the baleful influence of European (especially French) society, but his attempts, in works like his Supplément au voyage de Bougainville [Supplement to Bougainville's Voyage], to develop a moral code based on "natural" principles were doomed to failure by the impossibility of formulating a definition of nature which could underpin social morality.

Like a number of his contemporaries, he clung in his published works to the belief that only the virtuous man can know true happiness and that even apparently prospering evil-doers suffer in their conscience. However, Le Neveu de Rameau (Rameau's Nephew), a polythematic dialogue which he began in 1761 and polished over the next 20 years without ever attempting to publish it, casts doubts on this view. In the belief that the theatre could serve to further ethical progress—and that both the writer and the state could exploit it in this way—he wrote three very detailed treatises on dramatic art, which Lessing admired, and three original plays (discounting adaptations) which fail to match the dynamism of the theoretical works.

In his Salons, written for readers unable actually to see the pictures described, he proves himself a judicious and sensitive art critic and was the first to interest himself in the technical processes ancillary to painting.

—John Dunkley

See the essays on Jacques the Fatalist and The Test of Virtue.

DINESEN, Isak

Born: Karen Christentze Dinesen in Rungsted, Denmark, 17 April 1885. Education: Educated privately; studied art at Academy of Art, Copenhagen, 1902–06, in Paris, 1910, and in Rome. Family: Married Baron Bror von Blixen-Finecke in 1914 (divorced 1921). Career: Managed a coffee plantation near Nairobi, Kenya, with her husband, 1913–21, and alone, 1921–31; lived in Rungsted after 1931; co-founder, with Ole Wivel, Bjørn Poulson, and Thorkild Bjørnvig, of the literary journal Heretica. Awards: Holberg medal, 1949; Ingenio e Arti medal, 1950; Nathansen Memorial Fund award, 1951; Golden Laurels, 1952; Hans Christian Andersen prize, 1955; Danish Critics prize, 1957. Member: Founding Member, Danish Academy, 1960; Honorary Member, American Academy 1957; Corresponding Member, Bavarian Academy of Fine Arts. Died: 7 September 1962.

PUBLICATIONS

Collection

Mindeudgave. 7 vols., 1964.

Fiction

Seven Gothic Tales. 1934; as Syv fantastiske fortællinger, translated by Dinesen, 1935.

Winter's Tales. 1942; as Vinter eventyr, translated by Dinesen, 1942. Gengældelsens veje (as Pierre Andrézel), translated into Danish by Clara Svendsen. 1944; as The Angelic Avengers, 1946.

Babette's Feast, in Ladies' Home Journal. 1950; in book form, in Anecdotes of Destiny, 1958; as Babettes gæstebud, translated by Jørgen Claudi, 1952.

Kardinalens tredie historie [The Cardinal's Third Tale]. 1952.

Last Tales. 1957; as Sidste fortællinger, translated by Dinesen, 1957.

Anecdotes of Destiny (stories). 1958; as Babette's Feast and Other Anecdotes of Destiny, 1988; as Skæbne-anedotter, translated by Dinesen, 1958.

Ehrengard. 1963; as Ehrengard, translated into Danish by Clara Svendsen, 1963.

Efterladte fortællinger (stories), edited by Frans Lasson. 1975; as Carnival: Entertainments and Posthumous Tales, translated by P.M. Mitchell, W.D. Paden, and others, 1977.

Plays

Sandhedens hævn: En marionetkomedie (produced 1936). 1960; as The Revenge of Truth: A Marionette Comedy, in "Isak Dinesen" and Karen Blixen, by Donald Hannah, 1971.

Other

- Out of Africa*. 1937; as Den afrikanske farm, translated by Dinesen, 1937.
- Om restkrivning: politiken 23–24 marts 1938* [About Spelling: Politiken 23–24 March 1938]. 1949.
- Farah* [Name]. 1950.
- Daguerrotypier* (radio talks). 1951; in Daguerrotypies and Other Essays, translated by P.M. Mitchell and W.D. Paden, 1979.
- Omkring den nye lov om dyreforsøg* [The New Law on Vivisection]. 1952.
- En baaetale med 14 aars forsinkelse* [A Bonfire Speech 14 Years Later]. 1953.
- Skygger paa græsset*. 1960; translated as Shadows on the Glass, 1960.
- On Mottoes of My Life*. 1960.
- Osceola*, edited by Clara Svendsen. 1962.
- Essays*. 1965.
- Karen Blixens tegninger: med to essays of Karen Blixen*, edited by Frans Lasson. 1969.
- Breve fra Afrika 1914–31*, edited by Frans Lasson. 2 vols., 1978; as Letters from Africa 1914–1931, translated by Anne Born, 1981.
- Daguerrotypies and Other Essays*, translated by P.M. Mitchell and W.D. Paden. 1979.
- Samlede essays*. 1985.
- On Modern Marriage and Other Observations*, translated by Anne Born. 1986.

*

Bibliography: Dinesen: A Bibliography by Liselotte Henriksen, 1977; supplement in Blixeniana 1979, 1979; Karen Blixen/Isak Dinesen: A Select Bibliography by Aage Jørgensen, 1985.

Critical Studies: Isak Dinesen by Louise Bogan, in Selected Criticism, 1955; The World of Isak Dinesen by Eric O. Johannesson, 1961; Isak Dinesen: A Memorial edited by Clara Svendsen, 1964, The Life and Destiny of Isak Dinesen by Svendsen and Frans Lasson, 1970, and Karen Blixen: Isak Dinesen: A Chronology by Lasson, 1985; The Gayety of Vision: A Study of Isak Dinesen's Art by Robert Langbaum, 1965; Titania: the Biography of Dinesen by Parmenia Migel, 1967; Isak Dinesen, 1885–1962 by Hannah Arendt, in Men in Park Times, 1968; "Isak Dinesen" and Karen Blixen: The Mask and the Reality by Donald Hannah, 1971; Isak Dinesen's Aesthetics by Thomas Reid Whissen, 1973; My Sister, Isak Dinesen by Thomas Dinesen, translated by Joan Tate, 1975; Dinesen: The Life of a Storyteller by Judith Thurman, 1982, as Isak Dinesen: The Life of Karen Blixen, 1982; The Pact: My Friendship with Isak Dinesen by Thorkild Bjørnvig, 1984; Diana's Revenge: Two Lines In Isak Dinesen's Authorship by Marianne Juhl, 1985; Out of Denmark edited by Bodil Wamberg, 1985; The Witch and the Goddess in the Stories of Isak Dinesen: A Feminist Reading by Sarah Stambaugh, 1988; Isak Dinesen and the Engendering of Narrative by Susan Hardy Aiken, 1990; Isak Dinesen: The Life and Imagination of a Seducer by Olga Anastasia Pelensky, 1991; Isak Dinesen: Critical Views, edited by Olga Anastasia Pelensky, 1993; Isak Dinesen and Narrativity: Reassessments for the 1990s, edited by Gurli A. Woods, 1994; Out of Isak Dinesen in Africa: The Untold Story by Linda Donelson, 1995; Difficult Women, Artful Lives: Olive Schreiner and Isak Dinesen, In and Out of Africa by Susan R. Horton, 1995; By Europe, Out of Africa: White Women Writers on Farms and Their African Invention by Simon Lewis, 1996; Understanding Isak Dinesen by Susan C. Brantly, 2001.

* * *

Isak Dinesen liked to disclaim the complex erudition of her tales and to speak of herself as a "storyteller," a Scheherazade, whose mission was simply to "entertain" people. Entertain them she did, with leisurely and urbane philosophical discourse, painterly descriptions of nature, a wry and refined eroticism, and in narratives as intricate and polished as Chinese boxes that took her years of reworking to perfect. But the lightness of her tone and the preciousness of her surfaces have tended to obscure her scope of vision, which is that of a major and highly original writer.

In Denmark, Dinesen was accused of decadence and an indifference to social issues. These were charges deserved, perhaps, by Baroness Karen Blixen, who cultivated a sybilline persona and liked to épater les bourgeois, not to mention les socialistes. But Dinesen, the storyteller, was a passionate and rather pure-hearted immoralist, rather than a decadent, The erotic daredevils and demonic heroes of Romantic literature had given her the first glimpse of emotional freedom, and she perceived the attempt to spare oneself repression, at whatever price, as heroic and ennobling. This was the lion hunt, the great gesture, the daring fantasy, the mortal sin. In Marxist terms, her heroes may be decadents; in Freudian terms they may be perverts of one sort or another; but in Dinesen's terms they are dreamers—planted in the soil of life like a coffee tree with a bent taproot. "That tree will never thrive," she wrote, "nor bear fruit, but will flower more richly than the others."

Dinesen did, of course, "neglect social issues." Her choice of form—the tale, rather than the novel or the short story—was a way of taking sides with the past against her contemporaries, although she was also never without a keen sense of irony about her own absurd position, in modern Denmark, as the defender of a way of life that had vanished, to general applause. She set her tales a hundred years in the past, defining her period as "the last great phase of aristocratic culture," and aware that it was also the first great phase of bourgeois culture, when wealth was shifting from the land to the cities and to currency; when the feudal world, with all its certainties and inequities, the one inseparable from the other, was dissolving. By taking such a distance, she was able to gain clarity and a certain imaginative freedom. She was also better able to describe the tension between her own aristocratic idealism and the materialism that had triumphed over it. And she was able to understand the nature of a certain kind of Fall: the loss that occurs to a culture or to a child when values that have once been absolute become relative.

Dinesen's work does, despite its great literary sophistication, have a common ground with the old tales, which she defined as Nemesis: "the thread in the course of events that is determined by the psychic assumptions of a person." By psychic assumptions, she meant the scenarios that we absorb from our family and our culture, the patterns we unconsciously repeat. Like the old storytellers, but also like Mann, Joyce, or Yeats, Dinesen is interested in the points at which the individual and the typical, psychology and culture, intersect as myth, and she works with myth in an innovative modern way. The climax of a Dinesen tale comes at the moment that the hero and the reader recognize how the forces that have been shaping the events of the story have also shaped their perception of it: history from without, desire from within.

Dinesen stands at the end of a long cultural process, looking back ironically upon it. She sums up the Romantic tradition as she carries it forward. Perhaps her vision could only belong to a writer who took up her pen at the age of 46, when she had lost everything of importance to her, except the thing with the greatest value of all: experience itself.

—Judith Thurman

DING LING

Courtesy name: Jiang Bingzhi. Pseudonyms: Bin Zhi, Cong Xuan. Born: Jiangwei in Lingli county, Hunan province, China, 12 October, 1904. Education: Primary and junior high school in Taoyuan and Changsha; Common Girls' High School in Shanghai, 1921; Shanghai University, 1923. Family: Lived with poet Hu Yepin, 1924–31; one son; lived with Feng Da, 1931–35; one daughter; married Chen Ming, 1942. Career: Became member of the League of Leftwing Writers, 1930; joined the Communist Party at the beginning of 1933; arrested by the Nanking Nationalist Government on 4 May 1933; after she was released in 1937 went to Yan'an; established a women's league called Women's National Salvation Association in northwest China; participated in land reform work, 1946; became Vice-President of the Chinese Writers Association, 1950; accused of being a rightist during the Anti-Rightist Movement, 1957; her books were banned, 1957–78; was sent to Heilongjiang province to work manual labour, 1958; imprisoned for five years during the Cultural Revolution, 1970; exiled to Shaanxi, 1975–78; returned to Beijing, 1978; officially rehabilitated, 1979; visited the United States in 1981, Canada and France in 1983, and Australia in 1985; vice president of the Chinese Writers Association; member of Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference. Awards: Soviet Union's Stalin second prize for Literature, 1951. Died: Beijing, 4 March 1986.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

- Zai hei'an zhong* [In the Darkness]. 1928.
Zisha riji [Diary of a Suicide]. 1928.
Yige nuren [A Woman]. 1928.
Shujia zhong [During the Summer Holidays]. 1928.
Awei guniang [The Girl Awei]. 1928.
Shui [Water]. 1930.
Yehui [Night Meeting]. 1930.
Zai yiyuan zhong [In the Hospital]. 1941.
Ding Ling wenji [Works of Ding Ling], Hunan Renmin Chubanshe. 6 vols. 1982.
Ding Ling xuanji [Selected Works of Ding Ling], Sichuan Renmin Chubanshe. 3 vols. 1984.

Fiction

- Meng Ke*. 1927.
Shafei nüshi riji. February 1928, Xiaoshuo yuebao (short story magazine); as Miss Sophie's Diary, translated by Gary Bjorge, 1981.
Weihu. 1930.
Muqin. 1930; as Mother, translated by Tani Barlow, 1989.
1930 Chun Shanghai. 1930; as Shanghai, Spring, 1930, translated by Tani Barlow, 1989.

- Zai yiyuan zhong*. 1941; as In the Hospital, translated by Gary Bjorge, 1981.
Wo zai Xia cun de shihou. 1941; as When I Was in Xia Village, translated by Gary Bjorge, 1981.
Taiyang zhao zai sanggan he shang. Guanghua shudian. September 1948; as The Sun Shines Over Sanggan River, translated by Gladys Yang and Yang Xianyi, Panda Books, 1984.
Du Wanxiang. 1978; as Du Wanxiang, translated by Tani Barlow, 1989.

Other

- San ba jie yougan* [Thoughts on March 8th], in Jiefang ribao [Liberation Daily]. 9 March 1942.
 Co-editor, Hong he Hei [Red and Black] Literary Supplement to Zhongyang ribao. 1928.
 Co-editor, Renjian monthly. 1928.
 Editor, Literary Supplement of Jiefang Ribao [Liberation Daily]. 1936–42.
 Editor, Renmin wenxue [People Literature]. 1950–53.
 Editor, Wenyi Bao [Literary Gazette]. 1950–52.

*

Critical Studies: Ding Ling, Her life and Her Work by Jun-Mei Chang, 1978; Ding Ling's Fiction: Ideology and Narrative in Modern Chinese Literature by Yi-tsi Mei Feuerwerker, 1982; Essays in Modern Chinese Literature and Literary Criticism by Wolfgang Kubin, 1982; "Feminism and Literary Technique in Ting Ling's Early Short Stories," by Tani Barlow, in Women Writers of the 20th Century China, 1982; "Gender and Identity in Ding Ling's 'Mother'" by Tani Barlow, in MCL 2, 2, 1986; "Shanghai Spring 1930: Engendering the Revolutionary Body" in Chinese Modernism: The Heroic and the Quotidian, by Tang Xiaobing, 2000.

* * *

Although she was born in a conservative family, Ding Ling spent her childhood with her progressive mother, whose teachings and examples greatly influenced her education. In the early 1920s she moved to Beijing, attracted by the new ideas spread by the promoters of the May 4th 1919 Movement. In Beijing she met many famous writers and intellectuals of this period; she became a close friend of Hunan writer Shen Congwen and the poet Hu Yepin, who soon became her lover. Right from the beginning of her career she showed a remarkable personality, a strong mind of her own, which led her first to pursue the issues of women's emancipation and freedom of marriage. Later she became aware of the need for a profound political change in China and became actively involved in social and political issues. She became a well known writer in the late 1920s, and her reputation on the literary scene did not decline for almost sixty years despite the numerous punishments and purges she, and many other Chinese intellectuals of that time, were subjected to.

Her first novel, Shafei nüshi riji (Miss Sophie's Diary), is a daring document on the condition of twentieth-century "modern" Chinese women, torn between semi-feudal taboos and ambition of freedom, romantic sentimentalism and materialistic cynicism. Ding Ling names the main character Sophie after the Russian revolutionary heroine Sofia Perovskaja; nevertheless the young and passionate Sophie, who was confined to bed by tuberculosis, resembles a Madame Bovary, who feels sexual tensions and conflicting feelings towards two different men depicted as well-intentioned but weak and vacuous. The novel ends with Sophie's decision to reject their love, and her move to the South where nobody knows her to live in solitude. Publication of Miss Sophie's Diary aroused strong reactions among conservatives who criticized it for its uninhibited content. It was an absolute novelty for the Chinese audience of this time—never before had a young woman writer openly explored her feelings and given voice to her tormented interior life.

The works published after she joined the Leftwing Writers Association, such as 1930 Chun Shanghai (Shanghai Spring) and Yehui [Night Meeting] focus more on social issues and describe the life of ordinary people. Night is a very short and poetic story which draws an impressive sketch of the life of a local cadre, depicting one particular night he spent in solitude enveloped by thoughts of divorce, love, work and future. Zai yiyuan zhong (In the Hospital) tells the story of Lu Ping, an obstetrician transferred to a new hospital, where she soon realizes the incompetence of the hospital administration composed of old, conservative cadres and their indifference towards the problems of patients and doctors. The heroine attempts to correct medical abuses but is censured undeservedly. The story disturbed the Party authorities who convened meetings to criticize it.

Ding Ling was openly criticized in the literary page of the Party organ Liberation Daily only after the publication of San ba jie yougan [Thoughts on March 8]. In the story, the author condemned the condition and fate of women living in the liberated area of Yan'an, their disillusionment and bitterness due to the inequality and discrimination they were subjected to, instead of enjoying equal rights.

Wo zai Xia run de shihou (When I was in Xia Village) tells the story of a young girl, Zhenzhen who is raped by Japanese soldiers during a raid, and decides to become a prostitute to the Japanese retinue in order to gather secret information for the Liberation Army. On returning home to recover from a venereal disease, she receives a hostile welcome from the villagers, then she decides to leave for Yan'an to start a new life.

Taiyang zhao zai sanggan he shang (The Sun Shines Over Sanggan River), written during the land reform, describes the difficulties of the mobilization and organizational work in the countryside, focusing also on the complexity of social and human relations. The novel was widely acclaimed and won the Stalin Literature prize. It was the first Chinese novel to receive such an honour.

During the Hundred Flower Campaign, Ding Ling was accused of carrying out political activities subversive to the regime. She was labelled as rightist and sent into exile.

Du Wanxiang, written in the 1960s but published only in 1979, portrays the harsh life of Du Wanxiang, a poor peasant girl married at the aged of thirteen. Du Wanxiang embodies all the qualities of a traditional woman, she is hardworking courageous, honest and reliable, but also has the strong independent character of modern Chinese women as depicted in other stories by Ding Ling.

—Rosa Lombardi

DJEBAR, Assia

Born: Fatima-Zohra Imalayen in Cherchell, Algeria, 4 August 1936.
Education: Attended Lycee Fenelon, Paris, 1954; studied at the École Normale Supérieure de Sevres, France, 1955–56; studied history, University of Algiers, 1958. Family: Married 1) Walid Garn (divorced); 2) Malek Alloula. Career: Author and filmmaker; teacher in Rabat, 1955–62; assistant professor of history, University of Algiers, 1962 to late 1980s; director of the Center for French and Francophone Studies at Louisiana State University, Baton Rouge, 1990s. Awards: Venice Biennale Critics prize, 1979; Prix Maurice Maeterlink, 1995; Neustadt prize for Contributions to World Literature, 1996; Yourcenar prize, 1997; International prize of Palmi, Italy, 1998; International Peace prize, German Book Trade Association, 2000; Commandeur des Arts et des Lettres, Paris, 2001. Honorary doctorates, University of Vienna, 1995, and University of Concordia, Montreal, 2000.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

La Soif: Roman. 1957; as The Mischief, translated by Frances Frenaye, 1958.

Les Impatients. 1958.

Les Enfants du nouveau monde: Roman. 1962.

Les Alouettes naïves: Roman. 1967.

Femmes d'Alger dans leur appartement: Nouvelles (short stories). 1980; as Women of Algiers in Their Apartment, translated by Marjolijn de Jager, 1992.

L'Amour, la fantasia: Roman. 1985; as Fantasia: An Algerian Cavalcade, translated by Dorothy S. Blair, 1993.

Ombre Sultane: Roman. 1987; as A Sister to Scheherazade, translated by Dorothy S. Blair, 1988.

Loin de Médine: Filles d'Ismaël: Roman. 1991; as Far from Medina, 1994.

Vaste est la prison: Roman. 1994; as So Vast the Prison: A Novel, translated by Betsy Wing, 1999.

Le Blanc de l'Algérie: Recit. 1996; as Algerian White: A Narrative, translated by David Kelley and Marjolijn de Jager, 2000.

Oran, Langue Morte (short stories). 1997.

Les Nuits de Strasbourg: Roman. 1997.

Poems

Poemes pour l'Algérie heureuse. 1969.

Plays

Rouge l'aube, with Walid Garn. 1969.

Other

Women of Islam, translated by Jean MacGibbon. 1961.

La Nouba des femmes du Mont Chenoua (film). 1979.

La Zerda ou les chants de l'oubli (film). 1982.

Ces voix qui m'assiègent:—en marge de ma francophonie (essays). 1999.

Preface, Chronique d'un été Algérien: Ici et la-bas. 1993.

*

Critical Studies: "Introduction" by Dorothy S. Blair, in Fantasia, An Algerian Cavalcade by Assia Djébar, 1989; Journeys Through the French African Novel by Mildred Mortimer, 1990; Transfigurations of the Maghreb: Feminism, Decolonization and Literatures by Winifred Woodhull, 1993; “Unmasking Women: The Female Persona in Algerian Fiction” by Farida Bu-Haidar, in African Francophone Writing, edited by Laila ibnlfassi and Nicki Hitchcott, 1996; Assia Djebar: Ecrire, Transgresser, Resister by Jeanne Marie Clerc, 1997; L'écrivain francophone à la croisée des langues: entretiens by Lise Gauvin, 1997; “Women’s Writings between Two Algerian Wars” by Benjamin Stora, in Research in African Literature, vol. 30, no. 3, Fall 1999; “Translating the Untranslated: Djebar’s Le blanc de l’Algérie” by John Erickson, in Research in African Literature, vol. 30, no. 3, Fall 1999; “Women’s Prison: Literally and Figuratively” by Michelle Reale, in Al-Jadid, no. 37, Fall 2001; Recasting Postcolonialism: Women Writing between Worlds by Anne Donadey, 2001; Trances, Dances, and Vociferations: Agency and Resistance in African Women’s Narratives by Nada Elia, 2001.

* * *

Assia Djebar is an Algerian novelist, playwright, documentary film director and producer, and poet. It is in fiction, however, that her contribution has been the most substantive and valuable. She writes in French and her plans to write in Arabic have never materialized. She has been the dominant woman writer in Maghribi literature for almost half a century, achieving both national and international fame and recognition.

Djebar finished her school education in a French lycée in Algeria, where she was considered an excellent student, but pursued her higher education in Paris, receiving a bachelors degree in history and geography. She spent most of the years of the war of independence, from 1955 to 1962, outside her country, teaching in Rabat. Following Algeria’s independence in 1962, she took a position as assistant professor of history at the University of Algiers. With the deteriorating political situation in Algeria in the late 1980s she chose to reside in France. She was later appointed distinguished professor and Director of the Center for French and Francophone Studies at Louisiana State University.

It is possible to divide Djebar’s literary trajectory into three phases, beginning with a formative period inaugurated by a youthful novel La Soif (The Mischief), generally considered an immature work as it ignored the fight for independence taking place on the Algerian soil. Soon however, she adopted a more responsible position and turned her attention to Algerian women’s involvement in the war of independence, as distant observers in Les Impatients [The Impatients] and as participants in Les Enfants du nouveau monde [The Children of the New World]. It is her novel Les Alouettes naïves [The Innocent Larks], however, that reveals a deep understanding of the political challenges awaiting an independent Algeria.

The second phase in her literary career was marked by a new approach to the writing of fiction in which she used her background as historian. She intermingles history and autobiography, moving between the distant past of her country’s tragic colonial history and her childhood memories, and focusing on the way the colonial rule shaped the present, both hers and that of the Algerian women. Through her own life as a colonized Algerian, looking in at the “colons” from the outside, Djebar portrays the experience of a large section of the Algerian population, especially that of a certain class with access to French education. The historian and the novelist are at work in most novels of this phase, particularly in L’Amour, la fantasia (Fantasia: An Algerian Cavalcade), where she succeeds in recreating the tragic atmosphere of the early years of the French conquest.

Djebar planned a quartet to paint the panorama of the conquest, and three of the series have been published so far, Fantasia: An Algerian Cavalcade, Ombre Sultane (A Sister to Scheherazade), and Vaste est la prison (So Vast The Prison). In her focus on her country’s colonial history, Djebar imbued her works with symbols of Arabic culture and relied on the structure of the well known classic Arabian Nights in A Sister to Scheherazade.

Soon however, in a third phase, the novelist’s attention was absorbed by the tragic events of the early 1990s which resulted in the loss of many of her friends and colleagues, prompting her to address the situation in Le Blanc de l’Algérie (Algerian White: A Narrative) and interrupt the writing of another novel, Les Nuits de Strasbourg [The Nights of Strasbourg]. In Le Blanc d’Algérie, Djebar tries to comprehend the bewildering bloody events of the 1990s, while mourning and lamenting the assassination of her three friends, Mahfoud Boucebc, M’Hamed Boukhobza, and Abdelkader Alloula. The book portrays the feeling of disarray provoked by their brutal deaths as well as that of other named and anonymous victims. It brings back the sad memory of other writers who passed away.

There is throughout Djebar’s writings a linear progression displaying Algerian women’s search for their rights in a society where men do not seem to move at the speed of their emancipated women. This discovery is made at a price, as can be observed in So Vast the Prison, where women’s expectations go beyond society’s perimeters. Reflecting the author’s personality, most female characters drawn by Djebar convey a dichotomy between modernity and traditions. Djebar considers this unbalanced development within the life of the married couple, where intimacy leads to greater openness but also to tragic consequences in the absence of mutual acceptance of women’s liberation. This concentration on Algerian women’s world, their poetic expression and their vision of themselves, distinguishes Djebar’s writings. She gives it an audible dimension in her films, La Zerda et les Chants de l’oubli (1982) and La Noubba des femmes du Mont Chenoua, which received the international critics award at the Venice Biennale in 1979. There is also in those films the liberating effect of the use of the author’s native languages, Arabic and Berber, in contrast to her reliance on French in the written texts, which keeps the author in the shadow of the colonial past.

Djebar has achieved world fame and was recognized by the international literary community, which awarded her the Neustadt International prize for literature in 1996, and the International Peace prize of the German Book Trade Association in 2000.

—Aida Bamia

See the essay on Fantasia: An Algerian Cavalcade.

DÖBLIN, Alfred

Born: Stettin, Germany, 10 August 1878. Education: Educated at the Gymnasium, Stettin, 1888, 1891–1900; studied medicine at Berlin University, 1900–04; Freiburg University, 1904–05, medical degree 1905. Military Service: Served as a medical officer in the German army during World War I. Family: Married Erna Reiss in 1912; two sons. Career: Worked in a psychiatric hospital, Regensburg; general practitioner, Berlin, 1911–14; member, Schutzverband deutscher Schriftsteller [Association of German Writers], 1920, and president, 1924; theatre reviewer, Prager Tageblatt, 1921–24; visited Poland, 1924; member of the discussion group, Group 1925, with Bertolt Brecht; fled to France to escape the Nazi regime, 1933; became French citizen, 1936, emigrated to the United States, 1940; script writer, Metro Goldwyn Mayer, 1940–41; converted to Roman Catholicism, 1941; returned to Germany, 1945; education officer, Baden-Baden, 1945; editor, Das Goldene Tor, 1946–51; co-founder, 1949 and vice-president of literature section, 1949–51, Academy for Science and Literature, Mainz; moved to Paris, 1951; entered sanatorium at Freiburg in Breisgau, 1956. Awards: Fontane prize, 1916. Member: Prussian Academy of the Arts, 1928. Died: 26 June 1957.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Ausgewählte Werke, edited by Walter Muschg, Heinz Graber, and Anthony W. Riley. 23 vols., 1960–85.
Die Zeitlupe: Kleine Prosa, edited by Walter Muschg. 1962.
Die Vertreibung der Gespenster, edited by Manfred Beyer. 1968.
Gesammelte Erzählungen. 1971.
Schriften zur Politik und Gesellschaft 1896–1951, edited by Heinz Graber. 1972.
Ein Kerl muss eine Meinung haben, edited by Manfred Beyer. 1976.

Fiction

Die Ermordung einer Butterblume und andere Erzählungen (stories). 1913.
Das Stiftsfräulein und der Tod. 1913.
Die drei Sprünge des Wang-lun. 1915; as The Three Leaps of Wang Lun: A Chinese Novel, translated with introduction by C.D. Godwin, 1991.
Die Lobensteiner reisen nach Böhmen (stories). 1917.
Wadzeks Kampf mit der Dampfturbine. 1918.
Der schwarze Vorhang: Roman von den Worten und Zufällen. 1919. Wallenstein. 1920.
Blaubart und Miss Ilsebill. 1923.
Berge, Meere und Giganten. 1924; revised edition as Giganten, 1932.
Die beiden Freundinnen und ihr Giftmord. 1925.
Feldzeugmeister Cratz, Der Kaplan. Zwei Erzählungen. 1926.
Berlin Alexanderplatz. Die Geschichte vom Franz Biberkopf. 1929; as Alexanderplatz, Berlin: The Story of Franz Biberkopf, translated by Eugene Jolas, 1931; as Berlin Alexanderplatz: The Story of Franz Biberkopf, 1978.
Babylonische Wandlung; oder, Hochmut kommt vor dem Fall. 1934.
Pardon wird nicht gegeben. 1935; as Men Without Mercy, translated by Trevor and Phyllis Blewitt, 1937.
Das Land ohne Tod. 1937–38; as Amazonas, edited by Walter Muschg, 1963.
Die Fahrt ins Land ohne Tod. 1937.
Der blaue Tiger. 1938.
Der neue Urwald. 1948.
November 1918: Eine deutsche Revolution. 1949; selections from volumes 1 and 2 as A People Betrayed, translated by John E. Woods, 1983.
Bürger und Soldaten 1918. 1939; revised edition as Verratenes Volk, 1948.
Heimkehr der Fronttruppen. 1949.

Karl und Rosa. 1950; as Karl and Rosa, translated by John E. Woods, 1983.
Der Oberst und der Dichter; oder, Das menschliche Herz. 1946.
Heitere Magie, zwei Erzählungen. 1948.
Sinn und Form. 1954.
Hamlet; oder, die lange Nacht nimmt ein Ende. 1956.
Jagende Rösser, Der schwarze Vorhang, und andere frühe Erzählwerke (stories). 1981.

Plays

Lydia und Mäxchen: Tiefe Verbeugung in Einem Akt (produced 1905). 1906.
Lusitania (produced 1926). 1920.
Die Gefährten (includes Lydia und Mäxchen; Lusitania; Das verwerfliche Schwein). 1920.
Die Nonnen von Kemnade (produced 1923). 1923.
Die Ehe (produced 1931). 1931.

Verse

Manas: Epische Dichtung. 1927

Other

Gespräche mit Kalypso: Über die Gedächtnisstörungen bei der koraskoffschen Psychose Liebe und die Musik (essays). 1906.
Der deutsche Maskenball (essays). 1921.
Staat und Schriftsteller. 1921.
Feldzeugmeister Cratz, Der Kaplan. 1926.
Reise in Polen. 1926; as Journey to Poland, translated by Joachim Neugroschel, 1991.
Das Ich über der Natur. 1927.
Im Buch—Zu Haus—Auf der Strasse, with Oskar Loerke. 1928.
Der Bau des epischen Werkes. 1929.
Der Überfall. 1929.
Wissen und Verändern! Offene Briefe an einen jungen Menschen. 1931.
Jüdische Erneuerung. 1933.
Unser Dasein (essays). 1933.
Flucht und Sammlung des Judenvolkes: Aufsätze und Erzählungen. 1935.
Der historische Roman. 1936.
Die deutsche Literatur: Ein Dialog zwischen Politik und Kunst. 1938.
Nocturno. 1944.
Sieger und Besiegte: Eine wahre Geschichte. 1946.
Nürnberger Lehrprozess. 1946.
Der unsterbliche Mensch: Ein Religionsgespräch. 1946; with Der Kampf mit dem Engel: Religionsgespräch, 1980.
Die literarische Situation. 1947.
Auswahl aus dem erzählenden Werk. 1948.
Heitere Magie: Zwei Erzählungen. 1948.
Unsere Sorge—der Mensch. 1948.
Schicksalsreise: Bericht und Bekenntnis. 1949; as Destiny's Journey, edited by Edgar Pässler, translated by Edna McCown, 1992.
Die Dichtung, ihre Natur und ihre Rolle. 1950.
Die Zeitlupe: Kleine Prosa (essays). 1962.
Briefe, edited by Walter Muschg. 1970.
Doktor Döblin (autobiography), edited by Heinz Graber. 1970.

Ein Kerl muss eine Meinung haben: Berichte und Kritiken 1921–1924. 1974.
Griffe ins Leben: Theater-Feuilletons, edited by Manfred Beyer. 1978.
Autobiographische Schriften und letzte Aufzeichnungen, edited by Edgar Pässler. 1980.
 Editor, The Living Thoughts of Confucius. 1940.
 Editor, Die Revolution der Lyrik, by Arno Holz. 1951.
 Editor, Minotaurus. 1953.

*

Bibliography: Bibliographie Alfred Döblin by Louis Huguet, 1972.

Critical Studies: Dimensions of the Modern Novel: German Texts and European Contexts by Theodore Ziolkowski, 1969; The Humorous and Grotesque Elements in Döblin's Berlin Alexanderplatz by Henrietta S. Schoonover, 1977; Alfred Döblin by Matthias Prangel, 1987; The Berlin Novels of Alfred Döblin: Wadzek's Battle with the Steam Turbine, Men Without Mercy and November 1918 by David B. Dollemayer, 1988; A Chinese Story from a Berlin Practice: Alfred Döblin's Narrative Technique in Die drei Sprünge des Wang-lun by John Henry Collins, 1990; Bely Joyce, and Döblin: Peripatetics in the City Novel by Peter I. Barta, 1996; Alfred Döblin by Armin Arnold, 1996.

* * *

One of the most versatile and enigmatic figures in the field of 20th-century German letters, Alfred Döblin was, like Kafka, born into the social environment of deracinated eastern European Jewry. The poverty endured in his youth and the fascination exerted by the cultural ferment of the city that became his home left their mark on the novel which is commonly viewed as his supreme achievement: Berlin Alexanderplatz, the great “urban novel” of 1929. What is often overlooked is the fact that Döblin, as well as leading an active life as a medical practitioner, was the author of literary manifestos, didactic dramas, historical and utopian novels, philosophic essays, and even an Indian verse epic, and was a major formative influence on Brecht, whose theory of epic theatre he helped to shape. No subject was too remote or too obscure. After much painstaking research, he located his first major novel, Die drei Sprünge des Wang-lun (The Three Leaps of Wang-lun) in 18th-century China. It chronicles the fortunes of a little-known religious group, who wage a campaign of passive resistance against the Imperial authorities and are brutally annihilated. Other major novels of his early years were set in the 17th century (Wallenstein), and in a remote, technology-dominated future (Berge, Meere und Giganten [Mountains, Seas, and Giants]).

It is not so much the range or the exoticism of his subjects that elicits surprise as the means by which he evokes them. On one level, Döblin strives to be ultra-realistic, using historical sources to create an overpoweringly vivid background. “I was in love with the facts and documents, and wanted to incorporate them without alteration,” he says of his work on the Thirty Years War. The direct portrayal of events is enhanced by the extensive use of a specialist vocabulary with which he assumes the reader to be familiar. But besides the documentary layer in Döblin’s work, other methods are employed to produce expressive effects: these include interior monologues, cinematic editing techniques, and scenes of lyrical and at times nightmarish intensity. Several such devices seem calculated to make the reader aware of the “fictionality” of the text. Like James Joyce, with whom he is often compared, Döblin was involved in extending the range of narrative perspectives within the novel, and regularly experimented with methods which subsequently came to be recognized as features of post-modernism.

Berlin Alexanderplatz is not only the story of a humble furniture-removal-man with a personality that encompasses the extremes of criminality and sainthood, but also the definitive chronicle of a modern metropolis and a probing interrogation of the values of its secularized inhabitants. The career of Franz Biberkopf is examined over a period of 18 months, during which he abandons his initial quest for “respectability” and becomes increasingly involved in the activities of a gang of thieves and swindlers, loses an arm in a car-chase, and sustains a final blow when his girlfriend, Mieke, is murdered by fellow crook, Reinhold. But, as always in Döblin, the medium is no less important than the events. Innovative techniques abound: soft-focusing is often used, and material from various walks of life is mounted onto the narrative as in the collages of Expressionist and Dadaist painters. Language is pushed to new extremes: documentary source-material, news items, statistics, popular songs, hymns, and biblical references intertwine to create an at times clinically realistic, at times symbolic canvas, at the heart of which is an impassioned plea for our sympathetic understanding of a disoriented, marginal man, and through him, of his entire generation.

In much of his work, Döblin shows himself to be keenly aware of injustice and hypocrisy in society. His passion for detail, his medical experience, and his familiarity with the low life of inter-war Berlin made him deeply suspicious of officialdom and superficial notions of respectability. Incompetent and mendacious bureaucracy, corruption in high places, and the gross materialism of the well-to-do recur as themes in the novels, whatever their setting. His central characters tend to be from undistinguished backgrounds, ordinary men buffeted about by an ill-functioning system. In the 1920s, Döblin published political commentaries in a variety of formats. From 1927 onwards, he claimed to have become more interested in the individual than in the collective. Several works deal directly with revolutionary and fascist tendencies in Germany, notably November 1918 and Pardon wird nicht gegeben (Men Without Mercy). His exile is vividly recalled in the autobiographical Schicksalsreise (Destiny's Journey). Unlike Brecht and Thomas Mann, Döblin was unable to find his feet in America and returned after the war to Germany, where he had been all but forgotten. There was little interest in his kaleidoscopic, experimental style, and his later manuscripts were ignored by the major commercial publishing houses of West Germany. After his death in 1957, an unreliable, fragmentary, and expensive collected edition began to appear. Public interest was re-awakened in part by the efforts of East German critics and publishers, who were keen to stress his social commitment. A complete edition of Döblin’s works was at last forthcoming, and his reputation has been further enhanced by the attentions of the film director Rainer Werner Fassbinder, whose last major work was a monumental 15-hour version of Berlin Alexanderplatz.

—Osman Durrani

See the essay on Berlin Alexanderplatz.

DODERER, Heimito von

Born: Weidlingau, Austria, 5 September 1896. Education: Educated at the Landstrasser Gymnasium, graduated 1914; University of Vienna, 1921–25, Ph.D. in history, 1925. Military Service: Served as a reserve officer, Austrian dragoon regiment, 1915, prisoner of war in Siberia, 1916, repatriated 1920; conscripted to the German Air Force, 1940; examiner of potential Luftwaffe officers, Vienna, 1943; prisoner of war in Norway, 1945, released 1946. Family: Married 1) Gusti Hasterlik in 1930 (divorced 1934); 2) Maria Thoma in 1952. Career: Converted to Roman Catholicism, 1940; publisher's reader, Vienna, 1946; banned from publishing works until 1950. Awards: Confederation of German Industry, Novelist's prize, 1954; Austrian State grand award, 1954; Prikheim medal of Nuremberg, 1958; Raabe prize, 1966; Ring of Honour of the City of Vienna, 1966. Member: Nazi Party, 1933–38; Institute for Research in Austrian History, 1950. Died: 23 December 1966.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Frühe Prosa, edited by Hans Flesch-Brunning. 1968.
Die Erzählungen, edited by Wendelin Schmidt-Dengler. 2 vols., 1973–76.
Commentarii: Tagebücher aus dem Nachlass, edited by Wendelin Schmidt-Dengler. 2 vols., 1976–86.
Das Doderer-Buch: Eine Auswahl aus dem Werk Heimito von Doderers, edited by Karl Heinz Kramberg. 1976.

Fiction

Die Bresche: Ein Vorgang in vierundzwanzig Stunden. 1924.
Das Geheimnis des Reichs. 1930; as The Secret of the Empire: A Novel of the Russian Civil War, translated with foreword and afterword by John S. Barrett, 1998.
Ein Mord, den jeder begeht. 1938; as Every Man a Murderer, translated by Richard and Clara Winston, 1964.
Ein Umweg. 1940.
Die erleuchteten Fenster; oder, die Menschwerdung des Amtsrates Julius Zihal. 1950; as The Lighted Windows; or, The Humanization of the Bureaucrat Julius Zihal, translated with afterword by John S. Barrett, 2000.
Die Strudlhofstiege; oder, Melzer und die Tiefe der Jahre. 1951.
Das letzte Abenteuer. 1953.
Die Dämonen. 1956; as The Demons, translated by Richard and Clara Winston, 1961.
Die Posaunen von Jericho: Neues Divertimento. 1958; as "The Trumpets of Jericho," translated by Vincent Kling, in Chicago Review, 26(2), 1974.
Die Peinigung der Lederbeutelchen (stories). 1959.
Die Merowinger; oder, die totale Familie. 1962.
 Roman No. 7
Die Wasserfälle von Slunj. 1963; as The Waterfalls of Slunj, translated by Eithne Wilkins and Ernst Kaiser, 1966.
Der Grenzwald (fragment). 1967.
Unter schwarzen Sternen (stories). 1966.
Meine neunzehn Lebensläufe und neun andere Geschichten. 1966.

Die Wiederkehr der Drachen: Aufsätze, Traktate, Reden, edited by Wendelin Schmidt-Dengler. 1972.

Verse

Gassen und Landschaft. 1923.
Ein Weg im Dunklen: Gedichte und epigrammatische Verse. 1957.

Other

Der Fall Gütersloh: Ein Schicksal und seine Deutung. 1930.
Von der Unschuld des Indirekten. 1947.
Grundlagen und Funktion des Romans. 1959; as "Principles and Functions of the Novel," in 30th International Congress of the P.E.N. Clubs, 1959.
Wege und Umwege, edited by Herbert Eisenreich. 1960.
Die Ortung des Kritikers. 1960.
Albert Paris Gütersloh: Autor und Werk, with others. 1962.
Tangenten. Tagebuch eines Schriftstellers 1940–1950 (correspondence). 1964.
Mit der Sprache leben, with Herbert Meier and Josef Mühlberger. 1965.
Repertorium: Ein Begreifbuch von höheren und niederen Lebenssachen, edited by Dietrich Weber. 1969.
Briefwechsel 1928–1962, with Albert Paris Gütersloh, edited by Reinhold Treml. 1986.
 Editor, Gewaltig staunt der Mensch, by Albert Paris Gütersloh. 1963.

*

Critical Studies: From Prophecy to Exorcism: The Premises of Modern German Literature by Michael Hamburger, 1965; "Heimito von Doderer's Demons and the Modern Kakanian Novel" by Engelbert Pfeiffer," in The Contemporary Novel in German edited by Robert H. Heitner, 1967; "A Commentary on Heimito von Doderer" by Dietrich Weber, translated by Brian L. Harris, in Dimension, (1), 1968; Heimito von Doderer by Michael Bachem, 1981; Twentieth-Century Odyssey: A Study of Heimito von Doderer's Die Dämonen by Elizabeth C. Hesson, 1982; Doderer and the Politics of Marriage: Personal and Social History in Die Dämonen by Bruce Irvin Turner, 1982; Begegnung mit Heimito von Doderer edited by Michael Horowitz, 1983; Heimito von Doderer by Dietrich Weber, 1987; "Heimito von Doderer and National Socialism" by Andrew W. Barker, in German Life and Letters, 41(2), 1988; The Writer's Place: Heimito von Doderer and the Alsergrund District of Vienna by Engelbert Pfeiffer, translated by Vincent Kling, 2001.

* * *

Friedrich Torberg contended that Heimito von Doderer would have enjoyed the reputation of being the most Austrian of Austrian authors. Few authors' works are so intimately linked with locations and milieux as his. Vienna's third district, the site of his former school between the "diplomats' quarter" and the Prater as well as the Alsergrund, are his preferred settings, for example Die Wasserfälle von Slunj (The Waterfalls of Slunj) and Die Strudlhofstiege [The Strudlhof Steps]. Doderer describes not only streets, but also houses in such detail that they are easily identifiable. His actual protagonist is Vienna as the former capital of the Austro-Hungarian empire and the multicultural metropolis which he loved: his family's aristocratic and bourgeois circles and his own bohemian environment. In his portrayal of urban life, Doderer displays his familiarity with various social groups: the coffee house culture, ladies of leisure, civil servants, state officials, and workers. He is no stranger to the Viennese underworld and their transactions in the canal and sewer systems. The monumental novels, Die Strudlhofstiege and Die Dämonen (The Demons), like romans à clef, frequently refer to historical persons and events.

Doderer's depiction of the anxiety of the Austrian bourgeoisie is unmatched, because he shared their general lack of interest in democracy and resented the newly-formed republic despite the fact that in the 1920s Vienna was a model of social progress. His perspective is that of an upper-class man and a World War I officer of a dragoon elite unit, who was not even stripped of his privileges in a Siberian prison camp. As a prisoner of war he wrote, studied, and encountered the work of the novelist Albert Paris Gütersloh, his "venerated master" and friend, whose concept of the total novel shaped his own theories. This Russian experience, his captivity and escape, defined to a large extent his view of reality. For example, in The Demons a hands-on fight delivers Imre Gyurkicz, a character caught up in military reveries, from the twilight-zone of alienation. Dying as a fighter, he realizes his human potential. Other protagonists, like the socially awkward René Stangeler, a reflection of Doderer as a young man, and his fiancée Grete Siebenschein, mirror Doderer's exacting courtship and unsuccessful marriage to Gusti Hasterlik, the daughter of a Jewish surgeon, from whom Doderer was divorced in 1938 when the Hasterliks went into exile.

Doderer's literary cosmos evolved organically. The protagonists from earlier texts are followed up in later ones, aging and changing with time. Doderer writes in a "realistic" and a "grotesque" mode. The former is assigned to the inner world of the civilized Sektionsrat Geyrenhoff, an image of the mature Doderer, the latter to the "horrible" Dr. Döblinger, alias Kajetan von Schlaggenberg, reminiscent of the middle-age author in his Nazi phase—the name Döblinger alludes to Doderer's residence in the suburb of Döbling between 1928 and 1936. This compartmentalization of texts suggests a Jekyll-and-Hyde disposition, which Doderer ascribes to the world, coining the concept of a "dual reality." The "Döblinger" texts introduce the readers to extreme, sadistic relationships, taking them on excursions into psychological aberrations and perversions, for example Die Posaunen von Jericho ("The Trumpets of Jericho") and Die Merowinger; oder, die totale Familie [The Merovingians, or the Total Family]. The "Geyrenhoff" texts present society from a rational and benevolent point of view—Geyrenhoff is the chronicler of The Demons, a detached insightful spectator. In larger works the rational and the bizarre spheres overlap. The result is an extreme narrative tension. In the short story "Eine Person aus Porzellan" [A Porcelain Person] one character combines both aspects: a young woman who hides her vampire-like nature under a perfect facade. In The Demons the digressions about late medieval witch hunts written in archaic German—an offshoot of Doderer's historical studies—reveal the dual reality in terms of culture. The poetry in Gassen und Landschaft [Alleys and Landscape] represents yet another literary sensibility, that of a perceptive observer of nature and urban atmospheres.

Doderer's inability to cope with diversity goes hand in hand with a passionate rejection of "ideology" and a yearning for authenticity. While his work abounds with idiosyncratic characters intended to produce the effect of universality, it is precisely this narrow focus on the unique and private which undermines the author's intent. It fosters the notion that nothing in this hermetic cosmos happens by accident: all characters interconnect in causally related plots, by lineage, or through mutual acquaintances. The desire, if not for uniformity, at least for a group spirit—the protagonists in The Demons call their intimate circle "Our People"—reveals an all-pervasive suspicion, particularly of Socialist politics, which is bolstered by Doderer's portrayal of the proletarian masses as rabble as well as his revisionist assessment of the 1927 riots. His texts propose that it takes personal initiative rather than political involvement to overcome the crippling bewilderment supposedly caused by too much indoctrination. Any passionate activity commensurate with one's character may lead to fulfilling one's destiny. While Doderer's concept of character echoes German idealism, it also has a fascist ring to it. His acute awareness of otherness based on gender and ethnicity corresponds with the views held by his psychology professor Hermann Swoboda who, like himself, advocated the principles of one of the most virulent proponents of anti-semitism and misogyny, Otto Weininger.

In Doderer's post-war publications, the inflammatory pronouncements, the prejudice against groups and individuals, but most of all the anti-semitism, are toned down—the later was most prevalent in his projects of the 1930s, following the estrangement from his wife. He had actually planned the first, lost version of The Demons as a celebration of anti-semitism. However, some of these tendencies survived, explaining Doderer's attraction to National Socialism. The novel Ein Mord, den jeder begeht (Every Man a Murderer), written during his Nazi phase, refutes the concept of individual responsibility as a young man realizes his involvement in his sister-in-law's murder. Die erleuchteten Fenster; oder, die Menschwerdung des Amtsrates Julius Zihal (The Lighted Windows; or, The Humanization of the Bureaucrat Julius Zihal) submits that objective structures support any kind of activity: Zihal changes from a devoted, punctual civil servant to an equally serious voyeur. Only love can deliver him from his obsession. Despite their admirable stylistic qualities, the same problematic tendencies persist in Doderer's postwar novels. Purporting to present a critical literary survey of the inter-war years, they do not discuss the events following the burning of the Palace of Justice in 1927. The protagonists of The Demons disband and go into exile, including Mary K., a Jewish woman who has found her true self in a relationship with a working-class man, who, in turn, became a "better" person through his intellectual pursuits. Even after 1945, marriage and assimilation to the genteel middle-classes represent Doderer's ultimate vision of hope to offset the collapse of the civilized world as he perceived it.

—Dagmar C.G. Lorenz

See the essay on Die Strudlhofstiege.

DOSTOEVSKII, Fedor (Mikhailovich)

Also known as Fyodor Dostoevsky. Born: Moscow, Russia, 30 October 1821. Education: Educated at home to age 12; Chermak's School, Moscow; Army Chief Engineering Academy, St. Petersburg, 1838–43: commissioned as ensign, 1839, as 2nd lieutenant, 1842, graduated 1843 as War Ministry draftsman; resigned 1844. Family: Married 1) Maria Dmitrievna Isaeva in 1857 (died 1864), one stepson; 2) Anna Grigorievna Snitkina in 1867, two daughters and two sons. Career: Writer; political involvement caused his arrest, 1849: sentenced to death, but sentence commuted at the last moment to penal servitude, in Omsk, Siberia, 1850–54; exiled as soldier at Semipalatinsk, 1854; corporal, 1855, ensign, 1856, resigned as 2nd lieutenant for health reasons, and exile ended, 1859; editor, Vremia [Time], 1861–63; took over Epokha [Epoch] on his brother's death, 1864–65; in Western Europe, 1867–71; editor, Grazhdanin [Citizen], 1873–74. Died: 28 January 1881.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Novels, translated by Constance Garnett. 12 vols., 1912–20.
Polnoe sobranie khudozhestvennykh proizvedenii [Complete Works]. 3 vols., 1933.
Sobranie sochinenii [Collected Works], edited by Leonid Grossman. 10 vols., 1956–58.
Polnoe sobranie sochinenii [Complete Works], edited by G.M. Fridlender and others. 30 vols., 1972–90.
Sochineniia [Works]. 2 vols., 1987–.
Sobranie sochinenii [Collected Works]. 15 vols., 1988.
Izbrannye sochineniia [Selected Works], edited by N.I. Iakushin. 1990.
White Nights; A Gentle Creature; The Dream of a Ridiculous Man, translated by Alan Myers. 1995.

Fiction

Bednye liudi. 1846; as Poor Folk, 1887; also translated by L. Milman, 1894; C.J. Hogarth, with The Gambler, 1916; Constance Garnett, in Novels, 1917; L. Nazrozov, 1956; Robert Dessaix, 1982; David McDuff, 1988.
Dvoinik. 1846; as The Double, translated by Constance Garnett, in Novels, 1917; also translated by Jessie Coulson, 1972; as The Double: A Poem of St. Petersburg, translated by George Bird, 1956; as The Double: Two Versions, translated by Evelyn Harden, 1985.
Belye nochii. 1848; as White Nights, translated by Constance Garnett, in Novels, 1918; also translated by Olga Shartse, 1958.
Netochka Nezvanova. 1849; as Netochka Nezvanova, translated by Constance Garnett, in Novels, 1920; also translated by Ann Dunnigan, 1970; Jane Kentish, 1985.
Selo Stepanchikogo i ego obitateli [The Village Stepanchikogo and Its Inhabitants]. 1859; as The Village of Stepanchikovo and Its Inhabitants: From the Notes of an Unknown, translated with introduction by Ignat Avsey, 1995.
Zapiski iz podpol'ia. 1864; edited by A.D.P. Briggs, 1994; as Letters from the Underworld, translated by C.J. Hogarth, 1913; as Notes from the Underground, translated by Jessie Coulson, 1972; as Notes from Underground, translated by Constance Garnett, in Novels, 1918; also translated by Mirra Ginsburg, 1974; Michael R. Katz, 1989; Jane Kentish, with The Gambler, 1991; Richard Pevear and Larissa Volokhonsky, 1992.
Igrok. 1866; as The Gambler, translated by F. Whishaw, with The Friend of the Family, 1887; also translated by C.J. Hogarth, with Poor Folk, 1916; Jessie Coulson, 1966; Victor Terras, with Diary, by Polina Suslova, 1973; Jane Kentish, with Notes from the Underground, 1991.
Prestuplenie i nakazanie. 1867; as Crime and Punishment, translated by Frederick Whishaw, 1886; also translated by Constance Garnett, 1881; David Magarshack, 1951; Jessie Coulson, 1953 (this translation edited by George Gibian, 1989; with an introduction by Richard Peace, 1995); Sidney Monas, 1968; J. Katzer, 1985; David McDuff, 1991; Richard Pevear and Larissa Volokhonsky, 1993.

Idiot. 1869; as The Idiot, translated by Frederick Whishaw, 1887; also translated by Constance Garnett, in Novels, 1913; E. Martin, 1914; David Magarshack, 1954; Henry and Olga Carlisle, 1969; J. Katzer, 1978; Alan Myers, 1992; Richard Pevear and Larissa Volokhonsky, 1993.
Vechnyi muzh. 1870; as The Permanent Husband, translated by Frederick Whishaw, with Uncle's Dream, 1888; as The Eternal Husband, translated by Constance Garnett, in Novels, 1917.
Besy. 1872; as The Possessed, translated by Constance Garnett, in Novels, 1913; as The Devils, translated by David Magarshack, 1953; as Devils, translated by Michael R. Katz, 1992; as Demons: A Novel in Three Parts, translated by Richard Pevear and Larissa Volokhonsky, 1994.
Podrostok. 1875; as A Raw Youth, translated by Constance Garnett, in Novels, 1916.
Brat'ia Karamazovy. 1880; as The Brothers Karamazov, translated by Constance Garnett, in Novels, 1912; also translated by A. Kropotkin, 1953; David Magarshack, 1958; Andrew R. MacAndrew, 1970; Julius Katzer, 1980; W.J. Leatherbarrow, 1990; Richard Pevear and Larissa Volokhonsky, 1990; David McDuff, 1993.
Injury and Insult, translated by Frederick Whishaw. 1886; as The Insulted and Injured, translated by Constance Garnett, in Novels, 1915; also translated by Olga Shartse, 1977; as The Insulted and Humiliated, 1956.
The Friend of the Family and The Gambler, translated by Frederick Whishaw. 1887.
Uncle's Dream, translated by Frederick Whishaw, with The Permanent Husband. 1888; also translated by Constance Garnett, in Novels, 1919; as My Uncle's Dream, translated by Ivy Litvinova, 1956.
Letters from the Underworld and Other Stories, translated by C.J. Hogarth. 1913.
A Gentle Spirit, translated by Constance Garnett, in Novels. 1917; as A Gentle Creature and Other Stories, translated by David Magarshack, 1950.
Best Short Stories, translated by David Magarshack, 1954.
Winter Notes on Summer Impressions, translated by R. Renfield. 1954; as Summer Impressions, translated by Kyril FitzLyon, 1954; translated by David Patterson, 1997.
The Gambler; Bobok; A Nasty Story, translated by Jessie Coulson. 1966.
Notes from the Underground; The Double, translated by Jessie Coulson. 1972.
Poor Folk and Other Stories, translated by David McDuff. 1988.
Uncle's Dream and Other Stories, translated by David McDuff. 1989.
An Accidental Family, edited and translated by Richard Freeborn. 1994.

Other

Zapiski iz mertvogo doma. 1861–62; as Buried Alive; or, Ten Years of Penal Servitude in Siberia, translated by M. Von Thilo, 1881; as Prison Life in Siberia, translated by H. Edwards, 1881; as The House of the Dead, 1911; also translated by Constance Garnett, in Novels, 1915; David McDuff, 1985; as Memoirs from the House of the Dead, translated by Jessie Coulson, 1955; as Notes from a Dead House, translated by L. Nazrozov and J. Guralsky, 1958.

Dnevnik pisatel'ia. 1876–81; as The Diary of a Writer, translated by Boris Leo Brasol, 2 vols., 1949; as A Writer's Diary 1873–1876, translated by Brasol, 2 vols., 1949; also translated by Kenneth Lantz, 1993.

Letters of Fyodor Michailovitch Dostoevsky to His Family and Friends, translated by E. Mayne. 1914.

Pages from the Journal of an Author, translated by S.S. Kotelianskii and J.M. Murry. 1916.

Letters and Reminiscences, translated by S.S. Kotelianskii and J.M. Murry. 1923.

Pis'ma k zhene, edited by V.F. Pereverzev. 1926; as Letters to His Wife, translated by E. Hill and D. Mudie, 1930.

New Dostoevsky Letters, translated by S.S. Kotelianskii. 1929.

Zapisnye tetradi [Notebooks]. 4 vols., 1935.

The Grand Inquisitor, translated by S.S. Kotelianskii. 1935; also translated by Constance Garnett, 1948.

Pis'ma [Letters]. 4 vols., 1959.

Occasional Writings, edited and translated by David Magarshack. 1961.

The Notebooks for The Idiot [Crime and Punishment, The Possessed, A Raw Youth, The Brothers Karamazov], edited by Edward Wasiolek, translated by Wasiolek, Victor Terras, and Katharine Strelsky. 5 vols., 1967–71.

Neizdannyi Dostoevskii. Zapisnye knizhki i tetradi 1860–1881. 1971; as The Unpublished Dostoevsky: Diaries and Notebooks, 1860–81, edited by Carl R. Proffer, 3 vols., 1973–76.

Self Portrait, edited by Jessie Coulson. 1976.

Selected Letters, edited by Joseph Frank and David I. Goldstein, translated by Andrew R. MacAndrew. 1987.

Complete Letters (Vol. 1, 1832–59; Vol. 2, 1860–67; Vol. 3, (1868–71); Vol. 4 (1872–77); Vol. 5, 1878–81), edited and translated by David Lowe and Ronald Meyer. 1988–91.

Vozvrashchenie cheloveka [The Return of Man], edited by M.M. Stakhanova. 1989.

*

Bibliography: Dostoevskii, Bibliografiia proizvedenii Dostoevskogo i literaturnykh o nem 1917–65 edited by A.A. Belkin, A.S. Dolinin, and V.V. Kozhinov, 1968; “Dostoevsky Studies in Great Britain: A Bibliographical Survey” by Garth M. Terry in New Essays on Dostoevsky edited by Malcolm V. Jones and Garth M. Terry, 1983; Fedor Dostoevsky: A Reference Guide by W.J. Leatherbarrow, 1990; The Dostoevsky Archive: Firsthand Accounts of the Novelist from Contemporaries' Memoirs and Rare Periodicals, Most Translated for the First Time, With a Detailed Lifetime Chronology and Annotated Bibliography, compiled by Peter Sekirin, 1997.

Critical Studies: Fyodor Dostoevsky: A Study by Aimee Dostoevskii, 1922; Dostoevsky: The Man and His Work by Julius Meier Graefe, 1928; The Mighty Three: Pushkin, Gogol, Dostoevsky by Boris Leo Brasol, 1934; Dostoevsky in Russian Literary Criticism 1846–1954, 1957, Dostoevskii's Image in Russia Today, 1975, and Dostoevskii in Russian and World Theatre, 1977, all by Vladimir Seduro; Dostoevsky: His Life and Art by Avrahm Yarmolinsky, 1957;

Dostoevsky by David Magarshack, 1961; The Undiscovered Dostoevsky, 1962, and Dostoevsky: His Life and Work, 1978, both by Ronald Hingley; Dostoevsky: A Collection of Critical Essays edited by Rene Wellek, 1962; Notes on Dostoevsky's "Crime and Punishment," 1963, and Notes on Dostoevsky's "Notes from the Underground," 1970, both by James L. Roberts, and Notes on Dostoevsky's "The Brothers Karamazov" by Roberts and Gary Carey, 1967; Dostoevsky: The Major Fiction by Edward Wasiolek, 1964; Dostoevsky's Quest for Form, 1966, The Art of Dostoevsky, 1981, and Dostoevsky's Underground Man in Russian Literature, 1982, all by Robert Louis Jackson; Dostoevsky and Romantic Realism by Donald Fangler, 1967; Dostoevsky: His Life and Work by Konstantin Mochulskii, 1967; Dostoevsky: An Examination of the Major Novels by Richard Peace, 1971; Political Apocalypse: A Study of Dostoevsky's Grand Inquisitor by Ellis Sandoz, 1971; The Religion of Dostoevsky by A. Boyce Gibson, 1973; Dostoevsky and the Age of Intensity by Alex de Jong, 1975; Starets Zosima in the Brothers Karamazov: A Study in the Mimesis of Virtue by Sven Linnér, 1975; Dostoevsky: The Novel of Discord, 1976, and Dostoevsky after Bakhtin: Readings in Dostoevsky's Fantastic Realism, 1990, both by Malcolm V. Jones, 1976, and New Essays on Dostoevsky edited by Jones and Garth M. Terry, 1983; Dostoevsky: The Literary Artist by Erik Krag, 1976; Dostoevsky: The Seeds of Revolt 1821–1849, 1977, The Years of Ordeal 1850–1859, 1984, and The Stir of Liberation 1860–1865, 1987, all by Joseph Frank; Dostoevsky and the Novel by Michael Holquist, 1977; A "Handbook" to the Russian Text of Crime and Punishment by Edgar H. Lehrmann, 1977; Atheism and the Rejection of God: Contemporary Philosophy and the Brothers Karamazov by Stewart Sutherland, 1977; Dostoevsky and Christ: A Study of Dostoevsky's Rebellion Against Belinsky by Ivan Dolenc, 1978; Ideology and Imagination: The Image of Society in Dostoevsky by Geoffrey C. Kabat, 1978; Dostoevsky and the Psychologists by Maria Kravchenko, 1978; Crime and Punishment: Murder as Philosophic Experiment by A.D. Nuttall, 1978; Crime and Punishment: The Techniques of the Omniscient Author by Gary Rosenshield, 1978; Unconscious Structure in The Idiot: A Study in Literature and Psychoanalysis by Elizabeth Dalton, 1979; Narrative Principles in Dostoevskij's Besy: A Structural Analysis by Slobodanka B. Vladiv, 1979; Tolstoy or Dostoevsky: An Essay in Contrast by George Steiner, 1980; F.M. Dostoevsky (1821–1881): A Centenary Collection edited by Leo Burnett, 1981; Fedor Dostoevsky, 1981, and Fyodor Dostoevsky: "The Brothers Karamazov," 1992, both by W.J. Leatherbarrow; Dostoevsky and The Idiot: Author, Narrator and Reader by Robin Feuer Miller, 1981; A Karamazov Companion: Commentary on the Genesis, Language and Style of Dostoevsky's Novel by Victor Terras, 1981; The Underground Man and Raskolnikov: A Comparative Study by Preben Villadsen, 1981; Dostoevsky by Gerald Abraham, 1982; Fyodor Dostoevsky by John Arthur Thomas Lloyd, 1982; Dostoevsky by Stanislaw Mackiewicz, 1982; Dostoevsky by Dimitri Merejkowski, 1982; Character Names in Dostoevsky's Fiction by Charles Passage, 1982; Dostoevsky by John Cowper Powys, 1982; Dostoevsky by C.M. Woodhouse, 1982; Dostoevsky by L.A. Zander, 1982; New Essays on Dostoevsky, 1983; A Dostoevsky Dictionary by Richard Chapple, 1983; Dostoevsky by John Jones, 1983; The Idiot: Dostoevsky's Fantastic Prince: A Phenomenological Approach by Dennis Patrick Slattery, 1983; Problems of Dostoevsky's Poetics by Mikhail M. Bakhtin, translated by Caryl Emerson, 1984; Tyrant and Victim in Dostoevsky by Gary Cox, 1984; Dostoevsky and His New Testament, 1984, and Dostoevsky: A Writer's Life, 1988, both by Geir Kjetsaa;

The Experience of Time in Crime and Punishment by Leslie A. Johnson, 1985; Varieties of Poetic Utterance: Quotation in The Brothers Karamazov by Nina Perlina, 1985; Dostoevsky and the Healing Art: An Essay in Literary and Medical History by James L. Rice, 1985; Dostoevsky: The Myths of Duality by Roger B. Anderson, 1986; Dostoevsky and the Human Condition after a Century edited by Alexej Ugrinsky, Frank S. Lambasa, and Valija K. Ozolins, 1986; Dostoyevsky's Critique of the West: The Quest for the Earthly Paradise by Bruce K. Ward, 1986; Humor in the Novels of F.M. Dostoevsky by R.L. Busch, 1987; The Aesthetics of Dostoevsky by Nadezhda Kashina, 1987; Summer in Baden-Baden: From the Life of Dostoyevsky by Leonid Tsyppin, 1987; Fyodor Dostoevsky by Peter Conradi, 1988; Poverty and Power in the Early Works of Dostoevskij by S.K. Somerwil-Ayrton, 1988; Furnace of Doubt: Dostoevsky and The Brothers Karamazov by Arthur Trace, 1988; The Genesis of the Brothers Karamazov: The Aesthetics, Ideology and Psychology of Making a Text by Robert Belknap, 1989; Dostoevsky: The Author as Psychoanalyst by Louis Breger, 1989; Dostoevsky and the Process of Literary Creation by Jacques Cateau, 1989; Literary Portraits in the Novels of F.M. Dostoevskij by Edmund Heier, 1989; Dostoevsky: Dreamer and Prophet by Judith Gunn, 1990; The Political and Social Thought of F.M. Dostoevsky by Stephen Carter, 1991; The Brothers Karamazov and the Poetics of Memory by Diana Oenning Thompson, 1991; Fedor Dostoevsky by Alloa Amoia, 1993; Dostoevsky's Notes from Underground by Richard Peace, 1993; Dostoevsky and the Twentieth Century: The Ljubljana Papers, edited by Malcolm V. Jones, 1993; Dostoevsky and the Woman Question: Rereadings at the End of a Century by Nina Pelikan Straus, 1994; Dostoevsky: The Miraculous Years by Joseph Frank, 1995; Dostoevskii and Britain, edited by W.J. Leatherbarrow, 1995; The Annihilation of Inertia: Dostoevsky and Metaphysics by Liza Knapp, 1996; Dostoevsky's Crime and Punishment: An Aesthetic Interpretation by Henry Buchanan, 1996; The Perverted Ideal in Dostoevsky's "The Devils" by Nancy K. Anderson, 1997; Dostoevsky and Soloviev: The Art of Integral Vision by Marina Kostalevsky, 1997; Resurrection From the Underground: Feodor Dostoevsky by René Girard, translated and edited by James G. Williams, 1997; Reading Dostoevsky by Victor Terras, 1998; Dostoevsky's The Idiot: A Critical Companion, edited by Liza Knapp, 1998; Dostoevsky and English Modernism, 1900–1930 by Peter Kaye, 1999; Dimensions of Laughter in Crime and Punishment by John (János) Spiegel, 2000; Dostoevsky and the Christian Tradition, edited by George Pattison and Diane Oenning Thompson, 2001; Retelling Dostoyevsky: Literary Responses and Other Observations by Gary Adelman, 2001.

* * *

The darkness of Fedor Dostoevskii's life—a murdered father, epilepsy, near-execution and exile, debt, compulsive gambling, estrangement from friends, and a tormented sexuality—reflects the rapidly overheating Russian society of the later 19th century. So does his literature. His early work, including Bednye liudi (Poor Folk), Dvoynik (The Double), and Belye nochi (White Nights), surfaces in a post-Gogolian “civic realism,” with a compassion for the little man, but this feature is quickly overshadowed by his characteristic and seminal perceptions of the paranoia, deception, emptiness, and illusion of modern urban life. In the score of years following his penal servitude and exile for “socialist” activities (1849–59) Dostoevskii produced a series of works of lasting significance for 20th-century literature. The Underground Man (central character of Zapiski iz podpol'ia, translated as Notes from the Underground) is a determining forerunner to most of the later heroes: a frustrated modern man, adrift in a moral void. Estranged from the roots of land, tradition, and faith, he attempts to establish, if only negatively, his own identity and dignity against the palliatives and platitudes of authority on the one hand and the serious, but dangerous appeal of “rationalism” on the other. Rationalism, in Dostoevskii's view, came to embrace utilitarianism, materialism, socialism, and the temporal power of Roman Catholicism. Throughout his work Dostoevskii seeks to counteract rationalism by appeal to the intuitive Christian faith which he sees embodied, however imperfectly, in the beliefs of the Russian people.

The conflicting interplay between the rationalist analysis of existence and the natural response to life is pursued in stronger terms in the characters and plots of the major novels. In Prestuplenie i nakazanie (Crime and Punishment) Raskol'nikov's espousal of a “rational” superman morality results only in the squalid murder of a pawnbroker, followed by Raskol'nikov's own self-torment which eventually leads him to an unconvincing “salvation.” In Idiot (The Idiot) Prince Myshkin's passive beauty and his all too perceptive innocence stimulate, rather than reconcile, the perverse impulses of his society. In Besy (The Possessed or The Devils), a Messianic, anti-revolutionary novel, Stavrogin's unique strength and individuality is sapped to suicide by disillusionment with ideologies, causes, and beliefs. Finally, in Brat'ia Karamazovy (The Brothers Karamazov) the Karamazov family, beset by jealousy, pride, and hatred, disintegrates into parricide, a crisis that tests the extremes of Christianity and atheism. It is only in this last novel that Dostoevskii's attempt to give a positive depiction of active Christian love (in the persons of Father Zosima and Alesha Karamazov) is artistically successful, although even here it often fails to match the power of Ivan Karamazov's reasoned objections to “God's world.”

Dostoevskii's heroes are strong but divided personalities, engaged in intimate and frequently mortal debate with themselves, their “doubles,” and the reader over the moral basis of their actions. His murder-centred plots are a visionary, fantastic, and mythically structured re-working of the sensational and extremist life observed in his journalism. The polarized themes of reason and unreason, faith and unbelief, moral freedom and moral slavery, frame the tension of modern man, a tension which finds a precarious resolution in the vision of Christ, Dostoevskii's moral-aesthetic ideal. His journal chronicle Dnevnik pisatel'ia (The Diary of a Writer) portrays these issues in the form of justification of tradition, discussion of psychology and education, and nationalistic, reactionary vaunting of the Russian destiny over a corrupt Europe.

The essence of Dostoevskii's work is dialogue. Vladimir Nabokov, a noted critic of Dostoevskii's otherwise largely undisputed reputation, describes him as a writer who “seems to have been chosen by the destiny of Russian letters to become Russia's greatest playwright,” but who “took the wrong turning and wrote novels” (Lectures on Russian Literature, 1982). Those novels are constantly destabilized by narrators, chroniclers, and a host of narrating characters who run amok through authorial corridors. Mikhail Bakhtin's identification of this dialogic structure as “polyphony” (in his Problems of Dostoevsky's Poetics) has been revolutionary to the understanding of Dostoevskii and highly influential in the development of modern structuralism. Dostoevskii creates from his settings of fateful threshold and crowded room, grubby town and fantastic city the fragmented universe inherited by the 20th-century novel. Nothing in Dostoevskii's work is single, whole, or certain, but his imperfective vision looks forward with a desperate hope for perfection.

—Christopher R. Pike

See the essays on The Brothers Karamazov, Crime and Punishment, The Devils, The Idiot, and Notes from the Underground.

DOUWES DEKKER, Edouard

See MULTATULI

DOVIZI DA BIBBINA, Bernardo

Born: Bernardo Dovizi, in Bibbiena, Casentino, Florentine Republic, 4 August 1470. Career: Entered the service of the Medicis at an early age: Florentine ambassador to Pope Alexander VI in Rome, 1492, and to King Alfonso II of Aragon and Naples, 1494; followed Pietro de' Medici into exile following his expulsion from Florence by the French, 1494, and, after Pietro's death in 1503, served his brother, Cardinal Giovanni de' Medici, as secretary; plenipotentiary for the Pope at the Congress of Mantua, 1512; on Giovanni's election as Pope Leo X in 1513, became papal treasurer and Cardinal of Santa Maria, Portico; thereafter pursued papal diplomatic and religious interests: enabled papal alliance with Austria, Switzerland, Venice, and Milan, 1515, acted as legate to the papal armies besieging Urbino, 1516, and travelled to France, 1518–19, to raise support for a new crusade against the Turks; obtained the bishop's palace in Costanza, 1518, but gave it to his friend Pietro Bembo, q.v. Died: 9 November 1520.

PUBLICATIONS

Plays

La Calandria (produced 1513). 1521; as La Calandria, 1786; edited by N. Borsellino, in Commedie del Cinquecento 1, 1967, also edited by P. Fossati, 1967, and by Giorgio Padoan, 1970; as The Follies of Calandro, translated by Oliver Evans, in The Genius of the Italian Theater, edited by Eric Bentley, 1964.

Other

Epistolario, edited by G.L. Moncallero. 2 vols., 1955–64.

*

Critical Studies: Il cardinale Bibbiena by A. Santelli, 1931; Commedie fiorentine del Cinquecento: Mandragola; Clizia; Calandria by Luigi Russo, 1939; Il cardinale Bernardo Dovizi da Bibbiena, umanista e diplomatico (1470–1520) by Giuseppe L. Mocallo, 1953; The Birth of Modern Comedy in Renaissance Italy by Douglas Radcliff-Umstead, 1969; “Women and the Management of Dramaturgy in La Calandria” by Laurie Detenbeck, in Women in Italian Culture edited by Ada Testaferri, 1989; “Drama and the Court in La Calandria” by Jack D’Amico, in Theatre Journal, 43(1), 1991.

* * *

In the Rome of the Medici popes, and at the court of Urbino that had produced Castiglione's Il libro del cortegiano (The Book of the Courtier), Bernardo Dovizi da Bibbiena had been a papal courtier from an early age, and later a politician, ambassador, and ultimately cardinal. Literature was a pastime for him and (other than some letters to contemporaries) the comedy La Calandria (The Follies of Calandro) is all that survives of his works. He assisted Giovanni de' Medici to become Pope Leo X in 1513, and there was speculation that Dovizi da Bibbiena may have been poisoned as his powerful position suggested that he might have been involved in an intrigue to succeed to the papacy. His influence and prestige are indicated by the number of references to him in The Book of the Courtier; Castiglione was also responsible for the celebrated production of The Follies of Calandro at Urbino in 1513 (and it is to Castiglione that the second prologue to the play has been attributed). This was the earliest production of an Italian play of which we have a full account. The comedy was published first in Siena in 1521, but was consistently staged (at least eight productions are recorded before 1550). An entertaining courtier and consummate literary craftsman, Dovizi da Bibbiena is characterized above all by humour and intelligence.

Dovizi da Bibbiena's masterpiece was first staged at the court of Urbino in the throne room of the ducal palace, with a set by Girolamo Genga. It was directed and staged-managed by Castiglione, whose letter about the staging provides a unique insight into the production. The principle of courtly patronage, in deference to the Duke of Urbino, was represented in hanging tapestries of stories from the history of Troy, reflecting the Duke's recent reconquest of the city, in an inscription in large letters which figured in the design, and in the proscenium arch, which has been compared with the twin towers and façade of the ducal palace itself, making an analogy between the playing space, the power of the Duke, and the Duke's “ideal” city-state. The surviving documentation identifies the playing space, seats for spectators, entries and exits, and the location of musicians.

In 1514, The Follies of Calandro was staged in Rome, in a production organized by Dovizi da Bibbiena himself with a set designed by the celebrated designer Peruzzi. A sketch survives that may have been for this production, showing the Urbino ducal palace façade translated into “Roman” terms, with twin temples based on the Pantheon replacing the two towers. This production has been seen as seminal for the entire subsequent history of the perspective set because of the link with Peruzzi (whose model “tragic” and “comic” set designs were to become standard points of reference), and since reference was made specifically to the Urbino staging for the Roman production.

In 1532 Mantua saw a production of the comedy. The unique documentation charts the progress of a dispute between the celebrated artist Giulio Romano, who designed the set, and the “director,” Ippolito Calandra, over the question of whether the set should contain “flat” painted houses or representations of architecture in relief. But the most spectacular production of all was staged in Lyon in 1548, by the community of Florentines resident in the city, organized and funded by the Cardinal Ippolito d'Este, Archbishop of Lyon. Mounted in the great hall of the Archbishop's palace, the play was performed before a set depicting Florence, with recognizable monuments reproduced and the hall embellished with 12 giant statues of Florentine warriors and artists in a Parnassus celebrating the glories of Florence for resident expatriates. The performance was attended by the King of France, Henry II, and the intermezzi between the acts (of which full descriptive documentation survives) set a pattern in the courtier/patronage relationship, between the play and its illustrious patron, which was to be influential, and looks forward to the celebrated production of Bargagli's Pellegrina in Florence in 1589. Allegorical figures representing the ages of Iron, Bronze, Silver, and Gold dispute for the favours of the King, and are unrelated to the text of the comedy itself.

Uniquely therefore, the history of the staging of Dovizi da Bibbiena's The Follies of Calandro documents the importance of this comedy among the earliest in the "vulgar" tongue, sets the tone for dramatic representation of the stories from Boccaccio's The Decameron (its source), and establishes the relationship between comedy in performance, the city-state as playing space (in the reproduction of reality in the perspective set), the patronage network, and the intermingling of political and practical life with creativity in all the arts (painting, architecture, sculpture, writing, comedy, acting, and so on). And the multi-faceted façade of this concept of theatre echoes the careers of two of the most successful courtiers in the Renaissance: Dovizi da Bibbiena, the play's author, and Castiglione, its first director.

—Christopher Cairns

DROSTE-HÜLSHOFF, Annette von

Born: Anna Elisabeth Franziska Adolfine Wilhelmina Luisa Maria in Schloss Hülshoff near Münster, Westphalia, Germany, 10 January 1797. Education: Educated by private tutors. Career: Moved with her mother and sister to Rüschaus following the death of her father in 1826; collaborated with the writer Levin Schücking from 1840 who encouraged her poetic activity; lived in Meersburg from 1846. Suffered from ill health throughout her life. Died: 24 May 1848.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Gesammelte Schriften, edited by Levin Schücking. 3 vols., 1878–79.
Sämtliche Werke, edited by Karl Schulte Kemminghausen. 4 vols., 1925–30.

Poems, edited by Margaret Atkinson. 1968.

Historisch-kritische Ausgabe: Werke, Briefwechsel, edited by Winfried Woesler. 14 vols., 1978–85.

Werke, edited by Clemens Heselhaus. 1984.

Verse

Walther. 1818.

Gedichte. 1838.

Das malerische und romantische Westfalen. 1839.

Gedichte. 1844.

Das geistliche Jahr. Nebst einem Anhang Religiöser Gedichte, edited by C.B. Schülter and Wilhelm Junkmann. 1851.

Letzte Gaben, edited by Levin Schücking. 1860.

Lebensgang, edited by Marie Silling. 1917.

Balladen. 1922.

Fiction

Die Judenbuche. 1851; as The Jew's Beech, translated by Lionel and Doris Thomas, 1958; as The Jew's Beech Tree, translated by Michael Bullock, in Three Eerie Tales from 19th Century German, 1975.

Ledwina (fragment). 1923.

Plays

Perdu; oder, Dichter, Verleger und Blaustriumpfe. 1840.

Other

Bilder aus Westfalen. 1845.

Briefe, edited by C. Schlueter. 1877.

Die Briefe von Annette von Droste-Hülshoff und Levin Schücking, edited by Theo Schücking. 1893.

Die Briefe der Dichterin Annette von Droste-Hülshoff, edited by Hermann Cardauns. 1909.

Dreiundzwanzig neue Droste-Briefe, edited by Manfred Schneider. 1923.

Briefe, edited by Karl Schulte Kemminghausen. 2 vols., 1944.

Lieder und Gesänge, edited by Karl Gustav Fellerer. 1954.

*

Bibliography: Droste-Hülshoff Bibliographie by Eduard Arens and Karl Schulte Kemminghausen, 1932.

Critical Studies: Annette von Droste-Hülshoff by Margaret Mare, 1965; Annette von Droste-Hülshoff in Selbstzeugnissen und Bilddokumenten by Peter Berglar, 1967; Annette von Droste-Hülshoff. Werk und Leben by Clemens Heselhaus, 1971; Sinnbildsprache. Zur Bildstruktur des Geistlichen Jahres der Annette von Droste-Hülshoff by Stephan Berning, 1975; Annette von Droste-Hülshoff by Ronald Schneider, 1977; Annette von Droste-Hülshoff: A Woman of Letters in a Period of Transition, 1981, and Annette von Droste-Hülshoff: A Biography, 1984, both by Mary Morgan; Annette von Droste-Hülshoff: A German Poet Between Romanticism and Realism by John Guthrie, 1989; Annette von Droste-Hülshoff: Die Judenbuche by Heinz Rölleke, 1989; Ambivalence Transcended: A Study of the Writings of Annette von Droste-Hülshoff by Gertrude Bauer Pickar, 1997.

* * *

Annette von Droste-Hülshoff belonged to the group Junges Deutschland and is considered a writer of classical stature, certainly as one of Germany's greatest women poets.

Her interest in poetry was early stimulated by a one-time friend of August Bürger, a certain A. Spickmann. In 1814 she began a two-act romantic verse tragedy entitled Berta, a drama fragment of 2,000 lines which foreshadows her later mastery of writing. Berta deals with intrigue and with criticism of the ambitious nobility, and it contains a conspiracy against the prince, an evil Italian servant, diplomatic wedding negotiations, and a pair of true lovers separated by the exigencies of rank as well as by intrigue. Its author was wise to realize early on that the work was not a success and that drama was not her strength.

Another early work, the epic poem Walther, was completed in 1818, and is considered a most ambitious finished product. The poem mingles medieval cruelty and knightly idealism with modern sensibility. It contains lines of exceptional promise, as well as some narrative skill and the ability to sustain and round off her theme. The problem of man's deliberate waywardness and estrangement from God through a cherished "idol" is raised but not thoroughly worked out. In this poem, Droste-Hülshoff imitates Walther von der Vogelweide's Kreuzlied in an attempt to draw on genuine medieval sources as well as on nature. Walther, however, remained unsuccessful.

In 1824 Droste-Hülshoff began a novel Ledwina, which remained unfinished although some 50 pages were published posthumously. It is a fragment of her early prose work, having been begun about the year 1819. It was to remain a fragment, although she worked on it over the next five years of her life. There are elements in the prose passages which seem to belong expressly to a highly "romantic" phase of Droste-Hülshoff's life. Some critics believe that these "romantic" elements in her early work reveal, as well as Droste-Hülshoff's acquaintance with the literature of the time or at least with its mood, her own lifelong tendency to dwell on decay and death and the transience of all things. One reason for her decision not to finish Ledwina is to be found in her half-humorous remarks in a letter to her friend Spickmann on 8 February 1819 (Die Briefe von Annette von Droste-Hülshoff, vol. 1) that consumptive heroines were becoming rather too common, featuring in all the second-rate, sentimental literature.

Towards the end of 1820 Droste-Hülshoff began to write a cycle of devotional poems for her grandmother, reflecting the ecclesiastical calendar: Das geistliche Jahr [The Spiritual Year], published posthumously in 1851. It is a cycle of 72 poems which are of a confessional character and reflect not only piety but also a conscientious struggle with doubt. There is a song devoted to each Sunday of the year, and one for every church holiday. Although Droste-Hülshoff was a devout Catholic, there are few specific references to the Catholic church in her poems. Das geistliche Jahr gives the impression that Droste-Hülshoff was seeking a God who could not be found and that she had to go on seeking until death (in fact, she continued to revise the manuscript until a few months before her death).

In Das geistliche Jahr Droste-Hülshoff drew from such varied sources as books of scientific knowledge, like those her father had been interested in collecting for his library, containing facts about phenomena such as the "Phosphorpflanze," and from accounts of oriental travel, as well as the Bible, mystical literature and baroque verse, books of popular hymns, and classical and romantic verses. Her other poems, too, were indebted to such books. However, direct experience also plays a major role in shaping the poems.

Three epic poems, "Das Hospiz auf dem grossen St. Bernhard" [The Hospice on the St. Bernhard], "Des Arztes Vermächtnis" [The Doctor's Legacy], and "Die Schlacht am Loener Bruch" [The Battle at Loener Bog], were all published in her first collection of poems. "Das Hospiz" is apparently modelled on Sir Walter Scott's Lady of the Lake since Droste-Hülshoff was an enthusiastic devotee of Scott's work. These verses rarely express lyric sweetness or romantic sentiment; indeed, they are often repellent in their acerbic realism. But her love for the red soil of her native Westphalia, its forests, and its moors, is perhaps deeper than that of any other German poet for the homeland; and for nature's most hidden secrets she has an almost preternatural clearness of vision. Her technical mastery and self-abnegating restraint are classical in the pre-Romantic sense of the word, but her language is full of colour. In the above-mentioned epic poems, Droste-Hülshoff shows herself to be a woman of great earnestness, realistic observation, and deep psychological insight.

Her friend and literary adviser, the critic Levin Schücking, inspired her to work on her most famous works: the novella, Die Judenbuche (The Jew's Beech Tree), and the poems "Der Knabe im Moor" [The Young Boy in the Bog] and "Mondesaufgang" [The Rising Moon]. These three works are realistic and detailed descriptions contributing to an atmosphere of horror and gloom previously absent in her works.

The Jew's Beech Tree is a tragic tale of ignorance, crime, and social prejudice in which the sins of the fathers are visited upon the sons. The story was inspired by an actual murder in Westphalia. An old town drunk, Mergel, neglected and debauched, is found dead one day near an old beech tree. His son, Friedrich, disreputable and unsocial, murders a Jewish merchant to whom he owes money and places him beside the same beech tree where his own father died of drunkenness, then flees. All the Jews in the area come with a mysterious inscription in Hebrew and place it on the tree. After many years Friedrich returns; no one recognizes him, but the remembrance of his own act of murder leaves him no peace and he is found hanged on the beech tree. In this work, Droste-Hülshoff introduces new and modern elements: social injustice, environmental influence, the role of the conscience, and the psychology of crime.

After the publication of The Jew's Beech Tree, on which her reputation as a writer for a long time depended, Droste-Hülshoff began on the "Spiritus Familiaris des Rosstäuschers" [The Familiar Spirit of the Horse-Dealer]. In this work, her last ballad, Droste-Hülshoff shows a deep and genuine faith; in the old folklorist tradition, it tells of a man who accepts help from the devil and imperils his soul. It is a cross between a ballad and an epic poem and is considered one of her most mature works.

Bilder aus Westfalen [Pictures of Westphalia] appeared at first anonymously. These sketches of Westphalia describe the differing mental and physical types found in the districts of Sauerland, Paderborn, and Munsterland. They are shrewd and bold, so much so that they could not appear under her own name, but they were written with the same empathy as The Jew's Beech Tree, which was written as a result of Droste-Hülshoff's studies for Bilder aus Westfalen. These later writings show the remarkable nuances of wit and irony which balance, but never obscure, the humanity of her mature style. Until comparatively recently the aspect of Droste-Hülshoff's work most stressed by the literary historian was the amazing exactness and the visual and auditory quality of her descriptions. Other elements in her poems which contribute even more to her greatness were thus overlooked. What lends fascination to her thoughts are the symbols and images in which they are often clothed.

—Brigitte Edith Zapp Archibald

See the essay on The Jew's Beech Tree.

DU BELLAY, Joachim

Born: at the Château de la Turmelière, Liré, France, probably in 1522. Education: Studied law at the University of Poitiers, c. 1545. Career: Took minor clerical orders; writer by 1547: at Collège de Coqueret, Paris, with Ronsard and other writers; lived in Rome in the service of his relation, cardinal Jean Du Bellay, 1553–57. Died: 1 January 1560.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Oeuvres françaises, edited by Guillaume Aubert and Jean Morel. 1568.
Oeuvres poétiques, edited by Henri Chamard. 6 vols., 1907–31; revised by Yvonne Bellenger, 1982–85.
Collected Translations by C.H. Sisson. 1996.

Verse

L'Olive. 1549; enlarged edition, 1550.
Antérotique. 1549.
Vers lyriques. 1549.
Recueil de poésie. 1549; enlarged edition, 1553.
Oeuvres. 1552.
Hymnes. 2 vols., 1555–56.
Premier livre des antiquités de Rome. 1558; as Ruins of Rome, translated by Edmund Spenser, in Complaints, 1591.
Les Regrets et autres oeuvres poétiques. 1558; as The Regrets, translated by C.H. Sisson, 1984.
Divers jeux rustiques. 1558.
Poemata (in Latin). 1558.
Discours sur le sacre du treschrétien roi François I. 1558.
Ample discours au roi. 1567.
Xenia. 1569.
The Visions of Bellay [Songe], translated Edmund Spenser, in Theatre for Worldlings, edited by Jan Van Der Noot, 1569, reprinted 1939; revised in Complaints, 1591.
Poems, edited by Harold Walter Lawton, 1961.
Du Bellay (selected poems), edited by Marie-Hélène Richard. 1973.
La Monomachie de David et de Goliath (and other poems), edited by E. Caldarini. 1981.
L'Olive: An Anthology, edited by Thomas Thomson. 1986.
A Critical Edition of the Circumstantial Verse of Joachim Du Bellay, edited by David Julian Hartley. 2000.

Other

La Défence et illustration de la langue française. 1549; as The Defence and Glorification of the French Language, translated by Elizabeth Smulders, 1935; as The Defence and Illustration of the French Language, translated by Gladys M. Turquet, 1939.
Lettres, edited by Pierre de Nolhac. 1883.

*

Bibliography: Du Bellay: A Bibliography by Margaret B. Wells, 1974.

Critical Studies: The Platonism of Du Bellay by R.V. Merrill, 1925; Histoire de la Pléiade by Henri Chamard, 4 vols., 1939–40; Du Bellay in Rome by Gladys Dickinson, 1960; Les Sources italiennes de la "Défense et illustration de la langue française" de Joachim du Bellay by Pierre Villey, 1970; Du Bellay by Louis C. Keating, 1971; Spenser, Ronsard, and Du Bellay: A Renaissance Comparison by Alfred W. Satterthwaite, 1972; The Chaste Muse: A Study of Du Bellay's Poetry by Dorothy Gabe Coleman, 1980; Trials of Desire: Renaissance Defenses of Poetry by Margaret W. Ferguson, 1983; Du Bellay: Poems by Kathleen M. Hall and Margaret Wells, 1985; The Ordered Text: The Sonnet Sequences of Du Bellay by Richard A. Katz, 1985; Three French Short-Versé Satirists: Marot, Magny and Du Bellay by William F. Panici, 1990; The Poet's Odyssey: Joachim Du Bellay and the "Antiquitez de Rome" by George Hugo Tucker, 1990; Patriotism in the Work of Joachim Du Bellay: A Study of the Relationship Between the Poet and France by David Hartley, 1993; Ronsard and Du Bellay Versus Bèze: Allusiveness in Renaissance Literary Texts by Malcolm C. Smith, 1995.

* * *

It was perhaps inevitable that Joachim Du Bellay should be overshadowed both in and after his lifetime by his friend and contemporary, Ronsard. Yet the fact remains that he is the author of some of the finest and best-known sonnets in the French language. These are for the most part to be found among the 191 sonnets of the Les Regrets et autres oeuvres poétiques (The Regrets) which, a mixture of elegy and satire, owe their inspiration to his progressive disenchantment with his life as a minor diplomat in Rome. Other, less famous, sonnets in the same collection are delightfully sharp sketches of Roman life in the 1550s and in particular of the intrigues of the papal court.

However, it was not just this personal frustration which triggered off Du Bellay's disillusionment. He seems to have been by temperament a melancholy man and as early as 1549 had written a "Chant du désespéré." Compared to Ronsard he was something of a lightweight intellectually, but he can appear more sensitive, and certainly more vulnerable. He seems indeed to have been a sick man (or at the very least a chronic hypochondriac) much of his life, which fact makes it all the more surprising that he should adopt the aggressive posture of a young man in a hurry in his first major publication, La Défence et illustration de la langue française (The Defense and Illustration of the French Language) published in 1549. This short work quickly established itself as the manifesto of the "Brigade" which had gathered around Ronsard, but later developments cast doubt on the extent to which Du Bellay himself subscribed to the views he expounded. In fact, parts of this "defence" of the French language were cribbed from an Italian treatise by Sperone Speroni (1542). Du Bellay seems concerned above all with demolishing the achievements of his predecessors among the French poets, whom he compares unfavourably with the Greek and Roman masters and with the Italians such as Petrarch. He soon outgrew his theories: his L'Olive is a Petrarchist canzoniere but within a few years Du Bellay claimed that he had forgotten the art of "petrarchizing," and one of the main strands of his work—the admonition against writing in Latin—is similarly forgotten in the mid-1550s when he set about composing his Poemata. In The Regrets he even renounces the imitatio which was supposed to raise the level of French poetry by a close imitation of Greek and Roman models. Du Bellay claims in this collection that he will write only what his "passion" dictates, thereby suggesting that he will restrict himself to his own personal misfortunes, without reference to illustrious examples or personal glory. Such disclaimers are perhaps more apparent than real. Certainly, in the 32 sonnets in the Premier livre des antiquités de Rome (Ruins of Rome) he sought to universalize his sense of bewilderment at the change of fortune of this once great city, victim of its own hubris.

But it is above all to The Regrets that the non-specialist poetry lover will wish to return again and again. In this sequence of sonnets Du Bellay emerges as one of the great poets of nostalgia, for a far-away country and for the illusions of youth; a poet, too, of solitude, who peoples his poems, mysteriously, with absences, and who turns his back both on the ambitions of his youth and on the meagre consolation of immortality through verse.

—Michael Freeman

See the essay on “Heureux qui, comme Ulysse, a fait un beau voyage.”

DU FU

Also known as Tu Fu. Pseudonym: Pen name: Du Gonglou [Su of the East Slope]. Born: Xiangyang, Gong county, Henan province, China, in 712. Brought up by an aunt after his mother's death. Education: Received traditional Confucian education. Family: Married, with children. Career: Celebrated locally as a poet by age 15; traveller by 731; failed imperial examinations, 735, but finally obtained minor official posts, 751 and 757; thereafter often in poverty and unable to support his family; received patronage from an old friend in Chengdu, 760–65; travelled again in last years, contracting fatal illness while sailing up the Xiang River. His work received little attention until 1039, when an edition of 1,405 poems and 29 prose pieces was compiled. Died: 770.

PUBLICATIONS

Works

Qian qianyi [Works]. 1667 (includes 1,457 poems and 32 prose pieces); as Dushi xiangzhu, 1713 (“standard” text); as Jiuja jizhu Dushi (after 1181 compilation), 1796–1812; modern editions as: Sibu beiyao, 6 vols., 1936; A Concordance to the Poetry of Tu Fu (text and concordance), 3 vols., 1940, reprinted 1967; Du shi quanzhu, 1974; Du shi xiangzhu, 5 vols., 1979; selections: in Gems of Chinese Literature, translated by H.A. Giles, 1923; The Autobiography of a Chinese Poet, 1929, and The Travels of a Chinese Poet, 1936, both translated by Florence Ayscough; in The White Pony, translated by R. Payne, 1947; in One Hundred Poems from the Chinese (includes 35 poems by Du Fu), translated by Kenneth Rexroth, 1956; Selected Poems, edited by Feng Chih, translated by Rewi Alley, 1962; A Little Primer of Tu Fu (bilingual edition), edited and translated by David Hawkes, 1967; Li Po and Tu Fu: Selected Poetry, edited and translated by Arthur Cooper, 1973; Selected Poems, translated by David Hinton, 1989; Three Chinese Poets: Translations of Poems by Wang Wei, Li Bai, and Du Fu, translated by Vikram Seth, 1992; Ruan Ji's Island and Tu

Fu's In the Cities by Graham Hartill, 1993; Endless River: Li Po and Tu Fu: A Friendship in Poetry, edited by Sam Hamill, 1993; Li-Tu: Ch'iu-p'u Verses & Scattered Sentiments: Poetic Cycles, translation by Bradford S. Miller, 1997.

*

Critical Studies: Tu Fu: China's Greatest Poet (includes translations) by Wei Lien Hung, 1952; “Tu Fu, Lover of His People” by C. Feng, in Chinese Literature, 1955; A Little Primer of Tu Fu by D. Hawkes, 1967; Tu Fu by A.R. Davis, 1971; The Great Age of Chinese Poetry: The High Tang by Stephen Owen, 1980; Du Fu's Laments from the South by David R. McCraw, 1992; Reconsidering Tu Fu: Literary Greatness and Cultural Context by Eva Shan Chou, 1995.

* * *

Honoured as a the “Sage of Poetry,” Du Fu is considered one of the greatest poets not only of the Tang dynasty but also in the history of Chinese literature, and his verse has been widely translated.

He travelled across the country for more than ten years when he was young. But judging from his extant poems, he did not write much during this happy period. He is best remembered for his later works. He thought of himself as a poet who had read “tens of thousands of books” and “could write poems like magic.” So when he went to the city of Luoyang to sit for an imperial examination, he had full confidence in his success. However, he unexpectedly failed the exam, and thereafter began to travel extensively again.

Du Fu lived in an age when the feudal rulers became decadent and corrupt, during the demise of the Tang dynasty after it had enjoyed prosperity for more than a hundred years. Through various means he tried to get an official position, but without success. He was given only low-status positions, and for only brief periods. He returned to his itinerant life in later years, and lived in poverty till his death. The harshness of his life is reflected in one poem about his homecoming after an absence of ten years: “I heard loud wailing, entering the house; And found my youngest son had died of hunger.” The misery of his life and his bitter experiences gave him a chance to see with his own eyes the chaos, poverty, and tragedy of the war-weary nation. His poems, which are filled with social themes mirroring this period of Chinese history, are thus often called “poetic history.”

Du Fu was, on the whole, a realist poet. His poems explicitly express his concern for the common people and lament their sufferings, while implicitly satirizing the extravagant and licentious life of the Emperor and his concubines. His poem “A Ballad of Beautiful Women” exposes the decadence in the palace and the cruelty of the imperial prime minister. In his often-quoted lines “Meat and wine behind the doors of the powerful rich are becoming stinking, while in the streets corpses of the miserable people frozen to death are lying” he makes a striking contrast between the extravagant rich and the suffering poor.

Corruption and war were the root cause of the misery he described. The cruel and corrupt officials robbed the people, leaving them destitute—a situation compounded by the successive wars. In one poem he describes the desperate state of a typical village: “No one has been able to attend to farming. And since we're still in the midst of battles, All our children have gone to the eastern front.” Many of his poems reflect the grief of lovers separated by war, and, above all, the desolate scene all over the war-torn country. Poems like “The Song of Chariots,” “Farewell of the Newlyweds,” and “Husband on an Expedition,” epitomize the bitter and tragic situation during the war: “Grass smells of the lying corpses, The vast plains are flooded with blood.” In “Farewell of an Old Man,” the narrator pours out his grievances: “My sons and grandsons lost in war, What’s the use of staying home to save my skin?” Another poem, “Recruiting Officer of Shihao,” presents a heartbreaking picture of an old woman whose “three sons have left for garrison duty at Ye.” She receives a letter from one of them breaking the news that the other two have recently died in battle: “Now there’s no other man in the house, Only a grandson at his mother’s breast. The child’s mother has not gone away; She has only a tattered skirt to wear.” In other words, there is no one left for the officer to recruit except the feeble old woman herself. In numerous poems Du Fu expresses the hope that war will soon come to an end and that the people will be allowed to live in peace. He used his poems to show his sympathy with ordinary people, comment on state affairs, and reproach the wrong-doings of the rulers.

Du Fu was more than a political poet, however. His verse covers a wide range of subjects and includes various forms including pastoral, narrative and lyric poetry, folk songs and ballads (yuefu). His “Autumn Thoughts,” “A Spring Night—Rejoicing in the Rain,” and a number of other poems portray the beauty of nature. His genius for diction, excellent mastery of rhythm and rhyme, and astonishing skill at creating images, gave such beauty to his poetry and won him so much renown that no poet in the history of Chinese literature has attracted so many followers and influenced so much later poetry.

—Binghong Lu

DU GARD, Roger Martin

See MARTIN DU GARD, Roger

DU GONGLOU

See DU FU

DUMAS FILS, Alexandre

Born: Paris, France, 28 July 1824, the illegitimate son of the writer Alexandre Dumas père, q.v. Education: Educated at the Pension Goubaux and the Collège Bourbon. Family: Married 1) Nadejda Knorring (né Naryschkine) in 1864 (died 1895), two daughters, one before marriage; 2) Henriette Régner de la Brière in 1895. Career: Lived with father in Saint-Germain-en-Laye, 1843–51; travelled with father to Spain and Algeria, 1846–47; wrote for the Théâtre du Gymnase, and later in career, for the Comédie-Française. Elected to the Académie française, 1875. Died: 28 November 1895.

PUBLICATIONS

Collection

Théâtre complet. 10 vols., 1923.

Fiction

Aventures de quatre femmes et d'un perroquet. 6 vols., 1846–47.

La Dame aux camélias. 2 vols., 1848; as The Lady with the Camelias, translated anonymously, 1856; as The Camelia-Lady, translated anonymously, 1857; as The Lady of the Camellias, translated by William Walton, 1897; as Camille, translated by Henrietta Metcalf, 1931; also translated by Edmund Gosse, 1952; David Coward, 1986.

Césarine. 1848.

Le Docteur Servans. 2 vols., 1848–49.

Le Roman d'une femme. 4 vols., 1849.

Antoine. 2 vols., 1849.

La Vie à vingt ans. 2 vols., 1850; as Paris Life at Twenty, translated anonymously, 1863; as The American Girl in Paris, translated by Llewellyn Williams, 1891.

Tristan le roux. 3 vols., 1850; as The Beggar of Nimes, 1988.

Trois hommes forts. 4 vols., 1850.

Diane de Lys et Grangette. 3 vols., 1850.

Le Régent Mustel. 2 vols., 1852 (originally published as Les Revenants as an offprint from Le Pays, 1852); as The Resuscitated, translated by G. de Croij, 1877.

Contes et nouvelles. 1853.

La Dame aux perles. 4 vols., 1853; as The Lady with the Pearl Necklace, translated by M. Maury, 1901.

Sophie Printemps. 2 vols., 1854.

Un Cas de rupture. 1854.

L’Affaire Clemenceau. 1866; as The Clemenceau Case, translated anonymously, n.d.; as Wife Murderer, translated by H.L. Williams, 1866; as Belle, translated anonymously, 1888.

Plays

Atala, music by P. Varney. 1848.

La Dame aux camélias (produced 1852). 1852; edited by Roger J.B. Clark, 1972; as La Dame aux camélias, translated by Frederick A. Schwab, 1880; as The Lady of the Camelias, translated by Edith Reynolds and Nigel Playfair, 1930, in Camille, edited by S.S. Stanton, 1958; as Camille, translated by Henriette Metcalf, 1931; also translated by Edmund Gosse, 1937; Barbara Bray, 1975.

Diane de Lys (produced 1853). 1853.

Éva, with A. Montjoye and R. Deslandes (produced 1854). 1854.

Le Bijou de la reine (produced 1855). In Théâtre complet. 1868.

Le Demi-monde (produced 1855). 1855; as The Demi-Monde: A Satire on Society, translated by E.G. Squier, 1858; as The Outer Edge of Society, translated by Allison Smith and Robert Bell Michell, 1921.

Comment la trouves-tu?, with others (produced 1857). 1857.

La Question d'argent (produced 1857). 1857; as The Money Question, translated by B.W. Cragin and others, in Poet Lore, 26, 1915.

Le Fils naturel (produced 1858). 1858; as Le fils naturel, translated by T.L. Oxley, 1879.

Un Mariage dans un chapeau, with Auguste Vivier (produced 1859). 1859.

Un Père prodigue (produced 1859). 1859.

L'Ami des femmes (produced 1864). 1864; as The Friend of Women, translated anonymously, n.d.
Le Supplice d'une femme, with Émile de Girardin (produced 1865). 1865.
Héloïse Paranaquet, with Anne-Adrien-Armand Durantin (produced 1866). 1866.
Les Idées de Madame Aubray (produced 1867). 1867.
Le Filleul de Pompignac, with A. de Jolin and N. Fournier (produced 1869). 1869.
Une visite de noces (produced 1871). 1872.
La Princesse Georges (produced 1871). 1872; translated as La Princesse Georges, 1881.
La Femme de Claude (produced 1873). 1873; as Claude's Wife, translated anonymously, n.d.
Monsieur Alphonse (produced 1873). 1874; as M. Alphonse, translated anonymously, 1886.
Les Danicheff, with Pyotr Korvin-Krukovsky (produced 1876). 1879.
La Comtesse Romani, with Gustave-Eugène Fould (produced 1876). 1878.
L'Étrangère (produced 1876). 1877; as The Foreigner, translated anonymously, 1881; as L'Étrangère, translated by Frederick A. Schwab, 1888.
La Princesse de Bagdad (produced 1881). 1881; as The Princess of Bagdad, translated anonymously, 1881.
Théâtre complet. 7 vols., 1882–93.
Denise (produced 1885). 1885; as Denise, translated anonymously, 1888.
Francillon (produced 1887). 1887.
Théâtres des autres (includes collaborative works). 2 vols., 1894.

Verse

Péchés de jeunesse. 1847.

Other

Histoire de la loterie. 1851.
Histoire du "Supplice d'une femme." 1865.
Les Madeleines repenties. 1869.
Nouvelle lettre de Junius à son ami A.D. 1871.
La Révolution plébéienne: Lettres à Junius. 1871.
Une lettre sur les choses du jour. 1871.
Nouvelle lettre sur les choses du jour. 1871.
L'Homme-Femme. 1872; as Man-Woman, edited and translated by George Vandenhoff, 1873.
Entr'actes. 3 vols., 1878–79.
Les Femmes qui tuent et les femmes qui votent. 1880.
La Question du divorce. 1880.
Lettre à M. Naquet. 1882.
La Recherche de la paternité. 1883.
Nouveaux Entr'actes. 1890.

*

Critical Studies: Les Idées sociales dans le théâtre de Dumas by C.M. Noël, 1912; Dumas, Father and Son by Francis Gribble, 1930; Le Théâtre de Dumas fils et la société contemporaine by O. Cheorgiu, 1931; The Theatre of Alexandre Dumas fils by F.A. Taylor, 1937; The Prodigal Father: Dumas Père et Fils and "The Lady of the Camelias" by Edith Saunders, 1951; Three Musketeers: A Study of the Dumas Family by André Maurois, translated, 1957; Alexandre Dumas films by A. Lebois, 1969; La fleur du mal: La véritable histoire de la Dame aux camélias by Micheline Boudet, 1993; Dumas: Père et fils by Yves-Marie Lucot, 1997; A Critical Edition of La route de Thèbes, edited with introduction by H.D. Lewis, 1998.

* * *

Like his father, Alexandre Dumas films was a prolific author of both novels and plays, though his major success was on the stage. After an early volume of poetry, Péchés de jeunesse [Sins of Youth], Dumas films turned to the novel, writing 14 between 1846 and 1854. Although the best of these, La Dame aux camélias (Camille), Diane de Lys, and La Dame aux perles (The Lady with the Pearl Necklace), showed promise, the work that truly established his literary career was his stage adaptation of Camille. This presented a social situation new to the French stage, with characters speaking a language which, if flowery and rhetorical to modern ears, was far closer to everyday speech than mid-19th-century audiences were accustomed to hearing on stage. With its sympathetic portrayal of the doomed courtesan who finds love too late to escape the fatal result of her dissipated life, Camille, after an initial battle with censorship, achieved an enormous success.

Dumas films's second stage adaptation, Diane de Lys, is a distinctly grimmer study of a neglected wife who pursues an affair with a young artist whom her husband finally kills. Although Dumas was attempting to preach a moral lesson here, the contribution of the husband to his own problems was so clear that he gained little sympathy. Much clearer morally was the more original and more successful Le Demimonde (The Outer Edge of Society), an unsentimental study of a world on the fringes of polite society, eager at any price to achieve the respectability society could offer. Suzanne d'Ange dreams of a proper marriage that will confirm her respectability, but Olivier de Jain, a protector of polite society from such contamination, frustrates her ambitions. De Jain is the first of Dumas films's raisonneurs, a key figure in the new "thesis play," which illustrates some contemporary social or moral question, with the raisonneur serving as spokesman for the author.

The Outer Edge of Society differs from most thesis plays in that the social point of view it expresses is essentially the same as the members of society who would attend this play. Later thesis plays, from Dumas's own to those of Ibsen and Shaw, regularly challenged widely held social and moral beliefs and practice. Dumas turned in this direction with La Question d'argent (The Money Question), which challenged certain ideas prevalent in Dumas's society concerning the acquisition of wealth, and Le Fils naturel, which challenged social attitudes toward illegitimate children, with the added titillation of the author's own birth being illegitimate. Un Père prodigue [A Prodigal Father] clearly serves as a companion piece to Le Fils naturel and if the traits of Dumas films are rather difficult to trace in the melodramatically idealized Jacques, those of Dumas père seem clearly in evidence in the larger-than-life prodigal father, presented, for all his faults, with obvious affection.

L'Ami des femmes (The Friend of Women) utilized Dumas films's new interest in psychology. His raisonneur, de Ryons, "the woman's friend," has made a study of the female mind and thus is able to anticipate and to thwart Jane de Simerose's temptation toward adultery. More novels appeared after 1854, but only one, L'Affaire

Clemenceau (The Clemenceau Case), had a real success. It claimed to be the prison journal of a husband who has murdered his unfaithful wife after a last night of love.

Les Idées de Madame Aubray [Madame Aubray's Ideas] was one of Dumas's most unconventional works, not only because he turned at last to a strong central female character, but also because of its religious theme. Mme. Aubray is a zealous Christian torn between her beliefs and her desire to save her son from a marriage to a "fallen woman." Less openly religious but similarly admirable is Séverine, the heroine of La Princesse Georges, who redeems her unfaithful husband by forgiving him. During the late 1860s Dumas began to create long prefaces in the later manner of Shaw, carrying out his project for a "useful theatre" by promulgating his ideas on love, marriage, divorce, abortion, and a whole range of social and moral concerns. The 1870 Franco-Prussian War also inspired a series of important public letters from him, as had the uprisings of 1848, letters expressing a fear of democratic government leading to anarchy.

La Femme de Claude (Claude's Wife) attempted a symbolic statement on the war and its causes, but the realistic context and melodramatic characters confused the public. Claude, a noble, patriotic Frenchman, marries a foreign wife who betrays his love and steals military secrets. Claude, discovering her perfidy, kills her. A much lighter note was struck this same year by Monsieur Alphonse, another study of a fallen woman, this one repentant and forgiven by a magnanimous husband. Monsieur Alphonse, the manipulative seducer, is one of Dumas's most successful characters.

L'Etrangère (The Foreigner), Dumas filis's first play written for the Comédie-Française, depicts an unhappy arranged marriage, and although in this story the villainous husband is conveniently killed in a duel, Dumas felt clearly that society should provide a more thoughtful solution. The result was his famous pamphlet La Question du divorce, followed by a statement championing women's rights, Les Femmes qui tuent et les femmes qui votent [Women who Kill and Women who Vote], and one on illegitimacy, La Recherche de la paternité [A Study on Paternity]. Although each of these aroused great controversy, all were instrumental in inspiring important new social legislation in France.

Dumas filis's political statements encouraged a negative public reaction to La Princesse de Bagdad (The Princess of Bagdad), but it is one of his weaker plays, another study of a spoiled, headstrong wife and a forgiving husband. His last two plays were more substantial and more successful. Denise presents a moving and convincing picture of a young woman who gives up her present happiness by confessing a sexual sin in her past in order to protect another young woman from marrying her seducer. Francillon shows a wife, tired of her husband's amorous intrigues, who boasts to him (falsely) of carrying out an affair of her own, thus curing him.

With the exception of Camille, none of Dumas filis's theatre survives today, and even Camille is often regarded as little more than sentimental melodrama. In his own time, however, Dumas filis was regarded as a bold portrayer of contemporary life with a powerful and often effective commitment to social concerns. The modern "problem play" of Ibsen, Shaw, and their followers would scarcely have been possible without his example.

—Marvin Carlson

See the essay on Camille.

DUMAS PÈRE, Alexandre (Davy de la Pailleterie)

Born: Villers-Cotterêts, France, 24 July 1802. Education: Educated at local school. Family: Married Ida Ferrier in 1840 (separated 1844; died 1861); had a son, the writer Alexandre Dumas filis, q.v., by Catharine Labay, a daughter by Mélanie Serre, a son by Anna Bauër, and a daughter by Émilie Cordier. Career: Articled at age 14 to a solicitor in Villers-Cotterêts, and one in Crépy, until 1822; employed in the secretariat of the Duc d'Orléans, 1822–29, and entered literary circle of Charles Nodier: librarian, Palais Royal, 1829; successful playwright, then historical novelist (often revising and polishing works written first by someone else); co-founder, Théâtre Historique, Paris, 1847–50; editor (and copious contributor), La Liberté, 1848; founding editor, La France nouvelle, 1848, and Le Mois, 1848–50; declared bankrupt and moved to Brussels, 1852, returned to Paris in 1853; founding editor, Le Mousquetaire, 1853–57, and the weekly Le Monte-Cristo, 1857–60; aided Garibaldi's invasion of Sicily, 1860–61; director of excavations and museums, Naples, 1860–61; editor Journal de Jeudi, 1860, and L'indépendente, Naples, 1860–64; returned to France, 1864; revived Le Mousquetaire, 1866–67; editor, Le D'Artagnan, 1868, and Théâtre Journal, 1868–69. Awards: Chevalier, Légion d'honneur, 1837; Order of Isabella the Catholic (Belgium); Cross of Gustavus Vasa (Sweden); Order of St. John of Jerusalem. Died: 5 December 1870.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Oeuvres complètes. 286 vols., 1848–1900.

Théâtre complet. 15 vols., 1863–74.

Oeuvres complètes. 301 vols., 1885–88.

The Romances. 60 vols., 1893–97; 10 vols., 1896.

The Novels, translated by Alfred Allinson. 56 vols., 1903–11.

Fiction

Nouvelles contemporaines. 1826.

Souvenirs d'Antony. 1835; as The Recollections of Antony, translated by Jeremy Griswold, 1849; as The Reminiscences of Antony, 1905.

Guelphs et Gibelins. 1836; as Guelphs and Ghibellines, 1905.

Isabelle de Bavière. 1836; as Isabel of Bavaria, translated by William Barrow, 1846.

La Main droite du Sire de Giac. 1838; as The King's Favourite, 1906.

Le Capitaine Paul, with Adrien Dauzats. 2 vols., 1838; as Captain Paul, translated by Thomas Williams, 1846; as Paul Jones, translated by William Berger, 1839; as Paul Jones, the Son of the Sea, translated 1849; as Paul Jones: A Nautical Romance, translated by Henry Llewellyn Williams, 1889; as Paul Jones, the Bold Privateer, n.d.

La Salle d'armes (includes Pauline; Pascal Bruno; Murat). 1838; parts translated under the following titles: Pascal Bruno, edited by Theodore Hook, 1837; Pauline: A Tale of Normandy, translated by "A Lady of Virginia," 1842; The Sicilian Bandit, 1859; Pauline, Pascal Bruno, and Bontekoe, translated by Alfred Allinson, 1904.

- Acté*. 1839; as Acté, translated by Henry William Herbert, 1847; also translated by Alfred Allinson, 1904.
- Les Crimes célèbres*, with others. 1839–40; as Celebrated Crimes, translated 1843; also translated by I.G. Burnham, 8 vols., 1887; as The Celebrated Crimes of History, 8 vols., 1895; parts published as The Crimes of the Borgias and Others, 1907; The Crimes of Urbain Grandier and Others, 1907; The Crimes of Ali Pacha and Others, 1908; The Crimes of the Marquise de Brinvilliers and Others, 1908.
- La Comtesse de Salisbury*. 1839; as The Countess of Salisbury, 1851.
- Monseigneur Gaston Phoebus*. 1839.
- Mémoires d'un maître d'armes*. 1840; as The Fencing-Master, translated by G. Griswold, 1850.
- Aventures de John Davys*. 1840.
- Maître Adam le Calabrais*. 1840.
- Othon l'archer*. 1840; as Otho the Archer, 1860.
- Praxède*. 1841.
- La Chasse au Chastre*. 1841; as The Bird of Fate, 1906.
- Aventures de Lyderic*. 1842; as Lyderic, Count of Flanders, 1903; as Adventures of Lyderic, 1981.
- Jehanne la Pucelle*. 1842; as Joan the Heroic Maiden, 1847.
- Albine*. 1843; as Le Château d'Eppstein, 1844; as The Spectre Mother, 1864; as The Castle of Eppstein, translated by Alfred Allinson, 1904.
- Le Chevalier d'Harmental*, with Auguste Maquet. 1843; as The Chevalier d'Harmental, translated by P.F. Christin and Eugene Lies, 1846; as The Chateau d'Harmental, 1856; as The Orange Plume, translated by Henry L. Williams, Jr., 1860; as The Conspirators, 1910.
- La Comtesse de Saint-Géran*; as The Countess of Saint-Géran, 1843.
- Georges*. 1843; as George, translated by G.J. Knox, 1846; also translated by Samuel Spring, 1847; as Georges, translated by Alfred Allinson, 1904.
- Ascanio*, with Paul Meurice. 1843–44; as Ascanio, translated by Eugene Lies and Eugene Plunkett, 1846; as Francis I, 1849.
- Le Comte de Monte-Cristo*, with Auguste Maquet. 1844–45; edited by David Coward (in English), 1990; as The Count of Monte Cristo, 1846; also translated by Henry Llewellyn Williams, 1892; William Thiese, 1892; Steven Grant, 1990; as The Chateau d'If: A Romance, translated by Emma Hardy, 1846.
- Amaury*, with Paul Meurice. 1844; as Amaury, translated by "E.P.," 1844; also translated by Alfred Allinson, 1904.
- Une âme à naître* [Histoire d'une âme]. 1844.
- Cécile*. 1844; as La Robe de nocés, 1844; as Cecile, translated by Eugene Plunkett, 1847; also translated by Alfred Allinson, 1904; as The Wedding Dress, translated by Fayette Robinson, 1851.
- Fernande*. 1844; as Fernande, 1904; also translated by A. Craig Bell, 1988.
- Une fille du régent*, with Auguste Maquet. 1844; as The Regent's Daughter, translated by Charles H. Town, 1845.
- Les Frères corses*. 1844; as The Corsican Brothers, translated by Henry William Herbert, 1845; also translated by Gerardus Van Dam, 1883; Alfred Allison, 1904.
- Les Trois Mousquetaires*, with Auguste Maquet. 1844; edited by David Coward (in English), 1991; as The Three Guardsmen, translated by Park Benjamin, 1846; as The Three Musketeers, translated by William Barrow, 1846; also translated by William Robson, 1860; Henry Llewellyn Williams, 1892; A. Curtis Bond, 1894; Alfred Allinson, 1903; Philip Schuyler Allen, 1923; J. Walker McSpadden, 1926; Jacques Le Clercq, 1950; Isabel Ely Lord, 1952; Lord Sudley, 1952; Marcus Clapham and Clive Reynard, 1992.
- Gabriel Lambert*. 1844; translated as The Galley Slave, 1849; as Gabriel Lambert, 1904.
- Invraisemblance* [Histoire d'un mort]. 1844.
- Sylvandire*, with Auguste Maquet. 1844; as Sylvandire, translated by Thomas Williams, 1847, as The Disputed Inheritance, translated by Williams, 1847; as The Young Chevalier, 1850; as Beau Tancrede, 1861.
- La Guerre des femmes*, with Auguste Maquet. 1845–46; as Nanon, 1847; as The War of Women, translated by Samuel Spring, 1850.
- La Reine Margot*, with Auguste Maquet. 1845; as Margaret de Navarre, 1845; as Marguerite de Valois, 1846; also translated by S. Fowler Wright, 1947; as Queen Margot, translated 1885.
- Vingt ans après*, with Auguste Maquet. 1845; edited by David Coward (in English), 1993; as Cardinal Mazarin; or, Twenty Years After, n.d.; as Twenty Years After, translated by "E.P.," 1846; also translated by William Barrow, 1846; Henry Llewellyn Williams, 1899; Alfred Allinson, 1904; as Cromwell and Mazarin, 1847.
- Le Chevalier de Maison-Rouge*, with Auguste Maquet. 1845; translated as Marie Antoinette, 1846; as Genevieve, translated by Henry William Herbert, 1846; as Chateau-Rouge, 1859; as The Knight of Redcastle, translated by Henry Llewellyn Williams, 1893; as The Chevalier de Maison-Rouge, 1877.
- La Dame de Monsoreau*, with Auguste Maquet. 1846; as Diana of Meridor, 1846; as Chicot the Jester, 1857; as La Dame de Monsoreau, 1889; also translated by J. Walker McSpadden, 1926; as Diane, 1901.
- Mémoires d'un médecin: Joseph Balsamo*, with Auguste Maquet. 1846–48; parts translated under the following titles: Memoirs of a Physician, 1847; Andrée de Taverney; or, The Downfall of French Monarchy, translated by Henry L. Williams, Jr., 2 vols., 1862; The Chevalier, 1864; Balsamo; or, Memoirs of a Physician, 1878; Joseph Balsamo, 1878; The Mesmerist's Victim, translated by Henry Llewellyn Williams, 1893.
- Le Bâtard de Mauléon*, with Auguste Maquet. 1846; as The Bastard of Mauleon, 1849; as The Knight of Mauléon, 1850; as The Half Brothers, 1858; as The Iron Hand, or, The Knight of Mauleon, 1858; as Agénor de Mauléon, 1897.
- Les Quarante-cinq*, with Auguste Maquet. 1848; as The Forty-Five Guardsmen, 1847; also translated by J. Walker McSpadden, 1926; as The Forty-Five, 1889.
- Le Vicomte de Bragelonne; ou, Dix ans plus tard*, with Auguste Maquet. 1848–50; edited by John Kennett (in English), 1970, and by David Coward (in English), 1991; as The Vicomte de Bragelonne, translated by Thomas Williams, 1848, as Bragelonne, the Son of Athos; or, Ten Years Later, translated by Williams, 1848, as The Iron Mask, 1850; as Louise La Vallière, 1851; also translated by Alfred Allinson, 1904; as The Man in the Iron Mask, translated by Henry Llewellyn Williams, 1889, this translation also published as The Vicomte de Bragelonne, 1892, and Louise de la Vallière, 1892; as Louise de la Vallière, translated by J. Walker McSpadden, 1901; as The Man in the Iron Mask, revised and updated by Jacqueline Rogers, 1998.
- Les mille et un fantômes*. 1848–51; as Tales of the Supernatural [Strange Adventures, Terror], 1907–09.
- Le Collier de la Reine*, with Auguste Maquet. 1849; as The Queen's Necklace, translated by Thomas Williams, 1850; also translated by Henry Llewellyn Williams, 1892.

- Ange Pitou*, with Auguste Maquet. 1849; as Taking the Bastille, n.d.; as Six Years Later, translated by Thomas Williams, 1851; as The Royal Life-Guard, translated by Henry Llewellyn Williams, 1893; as Ange Pitou, 1907.
- Les Mariages du père Olifus*, with Paul Bocage. 1849; as The Man with Five Wives, 1850.
- Le Trou de l'enfer*. 1850–51; as The Mouth of Hell, 1906.
- La Tulipe noire*. 1850; as Rosa; or, The Black Tulip, translated by Franz Demmler, 1854, and edited by David Coward, 1993; as The Black Tulip, translated by A.J. O'Connor, 1902; also translated by Mary D. Frost, 1902; S.J. Adair Fitz-Gerald, 1951.
- La Colombe*. 1851; as The Dove, 1906.
- Dieu dispose*. 1851–52; as God's Will Be Done, 1909.
- La Comtesse de Charny*. 1852–55; as The Countess de Charny, translated 1853; as La Comtesse de Charny, 1890; as The Countess of Charny, translated by Henry Llewellyn Williams, 1892.
- Un Gil-Blas en Californie*. 1852; as A Gil Blas in California, 1933.
- Isaac Laquedem*. 1852–53.
- Conscience l'innocent*. 1852; as The Conscript, 1855; as Conscience, translated by Alfred Allinson, 1902.
- Olympe de Clèves*. 1852; as Olympia of Cleves; or, The Loves of a King, 1887; as Olympe de Clèves, 1893; as Madame de Mailly, 1896.
- Emmanuel Philibert*. 1852–54; as Le Page du duc de Savoie, 1855; as Emmanuel-Philibert, 1854; as The Page of the Duke of Savoy, 1861.
- Le Pasteur d'Ashbourne*. 1853.
- El Saltéador*. 1854; as The Brigand, translated with Blanche de Beaulieu, 1897; with The Horoscope, 1897.
- Ingénue*. 1854; as Ingénue; or, The First Days of Blood, translated by Julie de Marguerittes, 1855.
- Les Mohicans de Paris; Salvator le Commissionnaire*, with Paul Bocage. 1854–59; as The Mohicans of Paris, 1859; also translated by R.S. Garnett, 1926; The Horrors of Paris, 1875; parts translated by Mary Neal Sherwood under the following titles: Salvator, 1882, Conrad de Valgeneuse, 1900, Rose-de-noël, 1900, The Chief of Police, 1900, Monsieur Sarranti, 1900, and Princess Régina, 1900.
- Catherine Blum*. 1854; as The Foresters, 1854; as Catherine Blum, 1861.
- Les Compagnons de Jéhu*. 1857; as Roland of Montreval, 1860; as The Company of Jehu, translated by Katharine Prescott Wormeley, 1894; as The Companions of Jehu, 1894; as The Aide-de-Camp of Napoleon, 1897.
- Charles le téméraire*. 2 vols., 1857; as Charles the Bold, 1860.
- Le Meneur de loups*. 1857; as The Wolf-Leader, translated by Alfred Allinson, 1904.
- Black*. 1858; as Black, 1895.
- Le Capitaine Richard*. 1858; as The Twin Captains, 1861; as The Young Captain, 1870; as The Twin Lieutenants, 1877.
- Herminie*. 1858.
- L'Horoscope*. 1858; as The Horoscope, with The Brigand, 1897; also translated by Mary Stuart Smith, 1900.
- Les Louves de Machecoul*. 1859; as The Castle of Souday, translated by Henry L. Williams, Jr., 1862, this translation also published as Royalist Daughters, 1862; as The Last Vendee; or, The She-Wolves of Machecoul, 1894; as The She-Wolves of Machecoul, with The Corsican Brothers, 1894.
- Ammalet Beg*. 1859; as Sultanetta, translated in Tales of the Caucasus, 1895.
- L'Histoire d'un cabanon et d'un chalet*. 1859; as Monsieur Coumbes, 1860; as Le Fils de Forçat, 1864; as The Convict's Son, 1905.
- La Princesse Flora*. 1859.
- Jane*. 1859; as Jane, with Crop-Ear Jacquot, 1903.
- Le Chasseur de Sauvagine*. 1859; as The Wild Duck Shooter, 1906.
- Le Médecin de Java*. 1859(?); as L'Île de feu, 1870; as Doctor Basilius, translated 1860.
- Madame de Chamblay*, 1859.
- Une aventure d'amour*. 1860.
- Le Père la Ruine*, with de Cherville. 1860; as Père la Ruine, translated by Alfred Allinson, 1905.
- La Maison de glace*, 1860; as The Russian Gipsy, 1860.
- Jacquot sans oreilles*. 1860; as Crop-Ear Jacquot, with Jane, 1903; also translated by Alfred Allinson, in Crop-Eared Jacquot and Other Stories, 1905.
- Les Drames galants, La Marquise d'Escoman*. 1860.
- Une nuit à Florence*. 1861.
- La San-Felice [Emma Lyonna]*. 1864–65; as Love and Liberty, 1869; as The Lovely Lady Hamilton, 1903; as Love and Liberty; or, Nelson at Naples, translated by R.S. Garnett, 1917; as The Neapolitan Lovers, translated by Garnett, 1917.
- La Pêche aux filets*. 1864.
- Le Comte de Moret*. 1866; as The Count of Moret, translated by Henry L. Williams, Jr., 1868.
- La Terreur prussienne*. 1867; as The Prussian Terror, translated by R.S. Garnett, 1915.
- Les Blancs et les bleus*. 1867–68; as The Polish Spy, 1869; as The First Republic, 1894; as The Whites and the Blues, 1894.
- Les Hommes de fer*. 1867.
- L'Huitième Croisade*. 1868; as The Eighth Crusade, 1890.
- Parisiens et provinciaux*, with de Cherville. 1868; as Parisians and Provincials, translated and edited by A. Craig Bell, 1995.
- Création et rédemption: Le Docteur mystérieux, La Fille du marquis*. 1872.
- Le Comte de Beuzeval*; as The Count of Beuzeval, 1889.
- Short Stories* (in English). 1927.

Plays

- La Chasse et l'amour*, with Adolphe de Leuven and Pierre-Joseph Rousseau (produced 1825).
- La Noce et l'enterrement*, with E.H. Lassagne (produced 1826).
- Henri III et sa cour* (produced 1829). 1829.
- Christine* (produced 1830). 1830.
- Antony* (produced 1831). 1831; edited by Maurice Baudin (in English), 1929; as Antony, translated by Frederick A. Schwab, 1880.
- Napoléon Bonaparte* (produced 1831). 1831.
- Charles VII chez ses grands vassaux* (produced 1831). 1831; as Charles VII at the Homes of His Great Vassals, translated by D.T. Bonett, 1992.
- Richard Darlington*, with Dinaux (produced 1831). 1832.
- La Tour de Nesle*, from play by Frédéric Gaillardet (produced 1832). 1832; as The Tower of Nesle, translated by George Almar, 1850(?); also translated by Henry Llewellyn Williams, 1904; Adam L. Gowans, 1906; Edwin Stanton De Poncet, 1934.
- Térésa*, with Anicet Bourgeois (produced 1832). 1832.
- Perinet Leclerc; ou, Paris en 1418* (produced 1832). 1832.
- Le Fils de l'émigré*, with Anicet Bourgeois (produced 1832).

- Le Mari de la veuve*, with Anicet Bourgeois and Eugène Durieu (produced 1832). 1832.
- Angèle*, with Anicet Bourgeois (produced 1833). 1834.
- La Vénitienne*, with Anicet Bourgeois (produced 1834). 1834.
- Catherine Howard* (produced 1834). 1834; as Catherine Howard, 1859; translated and adapted by William E. Suter, 1870(?).
- La Tour de Babel*, with others (produced 1834). 1834.
- Cromwell et Charles Ier*, with Cordellier Delanoue (produced 1835). 1835.
- Don Juan de Marana* (produced 1836). 1836.
- Kean; ou, Désordre et génie*, with Théaulon (produced 1836). 1836; as Edmund Kean; or, The Genius and the Libertine, 1847.
- Le Marquis de Brunoy*, with others (produced 1836). 1836.
- Caligula* (produced 1837). 1838.
- Piquillo*, with Gérard de Nerval, music by Hippolyte Monpou (produced 1837). 1837.
- Paul Jones* (produced 1838). 1838.
- Le Bourgeois de Gand; ou, Le Secrétaire du Duc d'Albe*, with Hippolyte Romand (produced 1838). 1838.
- Mademoiselle de Belle-Isle* (produced 1839). 1839; as Mademoiselle de Belle-Isle (bilingual edition), 1855; also translated by F.A. Kemble, in Plays, 1863; as The Lady of Belle Isle, translated by J.M. Gully, 1872; as Gabrielle de Belle Isle, 1880; as The Great Lover, 1979.
- Bathilde*, with Auguste Maquet (produced 1839). 1839.
- L'Alchimiste*, with Gérard de Nerval (produced 1839). 1839; as The Alchemist, translated by Henry Bertram Lister, 1940.
- Léo Burckart*, with Gérard de Nerval (produced 1839). 1839.
- Jarvis l'honnête homme*, with Charles Lafont (produced 1840). 1840.
- Un mariage sous Louis XV* (produced 1841). 1841; as A Marriage of Convenience, translated and adapted by Sydney Grundy, 1897.
- Jeannil le Breton; ou, Le Gérant responsable*, with Eugène Bourgeois (produced 1841). 1842.
- Le Séducteur et le mari*, with Charles Lafont (produced 1842). 1842.
- Halifax*, with Adolphe d'Ennery (produced 1842). 1842.
- Lorenzino* (produced 1842). 1842.
- Les Demoiselles de Saint-Cyr* (produced 1843). 1843; as The Ladies of Saint-Cyr, 1870.
- Le Laird de Dumbicky*, with Adolphe de Leuven and Léon Lhérie (produced 1843). 1844.
- Louise Bernard*, with Adolphe de Leuven and Léon Lhérie (produced 1843). 1843.
- L'Ecole de princes* (produced 1843). 1843.
- Le Mariage au tambour* (produced 1843). 1843.
- Le Garde-Forêtier*, with Adolphe de Leuven and Léon Lhérie (produced 1845). 1845.
- Un conte de fées*, with Adolphe de Leuven and Léon Lhérie (produced 1845). 1845.
- Sylvandire*, with Adolphe de Leuven and Léon Lhérie, from the novel by Dumas and Maquet (produced 1845). 1845.
- Les Mousquetaires*, with Auguste Maquet, from the novel Vingt ans après by Dumas and Maquet (produced 1845). 1845.
- Une fille du régent*, from the novel by Dumas and Maquet (produced 1846). 1846.
- Échec et mat*, with Octave Feuillet and Paul Bocage (produced 1846). 1846.
- Intrigue et amour*, from a play by Schiller (produced 1847). In Théâtre complet, 1864.
- Hamlet*, with Paul Meurice, from the play by Shakespeare (produced 1847). 1848.
- La Reine Margot*, with Auguste Maquet, from the novel by Dumas and Maquet (produced 1847). 1847.
- Le Chevalier de Maison-Rouge*, with Auguste Maquet, from the novel by Dumas and Maquet (produced 1847). 1847; as The Chevalier de Maison-Rouge, 1859.
- Catalina*, with Auguste Maquet (produced 1848). 1848.
- Monte-Cristo*, parts 1–2, with Auguste Maquet, from the novel Le Comte de Monte-Cristo by Dumas and Maquet (produced 1848). 2 vols., 1848; translated 1850.
- Le Cachemire vert*, with Eugène Nus (produced 1849). 1850.
- Le Comte Hermann* (produced 1849). 1849.
- La Jeunesse des mousquetaires*, with Auguste Maquet, from the novel Les Trois Mousquetaires by Dumas and Maquet (produced 1849). 1849; as The Three Musketeers, 1855; as The Musketeers, 1898.
- Le Chevalier d'Harmental*, with Auguste Maquet, from the novel by Dumas and Maquet (produced 1849). 1849.
- La Guerre des femmes*, with Auguste Maquet, from the novel by Dumas and Maquet (produced 1849). 1849.
- Le Connétable de Bourbon; ou, L'Italie au seizième siècle*, with Eugène Grangé and Xavier de Montépin (produced 1849). 1849.
- Le Testament de César*, with Jules Lacroix (produced 1849). 1849.
- Pauline*, with Eugène Grangé and Xavier de Montépin (produced 1850). 1850; as Pauline, translated and adapted 1855.
- Les Frères corses*, with Eugène Grangé and Xavier de Montépin, from the novel (produced 1850).
- Trois Entr'actes pour l'amour médecin* (produced 1850). 1850.
- La Chasse au Chastre*, from his own novel (produced 1850). 1850.
- Les Chevalier du Lansquenet*, with Eugène Grangé and Xavier de Montépin (produced 1850). 1850.
- Urbain Grandier*, with Auguste Maquet (produced 1850). 1850.
- Le Vingt-quatre février* (produced 1850). 1850.
- La Barrière de Clichy* (produced 1851). 1851.
- Le Vampire*, with Auguste Maquet (produced 1851). 1851.
- Le Comte de Morcerf; Villefort*, with Auguste Maquet, from the novel Le Comte de Monte-Cristo by Dumas and Maquet (produced 1851). 2 vols., 1851.
- La Conscience* (produced 1854). 1851.
- La Jeunesse de Louis XIV* (produced 1854). 1854; as Young King Louis, 1979.
- Le Marbrier*, with Paul Bocage (produced 1854). 1854.
- Romulus* (produced 1854). 1854; as Romulus, 1969.
- L'Orestie* (produced 1856). 1856.
- La Tour Saint-Jacques*, with Xavier de Montépin (produced 1856). 1856.
- Le Verrou de la reine* (produced 1856). In Théâtre complet, 1865.
- Samson*, music by E. Duprez (produced 1857). Parts published, 1856.
- L'Invitation à la valse*, with P. Bocage (produced 1857). 1857; as Childhood's Dreams, 1881.
- La Bacchante (Thais)*, with Adolphe de Leuven and A. de Beauplan, music by Eugène Gautier (produced 1858).
- L'Honneur est satisfait* (produced 1858). 1858.
- Les Forêtiers*, from his novel Catherine Blum (produced 1858). In Théâtre complet, 13, 1865.
- L'Envers d'une conspiration* (produced 1860). 1860.
- Le Roman d'Elvire*, with Adolphe de Leuven, music by Ambroise Thomas (produced 1860). 1860.
- Le Gentilhomme de la montagne*, from his novel El Saltéador (produced 1860). 1860.

- La Dame de Monsoreau*, with Auguste Maquet, from the novel by Dumas and Maquet (produced 1860). 1860.
- Le Prisonnier de la Bastille: Fin des Mousquetaires*, with Auguste Maquet, from the novel Le Vicomte de Bragelonne by Dumas and Maquet (produced 1861). 1861.
- La Veillée Allemande*, with Bernard Lopez (produced 1863).
- Les Mohicans de Paris*, from the novel by Dumas and Bocage (produced 1864). 1864.
- Gabriel Lambert*, with Amédée de Jallais, from the novel by Dumas (produced 1866; as Gabriel le Faussaire, produced 1868). 1866.
- Madame de Chamblay*, from his own novel (produced 1868). 1869.
- Les Blancs et les bleus*, from his own novel (produced 1869). 1874.
- Ivanhoë; Fiesque de Lavagna*. 1974.
- Other
- La Vendée et Madame*. 1833; as The Duchess of Berri in La Vendée, 1833.
- Gaule et France*. 1833.
- Impressions de voyage: En Suisse*. 5 vols., 1833–37; as Glacier Land, translated by Mrs. W.R. Kilds, 1852; as Swiss Travel, edited by C.H. Parry, 1890; as Adventures in Switzerland, 1960.
- Impressions de voyage: France*. 1835–37; as Pictures of Travel in the South of France, 1852; as Sketches in France, 1860(?).
- Quinze Jours à Sinäi*, with Adrien Dauzats. 2 vols., 1839, also published as Voyage au Orient, and Le Sinäi; as Impressions of Travel, in Egypt and Arabia Petraea, translated by “A Lady of New York,” 1839; as Travelling Sketches in Egypt and Sinai, translated by “A Biblical Student,” 1839.
- Napoléon*. 1840; as Napoleon, translated by John B. Larnier, 1894.
- Le Capitaine Pamphile* (for children). 1840; edited by A.R. Florian, 1912; as The Adventures of Captain Pamphile, translated by James Herald, 1845(?); also translated by Alfred Allinson, 1905; as Captain Pamphile, 1850.
- Les Stuarts*. 2 vols., 1840.
- Excursions sur les bords du Rhin*. 3 vols., 1841.
- Une année à Florence*. 2 vols., 1841.
- Midi de la France*. 3 vols., 1841.
- Le Speronare*. 4 vols., 1842; as The Speronara, translated by Katharine Prescott Wormeley, with Journeys with Dumas, 1902.
- Souvenirs de voyage en Italie*. 1841–42; comprises Une année à Florence and Le Speronare.
- Le Capitaine Aréna*. 2 vols., 1842; as Captain Marion, translated by F.W. Reed, 1949.
- Le Corricolo*. 4 vols., 1843; part translated as Sketches of Naples, by A. Roland, 1845.
- La Villa Palmieri*. 2 vols., 1843.
- Filles, lorettes, et courtisanes*. 1843.
- Louis XIV et son siècle*. 2 vols., 1844–45.
- Histoire d'un casse-noisette* (for children). 2 vols., 1845; as The Story of a Nutcracker, 1846; as The History of a Nutcracker, 1872; as Princess Pirlipatine and the Nutcracker, translated and continued by O. Eliphaz Keat, 1920; as The Nutcracker of Nuremberg, translated by Grace Gingras, 1930.
- La Bouillie de la Comtesse Berthe* (for children). 1845; edited by Cornell Price, 1889; as The Honey-Stew of the Countess Bertha, translated by Mrs. Cooke Taylor, 1846; as Good Lady Bertha's Honey Broth, 1846; as The Countess Bertha's Honey-Feast, translated by Harry A. Spurr, in Fairy Tales, 1904; as The Honey Feast, 1980.
- Italiens et Flamands*. 1845.
- Les Médicis*. 2 vols., 1845.
- De Paris à Cadix*. 5 vols., 1848; as Adventures in Spain, 1959.
- Le Véloce; ou, Tanger, Alger, et Tunis*. 4 vols., 1848–51; as Adventures in Algeria, 1959; as Tangier to Tunis, translated by A.E. Murch, 1959; as Tales of Algeria; or, Life Among the Arabs, translated by Richard Meade Bache, 1868.
- Louis XV et sa cour*. 4 vols., 1849.
- La Régence*. 2 vols., 1849.
- Montevideo; ou, Une nouvelle Troie*. 1850.
- Histoire de Louis XVI et la révolution*. 3 vols., 1850–51.
- Mémoires de Talma*. 3 vols., 1850.
- Le Drame de '93*. 7 vols., 1851–52.
- Les Drame de la mer*. 2 vols., 1852.
- Histoire de Louis-Philippe*. 1852; as The Last King; or, The New France, 1915.
- Mes Mémoires*. 22 vols., 1852–54; annotated edition, 5 vols., 1954–68; selections as Memoirs, translated by A.F. Davidson, 5 vols., 1891; as My Memoirs, translated by E.M. Waller, 6 vols., 1907–09.
- Une vie d'artiste*. 2 vols., 1854; as A Life's Ambition, translated by R.S. Garnett, with My Odyssey, 1924.
- La Jeunesse de Pierrot* (for children). 1854; as When Pierrot Was Young, translated by Douglas Munro, 1975.
- La Dernière Année de Marie Dorval*. 1855.
- Isabel Constant*. 2 vols., 1855.
- Les Grands Hommes en robe de chambre: Henri IV, Louis XIII, et Richelieu; César*. 12 vols., 1856–57.
- L'Homme aux contes* (for children). 1857.
- Le Lièvre de mon grand-père* (for children), with de Cherville. 1857; as The Phantom White Hare and Other Tales, translated by Douglas Munro, 1989.
- Marianna*. 1859.
- Les Baleiniers*, with Félix Meynard. 3 vols., 1860.
- Le Caucase; depuis Prométhée jusqu'à Chamyll*. 7 vols. in 3, 1859, also published as Impressions de Voyage: Le Caucase, 1865; as Adventures in Caucasia, translated by A.E. Murch, 1962.
- L'Art et les artistes contemporains au salon de 1859*. 1859.
- Contes pour les grands et les petits enfants* (for children). 2 vols., 1859.
- Causeries*. 2 vols., 1860.
- La Route de Varennes*. 1860; as Flight to Varennes, translated by A. Craig Bell, 1962.
- Les Garibaldiens: Révolution de Sicile et du Naples*. 1861; as The Garibaldians in Sicily, 1861; complete version, as On Board the "Emma": Adventures with Garibaldi's "Thousand" in Sicily, edited by R.S. Garnett, 1929.
- Bric-à-brac*. 2 vols., 1861.
- Les Morts vont vites*. 2 vols., 1861.
- Le Pape devant les évangiles*. 1861.
- I Borboni di Napoli*. 10 vols., 1862–64.
- Impressions de voyage: En Russie*, 4 vols. 1865, also published as De Paris à Astrakan, 1858(?); as Voyage en Russie, edited by Jacques Suffel, 1960; excerpts as Celebrated Crimes of the Russian Court, 1905; as Adventures in Czarist Russia, 1960; also translated by A.E. Murch, 1976.
- Bouts-rimés*. 1865.
- Étude sur "Hamlet" et sur William Shakespeare*. 1867.

Histoire de mes bêtes. 1868; as My Pets, translated by Alfred Allinson, 1909; as Adventures with My Pets, 1960.
Souvenirs dramatiques. 2 vols., 1868.
Le Grand Dictionnaire de cuisine. 1873; as Dictionary of Cuisine, translated 1958; selection as Dumas on Food: Selections From "Le Grand Dictionnaire de Cuisine," translated by Alan and Jane Davidson, 1978.
Propos d'art et de cuisine. 1877.
Fairy Tales, edited and translated by Harry A. Spurr. 1904.
The Dumas Fairy Tale Book, edited by Harry A. Spurr. 1924.
Lettres d'Alexandre Dumas à Mélanie Waldor, edited by Claude Schopp. 1982.
Sur Gérard de Nerval: Nouveaux mémoires. 1990.
 Editor, Un pays inconnu. 1845.
 Editor, Pierre précieuse, by Saphir. 1854.
 Editor, L'Arabie heureuse. 1855.
 Editor, Le Journal de Madame Giovanni. 4 vols., 1856; as The Journal of Madame Giovanni, translated by Marguerite E. Wilbur, 1944.
 Editor, Pèlerinage de Hadji-abd-el-Hamid-Bey (à la Mecque). 6 vols., 1856–57.
 Editor, Les Baleiniers, by Felix Maynard. 1861; as The Whalers, translated by F.W. Reed, 1937.
 Translator, Mémoires de Garibaldi. 2 vols., 1860; revised edition, 5 vols., 1860–61; 3 vols., 1861; as Garibaldi: An Autobiography, 1860; revised edition, as The Memoirs of Garibaldi, translated by R.S. Garnett, 1931.

*

Bibliography: A Bibliography of Alexandre Dumas Père by F.W. Reed, 1933; Dumas père: Works Published in French. Works Translated into English by Douglas Munro, 2 vols., 1978–81; Alexandre Dumas père: A Secondary Bibliography of French and English Sources to 1983: With Appendices by Douglas Munro, 1985.

Critical Studies: The Life and Writings of Alexandre Dumas by H.A. Spurr, 1929; Alexandre Dumas père by Richard S. Stowe, 1976; The King of Romance: A Portrait of Alexandre Dumas by F.W.J. Hemmings, 1979; Alexandre Dumas by Michael Ross, 1981; "Missing" Works of Alexandre Dumas Père by Douglas Munro, 1983; Notes on Dumas' "Count of Monte Cristo" by Arnie Jacobson, 1985; Alexandre Dumas: Genius of Life by Claude Schopp, translated by A.J. Koch, 1988; Humeurs et humour d'Alexandre Dumas by Claude Sylvain, 1993; Alexandre Dumas: Le Vicomte de Bragelonne (The Man in the Iron Mask): A Critical Study by A. Craig Bell, 1995.

* * *

Victor Hugo said: "No popularity of this century has surpassed that of Alexandre Dumas. The name of Alexandre Dumas is more than French . . . it is universal. Alexandre Dumas seduces, fascinates, interests, amuses, teaches." Dumas was too large in scope, too dynamic, too overpowering to be judged merely by the 40 years in which he dominated every field of writing in France.

Victorien Sardou called Dumas the greatest theatrical craftsman of the century. From 1829 until 1868 he had at least one play on the boards each year, often two or three, and in 1849, five. He inaugurated the Romantic movement with his play Henri III et sa cour [Henry III and His Court] in 1829. His Antony, in 1831, was the first modern Romantic play, and imitations are in the hundreds. An 1833 trip to Switzerland started Dumas on another type of writing—travel impressions, but a new kind of travelogue that was as interesting as a novel.

In 1844, his novel Les Trois Mousquetaires (The Three Musketeers) was the literary sensation of the century. Within ten years he had covered most of the history of France in his novels, and also turned out other gems such as Le Comte de Monte-Cristo (The Count of Monte Cristo), La Tulipe noire (The Black Tulip), and Les Frères corses (The Corsican Brothers). He also wrote purely historical works such as Gaule et France, Louis XIV et son siècle, Napoléon (Napoleon), and many others, probably the least boring history books ever written.

Dumas had collaborators on many of his novels, but their work consisted of research and planning; Dumas rewrote everything in his own hand. Critics have been amazed at his enormous output, but this was a man who could entertain a group of people for hours with facts and anecdotes drawn from the deep well of his memory; this was a man who could write 14 hours a day with scarcely a single erasure or reference. Whatever he heard or read remained in his fertile brain—history, mythology, swordsmanship, geography, names, dates. At a gathering, he was describing the battle of Waterloo in great detail when he was interrupted by a pompous general who said: "But it wasn't like that; I was there!" "I'm sorry, general," replied Dumas, "but you were not paying attention to what was going on." Dumas often had an entire novel or play in his head before he ever put it on paper. One of his finest plays, Mademoiselle de Belle-Isle (The Lady of Belle Isle), which had 500 performances, was recited for the committee of the Comédie-Française, and was accepted by acclamation before one word of it had ever been written.

Dumas has had his detractors, mostly writers who were jealous of his great popularity. He was often slighted in histories of French literature. His son, Alexandre Dumas fils, became a playwright, and for a decade or more almost eclipsed his father. But time works in favour of Dumas père. Except for Camille, his son's plays are virtually forgotten, even in France, but the father's works are being reprinted constantly, and more than 300 films have been made from his novels, his plays, and his life.

Dumas père was a master storyteller. His style, as Robert Louis Stevenson said, "is light as a whipped trifle, strong as silk." Dumas will survive. Two hundred years from now, you can be sure that at any given moment, someone, in some far-off place, will be reading The Three Musketeers or The Count Of Monte Cristo in one of the dozens of languages into which Dumas has been translated.

—Barnett Shaw

See the essay on The Three Musketeers.

DURANTI, Francesca

Born: Maria Francesca Rossi in Genova, Italy, 2 January 1935. Education: Law degree, University of Pisa, 1960. Family: Married 1) Enrico Magnani, 1956 (divorced), one son; 2) Massimo Duranti, early 1970s (divorced), one daughter. Career: Writer since early 1970s; worked as a translator and editor, 1980–84. Lives in Milan, Italy. Member: PEN. Awards: Premio Martinafraanca, 1984, Premocitta Di Milano, 1984, Bagutta prize for best Italian novel of the year 1985, all for La casa sul lago della luna; Premio Basilicate, 1988, Premio Hemingway, 1988, Premio Campiello, 1989, all for Effetti personali.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

La Bambina. 1976.

Piazza mia bella piazza. 1978.

La casa sul lago della luna. 1984; as The House on Moon Lake, translated by Stephen Sartarelli, 1986.

Lieto fine. 1987; as Happy Ending, translated by Anna Paola Cancogni, 1991.

Effetti Personali. 1988, as Personal Effects, translated by Stephen Sartarelli, 1993.

Ultima stesura. 1991.

Progetto Burlamacchi. 1994.

Sogni mancini. 1996; as Left-Handed Dreams, translated by the author, 2000.

Il commune senso delle proporzioni: piccolo thriller da viaggio. 2000.

Other

Translator, Lunedì o martedì: tutti i racconti, by Virginia Woolf. 1980.

*

Critical Studies: “Writing in a Changing World: An Interview With Francesca Duranti” by Sharon Wood, in The Italianist, vol. 12, 1992; “Francesca Duranti: Reflections and Inventions” by S.W. Vinall, in The New Italian Novel, edited by Zygmunt G. Baranski and Lino Pertile, 1993; “Writing an Identity: The Case of Francesca Duranti” by Rita Wilson, in Studi d’Italianistica nell’Africa Australe, vol. 9, No. 2, 1996; “Bio-fictive Conversations and the Uncentred Woman in Francesca Duranti’s Novels” by Janice Kozma, in The Italianist, vol. 16; “Francesca Duranti and Metafiction” by Shirley Smith, in Quaderni d’Italianistica, vol. 18, No.1, Spring 1997; “The Language of Tolerance: Dialogism and Orality in Francesca Duranti’s Sogni Mancini” by Marina Spunta, in MLN, vol. 115, No. 1, January 2000.

* * *

Francesca Duranti’s life spans from the Nazi occupation of Italy during World War II to the post-modern computer age of the twenty-first century. Her novels of identity and experience have made her one of Italy’s most popular and important modern novelists. Duranti’s work has been translated into English, Spanish, Portuguese, Dutch, Finnish, Swedish, and Hebrew among other languages, proving that her explorations of modern society speak to readers of many different cultures. While her work always has a strong autobiographical base, Duranti reaches out from that base to delve into such age-old artistic themes as the source of identity and the complex relationship of fiction and reality.

Raised in an upper-class family, Duranti frequently uses her novels to examine the unsatisfying lives of the rich and the struggle of bourgeois intellectuals to make a place for themselves in society and in their own lives. Her first novel, acclaimed by Italian readers, was a largely autobiographical tale of childhood titled La Bambina [The Child]. The novel tells the story of the earliest years of Francesca Rossi (Duranti’s own maiden name) as she begins her life during the last years of World War I. Duranti makes creative use of language to approximate the way a child’s thoughts might develop as she learns to understand the new, fascinating, and often terrifying world in which she finds herself.

Just as La Bambina explores the developing identity of a child, Duranti’s later novels also focus on the continuing development of identity. As her protagonists become adults, their identities become many-layered as their experiences increase and their philosophical self-examination deepens. In fact, most of her novels are explorations of the trappings of identity and what happens to the self when those trappings are stripped away.

In Piazza, mia bella piazza [My Town Square, My Beautiful Square], Duranti’s second novel, the protagonist is Paola, a young married woman. The book tells the story of Paola’s struggle to take herself seriously as a writer. To do this, she must leave her husband, who is threatened by his wife’s consuming work and strong sense of independence. Pulling herself free from the ties of marriage shakes Paola’s very sense of self and she feels that, “to be without a man to care for her seemed like having lost her papers in a foreign and hostile country.” She not only has to rebuild a life on her own, but also reconstruct an identity separate from her role as a wife. Though Piazza is clearly a forerunner to Duranti’s later, more developed, works, she herself considers it an inferior novel and has refused to allow it to be reprinted.

With La casa sul lago della luna (The House on Moon Lake), Duranti received her first major popular and critical success. The award-winning novel was on Italian bestseller lists for weeks and was translated into seventeen languages. In The House on Moon Lake, Duranti continues to examine the quest for identity in the face of loss and failure. However, it is here she begins to reveal herself as a true postmodern writer, also fascinated by the relationship of reality to art and creation to fact.

The House on Moon Lake is actually a novel within a novel, and its format accentuates Duranti’s interest in the multi-layered personality and the multi-leveled experience. The protagonist, Fabrizio (a name quite close to Francesca), is the depressed, embittered product of a wealthy family that has lost its position and money. He works in a plodding, hopeless way as a translator, a sort of transmitter for other people’s experiences. In the course of his work, he stumbles upon an unknown Austrian writer and becomes the first to translate the author’s novel, Das Haus am Mondsee, or The House on Moon Lake.

Fabrizio’s success with his Italian translation of the novel leads him to write a biography of the little-known Austrian novelist. When he cannot find information about the end of the writer’s life, he invents a life for him, complete with a dynamic romance. Readers not only accept the fictitious biography, but they begin to participate in the creation of the false reality, contacting Fabrizio to say that they knew the Austrian novelist’s beautiful love, Maria. The novel ends with Fabrizio moving to Moon Lake to live out his life with a ghostly, mysterious woman who claims to be the fictional Maria’s granddaughter. Having risked everything to make an identity, “a name for himself,” Fabrizio is trapped in the end, living out someone else’s identity.

The House on Moon Lake represents a change in style and tone from Duranti’s earlier works. With a sure wit and generous humor, Duranti began to craft literary thrillers, psychological detective novels where the mystery is internal. The task of the detective/protagonist is to uncover the roots of identity and experience and how they affect each other. In some novels, like Progetto Burlamacchi [The Burlamacchi Project], experience and self are explored in the context of Italian culture, society, and politics. In others, like Effetti personali (Personal Effects), the context is more deeply personal, as a young woman rediscovers her identity after the desertion of her husband leaves her feeling empty. She succeeds, completing the journey started in Piazza, mia bella piazza.

Sogni mancini (Left-Handed Dreams) joins both the construction of the self and the search for cultural identity. The heroine of the novel, Martina, is a single Italian woman living and working as a college professor in New York. She experiences the dissolution of her childhood world with the death of her mother, and the loss of cultural assumptions living so far from the world where she grew up. At the same time, she is obsessed with a machine that helps her to remember and analyze her dreams. Her dreams convince her that she was born left-handed and forced to learn to use her right hand. This discovery shakes her on the deepest level, for who would she be if she had grown up as her left-handed self?

This is the crux of the mystery to Duranti, then. What is the self, and what would that self be if the outward things that shaped it had been different? In Personal Effects, she writes, "I no longer knew where to start from in order to say I." This is Duranti's chief goal, and what makes her such an important writer for the ever-changing, fast-paced twenty-first century: to constantly shift the perspective of the reader in order to demonstrate just what a complex thing it is to know where to start from to say I.

—Tina Gianoulis

DURAS, Marguerite

Born: Marguerite Donnadiou in Gia Dinh, near Saigon, French Indochina (now Vietnam), 4 April 1914. Education: Educated at Lycée de Saigon, baccalauréat 1931; the Sorbonne, Paris, 1933–34, degree in law and political science, 1935. Family: Married Robert Antelme in 1939 (divorced 1946); had one son by Dionys Mascolo. Career: Moved to France, 1932. Secretary, Ministry of Colonies, Paris, 1935–41; freelance writer, after 1943; journalist, Observateur; also film writer and director. Awards: Cocteau prize, 1954/55; Cannes Film Festival Palme d'Or, with Gérard Jarot, 1962; Ibsen prize, 1970; Cannes Film Festival special prize, 1975; Académie française grand prize for theatre, 1983; Goncourt prize, 1984; Ritz Paris Hemingway prize, 1986. Member: French Communist Party, 1940s, expelled 1950. Died: 3 March 1996.

PUBLICATIONS

Fiction

Les Impudents. 1943.

La Vie tranquille. 1944.

Un Barrage contre le Pacifique. 1950; as The Sea Wall, translated by Herma Briffault, 1952; as A Sea of Troubles, translated by Antonia

White, 1953; as A Dam Against an Ocean, translated by Sofka Skipworth, 1966.

Le Marin de Gibraltar. 1952; as The Sailor from Gibraltar, translated by Barbara Bray, 1966.

Les Petits Chevaux de Tarquinia. 1953; as The Little Horses of Tarquinia, translated by Peter DuBerg, 1960.

Des journées entières dans les arbres (stories). 1954; as Whole Days in the Trees and Other Stories, translated by Anita Barrows, 1983.

Le Square. 1955; as The Square, translated by Sonia Pitt-Rivers and Irina Morduch, 1959, also in Four Novels, 1965, and in Three Novels, 1977.

Moderato cantabile. 1958; as Moderato Cantabile, translated by Richard Seaver, 1960, also in Four Novels, 1965.

Dix heures et demi du soir en été. 1960; as Ten-Thirty on a Summer Night, translated by Anne Borchardt, 1962, also in Four Novels, 1965, and in Three Novels, 1977.

L'Après-midi de Monsieur Andesmas. 1962; as The Afternoon of Monsieur Andesmas, translated by Anne Borchardt, with The Rivers and Forests, 1964, also in Four Novels, 1965; published separately, 1968.

Le Ravissement de Lol V. Stein. 1964; as The Ravishing of Lol V. Stein, translated by Richard Seaver, 1966; as The Rapture of Lol V. Stein, translated by Eileen Ellenbogen, 1967.

Four Novels (includes The Square; Moderato Cantabile; Ten-Thirty on a Summer Night; The Afternoon of Monsieur Andesmas), translated by Sonia Pitt-Rivers, Irina Morduch, Richard Seaver, and Anne Borchardt. 1965.

Le Vice-Consul. 1966; as The Vice-Consul, translated by Eileen Ellenbogen, 1968.

L'Amante anglaise. 1967; as L'Amante Anglaise, translated by Barbara Bray, 1968.

Détruire, dit-elle. 1969; as Destroy, She Said, translated by Barbara Bray, 1970; as Destroy. . ., translated by Bray, 1970.

Abahn Sabana David. 1970.

L'Amour. 1971.

Ah! Ernesto, with Bernard Bonhomme. 1971.

La Maladie de la mort. 1983; as The Malady of Death, translated by Barbara Bray, 1986.

L'Amant. 1984; as The Lover, translated by Barbara Bray, 1985.

Les Yeux bleus cheveux noirs. 1986; as Blue Eyes, Black Hair, translated by Barbara Bray, 1989.

Emily L. 1987; as Emily L., translated by Barbara Bray, 1989.

La Pluie d'été. 1990; as Summer Rain, translated by Barbara Bray, 1992.

La Vie tranquille (selection). 1990.

L'Amant de la Chine du Nord. 1991; as The North China Lover, translated by Leigh Hafrey, 1992.

Yann Andrea Steiner. 1993; as Yann Andrea Steiner, translated by Barbara Bray, 1994.

Two by Duras, translated by Alberto Manguel. 1993.

Plays and Texts for Voices

Le Square, with Claude Martin, from her own novel (produced 1957; revised version produced 1965). In Théâtre I, 1965; as The Square, translated by Barbara Bray and Sonia Orwell, in Three Plays, 1967.

Hiroshima mon amour (screenplay). 1960; as Hiroshima mon amour, translated by Richard Seaver, 1961, also with Une aussi longue absence, 1966.

Les Viaducs de la Seine-et-oise (produced 1960). 1960; as The Viaducts of the Seine-et-oise, translated by Barbara Bray, in Three Plays, 1967.

Une aussi longue absence (screenplay), with Gérard Jarlot. 1961; as Une Aussi Longue Absence, translated by Barbara Wright, with Hiroshima Mon Amour, 1966.

Les Papiers d'Aspern, with Robert Antelme, from the play The Aspern Papers by Michael Redgrave based on the story by Henry James (produced 1961). 1970.

Miracle en Alabama, with Gérard Jarlot, from a play by William Gibson (produced 1961). With L'Homme qui se taisait, by Pierre Gaillot, 1962.

La Bête dans la jungle, with James Lord, from a story by Henry James (produced 1962).

Théâtre I (includes Les Eaux et forêts; Le Square; La Musica). 1965.

Les Eaux et forêts (produced 1965). In Théâtre I, 1965; as The Rivers and Forests, translated by Barbara Bray, with The Afternoon of Monsieur Andesmas, 1964.

La Musica (produced 1965). In Théâtre I, 1965; as La Musica, translated by Barbara Bray, in Suzanna Andler, La Musica and L'Amante Anglaise, 1975, also in Four Plays, 1992.

Des journées entières dans les arbres (produced 1965). In Théâtre II, 1968; as Days in the Trees, translated by Sonia Oswell and Barbara Bray, 1966.

Three Plays (includes Days in the Trees; The Square; The Viaducts of Seine-et-Oise). 1967.

Théâtre II (includes Suzanna Andler; Yes, peut-être; Le Shaga; Des journées entières dans les arbres; Un Homme est venu me voir). 1968.

Le Shaga (produced 1968). In Théâtre II, 1968.

Suzanna Andler (produced 1969). In Théâtre II, 1968; as Suzanna Andler, translated by Barbara Bray in Suzanna Andler, La Musica and L'Amante Anglaise, 1975.

L'Amante anglaise, from her own novel (produced 1969). 1968; as A Place without Doors, translated by Barbara Bray, in Suzanna Andler, La Musica and L'Amante anglaise, 1975.

Yes, peut-être (produced 1968). In Théâtre II, 1968.

La Danse de mort, d'après August Strindberg (produced 1970). In Théâtre III, 1984.

Nathalie Granger; La Femme du Gange (screenplays). 1973.

India Song (in English, produced 1993). 1973; as India Song, translated by Barbara Bray, 1976; with Eden Cinema (bilingual edition), 1988, also in Four Plays, 1992.

Home (in French), from the play by David Storey. 1973. Suzanna Andler, La Musica and L'Amante Anglaise. 1975.

L'Éden Cinéma (produced 1977). 1977; as Eden Cinema, translated by Barbara Bray, with India Song (bilingual edition), 1988; translated by Bray, in Four Plays, 1992.

Le Camion (screenplay). 1977.

Le Navire Night, Césarée, Les Mains négatives, Aurélia Steiner (screenplays). 1979.

Véra Baxter; ou, Les Plages de l'Atlantique (screenplay). 1980; translated as Vera Baxter; or, the Atlantic Beaches, in Drama Contemporary: France, edited by Philippa Wehle, 1988.

L'Homme assis dans le couloir. 1980; as The Seated Man in the Passage, translated by Mary Lydon, in Contemporary Literature 24, 1983.

Agatha (screenplay). 1981.

L'Homme Atlantique (screenplay). 1982.

Savannah Bay (produced 1984). 1982; revised edition, 1983; as Savannah Bay, translated by Barbara Bray, in Four Plays, 1992.

Théâtre III (includes La Bête dans la jungle, d'après Henry James, with James Lord; Les Papiers d'Aspern, d'après Henry James, with Robert Antelme; La Danse de mort, d'après August Strindberg). 1984.

La Musica deuxième (produced 1985). 1985.

Four Plays (includes La Musica; India Song; Eden Cinema; Savannah Bay), translated by Barbara Bray. 1992.

Screenplays: Hiroshima mon amour, 1960; Moderato cantabile, with Gérard Jarlot and Peter Brook, 1960; Une aussi longue absence (The Long Absence), with Gérard Jarlot, 1961; 10.30 P.M. Summer, with Jules Dassin, 1966; La Musica, 1966; Les Rideaux blancs, 1966; Détruire, dit-elle (Destroy, She Said), 1969; Jaune le soleil, 1971; Nathalie Granger, 1972; La ragazza di Passaggio/La Femme du Gange, 1973; Ce que savait Morgan, with others, 1974; India Song, 1975; Des journées entières dans les arbres, 1976; Son nom de Venises dans Calcutta désert, 1976; Baxter-Véra Baxter, 1976; Le Camion, 1977; Le Navire Night, 1978; Césarée; Les Mains négatives; Aurélia Steiner; L'Homme assis dans le couloir, 1980; Agatha et les lectures illimitées, 1981; L'Homme Atlantique, 1981; Dialogue de Rome, 1982; Les Enfants, 1985.

Television Play: Sans merveille, with Gérard Jarlot, 1964.

Other

Les Parleuses (interviews), with Xavière Gauthier. 1974; as Woman to Woman, translated by Katherine Jensen, 1987.

Étude sur l'oeuvre littéraire, théâtrale, et cinématographique de Marguerite Duras, with Jacques Lacan and Maurice Blanchot. 1975.

Territoires du féminin, with Marcelle Marini. 1977.

Les Lieux de Marguerite Duras (interview), with Michelle Porte. 1978.

L'Été 80. 1980.

Les Yeux ouverts. In Cahiers du Cinema (special Duras issue), 312–313, June 1980.

Outside: Papiers d'un jour. 1981; revised edition, 1984; as Outside: Selected Writings, translated by Arthur Goldhammer, 1986.

Marguerite Duras à Montréal (interviews and lectures), edited by Suzanne Lamy and André Roy. 1981.

La Douleur. 1985; as La Douleur, translated by Barbara Bray, 1986; as The War, translated by Bray, 1986.

La Pute de la côte normande. 1986.

La Vie matérielle: Marguerite Duras parle à Jérôme Beaujour. 1987; as Practicalities: Marguerite Duras Speaks to Jérôme Beaujour, translated by Barbara Bray, 1990.

Les Yeux verts. 1987; as Green Eyes, translated by Carol Barko, 1990.

Marguerite Duras (interview). 1987.

Écrire (autobiography). 1993; as Writing, translated by Mark Polizzotti, 1998.

Yves Saint Laurent and Fashion Photography, with an essay by Marguerite Duras. 1998.

Translator, La Mouette, by Anton Chekhov. 1985.

*

Critical Studies: Marguerite Duras by Alfred Cismaru, 1971; Marguerite Duras by François Barat and Joel Farges, 1975; Marguerite

Duras: Moderato cantabile by David Coward, 1981; Alienation and Absence in the Novels of Marguerite Duras by Carol J. Murphy, 1982; Marguerite Duras by Micheline Tison-Braun, 1985; Marguerite Duras by Jean Pierrot, 1986; "Space Invasions: Voice-Overs in Works by Samuel Beckett and Marguerite Duras" by Mary K. Martin, in The Theatrical Space edited by James Redmond, 1987; Marguerite Duras: Writing on the Body by Sharon Willis, 1987; Remains to Be Seen: Essays on Marguerite Duras edited by Sanford Ames, 1988; L'Autre Scène: Le Théâtre de Marguerite Duras by Liliane Papin, 1988; Marguerite Duras edited by Ilma Rakusa, 1988; The Other Woman: Femininity in the Work of Marguerite Duras by Trista Selous, 1988; "Women Writing Across Purpose: The Theater of Marguerite Duras and Nathalie Sarraute" by Janice B. Gross, in Modern Drama, 32, 1989; Marguerite Duras: Fascinating Vision and Narrative Cure by Deborah N. Glassman, 1991; Forgetting and Marguerite Duras by Carol Hofmann, 1991; Écriture féminine et violence: Une étude de Marguerite Duras by Janine Ricouart, 1991; Du rythme au sens: Une lecture de "L'Amour" de Marguerite Duras by Claire Cerasi, 1992; Welcome Unreason: A Study of "Madness" in the Novels of Marguerite Duras by Raynelle Udriš, 1992; Women and Discourse in the Fiction of Marguerite Duras: Love, Legends, Language by Susan D. Cohen, 1993; Marguerite Duras: Apocalyptic Desires by Leslie Hill, 1993; Le Ravissement de Lol V. Stein and L'Amant by Renate Gunther, 1994; Marguerite Duras Revisited by Marilyn R. Schuster, 1993; Beyond the Book: Marguerite Duras: Infans by Mechthild Cranston, 1996; The Erotics of Passage: Pleasure, Politics, and Form in the Later Work of Marguerite Duras by James S. Williams, 1997; Marguerite Duras: A Bio-bibliography by Robert Harvey and Hélène Volat, 1997; Art and Politics in Duras' India Cycle by Lucy Stone McNeece, 1997; Critical Essays on Marguerite Duras, edited by Bettina L. Knapp, 1998; Marguerite Duras: A Life by Laure Adler, translated by Anne-Marie Glasheen, 2000; Revisioning Duras: Film, Race, Sex, edited by James S. Williams, 2000; Duras, Writing, and the Ethical: Making the Broken Whole by Martin Crowley, 2000; Postcolonial Duras: Cultural Memory in Postwar France by Jane Bradley Winston, 2001.

* * *

Marguerite Duras's early narratives present young women struggling with their own identity within the traditional aesthetic of third-person (Les Impudents [The Shameless]) and first-person (François in La Vie tranquille [The Quiet Life]) narrative perspectives. In both novels women are trying to put their lives together by struggling for independence from their families. Men appear to offer redemptive possibilities through marriage and fatherhood. However, promises are broken, and the men are not there when the women need them. This conflict between men and women who are tied by family or impossible love affairs recurs throughout Duras's work and engenders pain and suffering in the women's and sometimes the men's lives.

Le Square (The Square) shows the mature stage of Duras's narrative style. An encounter and a separation between a man and a woman in a public square are examined through their dialogue. Duras's allusive style, that reveals compassion towards the characters, according to Frank Towne, is henceforward characteristic of her fiction, plays, and films. Many of her narrators are obsessed with drinking as a means of forgetting their problems. The zigzag narrative style, as Carol Murphy describes Duras's mature writing, is evocative of characters who wander aimlessly through life, attracted to other erotically, passionately, and violently while trying to piece together their own past and present.

Duras's filmmaking career began at about the same time as her adoption of the zigzag style. The plots and techniques of her motion pictures, her plays, and her novels are intertwined. Her script for Alain Resnais's Hiroshima mon amour contains many references to the intersecting influences of forgetting and remembering in the narrative process. The meeting of the Orient and the Occident, in this case a French actress and a Japanese businessman, is paradigmatic of her work. Un Barrage contre le Pacifique (A Sea of Troubles), Le Vice-Consul (The Vice-Consul), India Song, L'Amant (The Lover), Emily L., and L'Amant de la Chine du Nord (The North China Lover) explore the impossible meeting and unavoidable separation not only of men and women but also of other profoundly different orientations, such as the young and old (L'Après-midi de Monsieur Andesmas [The Afternoon of Monsieur Andesmas]), mothers and daughters, husbands and wives (La Douleur [The War]), brothers and sisters (Agatha), as well as those between a prostitute and a homosexual in Les Yeux bleus cheveux noirs (Blue Eyes, Black Hair) and between races (The Lover; The North China Lover).

Mutilation and fragmentation are connected activities of the memory and narration in the numerous stories about women as lovers and as mothers. The film techniques of découpage and frame-sequencing promote this sense of disconnectedness among characters in the stories. Insecure mothers continue their cycle of insecurity by threatening their daughters (François) with prearranged marriages (Maud in Les Impudents), and abandonment (the beggar woman in The Vice-Consul), resulting in unwanted pregnancies (Maud), wandering (Anne in Moderato cantabile) and general schizophrenia (Lol in Le Ravissement de Lol V. Stein [The Ravishing of Lol V. Stein]). Duras's women become invigorated by rejection to desire what they do not have. The story of Lol V. Stein, a saga known as the India Cycle, still continues in Duras's work as if to signify that the violence done in women's lives cannot be encompassed and closed.

The slow repeating cycle of women's insecurity begins with abandonment (Lol V. Stein) and leads to crimes such as murder (the husband in the café in Moderato cantabile), self-immolation (Claire's murder of her twin self, Marie-Thérèse, in L'Amante anglaise, and incest (Joseph and Suzanne in A Sea of Troubles). Alissa's prophetic word "destroy" in Détruire, dit-elle (Destroy, She Said), becomes the rallying cry for women who want to be in control of their lives. While the sea threatens the livelihood of the family in A Sea of Troubles and devours both brother and sister in Agatha, it is the sea-like rhythm of Duras's narratives, oscillating between silence and disconnected words, forgetting and remembering, that yearns for the impossible desire and produces an incantation to the tension between those who are powerful and those who are denied. This incantation is often lost in the haze of music (Indiana's Song in The Vice-Consul; Diabelli's sonata in Moderato cantabile).

These themes could be Freudian or Lacanian, but most of all they represent women in the trauma of searching for their identities and trying to constitute their stories from their past and towards their imaginary future. The strategic use of silence gives the readers and/or spectators a space in which to put together lives that are fragmented and typically destroyed by past experiences. Duras herself refuses an intellectual or essentialist reading of her work that allows a feminist or any other community-orientated meaning. Instead, the prototypical character of Anne (Anna in Le Marin de Gibraltar [The Sailor from Gibraltar]; Anne-Marie Stretter in The Vice-Consul, Lol V. Stein and India Song; Anne Desbaresdes in Moderato cantabile) wanders, as if in mourning, object of a desire that is constantly frustrated and misdirected. Anne's own desire returns in attempts to retell her story, many times embedded with lies and half-truths. One can never "get it right." The pleasure is in the piecing together of a dizzying, hazy state of imagination.

—Roland A. Champagne

DÜRRENMATT, Friedrich

Born: Konolfingen, near Berne, Switzerland, 5 January 1921. Education: Educated at Grosshöchstetten school; Freies Gymnasium and Humboldtianum, Bern; University of Zurich, one term; University of Bern, 1941–45. Family: Married 1) Lotti Geissler in 1946 (died 1983), one son and two daughters; 2) Charlotte Kerr in 1984. Career: Drama critic, Die Weltwoche, Zurich, 1951–53; co-director, Basle Theatres, 1968–69; co-owner, Zürcher Sonntags-Journal, 1969–71; writer-in-residence, University of Southern California, Los Angeles, 1981; travelled to the USSR, 1964 and 1967, Israel, 1974, Greece and South America, 1983–84, and to Egypt, 1985, and the United States. Also television director. Awards: City of Berne prize, 1954, 1979; Radio Play prize (Berlin), 1957; Italia prize, for radio play, 1958; Schiller prize (Mannheim), 1959; New York Drama Critics Circle award, 1959; Schiller prize (Switzerland), 1960; Grillparzer prize, 1968; Kanton Berne prize, 1969; Welsh Arts Council International Writers prize, 1976; Buber-Rosenzweig medal, 1977; Zuckmayer medal, 1984; Austrian State prize, 1984; Bavarian literature prize, 1985; Büchner prize, 1986; Schiller prize (Stuttgart), 1986; Ernst Robert Curtis prize, for essays, 1989. Honorary doctorate: Temple University, Philadelphia, 1969; Hebrew University, Jerusalem, 1977; University of Nice, 1977; University of Neuchâtel, 1981; University of Zurich, 1983. Honorary Fellow, Modern Language Association (United States). Died: 14 December 1990.

PUBLICATIONS

Plays

Es steht geschrieben (produced 1947). 1947; revised version, as Die Wiedertäufer (produced 1967), 1969.
Der Blinde (produced 1948). 1960; revised edition, 1965.
Romulus der Grosse (produced 1949). 1956; revised version (produced 1957), 1958; translated as Romulus, 1962; as Romulus the Great, translated by Gerhard Nellhaus, in Four Plays, 1964.
Die Ehe des Herrn Mississippi (produced 1952). 1952; revised version, 1957; film version, 1961; as The Marriage of Mr. Mississippi, translated by Michael Bullock, in Four Plays, 1964.
Ein Engel kommt nach Babylon (produced 1953). 1954; revised version (produced 1957), 1958; as An Angel Comes to Babylon, translated by William McElwee, in Four Plays, 1964.
Der Besuch der alten Dame (produced 1956). 1956; film version, 1963; as The Visit, translated by Maurice Valency, 1958; also translated by Patrick Bowles, 1962.

Nächtliches Gespräch mit einem verachteten Menschen (radio play). 1957; as Conversation at Night with a Despised Character, n.d.
Komödien I–III. 3 vols., 1957–70.
Das Unternehmen der Wega (radio play). 1958.
Frank V, music by Paul Burkhard (produced 1959). 1960.
Der Prozess um des Esels Schatten (radio play). 1959.
Stranitzky und der Nationalheld (radio play). 1959.
Abendstunde im Spätherbst (radio play; also produced on stage 1959). 1959; as Episode on an Autumn Evening, translated by Myron B. Gubitz, 1959; as Incident at Twilight, in Postwar German Theatre, edited by Michael Benedikt and George E. Wellwarth, 1968.
Der Doppelgänger (radio play). 1960.
Herkules und der Stall des Augias (radio play; also produced on stage 1963). 1960; translated as Hercules and the Augean Stables, n.d.
Die Panne, from his own novel (radio play; also televised 1957; produced on stage 1979). 1961; revised version, 1979.
Gesammelte Hörspiele (includes Abendstunde im Spätherbst; Der Doppelgänger; Herkules und der Stall des Augias; Nächtliches Gespräch mit einem verachteten Menschen; Die Panne; Der Prozess um des Esels Schatten; Stranitzky und der Nationalheld; Das Unternehmen der Wega). 1961.
Die Physiker (produced 1962). 1962; television version, 1963; as The Physicists, adapted by Maurice Valency, 1958; translated by James Kirkup, 1963.
Four Plays 1957–62 (includes Romulus the Great; The Marriage of Mr. Mississippi; An Angel Comes to Babylon; The Physicists), translated by Gerhard Nellhaus and others. 1964.
Der Meteor (produced 1966). 1966; as The Meteor, translated by James Kirkup, 1973.
König Johann, from the play by Shakespeare (produced 1968). 1968.
Play Strindberg: Totentanz nach August Strindberg (produced 1969). 1969; as Play Strindberg: The Dance of Death, translated by James Kirkup, 1972.
Titus Andronicus, from the play by Shakespeare (produced 1970). 1970.
Porträt eines Planeten (produced 1970; revised version, produced 1971). 1970.
Urfaust, from the play by Goethe (produced 1970). 1980.
Woyzeck, from the play by Büchner (produced 1972). 1980.
Der Mitmacher (produced 1973). 1973; enlarged edition, Der Mitmacher-Ein Komplex (includes notes, essays, narratives), 1976.
Die Frist (produced 1977). 1977.
Achterloo (produced 1983). 1984.
Achterloo IV (produced 1988).
Screenplays: Es geschah am hellichten Tag (It Happened in Broad Daylight), 1960; Die Ehe des Herrn Mississippi, 1961; Der Besuch der alten Dame, 1963.
Radio Plays: Der Prozess um des Esels Schatten, 1951; Stranitzky und der Nationalheld, 1952; Nächtliches Gespräch mit einem verachteten Mensch, 1952; Herkules und der Stall des Augias, 1954; Das Unternehmen der Wega, 1954; Die Panne, 1956; Abendstunde im Spätherbst, 1958; Der Doppelgänger, 1961.
Fiction
Pilatus. 1949.
Der Nihilist. 1950; reprinted as Die Falle.

- Der Richter und sein Henker*. 1952; as The Judge and His Hangman, translated by Cyrus Brooks, 1954.
- Die Stadt: Prose 1–4*. 1952.
- Das Bild des Sisyphos*. 1952.
- Der Verdacht*. 1953; as The Quarry, translated by Eva H. Morreale, 1961.
- Griechen sucht Griechin*. 1955; as Once a Greek. . ., translated by Richard and Clara Winston, 1965.
- Das Versprechen: Requiem auf den Kriminalroman*. 1958; as The Pledge, translated by Richard and Clara Winston, 1959.
- Die Panne: Eine noch mögliche Geschichte*. 1960; as Traps, translated by Richard and Clara Winston, 1960; as A Dangerous Game, translated by Richard and Clara Winston, 1960.
- Der Sturz*. 1971.
- The Judge and His Hangman; The Quarry: Two Hans Barlach Mysteries*, translated by George Stade. 1983.
- Minotaurus: Eine Ballade*, illustrated by Dürrenmatt. 1985.
- Dürrenmatt: His Five Novels* (includes The Judge and His Hangman; The Quarry; Once a Greek; A Dangerous Game; The Pledge). 1985.
- Justiz*. 1985; as The Execution of Justice, translated by John E. Woods, 1989.
- Der Auftrag; oder, Vom Beobachten des Beobachters der Beobachter*. 1986; as The Assignment; or, On Observing of the Observer of the Observers, translated by Joel Agee, 1988.
- Durcheinanderthal*. 1989.

Other

- Theaterprobleme*. 1955; as Problems on the Theatre, translated by Gerhard Nellhaus, in Four Plays, 1964, and with The Marriage of Mr. Mississippi, 1966.
- Friedrich Schiller: Rede* (address). 1960.
- Der Rest ist Dank* (addresses), with Werner Weber. 1961.
- Die Heimat im Plakat: Ein Buch für Schweizer Kinder* (drawings). 1963.
- Theater-Schriften und Reden*, edited by Elisabeth Brock-Sulzer. 2 vols., 1966–72; translated in part as Writings on Theatre and Drama, edited by H.M. Waidson, 1976.
- Monstervortrag über Gerechtigkeit und Recht*. 1968.
- Sätze aus Amerika*. 1970.
- Zusammenhänge: Essay über Israel*. 1976.
- Gespräch mit Heinz Ludwig Arnold*. 1976.
- Frankfurter Rede*. 1977.
- Lesebuch*. 1978.
- Bilder und Zeichnungen*, edited by Christian Strich. 1978.
- Albert Einstein: Ein Vortrag*. 1979.
- Werkausgabe*. 30 vols., 1980–86.
- Stoffe 1–3: Winterkrieg in Tibet, Mondfinsternis, Der Rebell*. 1981.
- Plays and Essays*, edited by Volkmar Sander. 1982.
- Denken mit Dürrenmatt*, edited by Daniel Keel. 1982.
- Die Welt als Labyrinth*, 1982.
- Rollenspiele: Protokoll einer fiktiven Inszenierung und ‘Achterloo III’* (includes text of play Achterloo III). 1986.
- Versuche*. 1988.
- Midax; oder, Die Schwarze Leinwand*. 1991.
- Kants Hoffnung*. 1991.
- Gedankenfüge*. 1992.

*

Bibliography: Friedrich Dürrenmatt Bibliografie by Johannes Hansel, 1968; Friedrich Dürrenmatt by Gerhard B. Knapp, 1980.

Critical Studies: Friedrich Dürrenmatt by Murray B. Peppard, 1969; Friedrich Dürrenmatt by Armin Arnold, 1972; To Heaven and Back: The New Morality in the Plays of Friedrich Dürrenmatt by Kurt J. Fickert, 1972; Friedrich Dürrenmatt by H.L. Arnold, 2 vols., 1976–77; Dürrenmatt: A Study in Plays, Prose, and Theory by Timo Tiusanen, 1977; Dürrenmatt: A Study of His Plays by Urs Jenny, 1978; Friedrich Dürrenmatt: A Collection of Critical Essays edited by Bodo Fritzen and H.F. Taylor, 1979; The Theatre of Dürrenmatt: A Study in the Possibility of Freedom, 1980, and Dürrenmatt: Reinterpretation in Retrospect, 1990, both by Kenneth S. Whitton; Play Dürrenmatt edited by Moshe Lazar, 1983; Dürrenmatt by H. Goertz, 1987; Friedrich Dürrenmatt: Moralist und Komödiant by Lutz Tantow, 1992; Understanding Friedrich Dürrenmatt by Roger A. Crockett, 1998; Tradition und Verfremdung: Friedrich Dürrenmatt und der klassische Detektivroman by Stefan Riedlinger, 2000.

* * *

Born in Switzerland in 1921, Friedrich Dürrenmatt occupied a major place among writers in German since the succès de scandale of his first play, Es steht geschrieben [It Is Written], in Zurich in 1947.

His witty, provocative, grotesque caricatures of his fellow human beings seemed to mirror the chaotic post-World War II conditions and ensured his plays and prose works a permanent place on the bestseller lists. Dürrenmatt wrote of the human condition, of the shifting moral values in government and politics, of the loosening of familial and societal bonds, and of the despair of “the little man,” suffering at the hands of well-organized, tyrannical bureaucracies. His shafted barbs of humour were directed at the “bringing-down,” a true reductio ad absurdum, of the pompous and the entrepreneurial, the over-rich and the over-powerful.

His vehicle was “die Komödie,” not the lighthearted, frothy social comedy of the western world, of Molière and Noël Coward, but that savage, grotesque, satirical comedy deriving ultimately from the satires of Aristophanes, and often presented in the farcical form of the medieval “commedia dell’arte.” Dürrenmatt’s reputation rests on his two great international stage successes, Der Besuch der alten Dame (The Visit) and Die Physiker (The Physicists), presented throughout the world, and on his short novels, e.g., Der Richter und sein Henker (The Judge and His Hangman) and Die Panne (A Dangerous Game), which have been studied in schools and universities worldwide.

The Visit deserves its phenomenal success because of the brilliant simplicity of what Dürrenmatt calls the “Einfall,” that “germ-idea” which lies behind and illuminates a play—here philosophically effective and scenically and dramatically masterly: an aged grotesque, Claire Zachanassian, once driven out of her little village because she had been made pregnant by the village shopkeeper, Alfred III, returns to seek revenge. Now the richest woman in the world, she will give the ailing village “eine Milliarde” (a billion) if one of them will kill Alfred. The hypocrisy of the villagers as they declare their firm resolve to stand by Alfred (now in the running for mayor) and at the same time crowd into his shop to buy goods on credit in anticipation of the flood of gold, has been taken to be a symbolical attack on the then prevailing western capitalist values—but Dürrenmatt has never flailed exclusively one side. In The Physicists, Möbius, the brilliant scientist who has fled into an asylum to bury with him his potentially dangerous, revolutionary discovery, finds that his two “fellow-patients” are in fact American and Soviet agents bent on extracting his secrets.

Dürrenmatt attacked both sides of the Iron Curtain again in two biting prose works, Der Sturz, [The Fall], a story about “a” Politburo, and Sätze aus Amerika [Sentences from America], written after a visit to the United States to receive a doctorate which showed that his target was cruel bureaucratization and the denial of freedom to all sorts and conditions of men.

After his gradual withdrawal from the stage, Dürrenmatt busied himself with political and philosophical treatises—he was one of the few Europeans to support Israel in the Yom Kippur war—and with his grotesque paintings. Dürrenmatt’s withdrawal from the public gaze turned out to be more than temporary; he turned instead to another “pulpit” (as Lessing did), the reflective, philosophical essay, in which he developed the theme of the helpless, hapless Minotaur condemned in his mirror-lined loneliness, representing symbolically the fate of those condemned to be misunderstood while they struggle against the folly and the inhumanity of man to man. When Dürrenmatt died in 1990, he left a rich legacy of witty yet deeply philosophical works whose importance has yet to be fully recognized in the world of letters. The Nachlass bequeathed to the Swiss National Archive in Berne may help scholars to interpret this legacy for the world.

—Kenneth S. Whitton

See the essays on The Physicists and The Visit.

E

EÇA DE QUEIRÓS, José Maria de

Born: Póvoa de Varzim, Portugal, 25 November 1845. Education: Educated at Colégio da Lapa, Oporto, 1855–60; Faculty of Law, Coimbra, 1861–66. Family: Married Emília de Castro Pamplona (Resende) in 1886; one daughter and one son. Career: Advocate in Lisbon, 1867–70; visited Egypt, and attended the inauguration of the Suez Canal, 1869; appointed administrator of the Council of Leiria, 1870; passed diplomatic service examinations, 1870; Portuguese consul in Havana, Cuba (then part of the Spanish Antilles), 1872–74; travelled through Canada, the United States, and Central America, 1873; consul to Great Britain, in Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 1874–78, and Bristol, 1878–88; consul in Paris, 1888–1900. Contributor, Gazeta na Portugal, from 1866, and Gazeta de Notícias, Rio de Janeiro, from 1878; editor, Revista de Portugal, 1889; also contributed to Diário de Notícias, Revista Ocidental, A Actualidade, Diário de Portugal, O Atlântico, Revue Universelle Internationale (Paris), Réporter, Revista Moderna (Paris). Died: 16 August 1900.

PUBLICATIONS

Collections

Obras. 1986.
Obras completas [Resomnia Edition]. 20 vols., 1988.

Fiction

O crime do Padre Amaro. 1875; revised edition, 1880; as The Sin of Father Amaro, translated by Ned Flanagan, 1962.
O primo Basílio. 1878; revised editions, 1878, 1887; as The Dragon's Teeth, translated by Mary J. Serrano, 1889; as Cousin Bazílio, translated by Roy Campbell, 1953.
O mandarim. 1880; edited by Helena Cidade Moura, 1969; as The Mandarin, in The Mandarin and Other Stories, 1965.
O mistério da Estrada de Sintra. 1884.
A relíquia. 1887; as The Relic, translated by Aubrey F. Bell, 1954; also translated by Margaret Jull Costa, 1994.
Os Maias. 1888; as The Maias, translated by Patricia McGowan Pinheiro and Ann Stevens, 1965.
A ilustre casa de Ramires. 1900; as The Illustrious House of Ramires, translated by Ann Stevens, 1968.
A cidade e as serras. 1901; as The City and the Mountains, translated by Roy Campbell, 1955.
Contos. 1902; edited by Luiz Fagundes Duarte and Joaquim Mendes, 1989.
Prosas bárbaras. 1903.
The Sweet Miracle, translated by E. Prestage. 1905; also translated by A. de Alberti, 1913; Henry Gaffney, 1928.
Our Lady of the Pillar, translated by E. Prestage. 1906.
Perfection, translated by Charles Marriott. 1923.
Alves & ca. 1925; as Alves & Co., translated by Robert M. Fedorchek, 1988.

O conde de Abranhos; A Catastrophe, edited by José Maria de Eça de Queirós the Younger. 1925.

A capital. 1925; as To the Capital, translated by John Vetch, 1995.
The Mandarin and Other Stories, translated by Richard Franko Goldman. 1965.

A tragédia da Rua das Flores. 1980.

The Yellow Sofa and Three Portraits, translated by John Vetch, Richard Franko Goldman, and Luís Marques. 1993.

Plays

Filidor, from a play by José Bouchardy (produced 1866).

Other

As farpas (articles), with Ramalho Ortigão. 42 vols., 1871–83; edited by David Corazzi, 13 vols., 1887–90.
Antero de Quental—In Memoriam, with others. 1896.
A correspondência de Fradique Mendes: memorias e notas. 1900.
Dicionário de Milagres . . . outros escriptos dispersos. 1900.
Prosas bárbaras (articles), edited by Jaime Batalha Reis. 1903.
Cartas de Inglaterra. 1905; as Letters from England, translated by Ann Stevens, 1970; as Eça's English Letters, translated by Alison Aiken and Ann Stevens, 2000.
Ecos de Paris. 1905.
Cartas familiares e bilhetes de Paris (1893–1896). 1907.
Notas contemporâneas. 1909.
Últimas páginas: S. Cristóvão, S. to Onofre, S. Frei Gil. 1912.
Correspondência. 1925.
O Egipto: notas de viagem. 1926.
Cartas inéditas de Fradique Mendes e mais páginas esquecidas. 1929.
Novas cartas inéditas de Eça de Queiroz a Ramalho Ortigão. 1940.
Crônicas de Londres. 1944.
Cartas. 1945.
Eça de Queiroz entre os seus. 1949.
